Mr. Lidington: I am grateful for that intervention. I hope that the Minister will say whether the Government have formed a clear opinion on that matter, and whether they agree with the hon. Gentleman.

Mr. Bercow: Will my hon. Friend give way?

Mr. McDonnell: Will the hon. Gentleman give way?

Mr. Lidington: No, I will not give way on that point. I give way to my hon. Friend the Member for Buckingham (Mr. Bercow).

Mr. Bercow: Does my hon. Friend recall the wise observation that my right hon. Friend the Member for Suffolk, Coastal (Mr. Gummer) made in the debate on 28 November 1997? He said that toleration was not about putting up with activities about which we did not much care one way or the other. He said that that was just apathy, acceptance and neutrality. Toleration, he said, was about allowing to continue activities that the many people who strongly disapproved of them nevertheless recognised should not be subject to criminal sanction.

Mr. Lidington: I agree strongly with that point.

Mr. McDonnell: Will the hon. Gentleman give way on that narrow point?

Mr. Lidington: No. I have given way once to the hon. Gentleman.

The other point on which I should be grateful for the Minister's comments has to do with the Bill's impact on the police force. The Bill would impose new criminal penalties on many fellow citizens, and the police would have to ensure that the legislation was enforced. The Bill provides for powers of arrest, property searches and so on. Have the police made representations to the Home Office about the resource and manpower implications of implementing the Bill?

I doubt that the Home Secretary would consider enforcing this measure a high priority for the police. I am pretty certain that my constituents, regardless of whether they support a hunting ban, would prefer their already stretched police to catch burglars and street robbers. They would not want them to be tramping around open fields in capes and gumboots trying to apprehend people chasing foxes with hounds.

Sir Richard Body: We in Lincolnshire have that very problem. Illegal coursing is pretty cruel and nasty and a lot of it goes on. The people taking part are often violent, and there have been many assaults on the farmers and farm workers who have tried to restrain them. The police have been asked to intervene over and over again, but they always say that they are so overstretched that officers cannot be allocated for the duty.

It used to be that officers were so allocated, and helicopters were used to catch the people involved. However, Government cuts in the police force mean that there are no longer enough officers to deal with existing animal welfare crimes in the county. It would be hopeless to expect the police to implement the provisions of the Bill.

Mr. Lidington: My hon. Friend makes a powerful point, and the situation that he describes prevails in many parts of the country.

Mr. Barry Gardiner (Brent, North) rose—

Mr. Lidington: The Bill would make criminal the lawful behaviour of a large number of fellow citizens. If a similar measure were to be proposed in respect of almost any other minority, Labour Members would lead the outcry against it. The promoters and supporters of the Bill should be careful. I fear that they underestimate the anger and resentment that the Bill is already provoking among decent, law-abiding people who believe that it abuses Parliament's power to make law.

Mr. Gardiner rose—

Mr. Lidington: I believe, that as my hon. Friend the Member for Buckingham put it, the definition of a liberal society is one in which we are prepared to defend not just the interests of those with whom we sympathise and agree but of those minorities from whom we differ and of whom we disapprove.

I believe that the Bill is misguided and wrong. If it comes to a Division, I shall vote against it.

1 pm

Mr. Martin Salter (Reading, West): I welcome the opportunity to contribute to this debate. I have had such opportunities before. The Bill promoted by my hon. Friend the Member for Worcester (Mr. Foster), which unfortunately did not pass into law, attracted some interest, it is fair to say, in the Chamber.

I am also pleased to have an opportunity to witness the use of a procedural device. I am still not sure whether it was designed wholly to have this Bill debated today or to cause embarrassment for others. However, I welcome the fact that we are debating it. I am pleased that my hon. Friend the Member for Worcester is here; I enjoyed the time that we spent together in Committee, knocking down the arguments from Conservative Members and, of course, the rogue Liberal Democrat Member, the hon. Member for Montgomeryshire (Mr. Öpik), who I am sure is a bit of an embarrassment to his party.

Sir Robert Smith (West Aberdeenshire and Kincardine): May I make it clear that none of the Members of the House who carry the Liberal Democrat Whip is an embarrassment to our party?

Mr. Salter: May I assure the hon. Gentleman that he is wrong? They are a cause of deep embarrassment.

I wish to look briefly at the arguments in favour of hunting wild animals with hounds. We have had some ludicrous claims from the Countryside Alliance and the pro-hunt lobby about the number of job losses. It put the figure at 16,000. I understand that in a press statement last week, the Countryside Alliance made the crucial admission that there may have been a slight exaggeration. I think that the Burns inquiry will show that it was more than a slight exaggeration—it was probably a bare-faced lie. We shall wait and see.

Mr. Gray: The hon. Gentleman uses rather extreme language, and I hope that the Burns inquiry comes up with figures that are as close to accurate as possible. I am sure that the hon. Gentleman will not accuse me of lying when I say that to the best of my knowledge, the full-time equivalent of 11,400 people are employed directly by hunts. A further 4,000 or thereabouts provide the other services that hunts need. Roughly speaking, 15,000 or 16,000 people seems to be the best estimate. For him to accuse the Countryside Alliance of lying is extraordinary.

Mr. Salter: Well, I did, and I will tell the hon. Gentleman why. The facts are quite straightforward. About 1,000 people are directly employed by hunts. Let us wait until the Burns inquiry comes out. We will also have to weigh the beneficial effects of a potential transfer to drag-hunting and other forms of pursuing this so-called sport before we can make an accurate assessment of the likely job losses to result if the Bill becomes law.

Mr. Blunt: Will the hon. Gentleman give way?

Mr. Salter: No. I will lay the hon. Member for North Wiltshire (Mr. Gray) a small wager that the figure will be nothing like 16,000.

I dealt with the argument about jobs as best I could in my earlier intervention by quoting the right hon. Member for Maidstone and The Weald (Miss Widdecombe). I should like now to deal with the argument that hunting with hounds is an essential pest-control tool. If it is effective, why do members of the pro-hunting lobby constantly tell us that hunts do not really matter, because they rarely catch anything? Either hunting is an effective tool for pest control, or it is not.

[Mr. Salter]

The fact that drives a coach and horses through the pest control argument is that hunts, such as the Sinnington and others, continue to breed cubs in order to hunt.

Mr. Tony Banks (West Ham): Of course, there is also an argument about the close season. Does my hon. Friend agree that if we are talking about dealing with vermin, it is nonsense to suggest that there is a close season? We would not decide not to put down mouse traps at certain times of the year, if our houses were infested with mice—as is this House, on the ground and on the other side of the Chamber.

Mr. Salter: My hon. Friend makes a very good point. It had not occurred to me that there could be any logic for a close season in hunting.

Sir Nicholas Lyell: With respect, the hon. Member for West Ham (Mr. Banks) does not make a very good point. Does the hon. Member for Reading, West (Mr. Salter) agree that we want a balance of nature so that a reasonable number of foxes live healthily in the countryside without causing a problem? To compare that with the extermination of mice and rats in a domestic house is not fair or sensible.

Mr. Salter: I am struggling to follow the logic of that argument. We are being told that we want a balance of nature—so we must breed and then kill foxes to achieve it. I am sorry, but I cannot follow that logic.

Mr. Gardiner: Does my hon. Friend agree that, if a balance of nature was really required, simply to hunt and kill those foxes that were already lame and about to die—as some hon. Members have described the matter—would not assist in producing it. Only if we killed the foxes that were healthy and able to breed—the very ones that we have been told get away—would it make any sense to pursue that means of vermin control.

Mr. Salter: I am trying to follow the logic. Some hon. Members are trying to convince us that we should give the fox a fertility test before we hunt and kill it, so as to achieve the balance of nature.

Ms Glenda Jackson: I do not want to add to the burden of my hon. Friend's attempts to find a way through the illogicalities, but is there not a further illogicality? If one accepts the argument that the only foxes killed by hunting are those that are old, diseased or lame, why does it take a hunt so long to catch them? Why do hunts engage in activities specifically designed to prolong the hunt?

Mr. Salter: I thank my hon. Friend for that point. Later in my contribution, which was intended to be short, I shall refer to the havoc caused by hunts.

One problem is that hunts are not confined to fields but stray on to roads and railway lines. It is a miracle that they ever manage to catch foxes. That is why it is nonsense to claim that this so-called sport has anything to do with pest control. I should have more respect for hunters and their Conservative supporters if they did not make such claims.

Mr. David Taylor: Does my hon. Friend endorse the conclusions of research into control of the fox population, which suggest that the population is largely self-balancing? If foxes are vigorously hunted, leaving only a small number in a large terrain, they will breed more frequently and produce larger litters. If the population grows larger than can be supported by the terrain, the animals breed less frequently and produce smaller litters.

Mr. Salter: I am sure that that is so, but I am also sure that there is a case for pest control in certain circumstances. Let us be in no doubt—we farm the land, putting animals on the land to produce food for ourselves, and that upsets the balance of nature.

On a humane alternative to hunting or, as I would prefer to put it, a sensible method of pest control, let me tell the House a short anecdote. Before the general election, I was involved with many other colleagues in campaigning for—

Mr. Taylor: My hon. Friend had a proper job then.

Mr. Salter: I did.

I was campaigning for the House and the Labour party to take the issue of a hunt ban seriously. We were collecting signatures in Broad street in Reading, and we had no problem whatever in attracting the support of the local population for a ban on hunting. In fact, I believe that most Members will concur that by far the largest amount of mail that they have received on any one issue in this Parliament has been that in support of the Wild Mammals (Hunting with Dogs) Bill introduced by my hon. Friend the Member for Worcester.

Mr. Leigh rose—

Mr. Blunt rose—

Mr. Salter: I should like to develop this point; then I shall be happy to take an intervention.

I was genuinely surprised that one fellow signed the petition. He was a gamekeeper, working on a rural Berkshire estate. This was a person whose job depended on the countryside. I asked him, "Why do you support the campaign against fox hunting?" and he replied, "Mr. Salter, hunts will often protect areas to allow foxes to breed so that the hunt will have a quarry to hunt." That simple fact drives a coach and horses through the pro-hunt lobby's argument. I asked the gamekeeper, "What is the alternative for humanely controlling the fox population where it is necessary?" and he said to me, "If you want to put a fox down, you can shoot it. We are gamekeepers; we are professionals. We rarely miss, and we know our job. That is the humane way to control foxes where they are pests."

Mr. Gray rose—

Mr. Blunt rose—

Mr. Salter: I give way to the hon. Member for North Wiltshire (Mr. Gray).

Mr. Gray: The hon. Gentleman makes a fair point, and many gamekeepers would say exactly what he describes his Reading gamekeeper as having said. He has just arrived and was not in the Chamber when I made this point earlier, so I shall repeat it. One need only look at a big shooting area, such as Norfolk, where the gamekeepers are concerned about pheasants, to see the entire obliteration of the fox population. The Game Conservancy Trust says that there are now no foxes in the big shooting areas in Norfolk. That is because hunting is a selective culling method of killing foxes, whereas shooting obliterates the entire species.

Mr. Salter: I thank the hon. Gentleman. I am not quite sure of the relationship between pheasant shooting and the deliberate professional culling of foxes that are proving to be a pest.

Mr. Blunt rose—

Mr. Salter: I will take no more interventions; I want to conclude.

I want to touch on the libertarian arguments that were pursued primarily by the hon. Member for Montgomeryshire. All societies draw a line somewhere in controlling the activities of the population, by legalising or outlawing certain activities. The age at which sexual activity between consenting persons is deemed lawful is an example. The fact that we are in favour of lowering the age of consent, be it for heterosexuals or homosexuals, be it from 21 to 18 or from 18 to 16, shows that we are prepared to draw a line in the sand. It does not mean that we are in favour of anything else. I am afraid that the libertarian arguments that are advanced by the pro-hunt lobby are exactly the same arguments that are used to justify badger baiting, otter hunting and cockfighting.

I shall now discuss a related point. I am a fisherman and enjoy country sports. I do not speak as a townie who does not spend much time in the country. I should like to know how a pack of hounds on the scent of a mink can distinguish between a mink and an otter when they are hunting on the river bank. We are reintroducing otters to the river banks of our countryside, which is great, but they are threatened by the existence of minkhounds, because we all know perfectly well that hounds cannot distinguish between mink and otter scent, and otters face further extermination if hunting is allowed to continue.

It is nonsense to say, as many people do, that if hunting goes, fishing and other sports will be next. As I said, we choose to draw a line in the sand, and members of the pro-hunt lobby would love to use my sport and the sport of my hon. Friend the Member for Worcester for their own ends. They would love to use the fact that there are 3 million of us and that we have votes, by telling us that our sport is under threat. However, Labour Members have worked hard with the angling organisations. We have made it perfectly clear to them, and they respond. The future of angling, especially coarse fishing, in this country lies with the environmental lobby. Anglers should join Greenpeace, not the Countryside Alliance.

Mr. Leigh rose—

Mr. Salter: I am not giving way.

It was interesting that the latest opinion polls showed that coarse fishermen and women were as opposed to the barbaric sports of fox and stag hunting as the rest of the population. All the attempts by Opposition Members and the pro-hunt lobby to pray anglers in aid to defend their views will not work.

Like my hon. Friend the Member for Worcester, I have seen the New Forest draghounds. I was appalled at the intimidation and the bullying that the master of those draghounds experienced at the hands of the fox and stag-hunting fraternity. He was blackballed, outlawed and discriminated against, because he had taken a brave decision that was triggered by the deliberate execution of hounds elsewhere. He showed that there is a viable alternative.

Fox and stag hunting with hounds are cruel and barbaric sports on a par with cock fighting and badger baiting. They have no place in 21st-century Britain and it is time that we ended them.

1.16 pm

Miss Anne McIntosh (Vale of York): I am delighted to contribute to the debate, but I wish to comment on its timing and the tactics deployed by Labour Members. This week, the House has seen the passage of the Freedom of Information Bill. Will the Minister tell us whether new Labour's and the Government's reaction to so-called freedom of information was that the first motion on a day available for private Members' business proposed that the House should meet in private? I am sure that those who have witnessed the debate will take a dim view of that.

I congratulate the hon. Member for Brent, East (Mr. Livingstone) on securing the place that he did in the ballot. However—if I may use the term—I accuse him of being on a slight ego trip; the Bill's timing is an entirely cynical electioneering ploy. Perhaps I should also congratulate him on that timing.

I have expressed my disappointment that the hon. Gentleman's approach to the Bill is from the very narrow viewpoint of animal welfare. I wish to put on the record my commitment to animal welfare. Those Members who are interested may like to know that my curriculum vitae shows that animal welfare is one of my great interests. I also draw the House's attention to my declaration in the Register of Members' interests, which shows that I own a modest co-share in a farm in the north of England—in Teesdale, County Durham. Regrettably, I do not have the time to engage in country pursuits, but I hope that the farm has given me an understanding of the countryside.

In my previous career, Mr. Deputy Speaker, I was your Member of the European Parliament. On several occasions, I participated actively in the Parliament's all-party animal welfare group, and I represented Brightlingsea at the time when the movement of live animals was attracting a great deal of attention. I do not think that any hon. Member could doubt my concern for animal welfare.

I shall explain why I think that hunting is the least cruel and most humane form of killing a fox. Not only is it the most effective method, but the alternatives are more painful, more cruel and less humane.

I want to consider the role of the hunt and hunting in the countryside. It is clear that foxes are a pest and I regret that the hon. Member for Brent, East lost his pet tortoise to a fox. As hon. Members will be aware, foxes are increasingly leaving the countryside and coming into towns. I am not advocating that the four hunts and several beagle packs in the Vale of York should move to Westminster to eradicate hares and foxes, but I am sure that it is a source of great concern to the Prime Minister and others with positions of responsibility in Whitehall that several ducks have been killed by foxes that are hiding under the temporary huts erected for the building works. I cannot remember the correct term for those huts.

[Miss Anne McIntosh]

Mr. Livingstone: Portakabins.

Miss McIntosh: Indeed, portakabins, which are made in North Yorkshire, just outside the Vale of York. I am most grateful to the hon. Gentleman.

Although I do not suggest that hunts should relocate to Westminster to eradicate pests, hon. Members will be only too aware of the damage that foxes do to all animals, including pet tortoises and rare ducks.

To my knowledge, no hon. Member has considered the duty that the hunt performs, in the absence of large numbers of knackers' yards in rural areas, in disposing of fallen stock. I am sure that hon. Members with rural constituencies will be aware that such disposal is an increasing problem. More than 400,000 carcases have to be disposed of each year, and for the most part—the Vale of York is no exception—they are collected and disposed of by hunts. The Meat and Livestock Commission estimates that, if that activity were undertaken by others, the cost would be £36 million a year.

Mr. Gardiner: I am interested to hear that the hon. Lady thinks that the hunt performs such a valuable service in collecting carcases. Has she estimated the number of new jobs that might be created in that service once the hunts have disappeared?

Miss McIntosh: As I was not expecting to have to share that information with the House today, I am not in a position to answer that. Perhaps my hon. Friend the Member for North Wiltshire (Mr. Gray) can do so.

Mr. Gray: Between 400,000 and 600,000 calf carcases had to be disposed of this winter because of the appalling catastrophe in the dairy and beef industries. Those carcases are worth only a few pennies, and putting in an ear tag costs £5. A recent circular from the Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food acknowledged that if the hunts did not remove the carcases, farmers would, regrettably, seek to bury them on their farms, with possibly catastrophic environmental consequences.

Miss McIntosh: I am grateful to my hon. Friend, but that is not quite the point that was raised. [Interruption.] If Labour Members will hear me out, I will make a conservative estimate and say that the number of jobs that would be created by the need to dispose of carcases would not reach 11,000, which is the figure for hunt employment that my hon. Friend quoted earlier.

I make no criticism of the hon. Member for Brent, East for simply having no understanding of the countryside or rural issues. Many Conservative Members admire his contributions, which are not always in keeping with those of his colleagues. I am slightly amused by the position that he is occupying today. I had thought that he might join the hon. Member for Tatton (Mr. Bell) and we could have had a leadership contest for the independents party as represented in the House.

As my hon. Friend the Member for North Wiltshire has joined me in saying, in the normal course of farming, cattle and calves, sheep and lambs, goats, horses, ponies and foals die each year and have to be disposed of. Opposition Members would not want to face an environmental problem were the hunt to disappear. We would argue vigorously in favour of keeping the hunt for that task, which it performs so adequately.

It is a source of great regret to me that the knacker's yard no longer exists. The year in which my husband and I were married, our family pony, a half-Shetland and half-Welsh pony, had reached the staggering age of 36. It was a source of great sadness that the month before we were married, the animal had to be disposed of.

As I mentioned earlier, the Meat and Livestock Commission estimates that, by disposing of fallen stock, the hunt's contribution saves farmers £36 million. The hon. Member for Brent, East has not recognised that and—I stand to be corrected on this—has not proposed a viable alternative to the role of the hunt in disposing of dead stock. Farmers and landowners are worried that the hon. Gentleman may even be accusing them of not being as actively concerned about animal welfare as he is. The loss of his pet tortoise suggests—

Mr. Livingstone: I thank the hon. Lady for giving way. As I said earlier, I do not believe that the debate is an issue of class or an issue between rural and urban areas. The vast majority of people in every sector of society oppose hunting because they regard it as cruel. As we know, analysis of opinion polls shows that even in the 7 per cent. of Britain that is most rural, a large majority of those living there are oppose to hunting.

Miss McIntosh: There the hon. Gentleman and I must agree to disagree. I believe that other methods are more cruel and less humane.

I shall move on, as many of my hon. Friends wish to speak. Will the Minister tell us the position of the Government and the Prime Minister on the Bill? The Prime Minister set up the Burns committee, and I understand from a leak released to the media this week that he intends to offer hon. Members a multi-choice questionnaire. It will be interesting to see whether all hon. Members will have the opportunity to express their choice.

I understand that we, or at least Labour Members, will be presented with four options: the abolition of hunting, as the Bill proposes; an alternative method of killing or controlling foxes; the licensing of hunts, which would continue to meet under strictly controlled conditions; or the status quo. In the event that I am not asked, I want to record my personal preference for no change. We should reject the Bill today and await the findings of the Burns committee.

I believe that there was confusion earlier on the Government Benches. Not only was the hon. Member for Brent, East not in his place at the time of the Division this morning, but he was not in the precincts of the Palace. There was some concern that we would move on to the third Bill—

Mr. Livingstone: I understand that there is a lot of conspiracy going on, so let me clarify the position. I was approached by a Government Whip earlier this week to check that I would be available from 9.30 this morning, and I gave that assurance. When I arrived at 9.10, I went straight to my office. I did not happen to see any other hon. Members, so a suggestion may have gone round that I was not in the building. But if anyone wants to check, the staff at Norman Shaw North will say that I arrived in the precincts at 9.10. So there is no conspiracy and no stress—just good fortune all round.

Miss McIntosh: Good fortune for the hon. Gentleman, but poor management by the Government.

Mr. Blunt: On a point of order, Mr. Deputy Speaker. The hon. Member for Brent, East (Mr. Livingstone) has made it clear that the Government were party to the disgraceful action this morning that denied my hon. Friend the Member for Chingford and Woodford Green (Mr. Duncan Smith)—

Mr. Deputy Speaker (Sir Alan Haselhurst): Order. That is not a point of order for the Chair.

Mr. Dismore rose—

Miss McIntosh: I shall take no more interventions, because I wish to conclude.

The Government's approach to the Bill is a kneejerk reaction to a poor turnout in recent elections, especially in Labour heartlands. [Interruption.] In last year's European elections, there was a turnout of only 11 per cent. in Barnsley, where the Labour party had convincingly won a by-election in the previous year. In one ward in Sunderland, which is staunchly Labour, there was again a turnout of only 11 per cent. The Government are therefore tackling the wrong issue if they want to pacify their heartlands. [Interruption.] In trying to do that, they ignore at their peril the voice of the countryside.

More than 300,000 participated in the countryside march; more than 120,000 took part in the countryside rally in July 1997—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. I am sorry to interrupt the hon. Lady. The hon. Member for Worcester (Mr. Foster) cannot conduct a committee meeting while the debate is in progress. I have also heard quite enough from a sedentary position from the hon. Member for West Ham (Mr. Banks). I hope that he will now keep quiet.

Miss McIntosh: I am grateful to you, Mr. Deputy Speaker, for drawing attention to a persistent lack of courtesy from certain quarters.

The presence of huge numbers on the marches to which I referred reflects the rural voice, and the depth and breadth of anxiety about the threat to rural life as we know it and the natural pursuits of the countryside.

I oppose the Bill mainly because of its infringement of personal liberty. The Bill would lead to losses of rights and personal freedom, and would encroach on the tolerant, free and open society that we know in this country. The right to hunt or not to hunt is a matter of choice. Foxes are pests, do wanton damage to farms and livestock, and increasingly move from farms to towns.

I passionately believe that, in the countryside, fox hunting is the most efficient and humane way of controlling the fox population. I was elected on a platform of toleration and choice, individual freedom and my personal strong support for the natural pursuits of the countryside. I therefore oppose the Bill.

1.33 pm

The Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for the Home Department (Mr. Mike O'Brien): As is customary, I congratulate the hon. Member for Brent, East (Mr. Livingstone) on securing a place in the ballot. Doubtless, he took account of the views of his constituents before deciding to introduce a Bill to outlaw hunting. Hon Members will know the considerable interest that the issue generates in all parts of the country, rural and urban—and even in Brent, East.

I represent a predominantly rural constituency with a large hunt, the Atherstone hunt, which many people join. I visited its kennels early last year to explain why I personally would support a ban. The Government want a free vote on the matter.

The hon. Member for Brent, East has provided the House with an explanation of the Bill. Its intentions are straightforward and clear. It would put a stop, in most circumstances, to hunting with dogs, especially fox hunting. It would also make it an offence for an owner or occupier of land to allow hunting on his land, and for anyone to own or control dogs for hunting purposes.

Sir Robert Smith: Will the Minister clarify the extent of the Bill? Does he share my anxiety that the hon. Member for Brent, East (Mr. Livingstone) is trying to legislate for Scotland when the House has decided that Scottish affairs should be properly determined by the Scottish Parliament? Is it not odd that someone who wants to be mayor of London steps over the mark on constitutional propriety?

Mr. O'Brien: Fox hunting is a devolved matter and, following the introduction of a private Member's Bill by a Labour MSP, I understand that the Scottish Parliament will discuss some of the issues. The hon. Member for Brent, East might take that into account.

Mr. Livingstone: I am happy to do that.

Mr. O'Brien: I am grateful for the hon. Gentleman's indication that he is prepared to consider amending his private Member's Bill.

During the 1997-98 Session, a free vote took place in the House during proceedings on a similar Bill to outlaw hunting with dogs, promoted by my hon. Friend the Member for Worcester (Mr. Foster). It received a Second Reading by 411 votes to 151 and was dealt with in Committee, but my hon. Friend withdrew it before it could reach its Report stage and receive its Third Reading, because he recognised that no further progress could be made.

Following that Bill's demise, my right hon. Friend the Home Secretary announced on 11 November last year that the Government would offer reasonable time, if necessary, for the House to debate hunting through consideration of a private Member's Bill on a free vote. Assistance with drafting was also offered for a private Member's Bill such as this. However, the House will know that, before any legislation was considered, the Government decided that there should first be an inquiry—a fact-finding exercise.

[Mr. O'Brien]

It became clear to us from the discussions on the way forward that the facts about the hunting of fox, deer, mink and hare and the consequences of any ban needed to be properly considered. Indeed, to some extent, the fact that some hon. Members have had to say that they "believe" something to be the case, owing to the absence of a substantial factual basis, makes our point. There is no core of factual consensus around which the rest of the argument can revolve, which is not the case with other debates. That is why we thought it appropriate for an inquiry to examine the factual core and give a view on it. The debate could then proceed.

The inquiry announced by my right hon. Friend the Home Secretary is under way and well into its work. It has already taken evidence from various interested parties. Members of the inquiry have visited more than 13 hunting events to familiarise themselves with the activity. In connection with their work, they have attended six fox hunts involving foot and mounted packs; hind hunting with the Devon and Somerset staghounds; and hare-hunting events. Some also attended the Waterloo cup meeting at Altcar, which followers of hare coursing regard as the premier event.

On each visit, observers accompanied inquiry members from the Countryside Alliance and Deadline 2000, the umbrella group campaigning for a ban on hunting. The role of Countryside Alliance and Deadline 2000 members was to advise the inquiry team members as necessary and to provide reassurance that the inquiry team saw hunting activities as they would normally take place.

The inquiry has also commissioned a number of studies by relevant experts into a number of areas of life affected by hunting. Lord Burns has said that he expects to complete his work and report by the end of next month and my right hon. Friend the Home Secretary has already announced that he will present the report to Parliament. With the agreement of the business managers, it is hoped that the House will be given an opportunity to discuss it after publication.

Mr. Banks: We await the Burns report with great interest and Labour Members do not object to the inquiry, but would it not have been more helpful, and a statement of our good faith, if we had said before the election that we would establish a committee? Some people may think that we have used the inquiry as a delaying tactic. It would be wrong if the Parliament ended without our having done what we said we were going to do, which was to listen and to act on a ban on fox hunting.

Mr. O'Brien: The commitment in our manifesto was to a free vote, which took place on the private Member's Bill presented by my hon. Friend the Member for Worcester. Many hon. Members rightly felt that there should be another opportunity to deal with this matter. It soon became clear during our consideration of the Bill presented by my hon. Friend the Member for Worcester that there was a lack of factual consensus around which the debate could crystallise, so that the issues could become clearer. That is why, after the election, the Government took the view that a report from an inquiry would be of assistance. That is a logical and reasonable position to take.

Mr. Tom King: In case the Minister feels that his position is not supported and that the attitude being taken is, "To hell with the facts; let's get on with it," I can tell him that I think that the Burns inquiry is going about its work in a sensible and balanced way. It has visited my constituency, where there is hunting with a pack of staghounds. The inquiry team has met people and bodies that support hunting and those opposed to it. My understanding is that such meetings have been conducted in a civilised and sensible way by people on both sides of the argument who are anxious that the facts should be properly established.

Mr. O'Brien: I am grateful to the right hon. Gentleman. I think that the inquiry will better inform the debate by reporting on the practical issues involved in hunting, how a ban could be implemented and what the consequences of a ban would be. The inquiry is not being asked to decide whether hunting should be banned. That is a decision for the House, and hon. Members in proper consultation with their constituents. My right hon. and hon. Friends will have a free vote on this issue, but it will muddy the waters if we deal with a ban on hunting with dogs before Lord Burns has produced his report. It is sensible to consider the issue in the light of the inquiry's report.

My right hon. Friend the Home Secretary has given the House a number of undertakings, and has set out a sensible sequence of events. I was pleased that the hon. Member for Brent, East said that, if it were possible and if it were the will of the House, he would bring his Bill out of Committee after the inquiry has reported. We shall see how the Bill progresses.

Mr. Leigh: I seek clarification. Are the Government saying that, if the Bill gets into Committee, they will give it time on Report?

Mr. O'Brien: We shall have to await the outcome of events, but the Government will play an entirely straight bat and will ensure that the matter is dealt with properly. The Bill is now a Bill of the House—it is not just an individual Member's Bill. The House has possession of it and it is a matter for the House to decide. However, the Government have given their view, and I cannot take that any further. It is clear to the House that we are prepared to offer a private Member's Bill reasonable time and assistance after the conclusion of the inquiry.

I shall deal with some of the points raised by the hon. Member for Aylesbury (Mr. Lidington), who asked about the Human Rights Act 1998. I have seen no advice that the Human Rights Act would be breached by this ban any more than by any other ban on an activity that the House of Commons chose to regard as animal cruelty. I am not aware of any reason why this measure might breach the Human Rights Act.

The hon. Gentleman also referred to the implications of the ban for the police force. It is for a chief constable to determine his operational priorities, but my experience is that those who hunt are, by and large, law-abiding people. The police have not suggested to the Government that the Bill should not be passed for reasons connected with resources, and I do not believe that hunters will break the law, no matter how much they threaten to do so now because they are angry. I think that, in due course, hunters, like all of us, will obey the law.

Let me also point out that police resources currently devoted to dealing with hunt saboteurs could be released for other purposes—including, no doubt, the tackling of offences mentioned by the hon. Gentleman, such as burglary.

Mr. Blunt: Will the Minister give way?

Mr. O'Brien: I will give way once more, but after that I must make progress.

Mr. Blunt: I think the Minister is being a little sanguine about the reaction to the banning of an activity that has been justified in animal welfare terms. People know that the arguments in favour of a ban are bogus, and that animals will be worse off as a result of the Bill.

We are talking about a pastime that is central to many people's way of life in the countryside. I must tell the Minister that if my passion, which is cricket, were taken from me, and I considered that to be grossly unjustified—and people who hunt will think a ban on hunting grossly unjustified—I would probably be prepared to go to prison to demonstrate my opposition to what I would deem a gross illiberality.

Mr. O'Brien rose—

Mr. David Taylor: Will my hon. Friend give way?

Mr. O'Brien: Not at this point.

If we accepted the idea that minority rights must always be protected regardless of other issues, we would never change anything. There is always some minority that wants to continue to do something, and we cannot allow a minority to have a permanent veto.

I am sorry that the right hon. and learned Member for Sleaford and North Hykeham (Mr. Hogg) is not present, because I want to deal with a couple of the points that he raised. When bull baiting was banned in the last century, The Times published a leader condemning the ban on the grounds that it denied the rights of a minority to bait bulls. That is not acceptable. The rights of minorities are important, but they must be balanced against other social values. With rights come responsibilities, and allowing minorities to continue to do something that is deeply offensive to the rest of the community—perhaps because they oppose cruelty to animals—merits at least a discussion of whether there should be legislation.

The right hon. and learned Member for Sleaford and North Hykeham, who has now returned, also mentioned fishing and a number of other sports. The Government oppose a ban on fishing or shooting: indeed, the Labour party has published a policy statement supporting fishing opportunities. I know that the right hon. and learned Gentleman is seeking allies among those involved in pursuits other than fox hunting, suggesting to them that they, too, may be under threat. I understand that tactic, but the threat does not exist. There will be no ban on shooting or fishing under the present Government.

Sir Nicholas Lyell: Will the Minister give way?

Mr. O'Brien: I have given way a number of times, but I cannot resist the right hon. and learned Gentleman, so I will give way for the last time.

Sir Nicholas Lyell: The Minister says that fishing and shooting will not be banned. Does he not agree that, before a civilised society bans a lawful activity widely practised among members of that society—albeit a minority—there must be a powerful, objectively justifiable reason for the ban, such as inherent cruelty?

Mr. O'Brien: I certainly agree that there must be a powerful argument for change of that kind. Those among the majority who voted for the Bill presented by my hon. Friend the Member for Worcester believed that such a powerful argument had been made. Whether the right hon. and learned Gentleman agrees or disagrees with that is a matter for him; we are here to debate such issues.

I agreed with a couple of other points that were made by the hon. Member for Brent, East. It is not a class issue. It is not a countryside-versus-town issue. The issue is how the individual rights of those who pursue hunting should be balanced against the issue of cruelty to animals.

Hunting is not the main concern in most rural areas, including mine. Hunting with hounds is very much a minority pastime, even in areas where there are historic hunts. Farming, rural transport, village post offices and other matters are much more important to most people who live in the countryside.

Those people are concerned about having good schools, especially good village schools, and good hospitals. They want to ensure that crime is kept low, that interest rates are low and that there is better rural transport. All those issues are enormously important to people in rural areas. Many of them are also concerned—as people throughout the country are—with issues relating to animals. Many care deeply about that, whether they are on one side of the argument or the other. It is right that we should debate those issues in this place because they are important and people care about them, but it is wrong for some to portray the argument as one of town versus country.

Labour Members represent more rural constituencies than the Tories and Liberal Democrats put together. That is why the Government will work hard to deal with the priorities of all people who live in rural areas, as well as those who live in towns.

The Government promised a free vote on a ban on fox hunting. That vote has taken place, but we want to give Members a further opportunity to vote. The Bill assists that process. I again congratulate the hon. Member for Brent, East on introducing the Bill, and commend to the House the Government's approach.

1.52 pm

Mr. Edward Leigh (Gainsborough): I want to give a slightly different emphasis from that in previous speeches. Everyone who has contributed—indeed, most of those who contributed in previous debates—whether they be opposed to hunting, or, on libertarian grounds, support the right of people to hunt, have tended to say, "I do not hunt myself." There was a powerful intervention—indeed, a powerful speech—by my hon. Friend the Member for Aylesbury (Mr. Lidington), a powerful intervention by my hon. Friend the Member for Buckingham (Mr. Bercow) and a powerful speech by my right hon. and learned Friend the Member for Sleaford and North Hykeham (Mr. Hogg). All were on the basis that they did not hunt themselves. I must now declare an interest: I do hunt and have hunted, beagling as a younger man and, more recently, fox hunting.

[Mr. Edward Leigh]

I say honestly that I do not and have not hunted primarily because I saw myself as a pest-control officer. I hunted because I wanted to hunt and because it was—I have to admit it—an extraordinarily challenging sport. There is no greater test of a rider's horsemanship skills than attempting to stay in the saddle for five hours during a hunt, so I admit that. I have been hunting and have enjoyed it. I found it very challenging.

At the same time, I must confess that, although I have hunted on many occasions—beagling and, subsequently, fox hunting—I never witnessed a kill. I hope that, you, Mr. Deputy Speaker, will accept it when I say that those of us who hunt do not do so because we want to be part of the kill; the hon. Member for Worcester (Mr. Foster) was kind enough to admit the point. There may be a tiny minority who do—I do not know—but on the whole that is no part of the sport. There is no bloodlust. We hunt because we find it a challenging sport. It tests our riding abilities. It is also a unique aspect of really coming to terms with the countryside.

Mr. Gardiner: Will the hon. Gentleman give way?

Mr. Leigh: No; I should like to develop this point a bit.

There is no other way—it is very hard to describe this, although it has been described very movingly in writings by Siegfried Sassoon and others—in which one can really understand the countryside, the way that it works, the animal kingdom and how the seasons evolve than by going hunting.

I accept that many Labour Members oppose the sport very passionately and think that those of us who hunt are engaged in a very cruel activity. However, I ask them to accept our point of view, and that bloodlust is not part of our motivation at all. We wish to be part of the British countryside, which we love from the depths of our souls, and feel that hunting is the best way of doing so.

Mr. Gardiner: I have listened most carefully to the hon. Gentleman's comments. Does he accept that, although one may not participate for motives of bloodlust, none the less, even without that motivation, an activity may in itself perpetrate a cruelty?

Mr. Leigh: The hon. Gentleman makes an arguable point. However, I shall try to explain why I believe that foxhunting is not a cruel sport and that the House should not be persuaded to override the rights of a minority.

Mr. Gray: Like my hon. Friend, I take part in fox hunting. Unlike him, however—and despite the age and decrepitude of the horse that I sometimes have to ride—I have very often been present at the kill. I have rarely seen a more humane way of killing any animal.

Mr. Leigh: My hon. Friend at least speaks from experience. He has made an important contribution to the debate.

I myself could not participate in drag-hunting, about which there has been much debate. Drag-hunting is a quite different sport. It is very fast and very much a sport for young people. The type of sport that we have in north Lincolnshire involves very little jumping. It moves very slowly, from copse to copse, and walks round the edges of ploughed fields. Drag-hunting is quite different from that. Those who argue that all of us who hunt could simply transfer to drag-hunting—regardless of whether farmers would let us drag-hunt over their land; most farmers see no benefit at all in drag-hunting—are making a spurious argument.

Those who talk about drag-hunting are not being entirely honest. It would be more honest if they said, "We don't want your sport. We are going to abolish it."

Sir Richard Body: My hon. Friend may not know it, but I am chairman of one of the two organisations that represent drag-hunting in the United Kingdom. Today, we have decided to issue a challenge to any hon. Member who supports the Bill and persists in saying that drag-hunting is an alternative. The challenge is to find the places where we can hunt. The hunt of which I am chairman and have been master is desperately seeking more places to hunt. The fact is that one has to find 20 to 25 farmers with farms in a continual line of countryside who will accept 30 or 40 horses galloping across their land, inevitably causing damage to crops. It is simply not practical to call for any extension of drag-hunting.

Mr. Leigh: My hon. Friend speaks from great experience, and we have made that point.

Mr. Maclean: Before my hon. Friend moves on from that point, would he care to explain to the House how drag-hunting would be of use in the lake district and the mountains, where on most occasions when the hunt is called out, it is to deal with foxes that are killing farmers lambs? How would drag-hunting deal with that problem?

Mr. Leigh: It would not. My right hon. Friend has made that powerful point.

Let us be clear about the facts. There is an annual attendance at hunts of 1,289,000 people—of whom 42 per cent. are riders and 58 per cent. are foot followers. The sport involves, therefore, not a small minority, but a quite large minority.

Mr. Gardiner: Will the hon. Gentleman give way?

Mr. Leigh: No; I have already given way to the hon. Gentleman.

The Minister and other Labour Members have made the point that, although minorities have rights, there is a limit to those rights. However, we are talking about a very large group indeed—over 1 million people.

Mr. David Taylor rose—

Mr. Leigh: I want to make progress. Before we take away the rights of more than 1 million people, we have to listen to some of the points that my hon. Friends have made.

Mr. Taylor rose—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. The hon. Gentleman is not giving way, at least for the moment.

Mr. Leigh: If the hon. Gentleman is tolerant and wishes to intervene later, I shall give way to him.

Surely Labour Members should admit that there is some merit in the point that the test of a tolerant society is not just whether we allow an activity to persist because we are apathetic about it—we can all do that—but whether we allow an activity to carry on even though we want nothing to do with it and dislike it intensely. So often, our society and our Parliament have been deeply intolerant of minority opinions and even faiths and deeply held beliefs. We have moved on from that. Surely we are now sufficiently broadminded to believe that if 1 million law-abiding people are carrying on an activity that they have undertaken and enjoyed since time immemorial, they have certain rights.

Mr. David Taylor: Is not the hon. Gentleman basing his argument on a statistical fallacy? A parallel could be drawn with aggregate attendances at first-class football matches in England and Scotland on any given Saturday—a figure of nearly 1.5 million. If we add that together for the whole season by multiplying it by 40, we end up with a number of people supporting the game of football that exceeds the population of these beautiful islands.

Mr. Leigh: The fact is that a large number of people enjoy hunting. During a year there are 1 million attendances at hunt events. Even if I was wrong and the figure was only three quarters of a million, half a million or a quarter of a million, it would make no difference to the argument that they have rights, too. They are not engaging in the activity because of bloodlust or because they are sadistic. They engage in it because they are country people who want to be part of a traditional country sport. I believe that they have certain rights that we, as a tolerant society, should respect. We should not allow the tyranny of the majority to overcome the rights of the minority. Regardless of whether that minority numbers half a million, a quarter of a million or a million, it is a large number of people. Their rights should be respected. Whatever other arguments Labour Members adduce, that is the one argument that they, particularly as Labour party members, cannot ignore.

Quite apart from the arguments about tolerance and respect for the rights of minorities, if we were going to abolish the activity, we would have to have a clear view that abolition would result in less cruelty to foxes. The overwhelming evidence is that shooting depends on terrain and is affected by the weather and is an inefficient and often cruel way of disposing of foxes. Trapping and snaring can be equally cruel. The fox—or another creature who gets trapped—could remain in the trap for 24 hours and suffer a great deal.

All the other options are equally or more cruel. Those who argue for the abolition of hunting have not been able to adduce a single argument that suggests that many farmers will not continue to exterminate foxes. Shooting, trapping and snaring are cruel activities.

There have been many arguments about whether hunting is an efficient form of culling. Opponents of the Bill say that only 16,000 foxes a year are killed by hunting, but that it is a necessary form of pest control. That seems a powerful argument, but the more powerful argument concerns the environment, and states that fox hunting ensures that the species is protected.

My hon. Friend the Member for North Wiltshire (Mr. Gray) made one of the best points in the debate when he said that Norfolk, where foxes are shot, has no fox population left. Fox-hunting counties such as Lincolnshire and Leicestershire have healthy and balanced fox populations.

It is not a question merely of being in favour of the rights of minorities, or of whether there are better alternatives to hunting: we must accept that hunting maintains a healthy fox population.

Ms Glenda Jackson: If fox hunting maintains environments in the countryside that benefit fox populations, why are the animals increasingly moving to urban areas? Foxes live and breed in my garden, for example, and the urban population of foxes is increasing. If hunting creates such a wonderful environment for foxes, why are they leaving it?

Mr. Leigh: That point is so obtuse that I shall not argue it, despite my respect for the hon. Lady. Fox hunting does not increase the number of foxes and thus force them to go to Hampstead. It ensures that there is a balanced population of foxes in those areas where it is practised. People who live in the country treat foxes as vermin, and will shoot, gas, poison, trap and snare them rather than allow them to continue their depredations.

This country has the healthiest fox population in the world. People like the hon. Member for Brent, East (Mr. Livingstone) say that their primary concern is animal welfare, but what is the answer to that point? Why does this apparently cruel, inefficient and bad sport lead us to have the healthiest, largest and most well-balanced fox population in Europe? Why is it well balanced? That is thanks to fox hunting and to the people who—like me—pursue it as a sport.

Mr. Bob Russell: Sport?

Mr. Leigh: The hon. Gentleman has just come in and will not have heard what I said earlier. We do it as a sport but it has a beneficial aspect. It ensures good conservation, and that the fox population is maintained. It ensures that foxes are not generally disposed of in a cruel way.

On those grounds, the Bill should be rejected.

2.8 pm

Mr. James Gray (North Wiltshire): Fox hunting always arouses great passion on both sides of the argument, more than almost any other subject debated in this Chamber. I regret that, and welcome the establishment of the Burns inquiry. I hope that it will get rid of all the passion, emotion and bias, and pay no heed to the class war aspect to which some hon. Members have alluded.

The hon. Member for Worcester (Mr. Foster) talked about foxes being disembowelled. That is absurd, and such emotive language does not help a sensible, quiet debate.

Mr. Banks: Will the hon. Gentleman give way?

Mr. Gray: I shall be happy to give way to one of the more emotional Members of Parliament.

Mr. Banks: I am emotional, but not tired and emotional, and I agree that this is a very emotive subject. If the Burns inquiry produced a report that states that no jobs will be at risk if fox hunting were banned, would the hon. Gentleman accept that and support a ban? Could anything convince him that it should be banned?

Mr. Gray: Like the Minister, I would not wish to prejudge the outcome of the Burns inquiry. However, the inquiry will not consider the morality of fox hunting. That is for the House to decide. The important thing about the Burns inquiry is that it will introduce factual information and quiet consideration into the debate. We can then make a decision about what we believe to be moral or immoral.

I declare an interest: I am a member of the Royal Artillery Fox Hounds at Larkhill. I hunt with them regularly, and hope to be out with them tomorrow morning. In my constituency there are four packs of foxhounds—the Beaufort, the Avon Vale, the VWH, while the Tedworth is nearby. There is also a pack of beagles in my constituency. I am also chairman of the horse and pony taxation committee, the non-party body of the House that looks into the taxation effects on the horse industry, and has made a submission to Lord Burns. I am an unpaid consultant—all these interests are unpaid—to the British Horse Industry Confederation, which has made a powerful submission to the Burns inquiry.

We must get rid of the emotion and get back to the facts. Perhaps I could touch on some of the great benefits that fox hunting has given the country. Many Labour Members have poured scorn on the argument that hunting helps control pests. The National Farmers Union and the Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food have both acknowledged the strong role that fox hunting plays in the control of pests. The Ministry of Defence, no less, has said with regard to my own hunt, the Royal Artillery, that it believes that hunting with hounds is one of the means by which foxes can be controlled on Salisbury plain.

There is an interesting case study: in the 1980s, fox hunting was banned on one part of Salisbury plain—the impact area—because people were worried about riders and hounds blowing themselves up on the unexploded bombs. Within a couple of years, farmers got together and petitioned the Ministry of Defence to overturn that ban because the depredations on lambs, chickens and calves in the surrounding area were so great.

My hon. Friend the Member for Vale of York (Miss McIntosh), among others, alluded to the disposal of animal carcases. There is no way in which the knackerman could replace the services provided by the hunts in the removal of fallen stock. Interventions from one or two Labour Members indicated that they have no idea about the scale of the problem facing farming at the moment, the number of carcases that are becoming available and the fact that the knackering industry could not possibly replace the service provided by hunts.

A recent circular from none other than the Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food told farmers that they must not dispose of the carcases on the farm if they can possibly avoid doing so and, the problems understandingthat farmers are having, suggested that they should get in touch with their local hunts and request them to take away the carcases.

Dr. Julian Lewis (New Forest, East): There is an analogous problem in the New forest. The ponies graze on the forest and the hunt removes the fallen stock. We have no idea how that task would be performed without the hunt.

Mr. Gray: That is, of course, right. The Licensed Animal Slaughterers and Salvage Association has only 120 knackers' yards in the United Kingdom, whereas something like 200 to 300 boners are operated by the hunts which supply the service. The Meat and Livestock Commission has estimated that without the service that the hunts provide, the agriculture industry would have to pay an additional £36 million a year which, of course, it can ill afford.

There are a number of important environmental points on this issue. The hon. Member for Hampstead and Highgate (Ms Jackson) laughingly said that she could not see why, if hunting was so beneficial to the landscape of rural England, foxes were turning up in her garden. She misunderstood the point. The reason why the landscape of an area such as north Wiltshire has been changed over the centuries by fox hunting is nothing to do with the habitat of foxes. Of course foxes can live anywhere—they could live in a dustbin, come to that. The point is that as the farmers allow the hunt to cross their land, the land is preserved for hunting. It would otherwise be used for all sort of things, such as housing, which she might view with more approval. Her intervention on my hon. Friend the Member for Gainsborough (Mr. Leigh) showed the depth of her ignorance about the points that we are making.

Ms Glenda Jackson: Clearly, the hon. Gentleman has, not for the first time, misunderstood the point made by Labour Members. I was refuting the argument that hunting, of itself, created a beneficial natural environment which promoted the well-being of the fox population. My question was, if that was the case, why were foxes leaving the countryside in increasing numbers?

Mr. Gray: Once again, the hon. Lady shows that she knows nothing about the matter. The suggestion that foxes are leaving the countryside in increasing numbers is laughable.

Mr. Livingstone rose in his place and claimed to move, That the Question be now put.

Question put, That the Question be now put:—

The House divided: Ayes 74, Noes 0.

Division No. 155] [2.15 pm

AYES

Anderson, Donald (Swansea E)
Anderson, Janet (Rossendale)
Austin, John
Baker, Norman
Banks, Tony Barnes, Harry
Benn, Rt Hon Tony (Chesterfield)
Berry, Roger Best, Harold
Brinton, Mrs Helen Casale, Roger Cawsey, Ian
Clarke, Tony (Northampton S)
Clwyd, Ann
Coaker, Vernon
Cohen, Harry
Colman, Tony Corbyn, Jeremy Cousins, Jim
Darvill, Keith
Dean, Mrs Janet
Dismore, Andrew
Dobson, Rt Hon Frank
Donohoe, Brian H
Dowd, Jim
Drown, Ms Julia
Efford, Clive
Field, Rt Hon Frank
Fitzpatrick, Jim
Foster, Michael J (Worcester)
Gardiner, Barry
Gerrard, Neil
Griffiths, Jane (Reading E)
Grogan, John
Harris, Dr Evan
Hill, Keith
Hopkins, Kelvin
Howarth, Alan (Newport E)
Jackson, Ms Glenda (Hampstead)
Keen, Ann (Brentford & Isleworth)
Lawrence, Mrs Jackie
Lepper, David
Levitt, Tom
Linton, Martin
Livingstone, Ken
McDonnell, John
McIsaac, Shona
Mackinlay, Andrew
McWalter, Tony
Marshall-Andrews, Robert
Michie, Bill (Sheff'ld Heeley)
Miller, Andrew
Morley, Elliot
Naysmith, Dr Doug
O'Brien, Mike (N Warks)
Pike, Peter L
Pond, Chris
Pope, Greg Prosser, Gwyn
Rammell, Bill
Russell, Bob (Colchester)
Salter, Martin
Sedgemore, Brian
Skinner, Dennis
Smith, Angela (Basildon)
Stunell, Andrew
Thomas, Gareth R (Harrow W)
Touhig, Don
Turner, Dr Desmond (Kemptown)
Turner, Neil (Wigan)
Whitehead, Dr Alan
Winnick, David
Wood, Mike
Wright, Anthony D (Gt Yarmouth)

Tellers for the Ayes:
Mr. Ian Stewart and
Mr. David Taylor.

NOES

Tellers for the Noes:
Mr. James Gray and
Mr. David Maclean.

Whereupon MR. DEPUTY SPEAKER declared that the Question was not decided in the affirmative, because it was not supported by the majority prescribed by Standing Order No. 37 (Majority for closure or for proposal of Question).

Mr. Gray: I was rather embarrassed by the fact that we did not earlier have sufficient people present to prevent the opening of the debate on fox hunting, so I am more than delighted that only 74 Labour Members turned up to vote for the closure motion. That has allowed the debate to continue. Many Opposition Members who feel strongly about these issues have not had an opportunity to speak. I am glad that the debate will continue.

The next time Labour Members say that the Labour party is overwhelmingly opposed to fox hunting, they should remember that, because only 74 of them turned up, this Bill will not, as I very much hoped it would not, go through.

Mr. Maclean: Before my hon. Friend runs out of time in this important debate, would he care to comment more on the charade that has taken this place today? By using a parliamentary tactic, Labour Members prevented discussion of the Bill of my hon. Friend the Member for Chingford and Woodford Green (Mr. Duncan Smith), but not even 100 of them were present to take this Bill seriously.

Mr. Gray: My right hon. Friend makes a powerful point, and I shall not try to outdo him on it. However, it was an absurdity.

Mr. Leigh: The fact is that Labour Members' hatred of the hon. Member for Brent, East (Mr. Livingstone) is greater than—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. The hon. Gentleman is going well outside the scope of the Bill.

Mr. Gray: I would like to continue in the tone of even-handed, intelligent and careful thought with which I started my contribution.

Mr. Peter L. Pike (Burnley): Will the hon. Gentleman give way?

Mr. Gray: In one moment perhaps.

The entire debate about fox hunting has achieved levels of passion on both sides that are extremely unhelpful. It should be a quiet and sensible debate about agriculture and the benefits to the countryside.

We have heard about the many people who would lose their jobs if hunting with dogs were banned, and that might apply in my constituency more than any other. Many people there work in, support and take part in hunting. Supporters of the Bill have failed to consider the people who look after the horses that are used in fox hunting. I am chairman of the horse and pony taxation committee, and about 40,000 horses are kept exclusively for the purpose of fox hunting. Many of them—they are medium-quality horses—would have to be destroyed alongside the 27,000 foxhounds that would be put down. Many more hounds would have to be put down as a result of a ban on fox hunting than the 16,000 foxes that are killed in any one year.

As to the Minister's suggestion that shooting and fishing would not be affected, the RSPCA has made it plain that it thinks that fox hunting, shooting and fishing should be banned. It has also made it plain that it believes that intensive farming should be banned. That devalues the evidence given by the RSPCA, which simply believes in banning anything to do with the countryside. It certainly devalues the Minister's comment that fishing and shooting would not be banned as a result of the Bill. That is the logical consequence, and the RSPCA shows exactly how such people think. It believes that anything to do with killing animals in any shape, size or form—and that includes intensive farming in the countryside—should be banned. That is a disgrace.

[Mr. Gray]

A ban on hunting with dogs would be a disaster for the rural economy; it would be a disaster for the environment and the countryside such as that in my—

Mr. Deputy Speaker (Sir Alan Haselhurst): Order.

It being half-past Two o'clock, the debate stood adjourned.

Debate to be resumed on Friday 14 April.

Remaining Private Members' Bills

EXPORT OF FARM ANIMALS BILL

Order for Second Reading read.

Hon. Members: Object.

Second Reading deferred till Friday 21 July.

WELFARE OF BROILER CHICKENS BILL

Order for Second Reading read.

Hon. Members: Object.

Second Reading deferred till Friday 21 July.

FIRE PREVENTION BILL

Order for Second Reading read.

Hon. Members: Object.

Second Reading deferred till Friday 19 May.

MARINE WILDLIFE PROTECTION BILL

Order for Second Reading read.

Hon. Members: Object.

Second Reading deferred till Friday 14 April.

SCHOOL CROSSINGS (AMENDMENT) BILL

Order for Second Reading read.

Hon. Members: Object.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Second Reading what day? No day named.

RETAIL PACKAGING RECYCLING BILL

Order for Second Reading read.

Hon. Members: Object.

Second Reading deferred till Friday 14 April.

PARLIAMENTARY COMMISSIONER (AMENDMENT) BILL [LORDS]

Order for Second Reading read.

Hon. Members: Object.

Second Reading deferred till Friday 14 April.

HARE COURSING BILL

Order for Second Reading read.

Hon. Members: Object.

Second Reading deferred till Friday 14 April.

ROAD TRAFFIC BILL

Order for Second Reading read.

Hon. Members: Object.

Second Reading deferred till Friday 14 April.

CENSUS (AMENDMENT) BILL [LORDS]

Order for Second Reading read.

Hon. Members: Object.

Second Reading deferred till Friday 19 May.

Live Animal Exports

Motion made, and Question proposed, That this House do now adjourn.—[Mr. Touhig.]

2.32 pm

Mr. Gwyn Prosser (Dover): I am pleased that my Bill to ban live animal exports lives to fight another day and to have a Second Reading, but in the meantime I should like to take the opportunity to rehearse the arguments for banning the export of live animals.

The election year of 1997 was not only a good year for the British people and the Labour party; it was a good year for British sheep. Fewer sheep were exported from our shores in that special year than in any other year in the decade. Even in 1997, however, more than 270,000 lambs and sheep were forced to endure the rigours of crossing the English channel and were exposed to further suffering on extended journeys across Europe—a suffering that often ends in slow, painful death at the hands of untrained and inept slaughtermen.

Since then, the number of exported sheep has risen dramatically, and figures from the Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food show that in 1999 the number of lambs and sheep exported for slaughter topped the 1 million mark, with more than 1.1 million being exported. That means that the inhumane trade has more than doubled in the past couple of years.

Before I came to the House, I was a merchant navy officer, and when I was sailing on deep sea vessels I regularly witnessed the live animal ships discharging their miserable cargoes in middle east ports. I have seen the injured and dying animals being dragged off the vessels with hooks and whole holdfuls of dead sheep being winched ashore in cargo nets. More recently, when I sailed on the Irish sea and the Dover cross-channel ferries, I saw the awful image of broken limbs protruding from animal trucks. In bad weather, I heard the cries and even smelt the fear of those wretched animals close up.

Those are some of the reasons why I want the UK to prohibit the export of live farm animals. A trade that regularly inflicts great suffering on living creatures has no legitimate part to play in a civilised and caring society, and it certainly has no part to play in the new fairer Britain that the Labour Government have set about building.

Today's animal exports, typically, are first sent to Belgium and Holland and, 24 hours later, re-exported to southern Europe. Many are trucked on appallingly long journeys to Italy, Greece and Spain, where they are killed in abattoirs using cruel and illegal slaughter methods. The journey to Italy can take 40 hours or more, and up to 100 hours to Greece.

Compassion in World Farming investigators have seen the state of the animals once they reach southern Europe. Many are exhausted and dehydrated, some are injured, and others have collapsed on the floor of the truck, where they have been trampled on by their companions. Yet others stick their heads out through the truck's ventilation slats, desperately panting and gasping for air. Their plight is due to overcrowding, the extreme heat in summer, the lack of water and proper ventilation on many trucks, and the sheer length of the journey.

In the worst cases, large numbers of animals die. Last August British sheep were left in the port of Bari in southern Italy for 48 hours, waiting for a ship to Greece.

[Mr. Gwyn Prosser]

They were kept in the trucks in blistering heat without any water. After repeated pleas from Compassion in World Farming, the Italian authorities at last relented and opened up the trucks, but by then many animals were already dead and many were gasping their last breaths. Those of us who have seen film of that will never forget it. Over the next few days, more animals perished. In all, 115 British lambs and 45 French sheep died in that disaster.

As long ago as 1993, a European Commission report concluded that > long distance transport in overstocked vehicles, combined with dehydration and starvation, results in very poor welfare and often in high mortality.

All the evidence shows that that remains the case, and there are extensive documentation and numerous directives supporting that simple link.

On this side of the channel, the exporters Farmers Ferry told me that they exercise the highest standards of animal welfare. That claim is derided by Kent Against Live Animal Exports, the local protest group, whose observers keep a close watch on port activities from the white cliffs of Dover.

The exporters' claims of high standards are hardly borne out by the Ministry's figures, which show that in the last seven months of last year, a massive figure of 12,558 sheep transported to Dover docks and destined for export were rejected by the local veterinary inspectors as unfit to travel. Some were already dead on arrival. It is a scandal that the exporters, who claim to have such high animal welfare standards, try to send so many unfit animals for export.

The problems are not confined to the long journeys. Equally disturbing are the slaughter conditions awaiting the animals at their journey's end. Last year Compassion in World Farming investigators visited three Greek sheep abattoirs. Two were making no attempt at all to stun the animals, which is not only cruel, but illegal under EU law. The third was stunning the animals, but so ineptly that they regained consciousness before having their throats cut.

Recently we witnessed one of the worst aspects of this wretched trade. Each year thousands of British sheep are exported to France for outdoor ritual slaughter during the Eid El Kabir festival. The animals are slaughtered without stunning, in the open air. They are held down on the ground and their throats are crudely cut while they are fully conscious. They are often left to bleed to death in agony. It is clear from the filmed evidence that the slaughtermen are untrained. They are seen hacking away at the sheep's throat with blunt knives, and the animals are seen writhing in their death agonies for several minutes before they eventually succumb.

Under both EU and French law, ritual slaughter must be carried out in abattoirs. The activities in the killing fields of Paris are expressly prohibited. However, neither the European Commission nor the French authorities take any meaningful action against these illegal acts. I urge the Government to make further and stronger representations on these matters.

All the suffering and cruelty inherent in the live export trade is unnecessary. Transporting animals hundreds of miles to slaughter is not a necessary part of the process of feeding ourselves. Most of the animals exported from Britain will be slaughtered on arrival at their destination or shortly afterwards. It is senseless to subject animals to the misery of long journeys, only to slaughter them at journey's end. Animals should be sent to slaughterhouses as near as possible to the farm of rearing, and all our exports should be in meat form. Many respected organisations have echoed this approach.

With all the evidence clearly linking long journeys to bad animal welfare, it is disappointing that we still allow companies to ship live sheep from places such as the Gower peninsula to places such as the Greek islands. When will our Government begin to translate their warm words into concrete commitment and actively encourage the principle of slaughtering near to the farm of rearing, and transporting the product as meat?

A marvellous opportunity has arisen. The European Union transport directive was due for review at the end of last year. It must not lead to the EU simply tinkering at the margins of the problem, with some journeys becoming a little shorter and many becoming longer. That happened after the previous review in 1995. The EU must adopt a major change of policy whereby the long-distance transport of live farm animals is abandoned and replaced by a trade in carcases. I urge the Government to take a vigorous lead in persuading our EU partners to adopt that fundamental policy change, which will spare farm animals much suffering and will be so welcome to the public.

In the meantime, until this cruel trade is ended, EU transport directives must be much more rigorously enforced. Last year, the European Commission published five reports, which showed that EU laws that were designed to give animals at least some protection during transport are widely ignored in France, Greece, Italy, Belgium and Ireland. Compassion in World Farming has produced an excellent paper, which it has sent to the Minister. It shows how the enforcement of the directive could be improved. I urge the Government to take a lead in persuading our EU partners to adopt those practical and sensible suggestions.

I am disappointed that the Government have not succeeded in reducing the volume of live exports. I welcome the Parliamentary Secretary's often-repeated statement that he would prefer United Kingdom exports to be in meat form rather than live animals. None the less such statements have had little effect; live exports have more than doubled in the past two years, since our Government have been in office.

The time has come for new initiatives from the Government. First, they should urge farmers' leaders to join them in working out the details of a phased voluntary withdrawal from the live export trade. The Government should remind sheep farmers that they receive huge subsidies from the public purse and that in return for that financial aid, taxpayers are entitled to expect farmers to respond to public anxieties by pulling out of an inhumane trade.

Secondly, the Government should seek a derogation from EU rules to ban live animal exports, in the same way as the previous Government gained a derogation for horses and ponies. Thirdly, they should take the lead in persuading the EU to replace the long-distance transport of live animals with the meat trade.

Fourthly, the Government should urgently effect their warmly received 1997 decision to remove exporters' rights to select and pay for the services of local veterinary inspectors. That is essential to demonstrate the inspectors' independence. We have waited nearly three years for its introduction.

The Government have resisted my past calls on behalf of animal welfare groups for a ban on live animal exports on the grounds that it would breach EU rules on free movement of goods. However, last year, a legally binding EU protocol on animal welfare came into force which recognises animals as sentient beings. It can therefore be argued that animals are no longer subject to EU rules on the free movement of goods. Many people believe that the Government should use that argument to justify a ban on live exports. The case should at least be tested.

The protocol also requires the EU and member states when formulating policy on agriculture to pay full regard to the welfare requirements of animals. Allowing a trade that routinely inflicts great suffering to continue unchecked neither fulfils that legal duty nor responds to animals' status as sentient beings.

More than 80 per cent. of British people want an end to the trade. The established ferry companies have stopped taking it and the ports do not want to handle it. Ministers have expressed a clear preference for meat to be transported on the hook rather than on the hoof. I therefore strongly urge the Government vigorously to promote the welfare of animals in transit immediately and bring about a total ban on the cruel and unnecessary trade in the longer term.

2.44 pm

The Parliamentary Secretary to the Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food (Mr. Elliot Morley): I congratulate my hon. Friend the Member for Dover (Mr. Prosser) on obtaining the debate. I hope that it is a small consolation for his not yet having had an opportunity to discuss his private Member's Bill. I recognise the sincerity of his comments on live exports. He has been a strong campaigner and has reflected the views not only of many his constituents but of a great many people in this country generally, including livestock farmers who are concerned about live exports for slaughter.

As my hon. Friend rightly said, the Government have made their position clear on a number of occasions. Our preference is for meat exports, not live animal exports, which is right not only for the welfare of the animals, but for the added value to meat exports, for jobs in our country, for the economy and for our meat and slaughter industry. Exporting live animals also means exporting jobs and that should not be forgotten in terms of the rural economy and the issues that the Government are trying to address. It is also worth pointing out that live exports represent only about 5 per cent. of lamb exports. The vast majority are meat, so the argument about the overall economic impact of live exports is strong and it would surely be preferable to maximise meat exports. Much more attention should be paid to them rather than to live exports.

The Government welcome farmers coming together in marketing groups and support their co-operative ventures. Farmers have come together to establish their own ferry service for exporting lamb to the continent, which is a good principle, and I am encouraged that, according to recent reports, the Farmers Ferry board is investigating the use of the ferry for meat as well as live exports. It should be just as easy for a facility that can handle livestock transporters and all the problems that go with them to take refrigerated vehicles carrying meat for export and we hope that the investigation will develop.

Many people in the livestock sector accept that there is a strong reaction to live exports. They are looking for the best return for their business and their products and we understand that, which is why we want to explain certain issues relating to meat exports. I have had talks with the National Sheep Association about the potential for meat export opportunities and we also know that companies are considering the establishment of ethical veal production in this country and the export of meat to the continent. The calf export trade has been halted and there is no prospect of it being restarted in the immediate future.

We accept that there are problems with long-distance live exports. There is also abuse on some occasions, particularly on the continent when animals exported from this country go to their legal destinations in France, Belgium or Holland and are sold on, loaded on to other vehicles and transported again. They are completely outside United Kingdom control. Monitoring depends very much on the member states responsible, and the Commission is responsible for enforcement. We have been scrupulous in our inspections and have tightened the procedures. We have also tried to be open and transparent. For example, the Departments website gives information about the number of animals going through Dover and the number rejected by our inspectors there. We must bear in mind that the primary inspection is carried out by the local veterinary inspector when the animals set off. There is a second inspection at Dover, which the Ministry established to make sure that there was no obvious problem with animals going through.

We take firm action within the law in relation to live animal exports and I understand my hon. Friend's case for changing the law to stop them completely, but we cannot do that at present. The European Court has established that live exports are part of the single market. Therefore, they are legal. We do not have the power to stop them, but we do have power to regulate and inspect them. We can ensure that journey plans are enforced, and that the animals are in good condition and are inspected properly—and we do that. We refuse to authorise long-distance journey plans in the summer when the ambient temperatures of the countries that the animals will pass through present a risk to their well-being. We also refuse to approve journey plans if we are not satisfied that there are proper facilities to cater and to care for the animals at their destination.

Sir Richard Body (Boston and Skegness): The United Kingdom Government have not yet invoked article 36 of the treaty of Rome.

Mr. Morley: I was coming to that. The hon. Gentleman has a good record on animal welfare issues. Article 36 is now article 30, and has been changed slightly. We have considered using article 36, but our legal advice is that we cannot do so on live exports. One of the cases taken to the European Court by Compassion in World Farming was based on article 36. It argued that we could stop the export of calves, which were going into systems that were illegal in this country. The European Court ruled that we could not, so we have a clear court ruling on that.

[Mr. Morley]

It is interesting that some Conservative Members who are arguing that we should use article 36 to stop pig imports argued against using article 36 to stop calf exports. That is an inconsistent position.

My hon. Friend gave two appalling examples of the abuse that occurs with long-distance transport. In the Bari case animals were being transported to Greece but were held up in Italy waiting for the ferry in the summer heat. The suffering of those animals must have been intense, and many of them died. Although they may have included some British sheep, the journey plan had not been authorised in the United Kingdom, and it would not have been authorised at that time of year. The sheep were sold legally and the company abided by the law, but they were sold on to another company who transported them to Bari and did not comply with EU law. We certainly need to address that problem.

There is also the issue of the appalling slaughter of animals for Eid El Kabir. If I were a French Minister, I would be ashamed to be associated with what has been going on. We have made representations to the French authorities. Although they have said that they recognise the problem and are taking steps to deal with it, I am sorry that, to say that it does not appear from the video evidence I have seen recently that much has been done to improve the situation.

My right hon. Friend the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food has recently written to Commissioner Byrne to say that the regulation of standards is a European issue and should be properly enforced. Many hundreds of people from this country have written to the Commission and to the French authorities expressing their concern.

As my hon. Friend rightly said, we have a Muslim population. I am glad to say that we have sat round the table with Muslim organisations to talk about such problems. Through discussion and with the support and co-operation of Muslim organisations in the UK, we have made it illegal to carry out any religious slaughter that does not involve a proper slaughterhouse and a licensed slaughterman. I am sorry that the French have not done the same. I hope that they do so.

My hon. Friend talked about translating warm words into action. I understand his frustration, because he has campaigned on this issue for so long and with such sincerity on behalf of the many people concerned about the export of live animals. It is not easy for the Government, because we must abide by the law and work within the legal system. We are doing what we can to translate our preferences into action. For example, a brand-new slaughterhouse is being built in Wales. That will be important to the sheep market, and to Welsh sheep producers. The Government are supporting it with structural grants.

We are reviewing the transport regulations. I agree with my hon. Friend that the current European Union-wide review of the Welfare of Animals (Transport) Order 1997 gives us an opportunity to address ourselves to some of the problems and abuses. It is perfectly legitimate for us to consider, for instance, why it is necessary to transport live animals over such long distances, whether the system can be properly enforced, and whether the enforcement is being properly applied or needs to be tightened in certain respects. Incidentally, we are conducting our own national review of the order.

I can give my hon. Friend a clear undertaking that we will look carefully at the Compassion in World Farming paper, which proposes ways in which the situation can be improved. Compassion in World Farming has made a number of suggestions to the Government on a range of issues. Its proposals for improvements in animal welfare are often sensible, reasonable and well argued, and we shall take its current proposals seriously. It should be borne in mind that we start from the premise that meat exports are far preferable to live exports, from the point of view of the livestock sector as well as the welfare point of view.

My hon. Friend mentioned local veterinary inspectors, who are currently appointed by the exporters. We propose that they should be appointed by MAFF. It is part of a two-stage change, stage one of which has been implemented. Stage one involved our establishing minimum benchmark standards for all local veterinary inspectors involving, for instance, the time that they spend on inspections that they conduct on the Ministry's behalf. We have consulted on the appointment of inspectors by MAFF; we have received a response, and are now involved in the final stage of the process, which consists of consulting the Welsh Assembly and the Scottish Parliament. Following devolution, we must obtain their opinions. We await their response, and I hope that we can make a decision as quickly as possible.

There is no controversy about standards. Those on all sides of the argument—exporters, the livestock sector, welfare organisations and the public—want the best standards to operate and to be enforced, not only in the United Kingdom but internationally. There are international questions about, for example, the import of horses to the EU from eastern European states: many people are concerned about that, and have written to us. There are also failings in our system that should be addressed in the EU.

I am not complacent, but I think that the Government have taken the issue of live exports very seriously. We have made many improvements. It is true, however, that we need to do more, not only in the United Kingdom but in the EU, to bring about the enforcement that has been lacking in Europe. I know that many Members, not least my hon. Friend, will carefully scrutinise what the Government do, and will press the Ministry to ensure that we introduce changes that will be important not just to animal welfare and the people whom we represent, but to the livestock industry and its reputation. I am sure that the industry will wish to join us in our attempts to improve the position.

Question put and agreed to.

Adjourned accordingly at one minute to Three o'clock.

Westminster Hall

Tuesday 28 March 2000

[MR. MICHAEL LORD in the Chair]

Colombia

Motion made, and Question proposed, That the sitting be now adjourned.—[Mr. Sutcliffe.]

10 am

Mr. Desmond Browne (Kilmarnock and Loudoun): I am grateful for the opportunity to initiate an important debate and am pleased to see so many hon. Members in the Chamber. I appreciate their support, as I understand that a substantial voting duty kept them from their beds last night. I am sure that the Government and people of Colombia will take note of their interest in this subject.

I wish to declare an interest in this subject and draw hon. Members' attention to my entry in the Register of Members' Interests. Last February, my hon. Friend the Member for Wythenshawe and Sale, East (Mr. Goggins) and I were privileged to be part of a group of European parliamentarians who spent eight days in Colombia, where we met representatives of non-governmental organisations, church leaders, politicians and Colombian Ministers. I was present as the guest of the Scottish International Aid Fund, otherwise known as SCIAF.

Human rights were the focus of our visit. I commend to the Chamber the invaluable work done on such matters, which is supported by United Kingdom NGOs. The United Kingdom enjoys high regard, affection and respect from the people of Colombia partly as a result of NGOs' significant contribution to such work. British organisations provide a high degree of protection for ordinary citizens, local people, NGOs and other organisations by accompanying them in their human rights work. They support some of the most vulnerable people in the world and do so in our name.

I described my visit as a privilege because, like all visitors, I was stunned by the great beauty and diversity of Colombia, and because I was privileged to meet many people of great courage, patriotism and dignity. Our delegation was particularly impressed by those who had been, or still are, victims of violence.

Singling anyone out would be invidious and possibly even dangerous for such people. However, I draw the Chamber's attention to a group of displaced people whom we met in the city of Quibdo in the region of Choco. We met 40 families who had been displaced from their poor rural villages by paramilitary violence and who had taken residence on the wooden terraces of a crumbling concrete basketball stadium. As I recollect, some families occupied only 8 or 9 sq ft of that stadium. They had been abandoned there for two years with no access to work, no hope of integration in the local community and dependent on a European Union charity for the most basic needs of life. Some children in that stadium knew no other life.

We promised that we would not forget those people and that we would bring their plight to the attention of the international community. My hon. Friend the Member for Wythenshawe and Sale, East has already introduced an Adjournment debate on the subject and I am sure that none of us present that day will ever forget those people and I dedicate to them my contribution to our debate.

Our debate is timely for at least four reasons. First, by fortuitous coincidence, London is honoured by the presence of Mr. Victor Ricardo, the Colombian Government's high commissioner for peace and their chief negotiator in negotiations currently taking place between them and the Colombian revolutionary armed forces or FARC. We are especially fortunate that Mr. Ricardo has chosen this time to come to the United Kingdom to deliver a progress report on the peace process.

On 28 January, the Colombian Government and FARC representatives reached agreement on the common agenda for change for the new Colombia. It was also agreed that the issues on the agenda should be divided into three main categories: social and economic structures; human rights, international law and international relations; and democratic processes and political structures of the state. It is important, appropriate and timely that, at this stage of the peace process, awareness of what is happening in Colombia is raised within the international community—and it is especially welcome in the United Kingdom.

Secondly, and perhaps not coincidentally with the visit of Mr. Victor Ricardo, EU member states were asked by the Colombian Government to contribute substantial aid to the funding of Plan Colombia. Plan Colombia—described as a global plan for peace, prosperity and a strengthening of the state—was developed by the Administration of President Pastrana to provide $7.5 billion of support for development and the peace process. The Colombian Government hope to secure $3.5 billion from EU member states and other international donors. Spain will bring together the European donor nations, Japan and Canada to a donor meeting in July, which will be held in Madrid.

Thirdly, it is timely to debate these issues as we approach the 56th session of the United Nations Commission on Human Rights at which, once again, Colombia's human rights record will be examined and reported. At the previous session, a strongly worded and critical statement on Colombia's record was issued. The British Government have strongly supported previous commission statements and, over the past two years, the high commissioner's office in Colombia. The time has come for the Government to reiterate their support for both. I am sure that hon. Members will want to debate those and related matters.

Fourthly, the debate is timely because my hon. Friend the Member for Manchester, Central (Mr. Lloyd) and the hon. Member for Richmond Park (Dr. Tonge) are to visit Colombia shortly. The hon. Member for Richmond Park—the Liberal Democrat's spokesperson on development issues, who discharges her responsibilities admirably—has not previously visited Colombia and she looks on the debate as a welcome briefing. That cannot be said for my hon. Friend the Member for Manchester, Central who, when a Minister in the Foreign and Commonwealth Office, established an enviable reputation, here and in Colombia, for his knowledge and understanding of the country. My hon.

[Mr. Desmond Browne]

Friend the Member for Wythenshawe and Sale, East and I were indebted to him for a comprehensive briefing prior to our visit in 1999.

Colombia enjoys the unenviable reputation of being one of the most violent countries in the world. Quite why it has acquired such a reputation is less well known or understood. It is a popular misconception—sometimes reinforced for political reasons by others—that the violence in Colombia is all connected with drugs. It is true that in the 1990s, prior to the election of President Pastrana in 1998, Colombia was subjected to a great political crisis as a result of the use of drugs money in political campaigns, but drugs were not the cause of the political crisis in the country, which has persisted in civil unrest and violence almost continuously since around 1948.

Behind the political crisis of the 1990s lurked a more persistent crisis—a structural crisis of the Colombian political regime and society. Behind the drugs war, another war was being waged against peasant and labour leaders, teachers, journalists, priests, nuns, lawyers, women's rights leaders, human rights workers and ordinary citizens. That war is estimated to have claimed between 3,000 and 4,000 victims every year during the 1990s. Over half the trade union leaders murdered in the world in 1997 were murdered in Colombia—a country in which less than 10 per cent. of the work force is in trade unions. The number of internal refugees or displaced people is reckoned by some to amount to 1.5 million—vastly greater than the number of pre-NATO bombing refugees in Kosovo.

It serves the political purposes of others to portray the Colombian Government as a helpless hostage to drug barons and leftist guerrillas. Although drug barons and guerrillas are responsible for 20 per cent. of the country's violence and regularly violate the human rights of others, Amnesty International and other NGOs estimate that 75 per cent. of the politically motivated murders in Colombia are perpetrated by right-wing paramilitary forces who have proven links with the Colombian regular army. In February 2000, Human Rights Watch published a report entitled "The Ties that Bind: Colombian Military and Paramilitary Links". That report, which was based on investigations by Colombian authorities, presents a persuasive case that army support for paramilitary groups continues.

To compound that complex and depressing picture, the violation of human rights largely goes unpunished because Colombia has an impunity rate of about 97 per cent. Only 3 per cent. of those who commit violence are answerable for their actions in Colombian courts. Most human rights violations in Colombia are carried out with total impunity. Despite the efforts of the public prosecutors office, security forces routinely evade and pervert the course of justice. Military courts that have jurisdiction over investigations into human rights violations by armed forces personnel systematically fail to bring those responsible to justice.

Despite repeated recommendations for improvement, no significant progress has been made in dismantling paramilitary groups or ending their activities, in ridding the armed forces and police of those shown to be actively or passively supporting paramilitary groups, in the reformation of the military penal code to make military personnel amenable to civilian courts or in the basic protection of human rights defenders.

Mr. Richard Allan (Sheffield, Hallam): Although I sympathise with the hon. Gentleman's point about the links between certain elements of the armed forces and paramilitary groups, the anti-narcotics police, under General Serrano, whom I met the year before last, have a good reputation for cleaning up their act. Does the hon. Gentleman agree that it is important, where we see the roots of recovery, to support those Colombian state organisations that have a good human rights record and to encourage that model to be put in place rather than the old model of unpleasant links between some state organisations and those who are involved in violence?

Mr. Browne: That is an important point. I am sure that the Minister will confirm that the support provided by the United Kingdom has largely been used to train the forces that the hon. Gentleman mentions, which is to the credit of the United Kingdom. From my limited experience of the country, I know that people in Colombia recognise that our support for the military and the police has tended to be used to train what have become the more respectable forces, which contrasts with the aid that other countries tend to give. I have not met General Serrano, so the hon. Gentleman adds to our collective experience of Colombia, and I am grateful to him for that intervention.

The armed conflict in Colombia, which has dominated the 20th century, has its roots in the social, economic and political exclusion of large sections of its population. That is my essential theme. Those outside the two traditional parties—the liberals and the conservatives—are effectively excluded from Colombia's political structures. In the late 1980s, the Patriotic Union—a legal political party formed by disarmed guerrillas, members of M19 and the Communist party—enjoyed significant electoral success, so much so that it became a threat to Colombia's political elite. In 1989, there was a real possibility that its candidate would be elected in the 1990 presidential election, but he, and all the other presidential candidates, except one, was killed. There followed a political genocide of the UP party. The US State Department estimated that 3,500 members of that party were killed.

Clearly, that is a lesson of history for those guerrillas who have entered the current peace negotiations. Clearly, FARC will not make the same mistake as M19. Even if a negotiated settlement between FARC and the Government were reached, is FARC ever likely to disarm in the absence of pluralistic politics? There can be no peace in Colombia until the political structures generate real political opportunities for everyone.

Disputes about the ownership and control of land have been largely responsible for much of the violent conflict. Even in the 1960s when agricultural reform was in fashion, there was no agricultural redistribution in Colombia. There can be no peace in Colombia without land reform. FARC and the ELN, which began in the 1960s as organisations of about 30 or 40 farmers, are now properly trained armies with estimated forces of about 20,000. Their growth has been deeply related to problems of exclusion. Those who were forbidden to participate politically or were denied access to the ownership of land turned to arms as an answer to their political exclusion.

However, narcotics and drug trafficking have had a role to play. Showing a Colombian passport in any airport in the world will almost guarantee a strip search. To some degree it suits developed societies to demonise Colombia as the cause of all their drug problems, but as anyone who visits Colombia will be told repeatedly, the drugs will not be produced unless there is a market for them. The pressing problem of drug abuse in the developed world cannot be resolved simply by seeking to control illegal cultivation in Colombia, particularly illegal cultivation by very poor people who cannot grow anything else. Everything else that they have ever grown, we no longer want to buy and if we did, there is no infrastructure to get it to the market.

Dealing with demand is our responsibility. While the drugs industry continues in Colombia the problems that it brings to that country will continue. As long as big drug barons can earn $500 million a year from the manufacture and traffic of drugs, they will continue to do so. However, the war in Colombia is about more than drugs and Colombia's problems do not lend themselves to simplistic solutions. The complex circumstances that have brought it to its present position were not created by the government of President Pastrana. On the contrary, his leadership has been crucial in the development of the peace process.

We must support President Pastrana in the promotion of the dialogue among the different parties to the conflict. We must acknowledge and respect the commitment and bravery of those state officials who have taken risks in the pursuit of peace and justice for their country. They are brave people who are sometimes the victims of violence, kidnap and murder. Although we support them and recognise the factors that limit their ability to achieve their goals, we cannot do so uncritically. Peace is not simply a matter of negotiations, nor, as we have learned closer to home, is it simply about ceasefires and negotiations. Peace is about human rights and justice for all. It is about the creation of an inclusive political process.

There has long been a demand in Colombia for greater participation in the peace process by the wider Colombian society. Now that initial progress in the peace process has been achieved, it is time for the involvement of civil society in the debate over substantive social, political, economic and civil changes, as set out in the agreed agenda. There is a significant feeling among civil society in Colombia that they have been excluded from the peace process to date. The irony is that they believe that Pastrana's response was motivated largely by civil society's energy for peace. Ordinary citizens' demand for peace led him to respond when he was president elect and to engage with the guerrillas.

The public hearings proposed for April to discuss economic and social reform are to be welcomed, but as all politicians know only too well, participation and consultation can take many forms. If the peace process is to become embedded in Colombian society, the Colombian people must have ownership of it. If it is to succeed, it must ensure respect for human rights. Those guilty of gross human rights abuses must be brought to justice, and peace must be built on reforms that are designed to construct a much stronger local and regional democracy.

Although I urge our Government to support the concept of Plan Colombia as a vision for the development of the whole of Colombian society, it should not be seen as a proposal that has been born out of democratic discussion or debate. It is the product solely of the Pastrana Administration and it has its weaknesses. Only 0.7 per cent. of its funding is dedicated to the peace process while about 64 per cent. is earmarked for national defence. As part of the funding of that plan, a $1.7 billion package of largely military assistance is currently being discussed in the United States. Colombia receives more US arms and equipment than any other country in the world except Israel and Egypt.

The policy behind those statistics has been described by Amnesty International as similar to the policy that backed death squads in El Salvador in the 1980s. Plan Colombia must not be allowed to fuel the violence and internationalise the war by bringing in the United States on a far greater scale than hitherto. In the context of the forthcoming discussions in Madrid, the United Kingdom, as a donor nation, has the opportunity to fashion a positive aid package, which should involve judicial reform, and could include funds to help the 1.5 million displaced people. It could help crop substitution programmes, which are the real key to defeating the drug barons.

The peace process and the complementary development plan require international assistance. This must come in a form that strengthens the justice process, the peace building, the democratisation of the country and respect for human rights, including the rights of children and women. The last thing that Colombia needs is further militarisation.

I urge our Government to maintain a consistently strong position on human rights in Colombia. There is evidence of a continuing deterioration in the spheres of forced displacement and human rights. In those circumstances, and in the face of new evidence of links between the armed forces and paramilitary groups, it is imperative that the Colombian office of the human rights high commissioner continues to enjoy political and financial support. It is also imperative that there should be consistent international monitoring of Colombia's human rights practices. We are rightly proud of our commitment to an ethical foreign policy: such a monitoring process in Colombia is the least that we can expect from our Government.

10.21 am

Dr. Jenny Tonge (Richmond Park): As the hon. Member for Kilmarnock and Loudoun (Mr. Browne) said, the debate takes the form of a briefing for me, as I hope to visit Colombia—I am reasonably sure that I will—in the near future. I congratulate the hon. Gentleman on securing the debate.

I have an advantage in that the researcher who is working in my office spent four months in Colombia last year and is constantly bending my ear on the subject. It is appropriate to emphasise one of the comments made by the hon. Member for Kilmarnock and Loudoun. My researcher said that we must remember that the majority of Colombians are decent people. She remarked that, as we worried and sweated while she was out there in that frightfully dangerous, evil and corrupt place, she was constantly meeting lovely people who cared desperately about their country, wanted to see a future for it, and, in fact, lived relatively normal lives. Those of us who are so far away from Colombia need to remind ourselves of that as we discuss that country's problems.

[Dr. Jenny Tonge]

There has been a catalogue of human suffering in Colombia. The war has raged for 40 years; 35,000 people have been killed in the past 10 years alone. Three hundred thousand people have fled their country, and 1.5 million people are displaced, and, as we have heard, are living in the most appalling conditions. I was interested to hear that during one of Colombia's worst recessions ever, it is currently spending less on health and education than Bolivia, which is south America's poorest country. That is a terrible fact to absorb as we consider the prospects for Colombia's future.

A few weeks ago I read an article in The Guardian entitled "Colombians braced for fight on all fronts", which summed up the position for me because, as a newcomer to the subject, I found the stories about Colombia's armed factions as bad as, if not worse than what I had read about, for example, southern Sudan—it is certainly more complicated—although there is a similar pattern. FARC rules 40 per cent. of Colombia, mainly in the south of the country; it makes huge amounts of money from drug trafficking and kidnapping, blows up pipelines, kills human rights activists and terrorises the population. It can afford very sophisticated weaponry, such as fighters, because of its drug trafficking.

The ELN, the Colombian liberation army, controls parts of the north, and also hijacks, terrorises and kidnaps. The paramilitary, commonly known as the headcutters, has strong links with the armed forces in Colombia, which is horrifying—that is what reminded me of southern Sudan. The headcutters are very right wing and have the most appalling record of abusing human rights. They even have links, through the military, with transnational companies working in Colombia. It is true that our companies have difficulties, and that development is essential to Colombia, but we should question the value of such development when those companies have to secure their operations by spurious links with Colombia's armed forces and thus with the paramilitaries.

The army in Colombia has a huge amount of aid from the United States, more than any country except those in the middle east, but nevertheless, it consists mainly of untrained and unmotivated young men, and has a persistent record of human rights abuses.

Having considered the matter in the past few days, I believe that the drugs trade is the single biggest contributor to the misery and chaos in Colombia. FARC and the ELN alone earn $500 million—I am not sure of the exact figure—from cocaine and they tax and protect the coca farmers. The paramilitaries finance themselves growing the stuff and protecting the drugs cartels. The economy is destabilised by money laundering and by discouraging legitimate investment. We must consider ways of dismantling the drugs trade.

There is a huge multilateral package of $7.6 billion to reduce drug production in the next six years. The United States is contributing $1.6 billion to fight the war on drugs; there are three anti-drugs battalions and 63 helicopters are working in the jungle burning and spraying the coca fields, but we do not know whether that will do any good. The war on drugs in south America had a limited success in Peru and Bolivia, where production was reduced, but it shifted to Colombia. I am worried that success in reducing the production of cocaine in Colombia will simply shift it elsewhere, perhaps to the Caribbean. Only recently we had a debate in Westminster Hall on the banana trade in the Caribbean. If the farmers there cannot grow bananas, they will grow drugs. That will mean that drugs production and trade will be even closer to the shores of the United States. Has that been considered?

The confrontation between the US army and the guerrillas in Colombia is building up, which could result in all-out war. Is that what we want? The Foreign Office has given £2.2 million to the United Nations worldwide drugs control programme, which includes the aerial fumigation of coca crops. However, that has resulted in a 20 per cent. increase in output in recent years. Is that programme worth while? Who is monitoring drug cultivation in Colombia? What damage does fumigation do to other crops and to the people of Colombia? Can we justify spending 73 per cent. of the budget of the United Nations international drug control programme on this environmental damage, when only 2 per cent. of it is spent on reducing demand?

Another factor is Colombia's appalling infrastructure. That encourages farmers to grow coca crops, which are easy to transport where roads and a proper infrastructure are lacking. Money should perhaps also be spent on the infrastructure, so that the farmers can earn a living by growing other crops.

It is simple economics, as the hon. Member for Kilmarnock and Loudoun said, that demand produces the supply of drugs. Western Governments must take a long look at their policies to curb demand. When will we admit that zero tolerance is not working in the west? I am not suggesting solutions, but we should seriously examine all aspects of drug supply and demand, in this country and internationally. Whether we do that through a royal commission or in another way, we must make it a prime subject of concern. While there is demand for drugs from the west, countries such as Colombia will supply them.

Mrs. Cheryl Gillan (Chesham and Amersham): What does the hon. Lady think of the harm reductionist lobby in this country and talk of reducing the penalties for possession and use of cannabis? What message does that send to the drug producers in Colombia?

Dr. Tonge: The hon. Lady has highlighted precisely the problem. As soon as we begin to talk openly and honestly about different ways of reducing the demand for drugs, somebody asks about the messages that we might send. I agree with her: we may send the wrong messages, but the matter must be discussed and explored. We must find out the results. We cannot go on as we are.

The Minister of State, Foreign and Commonwealth Office (Mr. John Battle): As my hon. Friend the Member for Kilmarnock and Loudon (Mr. Browne) said, we must not reduce a debate about Colombia to simply a discussion on drugs.

The hon. Member for Richmond Park (Dr. Tonge) raises a much larger question about the international drug trade. She may know that the Government's work under Keith Hellawell is focusing on drugs supply and demand and on getting to grips with analysing the economics of the drug market internationally. That is a massive problem, which takes in drug laundering and everything else. I reassure the hon. Lady that that wider analysis of the drugs trade is firmly on the agenda.

Dr. Tonge: That is excellent news. I thank the Minister for saying that. It is the first time that I have heard a Minister say that all those aspects are being addressed, not simply zero tolerance, with the use of the word "tsar", which inflames my passions, especially as it comes from what should be a socialist Government. I hate all these tsars that have been set up. I thought that you had abolished them long ago.

Mr. Deputy Speaker (Mr Nicholas Winterton): Order. I have not abolished anything, much as I would wish to do so.

Dr. Tonge: I apologise, Mr. Deputy Speaker. I will not prolong the debate on what you might wish to abolish, as I would be here all day.

To move away from drugs, the Government rightly wish to build respect for human rights in Colombia, and that goes to the nub of the problem. Aid is being directed towards good governance, human rights monitoring and, in particular, training the Army to respect human rights. The judiciary in Colombia must be strengthened: impunity for human rights violation is nearly 100 per cent. and a military justice system prevails. That is clearly no good if there is to be any sort of peace brokering. Indeed, peace brokering is useless while there is disrespect for human rights. Any peace would break down in the face of continuing drug trafficking, human rights violations and the lack of a proper civilian judiciary.

Given the problems that Colombia faces, it is interesting that our Government claim to have a foreign policy with an ethical dimension. Britain has recently issued 24 export licences for heavy machine guns and rifles. We know that those licences are for weapons that will go to the Army, which has links with the paramilitaries. I question whether that is a good or ethical policy, and I hope that the Minister can address that.

The Colombian Government have had difficulties complying with the UN commissioner's demands for attention to human rights, although they—and President Pastrana—are to be congratulated, to some extent, on their efforts in trying to address Colombia's problems. At the heart of those problems lies a lack of respect for human rights. The west should support calls for a UN resolution to enforce reforms, and back that with a determined effort to reform the ways in which we tackle the demand for drugs.

10.36 am

Mr. Paul Goggins (Wythenshawe and Sale, East): I apologise for my voice this morning, Mr. Deputy Speaker, but I am afraid that it is beyond my powers to project myself more forcefully.

I pay generous tribute to the way in which my hon. Friend the Member for Kilmarnock and Loudoun (Mr. Browne) introduced the debate. His reputation for making copious notes wherever he goes, which included our visit to Colombia, has borne fruit in his analysis of the problems faced by that country.

As the hon. Member for Richmond Park (Dr. Tonge) is treating the debate as her first briefing on Colombia, I should like to tell her about my first such briefing. It was given by someone who has many years' experience in dealings with Colombia, who told me that anyone who claims to understand the country and to know the answers to its problems must be lying. The complexity of the problems is such that nobody can fully understand either their causes or their solutions.

Where does one start? It could be with the beauty of the landscape, which is there for all to see; the economy, which is experiencing the worst recession for 70 years; the marked gap betwen rich and poor; the drugs; the guerrillas, paramilitaries and armed services or the weakness of the state and the levels of impunity.

I start, as did my hon. Friend the Member for Kilmarnock and Loudoun, in a dilapidated basketball stadium in the town of Quibdo, where, on a clammy, hot, sunny Sunday morning, we met a group of about 300 men, women and children who had lived there for more than two years because they had been forced by violence to flee their homes. The Consultancy on Human Rights and Displacement estimates that, in the first nine months of last year, 225,000 people in Colombia were forcibly displaced from their homes—a total of 1.7 million people since the mid-1980s. That has a massive impact on family life, community life and people's livelihoods and sense of security.

The number of killings and kidnappings is chilling. An informative publication from the Colombian Vice-President's office reports that 24,081 people were murdered in Colombia in 1999. It also states that the number of victims of massacres—where three or more people are killed in a single episode—has increased from 1,366 to 1,863, and that kidnappings are increasing.

We must never forget that those statistics represent the real lives, or deaths, of ordinary people in Colombia. Last summer, with my hon. Friend the Minister of State, I met two visitors from Colombia who had been forced to flee the country. One was the elected mayor of a small Colombian town and the other was a partner of the Catholic Fund for Overseas Development. We had an interesting meeting, to which my hon. Friend the Minister might refer in his remarks. The comments that they made as they left the meeting stand out in my mind. They thanked me, and asked me to thank the Government for allowing them to come to this country in an emergency. Within a week of their arrival here, two of their colleagues—another mayor from a neighbouring town, and another of CAFOD's partners—had been murdered. Such life and death situations face the many people struggling for human rights and peace in Colombia.

[Mr. Paul Goggins]

My hon. Friend the Member for Kilmarnock and Loudoun said that this debate is timely. I agree with the reasons that he gave, although I might give them in a slightly different order. The 56th session of the United Nations Commission on Human Rights began last week. The report being presented to the commission is very grave. It states that there are > grave and prolonged occurrences of serious and massive violations of human rights and International Humanitarian Law.

The report details the numbers of internally displaced people, the levels of impunity and the attacks that take place on human rights workers.

We must acknowledge the steps that have been taken—especially during the past couple of years—to strive to improve the justice system in Colombia. I have twice had the privilege of meeting Senor Gomez Mendez, the state prosecutor. When he is in Colombia, he has to be accompanied wherever he goes by about 25 armed guards. His life is constantly under threat because he represents the justice system. His staff face violence on a daily basis, and many have had to flee the country. However, those who work to defend human rights face the gravest threat, and the report of the Colombian NGOs to the United Nations Commission shows that, during the past four years, 36 human rights defenders have been murdered, 100 have had their lives threatened, and 30 more have had to leave. Those are ordinary people defending ordinary human rights who have been murdered or forced to flee their country.

Human rights are not just the end product of the peace process, but an integral part of it. There can be no peace unless we obtain human rights protection for the ordinary citizens of Colombia. Human rights will not just happen automatically at the end of the process; they have to be bound in to the pursuit of peace.

Mrs. Gillan: I have been in receipt of letters from his excellency the Colombian ambassador, which have been helpful in updating me on the action taken by his Government in cases of human rights violation. Has the hon. Gentleman had an opportunity to see those letters? If so, does he agree that they are extremely helpful and represents signs of great optimism for the future in Colombia?

Mr. Goggins: I freely acknowledge and pay tribute to those in the state agencies in Colombia who do so much, at great personal risk, to try to reduce the levels of impunity. Senor Gomez Mendez has made great progress in that area. I willingly reiterate my earlier remarks on the advances that have been made. None the less, human rights abuses still take place in Colombia. I urge my hon. Friend the Minister to ensure full and active support for the office of the High Commission in Bogota. It is essential that we use it as a window through which we can monitor the progress being made in relation to human rights.

A second reason to agree that this is a timely debate is the publication of the Human Rights Watch report in February, which gave graphic accounts of the continuing relationship between paramilitary organisations and the state armed services. It gave specific details of the 3rd, 4th and 14th brigades that operate in the main Colombian cities and throughout the country. There have been signs of progress. Some leading military figures have been stood down from their official positions, showing that the state is prepared to tackle the relationship. However, there is also concern that as abuse in the armed services is reducing, activity in the paramilitary organisations is increasing. The tie-up between state services and paramilitaries is worrying. It is not enough for abuse in the armed services to fall; abuse by paramilitaries must also fall.

My hon. Friend the Member for Kilmarnock and Loudoun and I spent a lot of time with Monsignor Hector Fabia Henao, director of Caritas Colombia, who is a priest, during our eight days in Colombia. He said:

> In late February in El Salado, in the archdiocese of Cartagena, paramilitaries cut the throats of more than 40 people, including one in a church. Investigators said a 200-man death squad murdered the villagers during a four-day raid in the community in Bolivar province, a region fiercely contested by guerrillas and paramilitaries.

He later said that El Salado is not very far from army bases and that it was a problem for him to understand how the army did not know. He argued that it was impossible for such atrocities to continue for four days so close to the army without the army knowing and intervening. I acknowledge that there has been progress, but there is worrying evidence of links between paramilitaries and the armed forces.

The third reason for this being a timely debate is the development of Plan Colombia. It is a $7.5 billion programme with $4 billion to be raised in Colombia and the remainder to be raised by the international community. Let us refresh our memories about Plan Colombia. Its purpose is advancement of the peace process first and foremost, improvement of the economy, combating narcotics, reforming the judicial system and promoting human rights and supporting democratisation and social development in Colombia. The United States Congress is considering a $1.7 billion package, most of it in the form of military aid. The proposal is to train and equip two special counter-narcotic battalions, including 60 or more helicopters.

It is difficult to be sure of the reasons for the United States strong interest in Colombia. It may have a strategic interest following its recent withdrawal from Panama. Again, Colombia has the only remaining Marxist guerrilla force in the world and that may be of interest to the USA. There is also the problem of drugs, the cost of which to the United States is dramatic in terms of human lives—52,000 Amercian citizens die each year because of drug misuse at a cost of £110 billion to the health service and the economy. It cannot be denied that Colombia is the largest producer of cocaine in the world and a major producer of heroin. We understand the concerns, but to view Colombia simply as a drugs problem is to miss the point.

I want to press my hon. Friend the Minister on two points. First, can he tell us about the position of the US Congress on the $1.7 billion package? Everyone assumed that it would go through Congress, but it seems to have become stuck in a Republican debate on tax and spend in an election year and whether it can be afforded. Can my hon. Friend shed some light on that? Secondly, the Americans want a 50:50 split on Plan Colombia under which they will provide half the cash in the form of military aid and other countries, particularly European Union countries, will provide the other half in social and economic development. Plan Colombia should be shared equitably throughout the world. The package is an international responsibility and it is not right for it to be split in that way. Moreover, I am not convinced that that approach represents the correct balance. Earlier, I described the five major headings of Plan Colombia. It is not right to spend half the money on only one of the five objectives, namely, narcotics. I hope that we shall participate in this summer's Madrid summit, which is being organised by Jan Egeland, and that the Government will argue that it is important to get the right balance between the narcotics programme and other aspects of Plan Colombia.

My hon. Friend the Member for Kilmarnock and Loudoun discussed the importance of consulting civil society in Colombia about the development of Plan Colombia. Unless that plan involves bottom-up development, it will not succeed—it should provide economic livelihoods for its citizens and help local economies to develop.

I conclude my rather hoarse remarks on a positive note—I want to pay tribute to various people who are Colombia's hope for the future. I pay tribute to President Pastrana, who has done much in a short time in difficult conditions, in particular for engaging with FARC. Many counselled against such engagement, but it is extremely important to maintain dialogue, and he has done so. I reiterate my support for the state officials who tried to bring justice to that country with reduced levels of impunity, and in particular for Mr. Gomez Mendez, the state prosecutor. I pay tribute to the human rights workers and community leaders in Colombia who, day in, day out, risk their lives in pursuit of peace.

I also pay tribute to the Churches and bishops, and in particular to Monsignor Hector Fabio Henao, whom I mentioned earlier, who is the director of Caritas Colombia. The churches have borne witness to the need for peace in that country. Before President Pastrana came to office, there was a huge political vacuum in Colombia that was filled largely by the churches, which sought to promote peace in that country. I pay tribute to AB Colombia, which is supported by CAFOD, Christian Aid, Oxfam and other organisations, for its sterling work—it monitors developments daily in Colombia and it brings this country's attention to Colombia's problems. I also pay tribute to the peace brigades, many of which contain volunteers who take great risks in an attempt to realise a more peaceful society in Colombia, for which we all yearn.

There are many signs of hope, not least the fact that a couple of years ago 10 million people turned out to vote for peace in a referendum. However, the greatest sign of hope is the dignity and strength of the displaced people of Quibdo, whose faces I still see. They will be the inspiration—one day—for peace to come to Colombia.

10.53 am

Mr. Tam Dalyell (Linlithgow): Those who have never been to a country should be succinct in their public utterances about it. I was invited to speak by my hon. Friends the Members for Kilmarnock and Loudoun (Mr. Browne) and for Wythenshawe and Sale, East (Mr. Goggins); they are friends in a real sense. As chairman of the all-party group on Latin America, which is my locus of interest in this context, I am delighted that they have taken such a serious and deep interest in this matter, and I pay tribute to them for doing so.

I first became interested in Colombia when two stars of English football, Wilfred Manning and Ned Franklin, decided to go to Bogota. That memory dates me somewhat—[Interruption.]—nonetheless, my hon. Friend the Minister had better be discreet.

I became seriously interested in this subject when I attended a lecture at the museum of anthropology and ethnology given by Dr. Martin Hildebrandt, then presidential adviser on conservation policy. I remember his description of the keeper of the jaguar, without whose permission people cannot slaughter jaguars or damage their habitat. In the world of ecology, Colombia has a deservedly high reputation for conservation and for its system of managing an extremely valuable ecosystem. As chairman of the all-party group on Latin America, I pay tribute to the Colombian ambassador, Humberto de la Calle—not just because he happens to be present, but because he has been an excellent colleague in London.

I have two questions, of which I have given notice. Yesterday, at a meeting of the British and Colombian chamber of commerce, a case was presented by Sir Keith Morris, Alexander Kennedy, the chairman, and Robert Bedloe, the chief executive. My question for the Minister is how much money is Britian giving to the Plan Colombia?

In September, I led a parliamentary debate to Lima in Peru. We visited the upper Amazon, where the mayor of Iquitos said, "Look, you see our grey ships with their guns on the river. We are not going to fight our neighbours—this is all about drugs. At every airport, you see dogs sniffing every bit of luggage. We are doing everything possible against drugs." That message was reinforced strongly by the expert drugs administration in Lima, and emphasised by President Fujimore. However, they also said that Colombia could not do anything effective unless we did something about anonymous numbered bank accounts in Great Cayman, the Virgin Islands, Belize, Bermuda, the Bahamas, Zurich, and even perhaps London.

I have raised that issue with my hon. Friend the Minister who is present today, with the Minister of State, Home Office, my hon. Friend the Member for Norwich, South (Mr. Clarke), who is taking a departmental lead, and with my hon. Friend the Financial Secretary to the Treasury. I have even spoken to my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister, in the most friendly way, about the matter. What progress is being made on the issue of anonymous numbered bank accounts, which affects Colombia as much as Peru?

10.58 am

Mrs. Cheryl Gillan (Chesham and Amersham): The Opposition share the concerns that have been expressed about Colombia and its peace process. Unlike the hon. Members for Kilmarnock and Loudoun (Mr. Browne) and for Wythenshawe and Sale, East (Mr. Goggins), I have not had the advantage of visiting Colombia; and, unlike the hon. Member for Richmond Park (Dr. Tonge), I have no current plans to visit the country. I will therefore be brief, which will please the hon.

[Mrs. Cheryl Gillan]

Member for Linlithgow (Mr. Dalyell). I, too, commend the good offices of the Colombian ambassador, who has helpfully kept me informed as an Opposition Front-Bench spokesman.

I shall approach the subject of the peace process from a slightly different perspective. I want to probe the Minister on the relationship between the United Kingdom and Colombia. I asked the Library to produce some figures for me. Our imports from Colombia amount to £200 million, compared with exports to Colombia of £107 million, resulting in a UK crude trade deficit of £93 million. To put it in context, imports from Colombia represent 0.1 per cent. of total UK imports, whereas UK exports to Colombia account for 0.06 per cent. of all UK exports. Colombia is outside the list of the UK's top 50 export markets, or sources of imports. Will the Minister tell us what prospects there are for increased trade with Colombia, and whether an export promoter at the DTI is examining those prospects?

Will the Minister tell us about Colombia's position as regards Export Credits Guarantee Department cover? The ECGD moved the country off cover following a review last October, when its credit rating was downgraded owing to a significant deterioration in its economic conditions. That cover is due to be reviewed next October, but is there any chance of a review taking place earlier than that? If not, what can be done to help Colombia's return to ECGD cover?

As I am sure we are all aware, the economic situation in Colombia has been difficult. The country's statistical department says that industrial production fell last year by 16.5 per cent. The only branch of industry to register increased output was oil refining, which went up by 11.5 per cent. on the 1998 figures. The worst performer was the auto industry. However, the country is making great efforts on the industrial front, for example, by establishing four new tax-free export-processing zones. Has the Minister had any discussions with the Colombians about those zones? Does he see any opportunities for British businesses?

There is no doubt that a large number of people are involved in the peace process in Colombia, and I am delighted that business leaders there have expressed support for that process. Nicarnor Restrepo, who is head of the Suramericana Group—a top company—said that business leaders were determined to break the cycle of violence that was blocking economic growth. He described the talks with guerrilla leaders as positive, and hoped that those talks would contribute to national reconciliation. It is a good sign that business leaders are engaged in the peace process; they are to be welcomed as warmly as any other participants in the process.

However, it is sad to read of continuing violence, particularly when it is directed towards the country's infrastructure, for that in turn damages economic health and well-being. Large areas of central and north-east Colombia, including Bogota, had to try to get back to normal after severe disruption from power failures caused by bombing that took out about 300 pylons. That meant that electricity had to be rationed in parts of the country. If the peace process is to succeed, that sort of economic guerrilla warfare must stop, as must the killings.

Two of the speakers highlighted the problem of drugs. I hope that the hon. Members for Wythenshawe and Sale, East and for Richmond Park did not intend to understate the drugs problem emanating from Colombia. British interests and UK citizens are affected by that problem, as are future prospects for business. Not to examine the problems fully is to put our head in the sand. I agree with the Minister that zero tolerance should not be regarded as the only option, but we must reflect on the message sent to drug producers when we subscribe to harm reduction measures and propose either the legalisation of the use of certain drugs, or the lessening of the status of the criminal offence of possessing or trafficking in them.

On previous occasions, I have urged the Minister to consider crop substitution. I asked him a question about it a while ago, but he did not reply. I hope that he has done some research in the intervening period and can now tell me about the prospects for replacing the poppy crop with pyrethrum chrysanthemum; it is much in demand as a natural pesticide and there has been a world shortage of the crop. I hope that the Minister has done some work on the potential for crop substitution and can answer my question.

Mr. Battle: Will the hon. Lady give me more details about the company in her constituency?

Mrs. Gillan: Yes. I have already provided information about it to Ministers in the Department of Trade and Industry and, indeed, to the Minister himself. The company is called Agropharm. My inquiry is genuine and I hope that the Minister can give us chapter and verse in his response. Thus far, his responses have not been full.

Mr. Battle: Give me a chance.

Mrs. Gillan: Well, the Minister knows that I raised the issue on a previous occasion.

Let me return to my theme of the involvement of business men. There is no doubt that armed conflict in Colombia will not end while drug trafficking persists.

Those are the words of Nicarnor Restrepo during chamber of commerce discussions, and I believe that he is right. What plans does the Minister have to boost operations providing counter-drugs assistance and supporting the UN international drugs programme? The UK has contributed £2.2 million, which is only a small sum. I do not know whether the Minister has scrutinised the budgets and examined the possibility of increasing our contribution. Under what review process is he examining expenditure and resources with a view to increasing the UK contribution?

The hon. Member for Linlithgow mentioned drug money laundering. I share his great concern about unnumbered anonymous bank accounts, but, when I was in the Cayman islands last year, I discovered that using a blunt instrument is not the answer. The OECD report into tax havens has created problems for Caribbean islands. We are quick to criticise Caribbean tax havens, but not to praise them. In an international context, the Caymans were asked to discuss with other financial centres their successful schemes to trace the proceeds of drug money laundering and combating financial crime. The Cayman islands are in the forefront of that fight, so I hope that the Minister will acknowledge that and not allow such financial centres to be attacked in a gratuitous and willy-nilly fashion. That is not the answer to stopping the drugs trade.

We all know about the difficulty of peace processes—after all, we are engaged in our own peace process. We should never underestimate the challenges faced by the Colombian Government. The message from today's debate is that we offer as much help, counsel and support as we can provide, but that we will not interfere. We must remember that the peace process belongs to the Colombians. We hope that the peace process will work. We all subscribe to the idea of a new Colombia, in which peace, democracy, freedom and social justice prevail.

11.9 am

The Minister of State, Foreign and Commonwealth Office (Mr. John Battle): I am grateful to my hon. Friend the Member for Kilmarnock and Loudoun (Mr. Browne) for introducing this debate. By raising this subject in Westminster Hall he attracts British attention to such matters. It is time that the international community had a greater focus on Colombia, so I am grateful to my hon. Friend for securing this debate and to hon. Members who have participated in it.

My hon. Friend spoke from the experience of his visit and gave a detailed account of his impressions. Indeed, he conveyed a deep and passionate commitment to the courage of the Colombian people whom he met on his visit. His impression of that courage remains with him and he has brought it before us in our deliberations. My hon. Friend mentioned Colombia's beauty and diversity, but made special reference to its people, and we are grateful for that perspective. He gave a detailed analysis of the causes of conflict and provided a good introduction to Colombia for those who may know nothing about it. He told us about the history and present status of the plan for peace and spoke about a future vision.

The hon. Member for Richmond Park (Dr. Tonge) therefore has a good template for her visit, although I acknowledge that she displayed more knowledge of Colombia than most people. The Foreign Office is happy to give information, back-up or support to the hon Lady or any hon. Member who is visiting overseas. Hon. Members have only to ask for such back-up and are entitled to a private meeting in the Foreign Office and a detailed briefing. They can get as much information as they need to undertake such visits. Visiting different places and keeping discussion alive is a good use of Members' time: indeed, we have witnessed that this morning.

As the hon. Member for Chesham and Amersham (Mrs. Gillan) suggested, Colombia's economic potential bears comparison with Brazil and Argentina. The tragedy is that that potential has not been fulfilled. The current problems of violence, drugs, social disruption and great personal tragedies undermine Colombia's potential to become a diverse, prosperous state for all its people and a beacon in Latin America.

We have followed events with great concern, and we hope to consult widely on how best to help. I join my hon. Friends the Members for Kilmarnock and Loudoun and for Wythenshawe and Sale, East (Mr. Goggins) in the highly complimentary remarks that they paid to the British non-governmental organisations which have engaged in the country and worked there patiently for some years. Those NGOs establish a British presence in Colombia and their contributions and analyses are important to the Government.

Colombia is no stranger to violence. In response to the hon. Member for Richmond Park, a lack of security is a crippling deterrent to future investment and job generation. To put it crudely, few business men will be keen to visit if they do not feel safe. In the late 1940s and early 1950s, civil war known as La Violencia took place between the conservative and liberal parties dominating the country and cost 250,000 lives. The first guerrilla groups emerged in the 1960s and have been fighting the Government ever since in what is probably Latin America's longest and most brutal internal conflict.

Paramilitaries joined the conflict in the 1980s and it expanded rapidly in the 1990s. In addition to internal conflict, there are high levels of everyday criminal violence. Colombia still has one of the highest murder rates in the world.

My hon. Friend the Member for Wythenshawe and Sale, East mentioned the wider economic context. Colombia has recently suffered its worst recession for 70 years and has endured knock-on effects from the Asian financial crisis and last year's devaluation of the Brazilian real. It has also suffered from the problem of low commodity prices and damage caused by El Nino. In other words, the Colombian economy is under great pressure. Efforts so far to introduce legal crops and support transport networks and marketing facilities have produced disappointing results because investment is expensive. New crops are often not sustainable. It must be taken in the full economic context, which is why it is not an easy strategy in the current economic context.

Mrs. Gillan: Will the Minister undertake to write to me again when he has evaluated the sustainability of introducing pyrethrum and the support that farmers would need for that crop?

Mr. Battle: I have done some work on pyrethrum. It is an insecticide, not a weed killer. We are not involved in any direct crop eradication or spraying programmes in Colombia. In January, I announced that £350,000 was going to an international drug control programme to look at monitoring coca and replacing it with useful crops. It is not clear whether pyrethrum would be used for crop eradication in Colombia, but I will take the matter further in the light of the hon. Lady's interest in the company in her constituency.

Mrs. Gillan: The Minister is mistaken. I am talking about using pyrethrum not for crop eradication, but as part of a crop substitution programme. Pyrethrum is indeed an insecticide. It is used, for example, to protect pilgrims to Mecca against attack from various nasty things. This is not about crop eradication, but purely about crop substitution. It is used as an insecticide in other parts of the world and is greatly in demand.

Mr. Battle: I am grateful for the hon. Lady's clarification. I will certainly take that matter further for her. I will ask the Government's chief scientist to make inquiries into the properties of pyrethrum to see whether it can be used positively. I do not say that dismissively. We should look at modern science and the potential of bio-remedial methods to address the problems.

[Mr. Battle]

Mr. Tony Lloyd (Manchester, Central): I am grateful to the Minister for giving way. I had to miss the earlier part of the debate and I should like to make a brief point about crop substitution. Although it is very attractive, one of the simple realities is that unless we, the consumers, are prepared to pay the price to the growers, crop substitution is totally irrelevant because it simply will not exist in those very thin soils.

Mr. Battle: My hon. Friend is absolutely right. At the risk of embarrassing him, may I say that he did a great job as Minister of State in campaigning for and raising the profile of Colombia? I am pleased that he is here for this debate. I shall do my best to follow his efforts.

Last week I met the general secretary of the Latin American Association of Human Rights, Dr. Juan de Dios Parra, and we spoke about the problem of the vulnerable indigenous communities in southern Colombia. Indigenous peoples represent 1.5 per cent. of the population—some 700,000 people. They are particularly at risk because they are neutral in Colombia's internal conflict and so are targeted from all sides. They are forcibly recruited by FARC and, dare I say it, by the military too. They are at risk from the paramilitaries, who are keen to extend the land under their control to expand and extend coca cultivation.

Four indigenous communities disappeared entirely last year and displacement is increasing. I mention that because this is about real people who suffer as a result of the violence. Only last Saturday night, Colombian TV channels showed reports of a massacre by FARC guerrillas in the towns of Vigia del Fuerte and Bellavista, which are situated on opposite sides of the Atrato river. The police station was destroyed and 21 police were murdered, some at point blank range after they had surrendered. Their bodies were then chopped up with machetes. A woman and her two infants were also reportedly murdered.

I mention that because it is important to see the scale of the violence all around. The reaction of the head of the police and the army in those circumstances was unusually strong. The head of the Colombian police, General Rosso Serrano, was obviously angered and distraught during a visit to the town. He called on all human rights NGOs to witness what was going on. It is important to witness those events, but it is important, too, to keep a clear perspective on the complexity and difficulties that people experience. My hon. Friend the Member for Kilmarnock and Loudoun paid tribute to the efforts of police forces to get a grip on an incredibly difficult situation, when their officers are at risk.

The President of Colombia and his Government face a daunting task. Plan Colombia was published at the United Nations general assembly in September 1999. It is an ambitious set of proposals to tackle disruption, destruction and displacement, a plan for peace and prosperity, to strengthen the democratic state. It includes judicial and human rights strategies, assertion of the rule of law and the promotion of impartial justice for all. The aims are admirable, and, in principle, as hon. Members have said, it is a good thing.

Colombia is the world's largest producer of coca leaf, from which cocaine is manufactured, and acres of land are devoted to the opium poppy, which is turned into heroin. The vast wealth produced by that trade finances illegal armed groups and their struggle for control, and the income that they produce in the region, undermines the search for peace. Drugs and the drugs business—I use that term deliberately—are part of the problem, but not the whole of it.

I am aware of NGOs' statements, including the excellent report from AB Colombia, that there was insufficient consultation with the civil society in drawing up Plan Colombia. That view must be taken seriously, because it is essential that civil society is involved in the search for peace.

The NGOs must ensure that the Colombian Government understand their ideas, concerns and proposals; they, too, have a role to play in designing a positive vision for the future. The Colombian Government, for their part, should take the NGOs' representations into account as the plans are crystallised. We must emphasise that there is a process—

Mr. Dalyell: Sir Keith Morris, Alexander Kennedy and Robert Bedloe asked last night if there was any figure for British involvement in Plan Colombia.

Mr. Battle: We are actively discussing with our European Union partners about the areas to which we could add value. We are not at the point of discussing our contribution in figures, because who does what, when and where is part of the plan's structure. As I shall say later, we are looking for a wider vision for the plan, which will be part of our discussions.

I was asked whether there is any real possibility of peace. The key is to engage all the parties involved. President Pastrana's high commissioner for peace, Mr. Victor Ricardo, is in London now—I believe that he and the ambassador are present in the Chamber to listen to our debate. They have played a tremendous role in furthering relations, which we welcome. I had discussions yesterday at the Foreign and Commonwealth Office with Mr. Ricardo, who has been negotiating with the guerrillas, notably with FARC, on behalf of President Pastrana's Government. He and representatives of FARC, who are working towards a common end, toured European capitals last month. The violence may have continued, but bringing the parties together is a symbolic action that is greatly appreciated in Europe. We hope that there will be more talks and joint visits. We would welcome a mission to the United Kingdom if that was thought to be helpful.

We are encouraging the Colombian authorities urgently to tackle the problem of human rights abuses, which were highlighted in three recent reports, from Human Rights Watch, from the United States State Department and from the United Nations human rights office in Bogota. We positively support the initiative and the Foreign Office now contributes substantially to funding. The message in those reports is clear: there is a long way to go in tackling human rights abuses in Colombia. We take every opportunity to condemn the appalling violence perpetrated on the Colombian people by the illegal armed forces. We strongly urge the Colombian authorities to tackle the problem of collusion between the paramilitaries and the armed forces. There is general agreement that the paramilitaries are now a key part of the problem in Colombia. They have expanded at a faster rate than FARC, from several hundred members in 1990 to some 5,000 now. We realise that the police and the forces have to undertake harrowing and dangerous tasks and we do not underestimate the losses that they have suffered. However, there is a need to build mutual confidence in the rule of law for the future of Colombia.

I have written recently to the vice-president of Colombia, Dr. Gustavo Bell, to tell him of our Government's concerns, especially about alleged collusion between the armed forces and the paramilitaries. Once again, we do not underestimate the difficulties of dealing with those problems. Yesterday I spoke again to Mr. Ricardo, particularly in the context of the evidence in the report from Human Rights Watch. I know that the Colombian authorities take these criticisms extremely seriously. They have established a special committee, headed by the vice-president, to address these matters. That is encouraging but, as Mr. Ricardo acknowledged yesterday, more needs to be done.

I stress once more the important contribution that has been made by UNHRO. Once again, we solidly support it. We have given approximately £108,000 towards the cost of running its office. This year's session of UNHRO opened last week in Geneva. There is to be a debate on Colombia, with emphasis on UNHRO's report on Bogota. We are urging our EU colleagues to issue a strongly worded statement of their position on the issue. We must make use of that resolution. We have raised the issue of human rights and the safety of human rights workers especially—that was mentioned by my hon. Friend the Member for Wythenshawe and Sale, East. In the past four years, there have been 36 murders of human rights defenders and I raised this with Mr. Ricardo. I pay tribute to the members of the non-governmental organisations. They have been threatened and abused, and some have been murdered, but they continue to work courageously to defend ordinary people and call abuses to account. People have memories about all those things. They remember names, faces, dates and times. People who murder with impunity will never have immunity in the long run. History and justice will out. We shall use every opportunity to remind our interlocutors of their responsibility to defend and protect those who dedicatedly defend human rights and we pay tribute to their courage.

I will mention briefly the projects for peace that are in hand. This relates to questions asked by the hon. Member for Chesham and Amersham, and is part of the commitment of the Department for International Development to reducing conflict and building peace in Colombia. In January, almost one third of a million pounds was given to a four-project programme, the components of which are a peace partnership convocation to promote and strengthen partnerships between local and regional governments, public and private sector institutions, NGOs and local communities. The precise task of these projects is to build from the base the possibility of civil society once more. Up to 10 representatives of institutions identified as leaders in local peace-building initiatives will participate in a UK study tour to look at where they can compare notes in relation to base building. That will be important work.

I acknowledge the work done by members of Fiscalia in investigating cases of abuse, as well as the work done by the vice-president's human rights team and Defensor del Pueblo. Their role is unenviable; they too are subject to attack. We support their efforts and are seeking ways of working with them and assisting them in detail.

Colombia's Nobel prize-winning novelist, Gabriel Garcia Marquez, described Colombia's conflict as a biblical holocaust that threatens to consume the country. I trust that time will prove him to have been over-pessimistic. The challenge of resolving that country's problems is intimidating. We have worked quietly but solidly to provide advice, training and development for both Government and non-governmental projects, and we are ready to do more in collaboration with our EU partners.

I highlight in particular the work of our embassy in Bogota for the support of civil society in Colombia, especially the support that it has given to human rights NGOs and to the peace movement. It is important to continue to maintain our dialogue with Colombia at the highest level. I shall be seeing Jan Egelund, the UN special representative for Colombia, who is coming to the UK tomorrow. I am pleased to announce that the Prime Minister has invited President Pastrana to visit London on 13 April for talks at No. 10.

I have not been able to respond to all the issues that hon. Members have raised. I shall write to those whose points I have missed, especially those on money laundering, about which I shall talk to the Minister of State, Home Office, my hon. Friend the Member for Norwich, South (Mr. Clarke), then follow them through. It is important that Plan Colombia is not reduced to short-term crisis management strategies. It can be transformed into a vision, as this debate has shown. It can form a positive aid and judicial reform package. We are providing small but necessary sums to improve the administration of justice, but what Colombia really needs is a nationwide, inclusive, good governance programme that addresses the complex causes of violence that have been mentioned this morning. As Human Rights Watch states, with proper development and conditionality, the plan could improve human rights in Colombia, so let us back it and add value to it.

Rutland and Tresham Colleges

11.30 am

Mr. Alan Duncan (Rutland and Melton): The purpose of this debate is to give voice to profound local concern, if not growing anger, about the proposed merger of Rutland and Tresham colleges—[Interruption.]

Mr. Deputy Speaker (Mr. Nicholas Winterton): Order. Will those leaving the Chamber please do so quietly?

Mr. Duncan: Thank you, Mr. Deputy Speaker.

Those concerns centre on not only the proposed merger, but on the highly unsatisfactory way in which it has been processed by the Further Education Funding Council. I appreciate that the Minister will be slightly constrained in what he can say this morning, but the value of this debate is that, at least from now on, he and the Department for Education and Employment will be under no illusion about the strength of feeling locally and in nearby Stamford, which is represented by my hon. Friend the Member for Grantham and Stamford (Mr. Davies).

Rutland college is based in Oakham, the county town of Rutland. It is essentially a sixth form college for 16 to 19-year-olds, but also contains a small element of adult education; it has a capacity of about 600 pupils. As the only post-16 institution in Rutland, it is fed primarily by the three community colleges for 12 to 16-year-olds in the area: Uppingham, Vale of Catmose and Casterton. To its credit, Rutland college has generally produced good A-level results and it received a good report in a recent Ofsted inspection. It is a relatively popular institution, which sits on its own in the centre of a sparsely populated rural area.

Nothing that I say today should be considered as expressing anything other than a wish to see the college flourish in the years ahead. The origin of the college's desire to merge is entirely financial; any supposed educational benefits are secondary and utterly unconvincing. The whole unhappy episode was initiated by a glance in the crystal ball that alerted the college to the near certainty that it would face a financial deficit in future. There is no crisis now, but it is predicted that, next year or the year after, the college will suffer a shortfall of £100,000 or more. No one can blame the college corporation for taking steps to address that deficit. On the contrary, it has a responsibility to do so, and its chairman, Nigel Chubb, who is an experienced local figure in industry, can only be commended for trying to safeguard the future of the college. However, the preferred solution—a merger with Tresham college in Northamptonshire—and the steps taken to achieve it have set the issue alight.

Every interested party outside the college opposes the merger. Every secondary head teacher is opposed. The school governors are opposed. Most parents are opposed. Nearby Stamford college is opposed. Rutland council is opposed. I am opposed, and my hon. Friend the Member for Grantham and Stamford, who I hope will speak in the debate, is opposed. The whole world is against the merger, except the FEFC and Rutland college itself—and even the college is not unanimous.

There is no established pattern within which Rutland ever looks south to Northamptonshire. Rutland likes to be self-contained, where that is realistic, but if it wants to associate with a neighbouring area for any reason, it invariably looks to Stamford to the east, or to Melton to the north. People living in villages in the eastern half of Rutland shop in Stamford rather than Oakham. One of the local newspapers is the Stamford Mercury, which also has a Rutland edition. Indeed, the parliamentary constituency used to be Rutland and Stamford. Rutland looks to Lincolnshire or to Leicestershire, never to Northamptonshire.

Tresham is a college in Northamptonshire, with its campus and a series of sites in Corby, Kettering and Wellingborough. Last year, a grand total of three students from Rutland went to Tresham college. There is no natural link between Rutland college and Tresham college, and no natural link between Rutland and Northants. Tresham just happens to be there and is thought to be a suitable lifeboat in the face of Rutland college's imminent financial problem.

There is no educational rationale for the merger. Any suggestion that there will be educational gains is a specious and disingenuous justification for a merger that is driven by other reasons—indeed, those other reasons are pretty spurious too. Joining two institutions in such a way is a response to a completely perverse incentive: a financial incentive, which is perverse because it is a response to artificial structures such as the funding formula and the distribution of government money.

The funding formula is peculiar, a deficit is looming and Tresham is there. The colleges might be able to save £50,000 by merging. They think that, by joining together, they will be in a stronger position to lobby the Government for money. No doubt there will be no end of property deals and asset allocation—not to say asset stripping—to get the books in shape. At best, the whole project is merely financial; at worst, it is a most unenlightened response to the perverse incentives that emerge from a collectivist education system and its funding.

It is said that there will be no bussing of students between sites. Perhaps there will be teachers who can bring their expertise to both colleges, but they could do that anyway. Even if the Rutland-Tresham merger were the only option, it would not be an inspiring plan. However, it is not the only option, and the way in which the merger has been driven down this particular cul-de-sac is dubious, to put it mildly—indeed, such a comment would be far too mild. The truth is, I have never seen such a blatant case of bureaucratic bulldozing.

The Minister will no doubt have been assured that the FEFC has followed the proper procedures to the letter. That is not true. If the Minister has been told that, he has been misled. The audit trail of letters and meetings might make it look as though it has done so, but it has merely gone through the motions. I was not born yesterday and I did not come down with the last shower of rain. I am profoundly disturbed by the attitude of FEFC officials, who are clearly so bent on forcing the merger through that they have chosen to ignore all contrary points of view. With regret, I name Christine Frost as one who has incurred the universal displeasure of all those who are opposed to the merger. Her apparently unbending agenda amounts to questionable conduct.

One of the most aggrieved parties is Stamford college, which is in the constituency of my hon. Friend the Member for Grantham and Stamford. A few years ago tentative discussions were held between Rutland and Stamford colleges, but they were not pursued in detail, partly because the principals did not get on. That has now changed. Merging with Stamford is an obvious option, but it is a complete and utter distortion to say that it has been properly studied this time around as an alternative to Tresham. It has not. If the Minister has been told that it has, he should read the riot act as soon as this debate is over, because he will have been misled again. Stamford is a serious option and in all respects a far more logical one.

In its letter of 21 January to the principal of Stamford college, the FEFC said:

> Before arriving at this decision the committee carefully considered the implications for Stamford including the issues raised by the college under each of the Council's criteria. The committee recognised that there would be some impact on Stamford but did not consider this would be significant.

The council's criteria—my elbow! In relation to the number and intensity of local objections to the merger, the letter merely said:

> These concerns will be recorded in the minutes and drawn to the attention of the Council.

Let me translate that into real English. That section should have read, "I intend to go through the motions, ignore any objections, dupe the decision makers in the FEFC and press ahead anyway. PS—get lost."

The Stamford option is a compelling alternative. An established pattern of association exists between the two towns, and 200 full-time students already travel from Rutland to Stamford. Furthermore, the Learning and Skills Council, which will soon come into being, will link Rutland with Lincolnshire, so what is the point of pre-empting that development by creating a merger that will straddle two different learning and skills council regions? The Stamford principal is a go-getting and much-admired figure whose proposals have not been given a fair hearing. His plans have been dismissed, humoured and surreptitiously sneered at by the FEFC, which has not studied the Stamford option properly, but has only advanced the Tresham proposal.

The other aggrieved party is Rutland county council, which is being denied a proper chance to set and shape the future of post-16 education in the county. It is not pie in the sky Rutland nationalism for the council to have a dutiful wish to implement a responsible post-16 education policy for the only institution of its kind in the county. The Secretary of State for Education and Employment, in a policy letter dated 14 December 1999, encouraged the establishment of > an LEA-maintained sixth form centre

but there is no prospect of that happening if the merger proceeds.

Part of the FEFC's claim to have followed the rules fully is its so-called fact-finding visit to Rutland county council on 3 November 1999. Such a claim is deceitful, as the visit was neither billed nor conducted appropriately. The two main councillors concerned—one responsible for lifelong learning, the other the head of the education committee—were not even included. Those in Rutland were dumbfounded by the attitude of the representatives of the FEFC. Christine Frost has become public enemy No. 1, and there is no prospect of anyone in the area who is opposed to the merger trusting her again on such matters.

My dealings with the FEFC have been unsettling. I asked to see the chief executive, but I saw only others. I was promised an account of supportive submissions, but it was never sent to me. I secured an emergency meeting before the FEFC's meeting on 8 March, but I received no subsequent account of it. Hon. Members can therefore imagine my annoyance on first learning about the council's obdurate decision to recommend the merger from a journalist who had received a gloating press release from Rutland college. Only now that I am on the warpath has the chief executive invited me to see him.

The FEFC has shown complete contempt for any genuine process of consultation. It has gone through the motions with its mind made up and trampled over any objection with a shameful disdain. To my regret, I now have no confidence in the FEFC and I have formed an entirely negative view of some of those within it. Stamford college has lodged a formal written complaint. I was advised today that Rutland council intends to move a resolution, as soon as possible, to invoke the process of judicial review. I am almost inclined to issue a writ myself. Regardless of any legal outcome, the merger proposal remains deeply flawed.

It would be nothing short of negligence and administrative vandalism to go ahead with the proposal without considering the Stamford option again, and without allowing Rutland county council to consider the overall future provision of post-16 education. The merger is ill-conceived, ill-timed and ill-considered. It has taken on a momentum of its own against the wishes of almost everybody who has an interest in quality education in Rutland. The FEFC should withdraw its recommendation. Failing that, the courts or the Secretary of State should stop it in its tracks and give wiser consideration to the bigger picture.

11.43 am

Mr. Quentin Davies (Grantham and Stamford): I am grateful to my hon. Friend the Member for Rutland and Melton (Mr. Duncan) for allowing me to intervene briefly in this debate, which I congratulate him on securing. My hon. Friend used strong language, which is entirely justified by some familiarity with the facts and the peculiar circumstances of the case.

My concern is threefold. First, as hon. Members will appreciate, I am concerned about the interests of my constituents. There are about 20,000 people in the town of Stamford, and those in the surrounding villages and small towns take the total population to between 30,000 and 40,000. The proposed merger threatens the de facto division of labour between Stamford college and Rutland college; that, in turn, threatens the future of certain courses at Stamford college, such as engineering and modern languages. It is important that the college should continue to offer those courses, but they will become unviable if only a few people are removed from them.

I am worried not only about Stamford college as an institution, but about the whole town and the surrounding area—especially given that Stamford's only state secondary school in the maintained sector does not have a sixth form. Stamford college is alone in being able to provide A-level courses in the maintained sector. Any reduction in its range of courses—especially the key, slightly harder subjects to which I referred—would therefore be an educational disaster for the people of the area. It is extraordinary that that has not been taken on board by those who have public responsibilities in that context.

BEST COPY AVAILABLE

[Mr. Quentin Davies]

Secondly, I thoroughly endorse what my hon. Friend said about the travesty of procedure and consultation that has taken place, and about the extraordinary unbusinesslike way in which it is proposed to proceed with the merger without having properly evaluated the alternative of a merger with Stamford. It is elementary business procedure to consider and evaluate the entire range of options before making a decision. Clearly, that has not happened in this case.

Finally, it is astonishing that the authorities should consider proceeding with the merger when public opinion as a whole—not merely that of the locally elected district and county councillors and the two local Members of Parliament—is overwhelmingly against it. If the views of local representatives are not considered to be worth hearing, why bother with the structure of democracy that we have in this country? In any case, the views of local educationalists should be dominant, and local head teachers are apparently unanimously opposed.

I endorse my hon. Friend's comments and ask the Minister to instruct the bureaucracy to proceed with the case in the businesslike, straightforward, dispassionate and balanced fashion that we are entitled to expect of our public authorities.

11.47 am

The Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for Education and Employment (Mr. Michael Wills): I thank the hon. Member for Rutland and Melton (Mr. Duncan) for raising the issue, and recognise the strength of the concerns that have been expressed by him and the hon. Member for Grantham and Stamford (Mr. Davies). I assure the hon. Gentleman that we take those concerns very seriously and recognise the importance of the matter to their constituencies.

It may be helpful if I explain a little of the context in which such decisions are taken. The Government regard greater collaboration as an important part of our plans for the further education sector. We want to encourage collaboration between the various providers in the post-16 world to raise standards and to provide better opportunities for all young people and adult learners. That is one of the key driving forces behind the Learning and Skills Bill that will shortly be introduced in the House. We aim to remove some of the barriers to effective collaboration between providers, which include schools and colleges.

Where appropriate, such collaboration will involve mergers. There is still too much wasteful competition between colleges in many respects, and small class sizes can mean that specialist provision is threatened because it is not cost effective to provide it. Mergers can help to resolve such situations and safeguard some kinds of specialist provision. Of course, we recognise that mergers can be highly sensitive issues locally. We have heard much this morning about the process that has been involved in this case, so it may assist the hon. Gentlemen if I explain the details of that process that were overlooked in their remarks.

Mergers between further education institutions must follow a set statutory procedure, which starts with local consultation with other further education providers, local authorities, local businesses, schools and other interested parties. The FEFC has a set procedure for considering mergers and it applies a set of criteria to all merger proposals. The criteria are: first, the educational benefits of the proposals to students, particularly the effect on access and choice; secondly, the implications of the proposal for the future development of post-16 provision in an area, including the potential impact on other further education providers; thirdly, the financial benefits of the proposed reorganisation, particularly in terms of the proposed merged institution's viability; fourthly, the extent of consultation and the consideration that has been given to alternative options—that should deal with some of the concerns that have been raised this morning; and, finally, the likelihood of the proposed reorganisation being successfully implemented.

Mr. Quentin Davies: On the penultimate criterion, will the Minister assure the Chamber that full consideration has been given to the possibility of a merger with Stamford college, and that that possibility has been evaluated as thoroughly as the merger between Rutland and Tresham colleges? Has a strategic plan been developed for the merger of Rutland and Stamford colleges? My information is that no such business plan has been proposed and that no such option has been properly evaluated.

Mr. Wills: I hope that the hon. Gentleman will be patient for a few more minutes. I am about to explain that the process is not complete. It is important to complete my outline of the process, after which I should be able to enlighten him about where we stand in that process.

There is a statutory procedure that has to be gone through, after which the proposals and responses to the consultation are considered by the regional committee of the FEFC. That committee considers the local impact of the proposals and hears representations from those who oppose, and those who support, the proposals. In the case of the merger that we are discussing, I understand that the regional committee heard representations directly from Stamford college, Rutland county council and the community colleges of Lincolnshire before considering its advice to the reorganisations committee.

Mr. Duncan: I am sorry to interrupt, but it is not true to say that the representation from Rutland county council was properly heard. The meeting at which the Government suggest consultation took place was a complete and utter sham. It was billed as a basic chat, but it turned out to be the formal consultation, of which Rutland county council had been totally unaware. It was a disgrace.

Mr. Wills: I take note of the hon. Gentleman's account of what occurred, but it stands as a matter of fact that there was a presentation and the relevant bodies had an opportunity to make their views known.

The regional committee normally considers whether or not the FEFC should publish proposals in accordance with the statutory requirements placed on it by the Secretary of State. They require the FEFC to issue formal notices setting out the proposals, and to allow four weeks for comments. After that formal consultation period, the reorganisations committee decides whether or not to forward the proposals to the Secretary of State for a decision in the light of the responses. That statutory process provides ample opportunity for all concerned to make known their reservations about any proposal. I confirm that the representations made by the hon. Member for Rutland and Melton have been sent to the Department. We shall, of course, carefully consider everything that he and the hon. Member for Grantham and Stamford have said this morning.

When the proposals are sent to the Secretary of State, they are considered carefully, along with all the responses received during the statutory consultation process. The hon. Member for Rutland and Melton will be aware that mergers between further education colleges are considered on behalf of the Secretary of State by my noble Friend Baroness Blackstone. I assure the hon. Gentleman and the hon. Member for Grantham and Stamford that she takes into account all the relevant facts, including the wider strategic and local effects that the merger might have on the community and on other education provision. I assure both hon. Gentlemen that what they have said today will be taken into account by my noble Friend. If, after detailed consideration, she approves the merger, statutory instruments will be laid before both Houses to bring the proposals into effect.

The formal proposal from the FEFC for the merger betweeen Rutland college and the Tresham institute has only just arrived at the Department and my noble Friend will consider it in due course. We have not yet reached the decision-making stage. I am sure that the hon. Members for Rutland and Melton and for Grantham and Stamford will understand that I cannot comment on the merits or otherwise of the proposals before the Minister reaches her decision.

However, the Department is aware of the views of the hon. Member for Rutland and Melton on the matter, and they have been taken into account. He has made them known most forcefully, on this occasion and others, and we are considering them along with all the representations that we have received from interested parties. I know that the hon. Gentleman has been involved in correspondence and discussions with officials from FEFC, and I conclude by assuring him and the hon. Member for Grantham and Stamford that their concerns have been well noted, and will be taken into account when my noble Friend reaches her decision.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: We can move on to our next debate a little earlier than expected, as the Minister is in her place and the hon. Member for Milton Keynes, South-West (Dr. Starkey), who is to initiate it, is also present.

East-West Rail Link

11.56 am

Dr. Phyllis Starkey (Milton Keynes, South-West): Perhaps you could give me guidance, Mr. Deputy Speaker, as to whether I shall be allowed an extra four minutes, or whether we shall have to stop after precisely 30 minutes?

Mr. Deputy Speaker (Mr. Nicholas Winterton): I am happy to help the hon. Lady. We can continue the debate until 12.30 pm. The hon. Lady has therefore gained a little time, and I am sure that she will wax lyrical for as long as she sees fit.

Dr. Starkey: Thank you, Mr. Deputy Speaker.

I shall demonstrate that the reopened east-west rail link would be a critical and strategic addition to the national rail network; that it would be crucial to relieving congestion on both the road and rail networks; that it would encourage sustainable economic regeneration; that it would be widely supported; and that it could be delivered quickly and would be excellent value for money. However, Government action is required now to ensure that it goes ahead without further delay.

I speak not only on behalf of my constituency, but as the chair of a parliamentary group that contains 30 Conservative and Labour Members of Parliament representing constituencies along the route. I am grateful to those members of the group who are here today. A significant number of other hon. Members—including the hon. Member for Southampton, Test (Dr. Whitehead), who has just left—have sent me notes to say that they wished that they could be here to support the debate, but that it clashed with other commitments.

The east-west rail link would run from the east coast ports through either Ipswich or Norwich to Cambridge, Bedford, Bletchley—which is in my constituency—Oxford, Swindon and connections to the west of England. The core of the route, from Cambridge to Oxford, was closed to passenger services in 1968, and to freight in the 1980s. The closures were untimely, as they occurred just before the development of Milton Keynes and the growth of Bicester, both of which would probably have sustained the route and averted its closure. Some of the route remains open; for example, an excellent, though rather slow train service operates between Bedford and Bletchley. The Oxford to Bicester section was also reopened a few years ago. Almost all the track bed remains, although there is a nine-mile gap to the east of Bedford.

My first argument is that the link would provide a critical and strategic addition to the national rail network. The east-west route would provide an orbital route round London connecting all the main rail radials emanating from London and would maximise network capacity by connecting the east coast and west coast main lines. Hon. Members will be aware that there is virtually no spare capacity in the south of England on either of those main lines, so an east-west rail link would provide additional flexibility in the network. It would provide opportunities for both passengers and freight and would allow freight from London to the north to be rerouted, avoiding the east coast and west coast main lines, so it could relieve congestion on other parts of the network around London by diverting some existing services to the east-west route.

[Dr. Starkey]

The route is crucial if congestion on road and rail networks is to be relieved. I have described its effect on relieving congestion on the rail network. It would also provide a realistic alternative to the current road network, linking town centres across England from east to west. The cross-country road alternatives are not particularly good and anyone who has used them knows that. They are not direct, there is little dual carriageway and some stretches have a poor safety record. The A420 from Oxford to Swindon is popularly, or unpopularly, known as the road of death because of its record of road traffic accidents. Furthermore, many town centres are heavily congested, so journey times from town centre to town centre are much higher. A direct east-west link is an attractive alternative. It would help to achieve a transfer of passengers from the road network to the rail network and it has been estimated that it would save up to 100 vehicle kilometres every year.

It would also encourage sustainable economic regeneration. The Milton Keynes, Northampton, Bedford triangle has been designated an area of substainable major growth. Cambridge, with its high-tech industries, is also under heavy development pressure, as are other sites along the route, including Norwich. The east-west route would make those locations transport nodes in a network from which passengers could go north, south, east or west without having to use the most congested parts of the network. It would allow new settlements and housing developments to be built along the east-west route, with employment, shipping and schools linked by rail instead of just by road. It would serve an estimated additional 400,000 new homes along the route. A feasibility study has shown that regeneration linked to the east-west route would create around 10,000 jobs and it can be calculated that taxes paid on earnings and other economic benefits would return £80 million to the economy.

The route would pass through Bletchley in my constituency. It is an old railway town which has suffered decline since the expansion of Milton Keynes. It has a high unemployment rate with poor health and lower incomes compared with other parts of Milton Keynes. There is a substantial amount of empty office and shop space. However, the moment is now right for the regeneration of Bletchley, because central Milton Keynes is becoming fully developed and developers are starting to look elsewhere. Bletchley could become an important secondary centre, but the east-west route is crucial. Bletchley would be the crossover point of the east-west route and the west coast main line. New settlements along the east-west route would look to Bletchley for work and shops. It would allow full exploitation of the tourist potential of Bletchley park, which is next to Bletchley railway station and was the wartime setting for the decoding of the Enigma codes, which made a huge contribution to the victory against fascism in the second world war.

The east-west route is widely supported. Plans for the route have been developed and sustained during the past five years by a consortium of 35 local authorities, controlled by a variety of political parties. This is a cross-party issue and I pay tribute to the work of that local authority consortium over the years in ensuring that the feasibility study for the east-west route was carried out, putting their money behind the idea and ensuring that the business case for the route was well and truly demonstrated, even if it is not entirely recognised in some places.

The east-west route is a crucial element in the local authorities' transport plans. It has been endorsed as a priority project in draft regional planning guidance for the south-east and east of England planning organisations. It has also been incorporated in the strategic plans of the new regional development agencies for the south-east and east of England, both of which have now become members of the consortium pushing the route and are keen to be involved in partnership promotion.

As I have said, the scheme is supported by a parliamentary group, which I chair, with 30 members representing constituencies along and close to the route. We all have a different constituency argument for stressing its importance, but all the arguments together make the overall case. The route has many things going for it, the last of which are that it can be delivered quickly and is excellent value for money.

Technically, the Bedford to Oxford section, with the Aylesbury link, can be delivered quickly. The track bed already exists and simply needs upgrading to allow travel up to 75 mph. That would be a huge, immediate advantage to my constituency, as the existing Bedford to Bletchley route is hardly any faster than it was 150 years ago. With increased speed, it would become a much more attractive alternative. No statutory powers would be required to open this section, so there is no need for a process under the Transport and Works Act 1992 or a public inquiry. The western end of the project has pre-qualified for the rail partnership fund, which is administered by the shadow Strategic Rail Authority.

The second phase, from Bedford eastwards, would take longer because of the nine-mile gap in the route. There has been considerable discussion in Bedford about whether the route should go through the centre of Bedford or round the outside. That matter has now been resolved, after an exceedingly heated public debate, and there is general support in Bedford for the inner route, serving the town centre. However, that will require a process under the Transport and Works Act 1992 because of the need to fill in the gap.

Several train operating companies are seriously interested in bidding to run services along different sections of the east-west route, which brings me to the funding mechanisms. There has been some confusion about the appropriate funding mechanism. Orignally, the local authority consortium was advised by the Office of Passenger Rail Franchising that it should pursue funding on its own, without the involvement of a train operating company. It is now being advised by the shadow Strategic Rail Authority that such involvement is fundamental to a successful bid. At the same time, the franchise replacement process has added complexity to the issue.

One of the train operating companies is including the west phase of the east-west route in its franchise replacement bid; another is including the full route in its submission. The two companies are running on different time scales, with only one in the first tranche of franchise replacement. As part of the franchise replacement process, the train operating companies will not only bid to run services along the route, but intend to put some of their own money towards the capital costs that would enable the route to be brought into operation.

The Government, and to a lesser extent the rail passenger partnership, have created the mechanisms of franchise replacement to persuade the private sector to invest in the national rail network. The east-west route provides an excellent opportunity, with a number of private train companies seriously interested in putting their money into the system. However, the window of opportunity is very small. Once the franchises have been re-let, there may be no further opportunity for 10 years. The councils and Members of Parliament who support the route cannot afford to let that opportunity to benefit the people and the communities that they represent to slip through their fingers.

The east-west route is in line with Government transport policies and priorities and with their planning priorities. It could be an early demonstration of the benefits of that policy, but the Government must ensure that it goes ahead.

I have four requests, about which I hope my hon. Friend the Minister will reassure me. First, I ask the Government to recognise the local, regional and national benefits of the east-west rail link. Secondly, I ask them to support the consortium's initiative in seeking to work in partnership with the private sector to develop major rail infrastructure schemes. Thirdly and most crucially, I ask the Government to instruct the shadow Strategic Rail Authority and the train operating companies to deliver the east-west route in consultation with the consortium, which includes Railtrack, via the franchise replacement programme, or a combination of franchise replacement and the rail passenger partnership, with a commitment from the shadow Strategic Rail Authority and the train operating companies that the west end of the route will be operational in three years and the complete scheme in five years. If my hon. Friend says that she cannot instruct them to do so, I ask the Government to give a clear political steer that that is in line with Government policy and is how those policies should be achieved.

Fourthly, I understand that Rail Property Ltd. is trying to sell some of the sites that are essential to the reopening of the route, especially land near Bedford St. Johns station. I ask my hon. Friend the Minister to instruct Rail Property Ltd. to suspend its efforts in marketing those sites until the east-west route has been reopened, when some of them will no longer be able to be marketed. I hope that my hon. Friend can give me those assurances, so that I can pass them on to other hon. Members who support the east-west rail link and the councils that have worked so hard to try to achieve what would be a jewel in the crown of the Government's transport policy.

12.11 pm

The Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions (Ms Beverley Hughes): I congratulate my hon. Friend the Member for Milton Keynes, South-West (Dr. Starkey) on securing this debate, which provides hon. Members with an opportunity to consider the potential of an east-west rail link. She and other hon. Members in the region have worked strenuously to assist the consortium, and she has put her case with characteristic comprehensiveness and clarity. I hope that I can deal with most, if not all, of the points that she has made.

As my hon. Friend has said, the railway between Oxford and Cambridge was closed to passenger traffic in the 1960s, apart from a short section between Bletchley and Bedford. The section between Oxford and Bicester Town station has been reopened to passenger services. Freight services between Cambridge and Bedford also ceased in the 1960s, and those between Bicester and Bletchley in the 1990s. The possible need for an east-west rail link, which would provide an alternative route for freight and passengers to complement and relieve the A14 trunk road, has been discussed several times and is clearly an acute issue for people in the region.

Proposals of varying complexity have been formulated, the most extensive of which is to link Felixstowe and Bristol. However, as my hon. Friend has said, the pivotal sections of line are those from Cambridge to Bedford and from Bletchley to Bicester. Those sections are closed and, as she has said, the track has been lifted in some places.

We in the Department of the Environment, Transport and the Regions are committed to examining the feasibility of the east-west rail link, but it is important that a clear business case is made for such a large and expensive proposal before it is considered for public funding. I understand that the funding gap for the total project would be about £70 million. Possible ways forward include a phased approach to the scheme or a partial reinstatement. Those proposals have been discussed with the Department and the shadow Strategic Rail Authority. A separate proposal has consequently emerged involving the line from Oxford to Bedford. That would entail the reopening of the Bicester to Bletchley line and some improvements and upgrades to the existing track and infrastructure—the so-called western section proposal.

In order to encourage further investment in the rail network, the Government have provided the franchising director with additional funds aimed at supporting new investment proposals that produce wider significant benefits for both integration and modal shift. Most of that money, as my hon. Friend recognised, will be distributed through the RPP scheme. That scheme is designed to encourage and support innovative proposals at regional and local level that develop and encourage rail use and promote integration with other modes, such as those that increase accessibility for disabled people, and more generally improve the attractiveness of rail both to existing and new users. Support for those projects will enhance the quality of services offered by local and regional rail.

RPP bids are assessed on five key criteria identified in our paper "A New Deal for Transport". I will not go into those in detail, but it is important that each bid is judged on the basis of its impact on the environment, on the safety of the network and on the local and regional economy. Consideration should also be given to accessibility for disabled and other people to the network and the integration that would flow from the scheme, both in terms of local and national policy frameworks.

[Ms Beverley Hughes]

I am pleased to announce that a bid has been received under the RPP scheme for the reopening of the Bicester to Bletchley section of the east-west rail link. That bid has pre-qualified for further detailed consideration. That is the first hurdle. At the moment the franchising director is awaiting submission of a formal bid and business case in support of the proposal. That is necessary so that the bid can be formally assessed against the criteria that apply under the RPP scheme.

My hon. Friend asked whether the bids should include involvement by the train operating company and I can clarify that the consortium was advised at the pre-qualification stage that, while a total final bid would be possible without a train operating company, the involvement of one or more train operating companies would enhance the chances of the formal bid being accepted for funding. That may be particularly important for establishing the business case. When the franchising director receives the formal bid, it will be evaluated against the criteria as outlined and he will make a decision. I understand that new sections of the route would require processes under the Transport and Works Act 1992 to be followed and that could involve public inquiries.

My hon. Friend also mentioned local and regional transport plans. There is obviously considerable local authority involvement in the consortium. Local authorities are required to produce their local and regional transport plans and they should take account of the potential contribution that heavy rail could make to the integrated transport strategy as a whole to improve public transport and reduce car use. In doing so, they need to have regard to the shadow Strategic Rail Authority's developing national rail strategy. If local authorities include the reopening of this line as a priority in their local transport plans it would also enable them to provide financial support as an essential part of the jigsaw. If local authorities include them in their plans it is an important part of the process that hopefully will lead to a successful decision from the point of view of my hon. Friend and other hon. Members.

The franchising director is currently considering the replacement of franchise agreements and is looking for undertakings from companies for continuous improvements for passengers. Improvements in service standards and performance are needed to create an overall journey experience that meets passenger expectations from inquiry to arrival. The director has consulted with user groups and conducted his own national passenger survey.

The franchising director is considering changes to the boundaries of franchising and proposals by train operators for micro-franchising of individual lines and for the extension of the network. We want to see continual improvement and expansion of the rail network, and we welcome all viable schemes that will contribute to the modal shift and to promoting transport that is more environmentally friendly and sustainable. I hope that, under the RPP scheme, the consortium will soon submit a formal bid and business case for the western section of the east-west rail link. If that bid is successful, it will attract further interest and investment in the project.

A rail link between eastern and western Britain has clear economic benefits, and would provide relief for the road connections between the east and west, particularly for the A14 trunk road. We support rail initiatives through the RPP, and we applaud the consortium and our hon. Friends in the region for working towards submitting the bid for the western sector. We have charged the franchising director with assessing all RPP bids against a set of common, published and objective criteria. The formal bid has not, as my hon. Friend suggested, been recieved, let alone assessed against those criteria. Therefore, I can express public support inasmuch as I hope that the consortium will get the bid in. It would, however, be inappropriate for me to say that the bid is wonderful and should be supported, until we have seen and assessed it. That would be wrong, and unfair on other bids that may be in competition with it. I hope that the consortium gets the bid in quickly; we want the matter to progress, and I am sure that my hon. Friend will assist in that.

Another considerable task for which the franchising director is responsible is the replacement of the original passenger rail franchises. He must consider a range of factors, but enhancement of the rail network and the provision of a better service with a greater choice of routes are two important ones. He will review favourably any proposals to add to the existing rail network that are included in bids for replacement franchises, provided that additional public subsidy can be justified on the basis of extra benefits.

The replacement process provides a unique opportunity for reopening new lines. The development of the railway network is an on-going process, and funds such as the RPP will allow the franchising director to consider proposals at any time and to have funding available to support those that meet the relevant criteria whenever they are submitted. Time will not be an issue. The time scales for individual projects depend on the complexity of the project and the timetable for the replacement of franchises, so it is not easy to specify how long a project or a phase of a project will take. If the formal RPP bid for the western secton is successful, I would expect that work to proceed as soon as practicable.

My hon. Friend asked about the marketing of sites. She probably knows that all rail property was subjected to an embargo until three months ago. Any sales are now subject to the approval of the director. I understand that Bedford St. Johns—the station that she mentioned—is not vital to the development of the line because Bletchley to Bedford services currently use Bedford Midland station, although I accept that safeguarding the track bed around Bedford St. Johns is important.

I have applauded the actions of the consortium and I want to see progress, but the ball is now clearly in the consortium's court and further progress cannot be made until a formal bid with a business case is received. I hope that that will be soon.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. I am giving the Minister for Public Health time to reach her position. There is no need to suspend the sitting as both the hon. Member for Lewes (Mr. Baker), who is initiating the debate, and the Minister are now in their places. We can now move to debate the use of bovine material in non-food products.

Bovine Material

12.25 pm

Mr. Norman Baker (Lewes): I congratulate you, Mr. Deputy Speaker, on your filibustering for a few moments, which was entirely appropriate.

The title of our debate seems as dull as ditchwater, but we are debating an important issue. I gave the Minister advance copies of my questions, which I hope she found helpful when preparing her response.

People often imagine that the risk of contracting Creutzfeldt-Jakob disease from BSE-infected cows comes from food. I contend that that threat has been overplayed and that the risk from other means of transmission, especially through vaccines, has been significantly and worryingly underplayed. In an answer to a parliamentary question on 8 March this year, the Minister said that the Spongiform Encephalopathy Advisory Committee has stated that "BSE and vCJD were caused by a closely similar prion strain, and concluded that vCJD was an acquired prion disease caused by exposure to BSE or BSE like agent." –[Official Report, 9 March 2000; Vol. 345, c. 787W.]

As of 31 January this year, according to information to be published by the House of Commons Library on 3 April, we know that 52 people have either definitely or probably died of variant CJD.

An answer to my parliamentary question of 9 March helpfully sets out the hierarchy of risk. Regarding animals with strains of prion, the most risky procedure is injection directly into the brain; the second most risky is injection into the bloodstream; the third most risky is injection into tissues around human organs; the fourth most risky is injection under the skin, but not into the bloodstream; and, the fifth, and so least, risky is ingestion through oral consumption or, in other words, food. On the basis of Government activity over the past 10 years, one would conclude that food was the greatest risk, but in terms of the hierarchy of risk drawn up by the Minister's own Department, it is the least risky option, which is worrying.

The right hon. Member for Birmingham, Perry Barr (Mr. Rooker), when a Minister at the Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food, responded to a written question in March 1999, stating:

There is no scientific proof that BSE can be transmitted to man by beef, but this is seen by SEAC as the most likely explanation, and all our control measures are based on the assumption that it is.—[Official Report, 9 March 1999; Vol. 327, c. 186W.]

I have a lot of time for the right hon. Gentleman, but those words strike me as worrying. It is not the most likely explanation according to the proper hierarchy of risk, so the policy was based on an entirely erroneous assumption.

The vCJD unit was established in 1990 and is reponsible for monitoring incidence of CJD in the UK, but it too proceeds along a false path. It asks questions of those suffering from vCJD to find a link between the disease and BSE. However, the bias of the questions is towards occupational hazards and diet, not vaccines; other potential causes are virtually ignored by the unit. One vCJD victim was a vegetarian, which suggests that the net should be cast wider. I question the basis on which the vCJD unit is proceeding and the assumptions that underlie its activities.

Eating beef is regarded as posing the least possible risk, yet the current Government and the previous Government adopted a raft of measures to minimise that risk, and no one quarrels about that. The Bovine Spongiform Encephalopathy (No. 2) Order 1988 banned the use of milk from an affected cow for anthing other than feeding its own calf. The Bovine Offals (Prohibition) Regulations 1989 banned the use of specified bovine offals for human consumption. In 1990, the Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food issued guidance stating that head meat must be recovered from the intact skull before the brain is removed. The Bovine Offal (Prohibition) (Amendment) Order 1992 prohibited the use of head meat after the skull was opened. I could list other measures that Governments have taken to ensure that the human food chain is as safe as it can be. I do not criticise those measures; they were right to play safe.

However, we must contrast that Government action with the measures that were taken on vaccines which, in terms of the Government's hierarchy of risk, are more likely to transmit BSE than oral ingestion. The right hon. Member for Perry Barr was wrong to say that that is the most likely method of transmission. That is not what is stated in the Minister's hierarchy of risk, which appeared in Hansard early this month. It is nothing new: in 1988, an under secretary at the Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food, Alistair Cruikshank, said:

There is probably no risk in drinking milk or eating flesh from animals affected by BSE, but the position is much less clear in relation to brains, spleen and other organs. This raised questions about the safety of human vaccines prepared using bovine material.

There has been a question mark about the matter for 12 years.

In June 1988, a Department of Health official, Dr. Hilary Pickles, said:

The highest risk would be from parenterals prepared from brain.

The Southwood report in February 1989 stated:

The greatest risk in theory would be from parenteral injection of material derived from bovine brain or lymphoid tissue. Medicinal products for injection or surgical implantation which are prepared from bovine tissues. . . . might also be capable of transmitting infectious agents.

That view has not changed; on 21 July 1999, four scientists involved in the production of the Southwood report were interviewed by the BSE inquiry. Sir Richard Southwood was asked if it was his view, at the time, that the degree of hazard from medicinal products was greater than the degree of hazard that applied in the case of oral ingestion—

a key question, to which he replied, "Yes." Later, he told the inquiry:

We really thought the medical problem was severe. . . . We were very conscious, all the way through, of the worry about the vaccination programme.

There is no doubt that the advice from the experts from MAFF and the Department of Health and Sir Richard Southwood himself in 1988-89 was that there was a risk from vaccines using bovine material.

The answer given by the right hon. Member for Perry Barr was wrong. He is wrong if his understanding is that ingestion is the most likely method of transmission and that contracting the disease is somehow also a matter of quantity because more people eat beef than are exposed to vaccines. That is how his words could be interpreted.

BEST COPY AVAILABLE

[Mr. Norman Baker]

I thank the Minister for her detailed letter dated 14 December 1999, which included statistics. She said:

> The vaccines in use at that time—
>
> between 1989 and 1992—
>
> which used bovine material in the early stages of manufacture and as a medium for cell growth were DTP (diphtheria/tetanus/pertussis), BCG, oral polio and measles vaccines.

The Minister continued helpfully to list the millions of vaccines used during that period when it could not be clear that the vaccines did not include bovine material from cows suffering from BSE. The primary courses of vaccine for diphtheria from 1989 to 1991–92 totalled 2.18 million; they included doses given to 2.11 million children aged 2 or under. The reinforcement doses for diphtheria in the same period were 1.72 million, including 132,000 given to children under the age of 4. Primary courses for tetanus cases for 1989 to 1992 were 2.33 million, of which 2.1 million were given to children aged 2 or under. Then the number goes down. I will not read all the figures but in each case, millions of people, predominantly children, were given vaccines containing bovine material from the United Kingdom herd at a time when the herd included cows suffering from BSE.

How many people were vaccinated with those stocks? The Minister gave details of total vaccinations, but this may not correspond to the vaccines about which I am concerned. If the number of these vaccinations that are of concern to me is lower than I thought because the stocks came from Australasia or elsewhere, will the Minister let us have the figure today? The vaccinations that concern me clearly also caused concern to the Minister at the time, and to his officials. Will the Minister say whether records were kept of the number of people who were vaccinated, and will there be long-term monitoring of their health? It certainly does not appear so. What role does the variant CJD unit play in all this? I suspect that there will not be any long-term monitoring. The Minister for Public Health said in her letter to me of 14 December:

> It is not known how many vaccines used UK sourced bovine material during this period in the early stages of manufacture and as a medium for cell growth.

It appears that, at the time, insufficient attention was paid to that and that insufficient steps were taken to monitor what was happening. That is most worrying. It is incumbent on the Minister to give us as much information as possible when she replies to the debate, because parents whose children were vaccinated at that time want answers. I do not want to be thought to be scaremongering. Officials have used the word "remote" and I want my concern to be put in context. Important questions remain unanswered and I hope that the hon. Lady will answer them.

I am not clear about whether the use of UK-sourced bovine material at any stage of the manufacture of vaccines is now banned. There appear to be conflicting issues in this respect. In a parliamentary answer on 25 March 1999, I was told:

> Bovine material prohibited from use in the human food chain is not prohibited from use in the manufacture of medicinal products, including vaccines—Official Report, 25 March 1999; Vol. 328, c. 378.

It appears that, although guidelines may have been issued, there has been no formal ban. Yet SEAC has stated on the Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food website:

> From 1993, these control ["measures . . . to remove from the human food chain any tissues which might potentially harbour infection"]—have also been applied to animal feed, and from 1997, to cosmetic, pharmaceutical and medical products.

So is a ban in place, or not? Perhaps the Minister will clarify that.

I suggest that, at the time, the attitude of the Department of Health—the Minister was not in the Department at the time, so she cannot be held responsible in any way—was rather lax in the circumstances. I want to offer a reason for that and query why it happened. In March 1989, the Department of Health sent a questionnaire to manufacturers of medicines or medical devices asking them to identify products that contained bovine material. That was a clear indication that this was an issue. The deadline for replies was May 1989, but by September 1989 25 per cent. of companies had not replied. Why were they not chased? Why were the answers not received by the deadline that the Department set? Why was there so little vigour on the part of the Department of Health when public health was at risk?

In September 1989, the following products had been identified in order of concern. This information, which I will read to the Committee, comes from the Department of Health's internal BSE inquiry document, so the Minister may recognise it. It states:

> products with bovine brain/lymphoid tissue as ingredients and administered by injection: 111;
>
> products with bovine ingredients (other than brain/lymphoid tissue) and administered by injection: 135; > tissue implants, open wound dressings, surgical materials, dental and ophthalmic products with bovine ingredients: 27;
>
>
> products with bovine ingredients and administered topically: 5;
>
> products with other animal/insect/bird ingredients: 131; > products with materials produced from animal material by chemical processes (e.g. Stearic acid, gelatin and lanolin: 156.
>

Following the risk identified in 1988 and 1989 by officials in the Department of Health and the Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food, and confirmed by Sir Richard Southwood, why was bovine material not immediately required to be sourced from countries free of BSE? There was clearly a risk, so why was it allowed to continue in use? Why were existing stocks, manufactured using potentially contaminated material, not recalled immediately, particularly in the light of the Department's own hierarchy of risk, which shows that injections are potentially more damaging to human health than eating food? How quickly could the vaccines have been recalled? What were the stock levels of potentially contaminated vaccines when the 1989 guidelines were issued?

In March 1989 the Committee on Safety of Medicines used guidelines advising manufacturing companies to switch to non-UK-sourced bovine material. That was confirmed in colums 246–47 of Hansard on 19 October

1999. However, on 23 June 1999 the then Minister for Public Health, the right hon. Member for Dulwich and West Norwood (Ms Jowell), said:

> The precautionary measures introduced in 1989 and subsequent amendments to them did not require manufacturers to prevent the use of existing supplies of medicinal products which had used bovine material in their early stage of manufacture. Neither did the later guidelines issued by the European Commission in 1992.—[Official Report, 23 June 1999; Vol. 333, c. 382W.]

There is either a risk or there is not. If the Department thought that there was a risk, why were the products not recalled? If there was not a risk, why were guidelines issued? The middle path seems somewhat odd. Why did the Department of Health merely issue guidelines for vaccines, when the Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food had banned potentially contaminated food?

Again, in her letter of 14 December 1999, the Minister said:

> The exercise to ensure that all manufacturers were complying with the guidelines—

the 1989 guidelines—

> was not completed until 1992.

Three years passed. Why did it take three years to confirm that all manufacturers were using non-UK bovine material in their vaccines, when millions of children were vaccinated during that time? Why were stockpiles not cleared straight away and replaced with alternative sources from elsewhere in the world? According to Hansard of 19 October 1999, only by 1999 were all vaccines in use manufactured without UK-sourced bovine material.

What happened to potentially contaminated stocks of vaccines, allergen products, dental and surgical materials and bovine insulin? Were they used? Were they destroyed? If they were destroyed, how were they destroyed? What has happened to those vaccines? Were manufacturers simply allowed to use up existing supplies, were they encouraged to destroy them or were they recalled? I do not know the answer. Perhaps the Minister will tell me in a few minutes' time. How quickly could the vaccines have been recalled?

We know little about the potential danger. We know that there is a real danger and we also know from the chief medical officer that it could take 30 to 40 years to prove. Therefore, although it may be an historic problem for the Department of Health, it is a future problem for the children who may be vaccinated in this way.

I asked the Secretary of State for Health:

> what estimate he has made of the quantity of vaccines held by manufacturers in whose early stages of manufacture bovine material had been used. [Official Report, 1 July 1999; Vol. 334, c. 280W.]

The one-word answer was "None". I find it extraordinary that the Department of Health could not have made that estimate then, given the problems that occurred. I have concentrated on vaccines, but I could equally have referred to allergen products, dental and surgical material, bovine insulin and indeed cosmetics, which I know fall outside the Minister's brief, but which contain bovine material.

Having identified a real risk, why did the Department of Health first appear lax and then not take action to ban products or to insist on recalls, in contrast to the Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food? I suggest that one reason was that they did not want to cause public alarm, and that that overruled the medical concerns. The Southwood report says that the danger was "remote". I accept that word, although there is a hierarchy that is smudged by recent events.

Giving evidence, Sir Anthony Epstein said that no action was taken > on purpose because the consequences for the vaccination programme, for the use of medicines, would have been quite disastrous.

I suggest that the Department of Health calculated that if it came clean about vaccines, as the Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food had about beef, there would have been a loss of confidence in the vaccination programme. It therefore decided not to come clean, but to take a risk in order to maintain confidence in the vaccination programme.

That is a serious allegation, but it is the conclusion that I have reached from the evidence before me. The Minister owes it to all the children who have been vaccinated, and their parents, to give as much information as possible on the questions that I have asked today, so that we can go forward and plan properly for the next 20 years.

12.45 pm

The Minister for Public Health (Yvette Cooper): I shall try to answer as many as possible of the questions that were asked by the hon. Member for Lewes (Mr. Baker), and I thank him for having made me aware of some of them in advance. He raised some additional points to which I cannot respond now, but I shall follow them up in writing.

I congratulate the hon. Gentleman on initiating a debate on a very important subject. I know that it has been a matter of considerable concern to him, and that over the past few months he has asked several parliamentary questions about it. I welcome this opportunity to respond to some of his worries and to set out clearly the actions that have been taken in respect of the use of bovine material in non-food products since concerns were first raised about the potential for risk to human health from bovine spongiform encephalopathies, or BSE.

As the hon. Gentleman will be aware, the events between 1989 and 1993 to which he has referred took place under previous Governments. Nevertheless, I shall give as much information as I can. I take this opportunity to express the Government's concern about the distress caused to sufferers of the truly appalling illness that we now know as variant CJD, and to the families of its victims.

I understand that the hon. Gentleman's primary concern is the potential risk to public health from the use of bovine material in vaccines and surgical cat gut sutures. I begin by reassuring hon. Members that there is currently no evidence to link the use of any medicinal product with variant CJD. Although bovine material is used in the manufacture of some medicines and, indeed, in the manufacture of some vaccines, it is important to note that the bovine material is not an ingredient of any vaccine, but is merely used in the manufacturing process.

I am advised that general manufacturers of medicinal products, including vaccines, avoid the use of animal sourced materials wherever possible. In the case of vaccines, bovine materials are used only to promote the growth of cells, viruses or bacteria during manufacture. Subsequent purification is designed to remove all materials that are associated with the manufacture but are not required in the final product. The manufacturers provide validation of those processes to the Medicines Control Agency.

[Yvette Cooper]

Since 1989, bovine materials used in the manufacture of medicines have been subject to extremely rigorous guidelines that govern the geographical source of the material, the type of tissue used and the processes to which such material must be subjected to minimise any risk that it may represent. Those guidelines were first developed in the UK by the Government's independent scientific advisory committee, the Comittee on Safety of Medicines—the CSM—together with the Veterinary Products Committee, because the guidelines apply equally to veterinary medicines.

In 1988, when concerns were first raised about BSE, the CSM established a group of experts to consider the implications for the use of bovine materials in the manufacture of medicines—the BSE working party of the CSM. In March 1989, the CSM published guidelines for the pharmaceutical industry on the sourcing and processing of animal tissues, based on the sub-group's findings. Those guidelines addressed the geographical sourcing of the material to be used and assesssed the potential risk from the use of certain animal tissues; it recommended processing practices to minimise the risk from the use of bovine materials.

When the guidelines were issued to industry, manufacturers of new medicinal products were expected to comply with them immediately, and manufacturers of existing products were asked how they intended to comply with them. I am advised that many manufacturers reported that they had already stopped sourcing material from the United Kingdom because of their concern about reports of illness in UK cattle.

That action was taken as a precautionary measure; the risk to public health from the use of bovine material in medicinal products was assessed by the scientific experts of the Southwood committee to be remote and theoretical. A decision was taken that existing supplies of medicines, including vaccines, should not be withdrawn from the market, because there was concern that withdrawal of such supplies without suitable alternatives being provided would result in a serious risk to public health. In the case of vaccines, there was particular concern that withdrawal could lead to a real risk of deaths caused by epidemics of the diseases that the vaccine programmes were intended to address, such as diphtheria, pertussis and whooping cough.

The Medicines Control Agency, which came into existence in April 1989 and replaced the medicines division of the Department of Health, followed up all manufacturers who had reported the use of animal material in the manufacture of medicines until they were able to report that they complied fully with the CSM guidelines. Priority was given in that exercise to vaccine manufacturers. I am advised that all vaccine manufacturers were contacted in 1989 and that they decided immediately to source their bovine materials outside the United Kingdom to comply with the guidelines.

In 1992, the European committee of independent scientific experts—the committee for proprietary medicinal products—issued its own guidelines to the pharmaceutical industry based almost wholly on those that had been developed some three years previously in the United Kingdom. Those guidelines, with amendments made in the light of new scientific knowledge, are still in force today. The hon. Gentleman asked about bans and I am advised by the MCA that it enforces the guidelines and that it will not license products that do not comply with the guidelines.

The hon. Gentleman expressed specific concern about vaccines that remained on the market after the original guidelines had been issued by the CSM in 1989, and he asked how long they might have remained in use. Many manufacturers of medicinal products were already sourcing bovine materials outside the United Kingdom when the guidelines were issued. I am advised that many of the childhood vaccines used in the United Kingdom were manufactured abroad and did not use bovine material sourced in the United Kingdom. Wellcome, the monopoly manufacturer of DTP childhood vaccines, had used foetal calf serum and meat sourced in the United Kingdom, but by February 1989 it had identified a source of materials in New Zealand, so all vaccines manufactured by Wellcome after 1989 used bovine material from New Zealand.

The manufacture of vaccines is complex and takes many months. Material that was manufactured before 1989 continued to be used so that the vaccination programme would not be compromised. DTP vaccine was issued by Wellcome until June 1991, when stock ran out. Single component diphtheria and tetanus vaccines continued to be supplied until December 1991. I am advised by the MCA that expiry of the DTP vaccine occurred in November 1993, so, although most of it would have been used in 1991, it is possible that small quantities may have remained in doctors' surgeries and been used up to the expiry date.

In 1989, vaccines were issued directly by the manufacturers, not bought centrally by the Department of Health, as happens now. Therefore, there are no figures available on vaccine usage for that period. The MCA has assured me that from April 1989, no bovine material sourced in the United Kingdom was introduced as an element of the manufacturing process for vaccines produced at the time.

One aspect that has not been considered previously is the issue of cell lines, some dating back to the 1960s, from which some viral vaccines are produced. For completeness, I have asked the CSM to examine whether there are any BSE-related issues in this area. To provide the hon. Gentleman with the fullest information about the vaccines, it is important to give him the information I received from the MCA. The expiry date for the diphtheria vaccine produced by Wellcome was November 1992, whereas that for the tetanus vaccine was December 1993. The expiry date for the diphtheria tetanus absorbed vaccine was June 1993, and the DTP vaccine expiry date was November 1993. As I said, many of the vaccines will have been used before the expiry dates, but those are the last expiry dates that I have been given.

Mr. Baker: Does that mean that no vaccines were recalled after the identification of the risk?

Yvette Cooper: I shall write to the hon. Gentleman on that issue, because one of the vaccines may have been replaced. As I understand it, the vaccines that were manufacturered before 1989 were still in use until the latest date that they could legally be used—the expiry dates that I have given.

I should like to explain in more detail how the risk to human health from medicines, especially vaccines, was assessed, and how and why that was translated into action. I pointed out that Professor Southwood's report identified medicines manufacture as one of a number of uses of bovine material. Although the scientists concluded that the risk to man from bovine materials in medicines was remote and theoretical, they also concluded that parenteral products such as vaccines were, by the nature of their application, likely to present the highest risk. We must also remember that, at that time and until 1996, no action was taken against UK beef and beef products, such as those in the food chain.

When considering what action to take, the CSM addressed the question of whether current supplies of medicines, especially vaccines, should be withdrawn. In the light of the assessment of the risk as remote and theoretical, and the fact that the proposed action was regarded as a precaution rather than a response to an identified risk, I am advised that they conclude on the basis of knowledge at the time that it would not be appropriate to withdraw vaccine supplies. There was concern about the risk of emerging epidemics if the public turned away from vaccination programmes. Because of the minimal risk that it was thought that such vaccines represented, there were no plans to monitor usage of existing stocks, or to contact individuals who have received vaccinations.

Even in 1989, however, there was an understanding that there was likely to be a hierarchy of risk. The guidelines identified those materials thought to pose the greatest potential risk. The hon. Member for Lewes is concerned about people who were vaccinated during the transition period—if it can be described as such—when the change to sourcing materials from outside the UK was taking place. As I pointed out, there was and still is no evidence to link variant CJD with medicines or vaccines.

It is not possible to identify for follow-up purposes those who received vaccine during that time. However, we can examine the vaccine exposure of existing variant CJD cases. That has been done by experts from the BSE unit, the National Institute for Biological Standards and Control and the Department of Health. Their conclusions stated:

if CJD is the result of exposure to BSE cattle infected material, the vaccines given before the age of 2 appear to have no role in its aetiology to date.

Forty-nine of the 52 cases of variant CJD are in people who were born before 1980 and who would, therefore, have received the vaccines before exposure was possible. The remaining three were born in the 1980s, but, given the long period between starting manufacture from the raw materials and the completion of the finished product, exposure seems unlikely. That analysis will be repeated.

The guidelines that have been in force since 1999 require assurances from manufacturers on sourcing and manufacture. They are accepted by scientific experts as providing a fully effective means of minimising the risk from BSE and other transmissible spongiform encephalopathies.

I should like to address the concern about surgical cat gut sutures, although I do not have much time. Like vaccines, surgical sutures are essential products from which the health of millions of people has benefited. Absorbable surgical materials such as cat gut were brought under the controls of the Medicines Act 1971. Given the pressure of time, I shall write to the hon. Gentleman on that subject.

It being One o'clock, the motion for the Adjournment of the sitting lapsed, without Question put.

Westminster Hall

Wednesday 29 March 2000

[SIR ALAN HASELHURST in the Chair]

Diamond Synchrotron

Motion made, and Question proposed, That the sitting be now adjourned.—[Mr. Clelland.]

9.30 am

Mr. Graham Brady (Altrincham and Sale, West): It is customary on these occasions to express pleasure at having been fortunate enough to secure an Adjournment debate to discuss a matter of great importance. I am grateful for the opportunity, although I express regret that it has been left to a Back Bencher to raise a matter of enormous concern not only to the north-west of England but to the nation's scientific community. I regret also that we are having to debate the matter in Westminster Hall; I believe that it should have been accorded the prominence of the Floor of the House of Commons. Nevertheless, it is an important matter that deserves proper parliamentary scrutiny.

The Prime Minister spoke to the north-west group of Labour Members of Parliament about the Government's decision to site the new synchrotron in Oxfordshire rather than in Cheshire, but it is not good enough to address members of only one party; it is a matter of concern to all parties as well as to people in the north-west and elsewhere in Britain. I am pleased to have the opportunity to bring the matter to Parliament, as we can ask the Government to give a fuller account of their decision.

I welcome the Minister for Competitiveness. I have a high personal regard for him. I venture to suggest that he has been sent here this morning because his ministerial colleagues, too, have a high regard for his abilities. However, I am sorry that the Minister who made the decision, Lord Sainsbury of Turville, the Minister for Science, is not able to account for it to elected Members of Parliament. It is an alarming and regrettable trend that Government decisions are made by unelected Ministers who are not directly accountable to the House of Commons.

All parties in the north-west are angry about the decision to site the synchrotron project in Oxfordshire rather than in Daresbury, where the existing synchrotron is sited. We agree with Peter Hetherington's assessment in The Guardian on 22 March, when he said that the move was > a defining moment for the government, and a kick in the teeth for northern MPs.

I give full credit to hon. Members of all parties who have made their position clear and fought their corner for the north-west. I see that the hon. Member for Weaver Vale (Mr. Hall) is present; although he is constrained from speaking, I certainly give him full credit for having fought for his constituents within Government. [Interruption.]

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. There was no need for a sedentary comment. The hon. Gentleman was making a perfectly ordinary reference. The Whip is constrained from speaking; it does not help if he intervenes from a sedentary position.

Mr. Brady: Thank you, Mr. Deputy Speaker. I was being complimentary; perhaps I should not have taken the trouble.

I know that other hon. Members have made an important contribution. The hon. Member for Crewe and Nantwich (Mrs. Dunwoody) described the decision last week as short-sighted, damaging and unimaginative and said that the Government must think again. She added that Lord Sainsbury should reconsider his position as a Minister. The hon. Member for Liverpool, Riverside (Mrs. Ellman) described Lord Sainsbury's comments as arrogant and dismissive. The hon. Member for Liverpool, Walton (Mr. Kilfoyle), speaking on Monday evening, said:

> If ever there was a mixed message to a region, the north-west received one on Budget day.—[Official Report, 27 March 2000; Vol. 347, c. 62].

I seek to be broadly non-partisan by trying to give credit to Members of all parties. The hon. Member for Hazel Grove (Mr. Stunell) has raised the matter in the House, and my hon. Friend the Member for Eddisbury (Mr. O'Brien) has been battling hard on the issue since his election last July. He has asked me to apologise for the fact that a binding commitment means that he cannot be here this morning.

The issue is not just regional but, perhaps most importantly, scientific. The scientific community is baffled by the decision. Professor Woolfson, who chaired the 1993 review that led to the original decision to build the new Diamond synchrotron said in a letter—I think that it was to The Times—that he was dismayed by the decision. He said:

> Daresbury ... where the UK built the first dedicated synchrotron source ... was identified as a world centre of excellence ... Users from many countries benefited from the expertise of the resident staff.

He added that more was achieved there than could be achieved with more advanced synchrotrons elsewhere.

Professor Woolfson continued:

> many staff will take early retirement or lucrative jobs overseas ... rather than move to Didcot with its high housing costs and UK salaries. It will take a decade or more to build up a team with the competence ... and effectiveness that exists at Daresbury ... It is disingenuous of the prime minister to say that there is no north-south divide. There is ... and the Diamond decision has made it wider. Other things being equal the government should give preference to northern areas. In this case, other things are not equal and the northern site is, for many reasons, far the better. I fear that a dreadful mistake has been made.

The man whose report instigated the development of the new Diamond synchrotron project is firmly of the opinion that the Government have made the wrong decision and that the siting should have gone to Cheshire and not Oxfordshire.

Even those who have backed the siting at the Rutherford Appleton laboratory frequently say that the case is tenuous. The Prime Minister has said that the scientific case is "marginally in favour" of Oxfordshire. Lord Sainsbury, answering questions in the Select Committee on the Environment, Transport and Regional Affairs last week, said that the French Government and the Wellcome Trust favoured the decision "on balance" but "not overwhelmingly."

[Mr. Brady]

The French Government told the BBC that they did not favour one site over another. Following the dismissal of the French Minister, Mr Allègre, it is likely that the French Soleil project will proceed. A distinct possibility is that the French Government will want to withdraw from the Diamond project.

The Government have sought to hide behind the Wellcome Trust, but in evidence submitted to the Select Committee on Science and Technology a couple of months ago, the trust made it clear that it wanted to hold an open competition for the selection of the new synchrotron site. On 19 January 1999, the trust said in its evidence that the Office of Science and Technology agreed that an open competition would be acceptable.

On 28 April 1999, the OST proposed that the new synchrotron should be located at the Rutherford Appleton laboratory site near Oxford. The OST was the first to suggest that that should be the site, not the Wellcome Trust, which favoured a full open competition. The Committee noted in the minutes of evidence that the trust said:

> After much discussion the Governors agreed that the RAL site was an acceptable compromise.

The trust's understanding was that that was the jointly agreed site, until it received a letter from the Secretary of State on 4 October 1999, which said that there were > only two credible sites in the UK for this project, RAL and Daresbury, and that he was > minded to site the new Synchrotron at Daresbury.

The director of the trust responded to the letter on 7 October, noting that it had been persuaded by the OST to accept its proposal in favour of RAL. Further, the director said:

> if the new synchrotron is not located at RAL, the Wellcome Trust would wish to explore some form of non-exclusive competition to identify an alternative site for the development of the new synchrotron radiation facility.

The Secretary of State replied on 11 October, dismissing the idea of an open competition, stating that there were only two sites. He concluded by saying that he was still minded to locate the new synchrotron at Daresbury.

On 15 October, the director of the Wellcome Trust said that several institutions around the country had approached the trust, suggesting an interest in siting the new synchrotron. Whether they could present a credible case if encouraged to do so has not been examined. The Secretary of State responded on 1 November. He stated that he > did not see any benefit from undertaking a new competition for the site and that he had > decided to site the new synchrotron at Daresbury.

Who insisted on Oxfordshire? We know from the French Government that it was not the French and we know that the Wellcome Trust's preference was for an open competition. We know that the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry did not insist on that location, because he announced on 1 November last year his decision to site the new Diamond synchrotron at Daresbury. The insistence came from somebody who is even closer to the Prime Minister than the Secretary of State: someone who has close personal links with him and who has never had to face an election, as I noted at the beginning of the debate. I am speaking of Lord Sainsbury, who pressed for Diamond's location at Rutherford Appleton early last year, initially through the Office of Science and Technology. Why did he press for that site? I doubt whether any hon. Members who are present and who represent the north-west know; I also doubt whether anyone outside the magic circle around Downing street knows the true answer.

On 19 March, The Observer pointed to a web of connections, back-scratching and potential conflicts of interest. It referred to

> Concerns that the charity wields undue influence over government and said that there were a number of close links between the trust and Whitehall. It went on to state:

> Blair's chief scientific adviser, Sir Robert May . . . works in the same Oxford University zoology department as Professor Roy Anderson, one of the key governors of the Wellcome Trust board.

It pointed out that Wellcome funds a scientist at the John Innes centre, which shares a site with the Sainsbury laboratory in Norwich, and that they have a joint venture company to exploit their discoveries. It also told us:

> The Wellcome Trust is paying for a key employee to work inside the Government's Office for Science and Technology.

If the decision remains unchanged, it will take more than £500 million out of the economy of the north-west and send it to Oxfordshire. That is a spectacular instance of regional policy operating in reverse. It will take the newest and most high-tech jobs either to the south of England or overseas to other synchrotron facilities, and move a major scientific institution out of the north-west. I shall cite the words of a constituent of mine, Professor Young, of the Manchester materials science centre at the University of Manchester Institute of Science and Technology, who wrote to the Prime Minister on 13 February. He stated:

> Daresbury is of major benefit to our region. Its loss would have a profound effect upon employment and upon the north-west science base.

There is no compelling scientific case for a move to Oxford, but there is a compelling regional case to keep the new facility in Cheshire. The reasons given by Ministers are contradicted by those at whose door they are trying to lay the blame. It is unacceptable for such important national decisions to be taken by a small coterie around the Prime Minister without explanation or debate. I hope that this debate will force greater accountability and openness on a Government who frequently prefer to deal in secret. If there is a genuine public policy reason for the decision to abandon Daresbury and to site the Diamond synchrotron in Oxfordshire, then let us hear it today. If not, let the decision be changed.

9.43 am

Ms Helen Southworth (Warrington, South): I did not appreciate the comments with which the hon. Member for Altrincham and Sale, West (Mr. Brady) began his speech, when he complained that Labour Members had been leading the campaign for Diamond at Daresbury and had been speaking to the Prime Minister about the matter. He said that it was not good enough to address only one party in the House. I would have appreciated his active participation in the campaign for Diamond at Daresbury at an early date, before the decision was made. Instead, he has waited until now, when he has the opportunism to criticise after the event. Does the Tory Front-Bench team support his decision to site Diamond at the Rutherford Appleton laboratory? I shall give way if the hon. Member for Tiverton and Honiton (Mrs. Browning) wants to clarify her party's position.

Mrs. Angela Browning (Tiverton and Honiton): I am here today to examine in detail the process by which the Government reach important decisions. The issue is of great importance to people in the north-west and in Oxfordshire. I am concerned not about the location but about the integrity of the Government's decision-making process and its lack of transparency.

Ms Southworth: The hon. Lady is not prepared to answer my question; instead, she diverts us with red herrings. Does the Tory Front-Bench team support the siting of Diamond at the Rutherford Appleton laboratory?

Mrs. Browning: I do not have the background information on which the decision was made. It is in order to obtain that information and make a judgment that I am seeking clarification from the Minister.

Ms Southworth: The hon. Lady has made my point: either the Conservatives are behind the times and resort to opportunism and criticism, or they have not been paying attention for the past nine months when everyone else has been making a case to locate Diamond at Daresbury.

I have a final question for the Conservative Front-Bench spokesman.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. The hon. Lady should be making a speech. This is not Question Time.

Ms Southworth: Thank you, Mr. Deputy Speaker, but it remains the case that the Conservative Front-Bench team has not spoken in favour of Diamond at Daresbury.

Mr. Brady: Will the hon. Lady give way?

Ms Southworth: No.

Synchrotrons accelerate electrons to a speed close to that of light and act as sources of intense radiation over a spectrum ranging from X-rays to the infra-red. It is appropriate to cast some light on the science. Synchrotrons are used by physicists, chemists and molecular biologists to study atomic structure and movements in a vast number of different types of matter, from semiconductors in computer chips to living muscle. They are not science fiction; they are engines that are essential to scientific, technological and, in our knowledge-driven economy, economic success.

Synchrotrons are not merely high-technology machines with exacting specifications. It is not possible to put a synchrotron in a box, label it and send it somewhere else. It will not function without a high-quality team of scientists and technicians. Daresbury laboratory, although on the outskirts of my constituency, is an important part of it. It has been the home of British synchrotron science for 25 years. One of the few good things about the process of choosing a site for Diamond—the third generation synchrotron that will replace the current machine—is that is has made evident the worldwide reputation of Daresbury scientists and technicians among the scientific community of synchrotron users.

The Daresbury staff provide world-class experimental and computational facilities. Their outstanding performance has been endorsed by some of the world's leading scientists. The director of research at the European synchrotron radiation facility at Grenoble said that Daresbury staff > have an international reputation for innovative design and technology.

Dr. Binns, chair of the synchrotron radiation source surface science user group, and Professor Norris, chair of the SRS user forum, said:

> Daresbury has been the site of all synchrotron radiation development work in the UK for over 30 years and now employs a world class team of machine physicists and engineers . . . there is an innovative detector programme led by the scientific research staff which will put the UK at the forefront of instrumentation for synchrotron radiation experiments.

Professor Margantondo, co-ordinator of the European round table for synchrotron radiation, explained that > a synchrotron laboratory is not merely a collection of instruments. Its ultimate success relies primarily on the competence, creativity and stature of its staff and users . . . acquiring such a multi-faceted competence at an international level of excellence takes decades—and the result is a resource of invaluable importance. Every expert in the field would agree that Daresbury laboratory constitutes such a resource. I would like to mention in particular the domains of spectroscopy and surface science in general, as well as structural techniques. The worldwide reputation of Daresbury laboratory is virtually unmatched in these areas.

Unfortunately, I do not have time to detail the hundreds of similar comments from world-leading scientists commending the laboratory's staff. Nobel prize winners, directors of international establishments, university vice-chancellors and senior synchrotron users have been vocal in their admiration of the Daresbury team over many months. I am extremely proud of the staff at Daresbury who have been able to generate such support for their campaign.

Thanks to the quality of the scientific research and technical support at the laboratory, the first Nobel prize awarded for research work at a synchrotron X-ray source—of which there are 40 in the world—came to Britain with the award of the 1997 chemistry prize to Sir John Walker. Daresbury research scientists are heading research teams on £15 million-worth of research programmes. One of the most exciting is led by Dr. Rob Lewis, a constituent of mine, who is developing a revolution in the early diagnosis of breast cancer. He is using the powers of the rays of the synchrotron to spot tumours as small as a full stop.

The research team is entirely based in the north-west and has taken five years to build up. Its work is vital. I have raised its significance directly with my noble Friend Lord Sainsbury and my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry and at the highest levels of Government. I am determined that the work will continue and that we should give it every support. It could save thousands of women's lives and it must be protected and given a secure environment in which to develop. Furthermore, it is essential that all scientists and technicians who are responsible for Britain's international success in structural biology and physical and material science have a secure future and can continue to use their skills and creativity in the interests of British science in the public sector.

[Ms Southworth]

Two weeks ago, the Government took a decision to locate Diamond, the third generation synchrotron, not at Daresbury laboratory, but at Rutherford Appleton laboratory near Oxford. That is a bad decision. It has undermined the confidence of Daresbury staff and has put the future effectiveness of Britain's synchrotron science at risk. The Select Committee on Science and Technology investigated the issue of location for Diamond and found nothing to choose between the two sites on science grounds, deciding that other factors would have to be taken into consideration.

Like many of my Labour colleagues in the north-west and on the Select Committee, I expected those other considerations to include two essential factors: the critical importance of the Daresbury staff in the design, building and operation of the new machine—they represent the total repository of Britain's synchrotron science—and the key importance to the regional economy of a synchrotron in the north-west. Science and research drive the new economy and our region is still struggling to create new industries after the wholesale destruction of our manufacturing base under the Tory Government. Biotech industries are a key part of our future success. We are good at them and that must be recognised.

My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry told the Wellcome Trust in a letter of 4 October that he was minded to site Diamond at Daresbury because of all the factors that I have mentioned. The Wellcome Trust, a partner in the project to create the third generation synchrotron, decided, in secret, unilaterally to veto the siting of Diamond at Daresbury and to insist that it should go to Rutherford Appleton laboratory near Oxford—or it would withdraw its partnership. Why? Who knows? The Wellcome Trust has not been prepared to meet local Members of Parliament or north-west civic leaders to discuss the issue.

Mr. Robert Jackson (Wantage): Will the hon. Lady give way?

Ms Southworth: Not now.

In their public and private utterances, Wellcome representatives have exhibited a prejudice in favour of Oxford that seems to have been grounded on the opinion that Rutherford Appleton has a better scientific culture, but when pressed for evidence they have provided none. They have mumbled about scientists drinking coffee together in Oxford, but we have perfectly good coffee in the north-west. After considerable prevarication, during which it gave information to my hon. Friend the Member for Weaver Vale (Mr. Hall) that it was not prejudiced in favour of either site, the Wellcome trust issued a statement on 23 November, which said:

> On the basis of the evidence made available to us, the Wellcome Trust has concluded that the Rutherford Appleton Laboratory (RAL), in Oxfordshire, has a number of advantages when compared with the Daresbury Laboratory as the site of the new UK-French synchrotron.
>
> Our preferred option wa to carry out a site solicitation exercise between a number of sites in addition to Daresbury and RAL. We were persuaded that such an exercise should be constrained to the two Government sites only and we believe that there is a stronger scientific case for locating the synchrotron at RAL.

I am afraid that the trust has not been able to demonstrate that stronger scientific case.

Mr. Jackson: It is clear from the hon. Lady's remark about mumbling over coffee that she is not aware that the director of the Wellcome Trust, in his evidence to the Science and Technology Committee, of which I am a member, gave a full and clear account of the reasons why the trust favoured the Rutherford Appleton Laboratory.

Ms Southworth: It is interesting that the hon. Gentleman chooses to speak on behalf of the Wellcome Trust. It has been considerably advantageous to him that the trust took the position that it did. I listened to all the evidence given to the Select Committee, and the main points made by the director of the Wellcome Trust were rather vague scientific points, for which he could not produce any evidence. I was taught that science is about theory, creativity, imagination and testing the evidence. I have not seen the Wellcome Trust testing the evidence. In fact, I issue a challenge to the Wellcome Trust to meet local Members of Parliament to explain its position because, frankly, it appears to have been using science like a drunk uses a lamp-post—not so much for illumination as for support.

If I am wrong, I shall be happy to hear the trust justify its position. I am shocked that the representatives of the Wellcome Trust, who are senior scientists, are not prepared to defend their case in public. I am also surprised that the two professors from London university, two professors from Cambridge university and three professors from Oxford university who make up the majority of members of the Wellcome Trust, are not prepared to explain the scientific evidence for their case. I assume that it is because they do not have a case to explain and are more interested in the quality of wine at the high table than in the quality of science. I find that shocking.

The actions of the Wellcome Trust have damaged the credibility of the decision-making process and cast considerable doubt on the probity of its involvement in that process. I would be very happy for the trust to set the record straight. I also challenge it to publish the minutes of the board meetings at which the decision was made, because I should like to know who participated in the decision-making process and whether any interests were declared.

Mr. Brady: On the subject of setting the record straight, I raised the matter with the Government before the decision was taken, on behalf of both constituents who work at the site and scientists who use it.

Ms Southworth: I accept what the hon. Gentleman says, but I would have been happy to have had his support on the issue, to which many Labour Members have devoted considerable effort. I want to put on record my thanks and the thanks of my hon. Friend the Member for Weaver Vale, who is unable to participate in the debate, and of my hon. Friend the Member for Halton (Mr. Twigg), for the extensive support that we received from north-west Members, as well as from members of the Science and Technology Committee.

Several outstanding issues must be addressed following the bad decision that was made. It is essential that the SRS at Daresbury can continue to operate fully while the new instrument is built. That depends on the continued availability of and Government commitment to the current technical support and scientific research teams at Daresbury. I should like to thank my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry, who has agreed to meet representatives of the staff teams soon to discuss their future and the support action that the Government will take to ensure that Daresbury laboratory has a future. It is essential to build confidence in its continuation, to back that with an investment programme and to secure for the research scientists and technicians a future that will recognise their career needs.

It is essential that we develop a strategy in the north-west and build on the co-operation of the research universities, business, local government, regional development agencies and the research institutions that have up to now supported the campaign for Diamond at Daresbury, and need to be drawn on to ensure that science in the north-west develops an international reputation for the future. It is essential, too, that we build a third generation synchrotron that is of international excellence, on time, within budget and without a dark period. Many of us will observe closely to ensure that biosciences do not go through a dark period because of an unwise decision to site the laboratory at Rutherford Appleton.

Above all, it is vital that the north-west should develop a strategy on science that builds on and complements the excellence in the regions. It must be explicit, it must have the Government's full support and it must not be distorted or taken off track by intransigent partners with vested interests. I ask my hon. Friend the Minister to address all those issues and to ensure that the Government respond positively.

10.1 am

Mr. Robert Jackson (Wantage): It is an honourable tradition, Mr. Chairman—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. May I correct the hon. Gentleman? While I am in the Chair, the form of address is Mr. Deputy Speaker. When I am replaced by Mr. O'Hara, he will be addressed as Mr. O'Hara or Mr. Chairman.

Mr. Jackson: I thank you, Mr. Deputy Speaker, for drawing my attention to that important point of protocol.

It is an honourable tradition of the House that all of us speak for our constituencies. I understand well why hon. Members from constituencies in the north-west spoke as they did, but we—and the Government—also have a responsibility to think in terms of the national interest.

I am the Member of Parliament for the constituency in which the Rutherford Appleton laboratory is situated. My motive for speaking today, and the line that I have taken in previous debates, will therefore be thought by hon. Members from the north-west to be easily explicable.

Mr. Ian Stewart (Eccles): How many of the hon. Gentleman's constituents came to him to demand that the synchrotron facility be removed from the north-west and located in his constituency?

Mr. Jackson: The answer is not very many. I will say more about that. No doubt what I am about to say will be interpreted by Members with north-west constituencies as simply an expression of constituency sentiment, but I assure them that I do not approach these important matters in that way. Our area of Oxfordshire has very high employment and there is considerable prosperity. We are part of the wealth-creating sector of the British economy. There are considerable pressures on housing, as my hon. Friend the Member for Altrincham and Sale, West (Mr. Brady) told the Chamber. I therefore spend much of my time resisting new developments in my constituency to try to avoid excessive development in our part of the world. Accordingly, I do not approach this matter in a narrow, particularistic, constituency way.

I might add that I have some personal experience of such decisions. I know that there is no greater back number than an ex-Minister, but I have twice been Minister with responsibility for the research councils, in the late 1980s and the early 1990s. I also have some personal experience of taking such decisions and of the interests that are involved. It is against that background that I make my comments.

The Government have been saying, as today's debate has revealed, that the scientific arguments for location at the Rutherford laboratory are marginal. I do not agree. The Government are taking that line, as in the press release issued by the Department of Trade and Industry at the time of the announcement, because it was the only explanation that they could find for the delayed decision: delayed in the face of the powerful lobby from the north-west. The only plausible explanation for the delay was that the scientific case was marginal, so that was what was said; but I believe that the scientific case is overwhelming, and that is why I have supported the project coming to Oxfordshire.

The arguments supporting that case concern central scientific facilities. The Rutherford laboratory offers the United Kingdom a central facility for large scientific instruments, which play an increasingly important role in western European and international science. Such an arrangement is beneficial because it reduces overheads: it will be possible to run the new synchrotron at the Rutherford laboratory with a substantial reduction in administrative and technical overheads, and additional money will thus be available to invest in science. That is a powerful argument for locating such instruments on a single site.

Sometimes, the arguments for central facilities are dismissed in the belief that those using them are merely taking coffee together or drinking wine at high table. Such meetings are important, even if they are easy to caricature, as the hon. member for Warrington, South (Ms Southworth) demonstrated. They permit cross-fertilisation and synergy between diverse user communities: those also are powerful arguments for central facilities.

[Mr. Jackson]

There is also a local argument in relation to the Rutherford laboratory. The decision to invest in the early 1980s in the spallation neutron source of Isis machine at the Rutherford laboratory was an earlier important Government decision on scientific investment. That machine is approaching the end of its useful life and a successor is needed. Such a machine will cost a great deal, so international partners are needed. Locating the synchrotron in the Rutherford laboratory alongside that new machine will help to enable the laboratory's financial and user base to be broadened. The presence of the synchrotron in the Rutherford laboratory will help to broaden the potential international appeal of the other new machine that will be required in due course.

Ms Southworth: Is the hon. Gentleman saying that Diamond is being taken away from the north-west and sited at the Rutherford Appleton laboratory so that that laboratory can justify its future existence? Surely, if the science is as excellent as the. hon. Gentleman says, it can be undertaken without taking science away from the north-west?

Mr. Jackson: I support the decision partly because it strengthens the position of the Rutherford Appleton laboratory as a national and international centre of excellence.

The supporters of the Daresbury laboratory are, in effect, arguing that national and international centres of excellence should be dispersed and broken up. That is the logic of their case regarding central facilities such as the Rutherford Appleton laboratory and our elite universities. However, national and international trends are in the opposite direction. Money and scientific manpower are scarce, and there is increasing competition between research centres throughout the world. We must therefore invest more in our national centres of excellence, not less.

Mrs. Louise Ellman (Liverpool, Riverside): Is the hon. Gentleman saying that centres of scientific excellence in the north-west should be dismembered and that the south-east should be the ony part of the country to have such centres? Is he seriously offering that as a proper policy for this country?

Mr. Jackson: Having a national centre for excellence for such machines is a proper policy for this country. There happens to be one such centre in my constituency, so that is where this kind of investment should be concentrated.

Dr. Brian Iddon (Bolton, South-East): The debate about centres of excellence is important. However, concentrating science in a small number of sites reduces the competition essential to scientific progress.

Mr. Jackson: I agree that there is a problem with competition, but the real competition is not within this country: it is international. The significant competition is between the Rutherford laboratory and other centres in Europe and around the world. The Government have rightly strengthened our national position in the context of that international competition.

I wish to make a mild complaint—it will be made more vociferously by other colleagues—about the way in which the decision was handled. The Government received clear scientific advice from people who—despite what the hon. Member for Warrington, South said—had no axe to grind. It came from Government scientific advisers, from the director general for research councils and from the Wellcome Trust.

Mr. David Watts (St. Helens, North): Does the hon. Gentleman agree that it is wrong for the Wellcome Trust to use its financial muscle to dictate policy to the Government? Does he accept that such people have a duty to declare their pecuniary or professional interests before taking decisions and that, by not doing so, they have destroyed all credibility regarding their views on this matter?

Mr. Jackson: I shall say more about the Wellcome Trust in a moment. However, I do not believe that Wellcome Trust members had any interest in the matter: indeed, they had less interest in it than the hon. Gentleman and many of his colleagues. The Wellcome Trust is an independent third party and makes a valuable contribution to British science; he should treat it with more respect. I shall return to its role in a moment.

Mr. Ian Stewart: Does the hon. Gentleman accept that there is no inherent intellectual capital in a machine? The true intellectual capital is in the people who worked on these issues in Daresbury for 25 years; and he should show them more respect.

Mr. Jackson: The hon. Gentleman does not understand how Daresbury works. Central facilities are run by local people there—and I pay all due tribute to them—but they are used by people from all over the country and all over the world, and will continue to be so used in future. May I say to the hon. Members who have intervened that I am not speaking for the Government, though it may sometimes sound like it? Their comments would be best addressed to Ministers who have responsibility for these decisions.

The Government received clear scientific advice from their advisers and from the Wellcome Trust—a completely independent organisation, as I said, with no axe to grind. They were then faced with a strong campaign—we have seen a manifestation of its strength this morning—from north-west Members of Parliament and trade unionists. It was perfectly reasonable for them to campaign but, frankly, the spirit behind it was, as they say in America, the spirit of the pork barrel.

In the face of that campaign, the Department of Trade and Industry deferred the decision. Consequently, the scientific argument was lost to view and pressure was put on the Wellcome Trust to change its position. Pressure was also pushed upwards within the governmental system to No. 10 Downing street. Let me tell my hon. Friend the Member for Altrincham and Sale, West that the decision was not taken by Lord Sainsbury, excellent man though he is. It was a personal decision taken by the Prime Minister. It is deplorable that our Prime Minister was put in the position of having to take that decision, but I should like to take this opportunity of congratulating him on the strong, sensible decision that he took. It is precisely on such decisions that the quality of a Government can be judged.

The Government faced, as I said, a vigorous campaign by their own Back Benchers. All sorts of populist themes—north versus south, for example—were deployed, and they had to be countered by esoteric, scientific arguments. In that context, the Government and the Prime Minister decided to do the right thing.

Rover is in the news now. In the late 1950s—

Mr. Watts: Does the hon. Gentleman agree that the Government had little choice but to take the decision because they were blackmailed by the Wellcome Trust? Does he think it right that the Wellcome Trust should use its financial muscle to get a decision that the Government do not want to take?

Mr. Jackson: I do not regard what the Wellcome Trust did as blackmail. The Government did not have to do what it wanted them to do; they had only to find the money to replace that of the Wellcome Trust, but they chose not to do so.

Ms Southworth: Will the hon. Gentleman give way?

Mr. Jackson: No, I want to continue my speech.

The Government took a sensible, rational decision on which I congratulate them.

In the late 1950s there was an argument about the siting of a new car plant, which is now part of Rover. In the face of populist campaigning, Harold Macmillan's Government made what he cynically called in his diaries "my judgment of Solomon". As his Government was providing a subsidy, he decided that the plant should be in two different places. That is one of the many reasons why Rover has not been effective, and both plants are probably now closed. Macmillan's Government took a bad decision in the face of populist pressure; in the face of similar pressure, this Government have taken the right decision.

However, the Prime Minister's decision was made in an unsatisfactory way, because of the growing centralisation of Government, especially in relation to science. There used to be a basic principle of scientific autonomy, which was a reflection of the autonomy of our universities. There was a structure within which research councils were genuinely independent, which was co-ordinated by the Advisory Board for Research Councils. It was a mistake—I say "mea culpa" because I was involved in preparing the 1993 science White Paper. In 1992, the Government abolished the Advisory Board for Research Councils because it gave Ministers more power. Giving more power to Ministers to take such decisions has exposed them to more political pressure, which is not always well advised. We need a mechanism for more independence and autonomy in decision taking about science through a structure such as the ABRC and the research councils.

However, there is a ray of light: the emergence in Britain of the Wellcome Trust, the largest scientific charity in the world. It is genuinely independent of Government, has its own financial resources and can make an important contribution to rebalancing the process of decision taking, reinforcing the autonomy of the scientific community rather than the politicising of decisions.

It is ill advised, apart from being stupid, to blackguard the Wellcome Trust, because it is now, and will continue to be, an important partner for Government and university science, and not only in this country. We should remember that it could spend its money outside this country—the terms of its trust allow it to do so. It behoves Parliament to treat the Wellcome Trust with greater respect. It was a bad decision to leave the argument about scientific merits out of the picture; the Government have left themselves with little alternative but to say "We had to do it because Wellcome was putting a pistol to our head." That is not a good way to treat an important partner.

I hope that hon. Members from the north-west will now give up their attack on the Wellcome Trust. It has behaved honourably and reasonably, according to the terms of its trust, which were explained to us in the Science and Technology Committee by the director, Dr. Dexter. It is concerned with science and not with regional policy.

I congratulate the Wellcome trustees on taking a clear view of the scientific balance of argument for this country and on standing firm in the face of an unpleasant and personal campaign of abuse. I should like in particular to congratulate Dr. Dexter, the director of the Wellcome Trust, on his firmness and courage on this matter. Now that the Government have stripped out the autonomy of the scientific community in this country, it is just as well that the Wellcome Trust is around to keep the Government honest. I should like to end by congratulating it on what it has done.

10.19 pm

Mrs. Louise Ellman (Liverpool, Riverside): I too, hope that the debate will shed some light on how a decision came to be taken that is wrong for science, wrong for the country and wrong for the region. I hope that it will also accelerate efforts to restore confidence at Daresbury and throughout the north-west and among scientists across the country. I hope that it will help to ensure that the north-west is not treated in that way again.

This is an issue for science. It is an issue about the national interest. It is also an issue about the region. When the regional development agency introduced its first regional economic strategy last year, it identified the importance of establishing a strong science base. That was fundamental to developing our economy and it is one of the reasons why the decision that has been taken seems to fly in the face of common sense and of the knowledge and commitment in the region.

The strategy must build on the sad legacy left us by the previous Government, in which Government-backed research funding supports 10.5 times more jobs in the south-east than in the north-west and 71 per cent. of the budget for research is spent in the south-east. We want to change that. It must be a source of great disappointment that the change has not yet been possible.

[Mrs. Louise Ellman]

Clearly, we should establish the facts. The facts are that there was no strong scientific case for transferring synchrotron investment from Daresbury to Oxfordshire in the south-east. A recent survey showed that 80 per cent. of users of Daresbury wanted the work to stay there. Furthermore, it has been shown that it would have been cost-effective to stay there. A detailed research study by PricewaterhouseCoopers showed that it was cost-effective to stay in Daresbury and that moving to Oxfordshire would incur more costs and make the project more vulnerable to skills shortages. Professor Woolfson, who chaired the committee on the new synchrotron, confirmed that a dreadful mistake had been made in the decision to move from Cheshire to Oxfordshire.

One of the grave concerns highlighted is the lack of consideration given to the regional impact. The impact is on jobs, on scientific expertise and on the joint work currently carried out by the laboratory with hospitals, research institutions and businesses throughout the north-west. The important issue of cancer research has been highlighted; great steps are being taken to make new discoveries and to improve our work on cancer research. It would be criminal if that work were to be stopped. Important industrial research is also being carried out, particularly through the centre for surface science at Liverpool university. That university was the first in the country to operate a beam line directly with synchrotron research. That research is now vulnerable, partly because the people leading the team are being sought by other research institutions, abroad as well as in this country.

The question of the Wellcome Trust deserves examination. We need much more clarity about its role in the decision. We need to know not only what it said—although it is difficult to find out what it said to the Government—but what role it played. If outside partners are to fund scientific and other research we need to establish what their role is, what points they are making and what interests they represent.

This is a sad debate, which should not have been necessary, but it is on a matter of grave importance to science and confidence. It is also important in ensuring that the national interest is served by developing all the regions and considering matters such as the Daresbury laboratory, which is a centre of scientific excellence. We should recognise that the national interest is served by developing centres of excellence, not running them down.

I hope that the concerns expressed and the evidence adduced will ensure that greater attention is paid to the need to preserve scientific excellence and the scientific knowledge base in the north-west. I also hope that the working party that has been set up with the North West regional development agency and the Department of Trade and Industry, with the support of Members of Parliament, will quickly identify additional projects and bring new research into the north-west. It is essential that progress be made quickly. We need to boost confidence, to show those who work at the sharp end in the north-west that their skills are valued and to recognise that the needs of the people in the region and the country can be served only if we develop excellence wherever it is found.

10.26 am

Mr. Andrew Stunell (Hazel Grove): I support what has been said by the hon. Members for Altrincham and Sale, West (Mr. Brady) and for Warrington, South (Ms Southworth). Although there might be differences in tone, the sense of shock—almost grief—about the loss of the Daresbury facility has spread across the parties and is powerfully felt in the north-west. That loss has not produced a synthetic row; it has hit the foundations of confidence in the future development and growth of the north-west. Although I understand the remarks of the hon. Member for Wantage (Mr. Jackson) and the interests that he represents, I hope that he will not underestimate the genuine and sincere anger and bitterness that the decision has produced.

In 1967, I started work with the then Runcorn development corporation. Daresbury is on the fringe of that area. That was the first time that I encountered the facility. In 1981, I was elected to Cheshire county council, and Daresbury was then in that county. I served on that council with the hon. Member for Halton (Mr. Twigg), who is here today. It is fair to say that Daresbury has always been a symbol of technological and scientific excellence in that area. Now that I represent Hazel Grove, some 25 miles away, I still feel a sense of identification with the work done at the facility. Some of my constituents work there and have corresponded with me.

Perhaps the hon. Member for Warrington, South was a mite ungenerous in the way in which she considered the all-party support for the project. I have corresponded with Ministers and have copied that correspondence to the chief executive of Halton council. I have made it clear that I fully support the location of the Diamond project at Daresbury, as hon. Members from all parties have done during the past year or so.

The synchrotron was sited at Daresbury for geological reasons—the site had unusually horizontal strata—but the current synchrotron is not horizontal but vertical, and its characteristic tower can be seen from many places in the area. It is sad that, after two generations of excellence, the third generation of possible excellence will be taken away from Daresbury and the north-west and located in the constituency of the hon. Member for Wantage.

Mr. Robert Jackson: I was the Minister who decided to locate the second generation synchrotron at Daresbury. It had nothing to do with my constituency; the issue was the scientific advantage.

Mr. Stunell: Perhaps it will mollify north-west Members somewhat to know that, even if the hon. Gentleman is now the apostle of darkness, there was a time when he was the apostle of light. It is a pity that the conversion happened that way round.

I should like the Government to reverse the decision, although I called it irreversible in business questions last week. If Labour Members could persuade the Government to reverse it, I would be delighted. We should concentrate this morning on what to do next as on how on earth we got to where we are now. The decision is difficult to understand from the north-west perspective. Despite what the hon. Member for Wantage said about the project and his theory about scientific centres of excellence, it is difficult for us in the north-west to accept the decision, bearing in mind the site and the dedicated work force in an acknowledged area of excellence with academic links that have been properly described as international. Whether one flies from Tokyo to Daresbury or from Tokyo to Oxford is irrelevant. Indeed, Daresbury is nearer to Manchester airport than Oxford is to Heathrow. Some of the arguments are difficult to comprehend and display ex post facto reasoning by those who support the change.

It is especially difficult to see how a Labour Government could have made such a decision. When necessary, I am a critic of the Government, but I should have thought that they took regional policy seriously. The decision to change the site would have been more explicable if the hon. Member for Wantage were still the science Minister. He has made it clear that, had he still been in that post, he would have made the same decision. I would have expected better from a Labour Government with a commitment to regional policy and to doing something about the north-south divide. Perhaps I should not have been so optimistic.

I turn now to what we may call the Wantage argument, which is that it would be a good idea to have one major scientific centre of excellence. Presumably, that means one centre in the United Kingdom, not in the European Union or the world; the argument does not have any boundaries when a process of centralisation has been started. On the one hand, the hon. Gentleman argued that it would be good to have such a centre in Wantage, while on the other he argued that he did not want political centralisation of decision making about science and that that had been a mistake and a process in which he regretted participating. There is a dichotomy between the idea of decentralised decision making at the political level and centralised outcomes at the scientific level.

What does the north-west do next, given that we have lost £500 million of investment potential as a result of the decision? We will have not the high-tech capital investment that was expected but a highly skilled research and technology work force with time on their hands. I hope that the Minister will tell us what will happen in the future and not only talk about how the Government reached their decision, although that would be of interest. What alternatives do the Government propose for the north-west? What will be the replacement structure for maintaining our research and technology lead in the north-west? How do the Government propose to fill the gap and how will they compensate the north-west and mitigate the blow?

I have listened to many ministerial responses in debates such as this. It is possible to produce warm words, to soften the blow and to sound full of consideration and compassion, but what we need is a clear, positive programme of action and investment. That is what I want to hear from the Government.

The Daresbury facility has done long and valiant service, and is still providing good service—its current projects were mentioned earlier. The synchrotron project may have been lost, but it is now vital for the Minister to explain how the north-west will keep its research and technological lead in the next decade and the decades beyond.

10.35 am

Mrs. Angela Browning (Tiverton and Honiton): Unlike hon. Members who have spoken so far, I clearly do not have a constituency or regional case to make. My purpose is to identify how Government decisions are made; the process that was examined to enable the Government to reach their decision; and, on a wider front, how those considerations may influence the Government's thinking and policy making in terms of scientific clusters around the country.

My reading of what has happened is that the Government are starting to make decisions about clusters. I am not necessarily challenging that, but if it is to be subject to input from a range of people—not only politicians—it is important that the Government spell out the policy on which they now seem to be embarking. The hon. Member for Warrington, South (Ms Southworth) asked me what my decision would have been and whether I think that the right location has been chosen. A decision about that can be made only by those who have analysed all the evidence and heard all the representations before making a judgment.

As a former Minister, I am well aware that when such a judgment is made, not everyone will be pleased. At the very least, it should be possible to account for the way in which the decision was reached. That is lacking in the decision that was made in this context, not least because in the run-up to the announcement—we have heard that it was somewhat convoluted—every public pronouncement by the Secretary of State and others, particularly when he gave evidence to the Science and Technology Committee, suggested that he was "minded" to locate the project at Daresbury. The decision was suddenly reversed—apparently by the Prime Minister. I challenge not the outcome but the lack of transparency that would enable others to look at how the process was carried out and determine whether it was the right decision.

Mr. Ian Stewart: Does that mean that Conservative Front Benchers have no view about regional policy or about where the Synchrotron should be?

Mrs. Browning: The hon. Gentleman is confusing the issue. I hope that the Minister will throw some light on the matter. If such decisions are to be made, are they to be made in future on the basis of regional policy and the regional importance to the significant scientific community in the north-west, or are the Government now embarking on a policy of scientific clustering in different locations? It is important that the House knows that. I will come in a moment to a quotation from Lord Sainsbury's press release that indicates that he has already a view of what the dynamics of scientific research and work in the north-west should be. It is important that that decision is shared with the House and others outside it.

Mr. Stewart: No answer.

Mrs. Browning: North-west Labour Members are upset because they have spent three years prefacing everything that they have said with, "May I congratulate my hon. Friend?" Now they find themselves saying, "May I criticise my hon. Friend?" I see that they have a problem.

[Mrs. Browning]

It is strategically important for the scientific community to know whether the decison will drive decisions made by the future Government on science. I think that the Government are now determining where scientific clusters will be located. If they are, they must share that information with the House so that we can examine the way in which they form their judgments and the overall strategic plan for not only Daresbury or the north-west, but the United Kingdom.

There has been a lot of confusion. My hon. Friend the Member for Altrincham and Sale, West (Mr. Brady) has done well to bring the matter to the attention of the Chamber. The reason why Rutherford Appleton emerged as a possible site is not clear. The Wellcome Trust released a statement on 24 November suggesting a preference for Rutherford Appleton, but Nature reported in November that it did not have a preference. The Secretary of State appeared to firm up his view that Daresbury should be chosen in his many comments to the Select Committee on Science and Technology. He said:

> This was always going to be a decision (in terms of the location) that was going to be taken by the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry.

The fact that the matter has been taken out of his hands and No. 10 has made the decision is of concern not only on this issue, but to future decision making.

I hope that the Minister will give us a substantive reply to the point to which I keep returning: are the Government starting to determine where scientific clusters will be located in the United Kingdom? The Secretary of State told the Select Committee:

> One of the reasons why I indicated in my letter of 1 November that I thought Daresbury was the preferred site was that there was expertise that already existed in relation to the synchrotron at Daresbury and there must be a risk of disruption and of losing people if there is a decision to locate somewhere else.

On scientific grounds as well as on regional ones that I know are important to hon. Members in this Chamber, the Secretary of State seemed to have been persuaded that that would be the decision. However, Lord Sainsbury of Turville outlined his decision in a press release on 13 March. As the hon. Member for Hazel Grove (Mr. Stunell) suggested, Lord Sainsbury referred to additional money that he would put into the north-west as a sort of compensation, stating:

> I have asked Dr Bruce Smith to chair a team to review the options for capitalising on the strengths of the science base in the North West, for example in the biomedical sciences, looking at how we might exploit Manchester's "health corridor", and Daresbury's strength in instrumentation.

That is all well and good, but do the Government intend, from the centre, to determine the location of scientific clusters? Are they looking for where organic growth in certain disciplines occurs, and will they therefore relate future decision making and policy around the clusters, however small? I believe that many people would like an explanation about that. It is not sufficient to toss a bit of money somewhere as a short compensation policy. If the Government intend to establish scientific clusters around the country, they must have an overall national strategy; an ad hoc, regional approach is not good and will not serve the purpose.

We would welcome a much broader debate on the subject, so that we can uncover why the case was taken from the Department of Trade and Industry and the decision made in Downing street, and on the Government's policy—I hope that there is a policy, because it would be outrageous to make such decisions without an overall strategic view—on clustering and the promotion of specialisms throughout the UK.

10.45 am

The Minister for Competitiveness (Mr. Alan Johnson): I congratulate the hon. Member for Altrincham and Sale, West (Mr. Brady). It is evident from the speech of the hon. Member for Tiverton and Honiton (Mrs. Browning) that the Conservatives wish to engage in one of their favourite sports: running with the hare and hunting with the hounds. I am sure that she will accept that the energy and drive in the campaign for Daresbury came from Labour Members, particularly my hon. Friend the Member for Weaver Vale (Mr. Hall), who for obvious reasons has had to work behind the scenes, and has done so tirelessly. It is important to recognise the work done by my hon. Friends in the north-west on the issue.

Mr. Brady: I pointed that out myself. It is important that we recognise that hon. Members from all parties in the north-west share that point of view. There are strong feelings about the issue in the north-west and all hon. Members who sought to put the case should get the credit.

Mr. Johnson: The fact that my noble Friend Lord Sainsbury is not replying to the debate was remarked on; around 400 years of constitutional history would crumble if a Member of the other place even attempted to walk into Westminster Hall.

The siting of the new synchrotron has been a topic of enormous interest and concern over the past few weeks. The debate has enabled some issues to be fully aired. While I appreciate the huge disappointment of hon. Members in the north-west, it is important to stress that the decision to build a new synchrotron in the UK is good news for the future of British science. It is a major long-term investment in our infrastructure, costing approximately £200 million in capital and £500 million in total over the next 25 years. It represents the largest single investment in science for more than a decade. The regional issues are of course a subject of great debate and tension, but the issue is a national one and it is good news for the UK.

Our aim is to build the best possible facility for synchrotron users and create an environment in which we can stay at the forefront of global research in important scientific fields, such as our increasing knowledge of the human genome—the building block of all life—biotechnology, development of new drugs, new plastics, textiles and electronic materials. The partnership that we have secured with the French and the Wellcome Trust is the best way of achieving a facility that has the leading-edge capability that current and future synchrotron users will demand. By working together, we can build a larger and more specified machine than we could afford by ourselves. We also bring in the technical expertise of our partners to help to design and develop the best possible machines.

Dr. Lynne Jones (Birmingham, Selly Oak): Will my hon. Friend give way?

Mr. Johnson: I will if I get time at the end, as long as I have answered all the important points raised in the debate.

This is the first time that the UK has hosted such a collaborative international scientific facility. The French Government have shown great commitment to the project, cancelling plans for their own third generation synchrotron, Soleil, in order to join us. No evidence suggests that those plans have changed. Indeed, the French Goverenment will meet the other partners next week. Officials have assured us that the change in the French Government has not affected the project.

The factors involved in choosing the site made the decision difficult. We are fortunate in the United Kingdom in that we have two locations, Daresbury and Rutherford Appleton laboratory, which both offered viable sites for the new synchrotron. Indeed, the Select Committee on Science and Technology concluded that it had no preference for either site and that both sites were equally acceptable. We therefore faced a dilemma. The decision might not have taken so long had the competition from both sites been less than equal. It has been a difficult decision. The key criterion in selecting the site was what would be best for UK science, bearing in mind the fact that the facility is designed to last for the next generation—at least 25 years. In addition, the project is a partnership, which, like all partnerships, involves negotiation and compromise. Although we had to take into account our partners' views, they are by no means the only reason why we reached that conclusion.

Mrs. Ann Winterton (Congleton): Will the Minister give way?

Mr. Johnson: I am sorry, but I do not have time.

We consulted users three times in the past 15 months, as it is they who will ultimately carry out research on the machine. They concluded that they require a world-class machine for a wide range of structural science research in the UK. Although they want a high-quality machine, ultimately the focus must be on the quality of science that the machine enables.

Demand was expressed for a strong science culture on the site and an environment in which researchers from different scientific disciplines could work closely together. On the basis of our officials' advice, the Government decided that that can best be achieved at Rutherford Appleton laboratory, which already has other major facilities using, for example, neutrons, lasers and nuclear magnetic resonance. In addition, we need to continue to invest in support technologies using, for example, low temperatures, vacuum technology and high magnetic fields, which can be shared among the different facilities on the site.

Co-location at Rutherford Appleton laboratory will prevent duplication of activity and encourage more efficient use of funds. Both our partners favoured the Rutherford Appleton site, and as part of a partnership we had to take their views into account. The hon. Member for Altrincham and Sale, West mentioned a comment made on Radio 4 by an attaché at the French embassy that was entirely refuted a few days later in a letter to The Guardian from the French ambassador. Our French partners expressed a clear preference for Rutherford Appleton.

The Government's final decision was based on a wide range of information provided by consultants and synchrotron users. The official Opposition have criticised the Government and in particular my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State, who would plead guilty to the charge of carefully considering and analysing Daresbury's bid. He considered many other factors in addition to the scientific case before reaching his decision. It is right and proper for him to have undertaken such thorough analysis.

We held three consultations with synchrotron users, in January, May and December 1999. The final review was held at the request of my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State. The Office of Science and Technology contracted ADD Consultants in June 1999 to carry out an investment appraisal of options for the site of the proposed new synchrotron radiation facility. ADD Consultants is an independent company that provides technical consultancy and training services.

The Office of Science and Technology contracted Allott and Lomax to carry out the survey of both the Daresbury and Rutherford Appleton sites in December 1999. Allott and Lomax is an independent engineering consultancy based in Manchester. The Wellcome Trust employed its own firm of consulting engineers to survey both sites.

The studies showed that both sites could accommodate the new synchrotron physically and would obtain planning permission. The financial appraisal showed that Rutherford Appleton was marginally favourable. The consultation with users about the location issues showed that physicists using synchrotrons believed that there were advantages in locating the new one alongside the Isis neutron source.

Mrs. Browning: In the Science and Technology Committee, the Secretary of State said:

> in the survey that we conducted before Christmas what was particularly interesting was that the life scientists, who are the ones who are likely to use the new synchrotron perhaps more than the physical scientists, did not feel strongly about its location alongside ISIS at all.

Why did he change his view?

Mr. Johnson: In a process of analysis and in carrying out the consultation that he commissioned in December, my right hon. Friend obviously had due regard to all the evidence. We went back over several consultation periods precisely because of what the hon. Lady has mentioned. However, while both Daresbury and Rutherford Appleton laboratories offered excellent sites, Rutherford Appleton was preferred for four key reasons. They were: first, the potential for operational, technical and scientific synergy between the new synchrotron and the other facilities on the site—especially Isis; secondly, the potential to produce a world-class international research centre, drawing together a range of scientific and engineering disciplines; thirdly, the sharing of many technical functions, such as accelerated design, magnets, pulse powers and support functions including security, safety and administration; and finally, its proximity to the biosciences expertise at Oxford university, the medical research council units, including the mouse genome centre on the adjacent Harwell site, and the national nuclear magnetic resonance centre. The basis for the decision was nothing but what would be best for British science. It was a difficult decision, but the Government believe it was correct, and it is, as was said in the debate, irreversible.

[Mr. Johnson]

Many hon. Members raised questions about the future of Daresbury laboratory and the north-west, whose staff made a crucial contribution to the existing UK synchrotron source, the SRS. The design, construction and commissioning of the new synchrotron project will take about six years to complete. The current synchrotron source at Daresbury will continue to operate during and beyond that period, giving, as my hon. Friend the Member for Warrington, South (Ms Southworth) said, a period of light rather than dark. United Kingdom users will thus have continuous access to X-rays and instrumentation. The research councils are currently investing £5 million in new beam lines, so that service will be maintained at the highest level during that period. It is therefore anticipated that most of the current staff will remain employed at the Daresbury laboratory to support its effective operation. We also plan to use the expertise at Daresbury in many aspects of the new synchrotron project and so will take full advantage of the knowledge and skills built up there over many years. The very important work on breast cancer mentioned by my hon. Friend the Member for Warrington, South is one reason for our belief that Daresbury has a viable future.

We shall not rush into decisions on Daresbury's longer-term future. It will be one of the topics considered in the review of the north-west science base announced by my noble Friend Lord Sainsbury on 13 March and due to report by the end of September. The first meeting was held yesterday. The review will consider how best to capitalise on the skilled people and assets of Daresbury and will also consult the Council for the Central Laboratory of the Research Councils.

The strengths of the north-west are built on its chemical, pharmaceutical, aerospace and nuclear industries, which deliver 18 per cent. of UK manufacturing output. The Government will contribute £25 million to the work of the task force and will look to strengthen further the science base in the north-west by contributing to the funding of a feasibility study to consider the potential for a biotechnology core technology facility worth up to £25 million—a further £25 million for the north-west. The Government are extremely concerned about the impact on Daresbury and the north-west and—

Mr. Eddie O'Hara (in the Chair): Order. We must proceed to the next debate.

Bank Branch Closures

11 am

Mr. Bob Blizzard (Waveney): I am grateful for the opportunity to debate an issue that is of great concern throughout the country, for reasons that are not difficult to see. During the past 10 years, more than 4,000 bank branches have closed, and it is predicted that another 4,000 will close in the next five years if the banks do not change their approach. We are heading fast towards 172 BC—Barclays closure day, on 7 April, when it plans to axe 172 branches at a stroke.

Two of those branches are in my constituency. Regarding the one at Oulton Broad, I have advised my constituents to take the advice given by my hon. Friend the Minister a couple of weeks ago and vote with their feet, because there are still a couple of other banks in that community. In the case of the second proposed closure, in the Kirkley area of south Lowestoft, my constituents are unable to follow that advice because Barclays is the last bank in south Lowestoft. I should add that Lowestoft, a town with a population of 65,000, is cut in two by a river and joined only by a lift-up bridge, so it has two distinct communities, but Barclays has not recognised that because it does not consider such matters of detail in any community.

That part of Lowestoft is a single regeneration budget area, and the Government and other public bodies are contributing £20 million of public money, together with much hard work on the ground, to regenerate the area. By definition, a single regeneration budget area has a high proportion of vulnerable people, including elderly people. In addition, it has high unemployment, poverty and poor health. However, the area is also a commercial area. Many small shops line the A12 as it runs into Lowestoft, and there are plenty of other small businesses. Those shops are struggling, but they are hanging on because their proprietors believe in the regeneration process and can see signs of progress in their community, three years into a seven-year programme, the object of which is to create jobs, impove housing conditions and enhance the built environment.

Barclays is walking away and abandoning the area, as it is abandoning other parts of the country. It is saying, in effect, that it does not believe that regeneration will work, or that it does not care whether it works. Its decision to move out of the area will undermine confidence in the regeneration process and in that part of Lowestoft. Its departure will also present practical difficulties for small businesses. It will require shopkeepers, who often work on their own, to travel further to do their banking, and to take a higher security risk or incur extra costs in delivering their takings to the bank.

I said that Barclays was walking away, but it would be more accurate to say that it is running away, because it has given its loyal customers only a few weeks' notice that it is closing their bank. That is a kick in the teeth for those customers and the community in which the bank is situated. Barclays is leaving elderly and disabled people to fend for themselves. What thought does Barclays have for Mr. Philip Baldry of Southwell road, Lowestoft? Mr. Baldry is blind and his dog is specially trained to guide him to that bank. What does Mr. Baldry do now?

The reaction of the community is strong. People are appalled by Barclays' actions. The local paper, the Lowestoft Journal, has run a campaign, the like of which I have never seen before. In an unprecedented move, the editor put his own letter on the front page. Mr. Ernie Skepelhorn, who lives in the area, has organised a petition, which must be the easiest one ever compiled because people are queueing up to sign it.

Like other hon. Members, I received a letter from Barclays Group public affairs. It began by explaining that it had decided what to do. There was no question of consultation. How would Barclays react if the Government conducted their business in that way? It would want to be consulted.

I asked a Barclays manager to come to Lowestoft. When he arrived, I asked what criteria were used for closing branches. It was clear that they were national, narrow and financial. I asked whether a local appraisal had been made of branches. He said yes, but did not have the details with him. It was obvious that the decisions were taken simply on the basis of maps and head office statistics; they show a narrow focus and a centralised approach. The manager said that an automatic telling machine might be provided—which, of course, would come with the charges that Barclays would like to impose—or that people could use a supermarket or Marks and Spencer, which does not exist in the area. He refused to talk to the media or local people. I had to cajole him even to receive the petition. But now I know why, and I know that Barclays is guilty of a cynical disregard of its customers.

When the manager left, I saw a pile of documents in my car that belonged to him. I could not resist looking at them.

Mr. Keith Simpson (Mid-Norfolk): Must be a trainee Whip.

Mr. Blizzard: This is not a laughing matter.

I found a closure kit on a project called Closure 2000. It included an inaccurate local briefing document, which said that my area had just received objective 2 European funding for a future programme. There was no mention of the SRB programme, which has been under way for two or three years. The briefing told the manager that > Bob Blizzard MP is likely to argue that he and the local council [please note—Mr. Blizzard is leader of the local council].

I know that one or two hon. Members retain their seats on councils, but I do not know of one who is the leader of a council. I gave that up in 1997 when I entered the House of Commons. Is that the quality of information on which Barclays bases such decisions? The briefing document did, however, admit that branch closure sends out a negative message about the economic viability of an area. That is my case.

The papers included a branch closure staff guidance pack. It contained some gems. It told staff:

> We strongly recommend that you role play some of the more difficult questions with your colleagues before using them in a live situation . . . Where it is perceived that hotspots are developing the ARM should advise Head Office at the earliest possible stage.

Well, Lowestoft is certainly a hotspot, and I bet that it is not the only one.

The document described strategies for staff to dissuade customers from complaining to their Member of Parliament or starting a petition. They have not been very successful. It said:

> If a customer says that they are going to contact the local media—do not make any comment.

The guidance pack posed questions, including

> Is there a possibility of the branch remaining open?

to which the answer was "No." There was, however, a chink of light because it said:

> This decision is unlikely to be changed.

I stress the word "unlikely". To the question,

> Why weren't we consulted?

staff were to respond:

> This is a business decision.

My visitor from Barclays said that he would pass on my message, but closure was not his decision. I meet more Barclays executives on Monday, but not the man who will take the decision on closure. I shall ask them to work with the Government in the regeneration process. If the SRB works, there will be increased business for the branch. Shops will thrive and there will be more small businesses, tourists and employed local people. I shall ask Barclays to put the regeneration programme to the test. It should grant a stay of execution and give the SRB a chance. It should sit down and discuss with the Government how a bank can be retained in this fragile regeneration and rebuilding process, to avoid damaging confidence.

There should be a breathing space for other solutions to be examined. How about a shared bank? Different utility companies seem able to share the same pipe or cable these days, so why cannot the banks share? Currently, they cannot share even an automatic telling machine without charging each other's customers. Am I asking too much of the banks in requesting that they take a wider view of social responsibility and consider branches in the context of local communities? It is not as though banks such as Barclays cannot afford to do so. Two weeks ago, Don Cruickshank told us that the banks are making excess profits of about £5 billion a year, and Barclays is part of that.

Barclays is currently running an advertising campaign and is spending millions of pounds on television. One cannot open a daily newspaper without seeing a huge advertisement. I am told that a double page in The Times costs £80,000 a go. The advertisement tells us how big the company is, and yet it is downsizing its branch network. We are also told that it is undertaking the biggest educational sponsorship scheme in the United Kingdom, which illustrates its support for communities. In light of what is actually being done to communities, that is a public relations stunt. Real community support would consist of keeping branches such as that in south Lowestoft open. That is support that counts.

For too long, the banks in this country have had a culture that is not customer focused. Do hon. Members remember the battle to get banks to open on Saturday mornings? Do they remember when banks used to close at 3 o'clock in the afternoon? The current circumstances are no better and, as very few large banks remain, they have unreasonable power in the market.

The banks say that the current network of branches is not viable, but comparisons with mainland Europe produce some very interesting numbers. I am told that there are 170 branches per million people in this country. If building societies are included, there are 260 branches per million people. However, there are 400 branches per million people in Italy, 600 branches per million people in Germany and 900 branches per million people in Spain.

[Mr. Blizzard]

I was pleased last week when the Chancellor signalled his intention to use the Don Cruickshank report. He invited the Post Office and the banks to work together to offer basic banking services to all. I ask my hon. Friend the Minister to challenge Barclays and other banks to reconsider closures in regeneration areas. SRB is a specific and definable criterion, and I dare say that other hon. Members will find other criteria. Will my hon. Friend join me in asking Barclays to halt the immediate closure of such branches? Will he insist that it meets representatives of the Department of the Environment, Transport and the Regions to discuss the impact of local branches in regeneration processes and how to avoid the damaging of confidence and the imposition of further burdens on small businesses? Those results would definitely follow if the local branches closed.

I am making a practical suggestion. Regeneration is about tackling serious problems and is a vital process in which the giant banks should play a serious and responsible part. At a time when we know that the banks are making excess profits, we must not let them get away with such damaging closures. If they will not co-operate, we will have to consider measures such as regulation or a windfall tax. That might focus their outlook and make them ask whether they are big enough to change their minds.

11.13 am

Mrs. Gillian Shephard (South-West Norfolk): We are all indebted to the hon. Member for Waveney (Mr. Blizzard) for bringing forward this matter for debate. I pay tribute to him for the way in which he presented his case and congratulate him on having secured the debate. All hon. Members will be happy to use the disclosures from the back seat of his car that he has revealed to us. His arguments apply not only to parts of East Anglia that are covered by regeneration programmes but to those that are not. The debate gives East Anglian Members the chance to express some of the outrage felt locally about Barclays bank branch closures. In my constituency, where the East Harling and Feltwell branches are to close, the issue is regarded as one more nail in the coffin of rural life. People in rural areas feel that they are becoming among the most disadvantaged in society.

Despite the handy role-play advice that the hon. Member for Waveney disclosed was given to Barclays bank employees, the bank must have been taken by surprise by the fury and intensity of the local reaction. There was a sit-in at Terrington St. Clement, which is in the constituency of the hon. Member for North-West Norfolk (Dr. Turner). Uniquely, it was organised by people over the age of 70. Cheese sandwiches were provided through the bank's letter-box. It lasted five hours and was lovingly chronicled in our local media, including the Eastern Daily Press. Afterwards, bank employees had to have time off for the stress imposed on them by the 70-year-old participants. That must have been one of the "hotspots" referred to by the hon. Member for Waveney in his excellent speech.

We have seen an array of banners at Brundall, which I believe is in the constituency of my hon. Friend the Member for Mid-Norfolk (Mr. Simpson). We have seen pickets in Lincolnshire. In my constituency, we have had much protest, furious letters and complaints about the way in which Barclays has announced its proposals for the branches.

It should be remembered that, as my hon. Friend the Member for Mid-Norfolk and the hon. Member for Waveney will know, Barclays is a bank that has generations, and, indeed, centuries of connections with East Anglia and, in particular, with Norfolk. For many Norfolk people, Barclays is their bank, certainly for those above a certain age.

My constituent, Mr. Dudley Stammers of East Harling, has banked with Barclays at the branch in East Harling, as did his father, his grandfather and his great-grandfather through the generations. The only information that he was given was a leaflet stuffed into his hand as he left the bank a couple of weeks ago. I am extremely surprised that bank employees have apparently been given advice on handling the situation. All that one might say is that it was not extremely successful.

We all know that banks are commercial organisations and that, increasingly, people will use cashpoint machines. Interestingly, this week the banks changed their mind regarding charges for the use of the machines. We know that, increasingly, people will use telephone banking and the internet. However, for many, those are not an option. For people running small local businesses grouped around isolated rural communities, there is no time to travel to lodge cash with a bank some distance away. With falling numbers of police, there are also understandable security fears when people must take large sums back and forth in their car.

Parents at home with their children might like the opportunity to go to a bank in a nearby town but do not have the time. People at work and, especially, the elderly do not have the opportunity to bank elsewhere. Increasingly, those for whom the price of petrol—it is now £4 a gallon—has become an intolerable burden must think once, twice or three times before they get in the car to go to the nearest market town to do their banking.

As I said, the role of Barclays bank in Norfolk has always been pretty special. As the hon. Member for Waveney pointed out, the bank would still like the public to believe that it provides a special service and that it wishes to lavish care on its customers. We know also, from Barclays' annual report, that this year £200 million in bonuses has been paid to top executives.

It is interesting to note that Barclays can spend large sums to persuade the public of its enthusiasm for local businesses and to demonstrate the role of banking in regenerating communities or keeping them going, yet still pull the rug from under them. It must be obvious that an active bank branch brings business to a community, even a small one, because people who use the bank will spend money and undertake other business in the community. The closure of a branch pulls the plug on the economic activities of an area.

At the moment, rural people are disadvantaged. Many local post offices are under threat. People in Norfolk face council tax increases that are three times the rate of inflation. Agriculture is in its worst straits since the 1930s. Petrol now costs £4 a gallon and people in rural areas regularly face a 15-mile round trip to visit the doctor. We can do without a well known bank pulling the rug out from under us like that.

How much more heartening it would have been if the hon. Member for Waveney had been able to find in the filched material that was left in his car a clue that the bank wanted to consider other ways of providing a service. Instead, it contains a list of instructions on how to fob off concerned and genuine questions of the sort posed by the hon. Gentleman. How much better it would have been if Barclays had spent a moment considering how it might co-operate with local post offices and with other rural regeneration schemes instead of saying no when asked whether it was going to think again about closure. I believe that it should think again.

11.22 am

Mr. Martin Salter (Reading, West): I, too, congratulate my hon. Friend the Member for Waveney (Mr. Blizzard) on securing the debate and on the strident efforts that he has made on behalf of his constituents to halt the disgraceful tide of closures announced by Barclays. Other hon. Members who represent constituencies in the region have also spoken out against the closures.

It was somewhat ironic to hear the right hon. Member for South-West Norfolk (Mrs. Shephard) speak about pickets and sit-ins. Politics has indeed turned on its head if Conservative Members are found to be supporting such welcome direct action. We may have lessons to learn from one another.

The debate is timely. Only yesterday, we launched the all-party group on banking. I was pleased that my hon. Friends the Members for Waveney and for North-East Derbyshire (Mr. Barnes) and many other hon. Members from across the political spectrum were present to give their unstinting support to resisting the tide of financial exclusion that threatens to engulf many communities, not only in rural areas but in urban and small, deprived inner-city communities.

Undoubtedly, of all the major national banks, Barclays is the most unresponsive to both public and political pressure. It is clear that Barclays intends to proceed with the closure of 172 branches, despite the fact that there is almost unprecedented political activity in the House over the matter. Some 300 Members of Parliament have signed early-day motions condemning bank closures generally and Barclays' activities in particular. As I speak, there are about 20 early-day motions on the Order Paper.

The all-party parliamentary group on banking exists not to legislate but to work together to explore options and bring pressure to bear on the banking industry to try to make it more accountable and more responsive to customers' needs. The present tide of closures is taking place at a time when the banks are securing record profits. Last year alone, the United Kingdom banking industry made a net profit of £20 billion. Paradoxically, profits are going through the roof while the branch networking is systematically butchered.

Many solutions need to be explored. As my hon. Friend the Member for Waveney said, there is a prospect of banks being regulated if they do not put their house in order and show similar concern for customers as for shareholders. Perhaps the Minister will be able to hold out such a prospect when he replies. Other options have been outlined today and in other debates. If only the big four banks would agree to talk to one another. At the moment, there is a sort of race not to be the last bank left in any town or village, because it is obvious that the last bank to close will take the flak from local communities and their democratically elected representatives. If a community is not large enough in major banks' terms to sustain four branches, what would be wrong with their sharing facilities and processing one another's customers, at least leaving those communities some access to basic banking services?

Mr. Harry Barnes (North-East Derbyshire): Although the current flak is, rightly, being directed at Barclays, the other high street banks that my hon. Friend the Member for Waveney mentioned are also deeply into this game. Even after Barclay's current closure programme is completed, NatWest and Lloyds TSB will have closed still more branches since the 1990s. The campaign should be directed fully at the four major banks and the problems that they are creating generally, although one solution would be for them to get together to provide facilities in communities.

Mr. Salter: My hon. Friend makes a telling, accurate point. We are singling out Barclays for our vitriol today but it could easily be sprayed around at all the big four banks and at the United Kingdom banking sector in general. However, one bit of good news has just come to light. Following the takeover of NatWest by the Royal Bank of Scotland, the proposed closure of 250 to 300 banks has been put on hold. I understand that that decision was taken as recently as yesterday. Sixty fairly well advanced closures will go ahead but 140 to 190 branches have been reprieved. How long this will last remains to be seen.

The other purpose of the campaign is to provide not only a strong voice in Parliament for local communities that are threatened with financial exclusion but a strong voice for customers, whom the major banks singularly ignore in their relentless search for even greater, more obscene profits.

Another ray of light—at present there are only rays—is the excellent report by Don Cruickshank, the Treasury adviser, who began an inquiry into financial exclusion. Hon. Members need to study some of the report's recommendations to ensure that it does not gather dust in Treasury filing cabinets or elsewhere. I look forward to working with other hon. Members to that end.

The most likely solution, with which I hope the Minister will deal in his response, is to use the 19,000-strong post office network. It has shrunk by 1 per cent. over the past few years and we cannot turn back the clock: modernisation will take place. Automated credit transfer will have an effect on the post office network and it is pointless for Labour Back Benchers to deny it, but other options are available to strengthen the Post Office.

The Post Office is perhaps the best loved of British institutions. We need to get the banks talking to each other and to be responsive to public and political pressure. That could produce capital investment in all our major post offices and sub-post offices, which could provide at least basic banking services to our constituents who want access to their own money.

[Mr. Salter]

Ms Glenda Jackson (Hampstead and Highgate): Is it not another bitter irony in the saga of Barclays' total disregard for its customers that it engaged in an experimental project in Cornwall to establish whether post offices could take over some of the banking services denied to its customers, yet did not wait for the outcome of the experiment before engaging in what my hon. Friend the Member for Waveney discovered has been defined as Closure 2000? That provides another example of Barclays' total failure to deliver to some of their most loyal customers.

Mr. Salter: Barclays is guilty of the worst cynicism. I am sure that Cornwall was picked for the pilot project because it was furthest from the London-based media.

Credit unions have been promoted as social banks in deprived communities such as Salford, yet those experiments, worthy as they are, do not stop for a moment the advance of the savage closure programmes. We must make these pilot schemes more than regional experiments and place them at the top of the agenda. It is our role as parliamentarians not only to raise issues but to propose solutions. My hon. Friend the Member for Waveney and the right hon. Member for South-West Norfolk certainly touched on possible solutions in the offing.

Many groups are affected by bank closure, and the elderly and people on fixed incomes are the worst affected. I am pleased that Help the Aged has joined forces with the campaign for commuity banking services and the new all-party group to add its voice to the outcry against the tide of financial exclusion.

I wish to end by telling a story about my constituency to illustrate how, just once, we managed to force a major national bank to back down and listen to people, especially the elderly. Last spring, rebellion was in the air in Reading, West. It is a fairly prosperous constituency at the heart of middle England. A major national institution had incensed a wide coalition comprising small business men and women, jobbing builders, the elderly, the blind and the disabled—in fact, just about everyone who does not rely exclusively on cash machines for all their financial transactions. I am talking, of course, about Lloyds TSB—the bank that used to like to say yes.

Lloyds TSB faced a storm of protest when it announced the closure of the only bank left in the village of Theale, just outside Reading. To add insult to injury, the full automation of two further district branches and the partial automation of its central Reading branch were proposed. It was part of an ill-fated national pilot scheme to see whether bank customers were ready to deal solely with robots rather than people. My constituents' reaction was hostile, to say the least. I was proud to spearhead a campaign aimed at sinking that pilot project once and for all. I had no doubt that if Lloyds TSB got away with it in Reading, wholesale automation would have been introduced in thousands of other communities throughout the country. It was a nasty glimpse into the future.

Reading is the capital of the Thames valley, is at the cutting edge of e-commerce and is probably the last place to wish to resist progress. Yet for all the advance of internet banking and the increased use of ATMs, how on earth is a blind person supposed to use a fully automated bank? What use is a cash machine that will issue only £200 a day to a jobbing builder who needs money to pay labourers and buy materials? What about the shopkeeper who loses a day's interest on deposits? Hon. Members may be interested to learn that it takes four days for a robot to process a cheque and three days for a human being. So much for progress!

There are many elderly people in my constituency who simply do not trust putting their hard-earned savings into a hole in the wall—and why on earth should they? I like campaigning—it is one of the reaons why I am in politics—but seldom have I had as much pleasure as I have had in directing the protests and anger of my constituents at the arrogant Lloyds TSB executives who were seeking to use them as guinea pigs in their constant search for even greater profits.

At times, the big four banks seem almost oblivious to the terrible publicity that they generate for themselves by pursuing their policies of branch closure, cash machine charges and excessive profiteering, yet just this once we forced them to back down. I do not know whether it was the horror of being picketed by scores of blind and disabled people on national television. Perhaps it was having their nice little House of Commons summer reception gatecrashed by a particularly belligerent MP and his staff. Was it the threat of being exposed for breaches of the Disability Discrimination Act 1995? Whatever it was, I am pleased to report that the Lloyds TSB executives eventually caved in and cashiers were reinstated in Reading. I hope that the efforts of hon. Members and others working together will force the banks to see sense and give communities and their customers the level of attention that they currently give to their shareholders.

11.36 am

Mr. Keith Simpson (Mid-Norfolk): I warmly congratulate the hon. Member for Waveney (Mr. Blizzard) on securing this Adjournment debate. I welcome the fine contributions by my right hon. Friend the Member for South-West Norfolk (Mrs. Shephard) and the hon. Member for Reading, West (Mr. Salter). Indeed, it is strange to see so many of us who are roughly of the same generation and who have at times been on different sides. I look at the Minister: 30 years ago, we stood on different sides of a barricade. I suspect that, on this occasion, we are all on the same side.

Like other hon. Members, I wish to bring to the attention of the Chamber the deep sense of outrage in my constituency about the closure of two Barclays bank branches at Reepham and Brundall. I have had campaigns in the past: people have written to me about a wide range of issues that have upset them, such as the national health service and hunting, whether for or against, but seldom have I heard such genuine, deep anger. It has been expressed not only by the people in those two communities, but by people throughout my constituency, including those who can easily find alternative means of banking.

The protests that I have received have not been in the Luddite tradition of refusing to face up to progress. Nearly everyone recognises that it is a highly competitive world and that the banks must adapt to new technology of one kind or another. However, it seems to many people that Barclays has got it wrong. It may be taking the brunt of the blame for decisions also taken by the other banks, but in this case it has shown a degree of crass stupidity that only a political party in terminal decline can ever show. At different stages the Labour, Liberal and Conservative parties have all witnessed that.

As the hon. Member for Waveney pointed out, the debate has focused on the effect of Government regeneration policies on bank branch closures. I want to say at the outset that in Norfolk, we feel out on a limb. We feel neglected, and there is a danger that the Government's well-intentioned policies of regeneration may be seen by many people in Norfolk as policies of degeneration, which will cause things to get worse. The closure of branches by Barclays must be seen in the context of many other things that have happened to rural communities such as those in Norfolk in the past decade, and which have accelerated during the past three years.

My right hon. Friend the Member for South-West Norfolk spoke about the crisis facing farming. There is a real crisis in my constituency. One need only see the pig farmers' picket a few yards from the Room.

As hon. Members have said, we must bear in mind the closure of sub-post offices. The Government's decision in May 1999 to scrap the previous Government's Horizon project for paying benefit using swipe cards will have a major impact on post offices. Forty per cent. of rural sub-post offices' income comes from benefit payments. Many rural post offices will close as a result of that decision. As hon. Members know, in many communities the post office effectively subsidises the village shop. Between 1992 and 1997, 99 sub-post offices were closing annually. Now, 235 are closing every year. On 5 February, the Eastern Daily Press reported that more than 20 village post offices in Norfolk and Suffolk had shut in the past 12 months.

Hon. Members' worthy proposals on the alternative of combining banking facilities and sub-post offices may not be workable. So many sub-post offices may close while we are trying to achieve that, that communities such as Reepham and Brundall will end up without a bank or sub-post office.

Mrs. Shephard: Does my hon. Friend accept that there could have been a means of saving some rural post offices, had more thought been given to Barclays' operation in such matters? A partnership might have been formed that would have given post offices an additional function. That could have saved some post offices, although it is undeniable that many have closed.

Mr. Simpson: My right hon. Friend is absolutely correct. Once again, we confront the worst kind of short-termism.

Mr. Blizzard: Does the hon. Gentleman agree that if postmasters, newspapers and pensioner groups keep saying that post offices are going to close, that will undermine confidence in post offices and cause some customers to abandon them in favour of a bank? Should we not encourage people to use post offices to stop them closing?

Mr. Simpson; I fully endorse what the hon. Gentleman says. Unfortunately, however, more and more sub-post offices in my constituency are closing. Indeed, this Friday I am attending a meeting about one that is under threat.

As my right hon. Friend the Member for South-West Norfolk said, Barclays' decision has provoked outrage in Norfolk. My constituents in Reepham and Brundall have contacted me by letter and telephone. They are extremely angry that the decision will be implemented—as the hon. Member for Waveney said—on 7 April, whatever anyone says. Barclays is in, "I hear what you say" mode, which is a polite way of saying, "I don't give a damn what you say."

Consultation has been lacking and there is genuine fury that the announcement has, unfortunately for Barclays, come at a time when the bank's profits have increased by 30 per cent. to £2.5 million. As my right hon. Friend the Member for South-West Norfolk said, the directors have had a small windfall. A massive new advertising campaign with a famous British actor appearing—presumably for a large fee—to say how well Barclays is doing rubs salt into the wound. Another bank claimed that it was a listening bank. At least Barclays has spared us that; if it took such a line, it would be lynched.

What will the closures of the branches of Barclays in Reepham and Brundall mean to those communities? I live in Reepham, a market town of about 4,000 inhabitants which is used by many in surrounding villages. Individual customers and local family businesses bank there. The nearest Barclays bank is 8 miles away in Aylsham, constituting a round trip of 16 miles. So there is an immediate impact on many individuals. Mrs. Joyce Cox, secretary of the Reepham Patient Care Fund, told me that she wrote to Barclays' branch manager in Aylsham saying that the fund would have to use its small coach to bring disabled customers to it. She wondered whether Barclays would make a small contribution to the cost of the extra petrol. In reply, she received a letter saying, effectively, "I hear what you say."

Brian Robertson, our local butcher, has said that the closure will affect the way in which local businesses bank their cash, not only because of the disruption caused by taking money to another bank but because, as my right hon. Friend the Member for South-West Norfolk said, they feel insecure and are worried about increasing instances of robbery and muggings.

The impact on Brundall, a large village to the east of Norwich on the River Wensum, will be similar but with a particular degradation of tourism. The bank offers a service for holidaymakers, and local people, such as David Green and Kiki Angelbath, fear that the closure will have a detrimental effect. The combination of bank branch closures and the threat to sub-post offices—a point made by George Johnson in Reepham—will produce degeneration, not regeneration, in rural communities.

I want to emphasise a point made by my right hon. Friend the Member for South-West Norfolk. It is indeed a deep irony that Barclays bank has a direct Norfolk connection, with the families of the Barclays, the Gurneys and the Buxtons. They were 18th-century Quakers who went into banking not only for commercial reasons and to make a profit, but to provide a service for the farming community, based on deep Christian beliefs. They had a commitment to social welfare.

[Mr. Simpson]

The plea of my constituents in Reepham and Brundall, expressed by the vicar of Reepham, the Rev. Michael Patison, is not that Barclays should be an extension of the welfare state, but that it should reconsider its decision to close its branches in Reepham and Brundall and in other constituencies. The banks should consider the strong cross-party feeling shown in this debate and realise that it may affect the future of banking and the legislation that may be introduced.

11.46 am

Ms Glenda Jackson (Hampstead and Highgate): I, too, thank my hon. Friend the Member for Waveney (Mr. Blizzard) for securing this Adjournment debate. As in the previous, shorter Adjournment debate on this subject, every hon. Member who has spoken has adduced a litany of experience on the serious impact that the proposed closure of bank branches by Barclays will have on our constituents.

Mine is not a rural constituency, but the proposed closure of the Hampstead Heath branch of Barclays will have a serious impact on an area where people have prided themselves on managing to maintain a strong sense of community and have worked extremely hard to maintain the village atmosphere. We have many small shops that are entirely dependent on Barclays; it is the only bank in that part of my constituency.

Although the Hampstead Heath branch may not seem a million miles away from the branch in Hampstead village, the latter is at the top of an extremely steep hill. Although the distance is not far, some of those Barclays customers who will be most strongly, even doubly, affected find it extremely difficult to reach. They have been Barclays customers all their life and have shown their loyalty. They are now pensioners, and the bank that they have entrusted with their savings, which they believed would deliver a high-quality service, is now betraying them. I do not think that that choice of word is too extreme.

The proposed closure will also impact strongly on all the small businesses in the area, because they are largely based on cash transactions. Barclays argues that going on-line will solve their problems and that, in future, the technology will be such that hole-in-the-wall machines will be able to take cash as well as provide it, but they will not be able to deliver change, which is intrinsic to the businesses about which I am speaking. Hon. Members also mentioned the perceived rise in the potential for crime, which is of great concern to my constituents. To most people in this Room, the withdrawal of a small amount of money may not seem fraught with the potential for danger, but for pensioners that small transaction involves a large amount of money. They are genuinely afraid of being able to withdraw cash only from a hole in the wall.

I was one of several hon. Members who recently attended a meeting in the House with the directors of Barclays bank. As the hon. Member for Mid-Norfolk (Mr. Simpson) said, their policy seems to be, "We hear you, but we are not listening to what you say to us." The suggestion that there is a potential, if not for increased crime then for an increased fear of crime, was pooh-poohed by the directors, who said that they would introduce closed circuit television cameras in the hotspots. How many attacks must be carried out before the directors of Barclays bank, who seem to have closed their ears to what their customers tell them, introduce the type of security about which they were speaking?

Many hon. Members mentioned degeneration. If the small businesses in my constituency are denied a full range of banking services, it will affect their customers. Most people in this day and age do not have the time to fly like butterflies between venues to different services; there are not enough hours in the day for them to do so. If the bank goes, the customers will move to another bank and spend their money in other shops and cafés and on other services. That will lead to degeneration, which happens in urban areas, too. Degeneration in rural areas was described in graphic detail, and urban areas, too, are desperate for regeneration. Changes are being made, and small and medium-sized businesses are the major job creators in my constituency.

The popular perception is that no one in Hampstead and Highgate is less then a millionaire, but nothing could be further from the truth. There are serious and grave areas of major deprivation in my constituency, as there are in all urban constituencies. Barclays' proposals are another serious blow to areas where people have worked extremely hard, giving their time and efforts to retaining the sense of community by caring for one another. They are trying to maintain the principles, mentioned by the hon. Member for Mid-Norfolk, that energised the bank's founders. How far has that bank slipped?

At the meeting with directors of Barclays that I mentioned earlier, hon. Members were told that because of modernisation and the apparent desire of everyone to opt for on-line banking, Barclays would provide a high-quality service to most of its customers—not to all of its customers; certainly not to those who have been most loyal to the bank over the years, but to "most" of its customers. There was no concomitant sentence stating that the charges to those customers who had less than a high-quality service would be reduced.

The Cruickshank report alleges that the banks have vastly inflated profits. "Bankbusters", on television, gives many examples of incompetent high street banks overcharging their customers. I strongly add my voice to requests for the Government to examine high street banking. If banks continue to treat their customers in such a cavalier way, the next step may be to examine regulatory procedures such as those in, for example, the United States of America, which has community regeneration legislation under which banks must make a major regenerative contribution to their customers if they intend to close their high street branches. Mention has been made of the outrage felt by customers about the complete lack of consultation. Customers knew that the branch in my constituency was to close only because of a notice in the window.

At a meeting with Members of Parliament, Barclays bank directors were categorical that they wanted the closures to take place in six weeks. They said that assistance would be provided to people who have no confidence in, or knowledge of, on-line banking and that additional services would be available for customers with disabilities. I have written to Barclays requesting information about such services—but answer comes there none.

The case that was presented to me about the bank closure in my constituency was based on Barclays saying that customers were leaving the branch and that there was no longer a requirement for counter services. In less than half a day, two of my most active constituents, who have been protesting about the closure, obtained more than 800 signatures from people who wished the branch to be maintained. I hope that the bank will have listened carefully to the contents of this morning's debate, because being a big bank in a big world—the excessive amount that it is spending on advertising has already been mentioned—will be of no value if its excessive activities abroad reduce the potential for jobs and small and medium enterprises to flourish. Or is that how Barclays wants the future to be? Does it want to be a big bank everywhere except the United Kingdom?

11.56 am

Mr. Harry Barnes (North-East Derbyshire): I must be mellowing in my old age, because I have not advocated direct action since the days of the poll tax. It was always non-violent direct action that I supported, but given the contributions from some surprising quarters this morning, perhaps I need to reassess my position on bank closures. The hon. Member for Mid-Norfolk (Mr. Simpson) claimed that we were not luddites. I must say in response that the luddites have had a bad press and I suggest that he reads the work of the historian, E. P. Thompson, who attempted to redress that position. At the time, luddites were faced with horrendous situations.

What is so obnoxious about the bank closure programme is that we have a growing economy. It surprises me how well the economy is doing, because it seems to be expounding third way proposals of which I am not an advocate. Bank activity is growing, yet banks are closing their outlets. The automated credit transfer system will add to the numbers of accounts with which the banks will be dealing and will add to the needs of those who require regular access to local branches.

The problem relates to not only Barclays bank, but major banks throughout the country, some of which will have reduced the number of branches even more drastically than Barclays will have done after 7 April. As my hon. Friend the Member for Waveney (Mr. Blizzard) said, it would be a good idea for people to sign up to the remaining bank in their community. It is easier nowadays to transfer entire accounts than it has ever been. That is useful, but all the banks in Killamarsh in my constituency have disappeared. Many people moved from their Killamarsh NatWest branch to Barclays, and were devasted when Barclays announced that it was to leave neighbouring Eckington. Many people are affected by inertia and do not bother to transfer, so banks lose out. I faced that problem when TSB moved out of Dronfield, where I live, and I retain my Lloyds TSB account despite great inconvenience. Lloyds TSB always rings people in the most inconvenient way, asking them to go and discuss their financial position.

There are many problems, but I had better allow other hon. Members to speak.

12 noon

Dr. Vincent Cable (Twickenham): I pass my congratulations to the hon. Member for Waveney (Mr. Blizzard), who has clearly struck a raw nerve in many constituencies, including mine. I shall try to make my contribution different by considering the big picture. It surprises me that people should be taken aback at what is happening.

Since the mid-1980s, there has been a shareholder-value revolution in the banking industry. Banks were once not primarily driven by their shareholders. Barclays was owned and run by old Quaker families with a paternalistic tradition. Until the mid-1980s, many banking outlets were dominated by the mutual movement; the Library shows that that was the case in about 35 per cent. of outlets, but the figure is now less than 15 per cent. Now the banks are primarily driven by the need to add value for their shareholders. That has some positive consequences, not only for the shareholders; large business or private customers with good credit ratings clearly do well out of the more abrasive environment.

That culture also has considerable costs, and I am not referring only to branch closures. One of the biggest costs is borne by the workers. There are far fewer of them, and they have less job security. Amid all the legitimate concerns about Longbridge, where, I think, 9,000 jobs are at risk, we might overlook the fact that approximately 30,000 jobs are at risk from the merger of NatWest with the Royal Bank of Scotland. The jobs are not so concentrated, as they are part of the fallout of the closure of bank branches across the country. There are also implications for pensioners, as those of us who were involved in the battle on the Floor of the House to hold up the Lloyds TSB merger until pensioners were properly looked after will know. Costs are primarily and most visibly being paid in terms of the contraction of the branch network.

Time is short, and the emphasis of our discussion is to try to find constructive solutions, so I shall suggest three approaches. The first is to build on growing competition in banking. We live in a tough, competitive environment, so we should make it work for the bank customers. There is not a great deal of competition in the retail sector at the moment; there appears to be, but customers do not often vote with their feet. Statistics suggest that people are more reluctant to change their bank than to change their husband or wife, so there is a low rate of mobility between banks.

Mrs. Shephard: The hon. Gentleman's argument is well constructed. The tenor of what he says is that people have a choice, but my hon. Friend the Member for Mid-Norfolk (Mr. Simpson) and the hon. Member for Waveney have said that that is not the case in rural areas.

Dr. Cable: The intervention is right. A problem in rural areas calls for social banking, as I shall mention in a moment. People have greater choice than they realise, whether in reaction to poor service or in protest at bank closures. People could and should express that choice. Unfortunately, the Cruickshank report, which was designed to highlight the competitive problem, focused more on wholesale than on retail banking. Some major changes must be made to the portability of accounts to give consumer power, which is needed to make competition work properly. I hope that the Government deal with that.

[Dr. Cable]

Let me move to the second point, which was mentioned in the intervention. Competition can go only so far. It cannot address the problems of social or financial exclusion. Only social banking can do that. Although there is a clear, identifiable need for social banking and some effective campaigning for it—led by, among others, the hon. Member for Reading, West (Mr. Salter)—community banking is a concept that has not yet found a practical expression. Credit unions are an obvious vehicle for that, but although the Government have talked eloquently about them for three years, the proposed reform package is still bottled up in the Treasury. Credit unions are smothered with regulatory controls, which the Treasury has not yet found a way past.

The other fundamental problem, which has been touched on, is the post office network. We are not dealing with a static situation. The decline of the post office network is accelerating. The network has been declining at the rate of about 200 branches a year. In the current financial year, there have been 400 closures, in anticipation of automated credit transfer. Unless a mechanism can be found for replacing the £400 million of income earned by the post office network, that rate of attrition will increase and the most important vehicle for social banking will be lost.

If the post office network is to be sustained it needs an income stream. The hon. Member for Reading, West suggested a windfall tax. That measure has a varied ideological pedigree; I believe that it was Lord Lawson, as Chancellor of the Exchequer, who first introduced one. Another idea that has emerged during the debate is the need for a social banking system to be subsidised; it obviously cannot operate on a profit-making basis. If those two proposals are put together, with the windfall tax providing revenue that would be ring-fenced instead of disappearing into the Treasury, that would provide a mechanism for solving the problem.

My third and final argument concerns regulation. Several hon. Members have said that if the banking system does not change its behaviour, it may need to be regulated to stop the process of bank closures. I would argue that that is necessary, but should not happen in a highly politicised way.

I have suggested a clause in the Financial Services and Markets Bill, which is passing through the other place, that would oblige the regulator to ensure that banks comply with the needs of vulnerable customers—the aged, the disabled and those isolated in rural areas. So far the Treasury has not accepted that, although the Department of Trade and Industry has accepted a similar obligation on the utilities. A general power of that kind would impose on banks a requirement of the type in force in the United States, mentioned by the hon. Member for Hampstead and Highgate (Ms Jackson). It would also provide flexibility because it would not be unduly prescriptive.

Therefore, a combination of intensified competition, the creation of consumer power by enabling people to switch their accounts more readily, a boost in the arm for social banking and some regulatory restraints on the operation of banks, might address the concerns that were so eloquently presented by the hon. Member for Waveney.

12.8 pm

Mr. Tim Loughton (East Worthing and Shoreham): I also congratulate the hon. Member for Waveney (Mr. Blizzard). It has been an interesting and topical debate. I particularly congratulate the hon. Gentleman on his work as a private eye during his interview with the local Barclays branch. It would be interesting to see what memorandums are now flying from Barclays central office to branch managers, instructing them not to leave piles of papers on their desk during interviews with Members of Parliament. His remarks about the branch closure staff guidance pack make the procedure seem clinical—a world apart from the image of Capatin Mainwaring and the local bank branch.

It is a topical problem, with all the debate about automated telling machine charges, post office benefits changes and the formation yesterday, which the hon. Member for Reading, West (Mr. Salter) mentioned, of the parliamentary banking group. It is not just a question of BC—Barclays closure—on 7 April. Lloyds TSB has started a closure programme with the recent takeover of the National Westminister bank by the Royal Bank of Scotland. Many more closures of all kinds of branches are likely.

As my right hon. Friend the Member for South-West Norfolk (Mrs. Shephard) said, the problem is not just rural. Certainly, rural areas are becoming some of the most disadvantaged areas for services. My constituency is largely urban and consists of parts of Worthing. It has a population of 100,000 that is made up of "villages within a town". At present, Worthing has the largest number of Lloyds bank branches per head in England. However, I confidently predict that, within the next couple of years only 50 per cent. will survive.

Barclays has also been closing branches in villages that are part of Worthing where they were the last branch. The closures have been carried out suddenly, with minimal consultation that has caused maximum disruption, particularly in Worthing with its higher than average number of elderly and disabled people. My right hon. Friend mentioned the 70-plus protests in her constituency, the fierce local reaction and the stress that had been caused to staff. She has seen nothing yet. If that tide gets under way, it will not just be 70-year-olds, it will be 80-year-olds, 90-year-olds, and a few 100-year-olds in my constituency. The figures for the past 10 years make interesting reading. Since 1990, 130,000 jobs in high street banks have gone, and as hon. Members have said, 4,000 branches have closed. In September 1999, Deloittes predicted that one third of the remaining 11,000 bank branches would close by 2005, and that many sizeable communities would be left without a bank.

The takeover of the National Westminster bank by the Royal Bank of Scotland came with a threat to cut floor space by half, and 850 of the 1,700 NatWest branches may be under threat. Let us hope that the news that the hon. Member for Reading, West brought us has delayed that decision, but ultimately those branches are under threat. It was rightly pointed out that this country gets a raw deal. High street banks in the rest of Europe fare much better. We have 170 banks per million people. France has 440 banks per million people, while Spain has 900 per million people. There has been much protest in the House about what is happening. The hon. Member for Reading, West underestimated the problem. There have been 28 early-day motions so far this year, 13 of them condemning Barclays, three condemning Lloyds and two condemning both banks. To date, they have attracted 563 signatures. It is a widespread issue.

Banks are not just buildings; they are at the heart of a community. They provide a vital service to many small firms. Solicitors' firms, for example, use overnight safes. Shops use overnight safes and, as my right hon. friend the Member for South-West Norfolk said, they face a serious security problem and may lose out on interest if they cannot bank their takings locally on the day of trading because of time pressure. Building firms that need to provide ready money for their employees may also experience problems.

Banks constantly fob people off with science. They say that the whole world is changing and that internet and telephone banking services are available. At the moment, Barclays has some 650,000 internet customers of one description or another and 1 million customers who use telephone banking. However, I suspect that many of those customers use the branches, too. There are still many people who are not on the internet and do not bank by telephone, particularly the elderly.

As the hon. Member for Hampstead and Highgate (Ms Jackson) said, it is offensive that Sir Anthony Hopkins appears in an expensive television advertisement, backed up by other media advertising, talking about being Mr. Big in a big world, for big business. Well, what about the little man? What about ordinary individuals who make up such a large proportion of a bank's customers? It seems the most enormous public relations gaffe to be talking about "thinking big" when banks are closing small branches that serve big communities in little villages and parts of towns.

Mr. Salter: I congratulate the hon. Gentleman on his contribution, but does he not think that it is entirely appropriate that Sir Anthony Hopkins was selected to feature in the Barclays advertisement? After all, he made his reputation in "The Silence of the Lambs" by eating people.

Mr. Loughton: I am grateful for that contribution, which I saw coming. It is almost a question of dog eats dog in this instance.

I want to touch on the issue of urban regeneration, brought up by the hon. Member for Waveney. Urban regeneration is all about increasing jobs and enhancing the environment and housing. Communities are not just a group of brick boxes; they need centres and facilities—especially for young people—shops, transport links, health centres and doctors. In walking away, as the hon. Member for Waveney put it, Barclays, Lloyds and other banks seem to have delivered a large vote of no confidence in the whole regeneration process, both in urban and rural areas. It is a severe blow to the aim of increasing facilities for people, a severe blow to the aim of attracting businesses into newly regenerated areas and a severe blow to those businesses already in the area, which may be clinging on by the skin of their teeth.

I am sure that banks could find other roles within communities—as business advice centres, for example—that accentuate the provision of customer services offered by them until now. There is interaction between banks and post offices, as several hon. Members, including the hon. Member for Hampstead and Highgate, said. It seems crass that Barclays is carrying out a three-month trial with 270 branches of the post office in Cornwall. Surely, we need to see the results of those trials before the BC cataclysm starts in the next couple of weeks. It makes one wonder whether that is just another PR red herring from the bank, which is not really listening, although it claims to do so.

Many hon. Members made comments appropriate to the experiences of people in their constituencies. My right hon. Friend the Member for South-West Norfolk mentioned the security element of transporting cash and the cost of travel, especially in rural areas. The hon. Member for Reading, West said that the closures come at a time when banks are reporting record profits, so it represents an extraordinary PR gaffe. Certainly, in the case of Barclays, which has behaved worst of all in terms of not consulting Members of Parliament before launching the closures, it is a case of saying, "I hear what you say" without actually listening, as my hon. Friend the Member for Mid-Norfolk (Mr. Simpson) said. I must congratulate my hon. Friend on mentioning so many business men and traders in his short speech.

The debate has been interesting. The hon. Member for Waveney has done the House a service by raising the subject, and I hope that any representatives of banks who are here today or who read reports of the debate will take notice of what has been said. The problem caused by the closures is complex. There will be a problem of unemployment, a problem of access denied, especially people with disabilities and the elderly, such as Mr. Baldry, who was mentioned by the hon. Member for Waveney. Another piece of the mortar that keeps communities together is being chipped away and the communities of the future, which should be regenerated, will suffer yet another setback. It signifies a vote of no confidence in the regeneration of less well-off areas in both towns and rural areas. Banks should do much better and listen properly.

I conclude by quoting a sobering statistic. In this country, more than one in three people change their spouse, yet fewer than one in five changes their bank. Perhaps, in the area of banking, there will be a higher rate of divorce, or threatened divorce, unless banks prove to be a more loving partner.

12.19 am

The Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions (Mr. Chris Mullin): We have had a good debate and it is evident that hon. Members of all parties have strong feelings about its subject. My hon. Friend the Member for Waveney (Mr. Blizzard) has raised an important issue. I have a distant memory of his constituency, as I was a waiter at Pontin's in Lowestoft in a previous incarnation. The right hon. Member for South-West Norfolk (Mrs. Shephard) treated us to an entertaining—I do not lose sight of the importance of this matter—account of the sit-in that occurred in her constituency. The hon. Member for East Worthing and Shoreham (Mr. Loughton) treated us to a terrifying vision of what might happen in Worthing if direct action were to spread that far.

[Mr. Chris Mullin]

As has been said, banks play an important part in the stability of local communities. I am sorry to say that in their drive for greater profits—it was pointed out that their recent profits have been huge—they are abandoning any sense of social responsibility. Increasingly, banks are interested only in servicing the prosperous, and the latest round of Barclays closures serves only to illustrate that trend. No amount of exhortation from me or any other politician is likely to make the slightest difference to what are essentially hard-nosed commercial decisions, although I am happy to join my hon. Friend the Member for Waveney and others in their plea for Barclays to review plans, especially for closures in regeneration areas. The most useful role that the Government can play is to help to develop alternatives. That is why it is important that the Post Office remains in the public sector and why we are encouraging it to invest heavily so that it can provide customers in small or poor communities with a range of financial services that were hitherto provided only by banks.

One alternative that is becoming more widespread is the development of agency agreements between banks and post offices. Such agreements provide local post offices with additional business that can be crucial to sustaining viability and a valuable public service and are, therefore, a double benefit for the community. The Government are committed to maintaining a nationwide network of post offices. We have already embarked on an investment programme worth almost £500 million, to equip all post offices with a modern, on-line computer system enabling them to extend the banking facilities that they can offer on behalf of banks and building societies. That will be of considerable value in rural and urban areas from which the banks have withdrawn.

Only two weeks ago, we debated in Westminster Hall the closure of banks in Northumberland, at the other end of the country. Particular reference was made to the town of Belford, where a local bank—I think that it was a Barclays branch—was being closed. However, the local post office already had an agency agreement with two or three other financial institutions and was providing their services. A clear alternative was therefore available in that small town, and I hope that such arrangements will be emulated in other parts of the country. The Post Office already has successful agency agreements with the Co-operative bank, Lloyds TSB and Alliance and Leicester for the provision of free banking services to their customers. The services include both withdrawals and paying in, and many post offices now offer foreign currency exchange, which shows that such arrangements can work to the mutual satisfaction of the banks, the Post Office and their customers.

I shall not tell the hon. Member for Mid-Norfolk (Mr. Simpson) that I hear what he says about post offices, but I take this opportunity to restate what the Government have repeatedly made clear: anyone who wants to continue collecting their pension or benefit from a post office will be able to do so. I add one other point: it is no good signing petitions calling for post offices or banks to stay open if their services are not used. People must make use of local services or they will disappear. That applies to post offices as much as to banks.

As hon. Members have mentioned, Barclays is carrying out a three-month trial in 270 post offices in Cornwall to see how its services can be delivered. I agree with my hon. Friend the Member for Hampstead and Highgate (Ms Jackson) and the hon. Member for East Worthing and Shoreham that it is particularly unfortunate that the bank has nevertheless decided to proceed with its major programme of closures before seeing how the experiment is working. I said when this subject was last debated that I regard that action as premature.

The hon. Member for East Worthing and Shoreham said that banks currently enjoy a high level of customer loyalty. They cannot expect that to continue if it is not reciprocated. A number of banks have recently attracted a good deal of adverse publicity over their plans to charge for withdrawals at cash machines. I am glad to see that they are now reviewing that plan in light of the public's anger. That is a demonstration that public opinion can, with a little help from the Government, make a difference, even with such apparently hard-hearted institutions. Banks cannot, on the one hand, argue that branch closures make commercial sense because more cost-effective banking services can be offered by other means—telephone, internet, direct debit, cash machines and so on—and, on the other hand, expect their customers to pay higher charges for using those so-called more cost-effective technologies. They cannot have it both ways.

At the end of the day, the banks' customers must themselves make a commercial decision. If their bank fails to continue to meet their banking needs, they may consider transferring their business to one that does, either directly at a local branch, or through an agency agreement with the local post office. That sort of market pressure sometimes works. Some hon. Members will recall that in the 1970s, Barclays was forced to rethink its investment in South African defence bonds. Many local authorities that had bank accounts with Barclays and many individuals—including me, although I doubt whether the withdrawal of my modest account made a great deal of difference to the bank's corporate strategy—forced the bank to review its attitude towards its investment policy.

That sort of popular uprising can sometimes work, when appealing to the better nature of the banks might not. I note that Members of the National Assembly for Wales are calling for the closure of the Assembly's £3 billion account with Barclays. That ought to ring a bell or two in the appropriate quarter, even if what we say in Parliament does not have quite the same impact. That could easily spread, unless Barclays starts to take more interest in the welfare of its customers. Only yesterday, for instance, the banks involved in the Link network succumbed to public pressure.

It is disappointing to see Barclays closing branches in an area where the benefits of the Government's investment of public money in regeneration are just beginning to bear fruit. As I said, such a move can help to undermine the viability of local shopping and commercial centres. There can be little doubt that such closures will represent a setback for the SRB partnership, because it will restrict access to banking services for local people and businesses. Unfortunately, it is not an isolated incident. Other areas that have benefited from the investment of public money in regeneration schemes are being hit by Barclays bank branch closures. We should also bear it in mind that, as my hon. Friend the Member for North-East Derbyshire (Mr. Barnes) said, not only Barclays is at fault. Barclays has been mentioned a lot, and rightly so, but other banks are doing the same.

I am only too happy to add my voice to that of my hon. Friend the Member for Waveney and the other hon. Members who have spoken this morning, in calling on Barclays bank to reconsider its strategy. However, I am under no illusion—the most effective pressure on Barclays is likely to be customers voting with their feet.

Chronic Illness

12.30 pm

Dr. Howard Stoate (Dartford): I feel fortunate to have secured a debate on the national health service and people with chronic long-term illness. As a former general practitioner—

Madam Deputy Speaker (Mrs. Gwyneth Dunwoody): Order. Hon. Members and members of the general public must leave the Room as quietly and, preferably, as safely as possible.

Dr. Stoate: As Someone who continues to practice in the NHS, I think that the subject is important and I feel privileged to raise it in the Chamber. I recently heard an interesting definition of the difference between hospital medicine and primary care. In hospital medicine, the conditions stay the same and the faces change; in primary care, the people stay the same and the conditions change. That is the point—the vast majority of chronic illness is managed in primary care. More than 90 per cent. of people using the NHS access it through primary care. Most people with chronic long-term illness are managed and treated in primary care.

In the United Kingdom, one in three people suffers from a chronic disability or illness, but the subject has not impinged enough on the recent debate on the future of the health service. As a recent World Health Organisation report commented:

> If a new virus were expected to infect millions of citizens on the scale that chronic illness affects people world wide today, a public campaign would be launched immediately to mobilise scientific resources.

Perhaps because chronic illness is so pervasive and familiar to us all, we have ceased to deal with it with the urgency that it deserves. Many people view chronic complaints such as arthritis as a condition that is the natural consequence of old age. National voluntary organisations, such as the British League against Rheumatism and the National Society for the Relief of Paget's Disease, have experienced enormous difficulty in persuading the public to view the complaints as genuine diseases, rather than simply afflictions of the old.

The majority of people in this country perceive disease as something that is acute, treatable and of specific duration. Chronic complaints rarely fulfil that definition but, although many conditions are life threatening, they seriously affect the quality of an individual's life, preventing them from doing many of the things that most of us take for granted.

There is no reason why the maintenance of individuals' quality of life and the management of the pain and suffering experienced by those with long-term illness should not be seen as a priority in the health service on a par with acute conditions. Unless that happens, there is little chance of persuading the public of the impact and importance of long-term conditions.

The interest of people with long-term medical needs has been represented for the past 10 years by the Long-term Medical Conditions Alliance. That is the umbrella body for national voluntary organisations working to meet the needs of such people. More than 700,000 people belong to its 111 member organisations. It aims to ensure that the voice of people with long-term illness is heard and to provide support to its members.

[Dr. Stoate]

Working to identify and distil common issues across a wide range of conditions has been a considerable task, for which the LMCA and its director, Judy Wilson, deserve the highest praise. The efforts to promote the interests of the members at national level and to instigate a debate on the subject have been extremely important and have served to identify and focus attention on the key areas of health service provision that are in need of review. Despite that huge contribution, many patient organisations feel that they are not always valued or sufficiently used by professionals or policy makers in the NHS.

The organisations have a large role to play in the shaping and monitoring of health service policy development. Ensuring that their role in supporting the health service forms part of a long-term strategy, in line with the 1998 compact on relations between the voluntary sector and the Government, would help to strengthen the relationship between the sector and the health service. The experience of people suffering from chronic illness confirms that, although the NHS is skilled at treating people with short-term or acute illness, there is no consistent, reliable mechanism to co-ordinate their treatment, which is based both at hospital and in the community.

Clearly, links between services and their integration need to be improved, both on the ground and at policy and planning level—between health and social services, acute and community services, and primary and secondary care. Greater emphasis on multi-disciplinarity is also necessary, so that the care of each individual is not focused exclusively on the medical model of care. Continuity between medical services for adolescents, adults and the elderly is not properly managed. We need a more cohesive and integrated approach.

Despite the prevalence of chronic illness, the general public and even health professionals can be ignorant about what it is and how it should be tackled. Sufferers of chronic illness, including people with physical and mental ill health, are frequently on the margins of society. We lack the knowledge and experience of their conditions that would allow them to play a full and active part in society, with rights and responsibilities. That sense of isolation and alienation needs to be challenged.

Long-term chronic illness does not merely have an impact on people's health; it affects their careers, relationships and social existence. Many people feel obliged to give up their jobs or feel severely constrained in what jobs they can take. They often need employers to be flexible, but many companies struggle, or are unwilling, to provide that support. It is vital that the problem is recognised by the Government and that ways are found to relieve specific pressures and tackle the challenges faced by people who suffer from long-term illness.

Chronic illness should not be confused with long-term care. A small number of people, especially the elderly, may need long-term care at the end of their lives, but most people with chronic illnesses are not in permanent care and are responsible for the management of their illnesses. They often receive insufficient support and guidance because their general practitioners and other health professionals lack information about their condition and how best to live with it. We must ensure that doctors have access to basic information about conditions and that they are aware of local support groups and national voluntary organisations that help sufferers.

The LMCA does a valuable job on behalf of people with long-term illness. It also publicises the work of its 111 member organisations. Nevertheless, it urgently needs the active support of the Government, the medical establishment and the wider community to ensure that the issue is given national prominence. Such specialist groups recognise that helping people with chronic illness involves more than diagnosis, treatment, cure and discharge. The health service is effective at servicing a condition by providing the requisite drugs and treatment to stabilise the advancement of chronic illness, but it is not as well prepared to deal with the wider issue of helping an individual achieve a full quality of life and take responsibility for his or her well-being.

In addition, people with chronic long-term illnesses often suffer from more than one complaint, although the severity of each condition fluctuates and is rarely stable. The acute sector or general practice is not always equipped to cope with the nature of long-term illness. Part of the problem is that the consultation procedure treats patients as consumers rather than as proactive individuals who are capable of taking a lead in their own treatment. The person with a long-term condition should be fully involved in deciding how treatment should be administered. He or she should be more than just a passive recipient of treatment.

The problem has been recognised by the Government who set up the expert patients task force, which is chaired by the chief medical officer. Its purpose is to design the new expert patients programme to consider the role that chronic disease sufferers can play as experts in managing their diseases. An expert patients programme for arthritis has been piloted and the Government are funding a programme for people with different conditions, which is co-ordinated by the LMCA. The programme arms patients with the knowledge, skills and motivations needed to take control of their illnesses and manage their symptoms. It allows people to develop skills to control feelings of anger and depression and to manage diet and exercise routines. Such help means that people will go to the doctor less often, use services differently and feel physically and mentally better.

The programme could be extended so that the sufferers of long-term medical conditions play a more active role in the training of health professionals. That would enable them to treat sufferers more effectively. Given the wealth of experience and expertise that expert patients have, it is not unrealistic that they should have a greater role in shaping how patients are treated. Patients are often the best experts. We could all learn from and share in their knowledge.

Although the programme is valuable, and despite the publication of the White Paper "Saving Lives: Our Healthier Nation" and coverage in the national press, too few people are aware of it. Aside from question of publicity, a key issue is that of service variation by geography and by age and background. It is a matter of concern to all national voluntary organisations. People with long-term conditions should in principle have equal access to the most effective medical and non-medical treatments, drugs and complementary therapies, where appropriate. I am sure that the work of the National Institute for Clinical Excellence will ensure that, as new treatments become available and new therapies are evaluated, they will be made available to all. I welcome that development and I expect the future to show us what can be achieved.

Despite what I have said, diagnosis and referral by GPs still varies substantially, while access to specialist clinics and services, including nursing care and physiotherapy, often depends on where one lives. There is also evidence that older people and those from certain ethnic minority or lower income groups do not enjoy equality of access with the rest of the community.

At a recent forum on the health of ethnic minorities in the borough of Gravesham attended by my hon. Friend the Member for Gravesham (Mr. Pond) and I, I raised ethnic minorities' access to health services. Too often, cultural and linguistic barriers between the health service and the ethnic minority communities prevent the latter from using the health service to the full. Often, someone whose first language is not English finds it difficult to understand explanations, or to obtain suitable written information. Gaining access to, using and benefiting from services is thus more difficult. Consequently, the illnesses of people from ethnic communities are sometimes diagnosed and treated later than those of other people. Efforts have been made to improve consultation with ethnic minorities and to bring services, including screening services, into the community. We need to build on that success, specifically with respect to long-term medical care.

Before this morning's debate I made a presentation at the Royal Society of Medicine on the Government's national health service framework for coronary heart disease, as part of cholesterol awareness day. I met my colleague Dr. Ian Banks, who is chairman of the men's health forum and a spokesman for the British Medical Association on men's health issues. We discussed the fact that men often find it difficult to obtain access to health services. They do not necessarily make the best use of GP services, go for screening or otherwise get the best from the service.

Many of the changes that are needed would involve changes of emphasis and education rather than huge amounts of money. Our discussion concerned making men aware of the small incremental life style changes that could make a huge difference to their health. It is difficult to bring about massive changes to people's life styles, but small changes often make a big difference, without upsetting people's lives too much. I hope to continue to work with the men's health forum to find out what we can do to improve men's health simply by education programmes and making them aware of services. I am sure that we could bring about significant change by doing that.

The Commission for Health Improvement is an important innovation and I hope that it will help to realise the Government's commitment to ironing out service inequalities in the NHS. It must ensure that those inequalities are eradicated from every aspect of the service, including provision for sufferers of long-term illness. One way of tackling the holes in the service would be to develop and enhance the role of the specialist nurse. That should not be seen as a means of delegating to nurses work that should be done by doctors, but as a means of building on nurses' important work in the community in the treatment of people with long-term conditions.

Nurses' work often focuses on the whole person. Their interest in each individual is not exclusively medical and that is ideal for the treatment of such patients. The role of nurse prescribers and nurse-led clinics should be encouraged and expanded. I am pleased that the Government are expanding the role of nurses throughout the health service, with a widening of scope and increased availability of specialist nurses.

I spoke yesterday on the subject to the chairman of the Dartford, Gravesham and Swanley Healthcare Partnerships primary care group, Dr. Alasdair Thomson, a fellow GP. He told me that in the Dartford and Gravesham area it has already been possible to employ a specialist multiple sclerosis nurse and an additional epilepsy nurse. Work is now being done on the possibility of employing a Parkinson's nurse. Such initiatives are important and show how nurses with specialist skills can help people to make their lives more productive and make less use of services.

Much of what I have described makes sound economic sense. It is not a drain on resources or an additional cost to the health service. The Royal College of Nursing sent me some data on work done by Professor Sir Brian Jarman at Imperial college on the difference that nurses can make in the use of health services, in particular those who specialise in Parkinson's disease. They can reduce morbidity, mortality, the risk of fractures and falls, the amount of hospital in-patient time, nursing home costs and costs to social services as a result of health service investment. Professor Jarman estimated that between £300 and £500 per patient per annum could be saved on the treatment of Parkinson's disease by the use of specialist nurses.

I am not advocating a huge increase in extra health service resources, but a more focused use of those resources. We must ensure that they are tailored to the need of the patient. I want them to benefit the patient's as well as the nation's health, while not putting excessive and huge burdens on the health service. It is a matter not of throwing money at the problem, but of simply changing emphasis and ensuring that the right people with the right skills are put in touch with the right patients, to the benefit of everyone.

Also, the Government need to recognise formally the importance of chronic long-term medical conditions by the establishment of a ministerial responsibility for long-term medical conditions to oversee reforms in the service, ensure a more holistic approach to the needs of sufferers and raise the profile of chronic illness with both the Government and the country.

12.45 pm

The Minister of State, Department of Health (Mr. John Denham): I congratulate my hon. Friend the Member for Dartford (Dr. Stoate) on securing the Adjournment debate. He has considerable expertise on health issues. I hope that I am not taken ill in the Chamber but, if I were, I can think of no better place than in an Adjournment debate with my hon. Friend.

[Mr. John Denham]

Madam Deputy Speaker: Order. Let me caution the Minister. He will discover that, on the whole, politicians who are doctors should be avoided at every level.

Mr. Denham: My hon. Friend the Member for Dartford is right to stress the importance of the management of chronic illness as an aspect of health care. One in three of the population suffers from a chronic, long-term condition. Patients who live with long-term illness are usually knowledgeable about their condition and are often in the best position to manage their illness with the help and support of health care professionals and other agencies, such as local authority social services.

As my hon. Friend said, in acute illness the object of health care is to return people to their previous states of health, so that they can resume their everyday life. With chronic illness, patients' lives and frequently those of their families are changed, often for ever. Our aim in treating chronic illness is to ensure as far as possible people's ability to continue to live independent and enjoyable lives. I welcome the debate, not least because it gives us a chance to set out the Government's policy on caring for people with chronic illness.

I reassure my hon. Friend that the other Minister of State at the Department of Health, my hon. Friend the Member for Barrow and Furness (Mr. Hutton), has ministerial responsibility for long-term chronic illness. The Chamber may question why I am answering this debate, but that is a private matter between him and me. I hope that I can effectively represent his work.

We have set out our aims to build a new national health service—one that is faster, fairer and more convenient for patients. It is a radical programme of change to transform the NHS, keeping it true to its values—based on need, not the ability to pay. The new NHS will be barely recognisable by the time that we have finished our 10-year programme of modernisation. A key part of that is a more patient-centred national health service with greater patient and public involvement in service delivery. We are integrating that principle into national policy through our reforms. It is happening through new organisations such as primary care groups, initiatives such as health action zones and Department of Health initiatives such as the patient-partnership strategy.

Users and carers are represented in new organisations such as the National Institute for Clinical Excellence and the Commission for Health Improvement. They are involved in developing the national service frameworks. People with chronic illness, in particular, have much good advice to offer those organisations based on their personal experience of local services.

I pay tribute to the work of the Long-Term Medical Conditions Alliance and its director, Judy Wilson. The merits of the organisation are well recognised in the Government and it gives us a great deal of help in formulating policy for people with chronic illness.

The Chancellor's announcement last week of significant extra investment for the national health service—an average of 6.3 per cent. in a four-year period in England—is tremendously good news for everyone who uses the NHS. It will provide resources for modernisation, which need to be coupled with change in some of the elements that my hon. Friend described.

Last week, my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister described five challenges, or themes, in improving the national health service: partnership, in ensuring that the different elements of the system work together; performance, in improving productivity and clinical performance; developing the professions, the entire national health service and the social care work force; patient care; and the prevention and avoidance of ill health. In taking forward that work, my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State has created teams to examine how those challenges can be met and will add a sixth team to consider patient empowerment as an essential part of a modern health system. Alongside that work will be a work force planning review designed to ensure that the national health service has the sort of work force that it needs to deliver for patients—a work force who can deliver services that are more flexible, skilled and customer driven.

My hon. Friend mentioned specialist nurses and I commend the local initiative in his area. Such nurses have an important role to play in the management of chronic conditions. The number of posts is a matter for commissioners and providers at local level and forms an integral part of their planning for the needs of local populations. There is no doubt that people with chronic illness can benefit from access to a wide range of nursing services, including practice and district nurses, who may be able to refer to specialists such as continence nurse specialists and MS nurse specialists, for example.

I hope that the work force review will strengthen local work force planning so that needs identified in local health improvement programmes, including those of people with chronic illnesses, are properly reflected in the training and employment of appropriate staff, including specialist nurses.

In the new approach to the new national health service, it is important to improve the way in which we aim to deliver services. Too often, people with long-term chronic conditions have been made to fit themselves around the way in which care is provided locally, regardless of whether that meets their individual needs. To overcome that approach, we have developed as part of our reforms the concept of long-term service agreements between commissioners and providers, based on the concept of pathways of care and recognising that patients at different times in their lives will need care and support from primary care, secondary care and social care. By developing services around the pathway of care, we expect the service to be much more flexible and to put the individual patient's care at the heart of the system.

That new approach will develop in time. At local level, people will inevitably have to concentrate on a limited number of local priorities each year, but it will produce better arrangements for patients. That approach will reinforce the need for the seamless working of health, social services and other agencies such as housing, which my hon. Friend discussed.

We must break down the barriers between the national health service and social services. The Health Act 1999 put in place much of the legislative framework that is needed for closer working between the health service and social services. Those new powers will provide opportunities to improve services for people with chronic illnesses. People living with chronic illnesses know only too well how failure to deliver the right package of care can result in frustration and unnecessary difficulties in the activities of daily life.

Clinical governance will underpin much of the Government's quality agenda. It is a means by which standards will be raised and it will form the basis for monitoring and evaluating quality improvements in the national health service. It will play a key role in providing a health service that improves the overall standard of care that it delivers, reduces unacceptable variations in treatment and ensures that decisions about care and treatment are supported by up-to-date evidence of effectiveness.

As part of the process of clinical governance and our wider drive to tackle variations in treatment in care, it is important to focus on chronic conditions among others. Let me provide some examples. Good work intended to raise standards of care in chronic neurological illness was launched by my hon. Friend the Minister of State for Health recently. An innovative neurology programme for GPs was developed by the British Brain and Spine Foundation in collaboration with the university of Bath. It developed after in-depth research to establish GP needs and it aims to improve early diagnosis, case assessment and management and referral for secondary care. It was supported by a research grant from the Department of Health.

The programme focuses on the six most commonly seen aspects of general practice and provides a unique opportunity for United Kingdom GPs to enhance their skills in a crucial area of medicine. I hope that my hon. Friend the Member for Dartford will view that as a practical example of recognising the need to tackle variations in referral rates and the management of different conditions. He is right that we must ensure that it applies to all members of the community, including the black and ethnic minority population. He rightly referred to some good practice in the system, but it remains patchy. As we mainstream our equal opportunities and diversity agenda in the Department of Health, it is important to iron out any differences in the quality of services received by different members of the community.

Diabetes is relevant to the whole population, but its incidence is higher among the south Asian population. It is a chronic condition for which we are developing a national service framework to set out clear standards for care and treatment. More than 1 million people in the UK have diabetes and it is predicted to increase significantly in the next decade. Diabetes and its complications account for at least 9 per cent. of health care costs. At the personal level, it is not properly managed and long-term complications—blindness, renal failure, lower limb amputation and cardiovascular disease—can be severe.

There is considerable evidence throughout the country of variations in the organisation and quality of diabetes services. Our plan is to develop a national service framework for implementation within the national health service in spring 2002. It will set national standards, define service models and put in place strategies to support implementation and delivery. It will also set out performance measures against which progress in an agreed time scale will be monitored. The expert reference group for the NSF is adopting a patient-centred approach. As well as including two people with diabetes and the chief executive of the British Diabetic Association on the group, it is considering how else to access views and information from service users.

I have provided two examples of approaches to tackling variations in the quality of service. I agree with my hon. Friend that one of the most important and exciting ways for the Government to work with people with chronic illness is the development of the concept of the expert patient. Research shows that patient-led self-management schemes have beneficial effects. Improved health, a better ability to communicate with health professionals and fewer hospital admissions will result if patients are informed about their condition, know where to receive a treatment and have greater control over it.

We have established an expert patients task force, led by the chief medical officer. It is developing an expert patient programme for people with chronic conditions, which is likely to lead to more lay-led self-management programmes, the strengthening of professionally led, condition-specific, self-management programmes and the integration of aspects of the current self-management programme into the planning of the future health system. It will give advice on how self-management programmes for people with chronic diseases can be brought right into the main stream of the national health service rather than remain a fringe activity. We hope to receive the recommendations by autumn.

Some professionals might initially view the programme as potentially threatening, but it will not replace patients' needs for informed advice and treatment from health care and social care professionals. I am pleased that health professionals in the task force have underlined that approach.

My hon. Friend made an interesting point about using patients' expertise in professional training. I recognise that this is done in some areas, but there is scope for improvement.

EU (Enhanced Co-operation)

12.59 pm

Mr. Michael Fabricant (Lichfield): I shall concentrate on the global scene. Before I present my arguments in favour of strengthening political and economic ties with the United States and the North American Free Trade Area in particular, I should make it clear for the benefit of any mischievous journalists who might read this speech, let alone listen to it—let alone any mischievous Minister who might be sitting opposite me—that this debate is most certainly not about our leaving the European Union. I shall argue today for a positive and additional step to be taken that I believe will benefit the British economy. If taken, it will secure jobs and generate increased jobs for the benefit of all in this nation.

This debate is timely. Two significant events have taken place in the past couple of weeks. First the Institute of Directors, which is not known for its Euro-scepticism, published a detailed report entitled, "EU Membership, What's the Bottom Line?" Graham Leach from the IOD's economics department conducted a detailed cost-benefit analysis of our EU membership. Incidentally, I am asking the Government to do just that in my Analysis of Costs and Benefits (European Union Membership) Bill, which is on the Order Paper.

The IOD analysis is deeply disturbing. Despite all the advantages, including the single European market, the inward investment that we have enjoyed from Japan, Korea and elsewhere, the influence that we have exercised in Brussels—or not—and most recently in Lisbon, our EU membership is still, it would seem, a net drain on British resources. According to the study, the net cost of EU membership to each family in Britain is at least £1,000 a year, perhaps double that. That money could be spent on pensions, schools and the health service in Staffordshire as well as in the rest of the UK. Sadly, the Government are in no position to disagree because they have not conducted their own analysis. Perhaps they fear the answer.

First, may I challenge the Government and the Minister in particular to enact the provisions of my Bill? There should be no no-go areas for knowledge and free debate. The second event in the past two weeks has been the visit of the International Trade Commission from Washington DC at the behest of the United States Senate Finance Committee. It is conducting its own cost-benefit analysis into the advantages of the UK joining NAFTA. The visit is significant, although not because it will lead anywhere in the short term; it will not. Sadly, a Senate committee can no more dictate to the White House than a Commons Select Committee can dictate policy to Downing street.

However, this inquiry demonstrates that there has been a sea change in attitude in the United States regarding economic relations with Britain. For years, the United States showed no interest in such ties with Britain. Harold Wilson's sensible overtures in that direction, from 20 or 30 years ago, were rebuffed. However, as the song goes, "The times they are a'changin'". Technology and changed practices have seen to that. It is now cheaper to phone anywhere in the United States than France. It is cheaper to send a container of coal, or anything, to New Jersey than to Nuremberg. We share the same commercial and civil law. We share the same language, the same heritage and the same way of doing business. As I am sure the Minister will confirm, that already leads to huge mutual investment in each other's countries. I shall say more about that later.

There could be more mutual trade for our mutual benefit. Growing voices in Washington DC and beyond see the potential benefits of Britain joining NAFTA. That would create a bigger market with an even bigger gross domestic product than the European Union.

In the darkest days of the war, before Pearl harbour, Winston Churchill said that the United Kingdom and > the United States will have to be somewhat mixed up together in some of their affairs for mutual and general advantage. For my own part, looking out across the future, I do not view the process with any misgivings. I could not stop it if I wished; no one can stop it. Like the Mississippi, it just keeps rolling.

How appropriate that Churchill, the product of an Anglo-American alliance should have foreseen another so fruitful. So firm was his belief in "the special relationship" as he christened it, that he vowed that with Europe and the Commonwealth it should remain one of the three interlocking circles with which future British foreign policy should be concerned.

As Churchill foresaw, the broad strategic interests of the United States and the United Kingdom continue to run together. Those interests lie in the preservation and promotion of peace, democracy and free trade. Our two nations are inextricably bound in the effort to secure those interests. Over the years, there has been co-operation in the North Atlantic Treaty Organisation, the World Trade Organisation and other forums to secure those ends. It has not been easy, however. The growing pressure in continental Europe towards greater harmony of purpose, or federalism, is straining those ties at political, military and economic levels. The United States and the United Kingdom share enormous mutual interests for the benefit of us all, but they are being jeopardised.

In trade terms, the United States and the United Kingdom share, and are continually replenishing, a colossal mutual investment. In 1997, as in most other years, the United States received the largest share of total foreign direct investment—more than 30 per cent.—not from Japan but from the United Kingdom. The total UK investment in that year amounted to some $18.3 billion; in north America as a whole, our net direct investment in the past decade has been double our investment in the European Union, and that huge investment is reciprocal. Indeed, more United States outward investment goes to the United Kingdom than to any other country. In the past decade, net direct investment in the United Kingdom by United States and Canadian firms was one and a half times that of net direct investment from the European Union. In 1998, United States capital outflow to the United Kingdom was $35 billion compared with $75 billion to the rest of Europe combined. What is left of our overseas territories received an additional $5 billion in that year, more than Portugal and Spain combined.

The importance of our trade with the United States should not detract from the importance of our European markets; by the same token, we must not exaggerate or over-privilege our trade with Europe at the expense of that with the United States.

Mr. Owen Paterson (North Shropshire): Will my hon. Friend reflect on that fact that the European Union's total share of world trade, excluding the United Kingdom, has fallen by 11 per cent. since 1992, while the UK's has increased by 9 per cent., mostly to NAFTA? In that time, the United States has created 13 million jobs and the euro zone has lost 700,000.

Mr. Fabricant: I thank my hon. Friend for his intervention. It shows that Europe has much to learn from the United States. As I shall say later, it seems that at present Europe is trying to exclude the United States, at Europe's cost.

Some vested political interests claim that European markets account for 60 per cent. of our foreign trade, but the Office for National Statistics pink book reveals that the true figure is a shade over 48 per cent., and even that, valuable as it is, can hide almost as much as it reveals. For example, a substantial portion of our trade with Europe takes the form of goods, such as motor cars, which are exported immediately, often to the United States. Those substantial re-exports constitute trade through, rather than with, Europe. That should not be used to exaggerate our economic reliance on a continent with which the United Kingdom has a massive trading deficit, probably as a result of the matter mentioned by my hon. Friend.

The telecommunications revolution and computing—especially the rise of the internet—have closed the gap between the UK and US economies to the point that it is vanishing altogether. Dominated by a common language, the internet represents the death of distance once predicted by the makers of jet airplanes and express trains. The cheapest international call that one may make from the United Kingdom is now not to Ireland, Germany or France but to the United States. A tunnel may traverse the short distance to Calais, but a new cyber tunnel across the Atlantic affords far speedier access to the United States.

Anglo-American relations are as fused in the defence of democracy as they are in trade and technology. Thrown together in two world wars, the United Kingdom and the United States went on to form an alliance against communist expansion, which came into practical effect during the Malayan and Korean campaigns. Between 1975 and 1989, our two nations stood alone among major western countries in devoting more than 4 per cent. of gross domestic product to defence and exerting financial pressure on the Kremlin that eventually brought Gorbachev to the negotiating table and the cold war to an end.

A firm mutual belief in confronting one's enemies characterised Anglo-American defence relations throughout the 1980s and 1990s. I shall give a brief history lesson to illustrate the reciprocity that marked Anglo-American defence relations between 1980 and 1985. In January 1980, the Conservative Government rightly announced support for 160 US nuclear missiles to be stationed in the UK to counter the threat from SS20 missiles deployed by the Soviet Union. In 1981, Britain declared its wholehearted support for President Reagan's plan to set up a rapid deployment force to be dispatched to trouble spots throughout the world. That force was the forerunner of today's rapid reaction forces.

In 1981, the United States sold the United Kingdom second-generation Trident missiles at a considerable discount, I am happy to say. The US also provided crucial assistance to our Falklands campaign in 1982. In 1983, we contributed military support to a US peacekeeping force that prevented Syria engaging in the Lebanon conflict. Such an engagement would have been disastrous. The well-revived Anglo-American relationship then went on to manifest itself in a host of different areas in the second half of the 1980s.

So much for the past, the cold war is no more and defence expenditure—although higher in the UK and US than in continental Europe—has been slashed. What of the present? When a poll for The Economist in November 1999 asked who was the UK's most reliable ally in a crisis, 59 per cent. of respondents cited the United States, despite the ending of the cold war. Only 16 per cent. of respondents paid Europe that compliment. Similarly, when respondents in the American social attitudes survey are asked who is their most reliable ally, they reply, year after year, that the honour of that status goes to the UK, above even Canada.

Regrettably and unnecessarily, the special relationship between the United Kingdom and United States—so long the linchpin of world security—is coming under strain from growing European integration. In trade and defence, the mutual interests underpinning the Atlantic alliance have been ill served by EU policies targeted, sometimes unashamedly, at challenging or frustrating the United States.

The repeated attempts of former EU Commissioner Sir Leon Brittan to secure a free trade agreement betweeen EU and NAFTA countries collapsed as a result of French fears about US dumping. Sadly, many politicians in Paris are hostile to such a deal ever being concluded. Rather than link with a genuine free trade area, such as NAFTA, or press for free trade agreements through worldwide bodies such as the WTO, the European Union has chosen to secure bilateral trade deals between itself and smaller economies. By creating a patchwork of varying trade deals throughout the world, the EU seeks not so much free trade as favourable terms with parties too weak on their own to resist its protectionist demands.

Even the United Kingdom has suffered from the protectionist instincts of some EU countries. As recently as 16 March, manufacturers of milk chocolate in the UK, including the well-known brand of Cadbury's in the west midlands, learned the good news that its product is to be allowed into certain European markets for the first time in 30 years. Hurrah for British chocolate!

What about defence? European nations have been making drastic cuts in expenditure at exactly the same time as they seek to create, as the President of the European Commission Romano Prodi has made clear, a fully fledged European army. According to President Chirac:

> The object of the European defence identity is to contain the United States.

[Mr. Fabricant]

That is some quote—quite extraordinary. Speaking in Paris in December, Chancellor Schröder echoed President Chirac's comment, stating:

whining about US dominance is not good enough. We have to act.

Such anti-American rhetoric may go down well with continental audiences but it certainly does not reflect British interests. The UK might not have cause for concern if the anti-American streak within European integration remained rhetorical. Yet, as Dr. John Hulseman, senior European affairs analyst at the Washington-based Heritage Foundation, pointed out:

We need to stop thinking that European rhetoric isn't serious, that it is just a cultural eccentricity. Rather it reflects the honest beliefs of a people that have very different political and economic agendas from our own."

The difference between the Anglo-American and the Continental perspectives to which Dr. Hulseman referred surfaces time and again whenever crucial interests are at stake. In December 1999, France abstained from a crucial vote in the UN Security Council on sanctions against Iraq. On 18 January, France allied herself with Russia and China in opposing Anglo-American moves to appoint Rolf Ekeus, a Swede with great experience of arms control, to oversee the destruction of Iraqi weapons.

Each of these cases—and there are so many more—exposes a fundamental mismatch between the Anglo-American emphasis on free trade and active defence and the continental tradition of military equivocation and economic protectionism.

However, there is an historic opportunity now to narrow the gap between our treaty commitments to the EU and our cultural and historic commitments to the United States. The opportunity to narrow this gap is being created not in London, and certainly—of course—not in Brussels, but in Washington DC and elsewhere in north America. I repeat that I am not convinced that the US Senate Finance Committee will lead to our joining NAFTA; indeed, this is not possible without a change being made to the treaty of Rome. However, there is a nexus of events and circumstances that we would be foolish and irresponsible to ignore.

If the IOD and other economists are right, and there is no net benefit—indeed, a cost—to our membership of the EU, we must renegotiate our terms of membership. We owe that to our farmers, fishermen and pensioners and to the wealth creators in our society. Expansion in the EU to absorb the eastern European states, which I welcome, will worsen the cost-benefit outcome for Britain unless we renegotiate our treaty obligations to the EU. Such renegotiation is therefore urgent, and should include the repatriation of Britain's right to enter into its own individual bilateral treaties with other nations.

Let me make it clear that renegotiation is not a code for withdrawal; it is a code for commonsense economics. I remind the wishy-washy folk in the Foreign Office—I hope that the Minister is not one of them—who say that renegotiation is impossible that Mrs. Thatcher knew that in Europe, as elsewhere in life, he who pays the piper calls the tune. Britain is a major contributor to the EU budget.

The current position is unsustainable. The future without renegotiation will be impossible. I am not driven by anti-European feelings—I speak French and German and have friends in those countries. I understand the reasons why Europe, which has endured two European wars in the past century, causing border changes and huge migration, wants to move towards political integration. That is natural, but what is right for continental Europe is not right for Britain. Even my French friends refer to "les Anglo-Saxons", automatically linking Britain with the United States, Canada, Australia and New Zealand. They instinctively understand what is logical and right.

Britain's membership of NAFTA, while staying in a looser, freer EU, is both logical and right. My purpose is not to argue for any specific option under investigation by the United States Senate. I call upon the Government and the Opposition to prepare and reflect upon specific proposals to move the special relationship forward for the benefit of all our people and to shield it from anti-American pressure.

Although Anglo-American relations may, as Churchill put it, roll on like the Mississippi, even that great river has several forks in its path. If the United Kingdom's membership of the EU is not to constitute such a fork, we must act now for all our sakes. We must actively investigate how to strengthen that relationship, the success of which is vital to this country and, as history records, the world.

1.22 pm

The Minister of State, Foreign and Commonwealth Office (Mr. John Battle): It is usual to give a customary word of congratulation to the hon. Member for Lichfield (Mr. Fabricant) on securing the debate. His tenacity in pursuing causes is well known and appreciated with serious affection.

I shall comment on the points that he makes in the few moments that he has left me to reply. First, he suggests joining the North American Free Trade Area, but that is not a good idea. Secondly, he suggests renegotiating the treaties of Rome and Maastricht, but that is a disingenuous cover for withdrawal. Thirdly, he suggests that the benefits of joining NAFTA would greatly outweigh those of our EU membership, but the benefits of being in the EU greatly outweigh those of joining NAFTA. Fourthly, the Americans prefer us to be in the EU, not to withdraw from it.

Mr. Fabricant: I did not say that we should join NAFTA instead of the EU. I am surprised that the Minister fell into that trap.

Mr. Battle: If the hon. Gentleman will give me a chance to reply, I shall tell him precisely why it is not possible to join NAFTA without withdrawing from the EU, which the International Trade Commission acknowledges in its terms of reference. Crucially, those terms of reference refer to the EU, but that point is missed because the Opposition say that they will construct a purely hypothetical model.

It is disingenuous of the hon. Gentleman to argue that we could remain in the EU if we were to join NAFTA. He acknowledged that changes to the treaty of Rome would be needed. He sat through the Maastricht debates. He is simply pretending that we can be members of both. He argues that that would bring us closer to the EU, but he does not say that joining NAFTA would inevitably mean leaving the EU, with disastrous consequences for jobs, trade and foreign investment in Britain. I would prefer it if the hon. Gentleman openly said, "Let us leave the EU and form other relationships", because that is the implication of his arguing that we should join NAFTA. Let him say openly that we should leave the EU.

The hon. Gentleman referred to the report published by the Institute of Directors. The press release of 14 March, which launched the IOD report on the costs of EU memberships, states:

> There are no simple solutions. Withdrawal from the EU to the EEA—

the European Economic Area—> would expose the UK to regulation without representation. This is why the IoD argues that the UK should remain within the EU and fight for radical reform from the inside.

That is what our Government are doing. It is what the Prime Minister did at the Lisbon summit last week.

Joining NAFTA would mean leaving the EU, as it would be incompatible with the Single European Act that set up the single market in 1987 under Baroness Thatcher. We do not intend to join NAFTA and leave the EU. It would not be in our interests because more than half our overseas trade is with the EU—59 per cent. of our exports and 54 per cent. of our imports. NAFTA now accounts for only 16 per cent. of our exports. That does not include our total trade with the EU, which is £240 billion, as opposed to £79 billion with NAFTA. Not only big exporters are involved: 30 to 40 per cent. of Britain's small and medium enterprises now do business with the EU.

The European single market comprises 372 million customers, or 38 per cent. of world trade. Three and a half million British jobs depend on that trade to some extent. The EU will be enlarged to more than 500 million customers and will be the largest market for trade and investment in the world. Leaving it would jeopardise foreign direct investment. More than 44,000 jobs were generated by that investment in the past year. I cannot imagine companies choosing to invest in the UK to gain access to NAFTA the other side of the Atlantic. The UK would not be an investment springboard for entry to NAFTA, so leaving the EU and moving to NAFTA, for which the hon. Member for Lichfield argued, would jeopardise our economy.

Mr. Fabricant: On a point of order, Madam Deputy Speaker. The Minister keeps saying that I said and implied that, but I made it clear that I did not do so.

Mr. Battle: The hon. Gentleman—

Madam Deputy Speaker: Order. Please could we pretend to be civilised? That is not a point of order.

Mr. Battle: The hon. Gentleman cannot have it both ways. The argument will not stack up. He cannot argue for our joining NAFTA without our leaving the EU. He does not seem to recognise that, but everyone else does. Our relationship with the United States is of fundamental importance. Our political relationships are strong. The Government of the US have warmly welcomed the European defence initiative, which strengthens rather than undermines the North Atlantic Treaty Organisation. Our economic ties with the US are stronger than ever and 40 per cent. of all US investment in Europe is in the UK already.

It is because we are in the European Union that our influence in the US is so strong and significant. Our Government play a full role in Europe and are deeply engaged in shaping it, and that is why we are strong partners with the US. Raymond Seitz, former US ambassador to Britain, said:

> if Britain's voice is less influential in Paris or Bonn, it is likely to be less influential in Washington.

In his book, "Over Here", he said:

> the option of leaving the Union altogether . . . is a flimsy proposition, unlikely to gain much traction except with the graspers of straws . . . Standing between America and Europe . . . was never either-or. It always had to be both . . . If Britain is not part of important European decision-making, it is less likely to be important in American decision-making, and vice-versa. If Britain is aloof from developments on the continent, it is bound to be more marginal in America.

That is why we are engaged at the heart of Europe, shaping the agenda of the future, as the Prime Minister demonstrated at the Lisbon summit. We are building a truly single market, driving forward a modern agenda and using technology as a means to generate employment through innovation, enterprise and imagination.

The hon. Member for Lichfield may now gain a reputation as a straw grasper, but I suspect that he is an outrider for the Leader of the Opposition, who is covertly campaigning to join NAFTA. That is merely a covert strategy to withdraw from the EU, which is why the Foreign Secretary spelled out that the Tories are prepared to jeopardise British jobs to justify their extreme anti-European prejudices.

Immigration and Nationality Directorate

1.29 pm

Ms Diane Abbott (Hackney, North and Stoke Newington): At the beginning of the new millennium, millions of people are criss-crossing the globe, seeking asylum from war, disease, starvation and economic collapse. That is the context in which all western European countries are experiencing a rise in the number of asylum seekers. The majority of asylum seekers find asylum within their own regions, whether in Africa, the middle east or the Balkans. Only a minority find their way to western Europe, America or Canada.

The number of asylum seekers has risen as a result of civil war and economic problems around the world. A fair, efficient, transparent legal system must be at the heart of meeting the challenge of that sad army so that asylum claims can be dealt with. Hon. Members and perhaps even Ministers may believe that a more punitive line is in order. Whatever one's views on asylum seekers, fairness, efficiency and transparency must be at the heart of the system for dealing with claims.

My hon. Friend the Minister will not need to be reminded that we inherited an extremely bad position from the Conservative party. However, I do not want to detain the Chamber on the iniquities of the previous Administration. Three years into a Labour Administration and with a general election in sight, it is appropriate and necessary to examine our stewardship of the issue.

Ministers have addressed the matter and done many good things, as my staff and I have seen for ourselves. For example, we welcome the Members' hotline, and are grateful for the helpfulness and enthusiasm of those staffing it. Sadly, however, it cannot deal with asylum cases. We welcome the fact that a backlog squad has been set up, which, as we have seen, is enthusiastic and well led and managed. Unfortunately, however, it does not deal with asylum cases.

We welcome the reforms of the initial consideration unit, which, as we have witnessed, is enthusiastic, well led and doing good work. However, I remind Ministers that more than 100,000 asylum seekers are waiting for their application to be processed. That figure may not be exact, but I am sure that my hon. Friend the Minister will provide me with the most up-to-date figure.

I remind Ministers that the backlog of asylum seekers has risen under the present Government. Last May, when the Immigration and Asylum Bill was in Committee, the backlog stood at about 70,000, and it is distressing that it continues to rise. It is important to put on record the problems for individuals and communities caused by delays in dealing with asylum cases. Uncertainty about what people are to do with their lives sometimes continues for months and years. This morning, I interviewed a series of asylum seekers, many of whom have waited for months and even years for their case to be resolved.

Practical problems are also caused by such delays. People cannot get driving licences, have difficulty claiming benefit and cannot travel abroad to study or for a family funeral. The Minister's constituency adjoins mine and its population is similar, so she will be aware that people experience many practical difficulties as a result of the delay in dealing with asylum cases.

Furthermore, the biggest incentive for people to make an unfounded in-country asylum claim is the long delay in processing such claims. People have known for a long time that at the end of the road—they may have applied as a student and many times subsequently—making another asylum claim will effectively give them several more years in the country.

Ministers have much to say about unfounded cases, so one of the most effective actions that they could take would be to choke off unfounded in-country applications, often made in good faith on advice from solicitors. I know that Ministers have acted against the worst immigration-advising solicitors. One of the most effective weapons against ill-founded in-country claims would be to deal with delays.

Next week we expect—the Minister will correct me if I am wrong—the implementation of the system of voucher-based support for new asylum seekers, and forced dispersal, which were debated at length in Committee and on the Floor of the House. The Minister and her officials who have read Hansard will know that I contributed extensively to those debates. Over and over again, we were reassured by Ministers, "Yes, the voucher system amounts to less in total than income support"—that means people living below subsistence levels—"but only for two months initially and six months if there is an appeal." The argument behind the voucher system and forced dispersal is that people will be in the system only for short periods. Ministers promised that on the Floor of the House, and it provides another reason to focus on delays in dealing with asylum cases.

As I said earlier, the backlog of asylum cases has increased—almost doubled—during the Government's period of office. There have been some improvements. I understand that the most recently available monthly statistics show that the number of cases successfully dealt with increased from about 2,000 to 8,000 per month. The greater speed in dealing with new cases is obviously welcome but it does not help people who have been waiting in this country throughout the 1990s for their asylum cases to be dealt with.

One way of increasing the speed of dealing with new cases is to dish out a 14-page standard evidence form and not give people enough time to fill it in. When it is not filled in properly or gaps are left, a technical refusal is made. That amounts to pushing up the numbers by sleight of hand. I shall be interested to hear the Minister's comments about that.

Let me remind my hon. Friend the Minister, who is new to her position, of the commitment made by her predecessors to clearing up the backlog and reducing the time of decision making. Her predecessor, my hon. Friend the Member for North Warwickshire (Mr. O'Brien) said on 4 May in the Special Standing Committee considering the Asylum and Immigration Bill:

> Our target is to reduce the time . . . to two months for an initial decision and a further four months for an appeal.—[Official Report, Special Standing Committee, 4 May 1999; c. 1245.]

He later said:

> The Government have committed themselves to reducing the time taken to process asylum applications. We have set the target of bringing that time down to six months and below.—[Official Report, Special Standing Committee, 18 May 1999; c. 1601.]

The Minister will also be aware of the report signed by management consultants brought in by the Home Office, which was published last year. It states:

> At present, delays occur at each stage of the asylum process. These are primarily caused by: process inefficiencies, a lack of resources and a lack of cross directorate prioritisation. If there were no backlogs and adequate resources were available, we consider that process inefficiencies alone would prevent IND from achieving the two month target.

I now want to ask the Minister some specific questions. If she is unable to reply to them in our debate now, I would be grateful if she would write to me.

Mr. Jeremy Corbyn (Islington, North): Does my hon. Friend share my concern that, in the rush of dealing with cases, there is an overwhelming presumption against many asylum applicants from countries that are democratic on the face of it—they have independent legal systems—but in which the reality on the ground is different? I am thinking of the treatment of Roma people in the Czech Republic, which is a democracy on the face of it, but allows Roma people to suffer constant race harassment and attacks. I am worried that hardly any Roma cases have been granted asylum because of the presumption to which I referred.

Ms Abbott: I agree with my hon. Friend. I, too, am deeply concerned. This morning, I met one of my constituents, a Jewish gentleman from Georgia—one of the former Soviet republics—who has applied for asylum here. He is an Orthodox Jew and wears the full costume of that religion. He has lived here for eight years. When he went back to Georgia, he was subjected to appalling harassment because those ex-Soviet republics have a history of antisemitism. However, technically, Georgia is a democracy. It issues statements declaring that it is against antisemitism, so the Minister has refused to grant this man asylum and he does not know what to do. He is being sent back to a society that has a history of persecution of Jews going back to the 19th century, but, on the basis of the technical nature of the state of Georgia and the statements of its Ministers, he is going back to certain persecution. I personally brought his case to the Minister's predecessor's attention and was extremely disappointed by the response.

We were promised in May last year that the backlog of cases would be cleared by April 2001. Is the Immigation and Nationality Directorate on target to clear the backlog by spring 2001? When we debated the subject of backlogs in waiting lists, and delays, we were promised by my hon. Friend's predecessor in Committee that the Immigration and Nationality Directorate was recruiting new staff. When I asked him how many new clerical staff would be recruited, he could not tell me. Can the Minister now say how many clerical staff have been taken on since May last year, which was the last time I raised the matter? If not, will she write to me? I should also like to know how many new decision makers have been recruited?

I would welcome any information about the position with the computer system. Many past delays have been connected with Siemens and the computers. Is it true, as my staff and I have been told, that new applicants for asylum will not be given a full interview until 2001? If so, that makes nonsense of the promises given to hon. Members a year ago that the processing time for new claims would come down to two months. Are 29,000 asylum files to be sent to Glasgow? It seems extraordinary—given that, in the coming weeks, my colleagues and I will be asking questions about asylum seeker cases—that, during that time, the files will be somewhere on the M1. If they are to be sent to Glasgow, when will they be returned so that work on them can begin?

The burden of my comments has been about the backlog of applications because I and other hon. Members know that an increasing number of asylum seekers have been waiting for some years for their applications to be determined.

I want to ask about the situation with travel documents. There used to be a same-day service for people seeking travel documents, but as far as I know it no longer exists. We hear constantly from constituents who have applied for travel documents. Recently, relatives of Turkish earthquake victims were unable to travel because they did not have documents. People who have to study, take jobs or attend funerals abroad have the same problem.

We have been told off the record by IND staff that the number of travel documents that are lost is a disgrace. Why, then, when departmental staff suggested that, as part of the process, people applying for travel documents be charged an extra fee to cover their return by recorded delivery, management turned it down? There would have been no cost to the IND and it seems a very practical suggestion that would have got round the problem of documents being lost, but management did nothing. When will the Government introduce an effective system for tracking lost travel documents? Staff have suggested to us that a bar code could be used. Each week in my advice sessions I see people who may have a family emergency or illness but are unable to travel because of what is happening in the travel documents section.

I have to touch on the general question of the ministerial case-working team. We understand that the team is only now dealing with letters sent to them in October and November. Members of Parliament have a democratic responsibility to take up issues on behalf of our constituents. It really is not good enough that the IND is only now dealing with cases that go back to October. We believe that there is no monitoring in the ministerial case-working team and that individual case workers have no targets. I think that I speak for every colleague who deals with nationality case work when I say that something must be done about the number of staff and, more importantly, about management, monitoring and targets, to enable Members of Parliament to obtain replies to their letters within a reasonable time.

When we write to the Department, we have to wait four or six months, or longer, for a reply. People come back to us week after week, but what are we to tell them? When a member of my staff asked a member of the ministerial case-working team, "How long is it taking you to deal with our letters?" he or she replied, "How long is a piece of string?" I put it to the Minister that that is not a satisfactory response to Members of Parliament who are trying to carry out their democratic duty.

[Ms Abbott]

My final point concerns the work-in-progress queue. The majority of the work with which my office currently deals relates to immigration and nationality matters, most of which involves asylum cases. We often find when we ring the Members' hotline that work is in the work-in-progress queue, so when my staff visited Croydon, we asked to see that queue. Let me tell hon. Members what the work-in-progress queue is. It is a basement in Croydon in which thousands of files are piled up. We were told that all work that was unfinished at the time of the move to C block from Lunar house—we know that the location has recently changed—was dumped in the basement. My members of staff saw those dumped files with their own eyes.

It is not good enough to tell Members of Parliament and their staff on the telephone that cases are in the work-in-progress queue when they are merely in a basement. If the Minister did not see those files on her recent visit to Croydon, she should return and ask to do so. We saw them.

Although I have expressed my concerns—which are shared by many other hon. Members—about what is happening, to the asylum backlog in particular but to immigration and case work generally, I pay tribute to the hard work of many of the members of staff involved. The Minister should encourage staff to make suggestions. We visited Croydon a week after she had been there, but staff told us that they were not encouraged to speak to her and that they felt that they could not make practical suggestions. Attitudes vary from team to team, but the teams to which I have specifically referred are well led and have enthusiastic and motivated staff. However, that was not true of all the staff who we encountered in Croydon.

During past months, there has been rising hysteria in the popular press about asylum seekers. Such hysteria sheds more heat than light on the subject. I could not leave the debate without putting on record my distaste for the tone in which politicians and the media discuss economic migrants. I entirely accept that many people who apply for asylum are not asylum seekers under the Geneva convention rules. However, to talk about people who have left collapsing economies, disease, dislocation and chaos and who are trying to do the best for their families as if they are a criminal underclass does no credit to the acute fears and pressures that sometimes force people to cross the globe to Europe to seek a better life for their children and families.

The Minister's family still lives in my constituency. With our background, she and I should have no truck with people who say not that asylum seekers do not meet the terms of the Geneva convention—we know that many of them do not—but that economic migrants are a sub-species of human being. Many asylum seekers have to be turned down at the end of the day, but their demonisation and the extent to which Ministers seem to think that they have to outbid the Conservatives on this issue cause great distress to many people. I suspect that those people include many of our supporters and constituents, who do not expect to hear Labour Ministers adopting the tone of Tony Ministers when speaking about asylum seekers.

The issue is complex. Next week, the Government's new support arrangements will be introduced, involving the voucher system and forced dispersal. I shall keep a close eye on those arrangements; not only do I believe that they will cause unnecessary suffering, I am not persuaded that they will work. I wanted today to talk about the processing and management of claims in Croydon. The situation is not new and is not unique to this Government. Minister after Minister has investigated immigration and nationality and has been reassured by senior officials who say that this or that is being done. Year on year, myself and other hon. Members who deal with such case work see increasing chaos.

It is not too late for Ministers to tackle the problems. Some good initiatives have been started, but more are needed. It is unfair to asylum seekers, whether they are Geneva convention compliant or not, to engage in rhetoric about unfounded claims when the core function of Government—to deal with claims quickly, transparently, fairly and within the law—is not being carried out.

I await with interest the Minister's response to my specific questions, but she may rest assured that this is not the last occasion on which I shall raise the subject.

1.49 pm

The Minister of State, Home Office (Mrs. Barbara Roche): I will start off on a note of agreement with my hon. Friend the Member for Hackney, North and Stoke Newington (Ms Abbott), whom I congratulate on securing today's short but important debate. However, I take issue with the context in which she placed her concluding remarks. The Government want to honour our international obligations under the convention to those who flee persecution and seek asylum. The concept of asylum is an honourable and ancient one, which I, my right hon. Friend the Home Secretary and the Government want to preserve, but in order to do that we must say that those who make unfounded applications will be swiftly returned.

My hon. Friend omitted from her speech any reference to the worldwide criminal smuggling of people, which is helping many people to make large sums of money from others who are especially vulnerable. It is a pity that she did not mention that.

Ms Abbot: I did not mention worldwide smuggling because, as far as I understand, Ministers have no responsibility for that, so it would have been pointless to raise it.

Mrs. Roche: I believe that we have a responsibility for the consequences of smuggling and should try to combat it, along with other like-minded Governments. Perhaps my hon. Friend will be lucky enough to secure another debate in which to raise that issue, on which occasion I shall give her my full and considered response.

My hon. Friend is right to say that delays and perceived delays in the system encourage people to make unfounded claims, which is why certain measures have been implemented. She is also right to mention the role played by unscrupulous advisers and solicitors and to emphasise the need to eradicate backlogs from the system. I put on record my thanks to her for speaking about the hotline staff, and I am pleased about the visit that will take place. Let me assure her that I visit Croydon frequently; my route there is well worn. I am virtually not only immigration Minister, but Minister for Croydon. I assure her that I encourage staff to speak to me and I visit all the teams. I recently attended the forum that has been set up to enable staff to speak to management. I also recently attended a meeting of the unions there, and I meet them regularly. There are no difficulties in that area.

My hon. Friend mentioned the Vantage point report. That report is fairly old, but we have recognised its recommendations. She also mentioned some recent cases. I believe that it is invidious to mention individual cases in this sort of forum, but I say to her and to my hon. Friend the Member for Islington, North (Mr. Corbyn) that such cases do not involve only a decision by the Home Office. A case goes to an adjudicator and to a tribunal both independent bodies set up by Parliament.

Mr. Corbyn: The issue of the perception of the human rights situation in various countries frequently arises. The Home Office was due to set up its own evaluation unit. I should be grateful to know what progress has been made on that and what assessment is made of newly democratised countries in which there are still human rights abuses.

Mrs. Roche: As my hon. Friend will know, we publish our country assessments, so they are available for everyone to see. We do not rely only on reports from the Foreign and Commonwealth Office. We also consult non-governmental organisations, Amnesty International, Oxfam and a range of organisations.

My hon. Friend the Member for Hackney, North and Stoke Newington spoke about dealing with Members' asylum cases. She and my hon. Friend the Member for Islington, North will be pleased to know that we are setting up a case management unit specifically to deal with such cases. That will be warmly welcomed.

In the short time left to me, I shall deal with some of the difficulties. My hon. Friend the Member for Hackney, North and Stoke Newington is quite right that the debate is about the present Government's record. However, we are still suffering from the plans made by the previous Administration to reduce the number of posts by a total of 1,200 in anticipation of the efficiencies that will result from the introduction of a computerised casework system. She will know that the Public Accounts Committee criticised that as an over-ambitious project. We are recovering from those plans. I know that much remains to be done by the present Administration, but we have done a lot already.

Last year, we began a substantial programme to increase the number of staff. That has already resulted in hundreds of additional staff, and more are planned. New working processes have been developed to speed up the time taken to decide applications without compromising quality. Those processes seek to obtain the maximum amount of information from applicants at the outset. Pilot exercises at Heathrow and Dover are testing new procedures for port applicants. Substantive asylum interviews are conducted on the day of arrival, and an e-mail link to the Croydon computer system enables case papers to be sent electronically, which enables quick decisions to be taken.

Partly as a consequence of those changes, but also as a result of the massive intake of staff, the number of initial decisions has increased enormously. I do not know that only because I am a Minister. The profile of cases in my constituency is similar to my hon. Friend's, so I know the problem from my own case work. In February, 7,840 decisions were made—the highest monthly total ever recorded. As a result, the number of decisions now exceeds the number of new applications. The backlog of cases is therefore beginning to reduce.

The February total of just over 103,000 is still too high but, for the first time since March 1998, it has reduced. I am not complacent about that. There is much more still to do, but it is an improvement. We expect to make significant inroads into the backlog by late spring, and we aim for a substantial reduction by April 2001. We have all but cleared the backlog of pre-1993 cases, and we expect to clear the backlog of 1993–95 cases by the summer.

I reassure my hon. Friend on one point. She spoke about asylum cases being transferred to Glasgow. They are being transferred for recategorisation. That is necessary to allow us to reorganise about 29,000 cases in the case allocation unit so that we can identify work screens for them. However, that exercise will last for only three weeks; the files will be back in Croydon by 17 April. We want to speed up the work as much as we can.

My hon. Friend mentioned the targets for new cases, particularly new family cases, under the new scheme, which will be introduced on 3 April. We started using targets for new family cases at the beginning of November 1999, and we are already meeting those targets for new applications from families with children. The new processes and the increase in the number of staff are designed to ensure that, from April 2001, most new claims are decided within two months, as envisaged in the immigration and asylum White Paper. We are already doing exactly what we said that we would do.

There is a great deal of work yet to be done. I am grateful for what my hon. Friend the Member for Hackney, North and Stoke Newington said about the commitment and enthusiasm of the staff, who are working incredibly hard against a difficult background. We are making progress, which is shown by the record number of decisions. We are beginning to deliver a policy that is firm, fair and fast, a policy that recognises the needs of genuine claimants while deterring those who would seek to abuse the system. Those who make unfounded claims are the enemy of the genuine asylum seeker.

Question put and agreed to.

Adjourned accordingly at Two o'clock.

Westminster Hall

Thursday 30 March 2000

[MR MICHAEL J. MARTIN in the Chair]

Women and Development

Motion made, and Question proposed, That the sitting be now adjourned.—[Mr. Sutcliffe.]

2.30 pm

Mr. Bowen Wells (Hertford and Stortford): I am grateful to have the opportunity to speak on what I regard as one of the most important subjects, not just for international development but for human society as a whole. Women constitute half the human population, and are of huge importance. I want this debate to initiate an understanding of the problems faced by women among not only women but men and the whole community. That is important in terms of achieving the international target of reducing poverty by half by 2015, which is closely related to the issue of women and development and their status in the world.

The Minister will know that the White Paper stated that the Government's prime objective was to achieve that international target. Women comprise 70 per cent. of the world's abjectly poor, so it is inevitable that if the objective is to be addressed seriously, the nature of, and remedies for, women's poverty must be understood and acted on. Of the 1.3 billion poorest people in the world, more than a third, or 450 million, live in India, 14.8 million live in Pakistan and 30 million live in Bangladesh. That is a total of 494.8 million women in abject poverty. The International Development Committee visited those three countries to learn at first hand why so many poor women lived in the sub-continent, and what could be done to help them out of poverty. Unless help is provided, the objective of reducing world poverty by half by 2015 cannot be achieved.

The first statistic that smacks an inquirer in the face is the one that shows that the gender balance is reversed in the three countries that I mentioned. In most human societies, the population is 52 per cent. female and 48 per cent. male—106 females to 100 males. In the early years, the male is much more vulnerable to illness and death than the female. Despite that, India, Pakistan and Bangladesh manage to achieve a population in which there are more males than females. In those countries, there are 94 females to 100 males, and the ratio is declining still further—it has declined during the past 50 years. In sub-Saharan Africa, where poverty is also rampant, the figures are better, but they are still alarming—102 females to 100 males. We concluded in paragraph 19 of our report "Women and Development":

> The declining sex ratio in India provides a stark and shocking indication of the true extent and impact of women's low status in society, their lack of access to basic health and education services, and the discrimination and violence which continues to threaten their chances of survival.

Faced with such statistics, we must ask why that situation is so apparent in India, Pakistan and Bangladesh. We know that it is not the inevitable result of the culture and approach to life because, in our contacts with those countries, many of us have met sophisticated and powerful women, including the Prime Ministers of India and of Bangladesh.

The Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for International Development (Mr. George Foulkes): And the Leader of the Opposition.

Mr. Wells: Yes, the Prime Minister and the Leader of the Opposition in Bangladesh are both women. There seems to be a curious contrast, which is difficult to explain.

The Committee visited many areas where women were suffering, including, much to the amusement of many of my colleagues, two brothels, one in west Calcutta and one in Bogra in Bangladesh. I shall explain later why we felt it necessary to visit them, but I shall begin at the beginning of life and explain what happens to female children in infancy and childhood.

Modern methods allow the sex of a foetus to be ascertained and amniocentesis is being used ruthlessly in middle-class India, Bangladesh and Pakistan. When it is established that a foetus is female, the foetus is often aborted. There are more traditional ways of disposing of female foetuses and children, including direct infanticide. First, a female child may be fed on the breast for a shorter time and, therefore, will be less able to withstand attack by the variety of viruses and infections that confront young children. Secondly, if there is not enough food for the whole household, a boy child will be fed, but the girl child will not. If they have not succumbed to death in the first five years, many female children will be brain damaged due to a lack of food and unable to take advantage of education, if it were offered. There is a hugh preponderance of illiterate women and girls in India, Pakistan and Bangladesh, the whole of Africa and many parts of Asia. The appalling statistics are not confined to India, Pakistan and Bangladesh.

Education and the way in which children grow up can provide an exit from the appalling statistics. If a female child is educated, she will want to educate her children, whether they are male or female, when she becomes a mother. That is the solution to the problem of education for women, but due to the abject poverty in many areas of India, Pakistan and Bangladesh, female children are not educated because malnourishment has caused brain damage during childhood. Some female children are not offered any education.

If, by chance, female children have been able to achieve basic literacy by the time they reach adolescence, they are often taken out of school at the age of 10, 11 or 12 and are married and already having children by the age of 12, 13 or 14. Then the cycle of illiteracy, malnourishment and infanticide goes on. This is the cycle that somehow the world must break, if we are not only to achieve just rights for women but to confront the issue of abject poverty in the world.

In adolescence, the female may also be subjected to domestic violence, which takes a number of unpleasant forms. There are the dowry deaths in India; if the female is sold into marriage with a dowry, but the dowry is considered inadequate, she may be abused physically and mentally in the husband's family, whom she had probably never met before she married. There are also sati deaths. As you may know, Mr. Deputy Speaker, the wife of a dead husband is expected to throw herself on his funeral pyre and die with him.

[Mr. Wells]

In Bangladesh in particular, there is now the most appalling growing abuse of throwing acid at the wife if she has not performed in accordance with male needs. The most disgraceful episodes of that have recently come to the attention of the western press.

Mr. Andrew Robathan (Blaby): My hon. Friend will know that the part of the Select Committee with which I was travelling went to Pakistan, where, I submit, the cases may be even worse. In Lahore, the practice of stove burning, which we would call murder and mutilation, is prevalent. The report states that at any one time in Lahore alone between 60 and 70 women are dying of burns, many of which are presumed, and likely, to have been caused by deliberate stove burning by their husbands or in-laws. That is yet another awful indicator of what happens in parts of the sub-continent.

Mr. Wells: Yes, indeed. My hon. Friend will remember the evidence given to us by Dr. Kate Young of Womankind, in which she talked about that kind of death for many women and referred to acid burning, particularly in Bangladesh. The World bank calculates that rape and domestic violence account for about 5 per cent. of the total disease burden among women aged between 15 and 44. Stove deaths are another manifestation of the same disregard lack of respect and care for women.

The figures for maternal mortality in the whole of India, Pakistan and Bangladesh are shocking and the deaths are almost entirely unnecessary and preventable. Dr. Kate Young also gave the Committee evidence on this subject. She said:

> Maternal mortality—lack of family planning resources, high demands on women's fertility, and lack of birth spacing, combining with existing poor health conditions (ie anaemia and malnutrition) strains women's health.

That can result in their death, during or after giving birth.

Only by trying to improve the lot of women who suffer such abuses can we begin to find a solution. It is a matter not simply of looking after sexual and reproductive health but of taking care of the female child when she is confronted with normal childhood diseases such as measles or, on the sub-continent, malaria and tuberculosis. Often the female child is simply not taken to any kind of medical care and consequently dies.

Mrs. Cheryl Gillan (Chesham and Amersham): My hon. Friend mentioned malaria. Does he agree that the implications of a future malarial insurgence in Mozambique and the part of Africa that suffered severe flooding are very worrying? Does he agree that it would be helpful if the Minister could tell us what aid had been lined up for that area to help it to cope with the malarial infection that is expected to follow the flooding? Such an outbreak would disproportionately affect the population in that area, compared with the rest of Africa.

Mr. Wells: Any area hit by a major humanitarian disaster of the kind that has afflicted Mozambique must confront exaggerated and exacerbated health problems, including malaria, TB and, possibly, cholera. I have heard reports that although cholera has not yet broken out, it is an ever-present danger, especially in areas of flooding in which the population is vulnerable to water-borne diseases. In such cases, women are likely to be more vulnerable because they are probably less well fed than their male counterparts, whether adults or children.

The problems are not confined to health care and education. Women are often employed in difficult working conditions. Let us take the most common example, that of cooking for the household. In Pakistan, Bangladesh and India we saw very rudimentary housing with no windows, in which women were expected to spend almost all their lives. They were not expected to go out in public. The stoves in those houses filled the rooms with fumes and smoke throughout the day and night, because the women were expected to provide the food for the family and for her husband on his return. Dark, smoke-filled kitchens are a serious danger to women's health and to their lives. Women also perform all the menial and sanitary tasks around the house—I shall not go into details. Such work endangers their health and many women die as a result. Not only do women not own any property but they are the property either of their husband or of other male family members. They do not even own their children or the products of their labour. Those belong to the men.

What are the solutions to these problems? Before we get too depressed, we must recognise that there are solutions; the problems can be addressed and the conditions can be altered. The status of women in this country has altered dramatically. Even in my lifetime, women have achieved the vote. Actually, it was a little earlier than that. My mother achieved the vote in 1930, and I was born in 1935. While all men and women over 30 achieved the vote in 1918, women under 30 were not entitled to vote until 1928, so we must not congratulate ourselves too much on our treatment of women.

This is an international problem, but it can be solved. We have evidence of that, in the presence in this Chamber of some excellent women Members of Parliament, who are at least the equal of their male counterparts—and possibly superior, as former Prime Minister Thatcher certainly proved.

Dr. Jenny Tonge (Richmond Park): On behalf of the women present, I cannot resist saying that I heard at lunchtime that both Uganda and South Africa have a much higher proportion of women in their legislatures than Britain does. Would the hon. Gentleman like to comment on that?

Mr. Wells: I would, because we should remember that one of India's achievements in the recent past is that a third of local government institutions are required by legislation to have at least a third of their constituencies represented by women. Although I have said many bad things about India today, I recognise that it is trying to deal with the issue. Many cultivated women, who are sensitive to their fellow females' plight, have managed to introduce such reforms.

We must consider how the statistics can be changed. They can change, and have changed, and will change further if we are determined to try to develop the political will for change in those countries. There is not a total absence of will in that respect.

Mrs. Gillan: Is my hon. Friend as pleased as I am to see many women in Westminster Hall in this debate on women and development? Does he agree that it is, however, a shame that there are not more women here, and a crying shame that there are not more men? It is equally important for men to be engaged in this debate as it is for women.

Mr. Wells: I am deeply grateful to my hon. Friend for making that point. As I intended to say later on, unless men can be brought to understand the problems with which they confront women, and to join with women in improving their status and the way in which they are treated, none of the reforms that we are trying to introduce will happen. I should like to ensure that when one is involved in a debate on women, a nasty little titter does not run round the society or informal meeting that one happens to be in. The issue is as important for men as it is for women, and we need to join together to get it right. Men need to be understanding; those who love their women—as many do—must try to make the changes that are necessary to ensure that they achieve equal status. That is what I mean when I refer to political will, which must be generated by us all. The Committee saw examples of men who had agreed to do that, and their womenfolk and children had benefited from it.

Mrs. Maria Fyfe (Glasgow, Maryhill): The problem is not merely that the abominations that are perpetrated against women in some parts of the world are ignored by Members of Parliament, whether male or female. The lack of interest among many of our male colleagues has already been noted. Economic interests are also at work. Many people are not willing to embark on a strong argument with powerful countries with which they do business. It is all very well to talk about giving more aid to appropriate non-governmental organisations and helping women's groups, but unless we tackle the root cause of the problem and tell such countries that we will not trade with them, or help them in any way, unless they stop their abmoninations against women, they will continue.

Mr. Wells: I agree with the sentiment of the hon. Lady's comments. However, I am not certain that the big stick achieves the results that she and I would like to see. We have to persuade men that it is in their interests—and those of their children, families and countries—to change the way in which they treat women. We can back that up with a bit of stick—for example, by trading fairly in terms of what we buy. I should like to say more about that, if I have time. We visited the Gap factory in Dhaka in Bangladesh, where fairer trade was being insisted on, and further measures could be taken. However, I know that other hon. Members have valuable contributions to make. I promised the hon. Member for Clydebank and Milngavie (Mr.Worthington), who has just come into the Chamber, that I would not speak for too long this afternoon.

I shall rehearse the six actions that the report recommended. We should understand the nature of women's poverty. I have given an outline of what that is. As I have said, we must increase girls' and women's access to effective basic education. That principle should extend to secondary and tertiary education. We must provide gender-sensitive services and resources for women's health. In discussing access to effective basic education, we must recognise that many girls do not have the confidence to say to their male partners, "I do not wish to have sex tonight." Nor do they think that they have the right to do so. We must provide that self-confidence. Education will enable girls to read and learn how others conduct relationships. Only when they are to some extent literate and educated will they acquire the self-respect and self-regard that will enable them to talk to their male partners on equal terms.

Of course, the provision of gender-sensitive services and resources for women's health is related to treatment in childbirth and women's understanding of their reproductive health. On our recent visit to Malawi, we were told that women there believe that a daily injection of sperm is necessary to remain healthy. We should consider what such an attitude to sex means in terms of the prevention of AIDS.

We must also improve women's access to credit and businesses. The small credit movement is a major example on which we must build. The Grameen bank, which began in Bangladesh, is now a huge concern. Minuscule amounts of money are lent for three-monthly periods at, I fear to say, high rates of interest, so that a cow, a chicken, or other goods to sell at market may be purchased. Those women have no property, and therefore no security to offer to a normal banking system. Women acting in groups have proved themselves able to help each other to repay loans. If a cow against which a woman has borrowed money dies, women join together to repay the loan and buy a new cow. Much more needs to be done, but that is a major step towards women earning a living to help themselves and their children.

We should also understand and address the root cause of women's disproportionate poverty. Why are women poorer than men? Why is there gender-based discrimination and violence? We must, above all, demonstrate political will by allocating resources, implementing relevant instruments of international agreements and national legislation, and mainstreaming gender concerns throughout all development programmes, as well as those aimed directly at women and girls.

That last point, to which I have already made reference, is one of the most important. Although today's debate is not as well attended as we would have liked, it has enabled discussion and understanding of these issues. I hope that the annual conference of the Commonwealth Parliamentary Association, which will be attended by women in London and Edinburgh, will also enable such discussion and understanding. We must encourage men to take part in such discussions.

We on the Select Committee welcomed the commitment to poverty eradication and women's empowerment as a key element of the White Paper. We also welcomed the 1997 paper entitled "Breaking the Barriers", and the consultation paper entitled "Poverty Eradication and the Empowerment of Women", which was published in February. My only complaint about that paper, copies of which are sitting on my and the Minister's desks, is that it makes no reference to the Select Committee report "Women and Development" that we are debating today. The Department for International Development should recognise that it operates in partnership with Select Committees—a partnership that should be built on and rejoiced in. Our function is to criticise, but also to support and empower poor people and help them to understand the issues.

[Mr. Wells]

Mr. Foulkes: I shall deal with the question of rejoicing in partnership later. In case hon. Members do not have the report to which the hon. Gentleman referred, additional copies can be found behind the officials.

Mr. Wells: I return to the point that was made by the hon. Member for Glasgow, Maryhill (Mrs. Fyfe) about the private sector's role. The International Development Committee went to a factory in Dhaka, Bangladesh, which produces clothes for the Gap Clothing Company. It employs many female employees, many of whom are working for the first time. The Department for International Development supported Marie Stopes International in the provision of a clinic in the factory, which taught those women how to control their fertility and practise safe sex. That would prevent their infection with HIV-AIDS and help them to control the number of children that they had, which would mean that they could continue to work. Conditions in the factory were far from perfect.

Committee members wondered why the Department for International Development was supporting such clinics with funds from taxpayers in this country. Why should not the Gap Clothing Company fund the clinic? Should we not talk to Gap and to similar companies, including B&Q, which buy from Indian sources? We could say to them, "You have got to ensure that labour conditions—the conditions in which people produce goods for you—are hygienic and are consistent with the social direction that the Government and the people of this country support."

I want to conclude by discussing HIV-AIDS, but I shall do so briefly—it is a big subject. HIV-AIDS will destroy many of our efforts in this context unless it is properly managed. That was why Committee members visited the brothel in Bogra. The fact that that brothel is 600-strong tells us something about the relations between males and females in that Muslim country. Those females—sex workers, as we must call them—were being taught English. They could be taught how to have safe sex only if they were taught how to read. They could read the instructions on a condom packet only if they were litertate. If we are to prevent HIV-AIDS from spreading, we have to start right at the beginning—it spreads fastest from brothels.

I asked to meet the owners of the brothel, and I interviewed the men concerned. I asked whether the clinic was doing their business any good, and they said that it was attracting more custom and they were doing better business. I asked whether they were getting larger profits. They said yes, and that the clinic was a very good idea. I asked, "So why don't you provide the clinic yourself?" "Oh, that would be far too expensive," they explained.

We must ensure that employers and the public and private sectors adopt the same targets in relation to education and health. Those targets must be adopted by the owners of brothels such as those in Bogra and west Calcutta, and throughout the country. That approach will give women self-confidence and help them to own property and to decide their future on equal terms.

Mrs. Fyfe: The hon. Gentleman's comments on the private sector remind me of a BBC2 programme that was broadcast last Saturday,which was about a woman who made a very modest effort to enter the private sector herself—she sold a few goods in the marketplace. Her son killed her because, according to the interpretation of Islam that is followed where she lives, what she was doing was immoral and wrong. The state did not prosecute him for her murder because his action was held to be acceptable. The problem goes even deeper than that outlined by the hon. Gentleman. The woman was making a modest effort to earn her own living, yet she was killed for her pains. To solve that problem, we need to go well beyond the attitudes and education in that village—we need to go to the top of Pakistan society and make it clear that such behaviour is not acceptable in international society.

Mr. Deputy Speaker (Mr. John McWilliam): Before I call the hon. Gentleman, I remind hon. Members that interventions should be brief.

Mr. Wells: I know of several examples of the behaviour to which the hon. Lady refers. The Select Committee also met several imams in Bangladesh who had been tackled first by the Department for International Development, which explained to them what it was trying to do for women. It tried to make them understand in terms of the Koran why such action was necessary. That is why I said to my hon. Friend the Member for Chesham and Amersham (Mrs. Gillan) that such education must involve men and women and that it had to start at the top of any society. Imams are most powerful people in many villages and they must be retaught that it is not in an ordinary person's reading of the Koran that women should be so treated. However, that is how the Koran is interpreted locally and regionally and men have power over women and throughout society. We must stop such bigotry and ignorance.

Mr. Robathan: I refer to the intervention of the hon. Member for Glasgow, Maryhill (Mrs. Fyfe) and to what is an unusual cross-party consensus. Last year, we had a meeting with the Attorney-General of the Sharif Government in Pakistan—it was before the military coup. When the subject of a report on human rights was raised, especially the status and ill-treatment of women, he stormed out of the meeting and refused to discuss the matter with us. I hope that a change has come about under the new Government.

Mr. Wells: My hon. Friend makes an important point. We have a huge amount of work to do. It must be carried out constantly and enthusiastically by Parliament and the entire country, and we must start now. I want to see the reversal of such terrible statistics. I want women to stand up self-confidently in their own right and be responsible for their own future. I want them to have equal responsibility with their male partners for their children. They must have equal ownership of anything that they produce or that they labour to produce. I want them to be able to own property, discuss matters sensibly, know their legal rights and stand up as people of this world.

3.7 pm

Ms Glenda Jackson (Hampstead and Highgate): I congratulate the International Development Committee on targeting its inquiries on women and their rights in the developing world. I have read the report and I am grateful to the hon. Member for Hertford and Stortford (Mr. Wells), but I am somewhat amazed at what was clearly a sense of bemusement on his part when he discovered the reality of life for women in such countries. I do not wish to be rude or dismissive of the Committee's findings. The facts that it outlined make shocking reading. In 1994, the United Nations published a report on the state of children in the world. It drew attention to the fact that three quarters of women in the world live in abject poverty, which means that three quarters of the world's children are in a similar state. The issues that he delineated for us were described in no small detail in that report.

The evidence that the International Development Committee presented to the House has been available to the world for the whole of my natural life.

Mr. Wells: It is a matter not of bemusement, but of shock. The situation continues to shock me. I know about the reports to which the hon. Lady referred, and I was shocked when I heard of them. When one sees it on the ground, it is even more shocking.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. I must remind hon. Members to address the Chair. I am not touchy about this matter, but if hon. Members addressed the Chair, would allow the Hansard transcribers to hear the words clearly, rather than in a jumble. That would be helpful.

Ms Jackson: It is an example of the humanity of the hon. Member for Hertford and Stortford that he is capable of being shocked. The gross mistreatment and undervaluing of women, who are half the world's population, continue to shock even those of us who have been aware of it our whole lives.

I repeat that I strongly agree with the interventions of my hon. Friend the Member for Glasgow, Maryhill (Mrs. Fyfe). If the world wants to make the changes that basic humanity and the belief in human rights would suggest, the developed countries must change first, and change their treatment of the developing world.

My hon. Friend touched on the deep-seated problem of the treatment deemed to be the norm in the countries to which the report refers. That may be seen on all the continents, and in a more minor way within our own borders. Today, women in this country experience all the behaviour to which the hon. Member for Hertford and Stortford referred, and they may not have emigrated from countries in which it is part and parcel of tradition to deem women to be merely objects for abuse by whoever has the power in the relationship, whether it be one of the family, community or state.

I am grateful for the major changes in international development secured by the Government, and for their attempts to bring together all Departments that have any dealings with other countries, using joined-up thinking. They have prioritised making the case for altering dramatically for the better the circumstances of the majority of women around the world.

As my hon. Friend the Member for Maryhill said, the problem is deep-seated. I pay tribute again to what the Government are doing, although one always wishes that they could do more. What we, as well as the Government, should do, is find ways to make use of British businesses, for example, that invest or work in other parts of the world and apply for export credits guarantees. When those businesses invest in industries, businesses or services in other countries, it should be taken for granted that they will take the chief responsibility for ensuring that women who are employed by them will be given the respect and the basic rights of workers that we expect in this country.

I took to heart the point made by the hon. Member for Hertford and Stortford. If such issues are raised in the House, it is almost inevitable that they will be dubbed women's issues, because we remain a minority here. That has been our experience throughout our working lives. There will be either shuffling or a half-hearted titter, and sometimes outright abuse, which I am sure that we can all remember from exchanges across the Chamber.

The hon. Gentleman spoke of giving women the self-confidence to carry their responsibilities. The problem is not that women lack self-confidence or that they are unaware of their responsibilities; it is that they are deemed to be responsible for everything within their ambit, their community and even their state. Women are inevitably and consistently punished for their failures, even though there is no support to allow them to deliver fully on what is deemed to be their responsibility.

It is all very well for us to make categorical statements about sex education or what people in Malawi, as the hon. Gentleman said, perceive as the way for a woman to maintain her health—an injection of sperm every day—if she, her family, her community and her state deem that her prime purpose for being is to ensure the continuation of the male line. Prelates in this country have made that a requirement for families here, too, although in a rather angular way—they have not couched it in precisely the same terms.

That is why I return to my earlier point: if we are to energise the push to relieve women's and children's abject poverty, we must examine our actions. Instead of making a half-hearted response, which is still the norm in this country, we have to state categorically in all areas of our national life that equal opportunities, equal rights and equal pay for women are right and proper. It is only when we begin to examine ourselves that we will be able to implement essential changes in the world over a much wider range than is being attempted at present. That has to do with equality, opportunity, rights, education and health for women.

The hon. Member for Hertford and Stortford mentioned the incidence of violence against women, and we know that it happens in our own country. There is still a presumption that a woman who is beaten up by her partner has done something to deserve that. I always find it especially bemusing when women, who may have experienced violence themselves, presume that. I regret to say that I have direct experience of this. Women have come to me who have experienced domestic violence, and they regard it as proof of love. We are in very murky waters. Such presumptions about the reasons for women's experience stretch a long way back.

[Ms Jackson]

Mrs. Gillan: Although I do not disagree with the hon. Lady's argument, does she agree that we, as women, owe a duty to men not to be totally self-indulgent and not to focus entirely on one half of the human race? We need to admit that men often suffer domestic violence, and that they suffer from cancer. The emphasis has been on breast cancer, but prostate cancer has not been highlighted as it should have been. Equally, in war, men and boys can be raped and exposed to the privations that we have discussed. We must not fall into the trap of concentrating purely on women; we must remember the other 50 per cent. of the population.

Ms Jackson: I strongly disagree that we should prioritise the overwhelming arguments for greater equality for women by always presenting a balanced view. In my experience, the view that the hon. Lady described is remarkably unbalanced. She said that insufficient attention is paid to prostate cancer, with all the attention being devoted to breast cancer. I was one of the Members who entered the House for the first time in 1992 who organised an all-party group to deal with breast cancer. Previously, there had been no all-party group, or prioritisation of that issue.

As my hon. Friend the Member for Slough (Fiona Mactaggart) said from a sedentary position, one reason why so little attention is paid to prostate cancer is that men take so little responsibility for their own health and well-being. It has certainly been my experience that women are always regarded as being in the driving seat when it comes to ensuring—the hon. Member for Chesham and Amersham (Mrs. Gillan) is looking at me in a bemused way. I speak directly from my experience. It may not be hers, but it is no less valid when I say that people still believe that the woman has prime responsibility for ensuring the health of a family. I have no doubt that all hon. Members know of women who have made themselves ill by carrying the burden of that responsibility. I do not condone violence in any form, but we are debating the overriding emergency of the violence and lack of facilities, concern and consideration that women suffer—mainly at the hands of men. If we argue that we can move forward only when there is absolute equality, we will be standing here 20, 30 or 50 years from now, putting the same evidence.

Ms Oona King (Bethnal Green and Bow): Although it is true that some men also experience terrible domestic violence—I have recently had such a case in my constituency—in 90 per cent. of murder cases involving women the perpetrator is the partner or ex-partner, but the same is not true of men who are murdered. We must therefore give women precedence in that matter.

Ms Jackson: That certainly happens. When the case of a woman who has murdered her partner is taken to court, the legal arguments that may be put in the case of a man are not used.

Interesting though the exchange has been, I do not wish to be deflected from the core of my argument. I conclude with what was for me the most telling and crucial sentence in the Select Committee report, which appeared in the section on female genital mutilation; I am sure that we are all concerned about that appalling action on young women and girls. The Select Committee, in agreeing with Joan French, said at paragraph 147:

> Culture can no longer be used as an excuse for inaction on securing women's rights.

That is fundamental and absolute. However, the Government response that

> The Government agrees with the Committee that culture can not be used as an excuse for the violation of human rights concerned me because it makes a subtle alteration to the original. I want the Government to act on the statement that culture cannot be used > as an excuse for inaction on securing women's rights.

We should make that part of Government policy in every Department. I hope that my hon. Friend the Under-Secretary of State will allay my concerns.

I have outlined the changes that I would like in regard to companies that invest abroad. I could give other examples of desirable changes in every Department. We all know what the problem is and what is experienced, day in and day out. No country can bring about on its own the changes that we desire. That can happen only if countries work with their partners as well as individually—and not just in their area of the world. A wider international consensus can bring about the changes that must occur. We have to accelerate the process of change, but we will not do that until we acknowledge the serious flaws in the equality of women in every country of the world, not simply those of the developing third world.

3.24 pm

Dr. Jenny Tonge (Richmond Park): I thank the hon. Member for Hampstead and Highgate (Ms Jackson) for her useful reminder that we must not look at the mote in our brother's eye when we cannot see the beam in our own. I also thank the chairman of the Select Committee for spearheading the report; I was proud to be part of the Committee that considered it.

Seventy per cent. of the world's poor are women; yet, wherever one looks in the world, countries with good health care and education for women are also successful economically. The link stares us in the face, and I can never understand why men all over the world do not see it. Healthy women have healthy babies, male as well as female. Educated women are more likely to be healthy and have healthy children. Women who are malnourished and have poor health care will not have the energy to take up educational opportunities, and their children are less likely to be educated.

Rather than try to cover all the issues in the report, which I would dearly love to do, I shall concentrate on women's health issues because I feel most passionately about them. They were my specialty before I became a Member of Parliament, and are crucial to development.

In paragraph 161 of the report, Marie Stopes International points out that current levels of global expenditure on sexual and reproductive health—around $3.7 billion—amount to less than the amount spent each year on confectionery in the UK.

That is a wonderful statistic. The paragraph states that the money in real terms development assistance spent on sexual and reproductive health projects—

the subject that I care about so much—has not increased for the past 20 years.

That says a lot about the aid we are giving.

Woman in the west take reproductive health for granted. I used to have trouble convincing my patients to come for their screening tests and exhorting them to be healthy. They are fed up with being pestered and told what to do. In developing countries, the situation is different. I must warn those who are squeamish that the next 10 minutes will be uncomfortable.

The hon. Member for Hertford and Stortford (Mr. Wells) dealt well with women's general health, which is crucial to their sexual and reproductive health. The picture in the report of an Asian woman feeding her boy baby was a wonderful example. It had grown fat and healthy while the girl baby died quickly from malnutrition, as the mother had enough milk for only one baby. In the short term, boy babies seem more important to poor families in developing countries, as it is felt that boys are the economic future of families and farms.

The hon. Gentleman mentioned women in huts in Bangladesh inhaling smoke all the time. When we were there, I asked myself whether that was a factor in giving Bangladesh the worst maternal mortality rate in the world. Bangladesh shares many qualities with other developing countries, such as poverty, poor hygiene, lack of obstetric care and lack of infrastructure. There are plenty of Muslim countries in the word. However, the women of Bangladesh do not only inhale smoke all day. The fuel that they use is dried cow dung, so I wonder what they inhale. Someone, somewhere, must be able to tell us whether that is significant. If anyone at the Department for International Development were interested, I would love there to be a little project on the subject. The problem would be relatively easy to deal with.

Obstetric care for women in developing countries is often non-existent. Another lovely statistic from the report is that maternal death rates in the developing world are equivalent to a jumbo jet full of women crashing every six hours, every day of the year. That is the number of women who die in childbirth. I have had three babies, and I shall not, as women love to do, describe the details of my labour. Being in obstructed labour for not hours, but days and days of agonising pain unrelieved by anything, would lead to death by exhaustion. There may be terrible haemorrhage, but no one can do anything about it—the women simply die of blood loss. That is relatively quick compared with dying in agony of an infection which leads to septicaemia after being contracted during the birth of a baby.

In the western world, we have no idea of what our fellow women physically suffer to perpetuate the human race. Those who feel that they cannot have any more babies try to secure abortions, which are equally dangerous and place them at equal risk of infection and haemorrhage. We heard about a hospital in Nigeria where 77 per cent. of admissions related to complications from abortion.

I have professional experience of female genital mutilation, a subject raised by the hon. Member for Hampstead and Highgate. I do not think that any of us had any idea until recently of how extensive the practice was. It is forced on 85 million to 115 million women and girls each year, despite contravening the convention on the elimination of all forms of discrimination against women and a United Nations General Assembly resolution passed in 1997. It goes on in this country, albeit under anaesthetic and in hygiene and aseptic conditions which do not prevail in the developing world. It is carried out forcibly and against girls' will.

I have seen the effects of the practice and discussed them with my colleagues. I cannot say how appalling it is. Besides making sexual intercourse extremely painful and difficult, it doubles the risk of maternal death. It makes the death of a baby three or four times more likely. Without an episiotomy—surgical cutting to allow the baby to come out—there is splitting, tearing, haemorrhaging and infections. Horrible fistulae form, causing a woman to be incontinent of urine and faeces for the rest of her life. The death of the mother is almost preferable to that. If she is incontinent and unable to have sexual intercourse any more, she will not be accepted in the family or the villiage because, frankly, she smells. She will not be nice to have around, so she will be outcast as a result of the practice.

Mrs. Gillan: The hon. Lady renders the horrors perpetrated on women dramatically. I strongly feel that all hon. Members abhor the practice. Does she agree that it is even more horrifying because, in many cases, especially in our country, women procure the female circumcision of other women? The cultural side of the problem needs to be attacked, as well as the medical side which she is graphically outlining.

Dr. Tonge: What the hon. Lady says about the cultural side is right. Many women want to have the practice carried out on their daughters in developing countries because it makes them more marriageable and desirable. It is the custom and the culture. For that reason, the problem needs an extremely sensitive approach. It is no good western women muscling in over there and saying that the practice must stop because it is against human rights. We must also point in those countries the danger, complication, death and destruction that the practice causes. Economically, it will be a drag on the country and will affect the men's prosperity.

I want to take the opportunity on behalf of the International Development Committee to reply to a savage attack on it by Germaine Greer. In a book she has written, and in an article in The Daily Telegraph some months ago, she equated body piercing by consenting young women in the west with female genital mutilation. I must remind this Chamber that female genital mutilation is the forcible removal of the clitoris or the entire female genitalia, and the suturing up afterwards, with antiseptic, antibiotics or anaesthetic, leaving a tiny hole to allow blood and urine to escape. That is what we are talking about; we are not talking about a silver ring in an umbilicus.

[Dr. Tonge]

Female genital mutilation is thought to have originated because men wanted to make sexual intercourse undesirable for the women, thereby making them faithful. Germaine Greer argues that we should not interfere with cultural practices. However, as Joan French remarked to the International Development Committee, if we did not want to interfere with cultural practices, we would still be burning witches in Europe. Germaine Greer has also accused members of the International Development Committee as knowing, in her words, "bugger all" about the subject. I object to that strongly. The Select Committee members were an interested and knowledgeable group, including a qualified nurse who had worked in Africa for a considerable period. As a doctor, I worked in reproductive and sexual health for 25 years. I therefore take exception to Ms Germaine Greer accusing the Committee of ignorance. I have got that off my chest. Female genital mutilation has been made illegal in most countries where it is practised, and we should encourage, as sensitively as possible, its abolition. I am sure that all hon. Members would agree with that.

On targeting young women, the hon. Member for Hertford and Stortford said that the Select Committee was not mentioned in the "Poverty Eradication and the Empowerment of Women" report, which the Department has just published. I endorse his remarks on that subject. I also felt that that strategy paper did not put enough emphasis on young women. In the developing world, women become sexually active and have babies at a very young age. That should be recognised and emphasised. Often, women in developing countries are married because their fathers see them as a liability and want to get them off their hands and into someone else's house. The younger they are, the more likely it is that they will suffer ill health or death from pregnancy.

It is essential to increase the emphasis on information and services to prevent pregnancy and infection, including HIV-AIDS, as the hon. Gentleman mentioned. Around the world, 7,000 people are infected with HIV every day, and 7.6 million people were newly infected last year. That is a terrible statistic, which is causing great damage to the developing world. Until a vaccine is available, about which the Minister knows I feel strongly, our only weapon is to provide sexual health clinics, condoms and education. That must start at a very young age.

Young women are more vulnerable to infections, because of bleeding and injury from sexual intercourse. That is, of course, more likely after genital mutilation. A catalogue of minor genital infections—thrush, trichomoniasis, gonorrhoea, tropical sores, chlamydia and so on—make it more like that a young girl will be infected with HIV-AIDS. That is why more women than men in the developing world have the disease. Any breakdown of the tissues, which causes bleeding or soreness, makes women more prone to infection. Family planning services and reproductive health services are therefore crucial. Indeed, we saw many excellent projects, among them the Gap factory, which has been mentioned, whoever was paying for it.

In the west Calcutta brothel and in Bogra we saw some good work being done. Marie Stopes International is doing brilliant work. I just wish that Marie Stopes were still alive and could see how, following her lifetime of persecution by male gynaecologists, her work has spread round the world and is so appreciated.

Ms Oona King: Going around that clinic, and particularly after we had met one woman, did the hon. Lady share my feeling that we had finally understood the need to change our language and should, from that moment forth, call prostitutes commercial sex workers? We must remain aware of the importance of language.

Dr. Tonge: I thank the hon. Lady for that intervention. It is important to remember that, wherever we are in the world, those people are sex workers. Did I use the word "prostitute"? I hope that I did not.

Mr. Wells: No, the hon. Lady did not.

Dr. Tonge: I was slightly worried that the hon. Lady intervened because I had. If I did not, that means that I am learning. We all learn.

I welcome the statement by the Department for International Development that it will continue to subsidise these projects, but there must be many more of them. More effort should be put into making multinational companies take on responsibility for the workers in whatever country they operate. Migrant labour is a particular problem in Africa: men are away from their wives and families for months and months, and are not given any help, education or advice, which is crucial in preventing the spread of disease.

I have covered a few aspects of women's health. I do not want to continue, because other hon. Members wish to speak. I simply remind hon. Members that educated women are healthier, have larger, healthier babies, are less likely to succumb to dangerous cultural traditions and practices and will see that their children are educated. Therefore, although health care and other factors are crucial, the education of women is a fundamental right and the single most effective way of tackling poverty.

When the hon. Member for Bethnal Green and Bow (Ms King) and I visited the Calcutta brothel, we met a young girl called Bobby, who was working there as a sex worker. She spoke perfect English because her mother and her grandmother had been sex workers in the same brothel. Her mother had worked extremely hard, because she had decided that, whatever happened, her daughter would have an education and a life, and she had worked hard to educate Bobby. Unfortunately, before Bobby was 14 or 15, her mother became very ill, lost her looks and did not get any more clients. What happened? Her precious daughter had to go into the brothel and work as a sex worker, the third generation of her family to do so. That affected us deeply, and we were all upset about the girl. Indeed, people have been trying to do something about the workers in that brothel since we came back to England.

I hope that the report and the Government's response will try to ensure that future Bobbies stay out of brothels and have a different sort of life.

3.43 pm

Mr. Tony Worthington (Clydebank and Milngavie): I apologise to the hon. Member for Hertford and Stortford (Mr. Wells) for not hearing his speech. As he probably knows, I attended a meeting in another part of the building that was closely connected to the theme of this debate, at which President Museveni of Uganda and the Secretary of State for International Development were talking about education for all and particularly about education for girls.

The key issue is empowerment. It sounds like jargon, but it is a useful word, because it spans many dimensions. I want to talk about some of those dimensions.

The first dimension is education. My reason for attending the meeting this afternoon was that the World Education Forum will meet in Dakar, Senegal, at the end of April. We must redouble our efforts to get the donor community and the developing countries to achieve the UN targets relating to ending the disparity between male and female enrolment in schools by 2005. That is a huge task.

We must also embrace the challenge of achieving universal primary education by 2015. At present, about 90 million girls in the world receive no primary education. If that is the official figure, the real figure must be much higher. In my early days as a lecturer, I learned that there are all sorts of lies: there are lies, damned lies, statistics, and teachers' registers. The fact that a student enrols at school in the morning does not mean that they are still there at lunchtime. The drop-out rate in schools is considerable.

During our visit to the subcontinent, I and other members of the Committee came across one of the most appalling expressions that I have ever heard. It has stuck with me ever since; I think that the hon. Member for Bethnal Green and Bow (Ms King) knows what I am going to say. It is the old attitude that educating a girl is like watering another man's garden. That is a staggering statement. Its implication is that it is not worth using any of one's resources on a visitor to the family who will be leaving shortly to go and work in another one.

Ms Oona King: My honourable Friend is right. That was a truly appalling expression. Another one that we heard on the trip springs to mind: a lucky man is one whose wife dies; an unlucky man is one whose ox dies.

Mr. Worthington: We should get away from these horrific statements. Such attitudes are shattering. The truth is that educating a girl is like watering a country's garden. Statistics tell us that educating women leads to better health and higher incomes in families, and to higher levels of education among the children of those families. The countries involved then go into an upward spiral rather than a downward spiral.

Those appalling attitudes towards girls' education are linked to the fact that up to 100 million girls are missing from the world today. The report refers to that fact. Those girls ought to be alive, but are missing due to sex-selective abortions, infanticide or neglect. That is about undervaluing girls—those girls would live if they were valued. The education of girls is a way of challenging this appalling story. South Asia has the lowest rates of female literacy in the world and it is also where the majority of the world's poor live.

I hope that the World Education Forum in Dakar will re-focus attention on these problems. However, we must not only increase the resources to education, but address the proper use of those resources. As members of the Select Committee know, the standards of governance in some education departments are appalling. Resources go into education but do not come out. In Bangladesh, we saw the difficulties for donors in relation to investment in the NGO schools. There is an enormous organisation there—the Bangladesh Rural Advancement Committee—which can educate a person and achieve literacy for the price of a night's stay at the Safeway motel in Bogra. It is tremendous value to become literate for that price, and I would recommend that establishment to my hon. Friend the Under-Secretary. He has enjoyed most experiences in life, but I do not believe that he has had that one yet.

It must be difficult for the Department for International Development to decide how much of its resources it provides to Governments with education departments that are not working well because teachers do not turn up to teach and thousands of schools exist only on paper. There is inequality between towns and the country. How can teachers be persuaded to stay in the country when the towns are like magnets? Empowerment is necessary for education.

The hon. Member for Richmond Park (Dr. Tonge) referred to reproductive health. It is impossible to achieve development unless women are given the opportunity to take responsibility for their own fertility. There has been enormous progress and we saw that in Bangladesh. It is the most overcrowded country in the world and there is almost no opposition to family planning there and in other countries. Opposition has gone and the issue now is resources. Many countries in sub-Saharan Africa are still doubling in size every 25 years, not through choice, but because of lack of access to cheap, basic reproductive health services.

The hon. Member for Hertford and Stortford was with me when we visited Malawi. It is a desperately poor country, which has run out of land and has virtually no industrial base. The land cannot support families because, under the inheritance system, it is divided into smaller and smaller parcels.

Mr. Wells: Among the men.

Mr. Worthington: Yes, the land is divided among the men.

I visited Sierra Leone nine years ago when it had an embryonic reproductive health service, but it was destroyed by the war there. The hon. Member for Richmond Park used one of the favourite statistics in her support earlier and it is worth lingering on. More than 500,000 women a year die in childbirth, which is equivalent to a fully laden jumbo jet falling out of the sky every six hours, every day of the year. Those deaths are avoidable. I am pro-life, but I am also pro-women living and not being killed by lack of access to basic services. We must give people the right to choose and they can have the right only if resources are made available. There is no right to choose if there is nothing to choose from.

[Mr. Worthington]

It is offensive that, when first-world countries such as Italy and Spain have static or falling populations, third-world countries are denied the right to choose. Imagine the uproar in our constituencies if we tried to deny our constituents the right to decide the size and spacing of their families. That would not be an election winner. Not one hon. Member, whatever his or her religion, would dare to campaign for withdrawal of family planning services, but that is effectively what happens in third-world countries.

Mrs. Ann Cryer (Keighley): I have spent only one week in Pakistan, but my constituency is a microcosm of that country and, to some extent, Bangladesh. My hon. Friend said that there is no ban on contraception, but there is a ban for women who persist in having female babies. We must get the matter straight. It is not only husbands who force their wives to produce babies. Dragon-like mothers-in-law in Keighley force their daughters-in-law to go on and on producing babies until that wonderful son is produced.

Mr. Worthington: I appreciate that point. As has been said, we must tackle head-on cultures that deny basic human rights. We in mainland Britain have invented the concept of the innocence of children, denying them information on sex education and social matters. It is absurd to advocate education, education, education, while taking the view that, in terms of sex, ignorance is best. That is an extraordinary cultural hang-up.

The enormous impact of the plague of AIDS became apparent during our visit to southern Africa. The impossible has happened: as a result of AIDS, which is hitting women hardest, life expectancy in countries such as Botswana, Zambia and Malawi is plummeting. In Britain, the number of AIDS cases related to heterosexual activity has for the first time become the majority, but such cases have always formed the majority in Africa and Asia. Women are the principal victims. Some become HIV-positive as a result of their husbands' activities; others witness their infant children dying of AIDS.

I find it unacceptable that women are denied access to condoms on moral grounds. That women should be denied access to the only known protection against AIDS is an appalling cruelty. We must remember that most women and men have no idea that they are HIV-positive until AIDS develops, and may not know even then, because other explanations of ill health may be sought. If women and men continue to have unprotected sex in Africa, AIDS will continue to surge through that continent. There are fears that the same will happen in Asia. As the report shows, the number of AIDS sufferers in Asia is huge: there are 3 million in India. However, incidence is low. Only 1 per cent. of people in the subcontinent are thought to be HIV-positive, compared with 20 or 30 per cent. in parts of sub-Saharan Africa. If the Asian rate moves towards the African rate, deaths will run to tens of millions.

The third and final source of empowerment about which I want to speak is economic and political. As has been said, during our visits to India, and particularly to Bangladesh, we were impressed by the difference that micro-credit schemes made to women's sense of independence and self-esteem. We should remember the marginal status of widows in India and Bangladesh. Unless one can be found, widows in those countries have no economic role.

We were enormously impressed by the resilience of Bangladeshis in making the maximum use of scarce land that constantly floods. I have never seen anything like it. When we were told that we would see a rice paddy that had been turned into a fish farm, I thought that it was April fool's day. I love gardening, but I have never seen such ingenuity in making the maximum possible use of banks in the fields. Any part that could be cultivated was cultivated. To witness the use to which women, in particular, put micro-credit schemes was amazing. We could see their independence growing. Wherever we went, we saw the consequences of women's lack of empowerment. In India, Bangladesh and Pakistan, people might respond, "We have had women presidents." Phooey. That is simply tokenism. Empires—baronies—of families have simply thrown a woman to the top.

Everywhere we went there were no women in positions of power or influence. When I was in Sierra Leone last week, someone confessed to me that, although women had been elected from list systems, not one woman had been elected by the men in a constituency to be a Member of Parliament.

Empowerment can involve education, reproductive health or economic independence, and all forms of empowerment should take place in the context of comprehensive community development. There appears to be a tendency to say, "We shall support a reproductive health scheme, a micro-credit scheme or an education scheme." However, the right approach involves allowing a reproductive health scheme to grow into a micro-credit scheme or vice versa—that would get comprehensive community development under way.

The Department and I think that this is a first-rate report, although I am biased—I helped to produce it. It will help to develop women's empowerment. If we can put more resources and ideas behind it, it will have an impact.

4.1 pm

Ms Oona King (Bethnal Green and Bow): It is truly a great pleasure to participate in this debate. I have heard some exceptional speeches, not least from the hon. Member for Hertford and Stortford (Mr. Wells), the Chairman of the International Development Committee, and from three of my hon. Friends, whose contributions I shall discuss presently.

I want to concentrate on the links that the report finds between women and their lack of access to various services and rights. As has been emphasised time and again this afternoon, the majority of the world's abjectly poor—70 per cent.—are women. My hon. Friend the Member for Hampstead and Highgate (Ms Jackson) rightly said that we should look to our own house and keep that in order. In Britain, 60 per cent. of those who rely on income support to top up their income to subsistence level are women.

Women's limited access revolves around a series of issues, including health, income, education and credit and finance. Interestingly, in this country we have concentrated on institutional discrimination of various kinds, but there is greater institutional discrimination than that which is based on gender.

Gender genocide—the declining ratio of men to women in some of the world's poorest countries—has been mentioned. Anyone who has not read at least the first page of the Select Committee's report, which contains the executive summary, should do so. It lists several astonishing facts, and states that > up to 100 million girls are thought to be missing as a result of sex-selective abortion, infanticide or neglect.

When we went to Rwanda, we saw the dreadful carnage that led to the murder of betwen 500,000 and 1 million people. I was so horrified and moved that I felt that I had no option but to set up an all-party group on Rwanda and the prevention of genocide. In view of the fact that 100 million young girls, women or foetuses are not on this planet because of targeted aggression as a result of their sex, it is strange that Parliament does not have an all-party group that deals in general terms with women.

Perhaps that is not a bad thing, and what is needed is an all-party group on humanity. As we have heard, the issue is equally important to men, and changing their attitudes is as important as changing women's attitudes. Where men hold the balance of power—which is virtually everywhere—it is even more important to change their attitudes, Oxfam gave an example of that in the report. It said of Pakistan:

> Family planning programmes have been targeting women for years, neglecting the fact that it is men who usually make decisions regarding fertility.

That fact was brought home to me when I was in Uganda. I went to a chemist that was distributing free condoms and contraceptive pills. It was all very progressive—men were allowing their women to make use of contraceptives. However, as the women were not allowed out of their home to carry out such errands, the men went to the chemist to collect the contraceptives and, because 70 per cent. of illiterate people in the world are women, many could not read the instructions when they were taken home to them.

That put in stark focus the fact that we must think in clear terms about the nitty-gritty of what happens once great policy issues have been resolved. For example, we get a Government to make contraception available, but do not take into account the factors that prevent women from taking up that access. Until we do that, women will remain in the dire situations that hon. Members have described.

My hon. Friend the Member for Hampstead and Highgate referred to the fact that all the problems that we have heard about in other countries apply—albeit usually to a lesser extent—in this country. I am reminded of a comment by the United Kingdom Men's Movement, which describes feminism as > the greatest social evil of our time.

In some respects, we are in the middle ages of gender equality. In America, Pat Robertson has warned his fellow Americans that feminism—I must quote this, as it always brings a smile to my face—> encourages women to leave their husbands, kill their children, practise witchcraft, destroy capitalism and become lesbians.

I am glad that in this country, in theory, we do not have to argue the merits of feminism. I hope that anyone who reads the report will not fail to recognise the need for it. However, there has been a huge backlash against the word "feminism" and what is termed as feminism. The report hinges on people accepting that women should have equality with men. We take that as a given, but, even in this country, it is not.

I labour the point because feminism does more than simply posit the moral case for equality—at its root is an attempt to address the skewed division of labour that disadvantages women from the cradle to the grave. The report reveals the degree to which discrimination and disadvantage afflict women not only in developing countries but in this country. That skewed division of labour, in simplistic terms, gives women total responsibility for caring and domestic duties. Three important elements are involved in that: first, it is unpaid; secondly, it keeps women at home, and therefore marginalized; and, thirdly, it does not require education and militates against women being thought of as humans who deserve the right to education.

From all that stem further problems that hinge around a lack of access and a lack of independence. We have heard from many colleagues about the ways in which women are denied access to various things, so I shall not repeat that argument. We have not heard much, however, about women's lack of access to the legal system. When preparing for the conference at which I was to speak on domestic violence, I read some appalling British case law. I shall, however, cite an example of what happened in Bangladesh when a 14-year-old girl was gang raped in a fairly remote village. The village elders decided to hold a traditional trial. It was established that a gang rape had taken place—I believe that 12 young men were involved—and the elders decided that the 14-year-old girl would receive 200 lashes for what had happened. She died. Nothing happened to the boys. That is an extreme example, but it demonstrates the lack of access that is prevalent throughout the world.

Women, many of whom are widows, have also drawn the short straw when it comes to justice following conflicts, when their entire position in society is undermined. I will never forget visiting a group of widows in Rwanda at a genocide site. I asked one of them whether she felt that justice would be done. The United Nations had attempted to solve the problem in Rwanda, but one woman looked at me and laughed. She said: "Justice? The people who murdered my entire family are now living in my house and sending me letters telling me that if I speak to people like you they will hack me to death." There was nothing that we could do.

The Department for International Development has spent an inordinate amount of time considering how to speed up justice and make it worthy of its name to 52 per cent. of the population. The Rwandan Government have received help for capacity building in their civil service. We must ensure that such measures are more mainstream than they have been to date. Although many conferences are held on protecting women's rights, they are simply words on paper and do not mean anything to a woman such as the one to whom I spoke in Rwanda.

[Ms Oona King]

We visited a private factory in Bangladesh, which is a success story in many respects. The hon. Member for Hertford and Stortford said that positive steps can be taken and I echo those comments. It is not a case of our having to hang our heads and give up, even though the sheer scale of the oppression is so overwhelming. The factory in Bangladesh is an excellent example of the way in which women are being helped. I have mentioned three issues—women in unpaid employment, women being kept at home and women being marginalised. All those issues were being addressed in that factory and those women were in paid work, out of the home and had access to services that they had not had before.

Much of the debate about the World Trade Organisation has hinged on whether it helps the poorest of the poor. There are many huge problems with the negotiations at Seattle, but we must recognise the fact that trade in textiles has increased from approximately £3 million to £3 billion in Bangledesh, and that 90 per cent. of those workers are women who are now paid but who were previously excluded. That generates much social change, so there are swings and roundabouts and pros and cons, but, as the Chairman of the Select Committee said, why should British taxpayers subsidise an American multinational corporation?

I agree with the Department for International Development that it is more important for those women to have access to health services than it is for us to argue about who pays for them, but I ask Gap's chief executives in Britain, Europe and America, who will receive copies of the report of this debate and of our report, to make a personal commitment to review such matters and to report to the House on whether they believe that our taxpayers should subsidise an excellent project in their factory that, none the less, enhances their profits? I do not believe that they would be so short-sighted as to refuse.

A consensus has emerged in international development over the past two or three decades but especially in the past decade. The consensus, which has been reached by organisations as diverse as the International Monetary Fund and Oxfam, is that discrimination against women is the single most important factor that inhibits the development of society, global society and the poorest countries. As we heard, if a woman is educated, her family is educated. That is no less true in Britain, where 90 per cent. of lone parents are women and 2 million children live in poverty as a result. As we enter the new millennium, it is worth taking stock. Women today make up half the world's population, yet do two thirds of its work, receive only one tenth of its income and own less than 1 per cent. of world property. To say that women have achieved equality, even on paper, is to dabble in fiction.

I commend the report and the work of the Department for International Development. I hope that, in future, we shall be joined by a larger number of Members who recognise the central importance of this issue to a sustainable and equal future.

4.18 pm

Fiona Mactaggart (Slough): I should like to add my small mite to this debate from the point of view of someone whose job before being elected to the House was teaching people to read. The human right to read is more acknowledged in the breach than the observance. Many of the speeches that we have heard today and the work of the Select Committee make it obvious that an absolute priority in enabling women to be part of the development and civilisation of their communities is giving them the right to read. That is at the heart of this debate.

It is interesting that education in Britain is still dependent on gender in many ways. I am the first woman in my family to have completed a university degree. When I left school, my mum assumed that I would go to a finishing school and learn to type. That was what people like me did, and that is what my sisters did. At the school that I attended, many girls—one of whom will shortly contribute to the debate—did not face those expectations in their families. My school expected women to succeed, but the view in my family was that the guys, not the girls, should be educated. That remains the case in many societies throughout the world.

However, we now have the opportunity to change that view. The world has long recognised the importance of primary education and the right to read. In Thailand 10 years ago, the countries of the world met and said, "We need universal primary education and we'll get it by the millennium." We did not achieve that. Next month, those countries will meet again, in Dakar, Senegal. There, they will set a more generous target of 2015. We cannot afford the same slippage in the next 15 years as we have had in the past 10 years. The world cannot afford that, and neither can women. It is a recipe for poverty and underdevelopment.

Two thirds of those who are out of primary education are girls, and in some countries, the situation is worsening. In the past 10 years, the number of girls in primary education in Pakistan has declined by 10 per cent. Nevertheless, I met the new Education Minister for Pakistan recently. The first thing that she said was, "I'm not related to anybody," which was not reassuring, because it said a lot about the history of politics in Pakistan; but next she said that she had gone to see the schools that her Government were funding, but that she could not find them all. It was clear that education money in Pakistan had ended up in the pockets of the wrong people, and had not helped to teach one person to read one book or to add up. I hope that Pakistan's new Government will challenge that situation and that they will quickly obtain a mandate from the people.

The problem is not a phenomenon of Islam. In many Islamic countries, the number of girls in education has increased significantly. We have heard about the achievements of Bangladesh, for which it should be praised. Education is a key. It allows women to look after their own health by reading the instructions on tablets or on baby formula, if they must resort to that, and it is the key to taking control of their own lives. We must ensure that we take the opportunity offered by the summit in Dakar next month to change the current situation.

In Zambia last year, more teachers died of AIDS than entered teaching. We must invest in the educational infrastructure of developing countries. Some very poor countries have clear educational strategies that allow them to outperform their level of income. For example, Vietnam and Cuba have made wonderful achievements through their education systems. If we educated 1,000 girls in Pakistan, we would save 60 babies. The sums are simple and straightforward.

I hope that when the Secretary of State for International Development goes to Dakar, she will pledge the United Kingdom to the campaign for universal primary education, and offer practical strategies in our aid programme, with special emphasis on achieving universal primary education. We must make reading a human right in the poorest countries. I was pleased to learn, from the Secretary of State's response to a question that I asked yesterday, that the Prime Minister has already launched a teacher education programme, using a British information technology company that gives packages to developing countries.

The Prime Minister has made education his passion. I ask him to focus that passion globally. He could galvanise international attention on the issue. The Secretary of State is great at achieving focus and passion among her colleagues, but, because of the way the world works, it is still the big boys who shift things. We have talked about the emancipation of women and about how we might begin to achieve that. If Bill Clinton and my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister focus their attention on that, it is more likely to make a difference.

Britain should find ways of taking the lead internationally on the universal right to primary education. The resources for that exist: it would take something like a quarter of the money that Africa currently spends on debt servicing to deal with the deficit in its education spending. The ideas exist: there are models in many countries that we could follow. However, that right is not yet being delivered, partly because of a lack of international leadership and partly because of a lack of resources. I detect the willingness in regard to resources and I see the beginnings of Britain offering to take a lead internationally. We should go further down both those roads because this country can help to make a difference.

I would like to thank Oxfam for making the issue of universal primary education a campaigning priority. One of the achievements of that campaign is having ensured that the debate takes place not just behind closed doors at global summits that get reported in the pages of newspapers that many of us do not bother to read, but in staff rooms, church congregations, and even pubs. If we made sure that women up and down Britain, over cups of tea, learned some of the stories and facts in the report and which have been raised today, they too would feel the passion that we have heard expressed to ensure that there is investment in women. One gets a good return from investing in women. Women all over the world should have the human right to read.

4.28 pm

Mrs. Cheryl Gillan (Chesham and Amersham): We have had an uncharacteristically unanimous debate, even for Westminster Hall. I shall not strike a note of discord; there has been something in the contribution of every speaker with which I could wholeheartedly agree. I am grateful to my hon. Friend the Member for Hertford and Stortford (Mr. Wells) for initiating the debate and for presenting what is, by any standards, an exceptionally good report.

Nothing can more graphically have brought home to people the plight of women and children than the recent story of the woman in the Mozambique floods who gave birth in a tree. The pictures that we saw in the United Kingdom were moving, but also brought home the deprivation and agony faced by women and mothers. I am sure that we all wish that mother and child well.

Empowering women is doubtless the key to dealing with poverty, sickness and all the other issues tackled by the Department for International Development. That has been reflected in our debate.

Having been lucky enough to come from what I consider to be a privileged background, I did not fully realise the meaning of poverty or the privations that we hear about in the media until I had the privilege of travelling to Beijing in the last year of the previous Government, where we signed the women's platform for action. I met women whose very presence in Beijing put their lives at risk. They had to walk for two or three hours a day carrying water, not only for themselves but for their family. Until one meets such people face to face, one cannot begin to understand the stress and the strain that is put on the female part of the human race. It was an eye-opener and something that will stay with me for the rest of my life.

I was also pleased that our inadequacies in the United Kingdom have been touched on in the debate. Fortunately, in the main, they are not the ones of starvation or of having to walk for three hours to collect water, but the inequalities must be addressed. I want no special treatment for women, but I want equality of opportunity—hopes that I am sure are shared by everyone in the Chamber. I was pleased that we did not debate such matters from a smug and self-satisfied perspective but are willing to recognise their own failings.

Sadly, my hon. Friend the Member for Hertford and Stortford announced at the weekend that he will be standing down as a Member of Parliament. He will be much missed because his contribution has been phenomenal, not least in his work as Chairman of the Select Committee on International Development, which is responsible for the report. His graphic introduction to the debate was an example of the effort and the humanity that he puts into his role as a parliamentarian. He has also served the Commonwealth Parliamentary Association in sterling fashion as its treasurer. He agrees with me that, although we have developed a women's organisation within the CPA, it is essential that we do not split from the men and that men and women discuss women's issues, because it is not only the women who need convincing. Indeed, in many instances, men need to be carried along to achieve success. In all instances, it is easy for women to talk to women, but it is much harder to engage men in the political process for which my hon. Friend has pushed hard in the CPA.

The hon. Member for Hampstead and Highgate (Ms Jackson) made a powerful speech but, unless we misunderstood one another, I disagree with what she said. I hope that she was not being dismissive of prostate cancer. I do not want to diminish the work done on breast cancer, which is so important in terms of health awareness, but an even-handed approach has not been taken with regard to prostate cancer. For example, as women parliamentarians we all contributed to a picture book in aid of breast cancer awareness. I wish that there were a book in support of doing something for men and prostate cancer. In our desperation to ensure that women's voices are heard, we must not forget men's.

[Mrs. Cheryl Gillan]

Ms Glenda Jackson: I should be happy to participate in such a book, either verbally or visually, urging how important it is for men to examine themselves to discover whether they are suffering from prostate cancer as we, as women, are encouraged to examine ourselves to ensure that we are not suffering from breast cancer. I shall not, however, be deflected from my inability to see that the rights of women can be advanced only if the rights of men are advanced, too. I would not wish any man to suffer from prostate cancer. Indeed, more money should be put into the work on that illness. However, if a woman dies from breast cancer, the whole family suffers that that is not exactly the same in the case of a young man. If we have to prioritise, we must acknowledge what is most important for the whole family and—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, I have already warned hon. Members about the length of interventions.

Mrs. Gillan: I do not mind the length of the intervention, but I am still not enlightened—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. It is I who mind the length of interventions.

Fiona Mactaggart: Perhaps the hon. Lady is not aware that the chairman of the all-party group on breast cancer is a woman, as is the chairman of the all-party group on male cancers.

Mrs. Gillan: I am grateful to the hon. Lady—my old school friend—for that intervention. I was aware of that, but I still do not agree with the hon. Member for Hamstead and Highgate. We should not focus solely on women's issues and forget or fail to emphasise those that concern men, especially violence against men, which is a taboo subject. We are much readier to discuss domestic violence against women than against men. Much domestic violence against men is swept under the carpet, and it should be brought into the open and dealt with.

I have great respect for the medical background of the hon. Member for Richmond Park (Dr. Tonge). Her description of what we all abhor—female circumcision—made one squirm. We should not underestimate the courage that it takes for a woman in her own country and village to say no, whether on her own behalf or on that of her female child. It is exceedingly difficult to stamp out a practice that is heavily rooted in culture and religion, but I agree with her that the practice must be stamped out. I hope that her graphic description of the horrors of female circumcision will strike a chord, and be spread further than this Chamber, so that others can read about what a barbaric practice it is. Any comment from the Minister on what progress is being made to eradicate female circumcision will be welcomed.

The hon. Member for Clydebank and Milngavie (Mr. Worthington) spoke, from great experience, about education, AIDS and the denial of condoms. Again, I found myself in agreement—I do not want to attract a bad reputation for agreeing with members of other parties. His descriptions of micro-credit schemes are a great encouragement to that form of financing, which should spread further. Such empowerment of women is proving extremely successful. I join him in his call for more resources. The Minister may be able to say more about what the Department for International Development can do in that regard.

The hon. Member for Bethnal Green and Bow (Ms King) spoke with her usual eloquence, especially about gender genocide and sex-selective abortions. I would go further and conjure up a horror that is not yet with us, but that I can see coming. In the previous Parliament, I did some early work on the human genome project. When science advances so that prospective parents can find out whether their child will have fair hair and blue eyes, or whether it will be intelligent or suffer from various diseases, there may be even more selective abortions because of lack of perfection in children. I am especially worried about that. It could affect not only unborn children but mothers who may be forced to make a decision because of the attitude of those around them. I agree with her that if one educates a woman, one educates a family; there is no doubt about that.

The hon. Member for Slough (Fiona Mactaggart)—she and I have known one another for many years—taught people to read and believes that people have a right to read. I do not disagree with that, but it will be hard to explain the right to read to people who still do not have access to fresh water and food. Although reading is important, there are still people who do not have access to the basics necessary to sustain existence, let alone the ability to take that jump forward. I hope that she will not forget that, when we are considering women and development, there is a stage before reading; but I join her in hoping that that will be the next stage.

When I worked for Ernst and Young, we used to hold a cocktail party once a year and raise money from the partners, the managers and the staff, who were all accountants. The money was sent to a school in Kathmandu, courtesy of one of our great partners, John Brown. That cocktail party would pay the teachers in the school for a year and provide books for the children. It gave us a great deal of pleasure to be able to do something directly for a school that Ernst and Young's indirect taxation department had adopted. I hope that that practice continues. The money was well received and very necessary. Both boys and girls were educated in that school: they were of equal importance in that community.

Mr. Wells: In the debate on the right to education and the right to read, is it not fundamental that a great programme should be launched by the Department for International Development and international organisations to make good-quality teacher training a reality?

Mrs. Gillan: I do not disagree with my hon. Friend. I hope that we will hear the Minister's views on that issue.

Education has been the common theme of almost every contribution to the debate and is undoubtedly the key to improving the lot of women worldwide. However, getting more girls into school is not a straightforward process, as has been illustrated in this debate. To educate more girls, developing countries must overcome social and religious barriers to the increased role of women in society, and the work must be done with sensitivity. Western countries must be careful, when they promote the schooling and education of both sexes in the developing world, in line with our established traditions, to do so in a sensitive way that takes the whole community along with them. I share some of the views expressed in the debate about that. We must ensure that we encourage only sustainable development, not unsustainable development, so that we carry with us the whole culture, the whole area, the whole village and the whole town.

One of this country's great assets is the British Council and the role that it plays in education throughout the world. As I have done in other debates, I want to draw the Minister's attention to its remarkable work on women and development. Around the developing world, the major barrier for women is lack of education, as has been said time and again. The British Council works with education ministries and local communities to help to meet that need. In addition, it works to empower women in developing countries by promoting their access to political involvement. Through its seminars and conferences and on-the-ground training, women are encouraged to play their part in politics and equipped with the necessary skills. Without that work, many developing countries would be deprived of the good sense that women can bring to politics.

Like all other aspects of the British Council's work, its involvement in educating women is threatened and limited by the Government's serious underfunding. The Select Committee on Foreign Affairs found that the funding would be lower than in any year of the previous Government. Therefore, I hope that, in a debate in which we have highlighted education, the Minister will give me a constructive answer and tell me if and when he proposes to increase funding to the British Council, in view of its important role in development.

I want to give the Minister the chance to reply at length to this debate, because the report is highly significant. However, I should like to mention a couple of matters arising from the Government's response to the report, in the hope that he will deal with them in his reply. In response to paragraphs 2 and 3, the Government said:

> Further details of how we intend to implement . . . commitments—to a rights-based development policy agenda—

> are to be set out in a series of strategy papers to be published during the course of the coming year. The series of strategy papers will include specific papers addressing women's equality, and human rights for poor people.

I know that the Minister has kindly made available a report, which he has left with his officials. What further strategy papers can we expect, and when will they be delivered?

Following their visit to Pakistan, Committee members rightly expressed great concern in paragraph 8 about the situation in that country. The Government's response states:

> We take every opportunity to ensure that the Pakistani authorities are aware of our concerns.

I am sure that those concerns have been expressed to the Pakistani authorities, but I hope that the Minister will say where, how and on what occasions they were expressed, and outline his plans for monitoring the situation. The Pakistani authorities should be actively reminded that the UK Government are paying attention to events in that region.

Paragraph 16 says:

> DFID India will be actively considering support to a second volume of the Atlas—

the "Atlas of Women and Men in India"— > following the completion of the 2001 census in India.

Has a decision been taken on that? When can we expect a definite yes or no?

In paragraph 22 of the report, the Committee recommends > that DFID conduct an assessment of the impact of radio gender training projects such as those run by Trish Williams, and provide an analysis of the value of the radio as a mechanism for distributing information to women and men about, for example, education and health.

I think that the hon. Member for Slough will admit that, for those who cannot read, the radio is a valuable medium for transmitting advice. Indeed, the BBC World Service, whose educational activities are targeted to providing learning opportunities and enabling informed choices, has first-class radio programmes. If the Minister is unaware of programmes such as "Everywoman" and "New Parents", he should familiarise himself with them immediately.

What is happening in the DFID's social development department? Apparently, it has recently strengthened its professional capacity in relation to media and development, and will shortly begin work on developing approved approaches to assessing the impact of radio programmes, including the benefits to women as well as men. I am pleased to hear that, but I wonder what progress has been made since the publication of the response.

Female genital mutilation has been mentioned by several hon. Members in this debate. Paragraph 46, in which Ms Greer, the well-known feminist, is condemned, meets with a singularly brief response:

> The Government agrees with the Committee that culture can not be used as an excuse for the violation of human rights.

I hope that the Minister will tell us exactly what additional action he proposes to take to eradicate this barbaric practice as soon as possible.

I would not want to deny that progress has been made on the plight of women, thanks to the tireless efforts of campaigners and contributors around the world, both male and female, who have helped to raise the status of women. However, we must face the fact that when it comes to poverty and oppression, women undoubtedly remain at the bottom of the heap in many of the world's poorest countries. They not only deserve better but are so obviously the key to raising living standards and conditions for all that we must ensure an increasing focus on women in all our development programmes.

[Mrs. Gillan]

The hon. Member for Bethnal Green and Bow said that if any part of the report should be read, it was the first page. I disagree with her. I believe that if any part of the report should be looked at and read, it is page 170. The caption below the photograph reads:

> Having been told she had only enough milk for one child, and in keeping with cultural biases in favour of the male, this Pakistani mother opted to breast feed her son and bottle feed her daughter. Receiving a fraction of the essential nutrients as her twin brother, the daughter died the next day.

It is a shocking picture, and a vivid example of what is happening to women and men in many parts of the world. No life is worth more or less than another. A woman is not of less value than a man. Our policies must reflect that, and I hope that the Minister will give us that assurance today.

4.51 pm

The Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for International Development (Mr. George Foulkes): I am replying to this debate partly in my capacity as the Department for International Development Minister responsible for gender issues. Perhaps it will please the hon. Member for Chesham and Amersham (Mrs. Gillan) that, although a man has that responsibility, it was given by a woman—our Secretary of State. Perhaps the hon. Lady will also be pleased that, bearing in mind the presence of Baroness Amos—our spokesperson in the House of Lords—our ministerial team contains two very powerful and effective women. The addition of the Parliamentary Private Secretary provides the perfect balance in the Department. As far as the DFID is concerned, we take account of the importance of women.

Mrs. Gillan: I am pleased that the Under-Secretary is pointing out how good his Department is. However, women are making a good contribution in all areas. When one looks at the educational results in this country, one finds that girls are out-performing boys at GCSE and A-level right across the board. Furthermore, I am glad that his Department has been wise enough to appoint such a large number of women.

Mr. Foulkes: I am grateful to the hon. Lady for paying such a generous tribute to the Government's education policies. I am impressed by her generosity. Madam Speaker once referred to Westminster Hall as a parallel Chamber, although not quite a parallel universe. However, if there were a parallel universe in which the gender roles were reversed, imagine the anger that my hon. Friend the Member for Clydebank and Milngavie (Mr. Worthington), the hon. Member for Hertford and Stortford (Mr. Wells) and I would feel—you, as well, Mr. Deputy Speaker, my old friend. If we imagine ourselves in that position, we might not fully understand, but we might begin to understand how our female colleagues feel.

I say, without condescension, that we have had a really excellent debate. It is one of the best, most informed and most interesting debates that I have participated in for a long time. It was initiated in excellent fashion by the hon. Member for Hertford and Stortford. I am not going to enter into valedictories because the hon. Gentleman has a long time to go before he leaves us thankfully. We entered the House at the same time, but I hasten to add—in case anyone suggests that I should follow his example—that he is a little older than me—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. Perhaps the Minister should revisit his earlier sentence. He put the word "thankfully" in the wrong place.

Mr. Foulkes: I always accept your corrections, Mr. Deputy Speaker—I have done so for a long time.

The hon. Member for Hertford and Stortford has my support. We are colleagues and good friends. I also know his wife very well, and I understand the basis of his knowledge on this subject.

We have had an excellent debate. I shall mention particular speeches as I proceed. I hope that hon. Members will forgive me if I pick out that of the hon. Member for Richmond Park (Dr. Tonge), whose graphic and moving speech made me think. Other hon. Members elaborated on matters about which we have heard previously, but her speech gave me a new perspective.

A phrase that was used by my hon. Friend the Member for Clydebank and Milngavie, and by others, suggests that we could retitle our debate. It should be not "Women and Development" but "The empowerment of women".

I shall do my best to reply to all of the points that have been raised, but if I miss out anything, I shall try to follow it up in correspondence. When the International Development Committee said that it would carry out a study of women and development, my Department and I, like my hon. Friend the Member for Hampstead and Highgate (Ms Jackson), were overjoyed. We were more encouraged when that Committee decided to inform its study with an extensive field visit to programmes in south Asia. It also took account of its earlier visit to east Africa. If anyone criticises the expenditure of Select Committees on travel, they should read the Select Committee's report and the Official Report of this debate. We have had a better, and better informed, debate as a result of the experiences of hon. Members on those visits.

A central plank of the programme of the Department of International Development is, as several hon. Members said, to work for greater equality for women. Our work cannot be fully understood if that is not taken into account. It is only when we see the work on the ground that we truly begin to understand the complexities of the issues surrounding women's equality. I hope that the sincerity of our aims is appreciated. When the Committee published its report last November, we were pleased that it presented a positive view of our efforts, but we accept its statement that much remains to be done.

Before I pick out some of the report's findings and some of the points that were raised in the debate, I want to reiterate our policy and the thinking that lies behind it. Our position is clear: world poverty will not be eliminated without the empowerment of women. That simple and clear statement is supported by compelling evidence. As several hon. Members said, women make up the majority of the world's poor and—this is the crucial point—they hold the key to their escape from poverty.

Several hon. Members have reported that the United Nations has said that poverty has a woman's face, and the facts suggest that that is right. The hon. Member for Hertford and Stortford and other hon. Members reminded us that 70 per cent. of the world's poor are female. The simple statement hides a complex reality. Poverty involves a lack of income, a lack of access to public services, the denial of the opportunity for human development, the lack of a voice in political life and decision making—to which many hon. Members referred—social exclusion and subordination. All poor people suffer those deficits but, almost without exception, women suffer them more than men.

My hon. Friend the Member for Bethnal Green and Bow (Ms King) explained that she had another engagement and that she would read the response to her comments in Hansard. She said that most women's work was unpaid and taken for granted, although it was vital to economic and social development.

The hon. Member for Hertford and Stortford said that in many countries women had little or no control over land and other vital assets. They also receive a lesser share of household income, but consistently give priority to other family members, especially their children, when using the limited resources over which they have control.

Two out of every three children in the world who do not go to school are girls—I shall return to the matter of education in Dakar later. Every year, 500,000 women die as a result of pregnancy. Women in Africa have a one in 12 lifetime risk of dying in childbirth compared with one in 4,000 in western Europe. Millions of women every year are subjected to violence and abuse in the home, as well as in the ever-increasing conflicts.

The hon. Member for Richmond Park asked about women who held a parliamentary seat. For every such women in the world, there are almost nine men who hold a seat. The problem is widespread and there is a long way to go. South Africa is a good example, with almost 30 per cent. of seats being held by women, which is almost twice the proportion here, despite the great efforts of the Labour party to increase female representation in the House. We do not have all the answers and we can learn from experience elsewhere. I could go on, but it would be wrong to paint an unmitigated picture of gloom. When women are given a proper chance, the whole world benefits. Women should be seen not as victims but as active agents of change.

My hon. Friend the Member for Clydebank and Milngavie and many other hon. Members, including my hon. Friend the Member for Slough (Fiona Mactaggart), said that education was the key. Getting more girls through school brings a huge development dividend. Research shows that women with even a few years of basic education are economically more productive. They have, as the hon. Member for Richmond Park said, smaller, healthier familes and are more likely to send their own children to school.

The facts and figures speak for themselves. Let us not forget that we are talking about basic human rights, as well as the common good, when we argue for women's equality. Our policy is not merely an instrument to achieve a higher goal; it is a fundamental goal in its own right.

Let me now turn to the report. I shall not go through the findings one by one, but I shall deal with those that have been raised today. The Government's response to the Committee's 68 findings and recommendations has been published, and I shall draw attention to a few themes.

First, the continued spread of HIV is one of the most alarming threats to world development. It has already estabished a firm grip in Africa, where it is one of the biggest direct obstacles to be overcome in the struggle for sustained poverty reduction. As the Committee noted, the impact of the pandemic has not yet been felt to the same extent in Asia, although the absolute number is higher. We must quickly learn the lessons from Africa and prevent the further spread of the deadly virus.

The Department for International Development recognises the concern expressed by the Committee and I assure the Chamber that we share that concern. We are working closely with Governments, civil society and other donors through the United Nations AIDS consortium to increase the impact of our efforts to slow the spread of HIV in Asia, as well as making a major contribution to international funding to combat HIV and AIDS in Africa.

I attended the Commonwealth Heads of Government meeting at which the Prime Minister announced £100 million to tackle AIDS worldwide. That is a huge amount from our budget. I visited Umlazi township, which is just outside Durban, and spoke to youngsters about the problem of AIDS. I also visited a clinic and spoke to a doctor who told me that he had visited a school on the previous day, and had explained to a teacher that 25 per cent. of his class would die of AIDS. That is a frightening prospect.

We are also putting much effort and resources into the search for an AIDS vaccine, although such a vaccine is unlikely to become available for some years. As the Select Committee knows, openness about the challenge of HIV and AIDS is an essential first step. That is a clear lesson of the African experience, as the true extent of the spread of the virus was hidden for too long, especially in certain countries. HIV affects all layers of society, but the poor are hit especially hard. The rate of infection among women is starting to overtake that among men. Women are more susceptible to the virus than men, and appear to develop full-blown AIDS more quickly. HIV-AIDS is more than a health problem; it is strongly related to the way in which sexual and other relationships are negotiated between men and women.

I want to deal with one or two of the points made by Select Committee members. The hon. Member for Richmond Park raised reproductive health. Better sexual health is a priority for the Department. Women are especially vulnerable to infection, which often goes unnoticed until serious damage has been done. We are giving great support to programmes that improve access to quality basic services and community-based campaigns to promote safer sex and help empower women and girls to reject unwanted sexual attention. Our strategy is to support initiatives to improve young people's access to information about sex and sexuality, and to help develop social skills and gender awareness, especially among young men. We want to improve access to gender-sensitive and user-friendly services, including making condoms more readily available to young people when they commence sexual relations, which is at a much earlier age than when we were young, and is much earlier in certain countries than in the United Kingdom. We also want to provide information to young people in a language and style that they understand. On reproductive health, we are taking account of what is being said.

[Mr. Foulkes]

The hon. Member for Hertford and Stortford and my hon. Friend the Member for Bethnal Green and Bow spoke about the Gap clinic. Paragraph 29 of our response to the Select Committee states:

> The Government remains convinced that short to medium term subsidies for reproductive health care services for women in garment factories in Bangladesh are justified . . . DFID agrees that in many circumstances employers could—and should—> do more to protect and improve the health of their workers.

Like my hon. Friend the Member for Bethnal Green and Bow, I hope that if Gap reads the report it, along with other employers, will take note. Hon. Members—especially Select Committee members—would be concerned if advice and help were not available to Gap workers because we had pulled out of the project. We have made short-term provision, but I hope that we have put pressure on multinational companies to make provision in the longer term.

The hon. Member for Chesham and Amersham asked what the Government were doing to help combat malaria, especially in Mozambique. We are providing huge financial assistance to the World Health Organisation's roll back malaria campaign. We are aware of the potential for a sharp increase in disease in Mozambique, and we are channelling resources to the United Nations and the Red Cross to cope with any increase in malaria and cholera.

While I am talking about health issues, I want to deal with maternal mortality, which was raised by the hon. Member for Richmond Park. She described it graphically, as well as other issues affecting women in childbirth. A reduction in maternal mortality is one of the key international development targets. That shows the importance that the United Nations and the Government attach to it. We aim to play our part in dramatically reducing the present unacceptably high rate. It is a big challenge and may be the hardest of all the targets that we have agreed to achieve. However, we do not shrink from it. I give hon. Members the assurance that our work will not be complete until that target is achieved.

My hon. Friend the Member for Hampstead and Highgate apologised for the fact that she would have to leave the Chamber before the end. However, she and other hon. Members raised questions of violence against women. The Select Committee expressed deep concern about violence against women in all its forms and about the limits placed on women's freedom by appeals to the sanctity of culture and tradition. We share those concerns. We have considerably broadened our support of initiatives aimed at stopping gender-based violence in all its forms—in the home, during times of conflict and in the chaos and confusion caused by human disasters and emergencies, particularly in relation to culture and tradition.

As my hon. Friend the Member for Clydebank and Milngavie rightly said, the Committee expressed its alarm at the problem of missing women that it noted during its visit to south Asia. Demographic data show that there are far fewer women in the population there than one would expect. In some places, being conceived or born as female can literally be a sentence of death. Governments are taking steps to stamp that out, but we share the Committee's view that greater urgency is required.

My hon. Friend the Member for Hampstead and Highgate asked for an assurance in relation to paragraph 147 of the Select Committee's report. We strongly reject arguments that seek to legitimise women's oppression on the grounds of culture or tradition. People have the right to their own culture, but not at the expense of fundamental human rights. Human rights are universal and take precedence over all other considerations. We will continue to support women who challenge oppressive traditions and to play our part in promoting public dialogue in the developing world, aimed at changing attitudes in favour of women's equality. I hope that that reassures hon. Members who raised the issue.

The hon. Member for Hertford and Stortford raised the issue of infanticide and the neglect of girls. It is hard to explain the neglect and abuse of children, but no doubt poverty is both a cause and a consequence. Governments must work to meet that challenge, and we shall support them in our work.

My hon. Friend the Member for Bethnal Green and Bow asked about access to justice, which we accept is a key concern. We are developing a new approach to security and accessible justice that seeks to match the best parts of traditional systems—there are some good parts; they are not all bad—with better access to modern systems. Women's access and the upholding of women's rights are central in our thinking.

Before I go on to some of the lessons that we have learned from the Select Committee's report and our own work, I want to deal with some of the other points raised. The hon. Member for Chesham and Amersham referred to the British Council's role in education and claimed that it was seriously underfunded. That is wrong. The British Council's core funding is increasing. The Foreign and Commonwealth Office has responsibility for that. She is alluding to the contracts for which it bids, and for which DFID is responsible. It now bids along with many other bodies, but does not always gain the contracts that it might have gained in the past, because we are trying to get the best value for money.

The hon. Lady asked about radios. I assure her that we have a specialist in post who is developing a programme of work, which includes the question of gender impact.

Several hon. Members referred to the importance of micro-credit, and we agree with that. I shall not repeat what has been said, but I will say that we are increasing our activities and resources in that respect. The hon. Member for Chesham and Amersham will be especially pleased to hear that.

Mrs. Gillan: I am delighted that the Minister is increasing the resources. Can he tell us when, and by how much?

Mr. Foulkes: Not immediately off the top of my head. I shall write to the hon. Lady giving chapter and verse.

The international community is continually learning more about the pursuit of women's equality, both from successes and failures. The Committee's inquiry has helped us to focus on lessons from its experience and our own.

Three key lessons stand out. First, good policy is not enough—it must be followed through in practice. That requires good planning, technical experience, good follow up, high levels of management support and, above all, adequate resources. Many countries, including those visited by the Committee, claim to guarantee women's equality in their constitutions. However, one does not have to look hard to see that it is yet to be delivered in practice.

Secondly, good statistics and other data, broken down by sex, are necessary to inform policy making and to monitor progress. The lack of good data has been a major obstacle to good development work for far too long.

Thirdly, a major lesson is that little can be achieved in the long term by focusing on small-scale initiatives alone. While those bring direct benefits to many people, they rarely bring about lasting, strategic change. Their greatest value is a knowledge-generating, learning experiences, and as ways of hearing the voices of women. Lasting change is best brought about through interventions that focus on major policy reforms, changes to laws and regulations, the reallocation of financial and other resources, and the promotion of changes in attitude through public debate.

That brings me to DFID's new strategy. Those three lessons are reflected in a new global strategy paper—"Poverty Elimination and the Empowerment of Women"—which the Department has recently published for consultation. It has been sent to members of the Committee, and we would welcome their views—and, indeed, those of all hon. Members. The paper is one of a series that explains in detail what is required to deliver the international development targets to which we are committed.

The hon. Member for Chesham and Amersham asked what other strategy papers we have issued and how they are available. Papers have been published on: income, poverty and economic well being; health; education; women; human rights; the environment; water supply; better government; and urban development. They are all available on our website or from our information department, and I hope that hon. Members will take the opportunity to comment on them. We are producing reports, seeking views on them and evaluating how far we are progressing, year by year, in achieving the targets. That indicates how seriously we take those targets.

Mr. Wells: I hope that the Minister will agree that the Committee's report should form a base resource document to be discussed at the panel session of the meeting of the annual conference of the Commonwealth Parliamentary Association, which is to be held in London and Edinburgh.

Mr. Foulkes: That is a good suggestion, which I shall take on board. An indication of how much the hon. Gentleman and I have in common is the fact that we are both wearing the tie of the UK Committee of the Commonwealth Parliamentary Association. He and I are both trustees of the CPA's international fund, but perhaps I ought not to say too much about that. We would like views on our report to be expressed by the end of April, so that is an Easter task for hon. Members.

The international community has pledged to remove gender disparities in access to primary and secondary schooling in the next five years. That is a major priority. As my hon. Friend the Member for Slough rightly said, education provides an excellent starting point, but it is the beginning, not the end. Our strategy recognises that greater gender equality is required in all development areas. The goal of gender equality must be pursued in respect of all the internationally agreed development targets to which I have referred, and in the wider process of governance and the pursuit of human rights. Our strategy paper sets out the steps that our Department proposes to take in contributing to achieve those goals.

We see many opportunities for accelerated progress. A solid global policy framework is in place that is based on numerous international agreements. The knowledge and evidence base that links greater women's equality with material gains in economic and social development is well established and, thankfully, is growing fast. There is also much greater understanding of remaining obstacles to the achievement of international gender equality goals.

As the Secretary of State and I have said on a number of occasions, targets have been agreed at successive UN conferences. Immediate opportunities to reaffirm and further strengthen the international policy framework and consolidate lessons learned are presenting themselves as, at the turn of the millennium, the UN takes stock of progress made in implementing agreemets reached at the major UN conferences of the 1990s.

Progress towards women's equality will be reviewed in June at the highest international level—a special session of the General Assembly of the UN in New York. That is a clear sign of the growing importance of this issue on the world stage. Of course, we will play our part in ensuring that the event is a signpost to further progress for women. However, we shall also work hard to protect gains made for women in respect of education, at Jomtien, in 1990; the environment, at Rio, in 1992; human rights, at Vienna, in 1993; health, at Cairo, in 1994; and social development, at Copenhagen, in 1995.

Several hon. Members have raised the issue of education. My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State is at the forefront of international work in this area. In April, she will travel to Dakar, Senegal, to attend the "Education for All" conference, and will enjoy the full authority and support of the Prime Minister. In debating the empowerment of women today, we should be pleased that the United Kingdom will be represented at that conference by a woman, with all the power, authority and strength that the office of Secretary of State possesses. I guarantee my hon. Friend the Member for Slough that the Secretary of State will join forces with others in the international community in arguing for universal primary education and equal opportunity for girls in the completion of schooling.

[Mr. Foulkes]

The remaining major constraints on women's equality relate to the underlying issue of political will and the need to develop a much greater capacity to translate good policy intentions into real actions on the ground. Although partnerships are strengthening around a greater sense of common purpose, much remains to be done to close gaps in understanding and increase co-operation between Governments, and between the state and civil society. The heart of the matter is social change, and we must recognise that a strong women's movement has been a key driving force in the United Kingdom and internationally.

The Department for International Development and the Government as a whole are strongly committed to supporting the world's women in setting the agenda on their own behalf. Donors, including the Department for International Development, have an important strategic role to play, but we must recognise our limitations and deficiencies, including problems relating to co-ordination and capacity, and the way in which we prioritise the use of our resources. The richer countries must also pay their part in addressing issues involving global regulation and equity. We must work actively with the private sector to improve labour and trading standards and strengthen social responsibility and business practice in ways that promote and support greater equality. The private sector needs to be targeted.

My hon. Friend the Member for Hampstead and Highgate discussed labour standards. We are working with the International Labour Organisation to promote more widespread adoption of core labour standards and to guarantee better terms and conditions for workers, including, in particular, women, who make up a large proportion of the lowest-paid workers.

We have a huge agenda, to which we are firmly committed. Unless development is for all of us, it means nothing. If development is not working for women, it is not working at all.

This excellent report is a great contribution to our thinking on this subject. I hope that the Chairman of the International Development Committee and its members will not feel belittled if I say that the report is not the beginning of our consideration of the issue, and it is certainly not the end of it. The report and this debate have improved our thinking and informed us.

The next stage is our consultative document, to which I hope many hon. Members will contribute, including, in particular, members of the International Development Committee. Beyond that, the challenge is to translate our words into actions. We can talk in the House, in this Chamber and in Committee, but unless we go out into Africa, Asia and other parts of the developing world we shall not have taken up the challenge. I give an assurance that the Department for International Development and, more generally, the Government will take up that challenge.

Question put and agreed to.

Adjourned accordingly at twenty-six minutes past Five o'clock.

Westminster Hall

Tuesday 4 April 2000

[SIR ALAN HASELHURST in the Chair]

Shipbuilding (River Tyne)

Motion made, and Question proposed, That the sitting be now adjourned.—[Mr. Clelland.]

10 am

Mr. Alan Campbell (Tynemouth): I am grateful for the opportunity to raise this important subject, and I do so at a time of considerable difficulty for shipbuilding, ship repair and the offshore fabrication yards on Tyneside. Fifteen years ago, as many as 30,000 people were employed in the maritime industries in the north-east, but that figure has been halved. Current estimates suggest that many of those jobs, as well as about 7,000 jobs in related industries, may be under threat. The sector has been dealt a double blow by the maturity of the oil and gas industry in the North sea and generally diminishing defence budgets. Although most people welcome the peace dividend, it nevertheless makes life more difficult for the yards that compete for defence contracts.

Let me make it clear from the outset that we are proud of our maritime heritage in the north-east. Some of the world's greatest ships were built in the north-east. Shipbuilding is part of the great triumvirate, with coal mining and iron and steel, which dominated the region for so long. More recently, it has been estimated that as much as 80 per cent. of the North sea oil platforms involved companies in the north-east as either a prime contractor or supplier. That means that the north-east has a significant concentration of people with the skills and expertise to compete on the world stage.

The north-east is perhaps unique as a region in that it still has all the people, companies and components to design, build and fit out a ship from beginning to end, yet the average age of the work force in those industries on Tyneside is about 49. However, shipyard workers recognise that previous success, the glories of our past and having the skills and expertise to build ships offer no guarantee in a global marketplace. I make it clear, therefore, that this debate is not about recognising shipbuilding as a traditional or sunset industry, but about claiming that shipbuilding and the maritime industries are part of the new economy. Far from being outdated and old-fashioned, the maritime fabrication industries incorporate high technology and world-class skills. We in the United Kingdom are still recognised as being among the best in the world, and we expect the Government to acknowledge that fact.

When the Shearwater platform left AMEC in Wallsend last month, it did so on time and to price. Its owner, Shell, recognises it as a world-class product. Much of the kit on that platform was the result of innovation and creativity that began with the design and grew as the development took place over months and years. That is part of the innovation and creativity of the new economy.

North Tyneside college, which serves my constituency, has just opened a £2 million high-technology engineering centre which will support the development of specialist engineering skills in the shipyards and the maintenance facilities along the River Tyne. The centre gives training up to national vocational qualification level 4. That includes something called mechatronics, which is a new one on me. Mechatronics develops multi-skilled engineers who can turn their hand to any area of engineering; it is part of the new economy. The facility will support any purchaser of the former Siemens factory in my constituency; it is an investment in the new economy. Companies such as Cammell Laird and Swan Hunter have invested in the new economy and have taken on many apprentices. They are training young people—in some cases, in traditional skills that are to be employed in the new economy. They believe that those skills are relevant to the new economy.

The real issue, however, is how the shipyards on the River Tyne can survive and their skills be renewed to allow the sector to take advantage of future opportunities—and there will be such opportunities.

Mr. A. J. Beith (Berwick-upon-Tweed): I support what the hon. Gentleman said about the economic significance of shipbuilding on the Tyne, and I hope that he recognises that its significance extends far into the region. I hope that he recognises that people who work in the yards—including those with particular skills and creativity—and small businesses that subcontract within the industry are found throughout Northumberland, far beyond the radius of Tyneside itself.

Mr. Campbell: I do indeed recognise that. The right hon. Gentleman makes his point well—the matter concerns not only the whole of the north-east, but other regions.

There are clear signs that there will be future opportunities. The Association of European Shipbuilders and Shiprepairers forecasts rising demand in the industry in the early part of this decade. Some forecasters predict the need for more than 2,000 new ships each year until 2010. Four out of five of those will be needed to replace ships in ageing fleets. An upturn is forecast in offshore oil and gas extraction, which will create demand for floating production and storage offshore vessels, which will replace platforms in some respects. A growing consensus suggests that between 25 and 30 FPSOs will be needed, but forecasts suggest that as many as 120 new vessels will be needed worldwide—some, perhaps, in the North sea. The movement of goods in the European Union favours a rise in the number of ships. The number of people in this country who take cruises doubled in the 1990s, so there will inevitably be demand for cruise liners of all sizes. I do not suggest that all those ships could be built on Tyneside. However, there will be demand, and it is important that Tyneside's shipbuilding capacity survives so that the sector can make use of its skills and take advantage of the opportunities that I have described.

I accept that many of the answers to the problems that the shipyards and offshore yards face lie outside the Government's remit. However, I raise these issues as a constituency Member of Parliament. I no longer have shipyards in my constituency, but, many of my constituents and their families rely on the work provided by the yards along the Tyne. It is fair to ask what the Government can do and to get them to do it.

[Mr. Campbell]

Let me give some examples. The Government can place Ministry of Defence contracts with UK yards. The commitment in the strategic defence review to develop and rebuild our ageing fleet is welcome, but it is also important to ensure that we bring that work forward so that it is on stream. In that way, we will ensure as far as we can that there is continuity of work in our shipyards while they look for other opportunities and alternative contracts. I urge the Government to bring forward the two alternative landing ship logistic vessel contracts, which have the capacity to generate 4,000 jobs; 2,000 directly and 2,000 in the wider community.

Companies in the north-east ask for nothing more than the opportunity to bid for the order. Like us, they are confident that Tyneside yards can deliver quality work, reliability and value. In relation to MOD contracts, I shall refer to roll on/roll off ferries, which have caused controversy in the past few days. My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Defence has recognised that United Kingdom yards have the expertise and capability to build such ferries, and I welcome that. Even at this late hour, the three British yards with an interest are doing unprecedented work on a proposal involving co-operation and sharing work between yards. They are confident that they can compete commercially with foreign yards.

The MOD rightly requested that bids for such ferries include proposals for building them in UK yards. Will the MOD actively consider any further proposals and do all that it can within the rules, guidelines and the law to bring the work to British yards? Such news would be welcome in the north-east of England, Northern Ireland and Scotland. All our companies ask is that they be allowed to compete on a level playing field.

There is concern that overseas yards subsidise work to win orders. A leading offshore company in the north-east told me that it is currently bidding for a major overseas order for FPSO vessels and is in direct competition with Korean yards, which may receive a subsidy of more than 20 per cent. Ironically, there are strong suspicions that International Monetary Fund money—which originates, in part, from the pockets of European taxpayers—is used to subsidise Korean yards. Pressure is being put on the Korean Government in relation to that. However, in the circumstances, I would press my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry to ensure that the shipbuilding intervention fund remains available for British shipyards beyond the end of the year.

Furthermore, we have been told repeatedly that the real work of the contract is not on the hull of the vessel but on the kit that goes inside. Therefore, British offshore yards could be helped to compete in world markets by imaginative application of the shipbuilding fund—perhaps to the top side of FPSOs, demand for which is expected to grow.

The Government could also announce a review of the moratorium on gas-fired power stations. I share concern about the future of UK pits, and welcome my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State's efforts to secure that future, not least for the last deep-mined pit in the north-east. However, once that decision has been taken, I hope that there will be a review of the moratorium on gas-fired power stations. That would be welcomed in shipyards and offshore yards along the Tyne, as it would act as a spur to the development of gas fields in the UK sector and generate activity in offshore yards.

I would also urge a review of how licences are awarded. It is frustrating that companies may be awarded a licence, only to sit on it until the price of gas or oil is right for it. New licences should be awarded only after companies offer a clear schedule for extraction. I do not seek or expect answers to my questions today, but I want my hon. Friend the Minister to consider them.

I shall speak plainly on another matter, which challenges the Government as much as the companies involved in shipbuilding and offshore on the Tyne. Some companies live for the next contract and do not plan for difficult periods. We are in one of those periods now.

One of the workers on the Shearwater platform, which I visited recently before it left the Tyne, said to me, "Platforms are like relatives at Christmas. You like to see them come, but you like to see them go." The assumption is that another visit will inevitably follow, yet in challenging circumstances we cannot be sure that that will happen. The yards on Tyneside need a sustainable future, which means establishing a long-term vision in a time of short-term pressure. Never has there been a stronger case for the stakeholders on Tyneside—employers, employees, trade unions, higher and further education and the regional development agency—to work together, a development that I urge the Department of Trade and Industry to encourage and support.

The first step might be to commission a study of future opportunities to discover how Tyneside can best position itself to exploit them. The issue of employment and training could be addressed, perhaps leading to continuous employment for some of the shipyard workers for the first time. What a difference that would make to their pensions and mortgages. It would also allow overheads to be cut and training to take place in the quiet periods, which would make the yards on Tyneside more competitive. Such a forum could also explore the possibilities of diversification, through decommissioning or recommissioning, alternative energy supply such as offshore wind farms, and the servicing of offshore platforms.

The centre of gravity in the North sea is shifting southwards; it costs as much as £30 million a year to service a single platform offshore, and in the Great Yarmouth area a partnership of the kind that I mentioned is being created in response to the opportunities presented by decommissioning and recommissioning. Tyneside should learn from that lesson.

The Government have already made an important contribution by helping individual companies to identify potential markets and by helping with export orders. A major offshore fabrication company told me that the Secretary of State is extremely supportive of its efforts to win orders and it is grateful for the Department of Trade and Industry's initiatives. We must ensure that that support continues and grows, for the benefit of all the yards, so that Tyneside can develop as a centre of excellence for the maritime industries.

There is great anxiety about the current situation, but also confidence that there will be future opportunities in the maritime sector, provided that the yards get through their present difficulty. I urge the Government to do all that they can to help the companies and the work force in their efforts to ensure that there is a future for the industry, and for its work force and their families.

10.18 am

Dr. David Clark (South Shields): I congratulate my hon. Friend from across the River Tyne in North Shields, the Member for Tynemouth (Mr. Campbell), on his perspicacity in securing the debate, which could not be more timely, in the general and the particular sense. There is great dismay in the north-east on the Tyne, the Wear and the Tees, about remarks emanating through persons unknown at the Ministry of Defence that United Kingdom shipyards no longer have the skills to build a roll on/roll off ferry. That sort of ignorant comment, based as it is on falsehood, demoralises the work force. I am delighted that my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Defence has made it clear that that is not the Government's view and that the Government still believe that the UK retains the capacity to build merchant and naval ships in UK yards. I emphasise that because there are people based not a quarter of a mile from the Palace of Westminster who simply do not understand the regions. It is therefore apposite that we, as representatives from the regions, are able to redress the balance here; that adds to the value of the timing of the debate.

I continue on a consensual note by stating a fact: Britain is an island. As such, 90 per cent. if our trade is conducted by sea. The basic logic, therefore, is that it would be crazy of us to throw away our capability to build ships to transport some of that trade. Equally, in the North sea, the Irish sea and elsewhere, there are oil and gas fields within our sovereign area. It would seem crazy not to retain the capacity to build and decommission those oil rigs—but I will come back to that.

There has been a dramatic change in the River Tyne. All of us who know anything about the river know that the trade fluctuates—like a relative at Christmas, as my hon. Friend the Member for Tynemouth said. I support my hon. Friend's call for a long-term strategy for the maritime capabilities on the Tyne and other rivers. He was right also to cite the fact that other rivers and estuarial areas in the UK have faced up to long-termism better than we on Tyneside have done. Mea culpa. I accept that. We must do better.

However, I doubt that anyone could have foreseen the dramatic downturn that has occurred in the River Tyne work force. In 1997, an estimated 14,000 people worked in the various yards on the River Tyne; now there are 800. The Aker McNulty yard is in my constituency. Three years ago, 5,500 were employed there; now there are 300. What applies to that yard applies to AMEC, Austin and Pickersgill, Cammell Laird, Swan Hunter and so on. The "so on" is so important because, as the right hon. Member for Berwick-upon-Tweed (Mr. Beith) said, this debate is about not only the river and the people who work in the yards but the wider region and the other skills that service direct work on the river. I make this point on behalf of my constituents: there has been a massive reduction in employment opportunities in our region. The latest Government figures show that male unemployment in South Shields, where industry is largely male-dominated, is 19.8 per cent. My hon. Friend the Minister will therefore appreciate our concern at the plight of our industry.

My hon. Friend the Member for Tynemouth said that it is not easy to put that right. We know that no one can simply wave a magic wand. We know that the Government are constrained by European Union rules and regulations. I hesitate to say this, but it would not be understood on Tyneside if the British Government awarded a contract to build roll on/roll off ferries to a German company at a time when another German company had dealt such a devastating blow to another part of our manufacturing base in the west midlands. I appreciate the difficulties in the EU, but other countries find ways around this problem.

Ms Dari Taylor (Stockton, South): Will my right hon. Friend acknowledge, Mr Heseltine, that the Tees would find it—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. I am not sure what form of address the hon. Lady used, but it was not the right one.

Ms Taylor: I accept your correction, Mr. Deputy Speaker.

Does my right hon. Friend acknowledge that people on the Tees would find it extremely undermining if contracts were awarded elsewhere? They, too, have a skilled work force and unemployment problems. Over 13 per cent. of the men in my constituency are unemployed and seeking employment, so I ask my right hon. Friend to include the Tees in his comments.

Dr. Clark: I will gladly do so. I welcome the support of my neighbour from Teesside. Although we are talking about the Tyne today, clearly we are also talking about the whole of the British shipbuilding industry. We know that there are problems on Teesside, Clydeside, Merseyside and elsewhere. This is a national problem and we need a national policy to tackle it. I want to focus on Tyneside today because that is where my constituency is.

What has so annoyed people on Tyneside about the MOD's comment is that we manage to retain, albeit only just, that critical mass of expertise, capability and companies to build ships. We are still in the process of doing so. Indeed, we have the design staff. We have the skilled personnel, although it is ageing. The average age of the men in the yards is 49, which is far too old. We have just got going again, trying to retain and retrain apprentices. There is a lot of ground to make up to start moving from the short-termism of the past. The past should not be the guide to the long-termism of our future. We still have that critical mass, yet, if orders are not forthcoming soon, we fear that we will shall lose it.

One of the complaints of the Tyneside workers it that they are forced out of the region. I guarantee that, whenever I catch a plane from Heathrow, Gatwick,

[Dr. Clark]

Amsterdam, Brussels or wherever, I will meet Tynesiders or Teesiders flying home for a month's break after a period working in Norway, Holland, the middle east or elsewhere. They constantly ask me why they have to go abroad to ply their trade. The skills exist on the Tyne and Tees, and many of these workers would come back and work there if they could.

I cannot add much to the general points made by my hon. Friend the Member for Tynemouth, but I can make a few more points about decommissioning. We are talking about interchangeable skills. They can be used in shipbuilding and in the fabrication of oil and gas rigs. Equally, they can be used in the decommissioning or the recommissioning of oil and gas rigs. The longer term must dominate our thinking at the moment, but to retain our capacity in the long term we are looking for answers in the short term. After about five years there will be a glut of decommissioning or, ideally, recommissioning work from the North sea oil rigs when they are forced to close down, as they must under international law. Some of that work should come to the British yards.

Experts advise that, although most oil and gas rigs are in the British sector, very little decommissioning or recommissioning will be carried out in British yards—unless something dramatic happens—because of the complexities relating to ownership of the facilities. The experts say that all the work will go to Norway or Holland. That is unacceptable. We built most of the rigs and we can take them apart. My hon. Friend the Minister should consider that.

I wrote to my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry about whether Aker McNulty, a company operating in my constituency, had applied to the Government for assistance to allow it to carry out research into the task of decommissioning. The company applied for a research grant of £2.5 million in the belief that thousands of jobs on the River Tyne could be retained in the long term. I understand the difficulties faced by my right hon. Friend, who was not able to offer such a grant. I understand, however, that the application may not yet be completely dead.

Just two weeks ago, I wrote to my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State asking about the prospects for success for a grant application from the parent company of Aker McNulty—a Norwegian company—on the basis that the benefits of any research funded by such a grant would be applied only to British yards. I can see that the Government might be worried about using British taxpayers' money to create a centre of excellence in research on the River Tyne, only to find that the parent company takes the benefit from that research across to Norway, and that most of the physical work of decommissioning or recommissioning is done there. I am not asking for an answer on that issue today, but my hon. Friend the Minister might consider it.

I associate myself completely with what my hon. Friend the Member for Tynemouth said, and I reiterate the point that he made. I have been speaking about Tyneside, because that is the subject of the debate, but we all know that what I have said applies also to Teesside, Wearside, Clydeside, Merseyside and other places. It is very important that the alternative landing ship logistic order is brought forward. I understand that it has already been delayed. We might not win the order on the Tyne, although I hope that we do, but it would help us to retain that critical mass. My hon. Friend mentioned the roll on/roll off contract. I have made my views known about German companies—that is especially relevant at present.

The DTI is carrying out a review of the operation of the Export Credits Guarantee Department and is considering ways of making it more flexible. The difference between the rate for borrowing money in the United Kingdom and that for the euro makes that all the more important. We can be rather smug about how we have a better rate of exchange against the euro and about how its value has fallen, but the bottom line for industrialists is that the base rate in Europe is considerably lower than in this country, and it is easier for industrialists there to borrow money. That is a problem, and I hope that the Government will take it into account.

My key point is that all the stakeholders in the north-east of England—employers, trade unionists, local authorities, Members of Parliament—accept that there must be a long-term future for our river-related industries and that, perhaps, in the past we have not worked together as we should have. If there is to be a long-term future—and there can be a future in shipbuilding and in the oil and gas defabrication industry—we need to plug the gap in the short term. We look to the Government to help us to work with industry in producing innovative ideas that will ensure that the industry will be retained, so that, when there is an upturn in the shipping industry and the decommissioning work starts, we are in a position to win some of that work, and to provide work for our constituents, who feel rather let down at the moment.

Mr. Deputy Speaker (Mr. Nicholas Winterton): Order. We have about 55 minutes left and five hon. Members, including the Minister, have indicated that they wish to speak. I hope that the Minister will be allowed sufficient time to wind up this important debate. Moreover, one hon. Member arrived a little late today and I hope that he will bear in mind my request when he contributes.

10.35 am

Mr. Doug Henderson (Newcastle upon Tyne, North): I congratulate my hon. Friend the Member for Tynemouth (Mr. Campbell) on securing this debate on a crucial issue for the Tyneside region. I echo the points that he has made, and also those raised by my right hon. Friend the Member for South Shields (Dr. Clark): Both made an excellent case for shipbuilding on the River Tyne.

My constituency would not traditionally be described as a shipbuilding constituency; one has to go back about 100 years to find ship assembly taking place there. However, it contains many companies that feed into the shipbuilding industry, and many of my constituents work either on the assembly side of the industry, further down river, or for subcontractors in my constituency. Shipbuilding on the River Tyne is therefore a crucial issue for the people of Newcastle upon Tyne, North.

It would be an omission if I did not pay tribute to the workpeople in the existing shipbuilding and oil rig industry on the Tyne. I felt a great sense of warmth when several of my hon. Friends joined the unions on Tyneside in a demonstration of their support for the shipbuilding industry. Tribute must be paid to those unions, including my own union, the GMB.

We were told by the previous Government that the future of the British economy was dependent on the service industries. That might have been true for parts of central London, but I can assure you, Mr. Winterton—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. I know that the hon. Gentleman has been a distinguished Minister, but he may not be au fait with the way in which to address the Chair in Westminster Hall. It is either Mr. Deputy Speaker or Madam Deputy Speaker.

Mr. Henderson: I apologise, Mr. Deputy Speaker. I asked for guidance on that matter from my colleagues, and I am afraid that I was misguided. Although I was always happy with "Mr. Winterton" in other parts of the House, Mr. Deputy Speaker is a most appropriate form of address in this Chamber.

We were told of the importance of the service industries. I know that the hon. Member for South-West Hertfordshire (Mr. Page), who might contribute to this debate on behalf of the Opposition, took a different view on that issue. Others in the Conservative party also disagreed with their Government's view that we could all work in the service industries. That was good, as it strengthens the alliance of those who believe that manufacturing, in its broadest definition, is the key to the success of our economy if we are to be an exporting and trading nation.

The Government believe that manufacturing is a key sector in our economy, and they instinctively believe that shipbuilding should play a crucial role in building and rebuilding the base of our manufacturing economy. However, they need to consider further the advice that they are given. I am not convinced that that advice identifies shipbuilding as a crucial part of the British economy for areas such as Tyneside. I believe that it is an industry with a future. My hon. Friend the Member for Tynemouth said that predictions suggest that there will be a growth in the demand for ships to move goods and people around the world in the years ahead.

The issue that we must face as a nation is whether we are to be a shipbuilding nation. The decision will be crucial for Tyneside. If we are to be a shipbuilding nation, what must we do to make sure that we are in game? The answer is simple. First, we must have the capacity and the investment in future technologies, including e-commerce and other major developments. Without that, we are in difficulty. Secondly, we must have a pool of people with the skills, the application and the commitment to the industry.

As my right hon. Friend the Member for South Shields said, the average age of skilled work people in the industry is 49. I do not think that 49 is particularly old, but I am sure that we all recognise that it would be better for the future of the industry if that average could be reduced and more young people learnt the skills of tomorrow to give the industry a future.

That is where the emphasis must lie. The Government must ensure that we have that capacity, if they believe, as we do, that shipbuilding has a future and is crucial for the economic prosperity of areas such as Tyneside, and they must take action to ensure that the skills are retained.

I agree with you, Mr. Deputy Speaker, that all hon. Members who wish to speak should have an opportunity to do so and I do not want to take up too much time. The Government may wish to consider two additional points, which have been partly covered. First, there must be close liaison between Departments on Ministry of Defence orders so that the Government's aims are carried out, rather than the aims of one Department. There must be close liaison between the Treasury, the DTI and the MOD on the way in which orders will emerge, the time scale and the investigations that have taken place to ensure that there is a level playing field and that all bidders for the orders operate on the same terms. It is incumbent on the DTI to demonstrate at the end of the process that the playing field was level. I am confident that, if it does, those who bid for the orders in the British sector will be extremely competitive, including bidders from our own river.

Secondly, I want to reinforce the point made by my hon. Friend the Member for Tynemouth about the international context. There is often reluctance in international agreements such as the trade association agreements between the European Union and Korea to give manufacturing industry a place in discussions as a priority. I am not saying that discussions should not focus on what is important for Frankfurt or for the City of London, but the trade association agreements must also pay more attention to the implications for important industries such as shipbuilding. They are not dead, burnt-out, old industries: they are new and vital industries which are capable of adopting all the new technologies to deliver what we want.

That is why the terms of the agreement between the South Koreans and the European Union are not acceptable. They need to be reviewed and, when they are renewed, a far tougher line must be taken on the subsidy that the Koreans give sectors of their manufacturing industry compared with the subsidies given in the European Union. If the Koreans are not prepared to enter into agreements on that basis, the International Monetary Fund should not take a relaxed a view as it has done on the support that it gives to countries such as Korea. I am not anti-Korean, but any country that competes with us in a manufacturing sector should compete on the same terms.

I know that my hon. Friend the Minister will bear those points in mind, as I suspect that he has sympathy with many of them. He has a difficult task, especially in liaising with other Departments, but I am confident that he will fight hard for our cause on Tyneside and I look forward to his response.

10.44 am

Mr. Jim Cousins (Newcastle upon Tyne, Central): Taking your advice, Mr. Deputy Speaker, I shall be extremely brief.

I support my right hon. Friend the Member for South Shields (Dr. Clark) and my hon. Friends the Members for Tynemouth (Mr. Campbell) and for Newcastle upon Tyne, North (Mr. Henderson). This is an important moment for us, and we should remind ourselves that the shipbuilding industry, associated industries and even universities—my constituency is one of the largest centres of education and higher education in maritime industries in the country—all depend on the existence of significant industry on Tyneside. We are not talking about an industry of the past; it has to change, but it will be an important industry in the future. The impact of economic and environmental change means that, in future, ships and all the structures in the sea will have to be of a different order, with different capabilities, and be able to work with different technologies. Maintaining access to the opportunities that arise from that is crucial and provides the real subject matter of the debate.

[Mr. Jim Cousins]

I wish to make two further points to underline the comments of my hon. Friends the Members for Tynemouth and for Newcastle upon Tyne, North. First, the age of the work force is important. Gone are the days when a man with a hammer typified employment in these industries. Secondly, the Government must increase their support for training to higher levels—up to NVQ3—so that young men and women have access to employment opportunities. My hon. Friend the Member for Newcastle upon Tyne, North drew on his own experience when he spoke about that.

The Ministry of Defence does well—in terms of product and people—from the north-east, which provides one of the great recruiting grounds for the British armed forces, yet the region contains almost no significant MOD employment, either uniformed or civilian. In view of the region's current difficulties, our people will not expect us to put up with that for much longer. They will expect us to put pressure on the Government to ensure that in future the MOD has a significant presence in our region. It cannot be right that so much of our defence industry—now very sophisticated and based on modern electronic technology—is concentrated in the south-east of England. As I said, that will not be acceptable to us in the future.

10.47 am

Dr. Vincent Cable (Twickenham): I apologise to you, Mr. Deputy Speaker, and to the hon. Member for Tynemouth (Mr. Campbell) for my late arrival.

Following the closing remarks of the hon. Member for Newcastle upon Tyne, Central (Mr. Cousins), I approach the subject with some humility. I represent a prosperous area of the south of England, which has relatively low unemployment. I doubt whether many hon. Members will have heard of the Twickenham shipbuilding industry, but it came as a shock to discover that it now employs more people than some of the great names of the past, such as Swan Hunter. It has become a niche industry and Twickenham has a working boat yard that produces river passenger boats. More important—and reinforcing the point made by the hon. Member for Newcastle upon Tyne, Central—a large and growing consultancy is doing much of the research and development, design and software work for the industry. The industry is developing there, but not on Tyneside.

I wish to focus on the major public policy issues. The right hon. Member for South Shields (Dr. Clark) raised the key issue of subsidy competition, which is important for two reasons. First, it is damaging to industries on the receiving end of unfair competition. Secondly, it is damaging to all Governments, who are reaching into a potentially bottomless pit to sustain their respective industries in a world of overcapacity.

I emphasise the importance of the potential Organisation for Economic Co-operation and Development agreement, which brings together not just the European countries, but Japan and now Korea. It is not Korea but the United States that is blocking the OECD agreement. Congressional obstruction is preventing us from reaching an agreement to stop this damaging process. I hope that the British Government will emphasise that in trade negotiations with the United States.

Although Korea has replaced Japan as a major player in the shipbuilding industry, the growing force is China, which is rapidly increasing its role. It has an enormous reservoir of labour, much of which is highly skilled, and an opaque system of Government support. It is crucial that China is quickly brought within the World Trade Organisation so that the WTO's disciplines are applied to its shipbuilding industry. If it is not, another industry will founder on what is often unfair, non-market-based competition.

The right hon. Member for South Shields briefly touched on the economic fundamentals. The appreciating exchange rate—15 per cent. overall since the Government took office and 33 per cent. since the trough in 1966—has caused a loss of competitiveness that swamps any benefit that the industry might gain from the subsidy in the intervention fund, which is 4.5 per cent. for big vessels and 9 per cent, for smaller vessels. The over-valued exchange rate and high base rates put the industry, including manufacturers who are not on the Tyne, such as Harland and Wolff a few years ago, at an enormous disadvantage, as they do to much of our manufacturing industry. That problem will continue until the exchange rate is stable and competitive.

My concluding point is a personal one. Although Twickenham is far removed from the industrial problems of the Tyne, my first venture into public life was as a representative of a ward on Glasgow city council. Most of my constituents worked in the upper Clyde shipbuilding industry before it collapsed. I saw at first hand the effect of a contracting shipbuilding industry on a population of highly skilled mainly male workers, many of whom were middle aged and would never work again.

The lessons of the Clydeside experience—the importance of self-help—should be borne in mind for the Tyne. The Scottish Development Agency did a great deal to turn around the Clydeside economy by encouraging regeneration and pulling together the region's stakeholders. Retraining was crucial. The Government should be generous about retraining. If people might never work again, it pays to invest in trying to get them back to work by providing them with lifetime skills. I urge the Government to be broadminded about intervening in the industry. They should look to the future rathere than the past, and not walk by on the other side.

10.52 am

Mr. Richard Page (South-West Hertfordshire): I, too, congratulate the hon. Member for Tynemouth (Mr. Campbell) on his luck in getting chosen in the ballot and on choosing this important subject for debate. We should all be grateful to him for raising concerns that are felt on both sides of the House. Although I am now a soft southerner, I was the Member of Parliament for Workington. I am only too well aware of how deep rooted shipbuilding is in the psyche of the north for economic reasons and of the mental well-being of the people who work and live there. We fully recognise the fears of the Tyne's shipyard workers and the problems that affect the whole shipbuilding industry.

Since 1997, the Tyne's order books have collapsed. If reports are correct, employment has decreased from nearly 14,000 to about 800. I say that with some diffidence because we know that there has been a move to temporary working, so it is difficult to pinpoint those figures. Nevertheless, there has been a savage reduction in employment. Having built four fifths of the installations in the North sea, the Tyne has been reduced to pleading for the development of marginal oil fields and the award of an MOD contract for the landing ships to save what is left of that construction capacity.

The bidding results for the two major orders are now eagerly awaited. The first contract is for up to five alternative landing ship logistic vessels worth £350 million. Both the Swan Hunter shipyard at Wallsend and Cammell Laird at Hebburn have made a bid for them. Cammell Laird is also bidding for a £240 million contract to build the six MOD ro-ro vessels. However, hon. Members have been remarkably tactful in referring to controversy about an MOD official's statement that Tyneside, Glasgow and Belfast lacked the expertise to undertake that ro-ro contract. If those remarks were made, they were unwise and prejudicial to the chances of the Tyne yards in the competition with respect to that order. As a wider issue, how will it look when British shipbuilding companies try to bid in the marketplace if MOD officials say that the skills and abilities are lacking? How will it affect Cammell Laird when it bids for orders in the Philippines? It is highly damaging and the Minister should firmly deny that the official had the authority or knowledge to make that comment.

Hon. Members have asked about fairness of competition, particularly from Korea. The Minister will know that Members of Parliament who are concerned about shipbuilding have signed an early-day motion about the fairness of Korean contracts and bids. The figure of 20 per cent. has been mentioned. In 1994 an agreement was negotiated under the auspices of the OECD to eliminate subsidies in world shipbuilding, including the elimination of contract aid in the EU, the lifting of the Jones Act in the United States and, perhaps most important, the acceptance by Korea of an unfair pricing clause. Although that was signed in December 1994, the failure of the US Congress to ratify it so far has meant that it has not come into force. What are the Government doing—including any action that they are taking with the European Commission—to get the agreement ratified and speedily implemented?

Matters have been made worse by the weak euro vis-à-vis the pound. The latter's strength against the euro and the far eastern currencies will make it that much more difficult for our shipbuilding companies to obtain orders. This morning, for the first time, the euro's value dipped below 60p. That trend cannot be helpful to our shipbuilding industry.

The fact that we are having this debate—particularly with respect to fabrication—reflects badly on the Government's managerial skills. Their clumsy and ill-thought-out review of taxation on North sea exploration inevitably led to oil extraction companies, which perceived the impact of advance corporation tax and the windfall tax, reviewing their whole programmes. I know from my previous incarnation how marginal some of those programmes were in many respects. The number of orders for fabrication has decreased. Fewer wells have been drilled in the North sea between 1997 and 1998.

Therefore, I ask the Minister whether the financial regime for the North sea has been examined to determine whether help can be given to those fabrication yards involved in making floating rigs for use to the west of Shetland. Platforms are not the right technological solution for extracting oil in the deep sea. What is being done to ensure that those oil extraction companies have the confidence to explore around the west of Shetland and Rockall? Licences have been granted to explore the deep water around Rockall and such exploration needs the new technology.

The right hon. Member for South Shields (Dr. Clark) mentioned decommissioning and the hon. Member for Tynemouth mentioned the loss of fabrication, but the Minister must realise that we will not be able to take advantage of any decommissioning if the ability to fabricate is lost. A huge amount of potentially profitable work could be lost if we do not ensure that our fabrication and shipbuilding capacity is in place.

The hon. Member for Tynemouth rightly mentioned training the young. I am one of the few Members who did not go to university; I did an industrial apprenticeship in mechanical engineering. I would not have swapped that training for all the universities under the sun. Newcastle university has a large engineering department, but without a career path or employment opportunities, the young will not take the first steps to learn about engineering. If skills are not constantly refreshed, we shall have no shipbuilding and fabrication industry.

The Secretary of State for Trade and Industry said:

> Tyneside does not want ministerial day-trippers; it wants positive action from the Government.—[Official Report, 12 May 1993; Vol. 224, c. 804.]

He also said:

> Tyneside is not using special pleading, but asking for fair play. Shipbuilding is vital to the manufacturing and industrial base of Teesside. If the Government thought that the people of Teesside would sit back and let shipbuilding die, they have made a grave error.—[Official Report, 19 May 1993; Vol. 225, c. 331.]

The Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food said:

> It is with enormous sorrow that I take part in the debate on Britain's manufacturing base to plead with the Government that they do something to save what is left of the shipbuilding manufacturing base on Teesside. No community deserves better from the Government.—[Official Report, 24 November 1993; Vol. 233, c. 533.]

I hope that the Minister will answer those questions; I look to him for a response. Several hon. Members have said, very generously, that they do not expect answers today; they have asked him to think about the problems. However, the problems are not new; they have grown during the past few years, so there is no reason why he should not answer the questions today. He should give the people of Tyneside some confidence for the future, not knock the problems into the long grass. The hon. Member for Tynemouth asked several very pertinent questions, but he did so delicately. I appreciate his position, but no such restrictions have been placed on me and I hope that I have added to those questions. On behalf of the workers on Tyneside and those in shipbuilding throughout the country, I ask the Minister for some answers.

[Mr. Richard Page]

11.3 am

The Minister for Competitiveness (Mr. Alan Johnson): I congratulate my hon. Friend the Member for Tynemouth (Mr. Campbell) on securing this debate. I am pleased that so many hon. Friends and hon. Members from Teesside are present for what, until the previous speech, has been a fascinating and constructive debate. Debates in Westminster Hall are meant to be less confrontational and it is vital that this issue, more than any other, should not be turned into a Punch and Judy show. I shall respond to the important matters raised by my hon. Friends in the debate, and to the Opposition's petty political point scoring.

The issue is critical to people who live and work on the Tyne. My hon. Friend the Member for Tynemouth referred to two important matters on which I shall respond: the prospects for shipbuilding on the Tyne and the prospects for the Tyne's offshore industry.

I reiterate the comments about the excellence of Tyneside shipyards and their importance to the local economy. As hon. Members have said, the debate is about the United Kingdom shipbuilding industry, although we are referring specifically to the Tyne. I am acutely aware however that all shipyards in the United Kingdom face difficult challenges. There is fierce international competition for orders and global overcapacity of about 30 per cent. The United Kingdom's primary competition is from other European Union countries; I shall refer later to Korea. The contract for Queen Mary II was lost to a French shipyard, which, until the end of the year, has the same subsidy arrangements as are enjoyed throughout the European Union. The challenge is not just from Korea.

It is encouraging that, despite those challenges, the industry has not lost confidence in its future, as was shown recently when my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State opened Cammell Laird's new dry dock and began the process of building a second. My right hon. Friend probably did more for shipbuilding and ship repairing in a week than the hon. Member for South-West Hertfordshire (Mr. Page) and his hon. Friends combined in their lifetime.

There have been several important developments in the past couple of years. Shipbuilding, ship repair and conversion on Merseyside are reviving. Late last year, Cammell Laird won the contract for the conversion of the Costa Classica cruiser, the biggest cruise conversion ever, which is worth £60 million. Conversion is more labour intensive and therefore creates more jobs than shipbuilding. Appledore in Devon recently rescinded 300 redundancy notices after receiving a letter of intent for the second Irish navy fisheries protection vessel.

The United Kingdom remains among the market leaders in Europe, especially for ship conversions. I cannot emphasise strongly enough the fact that the British shipbuilding and ship repair industry has a future, and the key to its future success is its competitive performance. The Government are committed to working closely with the industry to help it to face the challenges and to achieve the improvements necessary to win the contracts that it needs.

I pay tribute to my predecessor, my hon. Friend the Member for Leeds, West (Mr. Battle), who in 1998 set up the first shipbuilding forum, which met around the table in the Department of Trade and Industry. It is remarkable that that had never happened before. We asked the shipbuilding forum, which includes Cammell Laird and A & P Tyne, and representatives of suppliers, customers, trade unions and Government, to tell us what the industry needs. It made 40 recommendations, including a recommendation to enhance Government financial support for the shipbuilding industry.

Much progress has been made. Cammell Laird won the contract on Merseyside because we extended the shipbuilding intervention fund to include conversion, something that the previous Government had never done and without which Cammell Laird would not have won the contract. We have enhanced the home shipbuilding credit guarantee scheme in direct response to a recommendation from the shipbuilding forum. We have also funded a suggestion from the forum that there should be an industry-led study tour of the Netherlands, where the shipbuilding industry has done things differently over the past 20 years. Shipbuilders there collaborate in order to compete, and their investment in skills and training started many years ago. They have carefully examined how they involve the supply chain, which is more crucial to shipbuilding and ship repair than to any other industry. To give due credit to those in the UK industry, they came back from that study tour with many ideas and with a positive approach to the changes that could be implemented in this country—that is benchmarking at its best.

We continue to work closely with the industry through the Shipbuilders and Shiprepairers Association on competitiveness and productivity issues. As hon. Friends have mentioned, we offer the industry significant financial support. We continue to pay the maximum rate of shipbuilding intervention fund for new ships. We have agreed to allow an element of up to 9 per cent. profit in the fund calculations—the third recommendation from the shipbuilding forum's first meeting in 1998 to have been implemented by the end of 1999.

We have brought the DTI scheme into line with our European competitors' practice in several other ways. If there is evidence of any European Union country winning a contract by bending the rules on the shipbuilding intervention fund, we need to know about it, as the DTI has often said. No evidence has been produced to suggest that that is happening.

We have extended the scope of the fund to conversion contracts. We have extended access to several previously excluded yards. Military yards were excluded from SIF assistance, and we have changed that in response to an industry recommendation. We have enhanced the home shipbuilding credit guarantee scheme by providing support for loans in US dollars and euros in response to an industry recommendation.

We recognise the industry's concerns about unfair trade practices, in particular, in Korea—and we should be clear that such practices exist. At least a couple of yards in Korea would, on any impartial analysis, have been declared bankrupt years ago, but they continue to operate. In response to the hon. Member for South-West Hertfordshire, I should mention that we continue to make vigorous efforts to address the industry's concerns. However, we must acknowledge, as the industry does, that Asian shipyards—in particular, those in South Korea—are more competitive than European yards and possess several strengths, such as a highly efficient equipment supplier base. Even without the distortions caused by what are definitely unfair trade practices, European yards would still face a gap in their competitiveness with Asian builders. It is important to say that, because the industry must ensure that it does not fall into the trap of believing that there is only one problem in the British shipbuilding and ship repair industry and that there would be no others if it were resolved. The industry should not delude itself on that issue.

Nevertheless, unfair trade practices are unacceptable and remain a real concern. We continue to strive for a remedy. Thanks to pressure from the Government, the Commission has engaged for the first time in bilateral talks with Korea, with a view to reaching an agreement on the EU industry's concerns. There are positive indications that Korea will accept an agreement, including a consultation mechanism on unfair trade practices.

In the longer term, the only viable solution to anti-competitive practices is to establish effective international trade disciplines, as embodied in the OECD shipbuilding agreement, as my hon. Friend the Member for Tynemouth and the hon. Member for Twickenham (Dr. Cable) said. I reiterate that our efforts on that have been frustrated by the failure of the United States—which, for obvious reasons, has a great deal of influence over South Korea—to ratify the 1994 agreement. Nevertheless, we continue to pursue our objectives.

I am determined to work closely with the industry on Tyneside and throughout the UK to help it to equip itself to meet the tough challenges of the market, boost its competitiveness and improve its success. The Shipbuilders and Shiprepairers Association shares the industry forum's objective of doubling output and building 50 to 60 ships a year within five years. It also aims to improve the annual turnover derived from repair and conversion by at least 30 per cent. Those are realistic targets. As my hon. Friend the Member for Tynemouth said, it has been forecast that more than 2,000 ships will have to be built every year for the next 10 years, excluding tankers and bulk carriers, which are not built in Britain. The industry is taking a positive approach to that market.

We agreed with all other European Union countries—with the support of the industry and the trade unions—to abolish the shipbuilding intervention fund from 31 December 2000. We made that agreement on the basis that the SIF has been in existence for 30 years and has had little effect on helping the industry in this country or the rest of Europe.

The SIF provides up to 9 per cent. assistance; by contrast, the gap in the Asian yards is about 20 per cent. It was thought that, rather than carrying on with the SIF, focusing on research and development, building the skills base and improving training would be a step forward for the industry. That has been approved and the EU directive was changed accordingly by a new regulation in 1998. However, only two weeks ago, I met industry representatives who are anxious that the SIF should remain at least until concerns about Asia—and especially South Korea—have been met. Representatives of the Confederation of Shipbuilding and Engineering Unions made the same point when I met them last week.

We shall give those issues serious consideration. The rest of Europe has agreed to abolish the SIF, so hon. Members will accept that we should lead the charge or support it. It may be difficult to change tack now and overturn the position on the SIF, as that would require a recommendation from the Commission. More important, we have told the industry that we must have clear examples of how maintaining the SIF will help us, particularly to get contracts in the face of competition from Asia and especially South Korea. We are still listening to arguments about changing tack on SIF.

I turn to the prospects for the offshore industry. If I have time, I shall address individual points raised by hon. Members, but first I must put on record our ideas and concerns about the offshore sector. As with shipbuilding, it is important to acknowledge the high levels of skills and experience on the Tyne available to the offshore sector. There is a strong tradition of providing complex engineered structures for oil and gas fields in the North sea and abroad. About 80 per cent. of the top sides for more than 70 offshore oil and gas fields in the UK sector of the North sea were fabricated in north-east yards.

However, it is clear that the days of large fabrication orders for the UK continental shelf are over. The offshore discoveries available for development now are only a fraction of the size of earlier fields such as Brent, Forties. It is unlikely that there will be many more huge orders like that for the Shearwater platform, which recently left the Tyne. There is widespread recognition in the industry that there is overcapacity and a need to rationalise; yet there are still orders to be won, even if those for the United Kingdom continental shelf are smaller. The majority of orders are likely to be for smaller platforms and facility work associated with sub-sea development or floating systems, but there is no doubt that the Tyne, and indeed the whole of the north-east, has the capability of producing the quality products required.

A point was raised about the commissioning and decommissioning of oil rigs, which the local industry is considering. We are at a competitive disadvantage with countries such as Norway and Holland, which have the heavy lift barges, but, as we have the necessary skills, the idea now is to work in partnership with the Norwegians or the Dutch so that there is work for Tyneside. That important development is being pursued by the Northern Offshore Federation.

[Mr. Alan Johnson]

The work of the oil and gas industry task force last year led to improvements to the offshore licensing regime, actions to improve the UK industry's competitiveness and additional relief from capital gains tax. All those actions were designed to stimulate activity on the UK continental shelf. The task force initiatives are being monitored through its successor, known as PILOT. The task force requested that an oil and gas fabrication support group be set up. A meeting took place last month which was attended by more than 40 representatives of fabricators, the unions, enterprise agencies, training organisations and central and local government. A number of the representatives were from the north-east.

The group examined the opportunities for work from the UK contintental shelf and from export markets, particularly for FPSOs. It also considered prospects in other sectors, including decommissioning, offshore wind power generation and shipbuilding. Regrettably, it was clear that the alternative markets will not produce the volume of work necessary to sustain fabrication activity in the UK at anything like the level of previous years, but it identified major areas of work.

We are also working with the leading agencies in each area. One North-east, the regional development agency in the north-east, has already created an action group for the region, which is chaired by Kevin Curran of the GMB. The national fabrication support group will work with the action group to ensure that any options for maximising employment are considered and pursued.

Two more specific points have been raised recently in the north-east. The first concerns offshore licensing procedures. The licences are awarded on the basis of an agreed programme of work to explore thoroughly the petroleum potential of specified areas on the UK continental shelf. The ability to retain the licence beyond specified points depends on a commitment to future work.

The Government are well aware of the importance to the UK economy of continued exploration and development work on the UK continental shelf. That is why officials have written to the managing directors of companies holding licences on the UK continental shelf that have fallow blocks and fallow discoveries in their portfolios, asking them to review their plans for the licences and to report back by Easter. That is another major initiative that addresses the concerns raised in the debate.

The second specific point relates to gas-fired power stations. Suggestions have been made to have a moratorium on power stations. No moratorium is in place, but there is a stricter consents policy for the oil and gas sector. That is a short-term measure to protect energy diversity and security of supply while the electricity market is reformed. We were aware of concerns that a large-scale switch to gas was taking place in a distorted market, with gas-fired plant coming in even though it was more expensive than the coal that it displaced. Hon. Members will be well aware of those issues.

We must level out the market so that it can function effectively, balancing supply and demand in economically sensible ways. To avoid making things worse, we have temporarily restricted consents for new power stations until the market is sorted out. I cannot say how long the stricter consents policy will last, as relaxation is tied in to the programme to reform the market, but the Government are determined that it will last no longer than necessary.

My hon. Friend the Member for Tynemouth made a number of important points, one of which was about the age profile, which was repeated by others in the debate. I agree that 49 is a young age, but it is older than I thought it was 20 years ago. The industry is addressing the problems, almost for the first time, and recognises a serious skill shortage. Modern apprenticeships have begun only recently and it will be some time before they address that problem, but everywhere I go the people in the industry to whom I talk single it out as a major difficulty.

My hon. Friend also said that the maritime industry was a classic example of the way in which high technology and new technology were married to traditional industries and said that the knowledge-driven economy was as much about manufacturing as about mobile telephones: there is no difference in its effect on industry. He also recognised the problems that were outside the Government's remit.

Perhaps I can quickly answer the points made by the hon. Members for Twickenham and for South-West Hertfordshire about the strong currency. In 1997–98, even before there was any reason to consider the strong pound as a factor in these matters, UK yards won just two contracts of a total of 342 won in the rest of the European Union. The shipbuilders and ship repairers do not constantly refer to the strong pound as a problem, but recognise that there are many things that they must do to be more competitive. For the past 50 years, Germany has prospered with a strong currency. Strong currencies do not lead to failure, they are a symptom of long-term economic improvement, as the right hon. Member for Kensington and Chelsea (Mr. Portillo) said on 23rd March 2000 in The Birmingham Post.

The crucial points that were made by my hon. Friend the Member for Tynemouth and others were about the Ministry of Defence contracts. It does not need me to say this, because my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Defence, who is bigger and uglier than I am—certainly big enough and ugly enough to look after himself—has made it clear that nobody from the Government said that we did not have the skills in the UK. Not only do we have the skills, but we have skills, talent and commitment in abundance. Therefore, I am happy to set the record straight.

My hon. Friend the Member for Tynemouth also made the important point about the DTI working closely with the MOD and other Departments on these issues. We do that exhaustively, not just on shipbuilding but on aerospace, where the DTI needs to feed in industry's views. Smart procurement means that the contracts will be awarded fairly and on a competitive basis, although the ALSL order will definitely go to a UK yard because it involves a warship. As far as I am aware, although it is a matter for the MOD, invitations to tender for the ALSL went out in March and close in mid-May. It is difficult to see how we can bring that time scale forward, but I shall raise the matter with the MOD.

As regards the SIF and the suggestion that a forum should be set up on Tyneside to bring all the industry players together, that is an interesting idea. I am attending a meeting of the industry forum tomorrow and I shall float that idea—"float" being the operative word—to obtain its view on whether it thinks that that might dilute or detract from the national industry forum.

My right hon. Friend the Member for South Shields (Dr. Clark) made a number of important points. I agree that the skills and abilities undoubtedly exist in the UK, and his point about Aker McNulty will be carefully considered.

This has been an important debate. I have not mentioned other enterprises on Tyneside. Youth unemployment has fallen by 60 per cent.; tourism in Newcastle has now taken off, and is among a number of developments happening in the city. Shipbuilding may not be the life blood of the Tyne, but it is certainly still the heart beat, and the Government very much appreciate the need to support the industry.

Mobility Benefits (Northern Ireland)

11.30 am

Rev. Martin Smyth (Belfast, South): I express my appreciation through you, Mr. Deputy Speaker, to Madam Speaker for having given me the opportunity to initiate this debate. It concerns a subject of great importance to many people in Northern Ireland, namely the recent claims that the Motability scheme in Northern Ireland is subject to widespread abuse. However, I do not believe that the Motability issue can be taken in isolation. It must be examined as part of the wider duties of Members of Parliament who are elected to represent constituents and their interests. They are also elected to vote supply and to protect the public purse, especially from fraud.

Northern Ireland has faced a 30-year terrorist campaign in which economic warfare played a significant part, through the destruction of the business districts of our towns and cities. There has also been the growth of a mentality among those who opposed the Government that they should take as much as they could from the state. This, coupled with the various terrorist groups' protection rackets and other illegal money-raising activities, led to the establishment of a Mafia state in many parts of the Province, despite the best efforts of the Royal Ulster Constabulary. To make matters worse, the black economy has grown as more and more people have sought to defraud the taxpayer by doing the double and claiming benefit to which they are not entitled.

The central service agency has 1,805,812 people registered with it, yet Northern Ireland's population is only a little more than 1,700,000. Who are the extra 100,000 people? Where are they? What is being done to discover the reason for the imbalance and to root out the fraud that doubtless accounts for much of the discrepancy? It is against that wider background that we must examine the circumstances in which the Motability scheme in Northern Ireland finds itself.

The scheme benefits 22,000 people in Northern Ireland who receive disability living allowance. It therefore provides some of the most vulnerable people in society with the means to get about and lead a semblance of a normal life. In early March, Motability wrote to all the people in Northern Ireland who benefit under the scheme to inform them that the future of the scheme in the Province was in doubt due to suspicion of widespread fraud and abuse, including claims that some of its cars have been used as taxis and for drug smuggling. I was told in a letter from Motability that > some people anecdotally refer to our cars as "DSS taxis".

That is the world in which we live and I am trying to find out more about it.

Some of the statistics that I received from Motability are quite staggering. For example, the vehicle accident rate for the scheme in Northern Ireland is more than double that for the rest of the United Kingdom. Settled claims awards in Northern Ireland are almost treble the amount elsewhere in the UK, and 72 per cent. of the scheme's personal injury claims in Northern Ireland involve seven or more people, compared to 28 per cent. in the rest of the UK. As a result, insurance losses alone amount to some £650 per lease, effectively costing disabled people using the scheme in the remainder of the

[Rev. Martin Smyth]

United Kingdom some £70 per lease and raising serious questions about the scheme's long-term viability in Northern Ireland.

After I heard from constituents and others in the Province who were concerned about the letter that they had received, I wrote to Motability, to the Department of Social Security and to the Minister responsible in Northern Ireland. The DSS said that it was the responsibility of the Northern Ireland Department. On the other hand, Motability is a charity. Does it receive any public money, or is everything that it does done through the disability living allowance? I happen to believe that when a fraud is being perpetrated on our community, even if it is a stand-alone charity that depends on public funds, there must be some accountability to the House. These allegations have caused a great deal of distress to many people throughout Northern Ireland, including my constituents.

On 21 March, after I received a letter that had been delayed in the post, I saw an edition of "Spotlight" on BBC Northern Ireland that raised the issue of a suspected widespread fraud and abuse in the operation of the Motability scheme in Northern Ireland. It made for interesting viewing. It even included footage of a car belonging to a Sinn Fein Member of the now suspended Northern Ireland Assembly, Mr. Alex Maskey, parked outside Castle buildings, Stormont. Anyone who has seen Mr. Maskey will wonder just how he qualifies as disabled. I understand that he had an injury in the past, but certainly there are folk who would love to be disabled if that constitutes disability. His mobility seems to be unimpaired. He does not appear to have any difficulty in getting around. He also refused to answer questions unless he could see them in advance and consult his solicitor.

I accept that there may be problems in the way that the Motability scheme operates in some parts of Northern Ireland. However, I cannot accept that the only course of action is to abandon the whole system and punish the innocent along with the guilty. Surely someone, whether in the insurance world or in Motability itself, could carry out some checks. Why are insurance claims made for cars with annual mileages of over 30,000 that suddenly are burnt? In the normal run, that would be a high mileage for a Motability car. Is it just anecdotal that two Motability cars with five passengers in each managed to bump into each other with resulting claims for whiplash and so on? Such claims should be investigated much more carefully. That is preferable to paying out and then challenging innocent people that, if these things do not stop, the Motability scheme in Northern Ireland will have to be stopped.

I know some of the dodges that have gone on in the past. By now, the people who work in insurance and in Motability and, for that matter, those who administer disability living allowance should also have an idea of what is going on. Such abuse and misuse must be rooted out and reported to the lawful authorities, so that a proper investigation can be carried out and the guilty brought to justice. In Great Britain there have been successful prosecutions of people who have defrauded Motability. Why has this not happened in Northern Ireland? I understand from Motability that a major investigation is under way but surely these offences should have been drawn to the attention of the police much earlier. The innocent should have nothing to fear and should not be caused alarm and distress. Let us not forget that these people are some of society's most vulnerable.

I have alluded to one of the main problems, which is that no one seems prepared to accept responsibility for the Motability scheme in Northern Ireland except Motability itself. I raised the matter with the Department of Social Security and was told to refer it to the—erstwhile—Northern Ireland Department of Health, Social Services and Public Safety. I have no difficulty with the introduction of better controls and eligibility checks to ensure that only those who are genuinely entitled to benefit from the Motability scheme do so. However, I object to the tone and the manner in which the issue has been raised. The suggestion that they be deprived of an asset that enables them to live a reasonably mobile life has created an atmosphere of fear and alarm among many totally innocent people.

I should like to know who has responsibility for rooting out fraud and corruption in the operation of the Motability scheme particularly and in the public sector generally. I urge those in charge of the Motability scheme in the Province, and anyone else who has information about or evidence of fraud or abuse, to present it to the police. The bad apples can be then weeded out and dealt with in the courts instead of every person in receipt of Motability benefit being stigmatised by unproven allegations and living in fear of the scheme being withdrawn. I have had anonymous letters from people living in difficult areas who support tightening up but are concerned that they and others will suffer if, as rumour has it, the scheme is withdrawn. Where there is a pattern of abuse, the people who administer the compensation and the insurance should be cautioned to take care rather than pay out the easy way. Mr. Deputy Speaker, you will be aware of cases in the past 30 years of people who had jobs awaiting them who simultaneously obtained social security benefits for their families. We were told that families were not receiving social security benefits when they were, and we were later told that to have admitted it would have endangered the life of some official. Surely such a decision should have been taken at ministerial level, not by an official.

11.43 am

The Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for Northern Ireland (Mr. George Howarth): I congratulate the hon. Member for Belfast, South (Rev. Martin Smyth) on raising this important issue. His comments show that he agrees that Motability plays an important part in some disabled people's lives and in some instances provides a vital service by giving them greater mobility. He has said that we should be careful to ensure that the scheme remains available to all disabled people in Northern Ireland and elsewhere who have a genuine need. Currently 21,700 people benefit from it.

The hon. Gentleman will appreciate that the Department for Social Development did not have direct responsibility for Motability, which is a voluntary, non-profit-making organisations. However, as he asked a question, I should tell him that Motability received for 1999–2000 a grant of £4.7 million from the Exchequer towards administration costs which included a contribution from the North Ireland Office.

As the hon. Member for Belfast, South rightly said, we pay the mobility component of the disability living allowance to Motability at the customer's request. I accept that, because we do so, we have a responsibility to ensure that payments are not fraudulently misused. It is important to put the situation in Northern Ireland into context. It has been alleged that fraud and abuse is higher in Northern Ireland than it is in the rest of the United Kingdom. The hon. Gentleman referred to a recent television programme and a letter sent to all customers by the director of Motability. However, disability living allowance fraud in Northern Ireland is about 2.4 per cent., which is lower than in the United Kingdom as a whole. The hon. Gentleman was worried about the statistics relative to the size of the population. I wrote to him on that complex matter yesterday, and I do not have time to go into it in detail now. However, I hope that my letter will enlighten him on the source of the discrepancies between the two sets of statistics that he quoted.

It is wrong to portray Northern Ireland as more involved in social security fraud than other parts of the United Kingdom, but having said that, it is important not to take that statement as a sign of complacency. In the past two years, there has been considerable investment in tackling benefit fraud, resulting in savings of about £72 million, which should rightly be spent on vital public services.

In the financial year that has just ended, 341 people were prosecuted for benefit fraud, although not in respect of the benefits that we are discussing. However, it shows how seriously the Government take the issue. The emphasis must be on preventing fraud. As a result of our efforts to reduce DLA fraud in Northern Ireland, the number of rejected claims has increased and the number of applications has fallen. That shows that a message has gone out; people realise that fraud is unacceptable and that, if they make fraudulent applications, they are likely to be caught. There is no other explanation for the fall in applications and the increase in applications rejected.

I want briefly to return to the letter dated March 2000, mentioned by the hon. Gentleman, from Mr. Noel Muddiman, the director of Motability, to all customers. The letter threatened to review the scheme's operation in the Province and stated:

> If we are unable to drastically reduce the level of fraud and abuse in Northern Ireland...this could include the option of Motability totally closing down the scheme in the Province.

As I said, benefit fraud in Northern Ireland is lower than it is in the United Kingdom, partly as a result of the action taken to detect fraud. Twenty-one cases of suspected fraud were referred to Motability in the year that has just ended. Three of those concerned received written warnings, one person's car was removed completely, one person's lease was not renewed and three cases were unproven. The remainder of the cases are still under investigation. It is clear that action is taken and that the strongest possible action is taken in proven cases as regards the use of the car.

It was unfortunate that Motability singled out Northern Ireland—in particular because our officials had advised it that doing so would be inaccurate and misleading. Of course, no circumstances justify fraud, and I would not seek to do so. However, we should not lose sight of the fact that the overwhelming majority of Motability customers are, as the hon. Gentleman rightly said, genuine and deserving cases.

I want to respond directly to the allegations made in the recent television programme to which the hon. Gentleman referred. In common with all right-thinking people, I deplore any abuse in the Motability scheme. Our officials work closely with Motability, and we are determined that that will continue. Motability is investigating the cases highlighted in the programme, and it will pass its findings to the RUC if it feels that it is appropriate to do so.

I had not intended to refer directly to any of the allegations, and I am sure that you understand that it would be inappropriate for me to do so, Mr. Deputy Speaker, because some of those matters are under investigation. However, I should slightly correct one point that the hon. Gentleman made about Assembly Member Alex Maskey. As I understand it, there was no suggestion that Alex Maskey was disabled; the programme suggested that he was a nominated driver for a disabled person. I do not say that to undermine any investigation into the use of the car, and it would be inappropriate for me to comment. However, it is important that we get the specific nature of the allegation right. I know that the hon. Gentleman was not seeking maliciously to misinform anyone, but he might inadvertently have done so.

Rev. Martin Smyth: Did I understand the Minister to say that Mr. Maskey was the nominated driver for a disabled person? I want to be clear about the arrangement because it is part of the problem. Nominated drivers are using cars for their own purposes, rather than to drive people who have the right to use them.

Mr. Howarth: The hon. Gentleman is right—I did use the phrase "nominated driver". I did so to make it absolutely clear that Alex Maskey is a nominated driver for a disabled person. I do not want to go into the complexities of why he was using the car when the programme was filmed, because I do not have the information to hand. That would be inappropriate, given that the issue might be the subject of an investigation.

The hon. Gentleman referred to the fact that no one in Northern Ireland is prepared to take responsibility for investigating abuses. I have given him some statistics to demonstrate that that responsibility has been taken on and that it is being taken seriously. The Social Security Agency is not directly responsible, but it works directly with Motability to improve co-operation on the scheme through an arrangement to which I shall refer in a moment. It is important to urge them to continue to work together.

Rev. Martin Smyth: I welcome those assurances. My concern is on two levels. First, did Motability refer any of the issues to the police? No prosecutions were undertaken. I could understand it if people were not found guilty in court, because the case would have to be proved, but I cannot understand why no prosecutions have been undertaken. Secondly, I am worried that some folk in the public service are not taking care in carrying out their work. I asked the Minister how many people were on the central service agency's registers and a clever person gave me a list of doctors, for which I had not asked.

[Rev. Martin Smyth]

Mr. Howarth: On the latter point, that response was a genuine mistake. It was an inaccurate answer to a parliamentary written question. Although officials provided the information, I take responsibility for the answer. I would not blacken the name of officials. My experience of working with civil servants in Departments in Northern Ireland and the Northern Ireland Office is positive. I am grateful for the help and support that I receive.

As for the lack of prosecutions, Motability and the Social Security Agency work closely with the Royal Ulster Constabulary. The hon. Gentleman will understand that such cases are notoriously difficult to prove. Nevertheless, appropriately drastic action was taken in some of the 21 cases to which I referred. The matter is taken seriously, but getting enough evidence to remove an individual from the scheme requires a level of proof different from that required for a court case. However, I am sure that that option has not been ruled out when appropriate evidence is available, and I would want it to be kept as an option in such cases.

I am mindful of concerns about the operation of the scheme and of my responsibilities. I have established a task force of departmental officials and Motability representatives to consider ways in which co-operation, which is already good, can be improved and the scheme can be made even less open to fraud and abuse. I shall keep a close eye on that work; I hope that that will improve matters. Although that step is necessary, we should not take a disproportionate view of the problem. The hon. Gentleman rightly conceded that the overwhelming majority of people who receive vehicles through Motability are in genuine need. They are proper and deserving cases. It would be wrong to start a campaign against people who are legitimately in receipt of help. I am sure that that is not the hon. Gentleman's intention. However, by the same token, it is important that evidence of systematic abuse or abuse by individuals is properly investigated and, if proven, appropriate action taken. I hope that the hon. Gentleman is reassured that we take such matters seriously and, where sensible or necessary, act appropriately.

Western Sahara

11.59 am

Mr. Jeremy Corbyn (Islington, North): I welcome the opportunity to have this debate. It comes at a crucial time in the history of Western Sahara. I am sorry that my hon. Friend the Member for Gloucester (Ms Kingham) cannot be here, because of child care commitments for young children. She has done much to raise in the House of Commons the issue of Western Sahara and the Saharawi people, as did Lord Redesdale before he fell victim to the cull of hereditary peers.

Today's debate is important because of the serious danger of war breaking out again in Western Sahara. Jane's Intelligence Review has discussed current problems there and the danger of war if a referendum is not held in the near future, within the timetable established by the United Nations to bring about a peaceful solution. A heartfelt editorial in Africa Commentary states:

> It is obvious that the Saharawis have lost confidence in the UN because of its inability to organise the referendum. But at the same time, the Saharawis are not prepared to accept anything that does not respect their right as an independent people.
>
> What will happen after May 31 is anybody's guess. The feeling is that the UN is abandoning the territory. In his latest report on Western Sahara the UN Secretary-General, Kofi Annan, expressed "doubts about the possibility of achieving a smooth and consensual implementation of the settlement plan".

It is for those reasons that I have been keen to raise the issue today. Hon. Members will be aware that an early-day motion that I tabled last week expressed concern at the continued occupation of Western Sahara by Moroccan forces and for the safety of Saharawi citizens fleeing violent clashes in towns across Western Sahara in March. A case of great concern, also, is the issue of British military export licences for items including CS gas grenades and rubber bullets for Morocco, in contravention of criteria 2 and 4 of the European Union code of conduct on arms exports.

Dr. Jenny Tonge (Richmond Park): I apologise for my breathlessness. I am not very fit. The hon. Gentleman has touched on something about which I am particularly concerned. He must know that several agencies believe that there is a substantial risk of armed conflict in Western Sahara in the near future, especially if the referendum does not go ahead. Does he think that the Government have contravened criterion 4 of the European code of conduct in selling the arms to Morocco?

Mr. Corbyn: The evidence that has been given to me is that we have—perhaps the Minister will deal with this when he replies—because it could be considered that they are being used for internal repression or to control the situation in Western Sahara ahead of a possible UN referendum.

Mr. George Galloway (Glasgow, Kelvin): There are few occasions on which I would disagree with my hon. and good Friend, but I am genuinely puzzled about this part of his speech. I shall have something to say about the broader issue, if I may be allowed, but Morocco has one of the best human rights records in the Arab world and beyond. That is recognised by Amnesty International. Also, it happens to have—though one would detect no hint of it in my hon. Friend's discourse—the only socialist Government in the middle east, as well as a new king, who is trying to use a new broom to solve some of the problems from the past. It is rather strange for a progressive Member of Parliament to mount such an attack on Morocco at this, of all times.

Mr. Deputy Speaker (Mr. Nicholas Winterton): Order. Before the hon. Member for Islington, North (Mr. Corbyn) replies, I remind the hon. Member for Glasgow, Kelvin (Mr. Galloway) that it is normal for hon. Members who want to participate in a straightforward half-hour Adjournment debate to clear it with the hon. Member who initiated the debate, the occupant of the Chair and the Minister. I am not sure if that convention has been honoured in this case.

Mr. Corbyn: I am surprised and disappointed at my hon. Friend's intervention. My examination of what has happened in Western Sahara and Morocco's behaviour since 1974 is not an attack on Morocco as a state, or a blanket criticism of everything that happens in Morocco. It is specific to the right of the people of Western Sahara to determine their future in accordance with United Nations policy and the mandate of the United Nations Mission for the Referendum in Western Sahara, or MINURSO.

In 1974, Western Sahara ceased to be a colony of Spain—Spain withdrew. In 1975, the then king of Morocco personally led 350,000 people to occupy Western Sahara. The People of Western Sahara did not wish to be occupied; they wished to be independent, and they made that very clear. There followed a brutal war, in which many people died. Eventually, a large number of people from Western Sahara escaped to refugee camps in Algeria; they still live there.

In the 1980s, the United Nations became involved, because it was, quite rightly, concerned about the loss of life. MINURSO was established in 1988, and managed to obtain a ceasefire in 1991. The proposal—then, as now—was that there should be a referendum on the future of Western Sahara. Thus, the Saharawi people would have the right to determine their future.

Dr. Alan Whitehead (Southampton, Test): Does my hon. Friend accept that the issue of who may vote in the referendum—crucial to the outcome—may not be one of human rights? The possible attempt by people who, clearly, have no right to vote in the referendum to add their names to the roll is crucial in the context of plans to ensure that a referendum can be carried out in a way that is fair to the Saharawi people.

Mr. Corbyn: The question of who votes in the referendum is, obviously, central to the long-term objective and to the result of the referendum. The agreement made through MINURSO was that the 1974 Spanish census should be used as the basis for deciding who would be eligible to vote in a referendum on the future of Western Sahara. Names were put forward, and the Moroccans also put forward the names of large numbers of settlers whom they had moved into Western Sahara.

For the past nine years, there has been a great deal of dispute about who would be on the electoral roll and, thus, eligible to vote in the referendum. MINURSO has sent people in, registration has taken place, appeals and objections have been heard and dealt with. One gains the impression at every stage, that Morocco has been desperate to prevent the referendum. That is depressing, because holding a referendum in the near future represents the best hope for preventing another armed conflict in Western Sahara.

Morocco should, at least, understand that many people around the world are looking carefully at its behaviour and would challenge the assertion that Western Sahara is an integral part of Morocco. Indeed, I received a letter only yesterday from the Moroccan ambassador making that claim, to which I replied that, as far as I was aware, Western Sahara was not an integral part of Morocco. History will bear me out on that. The area was not an integral part of Morocco before colonialism, and has been an integral part since the end of colonialism in 1974 only because of the military occupation.

I ask the Government to say what role they are prepared to play in promoting a peaceful settlement. The EU Africa summit is taking place in Cairo. I do not know what discussions are going on between Morocco and other states, but I know that the Organisation of African Unity—peculiarly and uniquely—has supported the case for independence of Western Sahara, and has never supported any kind of border change or any independence movement in any other part of Africa, other than those seeking to break away from European colonial powers. It is significant that the Organisation of African Unity has supported the right of the Saharawi people to determine their own independence in a referendum.

James Baker has been appointed to look into the situation, has undertaken some discussions, is due to visit Morocco again in the near future and will be in touch with all parties. However, circumstances are becoming more desperate. Many refugees live in camps in Algeria. The Polisario have toured the world trying to gain diplomatic support for their efforts to bring about a peaceful solution. They have gained considerable support in many European capitals and among legislators in the United States and other parts of the world. They argued that MINURSO must be allowed to bring about a settlement.

Morocco now has a new King and a new Government. Now is the ideal time to turn back from the policies of 1975—invasion, landmines, massive walls around Western Sahara—and to encourage a UN-supervised settlement to bring about a peaceful solution to the region's problems.

Last year, I was privileged to attend the UN referendum on the future of East Timor. Many lessons can be learnt from that experience. The Indonesians did not want the referendum to take place. There were continual delays and the UN made great efforts to bring about a peaceful solution. Registration was continually delayed, so it was not clear who would be eligible to vote, whether the occupied military forces could vote and so forth. The circumstances are similar, as Portugal withdrew from East Timor at about the same time as Spain withdrew from Western Sahara.

[Mr. Corbyn]

Kofi Annan played an important role. He recognised that unless the UN took action and insisted that the referendum took place on a particular day, the delays and the killing would continue—a disaster waiting to happen would happen. The referendum did take place and the people of East Timor voted overwhelmingly for independence. Partly due to a lack of support and the lack of an effective policing presence on the ground, a humanitarian disaster took place immediately after the referendum. East Timor is now trying to recover through a reconstruction programme but, sadly, nothing can bring back the people who died.

I do not want to see a similar outcome in Western Sahara, but the alternatives are stark. If we continue to delay holding a referendum and allowing the people of Western Sahara to decide their own future, what will happen? No entreaties from the leadership will stop the people being fed up with living in refugee camps in Algeria; with living on food parcels from western agencies, welcome though they are; or with having to bring up their children in refugee camps. Their pressure may lead back to war.

I hope that the British Government and Morocco fully understand the dangers. What are the alternatives: to continue to delay and prevaricate, spending huge resources on the military occupation of Western Sahara; to continue to be criticised heavily throughout the world for what goes on specifically in Western Sahara; or to come to the table and bring about a peaceful solution? I hope that the British Government will ensure that MINURSO has sufficient resources to carry out its duties and that a date is set for the referendum, which should be before 31 July this year, even though it is one of the hottest periods of the year; and ensure that it actually takes place.

It is essential to learn the lessons of the referendum in East Timor to ensure that registration is accurate. I believe that it is—or at least, after enough years of discussion, debate, challenge and counter-challenge about the names, there is reason to believe that it is. We must see to it that there are sufficient staff on the ground to ensure that the campaign and the voting are fair and open and, crucially, that there is sufficient international policing to ensure that whatever the result, it is accepted and respected by all sides and that there are no militia activities of the tragic kind seen in East Timor last September and October. I make no apology for raising this issue, which I have raised many times since being elected to the House in 1983. I raised it for the first time at about three o'clock in the morning some time in 1984; the Chamber was not packed at the time any more than this Chamber is today.

I believe that we have an opportunity to bring about a peaceful settlement to the situation facing the last colony in Africa. The possibility exists for the United Nations to establish itself firmly as a facilitator of a peaceful transition for the people of Western Sahara as they decide their own future. I hope that the Moroccan Government will recognise that if they continue their delaying tactics, they will not do themselves much good in the court of public opinion around the world because doing so will lead to greater isolation. The best way forward is to allow the UN to settle the problem. I hope that when the Minister replies he will respond satisfactorily to the concerns that the hon. Member for Richmond Park (Dr. Tonge) and I and many others have about the supply of arms to Morocco. I hope above all that the hon. Gentleman will be able to assure me and others—most importantly, others—that sufficient police and resources will be available to ensure that the referendum takes place in the time frame that has been suggested, and with sufficient security to allow a fair voting system for all and, above all, respect for the result of the referendum. The alternative, tragically, will be that many more people will lose their lives, many more arms will be exported and there will be no peace.

12.16 pm

The Minister of State, Foreign and Commonwealth Office (Mr. Keith Vaz): I am grateful to my hon. Friend the Member for Islington, North (Mr. Corbyn) for securing the debate. I know of his great interest in these matters, and he spoke with enormous passion. I am glad to see my hon. Friends the Members for St. Albans (Mr. Pollard) and for Southampton Test (Dr. Whitehead) and the hon. Member for Richmond Park (Dr. Tonge) here for the debate. It is fairly unusual to see my hon. Friends the Members for Islington, North and for Glasgow, Kelvin (Mr. Galloway) on different sides of the Chamber, but I suppose it shows the intense rivalry that exists among various groups and the strong passions that the issue arouses.

The war in Western Sahara has been called the forgotten war. With this debate we are doing our bit to ensure that the issue is kept on the international and domestic agendas. My hon. Friend the Member for Islington, North raised a number of points about this long-standing dispute. I shall come back to some of them at the completion of my speech.

I shall begin by explaining the Government's policy on Western Sahara. Even by African and middle eastern standards, Western Sahara is one of the more intractable problems. Time does not allow me to dwell too long on its history. I have not been exposed to all shades of opinion in the region, nor have many hon. Members, so it is worth looking at some of the background.

When Spain withdrew from Western Sahara in the mid-1970s, there followed a bitter and protracted conflict between the two main claimants to the Western Sahara, Morocco and the Polisario Front. The conflict drew in other countries in the region, as my hon. Friend the Member for Islington, North said. Suspicions became entrenched and the economic potential of the whole region was put in the deep freeze.

The conflict in Western Sahara benefited no one citizen and no one country in north Africa. It merely held back its people's aspirations for a more stable and prosperous future. After 15 years of conflict in Western Sahara, the United Nations took on the role of making peace and finding a just and durable solution. We should recognise the contribution that the UN has made to the peace process in the region. The UN remains the one organisation with an unchallengeable reputation for objectivity in this difficult dispute. The British Government do not take sides in the Western Sahara dispute. We have consistently supported the UN mission in Western Sahara. We have provided civilian administrators, peacekeeping contingents and substantial funds to underpin them.

We continue to believe that a just solution to the problem depends on the people of Western Sahara having the right to express their will at the ballot box. We also believe that a durable solution requires all parties to be constructive, flexible and committed to peaceful means. Any violence from whatever quarter harms the search for peace, and those who provoke violence only weaken their own cause.

I share my hon. Friend's desire to see a just solution for the Saharawi people, including those in the refugee camps in Algeria. At the same time, a solution must be workable and durable. It cannot ignore the regional political environment. We share the widespread international concern that, after 10 years, a UN-sponsored referendum to resolve this problem is still a long way off. To make clear what Britain stands for, I can do no better than quote the UN Secretary-General. He said that the implementation of the UN plan > has been impeded by fundamental differences between the parties over the interpretation of its main provisions. Of these, the issue of the establishment of the electorate has been, and may remain, a core problem which could eventually prevent the holding of a referendum as provided by the plan. The . . . two parties seem to share the belief that the composition of the electoral body will predetermine the outcome of the referendum. At different times, therefore, one or the other party has withheld cooperation from the identification procedures, in the belief that they may eventually skew the composition of the electorate.

Neither we nor the UN believe that Morocco alone has undermined the settlement plan. The Secretary-General made that clear in a report on 17 February, and the UN, which is active on the ground, is better placed to assess those issues than part-time observers sitting in western capitals.

Despite the various obstacles that both sides have at times put in the way of a solution, the UN has remained impartial throughout. We continue to have every confidence in the UN staff. British officials regularly visit their offices in the region and admire the work that is being done there in very difficult circumstances. There are those who complain that the UN mission in Western Sahara and the Secretary-General's statements are partisan. Those people usually want the UN to be partisan in their favour.

A number of commentators on Western Sahara, including some in the House, have questioned the UN's handling of voter registration for the proposed referendum. We believe that the registration criteria for the referendum are a matter for the UN. To date, the UN has investigated 198,469 applications to vote in the referendum. It found that 86,386 were eligible. A substantial proportion of those who were rejected have appealed, as they are entitled to do under the settlement plan. The UN has now begun the task of investigating the legitimacy of these appeals, as it must if we are to ensure that the process is free and fair.

My hon. Friend mentioned the United Nations criteria for appeals, and I do not want a long, legalistic debate on the matter. The UN is best placed to decide what is allowed within the letter and spirit of the plan.

At its latest extension of the United Nations mandate in Western Sahara, the Security Council called on James Baker, the Secretary-General's personal envoy, to engage the parties to find a way through the problem. We expect him to visit the region soon. We urge all sides to listen to what he has to say and to respond positively to him.

It has been suggested that the United Kingdom has been selling arms to Morocco, which enables it to suppress human rights and to assert a territorial claim, thus breaching the European Union code of conduct. I assure hon. Members that we examine all export licences for Morocco carefully and adhere to the EU code of conduct. Yes, we have approved exports of some riot control equipment; hon. Members will know that the quadripartite commission on arms exports is currently examining some of the licences. I also assure hon. Members that we have no evidence that the Moroccan police have used such equipment to suppress human rights and/or to assert a territorial claim. It is an on-going process; we monitored recent incidents in Laayoune and Smara and found no evidence that such crowd control equipment was used. No non-governmental or other organisations have produced verifiable evidence to support such claims.

I want to say a few words about recent reports of incidents in Western Sahara. There was an incident in Laayoune, Western Sahara last September, when protesting students were joined by a group of local workers with separate grievances. Regrettably, local police response was heavy handed and we clearly registered our concern at the time. The Moroccan king responded swiftly to news of the incident by setting up a royal commission on Western Sahara. That was a decisive, mature and laudable response; the Interior Minister responsible was removed shortly afterwards.

The initial press reporting of the incident was partisan and designed to raise tension in the region. For example, it alleged that there were several deaths, but no evidence supporting that claim was provided. There were also incidents in Laayoune and Smara in March. One incident began when youths stoned UN vehicles and the Moroccan police intervened to protect UN staff. British officials were in the area soon afterwards and spoke to several contacts on the ground. Their assessment was that press reporting of the incidents had exaggerated the true picture.

Mr. Corbyn: Like my hon. Friend the Minister, I deplore the incidents that took place and hope that peace will continue to be maintained in the region. When does my hon. Friend expect that it will be possible to hold a referendum on the future of Morocco? When does he expect James Baker to report to the Secretary-General?

Mr. Vaz: We fully support James Baker's mission and ask others to do so too. We shall have more information when he is in the country; he shares the British Government's view that there should be a referendum as soon as possible.

My hon. Friend mentioned Morocco's record on human rights, which has improved dramatically recently, as has the professionalism of its police. Morocco's record on both counts is probably the best in Africa and the middle east. My hon. Friend should not just take my word for it but listen to what Amnesty International and other NGOs say on the subject. Yes, some problems remain, but the Moroccans are openly tackling them. We must give credit where it is due. We should also take seriously allegations of human rights abuses by the Polisario Front.

[Mr. Vaz]

I conclude by restating the key elements of our policy: we remain committed to a just and durable solution to the problem, which is acceptable to the Saharawi people. We do not take sides; we will not support one side's claim over the other. We will continue to back the UN Secretary-General in his efforts to find a way around the current impasse in the UN settlement plan. We have assured him that James Baker has our full support on his visit. We urge all sides to respond positively to Mr. Baker's mission.

Education (Developing World)

12.30 pm

Mr. Mark Oaten (Winchester): I am pleased to have a chance to raise the issue of education in the developing world. The debate comes at an appropriate time, as those who have followed The Guardian campaign over the past couple of days will know. It also comes on the second day of an action week that has been organised by the Global Campaign for Education. That is a joint initiative, which involves Oxfam, ActionAid, Save the Children and the National Union of Teachers. Activities will be staged in 76 countries to raise awareness about the scale of the education crisis which is developing.

I acknowledge the hard work that is being done and the campaign research that is being carried out. Oxfam, in particular, has done a lot of work to bring the most recent concerns to light. I thank its representatives in my constituency, who have regularly attended my surgery to raise this and other issues.

It is perhaps grossly inappropriate to talk about bringing the issue to light, because the concept of achieving universal primary education is not new. Ten years ago, at the Jomtien world conference, 155 countries pledged to ensure that all the world's children would have access to basic education by 2000. It is now 2000, and it is clear that those countries have been unable to keep that pledge. The current figures suggest that 125 million primary school age children across the world are not in school; that is double Britain's entire population. Those children are denied their right to education, which is one of the fundamental rights enshrined in the 1948 universal declaration of human rights. It is unacceptable that, 50 years after that declaration was established, many of the world's children are missing out on basic education.

At the end of the month, there will be an opportunity to pay more than lip service to solving the problem. In a little more than three weeks' time, a United Nations conference on primary education will take place in Dakar. It will, I hope, deliver a strategy to meet the new target of achieving universal primary education by 2015. It also represents an opportunity for the Government to take an important leadership role, and I welcome the Prime Minister's article in The Guardian this morning, which set out clearly some of his personal objectives on the issue. Achieving those will, however, involve mobilising the resources of the international community and promoting the will among Governments to provide primary education for all their children.

The Government are well known in this country for their catchphrase "Education, education, education". The Prime Minister and the Government now have a good opportunity to take that message on to the world stage.

Dr. Jenny Tonge (Richmond Park): Does my hon. Friend agree that the wars and civil wars that are raging all over the world, and in Africa in particular, are one of the factors that militate against children receiving primary education? I am thinking of southern Sudan, where the most recent wave of the war has already lasted for 12 years and where children have received hardly any education. We often hear about education being carried on in the refugee camps, but does my hon. Friend not think that the Government should pay more attention to the education of children at a time of war? Otherwise, whole generations will go without any education.

Mr. Oaten: My hon. Friend makes an important point. Clearly, a lot of evidence links military conflict to the lack of education. Let us hope that increased access to education will lead to a decrease in conflicts as individuals consider ways other than conflict to deal with their difficulties.

Achieving primary education for all by 2015 is one of the United Nation's major goals for the 21st century. Other organisations and agencies are also committed to that. I was at the United Nations in New York last November and also met representatives from the World bank. I was taken by their commitment to use their resources to tackle education issues. However, the problems are enormously difficult ones for Governments throughout the world to tackle.

In much of sub-Saharan Africa and south Asia, classes are taught in dilapidated buildings without roofs, toilets or access to clean water. Millions of children are taught in classrooms that do not even have basic equipment such as a blackboard or chalk. The fact that children miss out on education lies at the heart of the poverty cycle, frustrating economic growth and human development. Getting education right is the key to tackling the serious problems gripping the developing world, including poverty, HIV/AIDS and, as my hon. Friend the Member for Richmond Park (Dr. Tonge) said, civil conflicts.

It is significant that girls make up two thirds of the 125 million children currently not in school. The international community has set a target date of 2005 to close the gender gap. That will involve more than simply throwing money at the developing world. Increasing the number of school places will not, on is own, close the gender gap, because important demand-side factors need to be individually addressed. For example, girls in many parts of the developing world are required to work at a young age to help to support their families. Oxfam quote a 1994 study of rural families in northern Ghana, which discovered that girls were often the sole breadwinners in the family.

The role of women in many developing countries is still narrowly defined in terms of marriage and child rearing. Families often view girls as a short-term investment that provides no return, because they marry and move away and someone else benefits from it. Consequently, very little value is placed on girls receiving an education.

Such cultural barriers cannot be removed through primary education programmes alone. However, they must be challenged if the benefits of education are to have a knock-on effect on the other problems in the developing world. In the Indian state of Kerala, for example, where 86 per cent. of women are literate, female life expectancy is 73. That is in stark contrast to Uttar Pradesh, where less than 25 per cent. of women can read and female life expectancy stands at 45. The generational impact of educating girls suggests that they marry later, have fewer children, provide better care and nutrition for their families and seek medical attention more promptly. There are real gains to be made by closing the gender gap.

Where are the examples of this happening in practice? Last week, I met Bill Katenga Kaunda, the secretary general of the United Democratic Front in Malawi, a very charismatic individual. He told me how, when his country became democratic and he took control in the ruling party, its priority was "education, education, education". It has put that into practice by abolishing user fees for primary education, which has had an enormous impact. That has also happened in Uganda, where the development budget should more than double from $60 million in 1997 to $125 million by 2002. That is an inspiring example of what can be achieved when political will is combined with aid and debt relief. Meanwhile, in Sri Lanka, the introduction of flexible school hours to allow girls to do their household tasks before going to school has increased attendance. Dealing with such practical issues can lead to success.

Universal primary education cannot be achieved only by addressing the individual circumstances of each developing country. In Pakistan, for example, the Government spend 27 per cent. of their budget on defence and only 4 per cent. on education. That suggests that the problem there is less a matter of finance than of the national Government's political will. In contrast, Tanzania spends six times more on debt repayment than on education, which shows that debt relief and extra resources would make an impact in helping education in that country.

How much money is needed to achieve education for all, and who would provide it? UNICEF estimates that it would cost about £4.5 billion a year over 10 years to achieve universal primary education. It was reported—rather amusingly, I thought—in the national press yesterday that this figure represents less than Americans spend in a year on cosmetics. The total amount is equivalent to four days' global military spending. Oxfam proposes that half the money should be raised by national Governments and the other half by the international community.

For developing-country Governments, that would involve increased resource mobilisation, the redistribution of wasteful public spending and the reallocation of money in education budgets towards basic education. Meanwhile, the international community would be able to provide more money through a combination of debt relief, increased aid, contributions from private capital and the reallocation of aid from higher to lower levels of education.

Many charities and organisations have been working hard to address the education crisis. I was impressed on a recent visit to the BBC World Service to see the valuable projects that its trust carries out in countries such as Tanzania, Somalia and Zambia on issues such as leprosy, smoking and sexual health. Those are welcome initiatives.

The article in the national press this morning by the Prime Minister was encouraging. I know that Oxfam and other organisations have launched campaigns saying that the Prime Minister himself should go to the conference. I recognise that he has pressing issues to deal with, both domestic and international, and that it is wrong to put pressure on him to go, but it is encouraging that in today's article he says that he wants to prevent Dakar from becoming another international talking shop, and we welcome the commitment that he will raise this issue at the G8 summit later this year. Can the Minister give us more information about the issues that the Secretary of State for International Development will raise at the Dakar conference, now that it has been confirmed that she will attend on behalf of the British Government?

[Mr. Oaten]

The Prime Minister's article sends a positive message that the Government understand the key issues involved and want to achieve universal primary education and eliminate the gender disparity. However, it is still not clear whether they will use that position to play an international leadership role in this matter, and I hope that the Minister can give us some comfort on that. If they do not, in a debate in 10 years' time we shall look back on the Dakar conference in the same way as we are looking back at the Jomtien conference of 10 years ago. That is not acceptable, and I hope that the Minister will give us more encouragement to build on the good news in the Prime Minister's article this morning.

12.42 pm

The Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for International Development (Mr. George Foulkes): I pay tribute to the hon. Member for Winchester (Mr. Oaten) for the knowledge and concern expressed in his speech. Having listened carefully to everything that he said, I shall try to respond to all his points and answer his questions.

I also want to congratulate the all-party group on overseas development and the non-governmental organisations that support it on the excellent meeting on "Education for All" which was held in the House of Commons last Thursday, when we were privileged to have President Museveni from Uganda as the main speaker. He made clear his country's commitment to achieving universal primary education by 2003. My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State reiterated at that meeting the Government's determination to provide strong support to developing-country Governments who are fully committed to providing effective primary education for all. I shall expand on that later.

I join the hon. Gentleman in welcoming the spotlight that Oxfam's global action plan for education and the excellent "Read the World" campaign in The Guardian have shone on raising our awareness of the plight of about 130 million children who should be and are not receiving education. Education opportunity for all, especially at the primary level, is not just a fundamental human right but a precondition for progress in development and the reduction of poverty. To deny children education puts a massive block on their country's development prospects.

The development case for investing in primary education is, as the hon. Gentleman said, unanswerable. Education helps people to become more productive and to earn more and leads to improvements in health, nutrition and child mortality. People are enabled to transform their own lives and their own society, and acquire the basic skills of literacy and numeracy, as well as the capacity to use that knowledge and information.

As the hon. Gentleman said, those benefits are even more pronounced in the case of girls. Research into girls' education shows that women with as little as four years of education are more likely to have smaller, healthier families, to work their way out of poverty and to send their children to school. World bank research suggests that the education of girls is the single most valuable development intervention that a country can make, but we must overcome ingrained attitudes in some countries towards the education of girls and the perception that it is a waste of resources.

The hon. Members for Richmond Park (Dr. Tonge) and for Hertford and Stortford (Mr. Wells) will remember the expression used by my hon. Friend the Member for Clydebank and Milngavie (Mr. Worthington) in our debate last Thursday. He said that, on its visit to the sub-continent, the Select Committee on International Development heard the expression educating a girl is like watering another man's garden.—[Official Report, Westminster Hall, 30 March 2000; Vol. 347, c. 133WH.]

We must overcome that attitude if we are to achieve our aim. I thought that last Thursday's discussion was extremely valuable. I do not know whether the hon. Member for Winchester has had an opportunity to read the debate in Hansard, but I commend it to him.

All the evidence about the development benefits of investing in primary schooling should help us to forge greater political will behind the goal of universal primary education. That is one of the key targets in our White Paper; it is a goal that is increasingly accepted. The political will is building up, but greater effort must be put into it.

The Government believe that four things need to be done if we are to make gender equality and universal primary education a reality and to achieve the UPE target by 2015.

First, we need a sustained commitment from the Governments of the developing countries to universal primary education.

Secondly, as the hon. Gentleman rightly said, in looking at the balance of developing countries' budgets, we must address the issue of resourcing for education and the need to increase the resources that developing countries commit to primary and basic education. The hon. Gentleman gave a particular example. The developed countries can also play a vital role. Through the Department for International Development budget, the British Government have current commitments to education of about £800 million, a substantial amount, of which 77 per cent. is for basic and primary education. Two thirds of those resources are concentrated in 11 of the poorest countries of sub-Sahara Africa and south Asia.

Thirdly, we must move away from the project-based approach of schools with Union Jacks on them—the gift of the British people—to a sector-wide approach, giving the country resources that enable it to provide all the basic primary education that it needs. We must co-ordinate the work of the different development donors around a focused, agreed strategy drawn up by the Government of the country concerned. They know the country's needs; they can best assess them and draw up a plan. We must drive forward with a new, more collaborative agenda for education and development co-operation generally, which means all the relevant donors working together with developing countries in a much more joined-up way.

As the hon. Gentleman said, Uganda provides an excellent example. In collaboration with key partner agencies and the Government of Uganda, the DFID has played a key role in establishing this sector-wide approach to education, resulting, in 1998, in its largest ever commitment to a programme in Africa—£67 million towards the education sector support programmes. That will provide flexible budget support to the Government for five years. That is spelled out in more detail in a country study in the briefing document produced by the Department. If hon. Members have not already seen it, I hope that they will take the opportunity to look at it.

The fourth thing that we must do if we are to achieve universal primary education by 2015 is to link education policy with the country's wider development strategy, including policies on health, sanitation, livelihoods and rural transport. Members of the Select Committee know the importance of that. Countries cannot and will not secure universal primary education if they focus simply on education. They must deal with the other aspects.

The hon. Gentleman referred to the Dakar forum. He is to be congratulated on initiating this debate in the run-up to the forum, which is to be held on 26 to 28 April. Governments, development agencies and non-governmental organisations from the north and south will have an opportunity to re-commit themselves to education for all and to achieving the target of universal primary education by 2015 and the gender equality target in primary and secondary education by 2005. As the hon. Gentleman said, my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for International Development will lead the British delegation. Hon. Members and you, Mr. Deputy Speaker, know of the strength with which she can deploy these arguments. With gender equality being an important issue, it is good that a female Secretary of State is leading our delegation.

We are working closely with the forum convenors to ensure that the process leading up to Dakar and the conference itself focus on a set of key objectives—specific actions that will extend educational opportunity for the millions of children to whom the hon. Gentleman and I have referred. In preparing for the forum, the DFID has drafted a paper entitled "Education for All: The Challenge of Universal Primary Education", which will be published on Friday. I shall send a copy to the hon. Members who are here today, and it will be available to other hon. Members who would like it. We plan to consult widely on the document, and I hope that those hon. Members who are here and others will let us have their views.

The hon. Gentleman asked what the Government believe the Dakar forum should pay particular attention to. We think that it should analyse why some countries, particularly some of the poorest, have managed to achieve considerably more than others since the 1990 world conference in Jomtien. We have set seven priorities for Dakar.

First, there must be collective reaffirmation of the "Education for All" goals, allied to focused strategies for their achievement, and particularly the attainment of the international development targets.

Secondly, it must be reaffirmed and stated in Dakar that developing country Governments must give priority to basic education. As the hon. Gentleman said, in some cases that will involve changing their spending priorities.

Thirdly, Dakar must send a clear signal that the international community will back the developing countries' reforms. The new framework for action should make it clear that funding agencies will allocate significant additional resources to primary and basic education, provided that the developing-country Government are committed to that objective and have put in place appropriate policies. As the hon. Gentleman rightly said, some of those additional resources can and should be made available by debt cancellation, in which Britain is again taking the lead. No Government seriously committed to universal primary education should be thwarted in achieving that ambition by a lack of resources. It would be terrible if countries could not achieve it because they did not have the necessary money, so we in the west must make a commitment to making that money available.

Fourthly, Dakar should focus on gender equality. We must move beyond the language of awareness to the language of action, as we heard last Thursday.

Fifthly, sub-Saharan Africa and south Asia should be accorded international priority.

Sixthly, we need better monitoring of progress towards the goals and targets. That requires investment in developing national capacity for monitoring, allied to efficient international monitoring systems. We must be able to see that we are making progress. We heard on Thursday about phantom schools, so monitoring is vital.

Seventhly, Dakar should seriously consider whether the existing inter-agency "Education for All" structure will be adequate for its future purpose.

The hon. Gentleman mentioned the Prime Minister's article in today's edition of The Guardian. That article illustrates my right hon. Friend's commitment to the issue. Of course, it will not be possible for every Prime Minister to attend, and I understand that other European Heads of Government will not be attending. It is right that the key Ministers should attend, and our Secretary of State has the Prime Minister's full backing. However, as my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister said at the Okinawa summit, he will himself be involved in the follow-up to Dakar, and he has already made it clear that we must make the best possible use of new information and communication technologies in education. He wants Britain to take the lead in ensuring that those technologies are used to bring the world together, not to widen existing divisions, and that they are used to deliver real practical improvements in education in the developing world. ICT-based distance learning can be cheaper, better and more accessible than traditional teaching methods, and the internet provides new ways to share information and knowledge and to pool experiences. Wireless technology, which I have seen in operation, can be used in areas with limited—or no—telecommunications infrastructure. Last week, my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister asked DFIID to put together a project team including people from the private sector and the development NGOs to take the work forward. Already, we have had significant support from Cisco Systems, and that is an important element in our overall strategy.

Universal primary education is the fundamental building-block of our support for education in developing countries, but primary education cannot stand alone in an education system. We need a balanced view of the whole education sector, including the provision of adult literacy and lifelong learning. In many developing countries, it is not unusual to find that less than five per cent. of the work force has some form of secondary schooling. Such a lack of skills is clearly a drag on the development of the economy, as well as on the individual's earning capacity, but the answer is not that donors should invest large sums in the construction of secondary schools, providing expensive bricks and mortar, but no recurrent funding to pay for teachers and books. We have been down that road before. Along with relevant Governments, we need to look at different ways to provide education at that level that are more efficient and less costly. Distance learning, which uses new technologies to extend access to secondary education and skills training, is one possibility. For many years, we have supported the commonwealth of learning, which provides training, institutional networking and expertise in distance course development for Commonwealth countries. Information technology provides major new opportunities to increase access to such courses.

[Mr. George Foulkes]

Trade and investment can have a much greater impact on development than aid, as the Select Committee pointed out. Developing countries must create the conditions to attract investment; that is the only way to achieve the growth necessary to reduce poverty by their own actions. A skilled labour force will facilitate such investment. Too many poor countries suffer from a desperate shortage of skills and of unemployed graduates. Those skills cannot be provided without some kind of policy framework or institutional base, which is why we have committed £25 million over the next two years to a new skills for development initiative. The initiative will facilitate the stimulation of the entrepreneurial skills required by the poorest countries to allow their economies to grow.

I return to the principal subject of our debate—the provision of basic, primary education for all. Although the internet and new technology are hugely significant potential tools for spreading educational opportunities, many people may never learn to read, and millions of children may not have the opportunity to go to school unless we take more effective action. The hon. Gentleman said that, if we look back over the past 10 years, we do not see a huge improvement. Over the next 10 years, there must be a real improvement. In 2000, we have a great opportunity to do that; the start of the new millennium is the moment to turn all the fine words uttered at United Nations conferences and in the Chamber into action, into real deeds. The Government are strongly committed to bringing the benefits of educational opportunity to those millions of children—especially, to the girls—and to helping the spread of skills and knowledge, so that all countries can accelerate their development, reduce poverty and give everyone the chance to realise their potential.

Question put and agreed to.

Adjourned accordingly at one minute to One o'clock.

Westminster Hall

Wednesday 5 April 2000

[MR. MICHAEL J. MARTIN in the Chair]

Burma

Motion made, and Question proposed, That the sitting be now adjourned.—[Mr. Robert Ainsworth.]

9.30 am

Mr. Edward Leigh (Gainsborough): I am pleased to have the opportunity to draw Parliament's attention to the appalling and systematic genocide taking place against the Karen, Shan and Karenni minority peoples in Burma. As far as I know, this is the first debate in Parliament devoted to that genocide. The atrocities in Burma must rank among the worst in the world; yet, unlike the similar situations in Kosovo and Bosnia, the international community and the media have failed dismally to give the slaughter the coverage that it deserves.

At a recent meeting set up by the British human rights group, the Jubilee campaign, I met representatives of the Karen movement. I talked to the president of the Karen National League and saw Kwe Htoo from the Committee for Internally Displaced Karen People. They both impressed on me the systematic extermination being inflicted on the Karen, Shan and Karenni ethnic minorities. They urgently appealed for the maximum international pressure to be put on Burma's military regime to stop the genocide, and for extensive aid to stem the growing humanitarian disaster among Burma's ethnic minorities.

With an estimated 7 million people, the Karen are Burma's largest ethnic minority. More than 300,000 Karen are internally displaced as a direct result of Burmese military action. Many of them hiding in the jungle, with little or no food or medicine, and they are normally killed on sight when discovered. For example, on 27 July 1999, at least 22 internally displaced Karen people, including a baby and two children aged two and eight, were killed by Burmese troops from Infantry Battalion 101 at Kawei and Hpway Plaw villages in Mergui district. Many of the victims were literally beaten to death with rice pounders, and 19-year-old Naw Nail Naw was gang-raped by the soldiers before she was murdered.

The overall population of internally displaced people in Burma is about 2 million, which means that it has some of the worst internal displacement in the world. There is probably no other nation like Burma; hundreds of thousands of internally displaced people have to hide in the jungle in the most primitive conditions, and they are hunted and slaughtered like animals. Since 1993, more than 30,000 Karen civilians have died as a result of Burmese military action. That is one example of the atrocities routinely inflicted on the Karen by the Burmese military.

These atrocities are regularly reported by organisations such as the Jubilee campaign, the Karen National League, the Karen Human Rights Group and the Committee for Internally Displaced Karen People. They include forced labour, the systematic destruction of villages, forced relocation, widespread and persistent torture and rape, and extrajudicial executions. That regime is the policy of the so-called State Peace and Development Council, which is an Orwellian change of name from what used to be called the State Law and Order Restoration Council—SLORC—which more correctly sums up the regime. The SPDC policy in response to any form of armed resistance by ethnic minorities is what the Burmese call draining the ocean so that the fish cannot swim. In other words, it seeks to undermine the opposition, attacking the civilian population until there is no possibility of their giving any support to opposition rebels.

That is the fundamental idea behind the stated policy of the regime—the four cuts policy—which was initiated by General Ne Win in the 1970s. The idea is to cut off supplies of food, funds, recruits and intelligence to ethnic resistance groups. The direct attacks on the civilian population, characterised by forced mass relocations, destruction of villages and the village economy, extrajudicial executions and completely unsustainable levels of forced labour, have become even more prevalent in the Burmese regime's policy since the 1990s.

In their acts of violence, Burmese troops make no distinction between adults and children. For example, Burmese soldiers killed two Karen children of five and eight in Ko Reh Hta, Karen state. On seeing the children in the forest, the soldiers simply slaughtered them with a knife. Saw Ta Plah Plah and Naw Mi Mu Wah, a little boy and girl aged three and two respectively, were left behind in their village when everyone else fled and it was shelled by Burmese troops from Division 77. The SPDC soldiers found them walking around crying and threw them into their burning house, where they were burnt to death. On 15 October 1998, eight-year-old Naw Mu Lay and two-year-old Naw Dah Dah were killed when Burmese soldiers fired grenades from a rocket launcher at their house.

The widespread rape of minority women by Burmese soldiers also extends to children and youth. On 17 December 1998, Naw Tha Paw, a 17-year-old Karen girl from Maw Kee village, was ambushed by SPDC troops from Light Infantry Battalion 361, raped, then shot or stabbed to death; 14-year-old Saw Maw Dah was with her when they were ambushed, and was shot and killed. On 13 October 1998, 15-year-old Naw Maw Nyunt was raped and killed by soldiers from Infantry Battalion 59.

The Burmese army uses both children and adults for forced labour. The youngest children, who are taken for road and railway building, are usually aged eight or 10, while the others, who are taken for heavy portering duties, carrying supplies for the Burmese army, are usually 12-year-old boys and 14-year-old girls. Conditions for porters are brutal, with female porters being regularly gang-raped at the end of the day. Porters are also used as human minesweepers triggering landmines with their own bodies. In one typical case, Naw Sah Mu, a 15-year-old girl from Papun district in Karen state, stepped on a landmine while portering and had her right leg blown off. Her 16-year-old friend, Zaw Zaw Oo, was hit in the face by the shrapnel and blinded. After they return home, many children die from diseases contracted while portering, combined with exhaustion.

[Mr. Edward Leigh]

The International Labour Organisation has rightly condemned the SPDC's widespread use of slave labour as a "crime against humanity."

The United Nations Special Rapporteur, Mr. Rajsoomer Lallah QC, has acknowledged the systematic nature of the atrocities carried out against Burma's minorities. He submitted a report to the UN General Assembly, dated 10 September 1998, entitled "Situation of Human Rights in Myanmar." Paragraph 59 of the report reads:

> The Special Rapporteur is deeply concerned about the serious human rights violations that continue to be submitted by the armed forces in ethnic minority areas. The violations include extra-judicial and arbitrary executions (not sparing women and children), rape, torture, inhuman treatment, forced labour and denial of freedom of movement. These violations have been so numerous and consistent over the past years as to suggest that they are not simply isolated or the acts or individual misbehaviour by middle and lower-rank officers but are rather the result of policy at the highest level entailing political and legal responsibility.

I emphasise the words "at the highest level". They are not just individual acts of barbarism by soldiers; they are condoned at the highest level of the regime.

The Jubilee campaign, Karen National League and the Committee for Internally Displaced Karen People have told me that what is happening in the Shan and Karenni ethnic minorities in Burma is genocide. What is the international legal definition of genocide? This is where the British Government come into the picture, so it is important to get the definition right. The international legal definition of genocide is found in the 1948 convention on the prevention and punishment of the crime of genocide, which Burma has ratified. The legal definition of the term is contained in article 2. I hope that hon. Members will forgive me for reading it out, as it is important to get the legal position absolutely right so as to understand what the Government can and cannot do.

The convention, which we have all signed, states:

> In the present Convention, genocide means any of the following acts committed with intent to destroy, in whole or in part, a national, ethnical, racial or religious group, as such:
>
> (a) Killing members of the group;
>
> (b) Causing serious bodily or mental harm to members of the group;
>
> (c) Deliberately inflicting on the group conditions of life calculated to bring about its physical destruction in whole or in part;
>
> (d) Imposing measures intended to prevent births within the group;
>
> (e) Forcibly transferring children of the group to another group.

Some points must be noted in relation to the legal definition of genocide. First, genocide need not be an attempt to destroy an entire ethnic group. An attempt to destroy part of an ethnic group suffices. What is happening to the Karen, Karenni and Shan minorities in Burma falls within the scenarios set out in article 2 of the convention. There can be no doubt that it constitutes

> (a) Killing members of the group;
>
> (b) Causing serious bodily or mental harm to members of the group;
>
> (c) Deliberately inflicting on the group conditions of life calculated to bring about its physical destruction in whole or in part.

Only one of the five acts set out in article 2 need apply in order for the activities in question to be considered genocide by the international community, but in the case of Burma, at least three of them apply. International law does not require a minimum number of fatalities for a situation to be defined as genocide.

Without any shadow of a doubt, what the Burmese military regime is doing to the Karen, Shan and Karenni minority peoples clearly fits the international legal definition of genocide. Article 3 of the convention on genocide states:

> The following acts shall be punishable:
>
> (a) Genocide;
>
> (b) Conspiracy to commit genocide;
>
> (c) Direct and public incitement to commit genocide;
>
> (d) Attempts to commit genocide;
>
> (e) Complicity in genocide.

That is the international law, under which genocide is a very serious crime that requires an urgent global response. Sadly, such a response has not yet materialised.

I believe that the international community should swiftly and firmly press for prosecution of the Burmese military junta and its subordinates for genocide. An international tribunal should be set up by the United Nations Security Council to try the Burmese regime, just as was done in respect of the atrocities that occurred in Bosnia.

The British Government should use their permanent seat on the UNSC to lobby for the establishment of such a tribunal; that is why I am speaking directly to the Minister—and I am pleased to see him here. The Government should also lobby the UNSC for resolutions calling on the SPDC to end the genocide against the Karen, Shan and Karenni people and for global economic sanctions, including a universal arms embargo against Burma.

Would the action that I am suggesting the British Government should take be supported by democratic forces in Burma? The answer is that it would. Aung San Suu Kyi, the legitimate democratic leader of Burma, who is part of the National League for Democracy and who won the vast majority of votes in the 1990 elections, has repeatedly urged the international community to institute economic sanctions against her country. In a statement dated 6 September 1999, she said:

> Burma is like a huge prison with a military dictatorship holding the keys and locking us away from freedom. Help us open the door of our prison. Economic sanctions are necessary for the fast democratisation of Burma. We would like the European Community, the United States and the rest of the world to be aware that sanctions help the movement for democracy in Burma. Unilateral sanctions are better than on sanctions at all.

That is the verdict of the democratically elected leader of Burma.

Foreign investment, I am sorry to say, has directly caused human rights violations. For example, whatever the intentions of the company may be, the Yetagun gas pipeline operated by the British company Premier Oil has fuelled the forced displacement of many Karen and Mon minority peoples by the Burmese army, because the pipeline runs through their areas. The Burma Campaign UK reports that since oil companies first invested in Burma, with plans for piping gas across the Tenasserim division into Thailand, the Burmese military have stepped up their activity in the area. In 1990, there were 1,750 armed soldiers in the investment area, but by 1998 this had increased to 11,230 and two artillery units. Villagers have been forcibly relocated, partly to secure the division for foreign investment. There is no compensation for any houses, crops or belongings stolen or burnt by the Burmese army.

The United States Government have already banned all new investment by US companies in Burma because of the country's appalling human rights record. When I refer to the United States, which is a close ally of ours, I look at the Minister and I hope the British Government will do the same. The establishment of an international tribunal on economic sanctions would give teeth to the calls on the Burmese regime to end its genocidal activities and demonstrate the resolve of the global community to end these horrific and systematic atrocities.

I would like to know whether the British Government are willing to lead attempts to end the genocide by taking the measures that I have suggested and encouraging other nations to follow suit. Even starting to talk about this issue in terms of genocide, even holding this debate, may put some small pressure on the regime in Burma, which could well save lives. It would be tragic and irresponsible if Governments continued to wallow in indecision and ignore the plight of the Shan and Karenni peoples as they are systematically treated in this way. If there is one lesson that the world ought to have learned from the tragedies of the 20th century, it is that the only way to deter genocide is to respond to it swiftly and firmly. If we do not, this century may prove to be even bloodier that the previous one.

I want to make one last comment. We owe a debt as a nation to the Karen people. I took Field Marshal Viscount Slim's book "Defeat into Victory" out of the Library. In it, he writes about the fighting in Burma during the Second World War. He says that as the Japanese drew south in their retreat, > their way led them through the country of the Karens, a race which had remained staunchly loyal to us even in the blackest days of the Japanese occupation, and had suffered accordingly. Over a long period, in preparation for this day, we had organised a secret force, the Karen Guerrillas, based on ex-soldiers of the Burma Army for whom British officers and arms had been parachuted into the hills. It was not at all difficult to get the Karens to rise against the hated Japanese; the problem was to restrain them from rising too soon. But now the time had come, and I gave the word, "Up the Karens!".

Winston Churchill, in a debate in this House on 5 November 1947 said:

> in the infliction of vengeance upon the loyal Burmese—the Burmese who were patriotically fighting with British and Indian troops to defend the soil of Burma from Japanese conquerors—great cruelties were perpetrated on those men, because they had helped us to resist the Japanese.

He said later in his speech:

> Burma is an appendage of India and is likely to reproduce, though, of course, on a far smaller scale, the horrors and disasters which have overspread her great neighbour and which should ever haunt the consciences of the principal actors in this tragedy. All loyalties have been discarded and rebuffed; all faithful service has been forgotten and brushed aside. These is no assurance that the power of the new Government will be sufficient to maintain internal order; or, I might add, national independence ... We stand on the threshold of another scene of misery and ruin ... —[Official Report, 5 November 1947; Vol. 443, c.1848-52.]

That was 53 years ago. Nothing has changed. Misery and ruin go on under our noses in that sad country.

I look forward to the Minister giving us some hope. I spent yesterday morning thinking about this debate, after which I dealt with constituency correspondence. It contained the usual flood of small cases about the Child Support Agency and planning. Although those are important matters to our constituents, their problems pale into insignificance when we consider that hundreds of thousands of people on this planet are being moved from their homes and thousands are being murdered. Surely the House of Commons, of all places, has a moral responsibility to lead the court of world opinion and do something about the Burmese regime.

9.50 am

Mr. Andrew Miller (Ellesmere Port and Neston): I endorse every word of the speech made by the hon. Member for Gainsborough (Mr. Leigh). I am delighted that he obtained the debate. It is pleasing to know that hon. Members on both sides of the Chamber will reinforce his points.

I shall start where the hon. Gentleman left off, with a case that relates to Field Marshal Slim's involvement in Burma. My interest in that country began with a small constituency matter. A constituent came to see me soon after I was elected in 1992 and told me his story. He fought for the British Army and had the opportunity after the war to enter Britain as a British citizen. He chose to return to his people, the Karens, to help them build their lives. Sadly, they have not been able to build their lives. Bruce Humphrey Taylor eventually came to this country and spent 50 years working here until his death last year. He came to see me about how to get his great niece out of a United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees camp on the Thai-Burmese border. That is when I learned about the atrocities to which the hon. Member for Gainsborough referred.

The atrocities are well documented. There is no doubt about the credibility of the evidence that will be presented to the House today. It is sad that a nation that is so far away and so remote from our considerations is forgotten. Burma has the most corrupt regime on the planet. We can pluck out examples of problems in other countries, but where else is there such systematic use of forced labour, destruction of villages and killing of people?

I shall refer to the atrocities in the context of the hon. Gentleman's reference to the United Nations convention on human rights to which, ironically, as he said, Burma is a signatory. An independent report published by the Karen Human Rights Group in 1998 entitled "Wholesale Destruction" has been widely circulated around the world, but no one from the Burmese regime has challenged one word of its content. The section on the destruction of villages sets out the activities of the State Law and Order Restoration Council. SLORC launched a campaign in many parts of Burma forcibly to move or wipe out all rural villages that were not under the direct physical control of an army camp.

The issue of forced of labour is also well documented. Groups of people have been forced to build roads and grow food for the army—not for the sake of the nation's infrastructure, but to improve the wretched army's ability to terrorise them. The evidence is overwhelming. One day we shall have the facility to show photographs during our debates. Photographs exist that would make right hon. and hon. Members' blood curdle—of people being burnt alive, shot, maimed and tortured by that wretched regime.

[Mr. Andrew Miller]

To what degree is the regime responsible? The hon. Member for Gainsborough said that he presumed that the instructions came from the highest authority. I believe that it is now clear that that is so. A book published towards the end of last year, "Voice of a Hungry Nation", has a fascinating appendix 6, which contains facsimiles of military orders. One, requiring paddy cultivation, is an invitation to the head man of a village.

> Regarding the above, we want to discuss the agricultural cultivation situation with you, so everyone must come to the following meeting.
>
> (To: pay back left over loans given for crops)

That refers to crops that people are forced to grow to sell to the regime. If they want to feed themselves they must buy them back at a much higher price. There are documents about provision of food to the army and about porter duty for the army. A minor military instruction to send porters states:

> Regarding the above matter, in relation to the provision of military operations servants, the Village Tract Head must arrange for the sending of four military operations servants as outlined below, without fail.

Those are fairly blunt military instructions. They do not state directly what will happen to the people if they fail to comply, but the truth becomes clear as one reads on. A document about the "matter of voluntary labor contribution to construct a dam" states that

> Ten people must come with tools for voluntary labor to build the dam. Those people must report to a military camp. Another document is identified as an order to relocate. No one relocates voluntarily. That is clear military evidence of the beginnings of the destruction of villages. The document states:

> An order has been issued to—
>
> a village, the name of which has been deliberately deleted—
>
> to vacate the place and move
>
> to another village
>
> or to any other place where the villagers have relatives . . . After the date of issue of this order, it is warned that the Army will go around clearing the area and should any village or small huts in the paddy fields be found still standing, they will all be dismantled and destroyed.

That is an acknowledgement by the regime that it is engaged in destroying people's homes. This country was up in arms when Ian Smith tried to do the same thing on the borders of what was then Rhodesia. Why are we not up in arms now when the exact same thing is happening in Burma?

The ultimate military order in the selection reads as follows:

> Subject: Notification. As has come to light, tracts, elders and villagers of the Mehpletdoe region have all heard the KNU's notice that it will plant land mines 4 ft 6 in from the edges of roads to be set off by its enemies. While we don't intend to further increase the problems of the villagers—
>
> joke—
>
> we also hereby inform our village parents, brothers and sisters that we will also start to do the same thing. We have great love for you all. We cannot protect you all.
>
> (1) We will start to lay mines and ambush as of 20/2/99.
>
> (2) Whatever place/village we enter, absolutely don't run away.
>
> (3) We won't accept responsibility for anyone who runs.

Those military orders provide unambiguous evidence of the approach that is being adopted and such documents provide evidence that should be submitted to the United Nations Commission on Human Rights.

There is no doubt that genocide is being committed by that regime. The destruction of villages, forced labour and murder is being authorised at the highest level. The problem is that Burma is a long way away. Television cameras go to Rangoon and, quite rightly, give coverage to the bravery of Aung San Suu Kyi, who was elected as the democratic leader of the Burmese nation, but the television cameras do not go into the remote jungles and see what is happening there, where 30,000 people have been killed in a short time, many of them in the most barbaric way.

We have a responsibility to do something, not least because British companies are seeking to invest there. To be fair to British industry, most companies have heeded the Government's warning that further investment is unacceptable. Not only has Premier Oil ignored the advice of the British Government, but its very acts have exacerbated the situation. To be fair, Britain has played a small part in trying to bring about democracy and justice in Burma, but much more needs to be done. We need to raise the matter robustly in the United Nations and the European Union. We have a serious problem with foreign policy issues and the EU. For example, if the French decide not to play ball because they have oil interests in a country, that presents difficulties for Britain as a member of the EU, but we must take a much more robust position. Small countries, such as Norway, are doing more than Britain to re-establish human rights and democracy in Burma.

I know that my hon. Friend the Minister is moved by the issues that have been raised today. I know that our good friend, the late Derek Fatchett, had started to move the debate on, and I know that the Minister of State, Foreign and Commonwealth Office, my hon. Friend the Member for Leeds, West (Mr. Battle), who is in the far east at the moment, is also very keen to see some positive action taken. One thing that the House can do is show unity of purpose and collectively ask the Government to do all that they can to bring this terrible situation to the attention of the world. I hope that the media will take this debate seriously and that the Government will use the unity of purpose in the House at least to begin to put more pressure on the authorities in the United Nations and the European Union. In memory of the thousands of people who have been killed, we must do everything that we can to restore democracy in that country.

10.5 am

Rev. Martin Smyth (Belfast, South): I am happy to follow the hon. Member for Ellesmere Port and Neston (Mr. Miller). Both he and the hon. Member for Gainsborough (Mr. Leigh) have painted a tragic picture of what has been going on in Burma. My own interest, like that of others, stems partly from wartime understanding, because a number of constituents and friends in Belfast served in Burma, and one of my cousins' husband was a Japanese prisoner of war through serving in Burma. More recently, I have had contact with a young Burmese student in the Belfast Bible college. However, most of the information that I have gained has come from the campaigning bodies that seek to remind us all that one of the greatest tragedies in the world continues in Burma.

BEST COPY AVAILABLE

A recent report reminds me that although, as Christians and because of our British connection with the Karen and Karenni people, we have emphasised their lot, the reality is that different groups throughout Burma are affected, not only the Shan and the Mon, but the Rohingya and others. It is a desperate situation when a so-called Government seeking to govern a country terrorise and persecute their own people.

Lest some think that we are dealing only with Christian people, a report that I received today from a joint Australian–United Kingdom Christian Solidarity mission to Burma and Thailand in October 1999 makes solemn reading. The bulk of the people that the mission met were Buddhists, and the report says that it may have been because most of the Christians have already been displaced. It is an humanitarian issue of the greatest moment. It is not a religious or sectarian conflict, but a Government seeking to force their views on people by terror.

My colleagues painted the picture on the ground; I want to probe some of the issues. Although Governments have signed accords and agreements, quite often, as in Burma, they do not implement them. One problem that permeates the situation today is European Union co-operation. What representations has the Minister made to his European colleagues concerning the EU's participation in Association of South-East Asian Nations meetings at which Burma is present? I understand that the Government have taken a firm line on that, but if the Burmese Government are seeking to make their own citizens outcasts, the world at large should make them outcasts until they return to democratic practices.

There are some who claim that the Karen and Karenni are seeking to be independent. I am not convinced that that is true. They want to be able to live in their own country, perhaps as part of a proper democratic Burmese society. Is the European Union prepared to respond to Aung San Suu Kyi's views that economic sanctions should be imposed on Burma by ending all links—tourism, trade or investment by European companies—between the European Union and Burma? People will say immediately that that will put pressure on the poorest, but the harsh reality is that the State Law and Order Restoration Council, or the State Peace and Development Council—SLORC or the SPDC; it changes its initials to suit different situations—already imposes such sanctions on its own people.

For two years, the people who have been displaced and forced to live in the jungle have managed to survive. However, because of a severe drought in 1998 and the campaign by the San Tha Lone, or SSS—a particularly vicious group of terrorist soldiers, who ravage and burn villages—there is no longer sufficient food, even in the countryside, for people to exist on. It is a question not of our penalising those people, but of our starting to put pressure on those who are doing the levelling. I think that I use that term correctly: the Minister of Education in the Burmese Government has very little education, so he spends his time closing the universities in Burma. That is a form of levelling with which I do not agree, as I would prefer to level upwards, rather than downwards.

The time has come for the international community to put pressure on the Burmese authorities. I appreciate the problems faced by the Government in their dealings with the Burmese authorities. I know that the Burmese authorities can be arrogant and that, at times, they are not prepared even to answer the phone and discuss the issues with our representatives. However, if they take that line, we should mobilise international opinion to keep up the pressure on them. The issue has been given some emphasis in the European Union and in the United States, but there is a case for asking our Japanese allies to start acting effectively. The Japanese—willingly, unwillingly or simply in the natural desire to foster trade in the interests of their own people—are giving support to the Burmese Government that is keeping them going.

The concept of economic sanctions is important, and I urge the Government to maintain pressure not only on British companies, which, by and large, have abided by that concept, but on their European counterparts. What discussions have been held with the International Monetary Fund about financial aid packages, and are they linked with reforms in Burma? There have been suggestions that this nation has moved away from its ethical foreign policy; I would not like to think that that was the case. As well as dealing with financial and material needs, the IMF should consider the ethical issues relating to policies that are impoverishing many people.

The hon. Member for Ellesmere Port and Neston referred to the campaign against landmines. People who have spoken to us about the burning of villages do not mean only the torching of a row of terraced houses; they are talking about people going from one house to another, destroying them deliberately—and destroying many of the people as well. The Burmese authorities will say that they have to take such strong action because the liberation army of the Karen people is fighting them and that it is a war of independence. I would put it in another way: it is a war of protection. In one area of Burma, about 25,000 Burmese soldiers are operating in four districts, where approximately 1,000 members of the liberation army are operating to protect their people against butchery by soldiers on behalf of a disreputable Government. I support my colleagues in bringing the issue before Parliament, the nation and the world, and saying that we stand by a persecuted people. They are persecuted simply because they face a totalitarian regime that is not prepared to play by the rules.

10.15 am

Mr. Mark Oaten (Winchester): First, I congratulate the hon. Member for Gainsborough (Mr. Leigh), not only on securing the debate, but on his presentation of the case. He made an extremely good speech and is right to say that we have been remiss in not having this debate and not bringing the issues to Parliament's attention before.

I also welcome the speech by the hon. Member for Ellesmere Port and Neston (Mr. Miller), who spoke alarmingly about some of the military objectives. I had not heard about those before, and they shocked me greatly. The hon. Member for Belfast, South (Rev. Martin Smyth) asked the Minister some important questions about sanctions, and I hope that he will answer those directly.

[Mr. Mark Oaten]

I want to place on record the thanks that we all owe to the work of the Burma Campaign UK and the Burma Action Group UK, which consistently raise important issues. I have to confess that, unlike the previous three speakers, I am not an expert on the matter; it is very much new to me. I have spent the past 48 hours preparing for the debate and have been appalled to read about what has been taking place in Burma. Those groups have been extremely helpful in providing information, as have the speeches that we have just heard.

Some of the minorities that we are discussing have been fighting for independence for almost 50 years, mostly against the backdrop of a bloody civil war with a military regime. It is appropriate that we look back at the role of the Karen people, who fought bravely alongside the British in Asia during the second world war. The Karen people assumed that they would get British assistance in the foundation of an independent state in return for their courage and actions. We have heard a number of quotes from Viscount Slim, and I will add to them: he described the Karen people as "far from fair-weather friends". However, instead of getting an independent state, which they might have expected, the Karen people, as well as other ethnic minorities, have been blatantly abused by the Burmese Government ever since.

Sadly, it is an everyday occurrence for the Karen people, as well as many other minorities, to work in forced labour camps, often for little or no pay. Worse than that, as the International Labour Organisation has pointed out, is the fact that a significant proportion of those workers are children, the elderly and disabled people. In addition, the forced labour is often in opium fields, so workers are contributing to the appallingly high heroin production in that part of the world. Such atrocities are deplorable. Quite rightly, the ILO—an agency of the United Nations—passed a virtually unprecedented resolution expelling Burma from that organisation last June.

Unfortunately, the problems do not end with forced labour. As we have heard, the Burmese Government have targeted ethnic minorities as political enemies by birth. They are constantly tortured, imprisoned, murdered and harassed by that Government. Nearly 2,000 people are imprisoned in Burma solely because of their ethnicity. The Government can get away with that, because the shadow of a judicial system that exists is not independent from the executive military junta, and almost no one receives a fair trial—especially not those from ethnic minorities.

The United Nations estimates that between 300,000 and 400,000 Burmese refugees have fled into neighbouring countries, specifically India and Thailand. Because of political affiliations there, Thailand and India find it hard to recognise those individuals as refugees. Will it be possible to make representations to India and Thailand to see what they can do to assist those refugees?

In 1990, the military Government agreed to hold democratic elections, and 82 per cent. of the seats in Parliament were won by the National League for Democracy. The fact that Burma was holding elections was seen as a promising development. However, that elected Parliament was never allowed to convene; worse than that, 78 of its Members were jailed by the Burmese Government, and two of them died during their imprisonment. Six students who took part in that election and supported the National League for Democracy await execution.

There has been a massive build-up of the military arsenal in the area and, as John Jackson of the Burma Campaign UK says, nearly 40 per cent. of Burma's gross domestic product is spent on the military. The country's active military numbers around 400,000, a figure that is double that of 20 years ago, despite the fact that Burma has no real external enemies in that part of Asia. With that spending increase, health, education and social security have all been denied to people there in the past few years. John Jackson says that spending on health and social security has dropped below 5 per cent., and education below 10 per cent., while defence remains at around 40 per cent. of GDP.

It is important to look at some of the conditions to which those policies are leading. As the United States Central Intelligence Agency has said, life expectancy at birth is only 54 years, and infant mortality stands at 76 deaths for every 1,000 born, which is higher than in Vietnam and Thailand combined. Schools have been closed down for years on end and, with the exception of the two universities in Rangoon, no higher education is available.

Mr. Miller: I want to clarify that the statistics that the hon. Gentleman is citing refer to the whole of Burma, and that they include the privileged people who are supported by the regime. The statistics in the ethnic minority areas are substantially worse than the bad statistics that he has quoted.

Mr. Oaten: The hon. Gentleman makes an important point. The picture is much worse if it is narrowed down to the ethnic minorities. The education figures are dramatically reduced when they are considered for the ethnic minorities alone.

According to the 1948 convention on the prevention and punishment of the crime of genocide, in my judgment, the Burmese Government's campaign against minorities falls within the legal guideline for genocide. I agree with the hon. Member for Gainsborough that the evidence for genocide is compelling. To date, the Government have at least acknowledged that, and it is true that the Minister of State, Foreign and Commonwealth Office, the hon. Member for Leeds, West (Mr. Battle) has sent some positive messages on the matter, but the Government have so far merely noted the concerns rather than taken positive action. In opposition, the Labour party urged the Conservative Government to support a Danish-led European sanctions campaign. I want the Minister to acknowledge that the Government have perhaps not been as robust as they could have been in fulfilling their pre-election promises to impose investment sanctions.

Sanctions are never an easy option, and there are many legal issues that need to be addressed. The Government originally claimed that they could not impose sanctions against Burma because of article 73(g) of the treaty of Rome, which forbids any EU member state to impose unilateral trade sanctions separately from the Union. A number of us are calling for, not trade, but investment sanctions, which are protected under article 60.2 of the treaty of Rome, provided that there are serious political reasons and the situation is urgent. The Government and the European Commission can claim that, because the situation has been going on for such an extended period, the matter is not urgent, but it is my belief that genocide and such extensive human rights violations, no matter how long they have been going on, remain an urgent matter. Investment sanctions could be imposed and would be protected under article 60.2.

It is often argued that such sanctions hurt those most in need. However, only the upper class and the Government benefit directly from investment. It pays for their extravagant life style and for the intense military build-up. As the hon. Member for Gainsborough said, even the leader of the National League for Democracy said that such sanctions would do good. She said that the real profits from investments do not go to the people of Burma. It is all concentrated in the hands of foreign investors or privileged people ... The poor people will not suffer because of a boycott.

Obviously, the evidence points in the direction of the greater use of sanctions. The chronic abuse of human rights of the minorities of Burma, as well as the horrid overall state of affairs, requires action by the Government. Amnesty International, the National League for Democracy, the United States of America and others all endorse investment sanctions on Burma. The United States has imposed such sanctions since 1997. The matter is urgent and I hope that the Minister will set out a plan of action so that we can do more to help the people about whom we have heard this morning.

10.26 am

Mrs. Cheryl Gillan (Chesham and Amersham): We should be grateful to my hon. Friend the Member for Gainsborough (Mr. Leigh) for introducing the debate. This is the first time that the issue has been debated in the House of Commons. I am sure that the Minister will respond aptly to the heart-rending stories and pleas from hon. Members of all parties about a forgotten act of genocide that has continued for more than 52 years. I hope that, like me, he will acknowledge the great role that has been played by Wilfred Wong of the Jubilee campaign and Dirk Patterson of Christian Solidarity, who have been bringing the act of genocide to the attention of Members of Parliament for some time. We are grateful to them for their work.

Burma was a British colony. It was part of British India until 1948, when it became independent from the Commonwealth. From 1964, it was a one-party state ruled by the Burma Socialist Programme party under General Nei Win, which was allied closely to the armed forces. In 1988, an economic collapse provoked popular unrest that threatened the position of the BSPP. Although Nei Win retired officially, he retained influence behind the scenes. At first, the unrest was put down with force, with massacres of opposition demonstrators as the military attempted to maintain its position. Since then, the country has remained in a parlous state.

Since independence, Burma has been in a state of civil war and the Burmese military has indiscriminately abused the human rights of ethnic minorities—whether they be insurgents or civilians—with widespread disappearances, extrajudical killings and torture, as well as forced labour and relocation. The points that were made by the hon. Members for Ellesmere Port and Neston (Mr. Miller), for Belfast, South (Rev. Martin Smyth) and for Winchester (Mr. Oaten) reflect a great consensus among the parties in our attitude towards the regime in Burma and what is happening to the people of that country.

The Karen people are the largest minority group in Burma, with 7 million or more people. In the past fortnight, I have met four of their representatives. They were quietly spoken and brought with them tales of horror, deprivation, murder and rape. No one could fail to have been moved by their testimony. The Karen are facing genocide at the hands of the Burmese army. Since 1993, more than 30,000 Karen civilians have died as a result of Burmese military action. Many have died of starvation and illnesses resulting from being displaced. Since 1995, the slaughter has intensified, as more extensive parts of Karen territory have come under Burmese military control. In fact, since the 1990s, the Burmese military has delilberately targeted civilians during military operations.

There are more than 300,000 internally displaced Karen people in Burma. That figure comes from the Committee for Internally Displaced Karen People, a representative of which has met me and my hon. Frends in the past 10 days. Many of those people are hiding from the Burmese army in the jungles, with little or no food and water. They are shot on sight. One of the representatives who saw me spoke perfect English. I asked him where he learned English and he replied, "I studied in the jungle. I taught myself so I could communicate." The fact that civilians are shot on sight makes Burma almost unique. There is probably no other country in the world where so many civilians are forced to hide in the jungle and are slaughtered like animals when they are found.

Counting other ethnic groups as well as the Karen, the total population of internally displaced people in the region is about 2 million—one of the highest in the world. There are about 120,000 Karen refugees in Thailand. They have been forced to flee by the atrocities of the Burmese army. The Karen, Karenni and Shan minorities are experiencing all the privations that have been described by other hon. Members, such as the systematic destruction of their villages, crops and food stores, and forcible relocation to sites of forced labour without pay or food. Those who flee the relocations are hunted down by the Burmese troops and shot on sight.

Extrajudicial executions are widespread and frequent, and the victims include women, children, babies and pregnant women. The rape of minority women is extensive. We discussed the role of women in development in this Chamber during the debate on the International Development Committee's first-class report. We know that the Serbs used rape against Bosnian Muslims as part of their ethnic cleansing policies. That has received much publicity, but not much has been said in the media about the systematic rape by the Burmese army of the women of ethnic minorities in that region.

[Mrs. Cheryl Gillan]

Those atrocities have been widely documented by human rights organisations, such as the Karen Human Rights Group and EarthRights International, but they have not been extensively reported in the press. I do not believe that the average person in the street would think of Burma if asked to name the regions of the world in which the worst atrocities have been perpetrated. I hope that this debate will raise the profile of what is being done in that part of the world. It gives the Minister the opportunity to make some practical suggestions on how to proceed.

I do not want to shock anyone, but some examples of the atrocities that have been perpetrated should be put on record. The examples were given to EarthRights International by the villagers. One witness said:

> In my village, there were two spinsters . . . The soldiers came to the house . . . and asked the spinsters to show them the way to a military camp. The woman staying in the house saw them talking to the soldiers and saw the spinsters go with the soldiers. The next time the villagers saw them, they were dead and lying face down on the ground. The soldiers raped and killed them. When we found them, they were lying down on the ground without any clothes on below their waists. One of the women's throats had been cut; the other had been shot.

Another witness said:

> In my village, the soldiers did not try to marry with the women, but they went to the houses to sleep with the women. They did not ask. They went to sleep with them. The soldiers would go quietly to sleep with the women without asking the permission of the owner of the houses where the women lived. The girls would scream. It happened every time the soldiers came to the village. When the soldiers were in the village, they cried every night.

The Minister has a difficult task. He has to satisfy all parties in this Chamber that he will take action. There have been developments involving the Government and the European Union. I hope that he will not only answer the questions raised by the hon. Members but tell us, especially in the light of his responsibilities, what is happening at European level. We know that the European Union has observed a package of sanctions against Burma since 1996. That was set out as a common position on 28 October 1996, amended by a Council decision in October 1998 and then extended. What have those sanctions achieved? Does he have evidence that sanctions have worked in any way, shape or form, or does he believe, as I do, that it is time to review what is happening, and consider whether another strategy might be more effective?

Aid has been supplied to Burma through non-governmental organisations. I hope that the Minister will agree that there is no point in supplying aid through a Government organisation in this country. Non-governmental organisations provide the sensible route. It appears that only limited amounts have been given to Burma, or any of the minorities, in the form of emergency assistance, including relief for flood victims—only £272,000 in 1998 and a small additional amount for a health project run by World Vision.

I hope that the Minister will tell us what further aid has been provided. Does he plan to discuss the question of aid for the region with his colleagues in the Department for International Development?

Mr. Miller: I want the hon. Lady to be absolutely clear about sanctions, as it is important to express a unified position. Is she saying that the official Opposition want to strengthen sanctions, as we did against South Africa? Would she support the channelling of aid through bordering countries to ethnic minority groups, which Norway, for example, is doing?

Mrs. Gillan: I believe that there is no consensus on economic sanctions in the EU or the UN Security Council. I am asking the Minister, who has access to the information, to provide an assessment of what those sanctions have achieved. What, in his judgment, would be the next step? Clearly, the sanctions regime is having little effect.

I am especially keen on the delivery of aid through NGOs. In previous debates, I have called for Government aid to Zimbabwe to be stopped and channelled through non-governmental organisations so that it reaches those who are most in need. What aid and resources have been delivered to Burma, and what future plans exist?

I want to link the regime to the international criminal court, on which the Government have hung their hat. We have talked about that a great deal and are looking forward to seeing legislation on it. Will the court's powers cover the Burmese regime? What stage has the legislation reached? What are our plans for that international institution? The perpetrators of genocide in Burma could be prime candidates to be hauled before an international criminal court.

Mr. Leigh: I am grateful to my hon. Friend, but does she agree that it will take time to establish the court? We need not wait for it to be in place. Procedures exist to deal with the problem.

Mrs. Gillan: My hon. Friend is right. I would not want to delay the process of passing judgment on the perpetrators of such crimes, but I want to take this opportunity to press the Minister on legislation to establish the international criminal court. That has been much promised and much vaunted, but so far we have had only hot air and warm words.

There is a common purpose among us. We all want to know what the United Kingdom can do to restore the rule of law and to encourage the development of a benign Government and the restoration of civil society in Burma. Everyone who spoke made a great contribution to developing the case against the regime. If the debate moves the process forward, it will have been worth while. I hope that the Minister will reassure us and I look forward to hearing what he has to say.

10.41 am

The Minister of State, Foreign and Commonwealth Office (Mr. Keith Vaz): I am enormously grateful to the hon. Member for Gainsborough (Mr. Leigh) for giving us a unique opportunity to debate the appalling situation that faces the Karen and other Burmese ethnic minorities. The issue rightly continues to be of great concern to the House and the other place. I thank my hon. Friend the Member for Ellesmere Port and Neston (Mr. Miller), the hon. Member for Belfast, South (Rev. Martin Smyth) and the Front-Bench spokesmen, the hon. Members for Winchester (Mr. Oaten) and for Chesham and Amersham (Mrs. Gillan), for their contributions. I have not attended many debates in the House on which there has been such unanimity. Those who spoke, especially the hon. Members for Gainsborough and for Belfast, South and my hon. Friend the Member for Ellesmere Port and Neston, have a long and close interest in the matter.

Her Majesty's Government and I share the outrage expressed by many at the dreadful human rights abuses in Burma. The Burmese regime's brutal policies, including torture, rape, forced labour, forced relocations and arbitrary executions, towards ethnic minorities have led to the exodus of hundreds of thousands of people across Burma's borders into neighbouring countries.

We understand that there are 22,000 Burmese refugees in Bangladesh and, officially, 105,000 mostly Karen and Karenni in camps near the border in Thailand. Thousands of other refugees are either internally displaced in Burma or living illegally in Thailand outside the refugee camps. The appalling suffering of ethnic minorities in Burma is a symptom of a wider malaise—the subjugation of a nation by military despots who continue to ignore the people's democratic choice. While that dreadful state of affairs lasts, we shall give the regime no respite. In all the international forums, on every possible occasion, we shall continue to press it to move forward. It can expect no relaxation of the pressure and measures that have been adopted for as long as it holds out against political and economic reform.

Later, I shall explain what we are doing in greater detail, but first I should like to respond to the concerns expressed by the hon. Member for Chesham and Amersham and describe how we are helping the ethnic minorities and refugees. We use a variety of channels; we are providing direct British humanitarian assistance, and working closely with neighbouring countries on repatriation issues and safeguarding the security of refugees. The activities of our embassies in Rangoon and Bangkok are another channel of support. I pay tribute to our ambassador, John Jenkins, and to his small team in Rangoon for their dedication and perseverance in trying and difficult circumstances.

British humanitarian assistance delivers vital relief to the region. Our assistance to organisations working on the ground in Burma targets some of the poorest and most vulnerable groups. Since 1996, we have provided more than £1 million in humanitarian aid for Burmese refugees in neighbouring countries. This year alone, we have allocated £270,000 to support the excellent work of the Burma Border Consortium in providing humanitarian assistance to refugee camps in Thailand. With our EU partners, we have also supported work in repatriating and resettling Rohingya refugees from Bangladesh to Burma and ensuring their protection on arrival. We are always open to suggestions and other workable ideas on how we can alleviate the suffering of ordinary Burmese people. The hon. Member for Gainsborough told the House about his meetings with affected parties. The Minister of State, Foreign and Commonwealth Office, my hon. Friend the Member for Leeds, West (Mr. Battle), also has such experience, as, before his sad demise, did my colleague Derek Fatchett.

The large number of refugees in Thailand places a considerable burden on that country. Occasionally, the Thai authorities crack down on illegal economic migrants, a large number of whom are Burmese. We have sought and received assurances from the Thai authorities that there will be no forced repatriations of refugees. Since 1998, when the UNHCR established field offices in Thailand, there has been no evidence of such repatriations. We shall continue to pay close attention to this sensitive issue.

Mrs. Gillan: I am most grateful to the Minister for the way in which he is treating the debate and for his responses so far. Will he clarify one point? He has put into the region aid of some £270,000 this year and £1 million since 1996. In the light of the size of the problem, will he undertake to review that amount and to consider whether it can be revised upwards? It is a small sum and I hope that he will perceive from this debate the need for more resources to be put into the area, which is of great fragility. Will he undertake to review the amount spent on humanitarian aid, bearing in mind the number of requests that he will undoubtedly have received?

Mr. Vaz: I can tell the hon. Lady and all hon. Members that my hon. Friend the Minister of State will consider all the points that have been made. We constantly monitor the situation and we will continue to do so.

Refugees must enjoy adequate security. The 1998 attacks on Wangka and Mawker refugee camps in Thailand by a splinter Karen group highlighted the acute dangers faced by Burmese refugees there. While we welcome the important role played by the Thai authorities in providing shelter for refugees, we have urged them to ensure that the camps receive adequate protection. The British embassy in Bangkok regularly visits the camps to monitor the situation. We fully support the role of UN agencies in providing protection for the Rohingya refugees in northern Rakhine State. Our ambassador travelled to the state last month to see the situation for himself. Embassy staff in Rangoon regularly monitor the work of the UN and international NGOs operating in difficult circumstances.

The plight of Burmese ethnic minorities flows from the wider political and human rights situation in Burma, which remains, as we have heard this morning, appalling. Human rights violations by the regime are among the worst in the world. In addition to the atrocities that I have mentioned, Amnesty International and the International Committee of the Red Cross estimate that there are 1,500 political prisoners in Burma. There is no democracy there, despite democratic elections in 1990.

Our policy on Burma is to press the regime to improve its human rights record and to enter into a substantive dialogue with the National League for Democracy, which was the overwhelming victor in the 1990 election, as well as with ethnic minority leaders, to find a political solution to the country's problems. On Wednesday, my hon. Friend the Minister of State will meet Dr. Sen Win, the leader of the pro-democracy movement in Burma. Our policy recognises the need to sustain the Burmese opposition and to resist the regime's efforts to wear down the international resistance to its undemocratic rule. We are determined to keep up pressure on Burma on every front, bilaterally, regionally and multinationally, in whatever forum is available.

[Mr. Vaz]

Burma's record is an affront to the United Nations principles that it has undertaken to uphold. My hon. Friend the Member for Ellesmere Port and Neston and the hon. Member for Belfast, South asked what we were doing with our EU partners. We are working with them on a strongly-worded draft resolution to be adopted at the UN Commission on Human Rights in the coming weeks. The resolution catalogues the widespread human rights violations that have resulted in the displacement of people—particularly ethnic minorities. We co-sponsored a similar resolution at the United Nations General Assembly in November. It is the responsibility of the Burmese Government to respect their obligations and implement United Nations resolutions swiftly and in full. We shall maintain all pressure to ensure that they do so.

We are always ready to look for ways to inject momentum into the engagement of the United Nations with Burma. I was therefore delighted to learn this morning of the appointment of Razali Ismail as the UN Secretary-General's new special representative to Burma. Mr. Razali brings to the job a wealth of UN experience, having previously been Malaysia's permanent representative in New York. I am sure that he will carry out his role with dynamism and creativity and I am certain that Foreign Office Ministers will seek to meet him at the earliest opportunity to pass on the concerns of the Government and Members of Parliament.

As the hon. Member for Winchester said, the United Kingdom led the charge at the governing body of the International Labour Organisation in condemnation of Burma. The regime has consistently ignored the ILO's recommendations on stopping forced labour. However, I point out that it has not been expelled from the organisation. In an unprecedented move, the organisation has arranged a discussion for its June 2000 conference, which could result in an appeal to its other 174 member states to review their relationship with Burma, and to take appropriate measures to ensure that it cannot take advantage of such relations to perpetuate or extend the system of forced compulsory labour

practised against the country's citizens. It will be the first time that such steps have been taken against an ILO member and that will be implicit recognition that Burma's behaviour in this respect is worse than any other labour issue anywhere. We are pressing hard with our EU partners to strengthen the common position on Burma when it is renewed later this month.

We have withdrawn all financial support for trade missions to Burma and we do not encourage British companies to trade or invest there; nor do we encourage tourism. After all, Burmese democratic leaders do not think that that is appropriate. We maintain very close contacts with pro-democracy groups in Burma including Mrs. Aung San Suu Kyi, the general secretary of the NLD. Embassy officials in Rangoon and visiting officials frequently meet with her and other members of the NLD. We all value this important contact. Our thoughts are with her at this difficult time, the first anniversary of her husband's tragic death. Were it not for the international support that she and her colleagues receive, they would probably have been locked away long ago.

The Government share fully the concerns that the hon. Member for Gainsborough and other hon. Members, have expressed today, about the plight of the Karen and other ethnic minority refugees in Burma. We are deeply disturbed by the continued violation of human rights by the military regime. The Government are second to none in bringing international pressure to bear on that regime to make it mend its ways. The regime has a duty to its people to implement democratic reform. The plight of the Burmese people will remain high on the list of the Government's priorities until such time as we are able, as a result of genuine change in Burma, to welcome the country back into the international fold.

The eloquent and passionate speech made by the hon. Member for Gainsborough has ensured that the focus of Parliament and, indeed, the world is on the events in Burma. He was right to say that this debate could result in the regime listening to us. It could also result in some lives being saved. I can assure him that if there is anything further that he feels that the Government can do to strengthen our already strong position, my hon. Friend the Minister of State will be happy to meet him and his delegation of Members of Parliament to discuss matters further. It would be helpful if that delegation included the Front-Bench spokesmen, the hon. Member for Chesham and Amersham and the hon. Member for Winchester, as that would demonstrate the unanimity of purpose among all the parties.

Mr. Leigh: It is important that we state that the actions of this regime amount to genocide, according to the legal definition. By doing so, we will be able to persuade the United Nations and our European Union partners to take action. Will the Minister please address that point?

Mr. Vaz: I understand why the hon. Gentleman raises the matter. The descriptions that he has given us are appalling, but he must know that the term "genocide" has a precise meaning in international law. To be frank, under international law and all the rights and responsibilities that bind one under that law, genocide is difficult to prove. I understand the point that the hon. Gentleman makes and I can assure him that we will keep looking at this point, but genocide is a legal term and has a particular definition. I know that he does not use the word loosely. Defining the actions of the Burmese regime as genocide is important to him and to what he hopes that the Government and the international community can do. I assure him that we have noted what he has said and will continue to monitor the situation closely.

Mrs. Gillan: Will the Minister give way?

Mr. Vaz: I will not give way because we have nearly finished the debate.

Our message to the Burmese people is that they are not forgotten; that is demonstrated by what is being done here in the House of Commons, at the European Union, in the General Affairs Council, and through continued international contacts. We are committed more than ever to work with them and we will not rest until there is an end to human rights abuses and a return to democracy and constitutional rule. I thank the hon.

Member for Gainsborough for introducing the debate and so giving Parliament an opportunity to discuss this issue and the Government an opportunity to reiterate their commitment to the people of Burma.

10.59 am

Mrs. Gillan: I am sorry that the Minister would not take an intervention from me. I understood from his speech that he does not believe that genocide is taking place in Burma. I ask the Minister to write to me and clarify the Government's position on the atrocities that have been described this morning and to inform us whether the Government believe that they fall within the definition of genocide. I think every hon. Member who has participated in the debate would find that helpful.

Mr. Vaz: I have made it clear to the hon. Member for Gainsborough that genocide is a legal definition and a legal term. I will write to the hon. Lady if she would like me to.

Housing Benefit Fraud

11 am

Mr. Andrew Hunter (Basingstoke): I welcome the opportunity to introduce a debate on the Government's measures to combat housing benefit fraud. As hon. Members will know, this year approximately £12 billion will be paid out in housing benefit by local authorities to almost 5 million people in England, Scotland and Wales. Labour's 1997 manifesto overstated the case, saying that housing benefit fraud amounted to about £2 billion a year. According to Government figures at the time, fraud cost about £1 billion a year. The National Audit Office reached the same conclusion in its press notice of 8 April 1999.

The Secretary of State estimates that housing benefit fraud and error cost taxpayers around £840 million a year, but, allowing for a margin of error and differing methodology, there is no real evidence that fraud has declined very much in the past three years. The problem remains real and acute.

The Government's determination to tackle the problem is commendable. I am sure that all political parties and all hon. Members share that objective. However, we are entitled to expose Government policies to scrutiny and to hope that the ensuing debate fully and frankly reflects the realities of what is a complex issue.

The Secretary of State for Social Security told the House on 6 March:

> We are completely driving fraud from the system.

If only we could be certain that that were true. The latest departmental figures that I have seen show a negligible fall, which the Department has reportedly described as not statistically significant. I understand that a third of all councils have never prosecuted anyone for housing benefit fraud and that the National Audit Office has found that 25 per cent. of councils that it visited were in on the act. The Benefit Agency's own fraud investigation unit ran out of money in September 1998 and the Government have abandoned the London organised fraud investigation team, although much organised fraud takes place in London.

Similarly, the Secretary of State's further pronouncement on 6 March that > the last Government did absolutely nothing—[Official Report, 6 March 2000; Vol. 345, c. 756.]

about benefit fraud does not advance the quality of debate. It cannot be reconciled, for instance, with the steady increase during the early 1990s in prosecutions for all benefit fraud to more than 10,000 a year in 1995-96 and 1996-97, with a 99 per cent. conviction rate. Nor can it be reconciled with the rise in total fraud savings to an average of more than £1.5 billion in each of the last two years of the previous Administration.

The truth, which the Government are reluctant to acknowledge, is that most of their policies and initiatives have evolved from ideas and measures that pre-date the 1997 general election.

In reply to my written question on 7 February at columns 52-53W, the Under-Secretary of State for Social Security, the hon. Member for Wallasey (Angela Eagle) highlighted four key points in the Government's strategy against housing benefit fraud. Since then, I have been widely seeking comment on her reply and by no means exclusively from my Labour-Liberal controlled local authority, Basingstoke and Deane borough council.

[Mr. Andrew Hunter]

It seems that the situation on the ground may not be quite so straightforward as Government statements suggest. First, in the Minister's reply to my question, she pointed to the reform of the anti-fraud financial incentive scheme for local authorities to ensure that they can be rewarded for detecting and prosecuting cases of fraud.

I welcome that approach and I am sure that it is the right way to set about the task. It re-expresses the principle in the 1993 and 1994 schemes, which gave local authorities a share in savings above their share of a national baseline. By 1995-96, around 90 per cent. of all local authorities—421 of them—were receiving bonus payments as a direct result of their efforts to curb fraud. That year, £28 million in extra subsidy was earned from those incentive schemes.

I have one qualification. All too often, the efforts of local authorities are undermined when it comes to prosecuting cases of fraud. They are at a disadvantage compared with the Benefits Agency and they do not have the assistance of the Department's prosecution service. Local authorities have to secure the co-operation of their local police force, which then takes benefit prosecutions using the Crown Prosecution Service.

Unfortunately, as many local authorities have learned, the police are not always willing to act on housing benefit matters and it often falls to the council's solicitors to prosecute cases. That is a labour intensive, time-consuming and costly task and, to add insult to injury, the sentences are often derisory. The solution lies in local authorities having access to the Department's prosecution service.

Secondly, the Under–Secretary of State said in reply to my question that the Government had made an additional available £100 million over the next three years to enable councils to adopt the Verification Framework . . . which will help make housing benefit more secure.—[Official Report, 7 February 2000; Vol. 344, c. 53W.]

The Government tell us that they are looking for a total saving of some £1 billion during the course of this Parliament through a tighter identification regime. I hope that they succeed, but there is a downside.

My Labour-Liberal controlled local authority is certainly not alone in having discovered that, while the verification framework has been in place, there has been a detrimental impact in one key respect: the time taken to process a housing benefit claim has virtually doubled. That is a regressive step. It means that some of the most vulnerable are left exposed and in dire circumstances for longer. There are even some indications that the delay may be deterring some of them from claiming housing benefit. I therefore urge that the workings of the verification framework are kept under close scrutiny. I suspect that, ultimately, the objectives of security and speedy processing of claims are incompatible and that an acceptable balance has to be found. I fear that that balance may not have been achieved.

I wish to raise another issue, which I hope that Government will consider seriously. Administration is certainly more secure under the verification framework, but the performance of housing benefit sections nationally has suffered a severe blow. It is therefore reasonable to expect performance indicators to reflect that. When the Government talk about setting indicators that provide a faster, more accurate service that is more secure against fraud, provides value for money and takes account of the views and needs of clients, one fears that they might be living in dreamland.

Thirdly, the Under-Secretary, in reply to my question, said that the Government had invited all local authorities to participate in the Royal Mail "do not redirect" initiative, which prevents claimants from using the Royal Mail's postal redirection arrangements to make false claims for multiple addresses. As the Minister of State, who will reply to this debate, knows, that scheme was conceived by the previous Government and would have been enacted regardless of the outcome of the 1997 general election. In 1996, my right hon. Friend the Member for Hitchin and Harpenden (Mr. Lilley) initiated discussions with the Royal Mail over access to the database of redirected mail to assist in tackling multiple identity and other frauds involving false addresses.

I do not doubt that the "do not redirect" initiative has a part to play in combating housing benefit fraud, but it should be seen in its true perspective. My local authority reacted more than a little cynically to the proposition that it had been invited to participate. I have been told that there is no option but to subscribe now. However, the initiative is not proving of great value. Indeed, in the experience of Basingstoke and Deane borough council, the service has produced absolutely nothing. In the past year, only two letters have been returned to the benefit service as a result, and those two accounts had already been closed by the housing benefit section.

Even the Government's estimates make pretty uninspiring reading—256 councils identifying only 174 cases of fraud a month. Although I acknowledge that the initiative may have an unquantifiable deterrent effect, the Government's prediction that "do not redirect" can realise savings of £5.3 million a year seems on the optimistic side.

The fourth dimension in the Government's anti-fraud strategy that the Under–Secretary highlighted was the £4 million made available to install computer terminals in local authorities to provide access to the Department's benefit systems. That, of course, evolved from the housing benefit review of January 1996. The then Secretary of State, my right hon. Friend the Member for Hitchin and Harpenden, announced the creation of a national register of housing benefit and council tax benefit, with a view to matching data across local authorities against departmental fraud detection systems.

I welcome that initiative and its extension, but it has latent drawbacks and deficiencies. In the experience of my local authority, the remote access terminal, a means whereby a housing benefit section can share information about an income support claim, has strictly limited advantages, for one reason: the fact that council staff have limited access to Benefits Agency records. I gather that the Government are seeking to increase that access. I am told that it is greatly needed.

I encounter here some cynicism—and not only from my own local authority. I am told that there has been little or no consultation between the Department and local authorities about the remote access terminals. In principle, the intention to exchange information electronically and to reduce paper flow between organisations is sound, but the receiving of information from the Department and how it can be handled effectively in council offices appear not to have been thought through.

The Government claim that, as a result of remote access terminals, 20 million fewer paper notifications of benefit changes will be made. Those councils that operate a document imaging system will have an advantage over those that do not because, although the electronic transfer of information into council document imaging systems will avoid the use of paper, those councils that do not use imaging will need to put the information from the terminal on paper, and many local authorities throughout the country will find that efficiency is not increased.

I have another, more general, point to make under this heading. Closer working initiatives are being encouraged by the Department, to enable Benefits Agency staff and local authority benefit staff to liaise and work together more closely. However, that is not always working out in practice. Benefits Agency staff at local level are not empowered to break with protocol, and all too often they do not feel able to co-operate with councils in the way that is needed. There are too many constraints. I have no reason to believe that my local authority is alone in finding that it is proving difficult to make any gains in that regard.

I genuinely applaud the Government's commitment to combat housing benefit fraud. I do not quarrel fundamentally, or in principle, with the measures that they are introducing, although I think it unlikely that the measures will live up to the Government's claims and expectations. Most of these initiatives evolve from, or are natural expressions of, the policies that we sought to implement during the previous Parliament, but I do find fault in two key respects.

First, almost all the initiatives that the Government have introduced have a downside. They have been thought through inadequately, sometimes with insufficient prior consultation. They may be basically sound in theory—I believe that they are—but they are flawed in implementation. They have negative as well as positive implications and repercussions that had not been anticipated.

Secondly, the rhetoric and polemic that the Government often employ in presenting their case over-simplifies and overstates. These are complex issues, and they are worthy of serious debate. I hope that the Government succeed in this policy area; benefit fraud is one of the several cancers gnawing away at today's society. However, at the moment, the evidence that the Government are succeeding is strictly limited.

11.17 am

Mr. Steve Webb (Northavon): I congratulate the hon. Member for Basingstoke (Mr. Hunter) on raising the important issue of housing benefit fraud. Whether the figure involved is £800 million or £1 billion, these are substantial sums that could, I suspect, be better spent by all of us, and the hon. Gentleman has done the House a great service by drawing attention to the issue today.

I shall make a relatively brief contribution. First, I shall touch on the conclusions and three of the supplementary recommendations of the Scampion report on benefit fraud, and offer a few comments on some of those as they apply to housing benefit. Secondly, I shall make a few comments on the housing Green Paper that was published yesterday, which has a section on housing benefit fraud and gives some idea of the Government's thinking on the issue.

The Scampion report recommends the idea of a common baseline application form for housing benefit for all local authorities. Although the recommendation allows for local supplements to that form to reflect local circumstances, I very much support the idea that there should be one form for what is, in large measure, still a national benefit, albeit administered locally. Clearly, when thresholds are set locally, various other aspects are determined locally, but the information needed to assess a claim is pretty standard throughout the country, and yet the quality of information that is being sought appears to vary greatly. That worries me considerably, as it has implications for counter-fraud strategy.

We had discussions in this very Room about common application forms when the Chairman of the Public Accounts Committee, the right hon. Member for Haltemprice and Howden (Mr. Davis), initiated a debate on a related issue, but I should be grateful if the Minister would tell us the Department's latest thinking on the development of a common form, which in principle I would support warmly.

Mr. Eric Pickles (Brentwood and Ongar): Another thing that was striking in the report was the finding that local authorities did not get the opportunity to pass on information on tips and scams. If there was a common form and there was, let us say, a problem in Basingstoke, information about the problem could be passed on to Brentwood, Northavon and Birmingham.

Mr. Webb: The hon. Gentleman is absolutely right. The sharing of good practice must be encouraged, and a common form might be part of the strategy.

Scampion's second supplementary recommendation is to establish a working group to consider data matching and data protection. He considers the balance between a citizen's right to privacy and the state's need to protect public funds. In that context, I can see few reasons for preventing extensive data matching. There must be a good and effective gate-keeping arrangement, so that there cannot be easy and willy-nilly access to information on people's personal circumstances. However, when a good and grounded suspicion of fraud exists, all the information should be brought together. Different arms of government collect the information and they perhaps receive different answers from the same person at different times or answers from people using different identities. Therefore, they are sometimes unable to bring the information together. Provided that gate-keeping safeguards take account of civil liberties issues, that privacy can be protected from the gratuitous trawling for data and that certain steps are taken before data can be accessed, I would warmly support much more effective data matching.

I fondly look forward to the day when I succeed as Secretary of State for Social Security and set up one big computer to bring all such information together. On Monday, the Minister told us about another scheme that the Government had in mind and he said that the computers were not up to it. However, the pace of technological change is so fast that it is hard to believe that, in the medium term, the Government cannot set up computer systems that would facilitate data matching and have a real impact on fraud.

[Mr. Webb]

The third supplementary recommendation that I want to draw to the Chamber's attention is the possibility that the Department will join the credit industry's fraud avoidance scheme. I notice from today's Order Paper that the right hon. Member for Birkenhead (Mr. Field) has tabled a question to ask the Government about their plans to join the scheme. Perhaps, the Minister will anticipate the answer by telling us the Government's views on joining a private sector counter-fraud initiative. The hon. Member for Basingstoke rightly referred to incentives and the private sector has the biggest incentive to crack down on fraud, because its money is involved. I shall be interested to learn whether the Government think that they should play a part in that scheme; I think that they should.

The Green Paper that was presented yesterday has a slender chapter on housing benefit. It contains the equivalent of two sides of A4 on housing benefit fraud, but some interesting items are mentioned and it is relevant to bring them to the Chamber's attention. Paragraph 11.28 of the Green Paper appears under the heading "Tackling Fraud and Error" and it mentions the "do not redirect" scheme. There is some uncertainty about how the scheme is working in practice. The hon. Gentleman suggested that councils are effectively obliged to be part of it, but the Green Paper says that the Government have got > two-thirds of local authorities to join . . . and more are joining all the time.

Perhaps the two statements are not completely inconsistent, but I am puzzled why the Government did not take a much firmer line from the start and why they did not lay down the law to oblige local authorities to join the scheme. I do not know why the Child Support, Pensions and Social Security Bill, which is going through the House, could not contain a clause to oblige councils to be part of it. I see no reason why we might want to allow them not to join or why they might not want to part of it. We can argue about the scale of the savings—they may not be vast—but there are potential benefits.

If the Post Office knows that the post from a dozen or two dozen addresses is being redirected to just one address and the local authority knows that housing benefit is claimed at all those addresses, that raises questions about whether we should post so many cheques to one address. I hope that the Minister will reassure us that all local authorities will be part of the scheme. If not, I hope to know why not.

I commend the Government—I do not make a habit of that—on the proposals in paragraph 11.29 of the Green Paper. I have always thought that we needed to know—the hon. Member for Basingstoke referred to this in passing—how much benefit fraud takes place each year and the overall trend. One of the most frustrating things about Government announcements on benefit fraud crackdowns is that they always tell us how much they will save, but the scale of the fraud that remains is left unknown. We can never test the claims of how much the different measures will save, because we do not know what the starting number was. Indeed, the figures given for benefit fraud tend to be remarkably stable on the whole, despite announcements telling us every year that we will make hundreds of millions of pounds of savings. Something, somewhere does not add up.

The need for reliable, consistent information at a national and local level about the scale of fraud is vital. I welcome paragraph 11.29, which says:

> We also need to be able to monitor progress in reducing levels of fraud . . . Previous exercises to measures levels of fraud . . . produced national snapshot estimates, but did not allow us to track changes over time.

That is the right approach, and I welcome it unreservedly.

The Green Paper contains a section entitled "Taking this forward", which describes the Government's thinking on housing benefit fraud. I want to make a few remarks about that. Paragraph 11.30 refers to giving local authorities the right incentives, a point that the hon. Gentleman mentioned. Incentives are central to the debate. We all have contact with our local authorities, and the hon. Gentleman has obviously researched thoroughly his local authority's approach to the issue and its views on the Government's plans. It is clear to me that local authorities have weak incentives to tackle fraud. They are extremely overstretched and their benefit departments have to cope with a hefty work load and all manner of changes to the rules that add to the system's complexity. Tackling fraud involves the expenditure of taxpayers'—and not the councils'—money. Therefore, getting the incentives right is important

Mr. Hunter: Will the hon. Gentleman extend his comments to my point about the reluctance of local authorities to prosecute? They have to use the council solicitor, and prosecution involves time and cost. That additional dimension aggravates the problem.

Mr. Webb: The hon. Gentleman is right. A council faces the costs, such as the legal and staffing costs that the hon. Gentleman mentioned, of prosecuting cases when the return to it is pretty limited. Will the Minister set out in more detail the Government's thinking about how they will reward much more substantially councils that take the issue seriously?

Mr. Pickles: I have a note, which is the result of a conference, on the position in Milton Keynes and it adds force to the hon. Gentleman's argument. I have been informed that Milton Keynes saved £1 million over three years, but none of that money was returned to fraud investigation.

Mr. Webb: That comment shows the scale of benefit fraud in one authority. However, I am not sure that I necessarily want the money to be returned to fraud investigation; I want some money to go to the council to give it the incentive to pursue fraud further. It can then decide how much of that money it wants to spend on fraud investigation. Councils should feel that it is their money, but—apart from some incentive schemes at the margin—they do not. I hope that the Minister will assure us that he will beef up the incentives.

The central recommendation of John Scampion's report was an integrated approach to tackling benefit fraud. Although the Green Paper, at paragraph 11.31, mentions the report and refers to strengthening the professionalism of investigation and co-ordination of intelligence on benefit fraud, I am not convinced that the Government are going the full extra mile. I am not convinced that they have accepted the recommendation that there should be an integrated service. I hope that the Minister will clarify what is intended when he replies.

Although in many senses I am young and naive, I have quickly become cynical about the Department. I tend to assume that the volume of press releases on an issue is in inverse proportion to what is actually being done. Housing benefit fraud has seen a flurry of press releases, which makes me sceptical about whether anything is happening. I should like to be proved wrong.

It is regrettable that the Government have not set themselves measurable targets against which we can hold them to account. They tend to blame the previous lot, as it were, but they have had responsibility for these matters for three years. Three years on from the general election, we still have only a Green Paper, which in effect says, "We don't really know over time how much fraud there is." We need to know the extent of it. I know that that cannot be ascertained on day one, but, after three years, it is rather disappointing that it is now being discovered that we need to be able to measure the fraud that is taking place.

I hope the Minister will convince us when he responds that there will be a serious attempt to provide reliable estimates of the scale of the problem and measurable targets against which he can be held to account for reducing fraud. I hope that there will be a far more credible strategy than the rather weak practical steps that have been taken so far.

11.31 am

Mr. Eric Pickles (Brentwood and Ongar): It is a great pleasure to be able to take up the remarks of the hon. Member for Northavon (Mr. Webb). I thought that he was kind to the Government in terms of the housing Green Paper. He said that, after three years, they seem not to have much of a clue about what to do with fraud. It would be fair to say that they do not have much of a clue about what to do with housing benefit. If they have opinions on the matter, it seems that they are not prepared to share them with the House. The hon. Gentleman said that he looked forward to becoming the Secretary of State for Social Security. I hope that the hon. Gentleman will not be offended when I say that only in a parallel universe will that honour fall to him.

Mr. Hunter: I think that the hon. Member for Northavon (Mr. Webb) was announcing that he was about the cross the Floor.

Mr. Pickles: That may be. If that is the case, our loss will be the Government's gain. If the Minister wants to offer some inducements, we would be prepared to turn a deaf ear.

The hon. Gentleman suggested that improvements in the computer system might be helpful. I think that computers would be helpful if he were Secretary of State. Only with computers could we keep track of the hourly changes of Liberal Democrat policy.

I congratulate my hon. Friend the Member for Basingstoke (Mr. Hunter) on initiating the debate and allowing us to redirect our efforts in respect of housing benefit. There was a debate in Westminster Hall in early February on the subject, and many of the points made then have been repeated. However, my hon. Friend brought an interesting perspective, if not a practitioner's eye, to some of the problems, especially the redirecting of mail. I have not come across that before, and he made a valid point. His remarks about co-operation with local authorities were most illuminating.

My hon. Friend is right to say that, for too long—this applies especially to the Government—we have been very quick to take credit and to say that things are improving without there being any evidence to show that anything has improved. That has made the Government look ridiculous, and it has given to those who seek to damage the system by fraud the false hope that we will not get on to them and will not try to stamp out their activities.

The hon. Member for Northavon referred to paragraph 11.29 of the Green Paper. He said that it was rather good that the Government are to make an attempt to try to work out exactly how much fraud is within the system. It seems that they will try to determine whether housing fraud amounts to £2 billion, or is considerably less than that. The Government will have some problems in arriving at a true estimation because fraud is endemic and deep within the system. The process of unravelling is not confined to anti-fraud measures because it will be necessary also to try to simplify the system. My hon. Friend the Member for Basingstoke outlined various figures, but the best guess is that fraud amounts to about 7 per cent. of total expenditure on housing benefit. We know also that, above that figure—probably taking it to 10 per cent.— there are discrepancies because of client or administrative error.

It is not surprising that there is a great deal of money to be saved. It is not surprising also that the Labour party in the shape of the Prime Minister, when he was Leader of the Opposition, presented a manifesto that stated:

> Just as we owe it to the taxpayer to crack down on tax avoidance, so we must crack down on dishonesty in the benefit system. We will start with a clampdown on Housing Benefit fraud, estimated to cost £2 billion a year, and will maintain action against benefit frauds of all kinds.

Given the prominence of the issue in the Labour party manifesto, it is perhaps not surprising that the Secretary of State for Social Services was keen to say:

> We are already beginning to see results.—[Official Report, 11 January 1999; Vol. 323, c. 8.]

My hon. Friend the Member for Basingstoke referred to various claims that have been made by the Secretary of State. I, too, was struck by a press release of 20 January, headed, "Darling welcomes successes in fighting benefit fraud", which states:

> Today's figures show that our tougher anti-fraud measures are beginning to bite . . . we are winning the fight against fraud.

However, as my hon. Friend said, the Office for National Statistics said that the reductions to which the right hon. Gentleman was referring were not statistically significant. If that is right, I suppose that the figures could have gone either way; they could have gone down or up.

[Mr. Pickles]

There is a problem when, at every false dawn, the Government claim a victory. My hon. Friend is right when he says that the quality of debate is not enhanced by that process.

I suggest that we need to get three things absolutely right in establishing an anti-fraud strategy. First, we must defend the gateway to benefits to ensure that fraudsters do not pass through it. However, we do not want to guard the gateway so strongly that folk who need benefit and help cannot get through. There is a fine balance to be struck. Secondly, we need to get fraud out of the system, and an important factor in so doing, as the hon. Member for Northavon suggested, is benefit simplification. Thirdly, we need to improve investigation skills and share knowledge with local authorities and the Benefits Agency.

The Audit Commission's report on tackling fraud paints a gloomy picture. As my hon. Friend the Member for Basingstoke said, the commission found that housing benefit administration was poor in 44 per cent. of councils. It also found—this should give us cause for thought—that speed, not quality, continues to be the sole target for the assessment of claims. The process is to get claims through as quickly as possible. Some simple checks are made, but the system means rushing things through.

I served for 12 years on a local authority, and I find it shocking and unacceptable that too many councils have been experiencing fraud that has been perpetrated by officers and members of those councils. If we cannot run a ship without the crew being on the fiddle, what chance have we of commanding the confidence of the public? The lack of prosecutions of such offenders is a disgrace that besmirches those of us who are involved in local government. I do not care about the political make-up of the councils concerned: whether a council is Conservative, Liberal Democrat, Labour or hung, it is not acceptable to allow such a situation to continue.

The Audit Commission also found in one third of councils an unsatisfactory level of overpayment. Worse still, prosecutions were rare, for several practical reasons. Investigative journalism tells us that, in practice, councils are encouraged to chase only the worst offenders, so petty offenders can be confident, not only that they will never be caught, but that they will never even be investigated. At the end of January, the Government confirmed that local authority investigators ignore elaborate housing benefit fraud, because the financial incentives encourage them to hit relatively easy targets for prosecution.

The verification project is welcome, in that it systematically lays down minimum standards for verification and processing of claims. However, as my hon. Friend the Member for Basingstoke says, all is not well within the verification framework programme. The Local Government Association, of which I have the honour to be a vice-president, has accused the Department of "escaping its responsibilities" by contributing to the poor delivery of housing benefit. The LGA claims that the Department has ignored its concerns about the bureaucracy involved in the verification framework, and warns the Government that the verification framework threatens to submerge benefits staff in bureaucracy because of lack of funding. I shall quote two further LGA comments. First:

> It is important that the DSS and its agencies work collaboratively with local government in taking forward a comprehensive strategy for tackling fraud.

I am sure that we all applaud that. Secondly, the LGA states:

> Many of the operational difficulties associated with anti-fraud initiatives on housing benefit have arisen through a failure to fully involve the LGA and local authorities at the development stage or an unwillingness to take on board constructive proposals.

We have to work together to stamp out fraud—no one has a monopoly of knowledge.

Ignoring the experience of local authorities is not the way in which to obtain their co-operation; nor is it the best starting point for one of the three new initiatives announced by the Government, listed in paragraph 11.33 of the Green Paper, which is

> Setting up new arrangements with local authority and DSS fraud investigation units to pool resources, cut down on duplication of effort, share intelligence, and targeting investigations properly across the whole social security system.

That cannot be done on the basis of the Department telling local authorities to do as they are told; there has to be acceptance of partnership. I hope that the Minister of State will tell us the exact extent to which the Department intends to co-operate with local authorities.

During an intervention on the hon. Member for Northavon, I pointed out that one of the problems is that local authorities do not share information among themselves: they all have different forms and different criteria. One authority might crack down on a specific fraudster, but another fraudster using an identical method in another area escapes. Apart from an annual conference at which information might be exchanged, there is no systematic method of sharing knowledge. Such co-operation will start only if the Department takes local councils into its confidence.

We put off much of our work on, and many of our suggestions about, dealing with fraud while we awaited the Green Paper. However, it announces only three new initiatives. We were told many times that we had only to wait—everything would be dealt with in the Green Paper, all our problems and worries would be settled by the Green Paper, and everything would be made clear. I was looking forward to the Green Paper. We had been told that it would not be published in July, so I commend the Government for having brought forward its publication, but if I had eagerly taken it home to read over the long recess, I should have been a most disappointed Member of Parliament to find only three measly measures on housing benefit fraud.

Now, we want to know the answers to the questions that we were promised would be answered by the Green Paper, but have not been. Specifically, we want to know what has happened to the housing benefit simplification project, the details of which were due to be published a year ago—in fact, I think that the anniversary of its intended publication date has passed. In addition, the Minister must explain why, if there are about 250,000 known cases of housing benefit fraud, there are only about 700 prosecutions. The simplification project would help to secure the three measures to which I referred—guarding the gateway, removing fraud from the system and improving investigation skills.

We wanted a dedicated anti-fraud agency, and the payment of benefit cheques directly to landlords to be banned. The Secretary of State said that all those matters would be dealt with in the Green Paper. However, on page 112, I find the new special arrangements for co-operation between local authorities and the DSS, which I have already mentioned, and the offer of "a national, single agency" and a "fraud hotline". So, we are to have a telephone number. I do not mock that measure—it would have looked marvellous in a list of 30 or 40 initiatives. However, it is the lead item in a list of three options. Perhaps it should be a premium line, so that we can recoup some of the money that we lose on fraud through people reporting fraud.

In addition, local authority staff are to be allowed > on-line access to DSS systems to trace National Insurance numbers.

That is welcome. It would be useful if the Minister were kind enough to tell us how many people he estimates have two numbers, and how many duplicate numbers there are. We know that duplicate numbers exist—that someone in Blackpool can have the same national insurance number as someone in Brentwood.

I look forward to the Minister's reply, but I think that I have time to deal with a local matter connected with housing benefit fraud. During Social Security questions four weeks ago, the Secretary of State attacked Brentwood council, a Liberal Democrat council, for its record on fraud. My council officials are entirely innocent of being Liberal Democrats and run a tight ship, in my view, despite the incompetence of the administration.

I have a reply from Mrs. S. Keeble, the borough treasurer. She was astounded by the Secretary of State's charge that Brentwood council was soft on fraud. She writes:

> This is simply not true. The Council has, for a number of years, had difficulty in providing one of the government's statistical returns because of the way the data was stored in its computer system. The DSS are aware of this and it has never been raised as an issue before . . . The Council purchased a new computer system and it was installed at the beginning of the financial year.

Mrs. Keeble explains the difficulties and states:

> I am pleased to tell you that the first statistical forms were produced last week, for the third quarter of the year, and have now been sent to the DSS . . . I am concerned that our problems with this statistical return have been interpreted as a lack of concern over Benefit Fraud and I must refute this strongly.

She lists the steps that the council has taken, and reports that, recently, it successfully prosecuted a local resident, who was sentenced to 100 hours of community service and had to pay £120 in costs.

I trust that the Minister will pass that on to the Secretary of State, and I look forward to the poor burghers of Brentwood receiving an apology from the Secretary of State, whose remarks caused them great pain. When people are working hard to stamp out fraud, they deserve not to be part of the political football.

What do we want? A consensus is starting to form across the Chamber. The Deputy Prime Minister said that he wanted a consensus on housing benefit, and we are seeing the start of a broad coalition. We want the Government to implement the Scampion report. We do not want the Government to pick and choose, or to produce a hotline and nothing else. We want a proper, co-ordinated approach. Scampion knows what he is talking about.

The way in which the Scampion report was announced to the world could not have been less attractive. It was dumped—lodged—in the Library on a Friday evening. All Members of Parliament want to stay in the House as long as possible during the week, but Friday evening is not the time most conducive to getting wide publicity for such an important report. The Government have nothing to be ashamed of. They have made a number of commitments.

If we could take the politics out of the issue, and recognise that it will be difficult to remove fraud from the system, that it is not the Government's fault and that it is not up to the Secretary of State to deal personally with the problem, we could move towards some kind of consensus. As Scampion said, we need a single national intelligence system and a single investigatory agency. We want a proper partnership to be set up and to be given a time scale to submit proposals to the Department to deal with organised fraud.

The Minister is familiar with that and other suggestions that were offered by my hon. Friend the Member for Basingstoke and the hon. Member for Northavon. We are looking for a robust response from the Minister this morning, and I am sure that he will give it. If we were to sum up all our arguments in a single phrase, it would be: "Give us Scampion!"

11.54 am

The Minister of State, Department of Social Security (Mr. Jeff Rooker): I am happy to congratulate the hon. Member for Basingstoke (Mr. Hunter) on securing the debate. At the risk of upsetting the cosy little consensus, I must say that I have been listening to a load of whinges from inefficient local authorities. That may seem unfair, but as a headline, "Whinges from local authorities" would be accurate.

Hon. Members are elected to Parliament to represent their constituents, not to represent local authorities. I want to put that on the record. We want to work with local authorities, and I shall explain how we do so, but I do not accept that out there, everything is sweetness, light and massive efficiency. There is far more red tape and bureaucracy in local government than in central Government. That is my experience from my terms in the House and my short period in government.

Mr. Pickles: If the Minister were not seeking consensus and co-operation from local authorities, what would his opening remarks have been?

Mr. Rooker: I wanted to set the tone. We do not intend to be the punch-bag for local authorities that are not doing what they should be doing or which are merely seeking excuses.

I shall respond as best I can to the points raised in the debate. I am grateful to the hon. Member for Basingstoke for informing my Department of the matters that he would raise, arising mainly from the parliamentary answer that he received earlier in the year.

On the request "Give us Scampion!", we will indeed give the country Scampion in due course. The first step, though, is to carry through the commitment that we made when we published the Scampion report—to appoint a head of profession. The post has already been advertised. I regret that it takes a long time to consult, advertise and carry out the proper scrutiny that is necessary for public appointments. The interviews will be held fairly soon. We expect the head of profession to be in post by August or September.

[Mr. Rooker]

By the time we return from the long recess, I expect us to be in positive mode with regard to the other Scampion recommendations accepted by the Government. We may not have implemented them all, but we will have begun to get the plan ready. However, the first step is the appointment of the head of profession.

I shall deal first with the points made by the hon. Member for Basingstoke, which encompass many of the issues raised by the other two Members in their cosy consensual representations from their local government masters. That is the last time that I shall allude to that, but I think I have made the point that the Government do not accept the whinges and criticisms from local government of what the Department has been trying to do to tackle fraud. To speak of rooting out fraud is too strong a term, because ending fraud is like searching for the holy grail—there will always be fraudsters around. Nevertheless, we do our best to tackle a serious issue.

On the verification framework, I know from my own local authority, which is the largest in England, the problems that that has caused in delay and in respect of due procedures and training. I recently met about 40 representatives of local authorities to discuss aspects of the matter. We are trying to make improvements to the scheme and to help them phase it in over two years.

In many cases, local authorities have managed the verification framework so that vulnerable groups are not put at risk. I accept that many of the people in receipt of housing benefit are members of vulnerable groups, so non-payment of housing benefit puts the home at risk. That is the bottom line. If the benefit is not paid, the home is put at risk by the debt, the arrears and the other difficulties. We do not want to cause homelessness; that is the opposite of our intention.

We have removed the requirement for people in hostels to provide a national insurance number to support their claim. For those of us who live in the world of torrid bureaucracy, the idea that people do not have ready access to their national insurance numbers is surprising. We tend to believe that everybody has a national insurance number, but that is not so in the real world. People who live in hostels constitute a mobile population. For all the reasons people become hostel dwellers, it is easy to lose such information.

We have therefore issued guidance, which states that third party information from responsible organisations can be used to support claims from people in that position. We have learned that lesson from implementing the verification framework. I do not therefore simply claim that the framework has been established, that it is working and that we have made no change. We have made changes. We appreciate that they have caused difficulties for many local authorities.

The ordinary, common or garden honest claimant and well-run local authority have nothing to fear from operating the verification framework. Local authorities are required only to ask the questions and do the checks that they, as the guardians of public money, should have done in the first place.

That picks up a theme that the hon. Member for Basingstoke introduced. He said that local authorities did not own the money or the benefits. I freely admit that there is a long-term problem unless we can get local authorities to establish some sense of ownership. They own the administration of the money, but some do not believe that they are responsible for the benefit payments. When a senior official and I were in discussion, he said that he was not responsible for the amounts of housing benefit. He was a local government assistant director, yet he claimed that he was not responsible, and that the money was not part of his department's budget. He said, "It's not my money, it's the Government's money." Yet the Department was paying the local authority considerable sums of money to administer the system on behalf of the public.

The hon. Member for Northavon (Mr. Webb) mentioned incentive. He was right: incentives are built into the rest of local authority money, because inefficiencies in spending on one responsibility mean cuts in others. Local authorities do not like telling citizens that they are making cuts. However, council tax and housing benefit are different.

Mr. Pickles: The Minister mentioned ownership. Paragraph 11.39 of the Green Paper on housing considers the long-term future. It states that administration will remain the responsibility of local authorities. However, it also considers the ONE pilots and local authorities working closely with them on housing benefit administration. Is it absolutely clear that administration will remain with local authorities in the long term?

Mr. Rooker: I stand by the words of the Green Paper. We have no plans to remove housing benefit administration from local authorities, but nothing lasts for ever. That is not a hint or a threat. The words in the Green Paper are valid. I shall consider the ONE pilot later. If local authorities can administer housing and council tax benefit efficiently and satisfy our constituents, they will encounter no difficulties. The Green Paper makes the position clear.

We have agreed with the Audit Commission and the Accounts Commission that any performance data that they publish will state that a local authority has been involved in operating the verification framework. I am almost expressing a caveat: operating the framework may slow down performance. We do not intend that to happen, but we understand that in the real world, operating a different system which is much more rigorous and a little slower can slow down performance.

I do not want a local authority that takes the verification framework seriously, and genuinely tries to make it work, to be penalised unfairly in the Audit Commission's published charts, which we receive regularly. I do not want us to observe that our local authority has dropped below a performance line and demand to know why. Local authorities will claim that it is not fair that they do extra work, which takes time, yet the report does not refer to it. They feel that they have been penalised. I hope that those comments will be taken in the spirit in which they were meant. We also take account of implementing the framework in the subsidy to local authorities. The Government, not local authorities, pay for the verification framework.

I regret that the hon. Member for Basingstoke forgot to mention the Royal Mail "do not redirect" scheme. Again, local authorities do not pay for that; it is fully funded by the Department. It is also voluntary. There may be arguments about it. One of the first questions that I asked on my first day in the Department eight months ago was, "Why is this voluntary? It is such a good idea." However, no local authority has complained about that. Not one has claimed that we are forcing local authorities to accept a scheme that they do not want to implement.

We have asked local authorities that do not implement the scheme the reasons for that. We got some stupid answers—for example, "We're waiting for another supply of envelopes, so we can have them reprinted." We have received barmy reasons which an alert local government officer would have tackled immediately.

I am surprised by the comments of the hon. Member for Basingstoke about his local authority. He said that only two envelopes had been returned to the council and that the accounts had been closed. I whispered to my colleagues that I wondered why the local authority was sending out envelopes if the accounts had been closed. That is the obvious question. The envelopes had been redirected back, but if the accounts had been closed, why did the local authority send out the cheques? Basingstoke council must answer that question.

Given that the Government have asked local authorities to undertake so many tasks, there are good grounds for establishing some schemes on a voluntary basis. I can understand frustration about not achieving 100 per cent. implementation, and about slowness, but I expect improvements by the end of the year. The service is recommended and part of good practice. Local authorities can learn from it.

One local authority has made dramatic savings through the scheme. It reported that "do not redirect" cases accounted for 10 per cent. of its fraud investigation case load. Two cases revealed fraudulent payments of £26,000 and £18,000. It is a good scheme, but no single policy initiative can solve all the problems. We must move forward on a wide front. There is no holy grail. I would not claim that we had won the battle and that benefit fraud was under control.

The benefits system pays £2 billion a week to our fellow citizens. The scope for fraud by organised criminals is great, and we spend a lot of money on trying to close the gateways and thus make it more difficult for the wrong person to get into the system and easier to root out fraud. We prosecute approximately 200 people a week for benefit fraud—and not only housing benefit fraud, which is the subject of the debate.

The hon. Member for Basingstoke said that remote access terminals are not very useful because they offer limited access, but they are a big innovation and providing local authority officers with a computer terminal so that they have direct access to the Department of Social Security computer network for certain benefits is pretty radical. I am not claiming credit and, as he said, a lot of those initiatives have come through the system, as is the case with any change of Government. I freely admit that our computer network is not exactly blue sky technology, but we are considering widening the range of DSS benefit information available as part of the housing benefit improvement programme through the access terminals. We hope to pilot some of those improvements later this year, with a view to rolling them out nationally in 2001.

The electronic transfer of data is also an issue. We consulted local authorities about initiatives during the evaluation of the ETD programme and 20 were involved in pilots during development. One does not consult every local authority, as more than 400 deal with housing benefit and we carried out a representative pilot. Before the national roll-out of electronic data, the local authorities were consulted through the remote access terminals national user group and they attended seminars on ETD, so we have involved them. We want to work in partnership, but sometimes new ways of doing things ruffle feathers or challenge local empires. There may not always be the degree of good will that there should be, but we have put our hand out to local authorities to work with them.

The electronic transfer of data offers other benefits, even if the local authority does not have the document image processing system. For a start, it reduces the time that it takes to process housing benefit and council tax benefit claims. It increases security in terms of data protection and data transmission and should enhance customer service by improving the speed and accuracy of benefit processing. There is no question but that it contributes to reducing the scope for fraud and error, and we hope that it will lower the housing benefit and council tax benefit programme expenditure.

I should make the point that the words "benefit fraud inspectorate" did not cross the lips of any hon. Member today. The inspectorate is a service provided by my Department to local authorities to go over the systems that they use. It is not a hit squad, but a systems squad that goes into local authorities to examine how they administer housing benefit and council tax benefit. In some ways, I regret that it does not consider other benefits such as student loans. There is a great deal of scope for that, because the inspectorate is expert in studying systems.

We publish reports for each local authority, although we remove any failures as they could be invitations to commit fraud more easily, and the good practice can be shared, one local authority to another. Local authorities do not necessarily even have to pick up the phone, as they can read reports on authorities with a similar demographic and geographic background or a similar housing benefit profile to see whether they can learn something.

This year, the benefit fraud inspectorate has been asked specifically to go into the 30 local authorities with the highest housing benefit spending. One knows which they are, by and large: they are big city authorities, and my own city of Birmingham is one. They are due to be dealt with—I hope in a way that brings them up to scratch and improves the situation—and I do not deny that we have had problems in the city of Birmingham with housing benefit administration. Of about 400 local authorities, 30 spend a third of the £12 billion of housing benefit, so it is sensible to target our resources there.

[Mr. Rooker]

On Monday, we announced the programme for the next 30 authorities into which the benefit fraud inspectorate will go. They work in co-operation and are proceeding by agreement. There are set dates and a programme of work. The inspectorate will not knock on the door one Monday morning and say, "By the way, we have come to audit your systems." That is not the way to do it. The process is helpful and the more we can extend it, the better.

Mr. Pickles: May I make a straightforward point? It is right to examine the 30 highest spenders because most money will probably go to them, but they are likely to run a fairly decent show. Which authorities are not up to scratch or do not have the necessary? Would the Minister care to characterise them, but not in political terms? What kind of authority are they?

Mr. Rooker: The 30 biggest spenders come mainly from the 32 metropolitan districts, so we have probably covered most of those. A point came to me when I was asked to consider which authorities would be the next 30 to be examined. These programmes are planned well in advance and I specifically asked whether there were pockets of district councils that were small in terms of local government but had a preponderance of housing tax benefit and council tax benefit claimants and were a bit different from the average; or whether there was an authority that we had not heard about for a long time, perhaps because someone had not sent forms in; or whether there was an authority that was not involved in Royal Mail "do not redirect". I wanted to consider those factors, so the next 30 are a real mixed bag. There is no set pattern, but some of those thoughts went into the programme.

Perhaps we should have a look at some authorities: we may not have heard from them for a bit, but that does not necessarily mean that everything is okay. I certainly hope that when we have considered the top 30 and the next 30, along with those that have already been examined, we shall have a good picture of the local authority performance for the rest of the country. There are lessons that we can hope to roll out in the rest of local government.

May I touch on the point about cost, which is a fair one? I came across it in my previous role at the Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food. Local authorities are basically the enforcing authority in terms of food safety, and court costs can be horrendous. A small local authority in the north of England told us that a case would cost £250,000, but all the evidence suggested that it was important for it to go to court. It rightly claimed that there was unfairness, since a bigger authority would have the resources to take the case on and more lawyers would be available.

Authorities think that that on-cost might arise, but we have provided £200,000 as a pilot for my Department's lawyers to undertake housing benefit prosecutions and to develop longer-term options to encourage local authorities to pursue prosecutions. If a change is to be made, undertaking a pilot is always worth while. The pilot started in November 1998—a similar one began in Scotland in June 1999—and was available to 144 local authorities. It has been extended, partly because we have not used much of the resource that we offered to local authorities. I am not here to complain about why it has not been taken up, but I assure hon. Members that the figure I saw for what we were to spend was horrendous—it was only £200,000 to start with—so we have extended the pilot, because we want to learn from it. Unless it is decent, we will not learn lessons for the future. Although access to legal services is one aspect, some local authorities lack training in bringing prosecutions because of the absence of a formal prosecutions policy.

We have built in extra payments to the existing weekly benefit savings scheme for local authorities that have prosecuted fraudulent claimants since April 1999. Many of us see sentences reported in the press every day of the week and think, "How on earth can they do that?" However, "they" are the courts—not the House, not the Government and not the local authorities. Sentencing is the role of the magistrates and the judges in the courts. We give them the maximums, but it is their job to set the sentences. Benefit fraud cases that appear in the papers occasionally cross my desk. Ministers are warned in advance so that they do not get a big shock, and I sometimes see the result later on. I had a couple on my desk this week and the amount of fraud was the same in both. The circumstances, however, must have been entirely different, because the sentences were so far apart that they could have been on separate planets. Nevertheless, that was the judgment of those who had all the evidence. I, as a Minister, did not have all the evidence. In any event, we are co-operating with local authorities as much as we can.

The verification framework was originally developed with the full input of local authorities. Someone—I think it was the hon. Member for Basingstoke—mentioned the London fraud investigation. That was a joint local authority/DSS initiative designed to tackle organised fraud, which was ended owing to serious doubts about its effectiveness.

The hon. Member for Northavon asked about the ONE project, in the context of Scampion and the common claim form. It is ludicrous that there should be more than 100 different designs for housing benefit application forms. I did not know that that applied to claims for benefit, other than national benefits; it had never crossed my mind. We have issued guidance within the verification framework and in the benefit fraud inspection report, but we are considering the overall programme in the context of the ONE project, with the aim of providing a single gateway for all state benefits. We have schemes operating throughout the country, and they have important implications.

As hon. Members will know, we recently announced, in the context of the working age client group, what is in effect a merger between a large part of the Benefits Agency with the Employment Service. That is a major change in the machinery of government, announced by the Prime Minister less than a fortnight ago. It will mean that everyone dealing with the Government will be in one place, and it will enable us to ensure that people do not miss out on their benefits and are aware of opportunities of which they are not always aware when they make claims.

Mr. Pickles: Last month, I heard the Minister refer to the lack of stigma attaching to claims for housing benefit and council tax rebate. How, then, can he explain the fact that claims for those two benefits effectively separate clients with the ONE project?

Mr. Rooker: I cannot, but the question is valid. Indeed, on Monday I drew attention to the paradox inherent in the fact that people were claiming housing benefit and council tax rebate but not claiming income support—all three being means-tested. I suggested that there should be a more friendly delivery service at the local neighbourhood office for people who did not want to go to "the social" or the Benefits Agency.

The solution to the pensions problem is to provide a free-standing, separate, brand new agency, or mini-Ministry. Planning for that has begun within the last few days, and it was announced within the last month. It will provide a one-stop shop for people wishing to discuss anything to do with pensions. It will be central, but there will be local access throughout the country. It will not involve uniformity, and it certainly will not involve the Benefits Agency.

This is probably one of the biggest changes ever to be made in the machinery of government. The jobs of tens of thousands of civil servants will be involved. Extracting the Employment Service and the Benefits Agency from the general system, enabling them to deal with a specific client group, is almost like planning a new Government Department. It will not be a five-minute job; it will take several years.

Welding that with the ONE project, and dealing with housing benefit, council tax rebates and so forth, will be part of the agenda, and that means getting it right. We must not exacerbate the fraud problem by accident. Cutting out the problem in one area might open gateways for organised crime, as opposed to one-offs. We must root out error as well as fraud, because an error may later become a fraud. For instance, someone might discover an error and say nothing about it. Our central task in regard to housing and other benefits is to ensure that the benefit is right at the outset, and goes to the right person. That should be axiomatic, but the system has been such that it has not been possible.

Three years ago, when we came to office, we discovered that an horrendous number of income support payments had been wrong to start with. I do not want to initiate a debate about that; I merely say that we chopped the number by half, and will therefore be able to save £1 billion over the life of the current Parliament. I am not saying that that constituted fraud. The systems, the procedures and the training were wrong, and there was not the necessary challenge to ensure that benefits were paid to the right people. The new system will provide all the advantages, and none of the disadvantages.

I hope that I have given hon. Members some idea of where we are going. I cannot tell them all that they would like to know—for instance, how much fraud is going on. It is impossible to obtain a positive figure, by definition, although the statistics are likely to remain the same. Overall benefit fraud currently amounts to between £2 billion and £5 billion; housing benefit fraud amounts to about £800 million, which apparently is 7 per cent. of the total. Those figures are too high, and we must get them down, but there is no single magic solution: we must work on a series of fronts.

I know that I have my little dig occasionally, but I have tried—and we must continue to try—to operate on a consensual basis. That is in everyone's interest. If we do not do this, the public whose money is being spent will lose confidence in the benefits system, which will undermine the system. Rooting out fraud is in the interests of all, especially those who pay for the system in the first place.

Mr. Deputy Speaker (Mr. John McWilliam): Order. Will hon. Members not wishing to stay for the next debate please leave quietly, so that we can have a nice early start?

Disability Living Allowance

12.27 pm

Mr. Bill Rammell (Harlow): I welcome the opportunity to discuss the appalling experience of my constituent Mrs. Susan Cole, and what her dreadful ordeal has taught me about the need to reform the backdating of disability living allowance. Let me begin by saying that this is not part of a general whinge about the Government not doing enough for disabled people. I do not believe that to be the case; indeed, throughout the current Parliament I have fully supported the Government's strategy of providing work for those who can work, and security for those who cannot.

The new deal for disabled people is beginning to work in my constituency. The disabled persons tax credit, providing a guaranteed minimum income of £155 a week for a single disabled person who moves from benefit to full-time work on the national minimum wage, is also beginning to help disabled people in my constituency to return to work. The Government rightly made a tough decision in the Welfare Reform and Pensions Act 1999 to means-test incapacity benefit. I think that that measure was justified, in that its aim was to generate significant increases in the incomes of the disabled people most in need. For example, there has been an increase of up to £26 per week for severely disabled young people who become disabled early in life.

We are reforming pensions, in order to provide contributions for those who care for disabled people and therefore cannot make contributions throughout their working lives. I have long been concerned about that issue, and I consider the reform to be a significant step. I am also pleased that, during the current Parliament, spending on sickness and disability benefits will increase by more than £2 billion as the Government meet rising demands and do more for those in the greatest need.

I consider that to be a record of real achievement. I am not saying that the Government have got it wrong on disability benefit in general terms; far from it. I think we are beginning to bring hope, support and opportunity where previously there was none. However, I think that, on the specific issue of backdating of disability living allowance, we are simply continuing with the rules that we inherited from the last Conservative Government, and I strongly believe that we should think again.

I should like to deal with one aspect of Susan Cole's experience that highlights the need for change. Prior to 12 July 1996, Mrs. Cole had worked all her adult life, although she had for 15 years suffered from colitis. Anyone who has suffered from colitis or knows anyone who has suffered from it knows that it is a very debilitating condition. Because of the severity of her condition, Mrs. Cole sought a private medical consultation at the private Rivers hospital, in Sawbridgeworth, near my constituency of Harlow.

During the examination, without warning, the consultant performed a bowel biopsy which caused Mrs. Cole extreme pain. Although the consultant reassured her that that was routine, only two hours after the consultation, Mrs. Cole found herself suffering from severe rectal bleeding. Later that day, she was admitted to the national health service Princess Alexandra hospital, in my constituency of Harlow, where she was put on a drip and detained in hospital for 10 days. The length of that stay is a clear indication of the severity of her condition. The significant point of the story is that, towards the end of her stay in hospital, she started suffering from the symptoms of post-traumatic stress disorder—severe depression, fear, flashbacks and extreme anxiety and insecurity.

Mrs. Cole was discharged from hospital, and, very shortly afterwards, because of her symptoms and experience, was advised to claim incapacity benefit. However, despite the severity of her condition, no one at the Benefits Agency suggested that she should claim disability living allowance. One month after her stay in hospital, her general practitioner suggested that she may be suffering from post-traumatic stress disorder. That suspicion was finally confirmed in November 1997. Both before and after that date, however, over a period of three or more years, Mrs. Cole has suffered from enormous stress and anxiety and from other major problems. She has had to be admitted to hospital, occasionally for up to seven days, suffering from extreme anxiety and stress.

I think that it is incontestable that, in the whole of that period, and certainly since November 1997, Mrs. Cole should have been eligible for disability living allowance. Throughout that period, she was regularly in contact with the Benefits Agency office and regularly spoke to the agency's staff, who were well aware of her condition. When she had her first six-month renewal for incapacity benefit, because she was—to put it bluntly—in such a state, she sent some press cuttings on her ordeal at the private hospital. However, still no one at the Benefits Agency suggested that she might claim disability living allowance.

Finally, in August 1999, Mrs. Cole rang the Benefits Agency office on a different issue, to inquire about her sister's eligibility for incapacity benefit—her sister is suffering from cancer—and used her own claim as a reference point. The person at the Benefits Agency office whom she spoke to finally asked her why she was not claiming disability living allowance. The net result was that she did submit a claim successfully, and she has been successfully claiming ever since.

The crucial point is that that occurred three years after she had started claiming incapacity benefit. She had at least five renewals for incapacity benefit, and numerous discussions with Benefits Agency staff. Although it was at the very least arguable that she had been entitled to claim disability living allowance, not once in that three-year period, until August 1999, did anyone suggest that she should be claiming DLA.

It is also interesting that, in January 2000, when I took up the issue with the Benefits Agency—I have evidence of this in writing—the agency was able to check its records to assure me that there was no evidence that Mrs. Cole had made any inquiries about any other benefits to which she may have been entitled. Therefore, the agency's systems were clearly very rigorous and detailed. The agency could check to ensure that Mrs. Cole had not inquired about claiming, but it could not tell me why no one at the agency had told her about her possible eligibility for DLA, although she was clearly entitled to it.

One might ask why, for example, anyone who is in receipt of incapacity benefit does not automatically receive a leaflet on disability living allowance, informing him or her of the possibility and chance of being able to uptake that benefit.

Nevertheless, from August 1999, Mrs. Cole started claiming DLA—despite all the evidence showing that she had been eligible to receive it significantly before that date. However, according to a very tight set of criteria, backdating of DLA is allowed to a maximum of six weeks. Mrs. Cole could therefore not receive benefit backdated beyond that date. Those are the rules that we inherited from the Conservative Government.

I have pursued the issue in detailed correspondence with the Minister, and his responses have been very helpful and detailed in explaining the current system. However, it is intriguing that some of the arguments used by the Department are the same as those used by the previous Government. The first argument is that the onus is on the claimant to claim at the appropriate time. That argument was the central thrust of some of the changes introduced by the previous Government. My first response to that point is to ask why. If it can be genuinely proven that one was eligible from a prior date, but that one was simply not aware of eligibility—as opposed to choosing not to claim—there is a strong argument in principle for backdating.

The second argument against backdating in deserving cases is that it would be difficult to operate fairly. However, that is exactly what we do—on a much wider basis, and with a much longer period of backdating—in, for example, council tax benefit and housing benefit. As the Minister will know better than I, backdating may be allowed if "good cause" can be demonstrated. "Good cause" may be based on facts that, having regard to all the circumstances, including the claimant's state of health, would probably have caused a reasonable person not to claim at the time that they should have claimed. In such circumstances, based on that "good cause", one backdating—for up to 12 months—is allowed.

I contend that Mrs. Cole's state of health, with post-traumatic stress disorder, was the very specific reason why she was not aware of her eligibility to claim DLA. For council tax benefit and housing benefit, that one reason would have been sufficient justification to backdate for up to 12 months. If that is sufficiently good cause for backdating those benefits, why is it not good enough for backdating DLA?

The final argument made against backdating DLA is, according to correspondence, a straightforward rule against doing so, on the basis that > this has been regarded as the most equitable in all the circumstances.

"Equitable" means reasonable and fair. I do not think that it is reasonable and fair to deny all retrospective claims regardless of circumstances and merit—both legitimate and illegitimate—rather than conducting the necessary debate on how we should widen both the objective criteria for, and the length of, backdating. That is all that I am asking for. I am not arguing for a free for all in which any claim can be backdated if a reasonable case is made, requiring the Benefits Agency then to make a discretionary judgment. Such a system would be arbitrary, difficult to administer and, in many senses, unfair. I acknowledge that it would also be an open-ended commitment on public expenditure—which I know that not only the Treasury, but any reasonable person charged with the responsibility of managing public finances, would not wear.

I am arguing, however, that further legitimate objective criteria could be established to justify backdating. We can debate what those criteria might be. I would certainly argue that they should include written documentary evidence of a condition at a particular time, and a sworn statement from a doctor that a condition existed at a particular time, allied with the type of "good cause" reason why a claim was not made at that time. Those criteria apply in housing benefit and council tax benefit claims.

I would also certainly argue that, as with those benefits, backdating should be available for up to 12 months. I am not arguing for indefinite backdating, which clearly would be an open door to massive claims. However, a 12-month period would be reasonable.

There is a basic unfairness. I recognise that eventually it all comes down to money. I long ago became a financial realist. I know that there is only a certain sum of money allocated to the Department of Social Security and the benefits budget and if there is a huge increase in backdating we will have to limit the overall increase in benefits, spreading the money more thinly.

However, we need a specific change on the backdating of DLA compared with other benefits, because the take-up of DLA is so low. A low take-up means several things, particularly that people are not aware of their eligibility. Mrs. Cole's experience has certainly demonstrated that. On top of that lack of awareness, which might reasonably prevent people from claiming in time, DLA has the tightest backdating rules of almost any benefit. To underline that point, let us consider the evidence on take-up among the eligible population for various benefits: for income support, the figure is 70 to 80 per cent.; for housing benefit it is around 90 per cent; for jobseeker's allowance it is 70 to 80 per cent; for family credit it is 70 to 80 per cent. and we hope that the working families tax credit that replaces it will have an even higher take-up. However, only 30 to 50 per cent. of the eligible population take up the care component of disability living allowance and the figure for the mobility component is 50 to 70 per cent. Those figures come from a recent answer from the Minister in the Lords.

A lack of awareness restricts take-up. We are penalising people by not allowing backdating if they do not find out that they are eligible. In a sense, it is a double whammy and it is a serious problem. The case of my constituent has highlighted the unfairness of the current backdating rules. Susan Cole was eligible, but she did not know it. She was traumatised because of her condition and the system did not help her as it should have done. Her case demonstrates the need for change. I hope that my hon. Friend the Minister will consider my arguments and will review the backdating of DLA, focusing specifically on how we can widen the eligibility and increase the period of backdating.

12.42 pm

The Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for Social Security (Mr. Hugh Bayley): I congratulate my hon. Friend the Member for Harlow (Mr. Rammell) on securing this debate on an important issue and making such an exemplary case on behalf of his constituent and a more general case on the need to look again at the backdating of disability living allowance and its sister benefit, attendance allowance.

[Mr. Hugh Bayley]

I pay tribute to the enormous support that my hon. Friend gave to the range of improvements to disability benefits that the Government have been able to introduce, including the introduction of the disabled persons tax credit, the extension of the DLA higher rate mobility component to younger children aged three and four and the extension of incapacity benefit to people who are born disabled or are disabled so severely early in life that they are never able to work. Those important reforms are available to many people.

I also extend my sympathies to Mrs. Cole, who clearly suffered a terrible experience in 1996, when she went for a routine procedure at a private hospital. She claimed, and was awarded, incapacity benefit in 1996 and later, in 1999, she claimed disability living allowance and was awarded the lower rate mobility component. That award was made in respect of mobility needs arising from her experience in the hospital three years before. My hon. Friend argued powerfully that the symptoms arose from post-traumatic stress disorder, which she suffered as a result of the procedure.

Disability living allowance is not awarded because of particular symptoms or the existence of a particular disability or disease. It is awarded in respect of a disabled person's care needs or their mobility needs—the need for assistance with getting out and about. It is awarded because of a consequence of a disability rather than because of the disability itself.

Mr. Rammell: I wholly accept that point. I was trying to show that the post-traumatic stress disorder led to Mrs. Cole being unable to look for benefits or be aware of them. That is what prevented her from claiming when she should have done.

Mr. Bayley: I understand my hon. Friend's point. I shall refer to it later. As he has rightly pointed out, there are good cause procedures for some benefits. If someone can show good cause for not applying for the benefit earlier, they may get up to three months' backdating. A health problem that makes it difficult to apply is one such good reason.

I should explain a little more about the background to the benefit. Different people may be affected to a different extent by the same disability of the same severity. The amount of care or help with mobility that someone has as a result of a particular disease or disability may increase or decrease over time. The fact that someone has a particular mobility need in August 1999 does not necessarily establish that they had similar needs at an earlier date.

Mrs. Cole claimed disability living allowance on 2 August 1999. She was notified on 23 September that she had been awarded the benefit, but she asked for backdating. The rules on DLA and attendance allowance are clear. Unlike other benefits, they cannot be backdated. Under the present rules, the earliest date on which a claim can be paid is the date on which an inquiry was made at the Benefits Agency about the benefit. In this case, the relevant date is 2 August.

Decisions are made by adjudication officers—or, since October of last year, by decision makers in the Benefits Agency. Ministers cannot interfere in the individual decision any more than they can interfere in the decision of a court or any other judicial or quasi-judicial body. It appears that the rules were correctly applied in this case. My hon. Friend is asking whether the rules are appropriate and whether the Government should re-examine them.

One of Mrs. Cole's key complaints is that she did not know earlier than August of last year that she could claim disability living allowance. One of the fundamental rules of the benefit system is that the claimant has a responsibility to claim. My hon. Friend asked the Government to think about that. I shall think about it, but the basic reason for the rule is that the person claiming the benefit is the only one who knows about their needs—their medical or care needs if they are a disabled person, or their financial needs if they are claiming an income-related benefit. The Benefits Agency does not and cannot hold that knowledge, so it cannot have the ultimate responsibility to claim.

In a letter to me in February this year, my hon. Friend said that whether somebody knew of a benefit ought to be immaterial to a decision on whether they are entitled to it. I cannot agree with that. Only the claimant can know about their likely entitlement. The Benefits Agency does not have that knowledge.

However, I strongly agree with my hon. Friend that the Benefits Agency has a responsibility to inform the public of the existence of benefits, and to inform people how to claim them. He made a strong point about the low take-up of DLA: we ought to be able to do better with regard to take-up of DLA and attendance allowance.

We take seriously the requirement to inform the public, and spend more than £10 million a year on leaflets and posters. They are placed in post offices, doctors' surgeries and other appropriate places to try to ensure that people have the information that will enable them to decide whether they have a prima facie case and whether they should put in a claim.

My hon. Friend asked why the Benefits Agency does not send a leaflet to all those claiming incapacity benefit to advise them that they may be entitled to disability living allowance. In fact, it does: I have a copy of the claim pack used in 1996, when Mrs. Cole made her claim for incapacity benefit. The pack has changed slightly since then, but that does not affect the point that I want to make.

The claim pack contains a leaflet entitled "Notes About Incapacity Benefit", which contains advice about other benefits. The first of the other benefits mentioned in the section headed "Other help" is disability living allowance. It states that DLA is a > Social Security benefit for people with an illness of disability for people who need . . . help with getting around or . . . help with personal care or . . . help with both of these.

>
> If you want to find out more about this, get leaflet DS 704 Disability Living Allowance—you could benefit from any Social Security office.

I do not think that it is enough for the Benefits Agency to say that it need do nothing else because that information is in the claim pack, but I hope that I have answered my hon. Friend's point. The wording has been amended slightly since 1996, but the information is still prominent.

My hon. Friend asked why we do not invite all people who claim incapacity benefit also to put in a claim for disability living allowance. I think that that would be a mistake. Only one third of people in receipt of incapacity benefit also receive DLA. The entitlement conditions are different, and it is not immediately obvious to people in a Benefits Agency office that a person entitled to one benefit should be entitled to the other.

Both benefits are, of course, awarded in relation to a medical condition, but they have different purposes and tests of entitlement. Therefore, entitlement to one does not necessarily mean entitlement to the other. If everyone claiming IB were invited to claim DLA, two thirds of those so invited probably would not be entitled to it.

As my hon. Friend knows, the Benefits Agency already experiences considerable difficulty in processing the volume of DLA claims. We want to encourage more claims from people likely to be entitled to the benefit, to ensure that the low take-up rate is raised, but we do not want to gum up the works with a lot of claims from people who are not entitled.

We therefore need to focus our publicity very carefully. We are introducing a number of new measures that I think will help with the problem identified by my hon. Friend. For example, we are piloting a new claims service for benefits for people of working age called "The ONE Service". It will bring together the work of the employment service and of the Benefits Agency. As a result, people claiming any working-age benefit, including incapacity benefit, will get counselling and advice about training and searching for available jobs, given that a million people on incapacity benefit say that they would like to work.

In addition, the new service will give advice about the full range of benefits, including DLA. That was not the case in 1996, before the general election, when Mrs. Cole applied for incapacity benefit. Had the new system been in place then, she would have been advised, in a one-to-one interview with a personal adviser, that other benefits were available. I hope that that will help to avoid unfortunate circumstances such as those that my hon. Friend has brought to the attention of the House.

A benefits inquiry line—on 0800 88 22 00—has also been established, and is a source of advice for thousands of people every day. In addition, we publish a wide range of leaflets and posters.

The Department has been working with a range of bodies representing disabled people to examine how to improve the gateway to disability living allowance. That working group of voluntary bodies has brought forward proposals for new tests of eligibility that it calls "Activities of Managing Life". In some ways, the tests are closer to those used in the personal capability assessment, which is the test of entitlement to incapacity benefit.

The proposed tests are not the same as the present IB entitlement tests, so it would not be possible for a person to undergo a single examination. However, they may facilitate better co-ordination of the benefits in future. I hope that we will be able to test the AML tests in small-scale pilot studies later this year, but any change would have to be fully debated in Parliament as it would require primary legislation.

Finally, we will be piloting shortly an exercise called "Keeping in Touch", under which officials from the Benefits Agency will contact people on incapacity benefit periodically to review their entitlement to that benefit, and to others. That is an attempt to improve take-up and the accuracy of the benefits being paid.

In the few minutes remaining, I want to talk about the problems that the Government would face if we were to allow DLA to be backdated as are some other benefits. DLA is already the most complicated benefit of all, and it is also the most subjective. That is why so many applications for it are turned down.

For jobseeker's allowance, for example, it is fairly simple to determine whether a person is in work or not. Similarly, it is fairly easy to determine a person's income or level of savings when deciding a claim for income support. However, determining how much help a person needs, by day or by night, to cope with a disabling condition or a chronic illness is a matter of subjective judgment by a doctor.

A determination on DLA requires judgments from a number of doctors. Evidence will be submitted by a person's general practitioner, and also probably by a specialist. In certain cases, the Department's doctors will also submit evidence, and the decision will be made accordingly. However, it is hard for the person making the decision always to make the right one. We are trying to improve that, and to get decisions right first time, but nevertheless a high rate of decisions are being overturned on appeal—usually because new evidence is submitted at that stage.

It is hard to get such decisions right where there is contemporary medical evidence. It would be even harder if a doctor's feelings about a person's care needs six months or a year before were sought. Because of the difficulty in getting accurate evidence that would be an appropriate guide to decision making, the backdating for DLA that my hon. Friend suggests has never been considered possible.

Some conditions make it easier to make assumptions about past needs. For example, a rule in disability living allowance states that double amputees qualify for the higher rate mobility component without having to demonstrate mobility needs. For a person who underwent a double amputation a year before making a DLA claim, the prima facie case is that, had that person applied earlier, he or she would have been entitled to DLA.

However, that is not true for all conditions. For example, it would be extremely difficult in relation to mental health conditions—

Mr. Rammell: I accept that the matter is extremely difficult, but should not the Government continue to consult—with people from the medical profession, and others—to see whether it would be possible to allow a limited extra backdating in accordance with a certain set of objective criteria? I am asking only that we keep looking at the problem.

Mr. Bayley: I most certainly will keep looking at it. Some of the disability organisations already accuse us of unfairness, in that an amputee will automatically be entitled to DLA, but a person with a sensory disability, say, is much less likely to qualify.

[Mr. Bayley]

I shall explore some other connected issues in correspondence with my hon. Friend. He has raised some very important matters, which have given the Government reason to pause. We will stop and think about what he has said, and I will reflect on his proposals with my officials. I shall write to my hon. Friend with a more detailed response.

Volunteering and Time Banks

1 pm

Mr. Edward Davey (Kingston and Surbiton): The reason for this debate is to focus on the importance of volunteering and the voluntary sector and to provide some new thinking, in particular on time banks and the role that they can play not merely in promoting volunteering and assisting the voluntary, public and private sectors, but in rebuilding our communities.

There are a variety of volunteers and volunteering tasks, from the scouts, guides, girls and boys brigades, to hospital friends and those who go into schools to help children to read. I am sure that the Minister of State, the right hon. Member for Brent, South (Mr. Boateng), will agree that the volunteers in his constituency are as valuable to its life and vibrancy as volunteers are to mine. We need to celebrate them.

The borough of Kingston is blessed with volunteers—local organisations and community groups totalling more than 300. I take this opportunity to thank everyone who is involved with all those organisations because they have played such a key role in the royal borough. They are key in our area because, as the Minister will probably not be surprised to hear, we suffer from some underfunding. We are seen as a leafy borough. That means that such groups often struggle for funding, both from the local authority and the national lottery. We do not get our share of national lottery funding in Kingston, Mr. McWilliam, and therefore many of our groups struggle.

An umbrella body, Kingston Voluntary Action, tries to pull the groups together to assist them to develop. Unfortunately, it is strapped for cash, too. It is a shame that a certain political party in Kingston—the local Conservatives, who have a minority administration on Kingston council—has tried to cut the budgets of those struggling organisations. This year, it proposed a cut of £56,000. The Minister will probably be pleased to know that the Liberal Democrats, working with the Labour group on Kingston council, managed to restore those cuts and those much-needed funds for our voluntary groups.

Kingston churches are a strong source of volunteering. Kingston Churches Action on Homelessness plays a vital role in tackling our severe housing problems.

A superb network of people work for the local citizens advice bureau. I could not do my job as a Member of Parliament properly if I did not have the back-up and support of the citizens advice bureau throughout Kingston. It does a fabulous job and has helped me on many occasions with the casework that I undertake for my constituents.

There are many social volunteers in Kingston. In mental health, we have MIND—National Association for Mental Health—and mental aid projects that undertake fabulous work. We have groups that focus on volunteering and promoting volunteers for senior citizens. CARE is a group in Chessington that brings people together to shop for, and talk to, each other and for house visits, and it does a fabulous job. We also have Age Concern and Milaap, which provides meals for elderly people from ethnic groups. There are voluntary organisations to help families. Welcare looks after families with financial problems and lone parents who need support.

We also have charities and voluntary groups that focus on those with disabilities, such as Kingston Association for Disabled People and Scope; on individuals in distress, such as Kaleidoscope, which is a cutting-edge drugs project, Kingston Bereavement Service and Victim Support; and on the needs of ethnic minorities, such as Kingston Racial Equality Council and Refugee Action. We have many such groups and they do a fabulous job. The challenge for us as politicians is to ensure that we value those groups, give them the support that they deserve, and encourage them to grow, so that more people volunteer and support the groups and more groups start up.

Time banks could play a role, not merely through the traditional form of volunteering, but through a new complementary form. Time banks move away slightly from the traditional notion of volunteering because a degree of mutuality is involved. People pledge time, for example to support someone by visiting them, shopping for them or giving them a lift, and receive a credit in the time bank. They can draw down on that credit for help from someone else. That is not the usual form of volunteering. Sometimes, people expect something back.

Interestingly, Mr. McWilliam, when the time banks are set up—

Mr. Deputy Speaker (Mr. John McWilliam): Order. Personally, I do not mind that form of address—I have been Mr. McWilliam for a long time. However, the House has directed that, for the purposes of this Chamber, I am Mr. Deputy Speaker.

Mr. Davey: Thank you for bringing me to order, Mr. Deputy Speaker.

In practice, although the time banks are based on mutuality, people often do not claim the credits that they have gained—they give them to other people or back to the time bank. However, they like the notion of being given time credits because it is recognition for the work that they have done for others. While some people believe that the banks are a totally different form of voluntary action, I believe that they are a way of getting people to volunteer who would otherwise not do so. That is their significant role: they help to build communities.

For that reason, time banks have a profound message on how we approach many areas of public policy and how we rebuild our communities. Indeed, the guru of time banks, an American, Edgar Cahn, described them as:

> a tool for rebuilding community.

That is the core message that I would draw to the attention of the Chamber today.

Government policy on volunteering has been rather good. In recent weeks, the Prime Minister and the Chancellor of the Exchequer have made speeches supporting the voluntary sector. That is a welcome development. New Labour, unlike old Labour, does not appear to have any doubts about the important role that the sector plays, and that is welcome. The Prime Minister's speech at the Active Community convention and his idea for a paid day off for employees—he is to take the lead on that—are welcome, as is the millennium volunteers scheme and so forth.

Those ideas are important because it is clear from various surveys—the 1997 national survey on volunteering, for example—that volunteering is dropping off to some extent, in particular among young people. If we are to promote it and to ensure that it plays a central role, as it should, we must ensure that more people volunteer. That is where time banks have a role to play.

The time banks that I am describing are very different from the national time bank that was launched recently. That idea came from Comic Relief charity work. It is a good idea—a link between the BBC and the Government—getting people to visit a website and pledge their time to voluntary action and putting them in touch with people in their local community. I am talking about community-based, local time banks, which will be built, and participated in, by the people themselves.

I have given hon. Members a rough idea of what time banks are, but I will quote Edgar Cahn to give them a clearer notion. He described them as working like a blood bank or a baby sitting club. He wrote:

> Help a neighbour and then when you need it, a neighbour, most likely a different one, will help you.

The system is based on equality. One hour of help means one time dollar, whether the task is grocery shopping or making out a tax return. In the Edgar Cahn scheme, the credits are kept in individual accounts in a bank or personal computer. Credits and debits are tallied regularly. In America, some of the time banks provide monthly balance statements, to record the flow of good deeds.

Time is the unit of currency. The idea is similar to the local exchange trading systems—LETS schemes—but is simpler because it focuses simply on hours of time, which buy things that money cannot buy, such as friendship, neighbourliness, community and people helping each other.

It is time spent visiting people or on small tasks, small DIY, child care, caring for carers and listening to people. Therefore, it is a powerful currency. Time banks are a good way to organise our individual time for the collective good to make our community a better place. They can work on housing estates to do things that the council and housing associations would never do, or in general practitioner's practices—a prescription written for someone's time, what a marvellous idea. There can be time banks in a community centre, a prison, a school or a village. They can be turned to a variety of needs. They could be focused on the needs of education and training. People could provide courses for others as part of their volunteering. In schools, older pupils might mentor younger pupils and help them with their homework. Time banks can be applied to healthy living; they can break down the barriers between people and could, I believe, do marvellous things when it comes to the improvement of mental health. In addition, of course, time banks can be used to help the elderly.

Let me be clear on what is involved in making time banks work. They are very simple. A little technology helps, but basically they can be run by one person who would be paid as the broker of people's time. That person might need a small room, a telephone, a refurbished computer on which to run a small piece of software to manage the bank and produce the statements of the debits and credits that people have accrued over a month or a quarter. The person running the bank and some of those helping might need training on vetting and monitoring people, and on how to run the software. Getting time banks up and running requires only tiny amounts of money. Those tiny amounts of money can lever in huge amounts of time.

[Mr. Davey]

There are many working examples of the system in the United States. Seventeen inner-city schools in Chicago have a type of time bank system. Children mentoring others earn time dollars which they can use to buy refurbished computers. What is amazing is that not only are computers recycled, but the grades in the schools go up and bullying is reduced. We see a virtuous circle in schools that were previously failing.

Health insurance companies in Brooklyn use the system to improve health care facilities for their members. In Sentara hospital in Richmond, Virginia, the costs of dealing with asthma fell by 70 per cent. because of volunteers counselling people whose children and families were suffering from asthma.

I know of 11 projects in Britain that are using the time bank idea. There are two in Newcastle, and one was recently set up in Lewisham, in the Rushey Green doctors' practice, which is taking tremendous strides in promoting primary care. There is an hour bank in Peckham, a time swap in Watford and six fair share schemes in Gloucestershire, which promote a real sense of community in local villages and towns.

These projects are working now, providing huge social benefits. They are meeting some of the Government's key goals in rebuilding communities and putting people back to useful work. I think that they could be an adjunct to the new deal. There could be involvement with the sure start scheme. They could even be linked to the individual learning accounts.

I conclude by asking the Government to do five things to take time banks on to the next stage and build on the success that we have already seen. First, will the Minister be a strong advocate of time banks within the Government? I should like him to tell the Prime Minister about time banks.

Secondly, will the Minister ensure that people in the Government's policy units and task forces are told about the system so that they can study it in depth to see how it could be used to our benefit? Will the social exclusion unit, in particular, study time banks? Could time banks be built into the neighbourhood renewal strategy that is due to be published?

Thirdly, I should like the Minister to sort out a problem with the benefits system. In Newcastle, the social services departments are assessing time credits earned as income, and withdrawing benefit from those who earn them. I think that that is wrong, and I hope that the Minister will undertake to look into that problem.

Fourthly, can time banks play a proactive role in the Government's various modernisation programmes in education, health and crime?

Finally, the Minister will not be surprised to know that I want his assurance that he will ask the Chancellor to provide some money to promote time banks. I am not talking about huge amounts of money—billions of pounds, say—but a few million pounds. Only a tiny amount is required to establish and run time banks. If a few million pounds—a pot of money—could be found in the forthcoming comprehensive spending review, possibly through the social investment task force that the Chancellor announced recently, and local communities and organisations could make bids for money to set up their own time bank, that would greatly encourage this development.

I believe that the Government should be sympathetic to this idea. They have certainly made sympathetic noises so far. This surely is the third way that we have heard about from new Labour thinkers, and I hope that the Minister will embrace it.

1.15 pm

The Minister of State, Home Office (Mr. Paul Boateng): I am delighted to respond to the debate. The hon. Member for Kingston and Surbiton (Mr. Davey) is to be congratulated on choosing this topic. The voluntary sector and volunteering play a crucial part in the local infrastructure of our communities. The hon. Gentleman has shared with us a useful insight into the 300 or so groups in his constituency. As he took us on a Cook's tour of some of the highlights of the voluntary sector in his constituency, I was, with my hon. Friend the Member for High Peak (Mr. Levitt), reflecting on how each of us, in our own constituency, could engage in a similar exercise and how the community life of our constituencies and our work is enriched by the experience, wisdom and activity encapsulated by volunteers.

It made absolute sense, therefore, for the Government to take forward an agenda that the Prime Minister has initiated and described as supporting active communities and the Chancellor has characterised as an exhibition of civic patriotism. It made sense that we should take forward a body of work—across government but led by the Home Office and its active community unit—to highlight and deliver a step change in the contribution of volunteering to the development of strong and sustainable communities. Therefore, we are looking, in this year, to see an increase in the number of people who are giving of their time, efforts and energy to voluntary activities.

The latest survey available to us showed that 29 per cent. of adults gave time regularly to such activity at least once a month and that 74 per cent. of adults have taken part in informal voluntary activity during the past year. That effort is vital to the success of our communities, and we want to see it stepped up. However, it is not part of the Government's role to preach or moralise. We need to inspire, support and create a context in which it is possible to have that explosion of giving of which the Prime Minister has spoken.

Volunteering is at the heart of strong, successful communities, and we want it to stay that way. We recognise what individuals can contribute to their communities, as well as the potential that they can unlock in themselves through voluntary activity. The life skills, experience and sense of common purpose that the hon. Gentleman has described in his constituency are engendered by volunteering.

We need to bring together voluntary organisations, business, the media and others to ensure that an active community strategy takes root to rebuild and refurbish that sense of community throughout the country. That is part of the role of the working group led by my noble Friend Lord Warner. We need to base that strategy on the experience of groups such as the one in the constituency of the hon. Member for Kingston and Surbiton. I assure him that I shall feed back into that process the experience of the time bank in Kingston and Surbiton and the value that he attaches to it.

Mr. Davey: There is no time bank in Kingston and Surbiton, although I hope that we shall create one. The experience is in other areas; I know of 11 such groups.

Mr. Boateng: We shall draw on the experience to which the hon. Gentleman refers in order to ensure that, as the Government's strategy is developed and rolled out, it acknowledges the role of time banks. We have not lost sight of their contribution. Indeed, our funding aims to help about 120 time banks get started by March 2003. The hon. Gentleman's constituency may be a beneficiary of that funding. I shall be happy to ensure that the active community unit informs him of the opportunities for support that are available for the time bank group in his constituency.

We must ensure that communities are enabled and empowered to determine how best to meet their local needs through the voluntary sector. The last thing that we want to do is to apply top-down solutions to local community issues. One of the great strengths of the voluntary sector is its independence and its closeness to the grass roots.

Sometimes, Liberal Democrats make the error of suggesting that new Labour has only just discovered the voluntary sector and that the grass roots are the sole preserve of the Liberal Democrats. I have news for the hon. Gentleman. We were, and are, the grass roots in the communities that we represent. We represent a good handful more constituents than the Liberal Democrats—

Mr. Tom Levitt (High Peak): Ten times more.

Mr. Boateng: My hon. Friend is right.

We well understand the importance of grass-roots community activity; the voluntary sector is an strong manifestation of that. I shall highlight several strands of the work on volunteering in the wider community on which we are engaged. In 1999-2000, the active community unit distributed about £17.1 million in grants to the voluntary and community sectors. In the current financial year, there will be £17.5 million. Resources are being made available. The time bank concept is important.

The report of policy action team 9 on community self-help provided about 33 recommendations to increase community activity and informal mutual support in our poorer neighbourhoods. A key plank of the strategy is to raise such activity in all neighbourhoods, not only in deprived ones. We do not want a stereotypical view of the voluntary sector as largely the preserve of the leafy suburbs—as the hon. Gentleman characterises his constituency. The sector has an important role to play in rural areas and in urban centres. It takes different forms in different places, but its value everywhere is that it binds communities together and is a reflection of them.

The strategy on which we have embarked is important. It is not about the provision of quick-fix solutions—there are none. It is a strategy for active communities over a five or 10-year period. The building blocks are being put in place. The hon. Gentleman referred to several of the Government's initiatives—for older volunteers, for young people and for black and minority ethnic communities—and to the millennium volunteer scheme. Those projects are rooted in community experience. Furthermore, we work with employers in large, medium and small businesses, to stress the value to them of promoting and supporting volunteering in the local communities that they serve. We can undertake such work together; it is about partnership and about unlocking community resources. We must do all that we can to make it possible.

The hon. Gentleman referred to the initiatives announced by the Chancellor in the Budget. We have taken steps to ensure that the Inland Revenue does not regard the benefits of time banks as taxable. I note the concerns expressed by the hon. Gentleman about the Department of Social Security. The Department is already considering benefits issues. It will be important for local offices to reflect in their approach to volunteers and volunteering the support that the Government have shown for the activities of the voluntary sector. I shall speak to the Under-Secretary of State for Social Security, my hon. Friend the Member for Wallasey (Angela Eagle) about the problem in Newcastle to which the hon. Gentleman referred. We want to ensure that there is joined-up thinking in this matter.

It is a good news story, although we should not be complacent. We shall introduce new initiatives. My commitment to the hon. Gentleman is that we shall ensure that the example of good practice set by his community is taken on board. We shall celebrate together the work of the voluntary sector in building strong and effective communities. We have a real opportunity to mark the new millennium so that the spirit of the voluntary sector remains intact and is strengthened through what we do in the House and in Government but, above all, through what we do out there in the wider community.

NHS Staff (Remuneration)

1.29 pm

Ms Julia Drown (South Swindon): I am pleased to have the opportunity to raise the issue of pay for non-pay review body national health service staff. It is particularly appropriate that the issue should be discussed in the House today, when many Members are receiving visits from constituents as part of the lobby of Parliament by MSF—the Manufacturing Science and Finance Union—for fair pay for all NHS professionals.

By way of introduction, I should explain who is covered by the label "non-pay review body staff." When the NHS is mentioned, people mostly think of the important work of doctors and nurses, without which the NHS could not function. Those and many other direct patient clinical professions are covered by pay review bodies, which independently review salaries each year and make recommendations to Government, but in addition to the 600,000 staff who are covered by pay review bodies, there are another 300,000 to 400,000 staff without whom the NHS could not function.

Those staff are not covered by pay review bodies and do not receive the same recognition as is given to those who are traditionally seen as front-line staff. They include laboratory technicians who analyse specimens, pharmacists, hospital physicists, speech and language therapists, as well as ambulance, estates, domestic and administrative staff and others. All those people together make up the NHS. All of them are vital to the end product of quality patient care.

It is only through all those groups of people working together that we produce good-quality patient care, yet successive Governments have failed to regard all NHS staff as full members of one team, pulling together for patient care. Instead, staff have been divided into the categories of pay review and non-pay review bodies, leading the latter group to feel like second-class citizens in the NHS. There should be an end to that division, which has a particularly negative impact on pay and morale for those staff.

The debate follows recent ones led by the hon. Members for Twickenham (Dr. Cable) and for Winchester (Mr. Oaten), who raised issues on biomedical scientists and pathology services. However, I should like to address the issue of pay as it affects all non-pay review body staff: the pharmacists without whom we could not use medicines in the NHS, the estates and domestic staff who keep patients fed and housed in as good an environment as possible and, yes, those often maligned administrative staff in the NHS, without whom it could not function either.

Doctors and nurses together are the biggest group of staff in the NHS and do a fantastic job, but the NHS is much more than doctors and nurses. I hope that the debate goes some way towards recognising that.

The Government deserve congratulation on the work that they have already done on pay. They have recognised many of the problems. They have awarded significant pay rises to many staff in the NHS and are addressing many of the issues that lead to a decline in morale. In its pay strategy "Agenda for Change" the Government set out their vision for replacing the incredibly complex current pay system.

With the current system, suitcases would be needed to carry all the books covering the terms and conditions of staff. The Government want to replace that system with three national pay spines: one for doctors and dentists, one for staff currently covered by the nurses pay review body and one for other staff not covered by pay review bodies.

That simplification is welcome and must be the way forward, but the three pay spines still leave non-pay review body staff vulnerable to continuing to be left behind, with the consequent loss in recognition, pay and morale. I hope that we will hear from the Government today a guarantee that that will not happen.

The concerns of non-pay review body staff are real. Since 1984, pay increases for staff covered by PRBs have been around 30 per cent. higher than awards to non-pay review body staff.

That has left, even after this year's pay offer, a graduate trainee medical laboratory scientific officer starting work on £9,400, compared with a nurse starting on £14,400. The comparisons with graduate salaries outside the NHS are even starker, but it is not only graduates who receive low pay. Many in the NHS work tirelessly for patients, both in direct patient care and behind the scenes, for very low pay. The Government need to take action to ensure that all NHS staff feel supported and rewarded in their roles.

The current division into pay review body and non-pay review body staff demoralises staff in the second group. It adds to the bad feeling created under the previous Government. Under their proposals for private finance initiative schemes, staff were divided into core and non-core staff. The latter were offered out to private sector contractors, giving the staff affected a feeling that they were peripheral to the NHS, when they clearly were not.

Again, the Government are to be congratulated on the fact that, while getting on and building hospitals under the PFI to see what they can deliver for patients, they have found a way to ensure that future PFIs do not have to classify staff as either core or non-core staff in that divisive way. However, I urge the Government to go further.

Staff pay can be affected by whether the service that they provide is done in-house or by a private contractor. Although the Government say that doctors and nurses are safeguarded from being transferred to private contractors, the Minister of State, Department of Health, my hon. Friend the Member for Southampton, Itchen (Mr. Denham), tells me that the Government are not dogmatic when it comes to support services, and that pay and conditions for those staff could be set by private contractors, who would be able to take over contracts for support services where they can offer greater value to patients. That again sounds like one rule and one lot of pay and conditions for one lot of NHS staff, and another rule for another group of staff.

Someone once described the NHS to me as a perfect illustration of the British class system, where groups are divided into categories whose members ostensibly live and work in the same world, but which actually do much to ensure that the dividing lines between them remain in place. Doctors defend their separate dining rooms with the utmost vigour and porters do not feel that they can make suggestions for improvements to services because they will not be listened to. Those attitudes are changing, but they can still be found in parts of the NHS. It is only by changing those attitudes that we will maximise the benefits for patients.

I turn to some specifics of this year's and next year's pay rounds. Although the Government improved their original offer, the 3.25 per cent. award, with a pledge for next year of at least 0.5 per cent. above inflation, will not solve the problems of recruitment and retention for some groups of scientific and laboratory workers in particular.

I recognise that some of the worst paid staff benefited from much higher increases, but they affect only a small number of non-pay review body staff and still do not go far enough towards solving the significant recruitment and morale problems.

In my constituency of South Swindon, our hospital has 12 vacancies out of a complement of 50 lab staff. The resulting pressure on the remaining staff is unsustainable in the long term. The Government must therefore not allow pay awards for non-pay review body staff to fall further behind those of the review bodies.

Swindon is not unusual in that respect. The pressure in its labs exists in many other areas. That is why the MSF is lobbying Parliament today. It thinks that the proposed pay awards are inadequate and will not have a big enough impact on those problems. Those concerns are shared by many Members. There are 92 signatories to early-day motion 461 on the issue.

The Government must listen. A further deterioration in the situation must be prevented. In a sense, it seems unfair that, in three years, the Government are being asked to put right 18 years of the knocking down of public services by their Tory predecessors—it is unrealistic to ask for all the problems to be solved overnight, but the issue of low pay in particular for non-pay review body staff is a real one. There is a risk that, unless more can be done, the Government will alienate a loyal and long-serving staff from the NHS for good, with the consequent reduction in quality services for patients.

NHS staff who are not visible in the delivery of front-line care find it harder to attract media attention and to generate public sympathy for their cause. Their position is not as well understood. Subsequently, the pressure on Government to deliver change is considerably less, but pay awards should be decided on their own merits, not on staff's ability to command a high public profile, or to attract media attention. That is unlikely to be achieved if all NHS staff are not covered by the same pay review arrangements.

I recognise that the Government are working with the National Advisory Group for Scientists and Technicians to develop an employment environment that is attractive to and supportive of these staff, but that is a promise of jam tomorrow for them. Until more is delivered, many non-pay review body staff will not have the confidence that their needs will be met.

The recruitment and retention problems to which low pay contributes have serious implications in terms of costs to the NHS. Not only are vital services understaffed and overstretched, but an exorbitant amount is spent on agency staff. For example, a medical laboratory scientific officer at the top of the scale receives £360 a week, and a locum to fill a vacancy at that level costs £603 a week—a difference of about £13,000 a year. Such figures show that if a larger pay award were made to NHS staff, the NHS would have to rely less on agency staff, and that a larger award would be cheaper for the NHS than a lower one.

I know that in my constituency the spending on agency staff in laboratories is high, and hard-working NHS staff cannot understand why greater funds cannot go into recruiting and retaining NHS staff. They also find it ironic that while all UK staff have to be registered, overseas agency staff do not go through that process, so more is being spent on possibly less well-trained staff. It cannot make sense for so many trusts to be relying on agency staff to run labs when a better pay award would attract more NHS staff to the profession as trainees and full-time staff.

As the Government rightly point out when announcing pay awards, in the face of what sometimes seems like opposition by the Tories, there is not a straight trade-off between paying staff less and having more money for patient services. Of course there may be an element of that, but there is also a win-win element because paying staff fairly reaps huge benefits in increased commitment and less stress and sickness, and that leads to better patient services.

I have already mentioned the positive improvements to the pay system that the Government set out in "Agenda for Change". They state that > modern forms of health care rely on flexible teams of staff working across traditional skill boundaries.

That strengthens the argument for going further than the document outlines and creating a single pay spine and a single pay review body for all NHS staff, facilitating and encompassing that extra flexibility.

Progress on pay should be matched by progress on harmonisation of conditions of service; it is illogical to address one without the other. One example would be to reduce the working week of ancillary staff.

It is essential that avoidable divisions in the work force do not undermine the Government's vision for a united, modern NHS. Different pay arrangements for different groups of workers cannot achieve that as effectively. NHS staff should not be made to feel that some are more important than others and some more dispensable than others. Every cog, however small, is necessary to ensure that this huge machine works well. I remember Frank Dobson describing the NHS as an oil tanker that needed to be turned around. Well, it is the staff who will turn that tanker around, and they are doing so. However, unless they pull together we will not turn it around quickly. Staff should not be set one against the other so that they pull in different directions and fight among themselves.

In spite of the divisions in the pay structure, there are many examples of staff in the NHS working well together in teams, and it is those smooth-running teams that produce the best patient care. However, to get those teams working better and to replicate that work throughout the NHS, we need an end to the divisive pay structure in the NHS.

Ultimately the aim is to deliver high-quality patient care, and that is what the Government want to achieve. Good progress has been made on NHS pay. The Labour Government are putting right many of the problems created by the Tories, and staff and unions recognise and welcome that. However, as negotiations for new pay levels draw to a conclusion in the coming months, it is essential that the Government demonstrate their commitment to the vital staff outside the scope of the pay review bodies.

[Ms Julia Drown]

We know that problems cannot be solved overnight, but we need to know what steps will be taken to tackle the problems of recruitment, retention, low morale and inadequate pay, now and in the future. One united system bringing together all the staff in the NHS would send out the clear message of admiration and respect that all NHS workers deserve.

Mr. Deputy Speaker (Mr. John McWilliam): Order. I did not want to break the hon. Lady's flow, but, before I call the Minister, I must point out that the former Secretary of State for Health should be referred to in this Chamber as the right hon. Member for Holborn and St. Pancras (Mr. Dobson).

Ms Drown: I apologise, Mr. Deputy Speaker.

1.44 pm

The Minister of State, Department of Health (Mr. John Denham): I congratulate my hon. Friend the Member for South Swindon (Ms Drown) on being successful in the ballot for this debate and on deciding to raise the matter of remuneration for non-review body staff in the NHS. As my hon. Friend said, this is a very important group of staff, numbering more than 300,000.

NHS staff whose pay is not determined by the doctors and dentists review body or the nurses review body are a diverse and wide-ranging group covering many different occupations. As my hon. Friend said, it is often too easy to give the impression that it is only doctors and nurses who run the NHS. Non-review body staff play a vital role in delivering high quality health care to patients.

The largest of those groups is administrative and clerical staff who provide essential secretarial and management support and look after medical records and computers. Ancillary workers including cooks, cleaners, porters and maintenance staff such as electricians are essential to the successful running of every hospital. Ambulance staff, including paramedics and those working in the control room, directly contribute to saving countless lives each year.

Clinical psychologists, speech and language therapists and health care pharmacists directly provide specialised patient care. NHS scientists and other scientific and technical staff make a crucial contribution to patient care through their work on diagnostic techniques and treatment, playing vital roles in the treatment of people with life-threatening conditions such as cancer and coronary heart disease. I, too, want to begin by emphasising the importance of the work done by those different staff groups, all of whom deserve fair and affordable pay awards.

As my hon. Friend recognised, we have made a strong commitment to all non-review body staff groups. For the first time in the history of the NHS, we have been able to guarantee above-inflation rises not just for one year, but for three years.

In January, we offered all non-review body staff an innovative above-inflation three-year deal that gives special help to the lowest paid. We have made some progress, at least, because from this year no adult worker in the NHS on a national contract will earn less than £4 an hour. That is the first longer-term deal of its kind in the public sector. I believe that it does give staff the security of real-terms increases for the whole of that period. Last year's increase has resulted in a real-terms increase of 1.4 per cent. We project that by the end of our three-year deal, pay increases will amount to at least 9.25 per cent. against projected inflation of 6.5 per cent.

Those figures should be compared with the increases awarded by the previous Government. During their last five years in office, rises ranged from below the rate of inflation to a meagre 0.4 per cent. above inflation.

In January, staff were offered increases of 3 per cent. or £250, whichever was greater, from April 1999, 3.25 per cent. or £300 from April 2000 and a minimum of the underlying rate of inflation plus 0.5 per cent. for next year. As a result some 75,000 of the lowest-paid staff working in the NHS will benefit, including porters, messengers, storekeepers and domestic staff. They will receive an average 3.2 per cent. in year 1 and 3.7 per cent. in year 2.

In addition, as part of the long-term deal, our pay offer for April 1999-2000 makes special provision for some of the scientific, professional and technical groups. Junior health care pharmacists received increases of up to 12 per cent. All scientists have been offered at least 3 per cent., and about half of all biomedical scientists—some 6,000 in the lower grades—have been offered 7 per cent. to address special recruitment problems.

Trainee biomedical scientists have been offered a particular deal, too. There are about 1,000 of them altogether, and around 100 at the bottom end of the scale have been offered 26 per cent., and we have offered the rest increases ranging from 7 to 22 per cent. by restructuring their pay scale. In addition, we have offered to increase London weighting by 13.5 per cent. to restore it to 1995 values.

I do think that that is a fair offer in the current circumstances. We needed to target funds where the need was demonstrably greatest—to address recruitment and retention problems that would have damaged patient care. There is a problem in recruiting staff at the bottom end of the biomedical scientist scale, including medical laboratory scientific officers and path lab staff. We recognised that, and have offered larger increases to staff in that part of the profession. That means that some pathology staff will be getting more than many review body staff; biomedical scientists are receiving a rise of up to 7 per cent., and trainees up to 26 per cent. That compares favourably with the 4.7 per cent. awarded to most nurses in 1999-2000.

The current position is that unions representing about 75 per cent. of non-review body staff have now accepted our offer. Advance letters instructing employers to implement the pay increases have now been issued for administrative, clerical, ancillary and ambulance staff. I look forward to the remaining groups being able to benefit from this long-awaited award in the near future.

The offers have been made within the context of the current pay system, and it is worth pointing out that that system allows considerable flexibility to address the needs of key groups of staff. There is, for instance, the provision within Whitley to restructure on-call and call-out payments to suit local service organisation. This and similar action has been taken by a number of NHS employers in order to pay staff more attractively to ensure that key services are provided when they are needed. One example that is local to my constituency is the Winchester and Eastleigh Healthcare Trust, where staff working in biochemistry and haematology may have their annual pay increased by £3,744 for providing on-call services twice a month.

More widely, there is also provision to offer local pay supplements of up to 30 per cent. in the London area and 20 per cent. elsewhere, specifically to address recruitment and retention issues where management considers that proven problems could be redressed by pay enhancement. That is one way of addressing the reliance on agency staff to which my hon. Friend referred.

I have set out the current offer and the flexibility that exists, but everyone accepts the need to modernise the NHS pay system, which is outdated and has become a barrier to modernising working practices. Too often, services have to be organised around the barriers created by the pay system rather than around the needs of patients. My hon. Friend rightly spoke of the importance of teamwork in the NHS involving different professional and occupational groups and across traditional barriers.

As part of its modernisation, we intend to make a substantial investment in the NHS to enable services to be more patient-centred. Staff need to be encouraged to work effectively in fluid and flexible teams to provide seamless care. They need to break down professional demarcation lines and work in partnership across professional and other occupational groups.

The problem with the current pay system is that it reinforces the barriers and the inflexible ways of working that the current system promotes by tying staff incomes to ways of working that go against team working and patient-centred care. It is also frustrating for staff because it is not always clear to them how the responsibilities of their jobs and the competences that they develop are actually rewarded in their pay at present.

Over the next five years, the Government intend to modernise the care system—health and social care alike—from head to toe. Modernisation of the system is necessary to secure a lasting improvement in people's health and to tackle inequalities.

Hon. Members will be aware that last week's Budget announced substantial injections of funding into the NHS—an extra £1.4 billion for the NHS in England plus additional revenue from taxation on tobacco. Those extra resources represent a huge opportunity to modernise the NHS and improve patient care. We must not waste that opportunity. No one should be in any doubt about what the public expect us to do with the money. If we fail to produce improvements in patient care where they are most needed to tackle ill health and inequalities in health care, we will be judged to have failed to deliver the changes the public and NHS staff expect and deserve.

We need to make sure that we can continue to make fair and affordable pay offers, to address recruitment and retention and—fundamentally—to invest in a pay system which rewards new and better ways of working. That is why on 15 February last year we published "Agenda for Change", which outlines our proposals for modernising the NHS pay system. We want a new system that is based on efficiency, fairness, flexibility and partnership and gives all staff better career progression and fairer rewards for taking on extended roles, widening their skills and working in teams. We want to give all staff modern conditions of service. My hon. Friend mentioned working hours and other issues that will inevitably arise in negotiations.

We also want to provide a fair basis for pay rises in the security of a national pay system. That will entail substantial changes to the current system in which staff are often defined by a combination of their titles, their pay and how they are trained rather than by what they do for patients. It means changing the existing conditions of service, with their range of arcane allowances which too often distort working patterns.

Over the past year, we have had positive and constructive discussions with trade unions, NHS health professionals and NHS staff on the proposals set out in "Agenda for Change". I genuinely believe that we are working in a real partnership with all the recognised unions to make sure that the concerns of all staff groups are properly represented.

"Agenda for Change" proposes three pay spines for doctors and dentists, an expanded healthcare professional group and a single negotiating council for staff groups whose skills are attractive to employers outside the NHS. Although we propose different mechanisms for pay uplift for those three groups, it is essential—and it is recognised in the agreements that we have reached so far—that there should be a means to ensure that future pay increases on the three spines do not result in different rates of pay for jobs of equal value which could not be justified under the relevant legislation.

We also recognise that, for various reasons—often rooted in history—some smaller groups of highly qualified health professionals are outside the remit of the nursing pay review body. Those groups could well be included, although it is not intended that there should be any change to the fundamentally professional character of the coverage of the NPRB. As I have said in several debates over the past two or three months, it is too early in the negotiations to be specific about proposals for particular staff groups, but the matter is under discussion. I am confident that pay modernisation will bring benefits to all NHS staff, whether or not they are covered by a review body.

We have the opportunity to change the pay system for the better so that staff can be rewarded fairly for the work that they do rather than the title that they hold. We need the flexibility to design jobs within the security of a national pay system, to offer better career progression and modern terms and conditions for all staff and crucially, to allow managers and staff to deliver the quality of services that everyone wants. A national system of job evaluation will allow creative approaches to job design to match exactly the redesigned care processes that are so important to patients. If our negotiations continue to be successful, I hope that we will have an agreed package by the summer so that we can move ahead to implement locally and nationally to an agreed time scale over the coming years.

[Mr. John Denham]

Although pay is important, it is not the only thing that matters to NHS staff. The quality of their working lives is also important. My hon. Friend mentioned people not being listened to and feeling that their views were not of value because they did not belong to the right profession or group of staff. She will know that, over the past year or so, we have undertaken an extensive exercise on staff participation within the NHS and I hope that we shall be able to publish a report and the Government's response to the staff participation proposals in the very near future.

We recognised from the outset that it is important that all staff in the NHS should have the ability to contribute their views about how services should be run and the right to expect those views to be listened to and taken seriously.

We are not prepared to leave good employment practice to chance. We are developing more supportive, flexible and family-friendly working practices; we are extending and improving investment in lifelong learning and professional development; we are tackling violence and racism in the workplace and we are insisting that employers make those changes happen by setting clear priorities and targets to improve employment practice.

My hon. Friend has raised some important issues, some of which we have been able to address in the offers that we have made recently and others which we shall need to address in the context of wider change, but I am sure that we shall continue to make progress.

Question put and agreed to.

Adjourned accordingly at Two o'clock.

Westminster Hall

Thursday 6 April 2000

[MR. MICHAEL LORD in the Chair]

NHS Direct

Motion made, and Question proposed, That the sitting be now adjourned.—[Ms Stuart.]

2.30 pm

The Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for Health (Ms Gisela Stuart): I am pleased to have this opportunity to mark the second birthday of NHS Direct and to share with hon. Members the Government's aims of improving health care delivery. People will look back on the past few weeks as a turning point in health care in this country. Arguably, it has been one of the most significant periods in the history of the national health service.

The service has faced enormous pressure and, sadly, some patients have not received the treatment that they deserve. That most have has gone largely unreported, and the tremendous efforts of NHS staff have sometimes been ill rewarded by those who are determined to pronounce the NHS past its sell-by date. My right hon. Friend the Prime Minister has made the historic declaration that, by managing the economy properly, we will be able to sustain increases in NHS funding that, in time, will bring the United Kingdom's spending up to the European Union average.

Mr. Philip Hammond (Runnymede and Weybridge): If I recall the Prime Minister's comments correctly, he said that if the Government managed the economy prudently, they would be able to bring NHS spending up to the European average as a percentage of gross domestic product within five years. However, the programme rolled out by the Chancellor of the Exchequer the week before last does not achieve that. Does the hon. Lady have any comment to make on that?

Ms Stuart: As a former Conservative Chancellor made clear in a previous health debate, we have clearly signalled the point at which we want to arrive. The Chancellor's statement was simply the first step.

Dr. Peter Brand (Isle of Wight): The Government signalled the point at which they want to arrive, but in fact there is no clarity about what that point is. Are we talking about a raw average of GDP expenditure in the European Union, or a weighted average?

Ms Stuart: I am reminded of the saying that there are lies, damned lies and statistics. We could spend the next three hours arguing the finer points of weighted and straightforward averages. We have not only given a commitment as to the point at which we want to arrive, but underpinned that commitment by announcing the largest ever cash injection into the NHS, which will provide sustainable development over the next three years at least. That is the important point.

Kali Mountford (Colne Valley): There has been an increase of 8.75 per cent. in expenditure in my constituency this year—a huge increase, well above expectations. What is important is that the money is spent wisely, to achieve the sustainable growth that is needed in the NHS.

Ms Stuart: That is one of the themes that I shall take up: it is not simply a question of the sums of money that go into the service, but of the price at which the money comes. That price is a combination of a change in the delivery of the service and modernisation.

That exchange about figures signifies the sad passing of the post-war consensus on health. The Conservative party has declared for private insurance at the expense of expanding the NHS.

Mr. Hammond: The hon. Lady would not expect me to let that comment pass without an intervention. My right hon. Friend the Leader of the Opposition took the trouble on Tuesday to go to Bournemouth, where he stated loudly and clearly that, despite the allegations of Labour Ministers, the next Conservative Government will not privatise the national health service, retreat to a core model of provision or introduce any form of compulsory private insurance. Will the Under-Secretary acknowledge that?

Ms Stuart: I am happy to acknowledge that, although the hon. Gentleman should take note of the extent to which nurses who were present at Bournemouth were reassured by his right hon. Friend's statement. I concur with the nurses' judgment.

We are in new territory. I believe that the principles of the NHS are right. Its health care service is delivered according to clinical need and it is publicly funded; it is not delivered according to contributions that have been made or to one's ability to pay. However, I am convinced that practices in the NHS have to change—the NHS needs modernisation. The public often assume that modernisation involves a reduction in services, but that is not always correct.

Our approach will change the way in which things are done, because standing still will kill the NHS. Over the past 50 years, the service reached the point at which it was responsive neither to changes in people's lives, nor to the way in which technology can allow progress to be made. We are now in a different ball-game—the public have different expectations, and there have been changes in demography and in the relevant technologies.

Investment plus reform is the key to achieving a sustainable NHS. In other words, the extra resources that my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister outlined for the health service have a price tag: more money means modernisation. People will not stand for anything less. If we poured in extra billions, but failed to meet the public's expectations for a modern NHS, we should run the risk of fatally wounding the public's support for a universal, tax-funded health service. The Government will not let that happen.

Our modernisation programmes have as their starting point people's aspirations for their own health. More than ever before, people place a high value on good health. We all want to know more about our health and, if we fall ill, we want services that are of the highest quality—fast, fair and convenient. That approach involves the reinvention of the NHS, what it does and the way in which it is run and organised. That is what we want to do. We want to modernise the service from top to bottom and to do so across the whole system of care, from primary care and prevention to secondary treatment.

[Ms Stuart]

We are putting in place a new and modern model of health service provision—the building blocks are now in place. One of the most significant and publicly visible building blocks is NHS Direct, which is at the forefront of our effort to modernise the NHS. The service is already transforming many people's experience of the NHS and extending health care into the home. It is a responsive, modern and new service that allows people to take responsibility for their health and empowers them to become more proactive partners in their health care.

We cannot move ahead simply by doing what was previously done, but doing it faster; we also need to do things differently, and the use of new technology by NHS Direct allows us to do that. We know from the 750,000 calls that have so far been received that the service has changed people's lives. A lovely example occurred at the Bedfordshire and Hertfordshire site. A 70-year-old lady, who had made her prospective daughter-in-law's wedding dress, was about to attend her son's wedding, but, just before she went to church, she slipped on the stairs at home and fell. As her son was going to the telephone to dial 999, he saw a sticker on the fridge showing the phone number of NHS Direct. He rang the number. Nurses talked him through the problem and assured him that his mother was not in immediate danger; they said that she could get medical attention after she had attended the wedding, which she did. She was able to attend her son's wedding: the service changed her life because it allowed her to take the appropriate decision.

Mr. Hammond: The Under-Secretary has recounted a fascinating anecdote, but will she provide something more than anecdotes to back up her assertion that NHS Direct has changed people's lives. Does she have some hard evidence to that effect? The debate today will revolve around the evidence that NHS Direct is working, not the aspirations for it.

Ms Stuart: I certainly shall. A quick-response service, NHS Direct has the ability to upgrade a call to make it a blue-light emergency call for an ambulance. That has happened on 24,000 occasions, so it has made a real difference. I shall say more about evaluation of the service later in my speech.

NHS Direct is an example of the seamless service that we want. At a recent seminar, a health service manager spoke about her experience when, in the course of one day, she had had to call both British Gas's 24-hour line about a broken boiler, and NHS Direct about her three-year-old son's earache. She said that both services sorted out the relevant problem quickly. More important is the fact that, on both occasions, her problem was taken seriously: the people who answered the phone were calm and in control, and they made it clear that it was their responsibility to navigate the complexitites of their internal service to enable her to reach the desired result. She had rung up and she was given the complete soluion. That is the sort of response we need.

NHS Direct is also helping to broaden the role of nurses and thereby encourage them to stay in the NHS. In particular, it has given disabled nurses and those who have had to stop working on the wards a new opportunity fully to utilise their clinical experience and expertise. We have worked in partnership with local trusts to recruit and retain staff within the NHS, and we recognise local hotspots. Flexible placement schemes enable nurses to rotate between NHS Direct and local accident and emergency departments or walk-in centres. Not only does that allow staff mobility, but it helps to maintain those nurses' wider clinical skills.

Dr. Brand: Of course it is good to give people employment opportunities. However, the use of nurses who are not fit to do a hands-on nursing job has been quoted many times by various Government spokesmen, so will the hon. Lady tell me what proportion of nurses employed by NHS Direct fit into that category?

Ms Stuart: At this point it is important to recognise that, while NHS Direct—

Dr. Brand: How many?

Ms Stuart: May I finish?

NHS Direct employs the full-time equivalent of 600 nurses. Depending on how we count them, there are between 250,000 and 300,000 nurses in the system, so NHS Direct accounts for only a small core at this stage. Even so, we must recognise that it is a new service that is just beginning to be rolled out. All the early signs tell us that what I have described is a trend, and it should not be mocked.

Dr. Brand: I do not mock it. We have been told that the service employs 600 nurses. How many of those nurses could not fulfil another nursing role because of disability? The claim is repeatedly made by Government spokesmen, but if they want to claim credit for an enlightened employment policy, they should provide evidence.

Ms Stuart: Although it would be easy simply to count the small number of nurses who have a disability, a number come back after having a baby—

Dr. Brand: Five, 10, 15?

Mr. Stuart: We can certainly go back and examine the figures, but what is important is that we recognise that the service has been rolling out for two years, having started from small beginnings. It is to go national at the end of the year, and we shall build on such trends and opportunities.

Mr. Hammond: I suspect that many of the few hon. Members in the Chamber sympathise with the Under-Secretary's aspirations for NHS Direct. However, we are concerned about the lack of hard evidence to support the Government's assertions about its achievements. We will have a sterile debate if the hon. Lady cannot back with figures her argument that it is a success.

The hon. Member for Isle of Wight (Dr. Brand) is right to ask for the numbers. They might be low. Do the Government have any numbers? When the Under-Secretary asserts that NHS Direct provides a means of employing disabled nurses, is she merely voicing an aspiration, or stating a hard fact?

Ms Stuart: Perhaps we would have a more fruitful debate if I could get on with my speech, which will cover quite a few points that have been raised.

Kali Mountford: Will my hon. Friend give way?

Ms Stuart: I shall briefly tackle the matter raised, then give way. Fewer than half the hon. Members in the Chamber attended the last Labour party conference, but some of them may have seen on television a quadriplegic nurse from Yorkshire—one of the first to be employed by NHS Direct—giving an extremely moving speech.

Mr. Hammond: So there is one.

Ms Stuart: No, there are more.

I shall say more about the Sheffield review later, as we are extremely keen that there should be independent evaluation.

Dr. Brand: There is no mention—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. This is a Chamber, not a Committee. Hon. Members may be tempted to make sedentary interventions, which can be helpful. However, it would help the Chair if they refrained from such behaviour and were a little more formal.

Ms Stuart: I promised to give way to my hon. Friend the Member for Colne Valley (Kali Mountford).

Kali Mountford: I cannot assist proceedings by providing figures, but I am interested to hear my hon. Friend's views on my visit to Wakefield NHS Direct. I did not count how many nurses working there had disabilities, but some told me that they had hurt their back lifting patients and could not continue in their former role. More importantly, however, four women there would not have returned to the NHS after having children had they not had the opportunity to work for NHS Direct. More regular and more certain working hours helped them to manage their family lives better. A goodly number of the nurses I met—there were about 40 in all—had come back into the service because NHS Direct provided a route back. We should welcome that.

Ms Stuart: I am grateful for my hon. Friend's contribution, which mirrors my own experience of visiting the sites.

I shall speak briefly about the nature of NHS Direct and how it has developed. The service was launched only two years ago. Initially, it covered only 3 per cent. of England, but it was extended last November to cover 40 per cent. of the population. Just before Christmas, the service covered 65 per cent. of the population. It has been extended at phenomenal speed, and we have been evaluating it continuously. As the service is rolled out, the evaluation ensures that it is always clinically safe, sustainable and growing at the right speed.

In many ways, the service has been allowed to develop organically. By the end of October 2000, the whole of England will be covered. I do not see any Members representing North Yorkshire or east Lancashire in the Chamber; those regions will be fully covered by the end of August. we have been able to expand the service because of the extraordinary dedication of nurses, call handlers, health information advisers and managers.

Over Christmas, NHS Direct showed its worth in the extraordinary number of calls that it handled, which was well above normal rates. Some of the new sites had started operating just before the Christmas period, and they coped extremely well. Sometimes, the pressure meant that the call handler had to take the first call and patients then had to be rung back. However, in the services in respect of which we carried out a satisfaction survey, we found that 90 per cent. of callers were satisfied or very satisfied with the service, with 80 per cent. very satisfied. Some 48 per cent. of callers were given advice by a nurse on how to look after themselves. Only 30 per cent. were advised to contact their GPs, compared with 48 per cent. who said that they would have done so if they had not rung NHS Direct.

Mr. Hammond: Before the Under-Secretary moves on from those statistics, does she accept that some of the 48 per cent. who said that they would have contacted their GPs—presumably the GP out-of-hours services—would, had they done so, have talked to a nurse who was operating a triage service, or to a GP on the telephone, rather than visiting the GP's surgery?

Ms Stuart: They said that if they had not rung up NHS Direct, they would have rung the GP out-of-hours service. They took a different route. It would be easy to start playing with the figures, because we are talking about small samples, but the trends are clear. The service—this brings us back to the purpose of NHS Direct—is showing signs of meeting the policy need for appropriate access.

Mr. Hammond: The reason I ask the question is that my understanding, derived from the literature that I have read, is that the cost of a telephone triage call to a GP out-of-hours service is approximately a quarter of the cost of a call to NHS Direct. If all the Under-Secretary is telling us is that people who would have rung the GP out-of-hours service for a telephone consultation are ringing NHS Direct instead, I am not sure where the benefit to the overall system comes from.

Ms Stuart: There are two points. The individual costs to NHS Direct are lower than those to a GP out-of-hours service. The purpose of NHS Direct is to provide a single gateway, which gives the right access to the next point. I recall answering parliamentary questions on that issue: if I remember rightly, the cost of a call to NHS Direct is about £8, while the cost of a call to an out-of-hours service is closer to £35 or £40. I might be wrong about the exact figures, but the cost of the NHS Direct call is certainly lower.

Only two thirds of the country is covered at the moment; economies of scale might become more apparent once the service is completely national. We are talking about early figures. However, the issue is not saving money, but making sure that people access the NHS at the appropriate level and that the next step they take is the correct one.

[Ms Stuart]

I want to say a little about the independent evaluation. We have asked Sheffield university to provide us with an on-going assessment and evaluation. The first report was published on the first anniversary of NHS Direct, and the second was published a year later, in March. Those interim reports clearly show that the public perception of using the service is positive, and they confirm its increasing popularity and safety. Safety was initially a concern, and people asked whether the service was safe and reliable. The reports also showed that the service's successful introduction did not increase the overall demand on other services, which had been feared. Indeed, in one area, the researchers found that the introduction of NHS Direct was associated with halting the upward trend in demand for out-of-hours medical services.

In accident and emergency departments, we have seen year-on-year increases in attendance. Some people may not have accessed the service, and we hope that in future they do so before attending the accident and emergency department. Even if numbers continue to rise, there might still be people who should have used the service but did not do so. We need to be careful, but the overall increasing trend has been halted in certain sectors.

Dr. Brand: I have the second interim report, dated February 2000, which suggests that there may be a slowing of the rising demand for out-of-hours GP services; however, it provides no figures comparing trial areas with other areas that provide evolved out-of-hours services through GP co-operatives. We need a decent comparator to assess statistical significance. I hope that the Minister will urge the researchers, in their definitive report, to provide better evidence for their tentative assertions.

Ms Stuart: Although I do not claim to be a statistician, I recall the statistical discussions with Sheffield university. Comparative data started to be compiled in the early pilots to allow for continuous comparison. We were careful to ensure that advertising took place only in areas where the service was available. Data will be much more reliable when the service goes national and we can assess the knock-on effects. Nevertheless, current trends show the clear signs that I have mentioned.

Dr. Brand: That is hardly a scientific pilot study. If control is destroyed by dispersing research throughout the country, a new system cannot be compared with another system that was in the process of evolving. I am not necessarily against the service, but the hon. Lady has not provided scientific arguments in favour of it. Let us be honest and recognise that it is politically convenient for the Government to have NHS Direct; it is unworthy to use cod science to justify it.

Ms Stuart: I might have failed to make it clear that the researchers are trying hard not to destroy the basis of their research. Hon. Members should accept that the evaluation is independent, and that we have not even thought about political convenience. We want genuinely independent research. That is why—

Dr. Brand: Will the Minister give way?

Ms Stuart: No, I wish to make some progress. Hon. Members will have the opportunity to make their own speeches.

As I said, we have reached the evaluation stage and the trends are clear: NHS Direct is fulfilling the original policy intention of being a gateway to appropriate access to the health service and maintaining the confidence of the public. It is a success, but now the question is, where do we go from here?

A telephone service such as NHS Direct has the potential to achieve a range of objectives. Recently, NHS Direct demonstrated a new advantage. Last week, the Department of Health announced that some patients might have been exposed to hepatitis C, following the discovery that two health care workers were infected with the virus. Despite the fact that the risk of transmission was low, the patients identified as potentially at risk were sent a letter that explained what had happened and offered support and specialist clinical advice.

It became obvious that many members of the public were concerned about contact with the virus. An NHS Direct number was made available to the whole of England, so that anyone concerned about hepatitis C could gain access to 24-hour advice and information. I had long discussions about how that could be achieved. In areas that were not covered by NHS Direct, anyone ringing the NHS Direct number about hepatitis C was put through.

Hon. Members may regard what I am about to say as anecdotal, but it shows how NHS Direct can provide a service. In one four-day period, NHS Direct received calls about hepatitis C from more than 3,600 people. It was able safely to reassure 63 per cent. of the callers that they had no cause for concern, and to refer callers who might have been at risk to the NHS trust involved. That shows that, by working in partnership with other NHS services, NHS Direct can provide a fast, convenient response to concerned members of the public, while relieving pressure on the trusts, so that they can concentrate their efforts on the callers who most need their specialist advice and services.

At the recent Royal College of Nursing conference, I announced three new developments for NHS Direct. The first is the appointment of the first nurse consultant for NHS Direct, a post that is based at the Hampshire NHS Direct site. It is another example of the instrumental role of nurses being extended.

Secondly, as part of the roll-out of the national health service framework for mental health, the Government have made £1 million available to NHS Direct to provide a service responsive to the special needs of callers who want to ask about mental health. That has enabled us to establish a mental health lead for each NHS Direct site, supported by a specialist national project team. The focus will be on providing accurate and consistent advice—that is particularly important—about mental health concerns, information about local mental health services and on making the necessary linkages to other services to enable the fast, effective delivery of care and services to groups who sometimes find it difficult to gain access to them.

Mr. Hammond: I listened carefully to what the Minister said about mental health services. In my constituency, an acute psychiatric unit has traditionally provided a helpline service to patients in the community who suffer a crisis. Can she give me an absolute assurance that such services, which are embedded in the acute psychiatric units, will not be shut down as the NHS Direct service rolls out?

Ms Stuart: Yes I can, because NHS Direct is being developed in co-operation with, and in addition to, the available local services and with the voluntary sector. As I said earlier about the consistency of advice, I am delighted that the hon. Gentleman's constituents have access to the service that he mentioned, but many people do not. Our intention is to ensure that the service is available whenever the need arises. Precisely how it will be delivered may vary from area to area.

The third development is the NHS Direct on-line service, which the Prime Minister launched in December. It provides the public with a gateway to the best of health information on the internet. Although the internet is easily accessible and can be the source of a tremendous range of information, it can also be extremely misleading. NHS Online will be a reliable source for further advice. It received 1.5 million hits on its first day and receives more than 100,000 hits on a typical day. Even more amazing to me were the favourable reviews it received in the computer press. Internet Magazine selected it as its website of the month.

On 20 March, NHS Direct ran its first on-line live discussion, with Professor Mike Richards, who is commonly known as the cancer tsar. It facilitated a discussion about the Government's plans to improve cancer services and proved to be a real interchange.

As with the telephone service, we are keen to develop NHS Online as the leading source of information. The site will be updated regularly and by the summer, we hope to provide access to searchable information about local services such as pharmacists. It will use model technology, which in this instance is international, to provide focused local information.

There has been tremendous grass-roots development of the service. A significant characteristic is the way local communities have taken ownership of it and developed services that are responsive to the needs of their areas. In some areas, we have integrated access to out-of-hours services. This has enabled NHS Direct nurses to pass callers on seamlessly to the out-of-hours doctor, or direct them to other services, if appropriate. The caller does not have to make two calls; there is only one call, which moves on behind the scenes. It also makes for cost-effective delivery of out-of-hours care.

GPs have expressed much concern. Some feel threatened by the changes, and I acknowledge that change is always unsettling, but the Government have made it clear that GPs should not feel threatened, and we have found no evidence that they are. NHS Direct is not intended to replace them or usurp their role; it is additional to what they already do.

Mr. Hammond: What studies have the Government commissioned to compare the cost-effectiveness of delivering telephone triage services through NHS Direct as opposed to through GP out-of-hours co-operatives?

Ms Stuart: It is part of the continuing evaluation of the service. A simple calculation is that an NHS Direct call at £8 is cheaper than the GP out-of-hours service. If as a result, only 50 per cent. of patients go on to talk to their GP, that is almost an indirect saving in itself.

In discussing this new service, I stress that to focus purely on the apparent short-term saving is not to focus on the right aspect. I said initially that we are putting more money into the NHS because more money is needed, and that the price tag that comes with the extra money is a reliable and convenient—but different—way of delivering services. NHS Direct plays a vital part in that. Of course part of the evaluation will be costs, but costs alone will not be an indicator of success or failure. I like to think that, even in basic business, cost cutting is not a long-term strategy. The strategy should concern whether the service is delivering something that is needed at a competitive price.

I return to the point about evidence from GPs because concern has arisen. There was a point at which, if one had relied solely on the professional journals, one could easily have thought that this was the biggest threat ever to general practitioners. I was interested to see recently in the letter pages of newspapers that GPs are stating that it is inappropriate to attack the service, because it is helping them.

I can always tell from conversations with GPs whether the service is available in their area. Similarly, with members of the public, I always know when they have used the service and when they have not heard of it. A lovely example occurred yesterday in the Room next door during a reception for about 30 GPs. Someone asked what sounded like a hostile question. Before I had time to answer, a GP who stood next to me, whom I thought was very brave, grabbed the microphone and said, "I am a GP and you really should not attack the service. We are using it in co-operation with our out-of-hours service and it works extremely well. We find that it actually makes our work easier." The Sheffield report also stated that experience on the ground is that the benefits of the service are beginning to show. It is working with GPs. In some areas, co-operatives are working; in others, it is not a step that people wish to take. It is a question of responding to local needs.

We should also consider the knock-on effects of NHS Direct in other areas. I will examine briefly other areas of integration. Last winter saw huge and increasing pressure on our accident and emergency departments. We should examine the reasons for that, and consider whether we can control the system better, so that the facilities of A and E departments are reserved for those who really need them. At present, if someone rings NHS Direct and it becomes clear, following consultation with the nurse, that it is an urgent ambulance call, NHS Direct can upgrade it to a 999 call. There is no provision to reverse that process when someone rings 999. Often, what appears to be a real emergency—and many people's first reaction is to dial 999—turns out not to need an ambulance.

[Ms Stuart]

In some of the pilot areas, as soon as a call comes in and the ambulance team has the grid reference and is ready to go, the call is placed in one of three categories—A, B and C. If the situation is life-threatening, or if the call is in category B, the ambulance goes. A category C call, however, does not need an immediate response. Such calls are transferred, without the need for a further telephone call, to an NHS Direct nurse, who will have the time and experience properly to triage the call and assess whether an ambulance is really needed. Although, at this stage, we do not know what the figures are, people on the ground are certain that there is scope for developing more appropriate use of the system. That takes us towards our aim of ensuring that the system is safe and robust and delivers appropriate access.

The outcome is similar in the case of developments such as more proactive outward calling by NHS Direct—for instance, reminding people to have a flu vaccination or attend an out-patient appointment. Proactive calling ensures that people are reminded about something that they needed to do and that service delivery is more efficient. In the long-term, there will be a role for NHS Direct in a more structured disease management programme for chronic conditions such as coronary heart disease or diabetes.

For too long, pharmacists, as professionals in the health community, have not been utilised as well as they could be. NHS Direct has played a significant role in bringing them to the forefront. They have tremendous experience, and one NHS Direct site—Essex, Barking and Havering—works in partnership with the National Pharmaceutical Association to pilot what they call an alternative end-point referring system, through which a caller can be referred directly to a community pharmacist. The Royal Pharmaceutical Society is involved in the pilot scheme, which went live this month. It is still at an early stage—before hon. Members ask for figures—but, so far, there is evidence that 5 per cent. of callers are referred to their pharmacist for specialist help and advice.

Mr. Hammond: I am entirely at one with the Under-Secretary in believing that pharmacists are a hugely under-utilised resource in our primary care delivery system. Does the Under-Secretary have any statistics on the percentage of callers who would have visited a pharmacist had they not called NHS Direct?

Ms Stuart: We do not have those figures. We have figures on the number of people who have done something differently as a result of their call, but they are not broken down in such a way that we would know what else they would have done or whether they would have gone to the pharmacist. Such figures might not be accurate. I have used NHS Direct twice—I refrained from saying who I was. The first time, I needed a malaria tablet and did not know whether I needed a prescription. I rang up, and was told to see a pharmacist. I do not know what I would have done otherwise—whatever was most convenient, probably. A figure based on asking people what they would have done instead may not be a reliable indicator. However, we have found an appropriate level of referrals to pharmacists. For example, the figures for people calling NHS Direct with flu-like symptoms over the winter, show that a huge number of people were referred to self-care. At the same time, there was an unprecedented jump in the number of flu remedies sold over the counter by Boots The Chemists. We cannot establish a statistical link, but that shows a clear trend.

Mr. Hammond: I am sorry to be persistent, but I must clarify the issue. The Minister said that we could not necessarily rely on what people say they would have done. Unless I am mistaken, earlier she quoted the number of people who said that they would have gone to a GP if NHS Direct had not existed. Is that figure a reliable indicator?

Ms Stuart: I was trying to say that going to a GP is a real choice. I could either ring up, or go to see my GP, sometimes in doubt about whether I could have gone to the pharmacist. I am simply suggesting that choosing to visit the pharmacist is not as determined a decision as that of choosing to go to a GP.

One of our aims with the pilot scheme is to give consistent advice. There is scope for more training for pharmacists, who give daily advice about the next appropriate step. If training is co-ordinated with NHS nursing, a patient's access route will not matter, because the advice will be consistent within the health framework.

We discussed people who do not, but should, have access to the health service. We are working closely with the Contraceptive Education Service, an agency that provides specialist advice on contraception and pregnancy, including teenage pregnancy. That is a subject that is close to my heart, and we must tackle it. I hope that the potential of making a confidential telephone call will encourage more young people to ask for advice. NHS Direct can refer callers who require specialist or in-depth advice to the Contraceptive Education Service's helpline. That is another example of an existing helpline that should not feel threatened by NHS Direct, because it provides an additional service.

We want to use NHS Direct to reach out to other groups who do not use the health service. In homeless shelters in London, we have set up two pilots using dedicated freephones. Homeless people often find it difficult to register with a GP, and the pilots give them access. We are working with the Royal National Institute for Deaf People to undertake an audit of NHS Direct to ensure that it can respond to the needs of callers with disabilities; and with interpreter services for callers whose first language is not English to ensure that everyone, irrespective of their first language, receives a reliable service. We use confidential interpreters, and so far, NHS Direct has provided help and advice in more than 30 languages. NHS Direct continues to work with services for black and ethnic minority communities, to take account not only of preferred languages, but of cultural difference and preference.

Now I will deal with a group of people who traditionally neglect their health, and who we think need to take more care of their health: men, who form the majority in this Room, and especially young men, although they are certainly in the minority here. They do not look after their health, and we want to ensure that they are better able to take responsibility for it. The early stages of the scheme suggest that women, who have traditionally been the guardians of family health, are more likely to ring NHS Direct. Our research shows that women often ring on behalf of others, especially children. We hope that availability by telephone will allow men to use the service more to inquire about their own health. The on-line service on the internet may also appeal more to the young male audience.

Mr. Hammond: I intervene on the Under-Secretary again, first, because I am offended by her comment. Secondly, I accept that wanting to reach men who tend not to access medical services is a worthy aspiration, but does the evidence so far not show—as detailed in her written answer to my hon. Friend the Member for Aylesbury (Mr. Lidington)—that very few young men access that service? It is used primarily by women on behalf of children and young women on their own behalf.

Ms Stuart: The hon. Gentleman is right; that is what the current research shows. I come back to the fact that in a short period we have created a service that covers two thirds of the country; it is a national service. Now that it is set up, we must focus much more on reaching out to the people who need it. The percentage figures at this stage would not support the argument that that is already happening, but it is our aspiration to reach the groups that have not been reached.

Another figure that has not gone up—to pre-empt a further intervention—is that for the elderly population. We would expect that figure to rise and those people to use the service much more. The age profile has remained fairly static so far, but the service is available.

I have some anecdotal evidence for the success of NHS Direct. A 93-year-old gentleman told us that he had twice used the service, and that it was the best thing that had happened to the health service since 1948. It is encouraging for people to know that they can use the telephone when they need help, but really do not want to bother anyone. Elderly people, who have every right to use a service, sometimes do not want to bother anyone. Elderly people, who have every right to use a service, sometimes do not wish to cause any bother. When I spent a day with west midlands ambulance service, we made a call on someone who had had a stroke in the middle of the night, and whose wife did not want to bother anyone until 8 am because she felt that it would be antisocial to ring anyone so late. We are working towards extending the service to that kind of person. It aspires to be a safe service, provided to everyone regardless of age, gender, language, disability or culture, and it shows every sign of achieving that.

The modernisation programme, however, goes beyond NHS Direct, which is only one of the building blocks in the programme.

Dr. Brand: Before we go on to the wider issues, would the Under-Secretary tell us how much NHS Direct as she has described it will cost, after it has been rolled out over the country?

Ms Stuart: The current overall budget is £80 million. The huge potential for the service means that we have to choose which areas we want to focus on and take forward. My priority is mental health, provisions for which are already being implemented. Another priority is the category C triage on ambulances. We should consider whether that should be used on a one-off basis as in the hepatitis scare, and how best to roll out the programme. NHS Direct could be used for many services, but that is its current budget.

NHS Direct is a vital building block in the effort to make primary care services more accessible, given the way our lives and technology have changed. It is not only an on-line service; so far, 36 pilot walk-in services have been announced, and the total investment into that initiative will be £31 million this year. That means that 10 million people will have access to more flexible NHS care.

The key aim of the walk-in centres is to provide rapid access primary care to patients who are disadvantaged by not having access to the service immediately. That includes groups such as workers and commuters, whom we would not usually classify as disadvantaged. Members of Parliament, owing to the lives that we lead, are only too aware of the difficulties of getting in touch with our general practitioners. We in this Room are a prime target group for walk-in centres. They will also address the needs of those in deprived areas such as Tottenham and Edmonton, which have high economic and social deprivation and many refugees and asylum seekers. Since January, eight walk-in centres have been opened—in London, Sheffield, Birmingham, Newcastle, Norwich and Swindon. A further six will open this month and the remainder by December.

Primary care also needs to be modernised and expanded.

Mr. Hammond: On a point of order, Madam Deputy Speaker. Can you make it clear how wide you will allow this debate to range? I came here specifically prepared to talk about NHS Direct, which is the title of the debate. The Under-Secretary is now moving into a much wider discussion about primary care delivery, which I should be delighted to engage in but have not prepared for.

Madam Deputy Speaker (Mrs. Gwyneth Dunwoody): The content of hon. Members' speeches, including those of Ministers, is happily not a matter for the Chair. Otherwise, life might be even more exciting. The Under-Secretary has been generous about accepting interventions, and I am sure that she will bear in mind that the main subject is NHS Direct. If she is out of order, I can assure the hon. Gentleman that I shall draw her attention to the fact.

Ms Stuart: I recall, Madam Deputy Speaker, that the original title of the debate was "NHS Direct and Modernisation". I hope that you will find that my remarks relate to the modernisation of the NHS, using NHS Direct as the main example. However, hon. Members need not worry too much.

I want to come back to the point about GPs' fears about NHS Direct. One of the great advantages of the British NHS is the co-ordination of care that list-based general practice has brought about, which I understand the French, American and German systems are now seeking to replicate.

We must target access to primary care much more closely. The main role of GPs to deliver primary care will be expanded by the creation of the primary care trusts and primary care groups. They will be the agents of change, because they are best placed to respond to local needs. We hope, over time, to have more primary care single sites, some of them as a result of public-private partnerships, where doctors, dentists, pharmacists, opticians and nurses all provide easier care and access. People with chronic conditions such as heart disease, asthma, diabetes and depression will again have much more regular help from a single health and social care team, which will allow them to maintain a full life.

[Ms Stuart]

Those developments mean that we need further advances in easy access to information and use of communication and information technology, but we must also meet the public's expectation for a responsive public service. NHSnet, which is the NHS private network, is one means of affording access. Although a patient may access a service, whether it be a walk-in centre or NHS Direct, the GP is still his case manager. Those new developments in technology allow the exchange of information.

We want to ensure that every GP has access to a desktop computer linked to NHSnet, which will enable and facilitate that exchange of information. We want the consulting room to be the place where out-patient appointments are made, operations booked, test results received and diagnoses carried out, using video and telelinks to hospital specialists. All that is emerging, and extraordinary work is being done in some areas. Recently, I visited Blackburn. Bolton, Bury, Blackburn and—there was another B?

Mr. Gerry Sutcliffe (Bradford, South): Burnley.

Ms Stuart: Thank you. Bolton, Bury, Blackburn and Burnley hospitals are linked together by a telemedicine system, whereby the maxillofacial surgeons in Blackburn and the other three A and E departments are linked up. The picture transmission quality is extremely high, which allows those specialists to assess whether a patient needs to be transferred. Again, we are using technology to modernise access to the service.

In conclusion, NHS Direct is one building block in the modernisation of the NHS, which is about redesigning the service that we deliver to patients and recognising that the public increasingly demand that all public services, including the health service, be responsive and place them at the centre of that responsiveness. In addition, it enables people to know where the right point of access is, if they do fall ill. All the early stages of evaluation have made it clear that NHS Direct is well on the way to delivering on those aspirations. The service will be available nationally by the end of the year. Piloting is going on, as is outside evaluation, which will allow us to make the right choices about how to move on. So far, NHS Direct is sending a clear sign of our commitment to a national health service that meets the challenges of the new century and the expectations of the public. This building block is showing every sign of delivering.

3.31 pm

Mr. Philip Hammond (Runnymede and Weybridge): The full title of the debate is "Second Anniversary of NHS Direct", and I shall seek to stick rigidly to that theme. I will start by reassuring the Minister and other hon. Members that I have no objection in principle to the concept behind NHS Direct. Indeed, my right hon. Friend the Member for Charnwood (Mr. Dorrell) claims some ownership of it as a result of the pilot schemes of telephone triage that were set up in Wiltshire under the previous Administration.

However, I have some suspicion, which is mirrored in the medical community, about the Govenment's motives. Is the service intended to replace the GP out-of-hours co-operative system? Is it intended, through the use of what is euphemistically termed an integrated access route, to become the only gateway to accessing primary medical services? Is it intended to replace the 999 ambulance service? The Under-Secretary will have reassuring answers to all those questions, but I ask her to understand that there is a background of suspicion about the Government's motivation. It arises not because of the Government's espousal of the concept of a telephone triage system, but because of the unseemly haste with which it has been rolled out and the apparent reluctance to wait for the evidence that would support that roll-out.

The Sheffield report mentioned by the Under-Secretary sets out four objectives of NHS Direct:

> to offer the public a confidential, reliable and consistent source of professional advice on healthcare, 24 hours a day . . . to provide simple and speedy access to a comprehensive and up to date range of health and related information . . . to help improve quality, increase cost-effectiveness and reduce unnecessary demands on other NHS services—and—

> to allow professionals to develop their role in enabling patients to be partners in self-care.

Those objectives constitute uncontroversial aspirations, and I think that we would all share them. However, I hope that the Under-Secretary will accept that there is a requirement to measure whether the service is delivering on them. To use the scientific jargon, there is a requirement to have a base of evidence to support the continued roll-out of NHS Direct. Our debate is about whether that base of evidence exists and whether the Government's roll-out of the service is justified by the published evidence in relation to the stated objectives.

I detect a touch of defensiveness in the Government's position. On 22 February 2000, I tabled a written question asking the Secretary of State for Health whether he would > place in the Library a copy of the report his Department has received from Sheffield University on NHS Direct.

That report, which was mentioned earlier, is dated February 2000. The Under-Secretary replied:

> Sheffield University's interim report is in the Library. This was published in March 1999. Sheffield university's final report on NHS Direct is expected shortly. Copies of the report will be placed in the Library.—[Official Report, 22 February 2000; Vol. 344, c. 903W.]

She did not mention the further interim report, which was on Ministers' desks at the time. Why was she anxious to throw me off the trail?

On 13 March, I tabled a written question asking the Secretary of State for Health about the > studies he has commissioned to establish how many users, as distinct from individual calls, there are of NHS Direct.

The Under-Secretary again answered my question, on 14 March—a commendably speedy response. She said:

> We have not commissioned any studies to establish how many users, as distinct from individual calls, there are of NHS Direct.—[Official Report, 14 March 2000; Vol. 346, c. 134W.]

Her answer is rather strange. If she had read the Sheffield report that her Department commissioned, she would know that that matter was analysed in the report. There is an interesting result relating to the number of multiple callers to the Milton Keynes site. That was the point that I wanted to establish and to which I shall return presently.

I have no problem with the suggestion that a sensible set of aspirations lie behind NHS Direct, or with the idea of rolling out the service when it has been proved that it can do what the Government wants it to do. However, in view of the scarcity of NHS resources—I am sure that the Under-Secretary and I at least agree that however much funding the Chancellor finds for the NHS, money will always be a scarce resource and hard allocation decisions will always have to be made—I have a problem with spending money before we are sure that it is being spent effectively. The £80 million that the Under-Secretary said would be spent on NHS Direct could put an additional 4,000 nurses on wards in hospitals. We must continuously test the cost-effectiveness of NHS Direct against such alternative uses of the money.

Earlier, I quoted the objective that involves wanting to > reduce unnecessary demands on other NHS services.

One of my concerns about the Sheffield university report and the relevant published information involves the absence of controlled studies or comparisons between the situation in NHS Direct and that in other parts of the service. The hon. Member for Isle of Wight (Dr. Brand) alluded to that concern in an earlier intervention. In order to evaluate objectively the success or otherwise of NHS Direct, we need to know about its impact on other parts of the service. To do that, we need to carry out controlled studies, which necessitates comparing the areas that have NHS Direct with those that do not.

The Under-Secretary gave us some anecdotal evidence—she cited GPs' views of the service. At the risk of offending the hon. Member for Isle of Wight, I should not for a moment suggest that GPs' views should be considered conclusive in this or any matter. However, as reducing the demands on GP services is clearly one of the intentions of NHS Direct, their views of it are informative. To the extent that NHS Direct may be seen as a direct competitor of out-of-hours GP services—both offer a telephone triage service, one run by nurses, the other primarily by doctors—it is relevant for us to consider what the doctors think about it and the relative costs of the two services.

I shall return to costs in a moment, but I am sure that the Under-Secretary, and indeed you, Madam Deputy Speaker, will indulge me a little if I quote one or two comments reported in the professional press by doctors. Pulse, a magazine widely read by practitioners and, I should say in fairness, widely quoted by me in Standing Committees considering health Bills and related material, said on 1 April:

> Results of the survey of more than 200 GPs show that in GPs' experience NHS Direct caused unnecessary distress and wasted NHS resources . . . More than half thought patients had had their anxiety levels raised unnecessarily and 56 per cent. thought patients had been given inappropriate advice . . . Nearly a third of GPs have refused to give the service any publicity in their surgeries.

On 17 March, Pulse said:

> GP co-operatives have a clear message for the government—they do not want further integration with NHS Direct. The co-ops argue that prime minister Tony Blair's "unproven pet project" is not efficient or flexible enough to join GPs' highly developed out-of-hours systems.

Ms Stuart: Given that we are all greatly concerned about surveys and data being reliable, will the hon. Gentleman agree that a survey in Pulse, based on a response to a cut-out coupon in a previous edition of Pulse from a self-selected group of 200 people who were unlikely to write in with any positive comments, may not be a good statistical basis?

Mr. Hammond: I would not suggest for a moment that I am quoting a statistically relevant sample; it is anecdotal, but the Under-Secretary herself relied on anecdote to a fair extent. I deliberately prefaced my remarks by saying that I am not seeking to use GPs' anecdotal comments as fatal to the cause of NHS Direct. I merely think that in the ideal model, if the service were working as intended, GPs could be expected to be huge beneficiaries of it and waving their little flags. The fact that many GPs and GP representative organisations express scepticism should give us pause and cause for concern.

I shall not read extensive quotes, but I suspect that the problem relates almost entirely to the speed of the roll-out. From discussions that I have had with general practitioners and their representative organisations I doubt whether they would be as concerned if the roll-out had been more measured and if it had been clear that the Government were waiting for the evidence to support the scheme before rolling it out.

Whatever the Under-Secretary tells us, she will not be able to dissuade me and, I suspect, many others from believing that, although the Government have commissioned studies to look at the effect of NHS Direct, they have already taken the decision to roll it out nationwide before they see the evidence for or against it. That must lead us to question whether the motivation is as objective as the Under-Secretary has sought to suggest.

Dr. Brand: Does the hon. Gentleman agree that the very fact of rolling out NHS Direct throughout the country means that studies to compare the effectiveness of the NHS cannot be done, because the comparators are being destroyed?

Mr. Hammond: The hon. Gentleman is right: he has made the point before that proper controlled studies will become impossible. However, as I understand it, no studies are even being done to measure the impact on other parts of the national health service. GPs' hostility may derive partly from what they may perceive as the Government's hypocritical attitude in asserting their commitment to evidence-based medicine in the NHS generally, but acting in this case in a way that is clearly not evidence-based.

[Mr. Hammond]

The key issue is not whether NHS Direct is appealing as a concept. Of course it is. It strikes all of us as a good idea to have an easy, convenient and relatively cheap way of accessing the system. The key issue is whether it is effective and cost-effective. The Minister might recognise those terms of reference, which the National Institute for Clinical Excellence is required to take into account in evaluating a drug. Is the drug clinically effective, is it cost-effective and is it affordable with regard to the overall level of resources available to the NHS? In other words, is it good value for money where it is clinically and cost-effective? I hope that the Minister would agree that the criteria applied by the Government to other services and treatments should also be applied to NHS Direct, and that to get a tick in the box on its second birthday, NHS Direct must pass muster against those tests.

What evidence would be required to satisfy those questions? Indeed, what studies have the Government commissioned? The Sheffield study, admirable though it is, looks narrowly at what is happening in the three initial NHS pilot sites. The KPMG study will examine nine NHS Direct sites. What worries me—

3.46 pm

Sitting suspended for a Division in the House.

4 pm

On resuming—

Mr. Hammond: I was trying to elicit from the Minister whether the Government have commissioned wider studies that will consider matters within a broader spectrum than the NHS Direct sites. Are there studies that will compare related NHS facilities with the NHS Direct sites and with GPs' out-of-hours services?

If we accept that NHS Direct must pass the hurdles that the National Institute for Clinical Excellence would apply in looking at a new procedure or process, we must consider whether NHS Direct is a clinically effective solution and then whether it is cost-effective.

The Minister was sceptical about the views of doctors; as I said earlier, GPs do not always have the answer to every problem. However, she would be disappointed if I did not quote from the New Statesman of 20 March 2000, in which a relative of the Prime Minister expressed serious concerns about NHS Direct. The article is headlined, "The idea of NHS Direct was to cut GPs' work in half by offering patients easy access to advice. When Lauren Booth tried it, she very nearly died as a result." The article is not only about her experience; it quotes some well-respected doctors, and says about one of them that like all those in the UK, her practice is already contracted to provide a 24-hour service to its patients. NHS Direct, she feels, is duplicating an under-funded service that has existed for years—a service run by better-qualified staff . . . Many calls to NHS Direct get referred on to GPs anyway.

The article continues:

This means that a loop is formed with distressed patients being asked to wait for an available GP to call them back. The current favouritism for this project also leads to less important cases being passed on as "urgent" when they are not . . .

The GP continues:

I must then bypass all my other waiting patients to answer these calls simply because they come via NHS Direct.

The article reports:

just as some cases labelled urgent by the computer programme used to assess each call are not urgent, so some seriously sick patients can be misdiagnosed and left at home.

An NHS consultant is quoted, stating:

one man was prescribed paracetamol when he called NHS Direct; he had a serious case of malaria. Another man was told to go to bed and rub Vick's vapour on his chest; he nearly died from meningitis.

The report continues:

All GPs know from experience that prescribing and diagnosing over the telephone is one of the most dangerous things you can do.

The article highlights questions about the quality of triage that can be carried out over the telephone. The first question is about the quality of telephone triage as compared with personal triage. GPs to whom I have spoken and comments that I have read in the available literature suggest that the visual clues that the GP or clinician gets from the patient are important in making the correct diagnosis. We should not ignore doctors' views on the dangers of making telephone diagnoses.

The Minister proudly tells us that NHS Direct has been made available in many languages, and I have seen that in action at the NHS Direct site in Surrey, where, an interpreter is used when the caller's first language is not English. However, if it is difficult and dangerous to make a diagnosis by telephone when the doctor and patient both speak English as a first language, how much more dangerous and difficult must it be to make that diagnosis third-hand over the telephone, via a non-specialist interpreter who is trying to interpret the words of a frightened and confused patient who is speaking to a doctor in a foreign language? I can understand the reason for providing such services, but I would like to see hard clinical evidence that the benefits of immediate access that the telephone triage service offers fully outweigh the inevitable risks and downside.

We must ask for evidence that a nurse-led telephone triage service provided in dedicated centres is as good as, or better than, a GP-led triage service provided by out-of-hours services or co-operatives. I accept that the quality of services provided out of hours by different groups of GPs varies and that there might be arguments for improving them, but I wonder on what evidence it was decided that £80 million could not be better and more effectively spent beefing up GP out-of-hours services than on NHS Direct. Data on the quality of triage offered via telephone are insufficient to enable a sensible analysis of what is happening to be made, or to form the basis for decisions that the Government have already made in terms of committing themselves to rolling out NHS Direct across the country.

The critical question we must ask ourselves is whether NHS Direct is achieving better outcomes? What do the Government propose to do about the wide discrepancy in next-referral patterns? Between just the three sites covered in the Sheffield report, we see significant variations in the percentage of patients who are referred to GPs, A and E and self-medication.

Has the Minister undertaken any work to discover how many callers to NHS Direct are seeking a second opinion after a GP visit? I was told anecdotally—I am afraid that all we have is anecdotes, because the statistics have not been published and the Government might not even have asked for them—that a significant proportion of the calls to the NHS Direct site that I visited were from patients who had already visited a GP and were seeking confirmation of what the GP told them.

In how many cases is NHS Direct merely an extra step in accessing the same care? The Minister told us, and we know from the statistics, that 40 per cent. of NHS Direct calls result in a referral to a GP. We need to know how many of those people would not have gone to the GP if they had not called NHS Direct. We also need to know what the others would have done. How many of those who were referred to self-medication would have gone to a pharmacist or self-medicated without doing so? In other words, we must evaluate on a properly controlled basis the extent to which NHS Direct changes people's behaviour patterns. The information quoted by the Minister does not come close to enabling us to do that.

What impact has NHS Direct had on waiting times for a GP appointment? If the system were working optimally, people who do not need to clutter GPs' surgeries would be dealt with on the telephone; conversely, those who need an appointment would be seen more quickly by their GP, instead of having to wait two, three, five—or in some places, 10—days for a routine appointment. No evidence has been adduced to suggest that the position on seeking a GP appointment has improved as a result of NHS Direct.

What impact has NHS Direct had on waiting times in accident and emergency departments? We may assume that some people would go to their local A and E department if they did not have the option of calling NHS Direct. If so, waiting times in A and E departments should improve in areas where the service is running, which would be a good thing. I reiterate that my criticisms are not intended to be negative. There may be good news in all cases, but the evidence is not available, so we simply do not know. I have not yet seen anything to reassure me that studies are being undertaken.

The Under-Secretary said that the GP is still the case manager. How does that work in practice when a patient rings NHS Direct? Under the current system, how does the GP get information about that call? In the ideal world mentioned by the hon. Lady, it would be possible to link all GPs on NHSnet and to hold electronic patient records somewhere in the ether. At the moment, however, NHS Direct, like GP walk-in centres, is eroding continuity of care, which has been a keystone of this country's primary care.

Turning to cost-effectiveness and value for money, we must ask whether NHS Direct delivers a given outcome more cost-effectively than any other available means: the issue needs to be viewed in the context of competing demands and offering an additional service. I have seen data showing that 40 per cent. of NHS Direct callers are referred to their GP, and a further 7 per cent. to an accident and emergency department. Therefore, in almost half the cases, the cost of the NHS Direct service is a net additional cost to the cost of dealing with the patient. Substantially better clinical outcomes in the remaining 53 per cent. of cases, or some other saving in the system, are needed to justify that cost. Is the service simply an extra tier? What evidence is there that we are saving money or improving the national health service—two sides of the same coin—by channelling callers through NHS Direct?

Earlier, the Under-Secretary and I discussed the relative costs of providing different services. I suspect that we had a slight disagreement, and I should like clarification. The hon. Lady said that the intended cost of NHS Direct, when fully rolled out, is £80 million per annum. We are told that there is NHS Direct coverage of 65 per cent. of the country, and that an average of 8,000 calls are made every day. Arithmetic was never my best subject, but that suggests that 2.92 million calls per annum are made to the service in its present form. If we extrapolate on the basis of 100 per cent. coverage, it would equate to 4.5 million calls per annum.

At an overall budget of £80 million, my rudimentary arithmetic suggests that the cost per call to NHS Direct is £17.77, not the £8 that the Minister cites. To get to her £8, she must assume that the number of calls per 100,000 people covered will more than double as the service is rolled out nationally. I am not sure what her grounds are for believing that. Perhaps when she winds up she will put some flesh around the figures.

Let us take the Minister's figure of £8 for telephone triage via NHS Direct. In a written answer to my hon. Friend the Member for Aylesbury (Mr. Lidington), she states:

> We envisage the cost of NHS Direct to be approximately £8 per telephone call. This compares favourably to the cost per accident and emergency attendance £42 (1997–98) and cost per general practitioner contact £10.55 (1996–97),—[Official Report, 22 February 2000; Vol. 344, c. 902W.]

Is that true? If it costs £8 for a patient to be diagnosed by telephone, which means that the person carrying out the diagnosis has no ability to assess the patient's symptoms visually, and it costs £10.55 to visit the surgery of a GP who can pick up the visual clues, does £8 represent a value-for-money outcome?

The Minister also took issue with me over the costs of GP out-of-hours co-operative contacts, saying that they were more expensive than NHS Direct contacts. I do not have figures here and I should be grateful if the hon. Lady could provide them. I can say that the chairman of the National Association of GP Co-operatives appears to disagree with her: he believes that GP co-ops handle twice as many calls as NHS Direct, and that their total cost is roughly half that of NHS Direct. That suggests a cost per telephone call handled that is a quarter that of NHS Direct.

Two things need to be clarified. First, if we are comparing apples with apples and we are comparing telephone triage with telephone triage, is NHS Direct really cheaper than GP out-of-hours services? Does a nurse-led dedicated service provide better clinical outcomes than a GP-led service embedded in the overall GP service, in which continuity of contact with the patient is maintained? Secondly, if the relative costs are £8 for an NHS Direct telephone contact against £10.55 for a GP consultation, does the NHS Direct contact represent value for money?

I also asked the Minister about the number of callers versus the number of calls. Modern technology obviously makes it easy to log the number of calls to NHS Direct, but I should like to know how many people are using the service. There has been an investigation into that question by Sheffield university, notwithstanding what the hon. Lady said in her written answer to me. It made an astounding discovery: apparently, 10 users made over 6 per cent. of all the calls to the service at Milton Keynes.

[Mr. Hammond]

It could be argued that those people might have attended every day at the local surgery and used up GP's time—that would be a perfectly plausible counter-argument—but we need evidence. We need to know whether NHS Direct is generating demand from people who are perhaps, and I use the term with some trepidaton, abusing the system. If we are to measure the service being delivered, we must have evidence.

I spoke earlier about the objectives of the system. I reiterate my concerns that the Government have hidden objectives additional to those announced publicly. The Under-Secretary's statement about the 999 ambulance service has given some credence to my belief that the Government are anxious to put the structure in place because they have grander designs for it.

People are worried about the clinical outcomes of NHS Direct contact, but we cannot conclude definitively whether those concerns are justified until we have the evidence. There are real concerns that the expected reduction in the burden on the other parts of the health service is not happening and will not happen. The Under-Secretary supplied evidence to show a reduction in the upward trend of calls to GP out-of-hours services, but that was the only identified reduction in service demands in the Sheffield study, and it occurred in only one of the three sites. Clearly, the evidence for a reduced burden elsewhere is by no means conclusive. There is no evidence of reduced GP consultation, no evidence of reduced accident and emergency use and only limited evidence of a slowing of the rate of increase in telephone triage provided by GP out-of-hours services.

No one who evaluated the available evidence could conclude that there was an overwhelming case that NHS Direct will be both clinically effective and cost-effective. On the basis of the evidence, no one would decide to roll it out across the country. I do not reject the possibility that NHS Direct will provide benefits, be cost-effective and be affordable within the national health service budget, but there is no evidence to support the decision to roll it out nationwide.

Will the Minister explain what the Government are doing to collect the necessary evidence? The Sheffield and KPMG studies will not produce the comparative data needed to compare the cost and performance of NHS Direct with that of other potential methods of delivering a similar service. Why did the Government, with all their emphasis on evidence-based medicine, decide to roll the service out without waiting for evidence from the pilots? That decision goes against all good management practice and everything that the Government said.

The Government's attitude encourages two types of sceptic. A sceptic of the first type sees a hidden agenda, believing that the Government are anxious to get the system up and running in order to use NHS Direct to undermine GPs' independent contractor status, to undermine the 999 ambulance service, and to move towards a single integrated gateway to primary care. The second type of sceptic thinks that NHS Direct has been rolled out quickly because it provides a good soundbite. That is why the Government did not wait for evidence before announcing the nationwide roll-out, and why they failed to make the roll-out conditional on any of the stringent criteria that are set for drugs and treatments evaluated by NICE.

The Minister know that I am a reasonable person. I see the potential of a telephone triage service, but I am not convinced that a dedicated service separate from the GP service is necessarily the way forward, nor am I convinced that the Government have explored adequately the possibility of working within the existing GP out-of-hours service, with all the benefits of contact and continuity that that delivers. I must therefore question the Government's motives in setting up a separate service that was bound to cause friction with GPs—one that, in addition, produces a less well-qualified level of triage at a higher cost. I accept that my final words are contentious but that is how it appears to me.

The bottom line is that we have not established today—nor have the Government in the evidence they have allowed into the public domain—that NHS Direct represents the best way to spend £80 million of public money in an attempt to improve access to the national health service. The jury is out on NHS Direct. Ministers have not inspired my confidence or that of others: there is no evidence that they genuinely intend to evaluate the success or otherwise of NHS Direct, or that they are willing to probe its success or otherwise. I fear that they intend to roll it out anyway if it complies with their own criteria for measuring effectiveness in the NHS.

There is a deep suspicion that NHS Direct is a pet political project of the Prime Minister and that it would indeed be a brave Health Minister who commissioned the sort of in-depth, probing, objective analysis that might reveal that NHS Direct was not a good way of spending national health service money. I urge the Under-Secretary, in the interests of her credibility and that of Ministers at the Department of Health, to ensure that proper evidence is gathered and proper objectives undertaken, and that the service is not rolled out regardless of the evidence that the results produce.

4.26 pm

Dr. Peter Brand (Isle of Wight): I will try not to demonstrate that the length of a speech must meet the time available because we are beginning to run into time constraints.

I had to look twice to see who initiated today's Adjournment debate. I was somewhat surprised that it was the Government, because there is little to discuss. There is a service that is on probation still and being rolled forward. We have heard very little evidence, and the Minister's contribution was not as enlightening as I had hoped it would be.

I am grateful that we have been given a summary of objectives for NHS Direct. No one who works in the NHS or uses it objects to any of the objectives given as the leading role for NHS Direct, which is to offer the public a confidential, reliable and consistent source of professional advice on health care, 24 hours a day; to enable people to manage many of their problems themselves; to provide a comprehensive service, which is an excellent goal, to help to improve quality and cost-effectiveness—a subject to which I may return—and to allow professionals to develop their role of enabling patients to be partners in self-care. But that has been going on for many years.

The objectives in the Sheffield study have been shared by the wider NHS team for certainly half my professional lifetime. Doctors tried to lead everything and there was a paternalism among adminstrators who thought that they knew best. We now know that team work is important and that unless we take patients with us we will not get anywhere. The objectives are excellent, but there is a great need to do something about consistency, especially in primary care. I will not be anecdotal, but all of us know that there are places where it works and others where it does not. There are models that work in stable populations where there is a maximum turnover of practice population of, say, 10 per cent. a year, as against populations with a turnover of population of 60 to 70 per cent. a year. It makes a difference whether people work within five miles of their doctor's surgery or whether they are weekly boarders, as most Members of Parliament are. Different solutions are therefore required to meet the laudable objectives of the programme. Although I would not necessarily want to extend the use of walk-in clinics to rural areas or run them in parallel with traditional primary care surgeries, they make a tremendous amount of sense in commuter areas and inner cities. There must be local solutions to the delivery of a national agenda that brings quality and access.

It is therefore disappointing that the NHS Direct initiative has been heralded as a great turning point, a new territory and a new beginning. Many people in the national health service have strived to achieve those very objectives over many years, and many have succeeded. The previous Government should be commended for the initiative that funded some of the out-of-hours costs for GP co-operatives, because that gave people in the profession the enthusiasm to set things up locally, to try them out and to make them work. That also involved telephone triage, partly through doctors but also through the use of nurses and computer programmes. That idea is not new, therefore—NHS Direct has built on a lot of the experience that was obtained in primary care under previous arrangements. Some of those solutions failed and had to be bailed out, but most of them developed into successful services, and they succeeded because they were local.

My professional colleagues felt not so much anxious about, or threatened by, the Government's new measures as irritated. Having slogged their brains out to get something off the ground, they were suddenly told, "We are going to impose something from above. This is what we are calling it. It is our new initiative, and this is what it will be." That initiative is either new or a very expensive rebranding exercise. There is anxiety among the profession that a new, nationally imposed initiative may not necessarily work alongside all the excellent co-operative work that is done in many localities.

Liberal Democrats very much supported the transformation from individual fundholders to multi-funds, and we support the subsequent change to primary care groups and primary care trusts, provided that there is democratic accountability at trust level. We support health improvement programmes that give communities the opportunity to work together, and allow us to integrate social, environmental, some secondary care and primary care services—especially at the acute, out-of-hours, emergency point.

A lot of work has been done over the past couple of years to bring that together. In my own constituency we have a GP out-of-hours, on-call service which has nurses and outreach workers attached to it and employed by it. We have a mental health crisis intervention service and a social services immediate response unit. People wander around with little buttons around their necks and get instant access to emergency services—and very helpful that is, too. We have the ambulance service and the voluntary sector, which provides a lot of advice through helplines.

The Government had a golden opportunity to give some seedcorn money to bring some of those services together. Instead, we are getting a regional service that will take and filter all the calls and then perhaps send them down to the people who have to work together in their locality. It would have been much more sensible for a Minister to tell the people who have to write the health improvement programme, "We expect you to deliver the objectives that we want provided through NHS Direct. Those include access, consistency and the ability to demonstrate that the service is cost-effective." Those people would have got on and developed their own local solutions. What is more, their output could have been monitored by Ministers and audited for effectiveness. Unfortunately, that does not seem to be the pattern that is on offer. People in different parts of the country—my constituents in Hampshire are not unique in this—are told, "No, you've got to start. In time, you might be able to have more autonomy locally." I hope that that is not pathognomonic of a Government who want to control everything, because the solutions that work tend to be local ones.

We have heard of the study that was carried out, and I should briefly mention it. I am amazed that Ministers claim that the interim reports of December 1998 and February 2000 are evidence of anything. They simply set out how much the service is used and whether people like it. They managed to find two disasters in the whole trawl. Although those were very sad and should not have happened, such a trawl is not a scientific piece of work.

It is also amazing that the evaluation of NHS Direct makes no reference to the cost or even the comparative cost of other services. That is not an evaluation of the service. I wonder whether there should be a requirement for Departments that employ outside organisations to evaluate Government activity and initiatives to refer to the Audit Commission or to someone with experience in assessing Government activity before they commission what are, no doubt, expensive studies. It would have made sense in the early pilots—they are the only ones having their second birthday today—to have sensible, hard information from which conclusions could have been drawn about how we reach the objective that we all share. As the hon. Member for Runnymede and Weybridge (Mr. Hammond) said, there is no argument about the objectives for NHS Direct. They are those for the national health service—to provide a good, cost-effective service. However, there is no evidence in what we have before us of whether the imposed solution is the most appropriate.

[Dr. Peter Brand]

Mr. Hammond: The hon. Gentleman has inspired a thought in my mind. Would it not be preferable for the Government to ask the Audit Commission to undertake an investigation into the cost-effectiveness of NHS Direct? If the Government were not minded to do that, would the hon. Gentleman join me in taking a bipartisan approach to the Public Accounts Committee to see whether we can get the National Audit Office to examine the matter in terms of the value for money offered?

Dr. Brand: I am grateful for that intervention. That would be an excellent idea. I suspect that the Government have a lot of figures that would help the Audit Commission in such an investigation.

We are not against what NHS Direct is about. It is right that people should become more knowledgeable about their illnesses and possible treatments for them. That is empowerment of people, which is absolutely correct. The use of the internet is imaginative and will definitely take off in the future. However, I am anxious about having a centralised set-up such as NHS Direct and about whether that will lead to a more centralised and formulated national health service which will try to control not only outcomes—we all want those to be excellent—but the methods by which people use the service. If it is a policy option, it may be sensible to have a national common gateway to services, because they vary in each part of the country. However, I would prefer a gateway that was tailored to localities.

The Minister has not touched on the other primary care role—gate keeping—that has probably kept the national health service from collapsing during the past 10 years when it has been starved of funds. It is difficult to maintain a gateway service without some gate-keeping responsibility, but out-of-hours co-operatives appear to have found a working solution. The nurse on telephone triage has immediate access to a doctor, and decisions can be made on clinical grounds and resource allocation grounds. If only one doctor is on call and the other has to be got out of bed, a decision must be made about whom to see first and who can come into the hospital or the accident and emergency department. Such important decisions can be made only by an integrated team whose members know each other and, preferably, work in the same place. That would be extremely difficult to deliver from an NHS call centre that was 150 miles away and manned by people whom one had never met. I must flag up that concern.

I know that the Minister believes in what she is doing. I respect her a great deal, but I wish that she would produce more evidence to justify her faith in the service. We all have faith in the national health service, but the past few years have demonstrated that we cannot live by faith alone. The money is welcome, but we would also like management that can be seen to be in the interests of the service and can deliver in the most cost-effective way.

More important, the service should bring together all the elements that constitute health care. The Minister would agree that health care is about more than just ensuring the absence of disease. Much of NHS Direct's work will be reassurance. I started my professional career as an honorary granny on a housing estate in which everyone had two children and £2,200 a year, which fact dates me somewhat. None of those people had family support. Many people remain in that position. A service such as NHS Direct is valuable, but it must fit into the panoply of support. The central initiative arises at a time when local integration is taking place, and it risks stopping rather than promoting that integration.

I do not want to start talking about money, but £80 million could have been used imaginatively and to great effect to improve existing structures that were delivering the services and meeting the objectives. Instead, it will be used to set up a parallel service, which the Minister described as an addition, and that may not be the most cost-effective way of meeting the objectives that we all support.

4.43 pm

Mr. David Tredinnick (Bosworth): I am not sure whether we can describe the debate as heated, but before you took the Chair, Madam Deputy Speaker, the Chamber was certainly heated. As you will be here throughout the summer, it might be in your interests and those of hon. Members to know that the central heating system has broken down and that there are problems with the valves. Having served on a Committee that used the Room for a year during the previous Parliament—perhaps the last to consider a private Bill, a railway Bill—I can assure you that this is a hot Chamber in the summer, because of the heat generated by the roof. I am sure that you will want to investigate that.

I am especially delighted to have been called, because I have a long-standing interest in health matters, particularly complementary medicine. It is a pleasure to take part in a debate with the Minister, the hon. Member for Colne Valley (Kali Mountford), the hon. Member for Isle of Wight (Dr. Brand)—a medical doctor—and my hon. Friend the Member for Runnymede and Weybridge (Mr. Hammond).

We are talking about a new initiative with a budget of £80 million. I support what the hon. Member for Isle of Wight said and I support the service's objectives. The four principal objectives are to provide advice on health care 24 hours a day, provide simple and speedy access to information, improve the quality and cost-effectiveness of health service provision and—perhaps the most important in the long term—encourage patients to be partners in their own health care. That is an important concept, although I am not sure whether it is original—I think that the Conservatives introduced it. However, NHS Direct is an important initiative.

I support my hon. Friend the Member for Runnymede and Weybridge, who said from the Conservative Front Bench that the key issue is cost-effectiveness. Is the service affordable in the context of other demands? Does it represent value for money? I am not sure that the Minister has answered that question yet.

I also support what the hon. Member for Isle of Wight said: the Minister could perhaps have said a bit more in her opening speech in support of the new initiative. In fact, he questioned whether she really believed in it at all. The Minister referred to the expectations of the public and the extra billions that were being put into the health service. She called it the reinvention of the health service and said that the stakes were going up and that there were 750,000 calls a day to the service.

The Minister told a lovely story about a lady on her way to a wedding, who had a problem that was solved by NHS Direct. She could also have referred to the problem that Elizabeth Thompson faced: she rang NHS Direct, saying that she was suffering from indigestion, and was diagnosed with the symptoms of a heart attack. Those two stories illustrate not only the potential benefits of the new system, but the potential problems.

Another key issue which the Minister mentioned concerned how we should broaden the role of nurses. My hon. Friend the Member for Runnymede and Weybridge perhaps did not refer to that, which might leave me to deal with it. At Bournemouth, we heard the Government announce that some grades of nurse should have more responsibility. I will not speak for long, because I know that the hon. Member for Colne Valley is anxious to contribute. As a Back Bencher, I know what it is like not having an opportunity to speak when one has waited for a long time.

What advice do the carefully selected nurses on the line at NHS Direct give? If the role of nurses is broadened to give them more responsibility, presumably they can talk about more things. If patients are going to get into a partnership with the NHS through NHS Direct, they want to talk about what they want to talk about.

There is increasing evidence that the public—4 million to 5 million people a year—are talking about and acting on complementary medicine. The Government have really missed a trick. If ever there were a case for new Labour showing that it was progressive and concerned about new things that people outside the House are worried about, surely it is complementary and alternative medicine. One can hardly pick up a Sunday or daily newspaper without a complementary or alternative therapy being described.

The number of patients attending complementary practices represents about 20 per cent. of the public, and about 75 per cent. of the public support NHS access to complementary medicine. The reasons for that are a continuing scepticism about drugs and side effects, a continuing media optimism about and support for complementary therapies and, as a study has shown, the public's growing wish to take more responsibility for health choices. Surely that is identical to the objective set out by the Under-Secretary. It is borne out by evidence on doctor attitudes, which shows that 28 per cent. of GP practices in my own county of Leicestershire provide complementary services in the health service. I should point out that that was under the previous Administration. The figure may have gone down since then, but I must not engage in political knockabout, as we are short of time. Evidence also shows that 20 per cent. of nurses in Leicestershire and 34 per cent. of midwives use complementary therapies.

How does that fit in with NHS Direct? The Under-Secretary may say that we must put safety first. Huge strides have been made in regulating complementary and alternative medicine. Now, if ever, is the time for the Under-Secretary to examine how nurses may use alternative services and reduce the pressure on conventional services. The hon. Member for Isle of Wight, who practised as a doctor before he was elected, used to provide such services: perhaps he still does—I do not want his entire patient list to collapse as a result of my remarks.

How can alternative services be used by NHS Direct to reduce the burden on doctors? I picked up from a House of Commons cafeteria a leaflet stating that powerful stress relief is freely available to Members of Parliament in the form of acupressure treatment, one of several complementary therapies offered at Westminster gym. If that is available to hon. Members, should it not be available to the public?

The British Complementary Medicine Association confirms in a press release its intention to keep improving standards, backing the Department of Health's submission to the Lords Sub-Committee on Complementary and Alternative Medicine. It complains that some further education teachers of such therapies do not have sufficiently high standards. It offers a general advice service on complementary medicine. I am trying to be generous and wish to make a couple more remarks, but I do not want to take too long.

Madam Deputy Speaker: Order. I am not seeking to limit the hon. Gentleman's remarks. I do not think that he has an interest in that matter and know that he will be careful about commercials. It may help if he avoids reading certain things into the record.

Mr. Tredinnick: I completely misunderstood you, Madam Deputy Speaker.

Madam Deputy Speaker: You are not the first man to do that.

Mr. Tredinnick: Having served with you on the Liaison Committee, Madam Deputy Speaker, I am appalled to have made such a mistake. I certainly was not trying to make a commercial—that is the last thing that I want to do. I have no interest—registered or otherwise—at all in the British Complementary Medicine Association, but it does represent complementary medicine outside the House. I did not wish to promote it; rather, I was pointing out that regulation is improving.

Homeopathic doctors have been regulated since 1950. Osteopathy has been regulated since 1993, when the Osteopaths Bill was enacted—I was a member of the Committee that considered that Bill. I also sat on the Standing Committee that considered the Bill that became the Chiropractos Act 1994.

A range of measures are being taken to make complementary therapies safer. The Anglo-European College of Chiropractic is applying for designation as a fit and proper institution to receive public funds from the Department for Education and Employment. Shiatsu uses finger-pressure treatment to stimulate the body's energy, described by the Chinese as chi. The Shiatsu Society has high standards and was established in 1981 and has nearly 1,700 members. It has an assessment panel and code of ethics, holds a practitioner register and requires practitioner insurance.

[Mr. Tredinnick]

That is another example of improved standards. Indeed, the previous Government facilitated approved standards for reflexology, aromatherapy, and hypnotherapy. There are now new standards for homeopathy. Last week, at the homeopathic college in Regents Park—

Madam Deputy Speaker: Order. The debate is about NHS Direct and I hope that the hon. Gentleman will remember that.

Mr. Tredinnick: I certainly will, Madam Deputy Speaker. I merely wanted to draw attention to the fact that five homeopathic bodies have come together with a new form of regulation. The Minister should have some confidence about allowing NHS Direct nurses to refer certain cases to complementary therapists. Complementary therapy has a role to play. For example, stress can be reduced by lavender drops; arnica relieves back pain; Optrex, which contains witch-hazel, helps to relieve eye problems; and breathing exercises can help various ailments. There are tremendous opportunities for nurses, some of whom have experience of such complementary remedies. The next question is whether they will be allowed to use it.

Dr. Brand: There is a problem about legal liability. The hon. Gentleman has explained that some alternative practitioners are registered and may carry insurance, but if an NHS Direct nurse advises seeing an alternative practitioner, the problem is whether she will be liable if the advice proves inappropriate.

Mr. Tredinnick: The hon. Gentleman makes a good point. Another issue is whether there should be a national register of complementary therapists, but we had better not go over that ground.

Many nurses on the NHS Direct helpline have experience of complementary therapies. The Minister should find out what they are and establish whether such nurses could make some referrals. That could relieve the pressure on the surgery of the hon. Member for Isle of Wight and those of other doctors. The Government should not miss this trick. It is really worth exploring. So many people could be helped.

4.56 pm

Kali Mountford (Colne Valley): I thank the hon. Member for Bosworth (Mr. Tredinnick) for being generous with his brevity. We started the afternoon seeming as if we had time for a meandering stroll, but I am now in the 100 yd dash, so I shall attempt to keep my remarks as succinct as possible.

I do not know whether I am the only Back-Bench Member with NHS Direct in my constituency, as I have not studied the constituencies of all hon. Members present. I wish to talk about the experience of patients using NHS Direct and about modernisation of the NHS more widely.

My first point of call has to be the opening of NHS Direct in Wakefield, which serves my constituency. I had the honour and privilege to attend it with the former Secretary of State for Health, my right hon. Friend the Member for Holborn and St. Pancras (Mr. Dobson). It was an eye-opening experience. The service had been running a little while. Its staff obviously wanted us to see them at their best, but I cannot believe that anyone who attended that day could fail to be impressed by the professionalism of the staff and the experience that they brought to their work. The nurses drew on more than their experience of being nurses; their life experiences were important too. When I attended, there was only one male nurse, and I noticed that all the nurses were a little older, had families and a rich experience of life as well as of the NHS, which made them so suitable for this work.

The new technology was also interesting and I was allowed a little practice. I cannot profess to have been good with it, but it gave me some comfort to know that it worked. For example, I had recently had a tiny accident with my finger, so the staff suggested demonstrating what would have happened if I had called them. It was an enlightening experience. The advice that I would have got, had I been sensible enough to take it, would have made my finger better a lot quicker. As it was, I had a huge finger which throbbed unnecessarily. The process was so logical and precise that even someone like me could avoid making a mistake. The nurses brought their own wealth of experience to the system. Although they used it far better than I could have done, the technology was impressive.

I was particularly impressed by the technology that was used for interpretation. While I was there, a call came in from someone who had English as a second language. The service was very effective, certainly a more effective service than my GPs have available to them. They have to ring the local authority, which has some interpreters available and loans them out from time to time to people who need them. They may have to be booked two weeks or a month in advance because there is such a high demand for interpreters who can do such work. The hon. Member for Isle of Wight (Dr. Brand) shakes his head. I can only tell him of my own experience.

Mr. Hammond: I may be mistaken, and no doubt the Minister will correct me, but my understanding from my visit to NHS Direct was that the interpretation service is that provided by BT and available to anyone. Indeed, the GPs in the hon. Lady's constituency could make use of it, if they wished to, but it is not cheap.

Kali Mountford: That is obviously true. But the hon. Member for Runnymede and Weybridge (Mr. Hammond) was arguing that, when people went to see their GP, they had a one-on-one experience. Clearly it makes sense for a telephone advice line to use another telephone advice line because the conversation takes place on a linked network. The same would not be true in a GP's surgery. I cannot speak for every practice in my constituency, but few GPs at my practice would do that. They would wait until another individual could attend or refer the patient elsewhere.

A number of people in the local hospital can give such advice and when I attended hospital recently I witnessed that, too. That obviously is beneficial in those circumstances. But we cannot simply denounce the fact that interpreters are available through BT who are accessed directly by NHS Direct. There is a definite benefit to that individual whose conversation I witnessed. The hon. Gentleman did not seem enthusiastic about the service earlier. Having seen what I saw, I am.

Hon. Members have taken us on a debate about qualitative studies and hard scientific studies. It has almost been like being back at college and having debates with hard scientists, as I did as a social scientist, about the quality of data and what can and cannot be accepted. I still defend my position that there is genuine benefit from looking at so-called soft results. [Interruption.] The hon. Member for Isle of Wight was quite disparaging about the Sheffield study. Sheffield university is a highly thought-of university. Its study gives some genuine results. It does not give the sort of hard data that hon. Gentlemen want, but numbers are not the only issue. People's experience has some merit.

Dr. Brand: I was disparaging not so much Sheffield university's study as the parameters that were set for it. It excluded all costs. Is the hon. Lady really telling us that the NHS should be run on a touchy-feely, feel-good basis or do we need hard information? Why do we have NICE in that case?

Kali Mountford: Obviously there is a place for all sorts of data. I had the impression from the debate so far that the hon. Gentlemen disparaged soft information which could add much to people's experience of the NHS and has a value. That does not mean that we do not have to count the heads too. There is some hard evidence—as a social scientist I would count it as hard evidence— that there has been a genuine change in people's behaviour and their experience of the NHS. Anecdotal evidence may not be what the hon. Gentlemen have valued so far in the debate, but I will give some nevertheless. It is not often that people come foward with thank yous.

Mr. Hammond: Will the hon. Lady give way?

Kali Mountford: Time is short, but I will.

Mr. Hammond: It does not seem that short to me. The hon. Lady is making a big issue about hard versus soft evidence. The Government have set out a series of objective tests that institutions such as NICE must use. Does the hon. Lady not think that the right way to allocate scarce resources in the NHS is to ensure that anything that we do is clinically and cost-effective?

Kali Mountford: I have already made this point. There is a place for both. Although I accept that cost-effectiveness and clinical effectiveness must be measured, those are not the only data that should be examined. The evidence shows that there have been some genuine benefits in a fairly short time and I suggest that that is of value.

Dr. Brand: Would the hon. Lady therefore agree that the Audit Commission might consider this matter, because additional soft evidence is excellent, but is of use only if it is additional to hard evidence, which must include costs?

Kali Mountford: That is an interesting point and not one that I would necessarily throw away with the bath water, but it was not the point that I was trying to make. Because they have the Sheffield report in front of them, the hon. Members for Isle of Wight and for Runnymede and Weybridge have concentrated heavily on it. The hon. Member for Isle of Wight made a suggestion that had some value, but that does not mean that we can simply take the report apart, disparage it and say that it offers nothing to the debate. I do not believe that it does.

I will return to the anecdotal evidence of my constituents who, when a new service is introduced by the Government, do not generally ring me up to tell me about their wonderful experiences. The difference here is that NHS Direct is extremely popular. I do not suggest that everything that Governments do must be popular, but it would be ludicrous to deny that popularity is a measure of success.

Mr. Hammond: The hon. Lady, no doubt inadvertently, has precisely made my case for me. The concern is that the Government have rolled out NHS Direct without sufficient hard evidence of its effectiveness because it is popular and will help them to curry favour with the electorate. That is my concern.

Kali Mountford: The hon. Gentleman talked earlier about sceptics. That was rather cynical. Popularity in itself is not the only thing that should concern us. However, when the first feedback that a Member of Parliament receives from her constituents is a flurry of unsolicited responses about their marvellous experiences, I, for one, will not ignore it. That does not mean that it does not need to be backed up with further evidence. I should be quite surprised if in this, as in all things, the Government do not check progress and continually monitor the service's effectiveness.

This afternoon's debate about the introduction of NHS Direct and what it is doing shows us that we must consider our constituents' response to that service. I shall tell hon. Members about three people. In their different ways they illustrate some points. The first concerns Shirley. She went to her GP. It was her first port of call. She went to the surgery with an ordinary appointment because, like me, she had a swollen finger. It did not seem important or too worrying, but it did not seem to go away and she did not feel too well. The GP precribed some drugs, and she went away feeling happy. Unfortunately, her hand got significantly worse.

Shirley was in agonising pain by the middle of the night, which is when people get especially anxious, having left things all day, hoping that they will feel better. She did not want to disturb anyone and, anxious not to waste anyone's time—many constituents who contact me feel the same—she called NHS Direct. She was told, "You must go to the A and E department in the morning, or even now if the pain is too bad. You are not having the sort of response that we would expect from the treatment that you had. You really need to be looked at again." She went to the A and E department and was admitted with a blood disorder that had not been detected. She stayed in hospital for a fortnight before Christmas and has still not fully recovered.

NHS Direct gave Shirley valuable advice. She might not have taken it; instead, she might have wrapped her hand in ice, thinking that she had something in it and that that was what she should do. We do not know what the outcome would have been if she had done that and waited until she could get another appointment with her GP a week later.

[Kali Mountford]

Mr. Hammond: The hon. Lady has introduced a new element into the debate. Hitherto, we have been talking about NHS Direct as a first point of contact. However, the hon. Lady seems to be advocating that a patient who is already under the doctor and not responding to treatment should go to NHS Direct instead of going back to the doctor. Is that really an appropriate way to build on the continuity of care in our GP service?

Kali Mountford: The hon. Gentleman misses the point. Patients will make their own decisions. We can tell them, "This must always be your first point of contact," but they will do what they think best in the circumstances. We have talked about NHS Direct as an addition to out-of-hours services, and that is how Shirley was using it.

The second patient to whom I want to refer is Victoria. Hon. Members have already observed that many of the people who call NHS Direct are women, and all three of the cases to which I shall refer involve women. Victoria thought that she had had indigestion for four days. It was very troublesome, and she finally rang NHS Direct, thinking that it was so trivial that she should not disturb her GP but wanting advice about whether to go to the pharmacy to get something like Gaviscon. NHS Direct quickly got an ambulance to her because she was having a heart attack. She was admitted to hospital for some time. Although she is now fully recovered, she must have continued coronary heart care. Her words to me were that NHS Direct had saved her life, because she was going to ignore the gathering pain.

The next story is fairly typical, and concerns my grandson. There was a bad flu epidemic over Christmas, and my daughter thought that her son had flu, like everyone else. He got worse and worse, and she got more anxious. She could not get hold of me because I was here, so she rang her GP. She could not get a response because it was late at night. Three or four calls later, she had spoken to no one at all, just an answering machine. I do know why that was, but she did not feel that was an adequate response.

Dr. Brand I would be concerned if my colleagues were breaking their terms of service. I hope that the answering machine gave a number that she could have rung to obtain out-of-hours advice.

Kali Mountford: The sorry tale is that, when she called that number, she spoke to a person who said that he could not deal with her call for some hours. She was very anxious about her son, who was feeling very poorly by this time. Again, NHS Direct referred her son quickly to a hospital, and he was admitted. He stayed there for a week, having contracted a serious virus. He was very poorly for some time.

Mr. Tredinnick: The hon. Lady has spoken eloquently. I sat down a little early in the hope that she would have an opportunity to speak. All of us hope that the Minister will respond to the points raised. I hope that the hon. Lady will bear that in mind.

Kali Mountford Of course I will. I was trying to raise some points, but I have taken many interventions from other hon. Members. I am sure that, had I not done so, I would have finished speaking earlier.

The point of all those cases—I could quote dozens of similar stories from my constituency—is that they are typical of the fact that people got a service, often late at night, that they felt was not available to them in some other way and they took different decisions from those that they might have taken. That made a real difference to their life and health. Surely that is what the health service should be about. I am disappointed—[Interruption.] Does the hon. Gentleman wish to intervene?

Dr. Brand: No.

Kali Mountford: I am sorry, but I thought that the hon. Gentleman wanted to intervene. It was obviously a trick of the eye.

My enthusiasm for NHS Direct has grown out of not only my experience, but that of my constituents. Obviously, if people want to take the line of hard evidence so that we can add up the number of people employed and the number receiving the service, there is a role for that. But some of this afternoon's evidence caused me some concern. At one point the hon. Member for Runnymede and Weybridge said that he was comparing apples with apples. To do that, one has to be sure that what constitutes apples is identical, but, in the case of which he spoke, that was not at all clear. After all, in any attempt to compare the cost of the delivery of the service with the delivery of an out-of-hours GP service, I should have to know what was included in the cost make-up. For example, it would make little sense to me to suggest that the cost of a nurse's time is greater than that of a GP's time. The last time that I looked at pay scales, a nurse's salary was significantly less than a GP's. Although that is not the only item included in the scale of costs, it is significant.

Mr. Hammond: I thank the hon. Lady. The point is that GPs are not paid overtime for providing their out-of-hours service. There is a fixed cost to the NHS. Although I understand entirely what the hon. Lady says, does she accept that the Government have identified a need to look at the clinical and cost-effectiveness of any service that the NHS proposes to introduce before valuable and scarce NHS money is spent on it?

Kali Mountford: We return to the issue and the answer is the same. I have never said that that would be a bad idea. What I do think is that, with new NHS Direct pilots—I am not sure whether we can call them that—less than two years old, we ought to rejoice in the experiences of people who have been helped by NHS Direct. Simply focusing on the bums-on-seats approach does not allow a true evaluation of the service so far. We shall have to wait until people tell us that they would have made a different choice. People in the three cases that I outlined earlier benefited from the service.

The Minister said that evaluation of the NHS in general is not always only about money. I should be most disturbed if the time ever came when NHS Direct could be evaluated only by its cost-effectiveness and emphasis on cost. Effectiveness and experience, yes. Cost must play a role; it would be ridiculous to spend money unwisely. Having said that, focusing on cost alone gives me concern and pause for thought.

Dr. Brand: Does the hon. Lady not recognise my frustration in having to cut exercise programmes on prescription, hydrotherapy on prescription and some alternative therapies available on the NHS purely on cost grounds? Costs cannot be isolated, however worthy one's objectives.

Kali Mountford: I am tempted to go on a detour in my meandering to address that point. We would have to examine existing problems in the NHS and establish why budgets have been so strained and constrained in recent years, and then determine what could be done as a result of the recent Budget.

Mr. Tredinnick: May I tempt the hon. Lady into the 15 minutes' injury time which is available because we voted in the Chamber earlier? Are not many complementary and alternative therapies much cheaper than the drugs offered in the health service?

Madam Deputy Speaker: Order. I hope that hon. Members will not relax too much on the basis of injury time. I must point out again that the subject of the debate remains NHS Direct.

Kali Mountford: Thank you, Madam Deputy Speaker, for rescuing me.

We spoke earlier about measuring effectiveness, but there has not been much of that in respect of complementary and alternative medicine. The hon. Member for Bosworth talked about regulation, but no one wants an unregulated health service. NHS Direct is regulated and I should like to redraw hon. Members' attention to my own experience of seeing it work for myself. I recall the true professionalism of those nurses, which was equal to that of any others in the health service. They gave me the comfort of knowing that the service would be beneficial and valuable.

I also experienced the service as a whole, rather than just in relation to individual patients. My own grandson was taken ill during the flu epidemic. People were reading newspaper reports of dreadful stresses on NHS Direct. In my own constituency, I undertook to phone around a few GPs, as did the local newspaper. The paper sought stories of disaster, but I sought to find out what was going on. I heard about GPs sitting by the phone waiting for calls. NHS Direct had already taken people to the right place for the right treatment—at the pharmacy, unless their condition had developed to the extent that extra intervention was necessary.

Most flu epidemics can be controlled by proper use of over-the-counter drugs. Not everyone needs a GP in those circumstances. Fluid treatments are well understood in most families, yet people become anxious. The calls to NHS Direct saved a lot of strain on GP services and helped accident and emergency services in hospitals to manage the unexpected winter crisis. In my constituency, the crisis never arrived.

Only last Friday I discussed a range of issues with my area health authority. I shall not trouble the Chamber with the details this afternoon, but one important point emerged. Although it had not made its own detailed evaluation of what happened that winter and whether NHS Direct made a lesser or bigger contribution, it was clear that the winter period had been managed well. The health authority acknowledged that NHS Direct had made a significant impact on the management of the treatment of patients over that time.

Mr. Hammond: I sense that the hon. Lady is coming to the end of her speech, so I wish to try one more time to establish whether she supports the Government's initiative in introducing the National Institute for Clinical Excellence and the criteria set by the Government for measuring the appropriateness of treatments and processes in the NHS. If so, does she accept that the same criteria must apply to evaluation of NHS Direct?

Kali Mountford: The hon. Gentleman seems to suggest that different forms of evaluation are mutually exclusive. I can only repeat what I have said already. I do not know why the hon. Gentleman is trying to extract a different reply now from the one that I have already given.

The Minister referred to the development of NHS Direct. When my right hon. Friend the Member for Holborn and St. Pancras was the Secretary of State for Health, I raised a point with him about the further development of NHS Direct's links not only with GPs—those links are already in place—but with the wider community. At that time, there was a meningitis scare in my constituency, and I saw a role for NHS Direct in providing a service to anxious parents.

I was fascinated by some of the Minister's comments about examining what more could be done with pharmacists, and what could be done to deal with teenage pregnancies. Tackling local crises such as meningitis outbreaks, or, as is common in my constituency, cryptosporidium problems relating to spring water, may be part of NHS Direct's future. That would add to NHS services, and I hope that NHS Direct will develop in that way. Notwithstanding what hon. Members said about wanting hard data, my experience of NHS Direct has been good, and my enthusiasm for it remains.

5.25 pm

Ms Stuart: This has been a fascinating debate, which has at times reminded me of a letter that I read in Pulse from a Scottish general practitioner. He went to great lengths to say that NHS Direct was a total waste of time and effort, and that it had made absolutely no difference to his practice. Then I read his address and I thought, "Yes, of course, it wouldn't have, because they don't have NHS Direct in Scotland."

In the light of some of the comments that were made, I want to remind hon. Members what NHS Direct is about. Some may remember the notion of cards. A nice little NHS Direct card says that

NHS Direct is a 24 hour nurse-led confidential helpline providing advice and information on: what to do if you're feeling ill; health concerns for you or your family; local health services; self-help and support organisations.

[Ms Stuart]

I suggest that one could not attempt to give that card to NICE to assess with its clinical evaluation criteria. We are not comparing apples with apples. The effectiveness of NHS Direct services is assessed while they are used and rolled out, and that means a long time scale.

The hon. Member for Runnymede and Weybridge (Mr. Hammond) was absolutely right to say that we need assessment, but that must be carried out in a controlled way which gives proper perspective. All the concerns that the services are changing behaviour need time to be examined. We need longitudinal studies as well as localised in-depth studies. Several assessments are being undertaken. Over Christmas, for example, we picked three sites in which to assess satisfaction. In the west midlands, NHS Direct undertook a study that showed that 95 per cent. of referrals to GPs were appropriate. All those actions must be considered.

Mr. Hammond: Will the Minister give way?

Ms Stuart: I will, but I will not be so indulgent in allowing interventions as the day goes on, because I must put right several misconceptions.

Mr. Hammond: The point that I have tried to make throughout the debate is not, as the Minister said, that I am hostile to NHS Direct as a concept. By piloting a scheme, the Government imply that they will examine the results and appraise the evidence, and base their decision on that. I have asked the Minister to tell us how that is being done, and to present evidence, because we have not seen any in a form that could justify the decision to roll out NHS Direct nationwide.

Ms Stuart: The concept of using the telephone line as NHS Direct does, and of using nurse triage over the telephone, is extensively established in the United Sates, where it has been tested. It is inappropriate to assume that the service was started without any background. Commercial call centre experience can help in dealing with telephone calls, and clinical experience can also be relied on. The service has been tested for clinical safety, and its record on clinical accidents is exemplary.

At the moment, NHS Direct projects starting up may use call handlers, or have a link with a GP co-operative or ambulance trust. The roll-out is an extension and is responsive to local needs. As we move on and as national procurement is made, we have to decide whether, for example, regional centres should interact with local centres. The roll-out is extremely controlled and project managed, and is continually assessed.

It was argued that the Sheffield evidence was insufficient and that unconvincing data demonstrated that the programme had not been carefully tested. I got the impression that hon. Members believe that NHS Direct should not be on offer because it cannot be measured, even though they accept that NHS Direct is working, the public understand the advice and the service is used extensively. Let me assure hon. Members that the roll-out and triage are tested.

Comments were also made about the scepticism of some GPs. The service is completely new, and it is always difficult to explain such a thing to someone who has not worked with it. There is a tendancy to liken the service to out-of-hours services and so on. It is, however, an additional service, which brings me to the comments of the hon. Member for Isle of Wight (Dr. Brand), who is a responsible general practitioner who feels that he has been doing such things.

Unfortunately, however, not all the hon. Gentleman's colleagues are like him. Some doctors do not have access to such a service, and hon. Members requiring evidence on that should refer to the last edition of the patient survey. The chances of getting out-of-hours service, a GP coming out to visit and access to information vary tremendously across the country. It is not helpful to be told that something would have happened if the money had been granted.

The hon. Member for Isle of Wight rightly said that the NHS has always had such ambitions and aspirations. For 50 years, however, no such service was implemented, but it is now being put into operation coherently. Good advice and good systems are available, and there are good examples of integration with the mental health service, as the hon. Member for Runnymede and Weybridge said. We want a health service with national coverage that is responsive and delivers 24-hour service, regardless of where those using it live. Salami-slicing remarks suggesting that such a service was already available are therefore untrue.

There is a misunderstanding about whether the system is diagnostic. The system does not tell people the nature of their disease. If offers a risk assessment of their symptoms and suggests appropriate follow-up and advice. That brings me to a certain New Statesman writer, to whom I shall respond by saying that anyone who rings NHS Direct is at liberty to take or refuse the advice. If people choose not to see their GP, even though advised to do so, that is their choice. Criticising the service is not appropriate if one has not followed its advice.

All the evidence is that those who ring understand the service. When I read the Sheffield evaluation stating that 98 per cent. of NHS Direct callers understand the advice that they were given, my initial reaction was to wonder why that was so remarkable. However, I reconsidered the matter, and my thoughts are relevant to the question about NHS Direct being used as a second opinion. Often, patients seeing their GP do not have enough time or do not take in information fully—a position with which we are all familiar. NHS Direct is sometimes used to get reassurance.

There is nothing wrong or inappropriate in that, but it is not true to say that such seeking of second opinion does not already take place. I talked to an A and E doctor last weekend who, when he worked as a GP and did Sunday duty, would sometimes run into patients who had visited him during the week and had come to the A and E department for a second opinion.

I come now to the NHS Direct cost analysis. We have made extensive use of the experience of commercial call centres. One could make an easy analogy and ask,

"What does it cost to call the telephone banks, and how does that compare with NHS Direct?" That would not be an entirely accurate comparison, however, because the strength of NHS Direct is that it brings together commercial call centre experience with qualified nurses who take the patients seriously. The nurses have time to speak to the patients at length—the call can last five minutes or half an hour. A mother can ring and say that her child is unwell, and the nurse can ring back half an hour later and ask whether the child is all right. The mother may say that the child still has a high temperature or that he is all right and watching television. That kind of responsiveness, and that ability to give time to the patient, is often overlooked in the delivery of medical services.

That brings me on to the point made by the hon. Member for Bosworth (Mr. Tredinnick). Medicine means more than just traditional medicine in the accepted sense—an important part of a decent health care system is the element of care. Patients like NHS Direct because the nurses are responsive and because the programme uses nurses' ability to communicate, which is one of their strongest points and should not be underestimated.

The hon. Member for Bosworth was worried that we were overlooking complementary medicine, but a nurse would never neglect to advise a patient to contact his or her GP or pharmacist, for example, or to see the A and E department. NHS Direct links in with the health information service, which provides the best advice on what complementary medicine is available in which area. Although the nurses cannot perhaps recommend a specific course of action, they can recommend a next step. Nurses on NHS Direct can also provide advice to someone who rings about a bereavement, because they have links with Cruise and the Samaritans.

That brings me to the point that was made about repeat callers. I do not have the statistics in my head, but the percentage of the population that takes up GPs' or acute health service time represents a narrow band. Surprisingly, it almost contradicts the principle that 20 per cent. of the population uses 80 per cent. of the resources. Some repeat calling is appropriate, but there are people who call only for the support and may have mental health or other problems. Again, NHS Direct channels such calls either to the statutory or to the alternative service; and again that is right and proper.

Mr. Hammond: What the Minister says makes sense in a world that is not resource constrained. Given that there are those constraints in the NHS, does the Minister agree with the point that I have tried to make before, that the Government's own criteria of clinical and cost-effectiveness must be applied? The onus is on her to demonstrate that those criteria have been applied in rolling out NHS Direct.

Ms Stuart: Of course, there has been a cost evaluation, and the cost of the calls provided and of billing, the ratio of staffing and the levels of efficiency have been compared with those for other services. However, it is an additional service that will continue to be assessed.

I will not give way any more because a couple of important points must be addressed. My hon. Friend the Member for Colne Valley (Kali Mountford) gave her moving account of her own and her constituents' life-changing experiences. We should remember that the protocol used by nurses is not like the out-of-hours service, whereby GPs use their long years of experience to give advice. NHS Direct nurses follow a protocol, which is repeatable and clinically safe, to give advice.

My hon. Friend also mentioned meningitis. As anyone who works in the health service knows, meningitis is one of the most fiendishly difficult diseases to recognise in its early stages. It also progresses incredibly quickly. A GP may see a child at 3 pm with just a high temperature. Half an hour later, that child may show the classic symptoms of meningitis. That is accepted. I was taken through how a nurse would explain to a mother how to carry out the glass test for suspected meningitis. A mother would not go to a GP at 5, 6, 7 or 8 pm, but she would be happy to make regular calls to NHS Direct. Therefore, it does provide something new, which the technology simply did not provide previously.

My hon. Friend gave valuable insights into the psychology of the issue. That is for the long term. She drew on her experience as a social scientist. This is hard science, but it is also social science. We operate clinically based, evidence-based medicine. However, we are also irrational human beings; we have fears and uncertainties. NHS Direct is partly aimed at empowering patients to have the confidence to take the next step. We need to focus more on giving people some responsibility for their own health. That means that extra advice is sometimes needed. People need the confidence sometimes to consult their pharmacist, to administer a self-remedy, or to know that it is safe to say, "I'll just stay in bed and see how I feel tomorrow." At the same time, people need the means of checking whether something sounds more urgent. It will no doubt take time to achieve all that, and integration with other services.

The extension of NHS Direct was also mentioned. In Essex, a pilot scheme has begun, whereby NHS Direct and social services work together. The provision of health services must be much more seamless. Health services and social services have to work much more closely together, so NHS Direct is bringing that about as well.

The debate has been extremely valuable, and I hope that hon. Members have listened. I urge anyone who has not used NHS Direct to do so, to gain an understanding of what it is all about. The health service has reached a stage at which the status quo is not acceptable. We need to change. Life styles are changing.

Mr. Tredinnick: One of the things which I wanted to tease out concerns the complementary services. We have nurses in Leicestershire who are trained in aromatherapy, because there is a big centre for that in my constituency, and who can offer sound advice on how to relieve stress and other ailments. What happens when they pick up the telephone? Do they have to go through the health information service, or refer people to A and E, pharmacists, or GPs, or can they make suggestions?

Ms Stuart: They would not make suggestions. People would either ask, for example, where they could access aromatherapy, or say that they needed to see a doctor and ask what was the next step. NHS Direct is a way of modernising the service. It is a telephone line, supported by NHS Online and the printed NHS guides that form a book, produced as a result of the 20 most common symptoms presented, which gives advice. NHS Direct is one vital building block in modernising the NHS, empowering the patient and delivering a fast, reliable and modern service.

Question put and agreed to.

Adjourned accordingly at seventeen minutes to Six o'clock.

Written Answers to Questions

Monday 27 March 2000

HOME DEPARTMENT

Crime Fighting Fund

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will provide further details about the additional money for fighting crime, which was announced by the Chancellor of the Exchequer in his Budget Statement on 21 March; and if he will make a statement. [116484]

Mr. Straw: As a result of the funding decisions outlined in the Budget statement, there will be a significant injection of £285 million for tackling crime and the causes of crime. This comprises capital modernisation funding of £185 million for a range of projects and a £100 million fund for modernising policing, of which around £91 million is for England and Wales and £9 million is for Scotland. £14 million of expenditure under the capital modernisation fund has been previously announced in respect of DNA. The rest represents new money.

This funding will be used to step up the fight against crime in four key areas. It will speed up the recruitment of new officers; create more opportunities for local partnerships to tackle crime and disorder; provide further scientific and technological support to increase their effectiveness; and will develop and modernise the Criminal Justice System.

Crime Fighting Fund

The first deployment of resources from the £91 million fund for modernising policing will be utilised to enhance the crime fighting fund. Under the crime fighting fund, police forces have been allocated their shares of the 5,000 additional recruits over the next three years. This programme will now be brought forward with the aim of delivering all 5,000 within two years. Doubling the number to be recruited during the coming financial year will cost in the region of £11 million, above and beyond the £35 million which has already been provided for the current allocation. A further significant portion of the new £91 million funding will be used to assist the Metropolitan Police and other forces which are having particular difficulties with recruitment and retention, including the development of a national police recruiting campaign.

Partnerships

This new fund will also be an important contributor to strengthening the services which the police deliver including cutting crime. In that context, I will also want to look closely at the resources available to support the work with which the police are involved on local partnerships for tackling crime. In particular, I want to look at the resources to deal with local problems of anti-social behaviour, to improve information sharing between partner agencies, and to provide more effective training in the development and implementation of local crime reduction strategies. One specific new development in this area is that capital modernisation fund monies will provide £950,000 to Operation LION. This is a programme being piloted in London which will encourage the development of integrated strategies to reduce crime and improve community safety.

Police—Science and Technology

The capital modernisation fund will also boost the programme of work we already have in hand to roll out the latest and best in science and technology to the Police Service.

We shall be applying £40 million of new capital modernisation funding, together with £6 million already set aside, to roll out a new suite of information technology applications to support police operations as part of the national strategy for police information systems. The new systems, one on case preparation, the other for custody suites, will reduce considerably the burden of paperwork and bureaucracy, releasing police manpower to their primary duties. These projects will also be at the heart of a network of information technology systems connecting the criminal justice system and improving the efficiency of the whole process.

We are also using £25 million of the capital modernisation funding to establish a new Government technical assistance centre (GTAC). GTAC will enable us to respond to the threat to public safety from criminal use of encryption and will provide law enforcement agencies with the capability to derive intelligence and evidence from new information and communication technologies. It will make a difference between serious crime being prevented or punished and criminals going unpunished and free to continue their activities by providing techniques for lawful interception of modern multimedia communications. It will also improve facilities for deriving evidence from lawfully seized computer data.

The programme to expand the national database of criminal DNA profiles, which the Prime Minister announced last September, will also start delivering on 1 April. The capital modernisation funding includes £14 million specifically for the DNA database, as part of the £34 million envelope of funding for the DNA project which has already been announced.

A further £21 million has been allocated for the roll out of equipment to police forces for the video recording of interviews with suspects. The full roll out is subject to the evaluation of an initial pilot scheme and the necessary parliamentary legislation. But in principle, video taping will offer the prospect of an end to disputes in court about what actually happened during police interviews and thus deliver fairer administration of justice.

Another significant project using the latest technology will receive funding to help the fight against property crime. £4.5 million is being provided to develop the electronic 'chipping' of goods. These electronic data tags will assist police officers or investigators in identifying and recovering stolen merchandise and be a powerful deterrent to would-be thieves, not only by increasing the risk of being caught but by making it more difficult for them to find purchasers of stolen merchandise.

Modernising and Developing the Criminal Justice System

In addition to investing in science and technology for the police, the extra resources announced in the budget will provide additional investment right across the criminal justice system. The aim is to help modernise the system as a whole and to deliver a more joined-up approach to tackling crime. It will also help to deliver the modern service that the public is entitled to expect from the criminal justice system. The new capital investment includes the following.

Video links: £5.3 million to allow the innovative use of video conferencing technology to allow vulnerable or intimidated witnesses to give evidence remotely and also to allow defendants remanded in custody to take part in preliminary court hearings without leaving prison. This will build on the existing pilot schemes for video links between courts and prisons in Bristol and Manchester.

Post release hostels for prisoners after drug treatment: £5 million to allow the establishment of post release support for prisoners who have served sentences of up to a year and have drug misuse as well as housing problems. This will help in reducing re-offending by a group of high risk offenders.

Restructuring the prison estate: an investment of £40 million to modernise the prison estate. This will enable a start to be made on a programme to provide additional prison capacity. It will include creating additional capacity in existing prisons and converting spare capacity in open prisons as a result of the success of the home detention curfew into closed conditions.

Joining up criminal justice system information technology systems: £1.48 million to provide a central resource for the criminal justice system integrating business and information systems (IBIS) initiative. This will be used to ensure that criminal justice service and agency information technology systems are developed so as to allow inter-operability between them. Inter-operability will support the fast access to information to the key business areas in the criminal justice system, from preparing cases through the court process to serving sentences.

Criminal justice units: £5 million to enable the Crown Prosecution Service to invest in the infrastructure needed for new joint Crown Prosecution Service/police criminal justice units. These will lead to improved quality and timeliness of prosecution files, involve closer and better working relationships so as to eliminate the duplication of tasks, and will improve the handling of criminal justice casework and get it right first time.

In addition to these projects, the Lord Chancellor will make an announcement next month about additional investment of £23 million to modernise the Crown Court.

Political Parties, Elections and Referendums Bill

Mr. Gerrard: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what costs relating to the establishment of the Electoral Commission will be met in advance of Royal Assent being given to the Political Parties, Elections and Referendums Bill. [116668]

Mr. Straw: It is in the public interest to ensure that the Commission is functioning at the earliest opportunity. I have made clear my wish that it should be up and running by this November. To meet this tight timetable, some costs such as those relating to the recruitment of the commissioners will necessarily be incurred before Royal Assent.

Parliamentary approval to this service will be sought in a main estimate for the Electoral Commission Vote (Class XVIII, C, Vote 1). Pending that approval, urgent expenditure estimated at £300,000 will be met by repayable advances from the Contingencies Fund.

Race Equality

Mr. Gerrard: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he will publish the basket of race equality performance indicators he has been developing. [116669]

Mr. Straw: I have today placed in the Library a copy of the document "Race Equality in Public Services—Driving Up Standards and Accounting for Progress". The document sets out performance data in a number of key areas which are of interest to ethnic minority communities, and provides a quantifiable way of demonstrating the Government's progress in promoting race equality.

Sexual Assaults

Mr. Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many incidents of (a) rape of men and (b) other sexual assaults on men were reported in the last year for which figures are available; how many such incidents attracted charges; and how many convictions have resulted. [116103]

Mr. Charles Clarke: The numbers of reported incidents and charges are not collected centrally. The number of recorded rapes of men and indecent assaults on men, and the number of defendants proceeded against and offenders convicted of these offences in England and Wales for the year ending September 1999, are as follows:

	Rape of a male	Indecent assault on a male
Number of offences recorded in year ended September 1999	571	3,682
Number of defendants proceeded against in year ended September 1999[1]	107	562
Number of offenders convicted in year ended September 1999[1]	54	438

[1] Provisional data

It should be noted that as the recorded crime figures relate to offences, and the numbers proceeded against and convicted relate to offenders, the two types of data cannot be directly compared.

Freedom of Information

Mr. Hawkins: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he intends to publish his draft code of guidance in relation to his Freedom of Information Bill; and if he will make a statement. [116288]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: I expect to be able to make available shortly a working draft of the code of practice for which provision is made at clause 44 of the Freedom of Information Bill.

Copies of the working draft will be placed in the Library.

Probation Service

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what (a) representations and (b) external legal advice he has received concerning the conformity of current contracts for the installation and operation of probation service information technology systems with public procurement regulations; and if he will make a statement. [116294]

Mr. Boateng: The Home Office discusses the arrangements for the procurement of information technology for probation purposes with interested parties from time to time. It is not our policy to disclose details of legal advice in relation to such commercial arrangements.

Prison Accommodation

Miss Widdecombe: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list, for each of the last 10 years for which figures are available, the average number of prisoners in each prison establishment being held two in a cell in a single cell; for what reason the Prison Service does not collect data on the number of prisoners held three in a double cell; and if he will make a statement. [116473]

Mr. Boateng: The average number of prisoners held two to a cell designed for one, in each prison establishment since 1992–93, is given in the table. Prisons that are not currently operational are excluded from the analysis.

The Prison Service has never collected centrally the number of prisoners held three to a cell designed for two. Prisons provide data on the total overcrowding level and on the numbers held two to a cell designed for one, known as "doubling". Total overcrowding includes those held three to a cell for two and those overcrowded in dormitories and larger cells. Doubling is an appropriate measure of the true impact of overcrowding on individuals.

Overcrowding, other than doubling, is not widespread. At the end of February 2000, only nine establishments reported a total overcrowding figure in excess of the numbers doubled.

Average number of prisoners held two to a cell designed for one

Prison name	1992–93	1993–94	1994–95	1995–96	1996–97	1997–98	1998–99
Acklington	0	0	0	0	0	0	0
Albany	0	0	0	0	0	0	0
Altcourse	—	—	—	—	—	198	203
Ashwell	0	0	0	0	0	0	0
Askham Grange	0	0	0	0	0	0	0
Aylesbury	3	2	0	0	1	0	0
Bedford	105	94	129	132	143	119	150
Belmarsh	0	0	0	0	0	0	0
Birmingham	110	474	478	578	634	753	739
Blakenhurst	0		0	0	134	309	360
Blantyre House	0	0	0	0	0	0	0
Blundeston	4	0	0	0	2	0	0
Brinsford	35	0	0	0	31	179	153
Bristol	83	131	123	126	81	92	86
Brixton	284	326	292	322	358	361	337
Brockhill	10	4	0	0	0	0	0
Buckley Hall	—	—	0	2	12	9	0
Bullingdon	0	0	0	0	0	0	97
Bullwood Hall	0	0	0	0	0	0	4
Camp Hill	31	10	2	0	27	78	115
Canterbury	78	123	158	161	211	219	219
Cardiff	187	303	311	331	314	422	458
Castington	0	0	0	0	0	0	0
Channings Wood	0	0	72	155	211	242	223
Chelmsford	167	239	289	305	143	27	38
Coldingley	0	0	0	0	0	0	0
Cookham Wood	0	0	14	13	43	56	77
Dartmoor	0	0	0	0	0	0	0
Deerbolt	0	0	0	0	0	0	0
Doncaster	—	—	124	228	399	588	626
Dorchester	76	127	142	148	176	161	157
Dover	32	0	0	0	0	0	0
Downview	0	0	0	0	5	24	32
Drake Hall	0	0	0	0	0	0	2
Durham	340	320	375	476	659	573	519
East Sutton Park	0	0	0	0	0	0	0
Eastwood Park	0			0	0	6	18

Average number of prisoners held two to a cell designed for one

Prison name	1992–93	1993–94	1994–95	1995–96	1996–97	1997–98	1998–99
Elmley	0	0	0	0	0	38	230
Erlestoke	0	0	0	0	0	0	0
Everthorpe	0	0	0	0	26	64	64
Exeter	149	273	292	304	370	364	380
Featherstone	16	0	0	0	7	0	0
Feltham	0	0	0	0	3	21	26
Ford	0	0	0	0	0	0	0
Foston Hall	0	0	0	0	0	0	0
Frankland	0	0	0	0	0	0	0
Full Sutton	0	0	0	0	0	0	0
Garth	0	0	0	0	0	0	0
Gartree	0	0	0	0	0	0	0
Glen Parva	88	155	171	196	239	272	243
Gloucester	67	88	106	102	116	162	162
Grendon	0	0	0	0	0	0	0
Guys Marsh	0	0	0	1	20	40	42
Haslar	0	0	0	0	0	0	0
Hatfield	0	0	0	0	0	0	0
Haverigg	0	0	0	0	0	0	5
Hewell Grange	0	0	0	0	0	0	0
Highdown	0	0	0	0	0	30	0
Highpoint	0	0	0	0	12	32	42
Hindley	183	209	105	12	7	14	0
Hollesley Bay	0	0	0	0	8	24	4
Holloway	0	0	0	0	0	0	0
Holme House	0	0	0	0	0	84	72
Hull	34	163	204	153	124	6	11
Huntercombe	0	0	0	0	1	15	16
Kingston	0	0	0	0	0	0	0
Kirkham	0	0	0	0	0	0	0
Kirklevington	0	0	0	0	0	0	0
Lancaster	54	0	0	0	0	0	0
Lancaster Farms	0	0	0	0	24	46	57
Latchmere House	0	0	0	0	0	0	0
Leeds	0	743	621	537	67	318	545
Leicester	167	281	286	267	271	284	279
Lewes	165	164	142	15	31	32	31
Leyhill	0	0	0	0	0	0	0
Lincoln	254	394	440	429	499	440	340
Lindholme	0	0	0	0	0	0	0
Littlehey	0	0	8	0	14	42	48
Liverpool	499	465	466	264	206	446	442
Long Lartin	0	0	0	0	0	0	0
Low Newton	120	168	151	203	232	251	179
Lowdham Grange	—	—	—	—	0	0	0
Maidstone	0	0	0	0	10	45	41
Manchester	134	205	191	407	466	437	399
Moorland	0	0	0	0	39	56	45
Morton Hall	0	0	0	0	0	0	0
Mount	0	0	0	0	38	71	69
New Hall	0	0	0	0	0	28	52
North Sea Camp	0	0	0	0	0	0	0
Northallerton	75	101	126	135	215	254	233
Norwich	76	128	162	26	0	114	128
Nottingham	10	13	10	8	0	0	0
Onley	30	0	0	0	0	0	0
Parc	—	—	—	0	0	0	0
Parkhurst	0	0	0	0	0	35	33
Pentonville	230	364	445	557	584	419	380
Portland	10	0	54	40	41	90	90
Preston	124	320	304	273	362	510	533
Ranby	0	0	0	0	0	50	50
Reading	55	117	123	65	97	115	138
Risley	8	0	0	0	14	38	74
Rochester	37	15	5	4	6	0	0
Send	0	0	0	0	0	0	0
Shepton Mallet	55	22	0	0	92	119	100
Shrewsbury	136	230	217	241	277	297	281
Stafford	45	0	296	381	226	0	0
Standford Hill	0	0	0	0	0	0	0
Stocken	0	0	0	0	36	52	41
Stoke Heath	31	0	0	0	0	0	0

Average number of prisoners held two to a cell designed for one

Prison name	1992–93	1993–94	1994–95	1995–96	1996–97	1997–98	1998–99
Styal	0	0	0	0	0	0	0
Sudbury	0	0	0	0	0	0	0
Swaleside	0	0	0	0	18	33	9
Swansea	105	148	130	149	185	235	221
Swinfen Hall	0	0	0	0	0	0	38
Thorn Cross	0	0	0	0	0	0	0
Usk	0	0	2	60	94	117	146
Verne	0	0	0	0	13	37	39
Wakefield	0	0	0	0	73	98	22
Wandsworth	274	217	199	191	156	193	316
Wayland	0	0	0	0	24	50	44
Wealstun	0	0	0	0	4	10	10
Weare	—	—	—	—	0	0	0
Wellingborough	0	0	0	0	0	0	0
Werrington	0	0	0	0	0	0	0
Wetherby	0	0	0	0	0	0	0
Whatton	0	0	0	0	0	0	0
Whitemoor	0	0	0	0	0	0	0
Winchester	126	137	182	181	245	304	272
Wolds	0	2	16	1	0	0	0
Woodhill	0	0	0	0	38	106	95
Wormwood Scrubs	322	468	425	305	289	378	299
Wymott	0	0	0	0	0	0	0

Home Detention Curfew Scheme

Miss Widdecombe: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department, pursuant to his answer of 22 March 2000, Official Report, column 561W, on the home detention curfew scheme, what specific offences are defined as (a) other homicide and attempted homicide, (b) other motoring offences and (c) other offences; how many offenders were released having been convicted of each specific offence; and if he will make a statement. [116482]

Mr. Boateng: Further details of the offences defined as other homicide and attempted homicide, other motoring offences and other offences, and the number of prisoners convicted of each type of offence who have been released on home detention curfew are shown in the table.

No eligible prisoner can be granted home detention curfew without first passing a risk assessment. The risk assessment addresses the risk to the public and the likelihood of the prisoner re-offending during his time on curfew. The details of the offence in each case will be known to the establishment before a risk assessment and release on home detention curfew can take place. The nature of the current offence, together with previous offending history, are important factors that are taken into account in assessing a prisoner's suitability for the scheme. Prisons have been instructed that prisoners who present a clear and immediate threat to the public must not be released on home detention curfew.

Offence	Number
Other homicide and attempted homicide
Attempted murder	5
Threats to kill	29
Conspiracy, aid and incite murder	1
Death by reckless driving	115
Total	150
Other motoring offences
Other motoring offences[1]	1,239
Reckless driving	291
Total	1,530
Other offences[2]
Procuration	4
False imprisonment	22
Bail Act offences	4
Assisting illegal immigrant	49
Minor firearms offences	6
Other indictable offences[2]	548
Escaping lawful custody	6
Making off without paying	2
Criminal attempts	7
Contempt of court	1
Deportee/detainee	4
Vagrancy Act offences	2
Cruelty etc. to animals	18
Total	673

[1] Recorded under this code by individual establishments
[2] Other indicatable offences

Miss Widdecombe: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department, pursuant to his answer of 22 March 2000, Official Report, columns 561–62W, on the home detention curfew scheme, how many offenders who committed further offences while on the scheme committed an offence similar in character to that for which they were originally convicted; if he will provide a breakdown by type of offence of such offenders; and if he will make a statement. [116479]

Mr. Boateng: According to Prison Service records, of the 185 curfewees referred to in the reply I gave on 22 March 2000, Official Report, columns 561–62W, who have been charged with a further offence while subject to home detention curfew, 74 have been charged with an offence similar to that for which they were serving a sentence of imprisonment prior to being released on curfew. The table gives a breakdown of the types of offences committed.

One of the factors addressed in the home detention curfew risk assessment is the likelihood of the prisoner re-offending during his time on curfew. If the offender's past history and current circumstances suggest that there is a probability that he will return to offending within the curfew period, release must be refused.

An evaluation of the home detention curfew scheme is being carried out by the Research, Development and Statistics Directorate of the Home Office. It will include an analysis of reconviction of curfewees both during and after the curfew period. Results will be published later this year.

Offences committed by curfewees

	Number
Burglary	20
Theft	16
Driving/Motoring offences	12
Assault	9
Drug offences	5
Deception	3
Wounding	3
Robbery	2
Breach of Probation Order	1
Threats to kill	1
False Imprisonment	1
Affray	1
Total	74

Miss Widdecombe: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department, pursuant to his answer of 22 March 2000, Official Report, column 561W, on the home detention curfew scheme, how many offenders charged with a further offence committed while on the scheme have been convicted of such an offence; if he will provide a breakdown by type of offence; and if he will make a statement. [116480]

Mr. Boateng: Information is not held centrally on the convictions of those who have committed offences while subject to home detention curfew.

Miss Widdecombe: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department, pursuant to his answer of 22 March 2000, Official Report, column 561W, on the home detention curfew scheme, for what reason the original offence committed by 1,001 offenders released on the scheme was not recorded; and if he will make a statement. [116481]

Mr. Boateng: The statistics on the original offences committed by prisoners released on home detention curfew are taken from the Prison Service computer database, known as the Inmate Information System, and are based on the data entered by each prison. Where offence data are not completed by the prison, the category "offence not recorded" is used at the centre. At a local level, the details of the offence in each case will be known to the establishment before a risk assessment and release on home detention curfew can take place. In assessing a prisoner's suitability for release on the scheme, the nature of the offence is an important factor to be taken into account.

Efforts are made to ensure the completeness and accuracy of all data as far as practicable, but there are inevitable errors of omission and commission. Guidance is being issued to establishments stressing the importance of recording the data on original offences as quickly as possible in every case.

Miss Widdecombe: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the maximum sentence that may be passed on an offender who is eligible for release on the home detention curfew scheme. [116475]

Mr. Boateng: Under the Criminal Justice Act 1991, as amended by the Crime and Disorder Act 1998, no prisoner who has been sentenced to four years or more imprisonment is eligible for release under the home detention curfew scheme.

Criminal Justice and Court Services Bill

Miss Widdecombe: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department further to his answers of 22 March 2000, Official Report, column 557W, on drug testing procedures under Clause 48 of the Criminal Justice and Court Services Bill, (a) if a positive test would in itself be sufficient proof of an offence of unlawful possession of a controlled drug, (b) what specified Class A drugs will be tested for, (c) if he intends to extend the testing procedure to include Class B drugs and (d) how he intends the tests to be used to assist in appropriate sentencing, and if this includes the length of sentence to be passed; and if he will make a statement. [116472]

Mr. Boateng: The purpose of drug testing on charge is to identify and monitor drug misusers who may need treatment and to inform any subsequent bail decisions. It is not intended that a positive test will be used to bring a prosecution for unlawful possession. Initially, tests will be made to detect heroin and crack/cocaine which research evidence shows are strongly linked to crimes committed in order to feed a drug habit. The Criminal Justice and Court Services Bill includes provision to extend the range of drugs tested for, including any in Class B, if a similar linkage to commission of crime emerges.

The court will have regard to a positive test on sentencing and can make a drug abstinence order or add an abstinence requirement to a community sentence in cases where the criteria is met.
A positive test result will not be an aggravating factor for sentencing purposes.

Miss Widdecombe: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on the new procedure for appointing local probation boards contained in Schedule 1 to the Criminal Justice and Court Services Bill, indicating how it differs from the present procedure. [116476]

Mr. Boateng: The present procedure is based on the nomination directly to the committee of local magistrates, a member of the judiciary and local authority members. In future, members of probation boards, with the exception of the Lord Chancellor's nominee, will be appointed by the Secretary of State following a process of open, public advertisement.

We will be looking to recruit members who, in addition to meeting competences, being developed in consultation with the Central Probation Council, will reflect a breadth of experience from the local community. We are working with the Office of the Commissioner for Public Appointments to ensure that these new arrangements meet the highest standards of openness and transparency.

Chief officers will, for the first time, be a member of local boards.

Prisoners (Activity)

Miss Widdecombe: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list for each of the last 10 years for which figures are available the average amount of time spent by prisoners on purposeful activity. [116474]

Mr. Boateng: The average amount of time spent per prisoner on purposeful activity in the last 10 years is listed in the table. Data for 1999–00 are for the year to February 2000 and are provisional.

Year	Purposeful hours
1990–91	22.3
1991–92	22.7
1992–93	23.7
1993–94	24.7
1994–95	26.2
1995–96	25.2
1996–97	23.8
1997–98	23.3
1998–99	22.8
1999–2000	23.0

ENVIRONMENT, TRANSPORT AND THE REGIONS

Road Traffic Targets

Mr. Moore: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will list those local authorities that have set targets for the overall level of road traffic in their area as part of their draft local transport plans, giving the targets set in each case. [114810]

Mr. Hill [holding answer 16 March 2000]: Local traffic authorities in England (outside London) submitted interim road traffic reduction reports as part of their provisional local transport plans in July 1999. Due to the provisional nature of the plans, the status and coverage of some targets are uncertain. However, the following authorities submitted plans containing traffic targets for at least part of their area or for some types of traffic.

Authority	Target
Oxfordshire	Halve forecast traffic growth to 2016
Hampshire	Reduce the rate of traffic growth by 50 per cent. by 2020
Milton Keynes	Reduce journey to work car trips by 4 per cent. between 1997 and 2011 and car mode share reduction from 77 per cent. to 55 per cent. between 1997 and 2011
West Berkshire	Newbury and Thatcham area—reduce growth to zero from 1999. Rural area—limit growth to 10 per cent. between 1999 and 2009. Eastern area—reduction in growth forecast of 1–5 per cent. on major corridors and absolute reductions of 1–5 per cent. in residential areas
Reading	Reduce car travel by 5 per cent. in town centre. Reduce traffic levels by 2–5 per cent. in residential areas. Reduce traffic on major corridors by 2–5 per cent. over forecast levels
Isle of Wight	Halve the rate of growth by 2020
East Sussex	Reduce amount of car journeys to education establishments by 20 per cent. by 2005 in Bexhill, Hastings, Eastbourne and other towns. Achieve zero growth on minor rural roads in the Ashdown Forest area
Slough	10 per cent. reduction in current traffic levels by 2005
Surrey	Limit growth to 7 per cent. between 1998–2016
Bournemouth, Poole and Christchurch	Reduce rate of traffic growth by 50 per cent. by 2005 and reduce to zero growth by 2010. Reduce car trips to school by 50 per cent.
Dorset	Reduce rate of traffic growth to 50 per cent. of average growth forecast between 1998 and 2005
Gloucestershire	By 2011, average daily traffic volumes to increase by no more than 20 per cent. compared with 1995 levels
Somerset	Limit growth to 10 per cent. by 2011 in Taunton and 25 per cent. by 2011 in Bridgwater and to 13 per cent. by 2011 in Yeovil
Bath and North East Somerset	Bath centre—20 per cent. reduction in 1999 levels by 2005. Rest of Bath—10 per cent. reduction. Other towns stabilise traffic and no targets in rural areas
Bristol	Reduce growth in car traffic by 20 per cent. over the next five years. Thereafter a further 20 per cent. reduction over the next 10 to 15 years
South Gloucestershire	Zero growth in annual average traffic flows by 2005. Annual 2 per cent. reduction in proportion of people commuting by car
Swindon	Slow traffic growth by 35 per cent. (based on low growth assumptions)—29 per cent. increase 1996–2016 compared to do-nothing forecast of 44 per cent.
Plymouth	Maintain traffic at 1999 levels—0 per cent. traffic growth
Torbay	0.5 per cent. growth in traffic across area over all time periods by 2005
West Midlands'	Contain levels of morning peak car trips into the nine LTP centres to their 1995–96 levels up to 2006, and maintain the containment to 2011

Authority	Target
Shropshire	Reduce cars entering Shrewsbury by 5 per cent. by 2005. Outside city centre, limit growth to 1 per cent. or less per annum. Reduce per cent. of children given lifts to school by car by 10 per cent. by 2005. Limit traffic growth on inter-urban routes to 2 per cent. or less per annum until 2005 and 1 per cent. thereafter in the market towns and rural areas
Stoke on Trent	Constrain growth to 10 per cent. between 1999–2011
Telford and Wrekin	To limit traffic growth to 2 per cent. per annum or the rate of growth in population (whichever is lower) by 2005
Warwickshire	Reduce the rate of traffic growth in urban areas by 50 per cent. in peak periods
Worcestershire	To achieve 1991 traffic levels in Worcester City by 2011
Merseyside[2]	Keep traffic growth below 17 per cent.
Cheshire	Traffic to be restrained in Chester to a 2 per cent. increase on 1994 levels to 2011. In the rest of the County traffic to be restrained to a 16 per cent. increase on 1994 levels up to 2011
Cumbria	Cap growth at 2000 levels by 2005 in Carlisle City Centre. 24 per cent. reduction in existing peak hour traffic entering the Kendal by 2005–06
Lancashire	Traffic flows to and from town centres to be restricted to 1991 levels
Blackburn	Zero growth of peak hour traffic by 2006. Growth in off-peak limited to low NRTF levels from 2000
Halton	Restrain growth to 16 per cent. by 2011
Durham	Restrict traffic to 1999 levels to end of 2004 in Durham City. Reduce traffic growth to 0.33 per cent. per annum to 2004 in the rest of the County
Northumberland	Reduce AADT by 5 per cent. on base network at selected monitoring sites by 2005. No increase in traffic at selected sites by 2005
Darlington	Restrict growth to 4 per cent. between 1999 and 2006 into the Darlington Urban area. Restrict growth to 2 per cent. into Darlington town centre between 1999 and 2006. Restrict and/or reduce traffic growth on 4 key transport corridors by 2006
Middlesborough	Reduce AADT to zero growth in town centre by 2005 and reduce by 2 per cent. by 2010
Hartlepool	Limit traffic growth to 3.5 per cent. between 2000 and 2005
Stockton-on-Tees	5 per cent. reduction of AADT at specific sites. Peak hour traffic flow reduction by 5 per cent. and limit overall growth to 4.5 per cent.
South Yorkshire[3]	Contain car traffic at 1999 levels
West Yorkshire[4]	Constrain growth to 7 per cent. in Leeds, Bradford and Wakefield
North Yorkshire	Maintain traffic in the urban area at 1994 levels in Harrogate, Knaresborough and Ripon. In the Yorkshire Dales, maintain traffic at 1994 levels
York	Maintain inbound morning peak traffic to 1992 levels. Provisional target of 7 per cent. reduction from 1999 to 2003
Kingston-upon-Hull	Reduce car flows by 1 per cent. per annum from present levels. Reduce proportion of car trips from 57 per cent. of total in 1991 to 50 per cent. in 2011
North Lincolnshire	Reduce the average peak hour growth rate of traffic from 2.5 per cent. to 2.2 per cent. by 2005 and to 1.1 per cent. by 2010
Derbyshire	Reduce traffic growth to 1 per cent. below the national average by 2011
Leicester[5]	Reduce growth to 2011 from 15 per cent. to 7 per cent.
Nottingham	Maintain growth at below 2.5 per cent. per annum by 2000
Nottinghamshire	Limit growth to 8 per cent. up to 2011
Lincolnshire	Reduce forecast peak hour car traffic in Greater Lincoln, Boston, Grantham and Skegness by 10 per cent. over the next five years. Reduce forecast peak hour car traffic in the large market towns of Gainsborough, Louth, Sleeford, Spalding and Stamford over the LTP period
Northamptonshire	Achieve zero growth above 1999 levels on radial routes in peak hours
Bedfordshire	Decrease travel to work by car from 71 per cent. in 1991 to 58 per cent. in 2011 in Bedford, market towns and rural areas
Norfolk	Private car traffic crossing the Norwich inner ring road and outer ring road to be no higher than 1995 levels in 2011. 10 per cent. fall in peak level of private car traffic along to A149 coastal road between 1997 and 2010
Suffolk	Achieve zero growth by 2006 in Ipswich, Bury St. Edmunds and Lowestoft
Peterborough	Maintain growth below NRTF low growth forecast till 2005

[1] A joint plan for the Metropolitan area consisting of the following traffic authorities: Birmingham, Coventry, Dudley, Sandwell, Solihull, Walsall and Wolverhampton

[2] A joint plan for the Metropolitan area consisting of the following traffic authorities: Liverpool, Knowsley, St. Helens, Sefton and Wirral

[3] A joint plan for the Metropolitan area consisting of the following traffic authorities: Sheffield, Rotherham, Barnsley and Doncaster

[4] A joint plan for the Metropolitan area consisting of the following traffic authorities: Leeds, Kirklees, Calderdale, Bradford and Wakefield

[5] A joint plan with Leicestershire

Note:

NRTF—Department of Transport National Road Traffic Forecasts 1997

AADT—Annual Average Daily Traffic

Park-and-Ride Schemes

Mr. Edward Davey: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions how many park-and-ride schemes have been introduced by local authorities since May 1997; and if he will make a statement. [116074]

Mr. Hill: The Department does not collect such information.

Affordable Housing (London)

Mr. Edward Davey: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what proportion of houses built in London in each of the past four years has been classified as affordable; and what research his Department has undertaken to determine if this proportion meets local demand for such housing. [116084]

Ms Beverley Hughes: The information on affordable houses built is not held centrally. However, the London Research Centre is currently undertaking a research project to assess the extent of housing need in London.

Regional Assemblies

Mrs. Ellman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will make a statement on the creation of directly elected regional assemblies in England. [116072]

Ms Beverley Hughes: We are committed to moving to directly elected regional government in England, where there is demand for it expressed in a referendum.

Housing Development (Transport Links)

Miss McIntosh: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what plans he has to develop transport links in areas of new housing development in greenfield sites. [116236]

Ms Beverley Hughes: Planning Policy Guidance note 3, "Housing", (PPG3) (see paragraphs 47 and 48) provides that local planning authorities should seek to exploit opportunities to locate larger housing developments around major nodes along good quality public transport corridors (both existing and those with firm proposals for improvement in local transport plans). In addition, authorities should seek to ensure that all housing developments are accessible by a range of non-car modes. Draft PPG13, "Transport", also proposes that major development proposals should be supported by a transport assessment.

Speed Limits

Mr. Peter Bradley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions how many villages with populations of under 3,000 have a speed limit of 30 mph. [116015]

Mr. Hill: This information is not held centrally.

Radioactive Waste

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what are the procedures that must be followed regarding the dumping of radioactive waste in the UK. [115916]

Mr. Meacher: The disposal of radioactive waste is closely regulated under the Radioactive Substances Act 1993 by the Environment Agency in England and Wales, the Scottish Environment Protection Agency in Scotland and the Environment Heritage Service in Northern Ireland. Any person wishing to dispose of radioactive waste must make an application to the relevant agency.

Mr. Chaytor: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions when he plans to publish the green paper on radioactive waste management; and what will be its terms of reference. [115532]

Mr. Meacher: My Department aims to publish the consultation paper on the management of radioactive waste in late spring. The contents are still under consideration.

Regional Development Agencies

Mr. Quinn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions how many objections he received when he consulted on the location of boundaries for the regional development agencies. [116331]

Ms Beverley Hughes: We received 198 responses to our consultation paper, "Regional Development Agencies—Issues for Discussion", which was published in 1997. Of these responses, there were two objections to the boundaries proposed for the RDAs.

GM Crops

Sir Richard Body: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions on what date the contract was signed for the growing of a GM crop at Friskney, Lincolnshire. [116448]

Mr. Meacher: My Department was notified by Monsanto of a proposed location of a field for a farm scale evaluation of GM beet near Friskney in Lincolnshire, on 16 March 2000. The contractual arrangements are a matter for Monsanto and the farmer involved.

Mr. Keetch: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what GM crop trials there have been in Herefordshire; and if he will make a statement. [116343]

Mr. Meacher: The Government's farm scale evaluations programme, which I announced on 17 March, is designed to allow independent researchers to see what effect growing and managing GM crops might have on farmland wildlife, compared with non-GM crops. The programme this year will involve up to 80 GM field sites. To date, none of the proposed sites notified to my Department is in Herefordshire.

Local Authorities (Leaders)

Mr. Brady: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will list (a) the name of the leaders, (b) the political party of the leader and (c) the annual allowance payable to the leader of each local authority in England. [116460]

Ms Beverley Hughes: This information is not collected by my Department.

Euratom Directive

Mr. Chaytor: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what he plans to implement the justification requirements of Euratom Directive 96/29. [115531]

Mr. Meacher: The Health and Safety Commission is in the lead for preparing proposals on behalf of Government for implementing the justification requirements of Euratom Directive 96–29. I await its revised proposals.

Child Cyclists

Mr. Andrew George: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what action he is taking to reduce brain injuries among child cyclists. [115739]

Mr. Hill: The road safety strategy, "Tomorrows Roads—Safer for Everyone", promotes the wearing of cycle helmets. They can provide significant protection against the severity of head injuries. This reinforces the advice contained in the "Highway Code", the "Highway Code for Young Road Users" and the Driving Standards Agency's "Road Code". We also promote their use in our "Cycle Smart" publicity material. Together with the Department of Health, we are supporting the Bicycle Helmet Initiative Trust project, the aim of which is to promote cycle helmet wearing among children and young people. We are monitoring the wearing rate in Great Britain (currently about 18 per cent.) and will continue to consider the option of compulsory wearing from time to time.

Mr. Andrew George: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions how many child cyclists have been (a) injured and (b) killed on the roads in each of the past 10 years. [115773]

Mr. Hill: The information requested is shown in the following table for the most recent 10 years for which data are available.

Child[1] cyclist casualties in road accidents: Great Britain 1989–98

Year	Killed	Injured
1989	73	9,254
1990	59	8,661
1991	50	8,132
1992	48	7,677
1993	37	7,349
1994	42	8,033
1995	48	8,085
1996	54	8,163
1997	33	7,866
1998	32	6,898

[1] Children aged 0–15

Breakdown and Recovery Vehicles

Mr. Key: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions how many breakdown and recovery vehicles exempt from the MOT test (a) are currently operating on (i) motorways and (ii) other roads and (b) were involved in vehicle accidents in the last year for which figures are available. [116133]

Mr. Hill: Such vehicles are exempt from the MOT test if they are constructed such that they tow vehicles that they are recovering rather than carry them. Although it is not possible to say precisely how many of these there are, a good approximation is the number of vehicles whose body type is recorded as a breakdown truck. Further to these, there will also be a number of other vehicles in the recovery vehicles tax class that are exempt from the MOT test because they are less than one year old. The estimated numbers of those licensed and exempt from the MOT test at the end of 1998 are as follows:

Breakdown trucks: 10,224

Other recovery vehicles first registered in 1998: 110

Total: 10,334

These figures come from the record of licensed vehicles in Great Britain held by the Driver and Vehicle Licensing Agency. No details are held about the roads upon which these vehicles operate.

Road accident data are available by body type of the vehicles involved. In 1998 there were 104 recorded injury accidents involving breakdown trucks. This figure may be a slight under-estimate as in some accidents details of the vehicle's body type can not be obtained.

Rent Rebates

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions (1) what proposals he has to reimburse local authorities in full for current and future rent rebate expenditure; [115387]

(2) for what reasons the housing revenue subsidy paid to local authorities is less than the rent rebate expenditure borne by local authorities; [115402]

(3) for what reason local authorities' rent rebate expenditure is not reimbursed on the same basis as expenditure on rent allowances for private sector and association tenants; [115403]

(4) what funding will be available to ensure that there is no further clawback of local authority rent income by central Government; [115428]

(5) if the existing gap between rent rebate expenditure and housing subsidy will be funded in full without a corresponding fall in money available for council housing. [115427]

Mr. Mullin: There are two parts to housing subsidy: housing element and rent rebate element. Most authorities show a surplus on their housing element—that is their assumed rental income covers assumed costs. Where there is a surplus on housing element for an authority, we reduce the size of the rent rebate element by an equivalent amount.

Other than in those cases where rent rebate subsidy limitation applies, local authorities are fully reimbursed for rent rebate expenditure. The effect of limitation is that if an authority increases its average rent above the limit rent level, it receives additional rental income only from those tenants not receiving rent rebate.

This accounting arrangement reflects the different subsidy provisions which apply to different tenures. Local authority rents are generally lower than housing association or private sector rents, so it is not the case that council tenants are treated less favourably than other tenants. We intend to replace the current system with one that is easier to understand and which will avoid offsetting one expenditure stream against another and avoid the present confusion. The necessary legislation will be introduced as soon as parliamentary time permits.

We are currently consulting on the detail of our proposals on how to structure and operate a new system for redistributing resources under resource accounting. We have also announced that the proposed major repairs allowance (MRA) will be introduced from April 2001 to meet the cost of keeping housing stock in good condition. We expect that there will be fewer surpluses when the MRA is introduced and that will itself ease concerns about the system.

No decisions have yet been taken on the level of funding that will be available. This will form part of the discussions in the forthcoming spending review.

Housing Revenue (Subsidy)

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what was the total amount of housing revenue account subsidy paid to local authorities in 1998–99. [115399]

Mr. Mullin: The total amount of housing revenue account subsidy paid to local authorities in 1998–99 was £3,371 million.

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what is the estimated subsidy for the housing revenue account of local authorities for the years (a) 1999–2000 and (b) 2000–01. [115401]

Mr. Mullin: Our forecasts of housing revenue account subsidy are as follows:

£ million

	Housing revenue account subsidy
1999–2000	3,190
2000–01	3,146

[1] Estimated

Disabled Drivers

Mr. Oaten: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions when his Department will implement regulations covering changes to disabled drivers' badges and clocks. [116297]

Mr. Hill: I refer the hon. Member to my reply of 10 March 2000, Official Report, columns 834–35W, to my hon. Friend the Member for Hemel Hempstead (Mr. McWalter).

I also announced on 18 November 1999 that the Orange Badge scheme is to be reviewed this year, and we will be looking at the eligibility criteria as well as the administration and enforcement of the scheme.

Regional Planning Guidance

Mr. Pond: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions when he intends to publish his response to the recommendations of the panels which conducted the public examinations of the draft regional planning guidance notes for East Anglia and the South-East; and if he will make a statement. [116564]

Mr. Raynsford: My right hon. Friend the Deputy Prime Minister has today published for consultation Proposed Changes to the Draft Regional Planning Guidance (RPG) for East Anglia and to the Draft RPG for the South-East.

On 7 March my right hon. Friend set out a new approach to planning for housing provision and made a preliminary announcement about housing in the South-East. The Proposed Changes to the draft RPG for East Anglia reflect the principles and priorities set out in that statement. They aim to support economic growth and regeneration, while protecting and enhancing the region's environment. They endorse the housing target proposed by SCEALA (the Standing Conference of East Anglia Local Authorities) of around some 9,600 additional dwellings a year as the starting point for the plan, monitor and manage approach. The Panel recommended that at least 40 per cent. of these new dwellings should be on previously-developed land. We are proposing a 50 per cent. target initially. This takes account of the likely availability of such land in a largely rural region.

We endorse SCEALA's view that development should be concentrated in the cities and larger towns. This is consistent with our policies for urban renaissance and the better use of land.

Cambridge now has world status as a centre for high-tech, knowledge-based industry. The emphasis must be on enabling the development of these industries while safeguarding the City's special character. However, we share the Panel's concern at the non-sustainable nature of much recent development around Cambridge, associated with increased car dependence and a lack of affordable housing. Building on the Panel's recommendations, we are proposing a sequential approach to development, looking first at the capacity of Cambridge, then possible urban extensions, then a new settlement—always considering brownfield land first.

We have accepted the Panel's recommendation for a review of the Cambridge Green Belt as an essential part of the process of finding sustainable locations for development. It should be carried out by the local authorities, with any changes taken forward through the review of development plans.

The integration of development and transport is at the core of our approach to regional planning. Our programme of multi-modal transport studies reflects the strategic priorities identified by SCEALA. The Minister responsible for roads announced on 3 February that the A11 Roudham Heath to Attleborough scheme was to be brought forward to start in 2000–01. In further recognition of the strategic priorities we are adding three schemes to the targeted programme of improvements at an estimated cost of £53 million: A11 Fiveways to Thetford and Attleborough Bypass Improvements, already in preparation, and A47 Thorney Bypass. The A11 schemes will complete a high-quality route to Norwich, improving access to Great Yarmouth and Lowestoft. Thorney Bypass will bring safety and environmental benefits for the local community, and will remove a bottleneck on a strategic east-west route.

On 7 March, my right hon. Friend announced the overall housing numbers for the South-East region and the target for the use of recycled land. The Proposed Changes, published today, set out detailed proposals including a clear spatial strategy for the region.

The Proposed Changes recognise the national priority for regenerating the Thames Gateway area, and the need within the region to promote the Priority Areas of Economic Regeneration and to facilitate the continuing economic success of the area to the west of London, while maintaining environmental quality, and of London as a World City. The policies are designed to help achieve an urban renaissance and the improved economic and social viability of the rural areas, while protecting and enhancing the countryside.

The Proposed Changes set out priorities for transport investment and study, and include revised parking standards. However, they make clear that more work needs to be done to develop the Regional Transport Strategy to facilitate the economic performance of the region, achieve more sustainable patterns of movement and to combat congestion. The documents include an illustrative distribution of the housing numbers to county areas, a point on which we have specifically sought the views of SERPLAN (the South-East Regional Planning Conference). We consider that there is scope for potential growth areas at Milton Keynes, Ashford and, in the longer term, at Stansted. The potential of these areas will now be the subject of studies with the Regional Planning Bodies, the local authorities concerned and other interested parties.

The consultation period on both sets of Proposed Changes will be for 12 weeks, ending on 19 June. Copies of the relevant documents have been placed in the House Library and made available to the two region's MPs.

Green Glass Waste

Mr. Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what recent assessment he has made of the potential for re-using green glass waste; what recent discussions he has had with the importers of green glass bottles on this subject; and if he will make a statement. [116298]

Mr. Mullin: We are in close touch with British Glass and other materials organisations and we are planning a seminar on this issue later this year.

Wembley Stadium

Mr. Bob Russell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what progress has been made by the Wembley Task Force towards improving the road and rail links to Wembley Stadium. [114856]

Mr. Hill: The Wembley Task Force are in close consultation with London Underground Ltd. A scheme to improve the capacity and quality of Wembley Park station is well advanced and will shortly be put to the LUL Board for approval. Parallel discussions are in hand with rail operators on potential enhancements to Wembley Stadium and Wembley Central station.

An appraisal of local road improvements necessary to serve the Stadium and the Wembley Estate has been undertaken. Detailed proposals are now being developed in discussion with Wembley National Stadium Ltd. and the Highway Authorities.

Local Transport Plans

Mr. Pickthall: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions when he intends to publish guidance for local authorities on the preparation of full local transport plans. [116684]

Mr. Hill: I am today issuing "Guidance on Full Local Transport Plans", which contains advice for local authorities on the preparations of their local transport plans for 2001–02 to 2005–06.

Local transport plans are at the heart of our new deal for integrated transport, central to giving people improved travel choices, safer roads and better transport services. We are giving authorities more resources and more freedom to produce the best possible plans. We will be spending more than £750 million in the coming financial year, and more than £1 billion the following year. This reflects our commitment to supporting local solutions and initiatives.

This summer the Government will publish their 10-year transport plan, a framework for investment over the next decade. Local authorities will play an important role in delivering that plan, and in the guidance issued today we are asking them for additional investment proposals for an integrated transport strategy over the next 10-years.

Construction Industry

Mr. John Cryer: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions (1) how many workers in the construction industry are employed on a PAYE basis; [115051]

(2) how many workers in the construction industry are self-employed on the basis of holding a C154 registration card. [115052]

Dawn Primarolo: I have been asked to reply.

Whether an individual is employed or self-employed for tax and national insurance purposes depends upon the terms of the contract under which they are engaged.

The Inland Revenue does not have information relating to the numbers of workers in the construction industry who are engaged on an employed or self-employed basis.

A CIS4 registration card is no proof of self-employment and therefore there should be no workers in the construction industry who are treated as self-employed purely on that basis. The Inland Revenue, together with the former Contributions Agency published leaflet IR148/CA69 specifically to assist contractors in the industry on tackling the question of the status of their workers.

DEFENCE

Lord Levy

Mr. Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence on which dates Lord Levy has had meetings with (a) Ministers and (b) senior officials in his Department since 1 May 1997, giving in each case the purpose of the meetings; and if he will make a statement. [113503]

Mr. Hoon [holding answer 7 March 2000]: Lord Levy had an office call with the Secretary of State for Defence on Thursday 28 October 1999.

The Chief of Defence Staff (CDS) has met Lord Levy on four occasions. On 25 March 1999 Lord Levy made an office call on CDS in the Ministry of Defence for general discussion on the Middle East. During the period 3–7 September 1999, Lord Levy assisted CDS during his representational visit to Israel, and on 20 October 1999 he came to the Ministry of Defence to discuss the Middle East. On 22 February this year, CDS called on Lord Levy at the House of Lords to discuss the Middle East prior to Lord Levy's visits there, and CDS' visit to Bahrain.

The Chief of Defence Intelligence had a short informal meeting with Lord Levy on 25 March 1999. At his request, Lord Levy was briefed on the situation in Syria prior to a visit to the area.

Korean War (50th Anniversary)

Mr. Duncan Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what arrangements he is making to commemorate the 50 anniversary of the Korean War in the United Kingdom. [116459]

Dr. Moonie: I refer the hon. Member to the answer my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister gave to the hon. Member for North Dorset (Mr. Walter) on 21 March 2000, Official Report, column 480W. A comprehensive programme of commemorative events is planned over the next three years in the Republic of Korea, involving that country and those whose forces constituted the United Nations Command. As the United Kingdom's participation in the war as a contributor to the United Nations Command in defence of the Republic of Korea, it is appropriate that our commemoration should be as part of that programme, and we will be represented at a number of events at the appropriate level. The Ministry of Defence has no plans for additional commemoration of the anniversary.

Seatbelts

Mr. Key: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when his Department issued instructions that Army, Royal Navy and Royal Air Force cadets must not travel in four-tonne trucks or other military vehicles without seatbelts; and what assessment he has made of the impact of this ruling on (a) cadet training and (b) cadet financing. [116346]

Mr. Spellar: Instructions on the carriage of cadets in military vehicles were first issued on 20 March 1998, in response to the Road Vehicles (Construction and Use) (Amendment) (No. 2) Regulations 1996 (SI 1996/163). These instructions stated that the use of Troop Carrying Vehicles (TCVs) which were not fitted with passenger restraint was not appropriate for the routine movement of cadets. The use of TCVs for the carriage of cadets was therefore restricted to training areas and their immediate vicinity.

The use of military vehicles during training is permitted, but only under a rigorous control regime. This requires Commanding Officers to consider whether it enhances training, whether it might be more appropriate to use civilian vehicles, the nature of the training and the terrain to be covered. This is aimed at ensuring that the proposed training is reasonable and that any risks are controllable.

Following the Strategic Defence Review, additional funding of £500,000 per year was allocated to Headquarters Land Command for additional provision for routine travel for Army Cadet Force units and Army sections of the Combined Cadet Force, and additional facilities at detachment level. Of this, £200,000 per year has been allocated to TAVRAs for cadet travel. This is in addition to the usual process through which TAVRAs receive funding, including provision for a cadet travel vote. This additional funding has meant that the impact of the ruling with respect to the requirement for seatbelts in TCVs on Army Cadet Force training and financing has been minimal.

Naval Cadet Forces seldom used four-tonne trucks for passenger carrying purposes, and therefore the ruling with respect to the requirement for seatbelts in these vehicles has had no impact either on cadet training or financing. Naval Cadet Forces use either loan vehicles from motor transport pools or hire vehicles, all of which are fitted with seat belts.

Air Cadets do not travel in four-tonne trucks at any time. They may occasionally travel in Land Rovers, which are sometimes used at gliding schools. The ruling has had no impact on their training or financing.

Correspondence

Mr. Cummings: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when he will reply to the letter of 5 July 1999 and the fax of 24 August 1999 from the hon. Member for Easington concerning Mr. A. Jones of Seaham. [114942]

Dr. Moonie: I assume my hon. Friend is referring to correspondence concerning Mr. A. Lanes of Seaham. This has been transferred to the Department of Social Security for reply.

Global Positioning System

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what estimate he has made of the cost of upgrading his Department's stock of Paveway II laser guided bombs to have a Global Positioning System/Inertial Measurement Unit capability; what safeguards would be taken to prevent the jamming of such a system; and if he will make a statement. [115750]

Dr. Moonie: We are currently considering lessons learned from Kosovo, including the need to bomb with precision in all weather conditions. However, no decisions have yet been made. Upgrading the Ministry of Defence's stock of Paveway II laser guided bombs to have a Global Positioning System/Inertial Measurement Unit capability is one of the options which are being considered. The disclosure of the estimate of the cost of any such upgrade could disadvantage the MOD in commercial negotiations and I am therefore withholding this information under Exemption 7 of the Code of Practice on Access to Government Information. If a decision were made to upgrade the weapons, we would consider what safeguards might be put in place to prevent jamming of the system.

Iraq

Mr. Quentin Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence on how many occasions, in each of the last six months, RAF aircraft patrolling the (a) northern and (b) southern no-fly zones in Iraq have been fired on; on how many occasions coalition forces have retaliated; and what targets have been destroyed as a result. [115913]

Mr. Hoon: During the six months from October 1999 coalition aircraft have been fired at by surface-to-air missiles or anti-aircraft artillery on over 200 occasions in both the northern and southern no-fly zones. Coalition forces responded in self-defence to these and other threats on some 50 days against almost 90 targets related to the Iraqi air defence network.

Hong Kong

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what land is still owned by his Department in Hong Kong; and if he will make a statement. [116213]

Dr. Moonie: The Ministry of Defence retains ownership of the Cassino Lines Gurkha Cemetery, San Tin, New Territories, Hong Kong, and the Cape Collinson Military Cemetery, Chai Wah, Hong Kong.

Military Land

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what was the estimated acreage of military land in the UK surplus to requirements on 1 March. [116212]

Dr. Moonie: Land which is declared surplus to defence requirements is disposed of. The Strategic Defence Review set a target of £700 million for estate disposals over the four years to 2001–02 and we are well on track to achieve that figure. Figures for the hectarage of land in disposal are not held centrally but I will write to my hon. Friend and place a copy of my reply in the Library of the House.

Property Procurement

Mr. Duncan Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how much has been spent by his Department in each of the last three years in procuring new buildings and land. [116457]

Dr. Moonie: I will write to the hon. Member and a copy of my letter will be placed in the Library of the House.

Naval Vessels

Mr. Duncan Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when the RFAs Olwen and Olna last put to sea. [116453]

Mr. Spellar: RFAs Olwen and Olna were last at sea in July 1999 and November 1999 respectively.

Working Time Directive (TA)

Mr. Key: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what advice he has issued to the Territorial Army on compliance with the Working Time Directive. [116345]

Mr. Spellar: No specific guidance has been issued to the Territorial Army, although general guidance has been given to the armed forces, much of which is relevant to the Territorial Army. It is our intention to issue further guidance to the reserve forces, in light of the amendments to the Working Time Regulations contained in SI 3372/99, within the next two months.

Credit Facilities

Mr. Key: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence with which credit organisations his officials are discussing access to credit by members of HM Forces and their families; and if he will make a statement. [116131]

Mr. Spellar: Service families are occasionally refused credit because credit scoring systems used by some credit lenders do not take account of the mobility expected of Service families. This is a particular problem for Service personnel who have not lived at the same address for three years or who are registered as Service voters. My Service Families Task Force is in discussions on this issue with the British Bankers Association and the Finance Leasing Association. These organisations represent the majority of credit lenders in this country.

Accommodation (Scotland)

Mr. Alasdair Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what barrack accommodation is currently surplus to requirements in Scotland and awaiting disposal; and if he will estimate the potential single accommodation capacity of these barracks. [116224]

Dr. Moonie: I will write to the hon. Member and a copy of my letter will be placed in the Library of the House.

Mr. Alasdair Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many places (a) are currently available and (b) will be available by 2001, in training camps in Scotland for (i) Kirkcudbright, (ii) Barry Budden and (iii) Cultybraggan. [116225]

Mr. Spellar: The number of bed spaces (a) currently available and (b) available in 2001, in training camps in Scotland at (i) Kirkcudbright, (ii) Barry Budden and (iii) Cultybraggan are as follows:

Training camp	2000	2001
Kirkcudbright	0	0
Barry Budden	507	507
Cultybraggan	600	600

A training camp is planned for Kirkcudbright which will offer accommodation for up to 480 soldiers in due course.

Mr. Alasdair Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many single accommodation places exist for each of the services in Scotland for (a) officers and (b) other ranks by location; and if he will estimate the total number of service personnel that could be accommodated onshore in Scotland if all available accommodation was utilised. [116226]

Dr. Moonie: The information requested is not held centrally. I will write to the hon. Member and a copy of my letter will be placed in the Library of the House when this information has been collated.

Zimbabwe

Mr. Salmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many (a) Royal Navy, (b) Royal Marine, (c) Army and (d) RAF personnel there are in Zimbabwe; what roles they are fulfilling; and how many Zimbabweans are receiving military training in the UK. [116262]

Mr. Spellar: Nine British Army and two RAF UK military personnel currently serve in Zimbabwe as part of the British Military Advisory and Training Team (BMATT) Southern Africa. The BMATT's main role is to provide regional peacekeeping training in countries throughout the Southern Africa region.

In addition, two Army personnel (the UK Defence Adviser and his assistant) provide advice to the British High Commissioner in Harare on defence issues.

A total of four Zimbabwean officers are currently receiving training in the UK.

RAF Base Budgets

Mr. Salmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what was the station operating budget for each RAF base in the UK in the last year for which figures are available. [116223]

Mr. Spellar: I will write to the hon. Member and a copy of my letter will be placed in the Library of the House.

Indonesia

Ann Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if UK military personnel provided advice to the Indonesian Armed Forces in respect of their 9 May 1996 assault on the village of Geselama to rescue foreign and Indonesian hostages held by West Papuan rebels; and what UK military personnel were (a) present at and (b) took part in the assault. [116106]

Mr. Battle: I have been asked to reply.

I refer to the reply given by the then Minister of State, my right hon. Friend the Member for Ashfield (Mr. Hoon) on 23 July 1999, Official Report, column 727W. We worked closely with the Indonesian authorities to help ensure the safe release of the hostages. But Her Majesty's Government does not comment on the operational aspects of kidnap cases.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Child Benefit

Mr. Webb: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will set out the criteria which determine which recipients of child benefit receive letters inviting them to move to four-weekly payment in arrears. [115852]

Angela Eagle [holding answer 22 March 2000]: The administration of child benefit is a matter for Peter Mathison, the Chief Executive of the Benefits Agency. He will write to the hon. Member.

Letter from Peter Mathison to Mr. Steve Webb, dated 24 March 2000:

The Secretary of State has asked me to respond to your recent Parliamentary Question asking if he will set out the criteria which determine which recipients of child benefit receive letters inviting them to move to four-weekly payment in arrears.

It may help if I explain that the normal frequency for paying Child Benefit is every four weeks. The only exceptions to this are lone parents, people who received weekly payments prior to 14 March 1982 and customers who are in receipt of Income Support, Income Based Jobseekers Allowance, Family Credit or Disability Working Allowance. However, customers in receipt of Working Families Tax Credit or Disabled Person's Tax Credit which replaced Family Credit and Disability Working Allowance on 5 October 1999 do not qualify for weekly payments.

In October 1999, an exercise was taken to identify Child Benefit customers who were receiving their benefit on a weekly basis where it appeared that they should, in fact, have been paid four weekly. Customers selected were issued with a letter which explained their Child Benefit would, when their current order book expired, be paid on a four weekly order book basis unless the customer contended that this would cause hardship.

This exercise has been completed and there are no plans to issue any further letters to these customers.

I hope this is helpful.

SERPS

Mr. Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what evidence he will require before compensation is paid as proof that a person has lost financially as a result of receiving inaccurate information from a Government Department regarding changes to inherited SERPS; and if he will make a statement. [116342]

Mr. Rooker: We shall put before the House the full details of the Inherited SERPS Scheme, including what information we will require from those wishing to claim, and the procedures that will be followed to scrutinise those claims, once we have developed them. The NAO and the Ombudsman will be fully involved in developing these procedures.

Mr. Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what will be the cost to public funds of compensation to contributors for the changes to surviving spouses' entitlement to SERPS. [116378]

Mr. Rooker: The cost to public funds will depend on the number of successful claims. The minimum cost will be £2.5 billion.

Pensioner Households

Mr. Webb: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will set out the basis for his calculation that pensioner households are on average £400 per year better off than when the Government came into office. [116470]

Mr. Rooker: The £400 figure is a rounded illustrative average across all pensioner households and covers winter fuel payments, free television licences for the over-75s, our minimum income guarantee measures and various tax changes and includes measures announced in the Budget.

Pensioners (Benefits)

Mr. Webb: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will estimate the value of expenditure on (a) retirement pensions, (b) winter fuel payments, (c) means-tested benefits for pensioners, (d) all other benefits for pensioners and (e) free TV licences for 1996–97 and each succeeding year to the end of the public expenditure planning period, as a share of GDP. [116471]

Mr. Rooker: The information is in the table.

Expenditure as a percentage of GDP[1]

	1996–97	1997–98	1998–99	1999–2000	2000–01	2001–02
Retirement Pensions[2]	4.18	4.12	4.15	4.19	4.08	4.10
Winter Fuel Payments	0.00	0.02	0.02	0.08	0.15	0.13
Means-tested benefits for pensioners[3]	1.13	1.07	1.00	1.00	1.00	1.03
Other benefits paid to pensioners[4]	0.02	0.02	0.02	0.02	0.02	0.02
Concessionary TV Licences	0.00	0.00	0.00	0.00	0.04	0.04
Total	5.33	5.23	5.19	5.29	5.28	5.30

[1] Expenditure figures are consistent with estimates of Social Security AME expenditure published in the March 2000 Financial Statement and Budget Report (FSBR). GDP figures for 1996–97 and 1998–99 were published by HM Treasury at the same time. Forecast figures for GDP for 1999–2000 to 2001–02 are from Table B6 of the FSBR.
[2] Includes Retirement Pension basic and earnings-related components.
[3] Includes Income Support, Social Fund payments, Housing Benefit and Council Tax Benefit paid to people aged 60 and over.
[4] Includes non-contributory Retirement Pension and Christmas Bonus (contributory and non-contributory).

Benefits Agency (Internal Security)

Mr. Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security when the report by the Probity and Transformation Section on Benefits Agency internal security will be published; and if he will place a copy in the Library. [116379]

Mr. Rooker: No. The report on the internal security of the Benefits Agency will be produced at the end of April. It is an internal document and we have no plans to publish it. This is in line with Part II paragraph 2 of the Code of Practice on Access to Government Information.

Personal Pensions

Mrs. Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) if the benefits from an occupational pension scheme which are transferred to a personal pension scheme will vest in the pension holder's trustee in sequestration in the event that the pension holder is sequestrated; [116228]

(2) when he plans to bring into force the provisions of the Welfare Reform and Pensions Act 1999 whereby personal pensions, in the event of bankruptcy of the holder, will vest in the trustee; [116227]

(3) what is his estimate of the numbers of persons who by virtue of becoming sequestrated or being sequestrated prior to the coming into force of section 11 of the Welfare Reform and Pensions Act 1999 will lose to the trustee in sequestration the benefit of their personal pension, assuming that section 11 is not brought into force until April 2001. [116229]

Mr. Rooker: Where a person becomes bankrupt, his assets, with some exceptions, usually vest in the trustee in bankruptcy (in Scotland, the permanent trustee in bankruptcy). In relation to personal pensions, current bankruptcy law is not wholly clear. Nevertheless, some personal pensions have been taken by the trustee in bankruptcy. These can include personal pensions that contain transfers from occupational pensions.

The Welfare Reform and Pensions Act 1999 contains a measure to protect all tax-approved pensions on bankruptcy. Regulations are needed to give full effect to the measure and in order to allow for the preparation of the regulations, April 2001 has been chosen as the date for bringing the new measure into effect.

In Scotland it is estimated that the number of people who lose their personal pension on bankruptcy is around 375 a year. There is no reliable information for England and Wales.

Rent Rebates

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what was the total expenditure by local authorities in England and Wales on rent rebates for council tenants in 1998–99. [115398]

Angela Eagle: The total expenditure on rent rebates for council tenants (i.e. properties within the Housing Revenue Account (HRA)) in 1998–99 was as follows:

	£ million
England	4,318
Wales	265

Source:
Figures are taken from the HRA subsidy forms submitted by local authorities to the Department of Environment, Transport and the Regions, and the National Assembly for Wales.

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is the estimated expenditure by local authorities in England and Wales on rent rebates for council tenants for the years (a) 1999–2000 and (b) 2000–01. [115400]

Angela Eagle: The information is in the table.

Forecast expenditure on rent rebates for council tenants (i.e. properties in the housing revenue account (HRA)) in 1999–2000 and 2000–01

£ million

	1999–2000	2000–01
England	4,319	4,367
Wales	270	282

Source:

Figures are DSS country-based forecasts of expenditure, which underlie the Budget 2000

Child Support

Mr. Fitzpatrick: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what plans he has to improve access to child support for lone parents who claim income support or income-based jobseeker's allowance. [116667]

Angela Eagle: Closer working between the Child Support Agency and the Benefits Agency has already provided a more straightforward, responsive and easily understood child support service. Currently, when Benefits Agency staff interview lone parents to help with their claim for income support and income based jobseeker's allowance, they also help them complete a child support application. If the parent with care is unwilling to apply for child support, a statement is taken at the interview setting out her reasons. The statement is then passed to the Child Support Agency for a decision on whether the reasons for not applying for child support constitute "good cause".

As a result of these changes, many more parents with care claiming income support and income-based jobseeker's allowance, now apply for child support. 87 per cent. now complete a child support application and provide details of the non-resident parent.

From 1 April this year, following successful trials around the country, the current arrangements will be extended so that the Benefits Agency will take on responsibility for making decisions about good cause. This will further streamline the service offered to lone parents claiming benefit.

Winter Fuel Payment

Miss Geraldine Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many pensioner households in Morecambe and Lunesdale have benefited from the winter fuel payment. [115747]

Angela Eagle: From the data we keep it is not possible to state how many separate households have received a winter fuel payment. However, in Morecambe and Lunesdale in the winter of 1999–2000, 9,333 pensioners received a £100 payment and 9,595 pensioners received a £50 payment.

State Second Pension

Mrs. Lait: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security when he expects the low-earning self-employed to be brought into the state second pension. [115910]

Mr. Rooker: Self-employed earners will not be included in the state second pension scheme from the outset. The issue of whether they should eventually be brought into the scheme was part of the Pension Green Paper consultation exercise we carried out. We are considering the outcome of this.

Industrial Injury Benefit

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many claims were made for industrial injury benefit during 1999. [115918]

Mr. Bayley: Data on the claims made to industrial injuries disablement benefit in the quarter ending December 1999 are not yet available. 54,600 claims were made for industrial injuries disablement benefit between January and September 1999. 70,300 claims were made in the 12 months ending September 1999.

Notes:

1. These figures are based on a 10 per cent. sample of industrial injuries disablement benefit claims.

2. Figures are rounded to the nearest hundred.

Source:

Analytical Services Division.

Incapacity Benefit

Mr. Cotter: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what was the average length of time between date of initial application and date of appeal for incapacity benefit applications in North Somerset in each of the last three years. [116005]

Mr. Bayley: The information requested is not available and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Stakeholder Pensions

Mrs. Lait: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what advice he has received from his advisers on the increase in the number of pensions taken out and the money likely to be put into pensions if stakeholder pensions were fully concurrent. [115908]

Mr. Rooker: If all members of defined benefit occupational pension schemes were permitted to contribute up to £3,600 to a stakeholder pension, regardless of existing limits, it is estimated that there would be an increase of around one million people taking out stakeholder pensions. The additional money put into pensions would be about £1.3 billion, of which about £400 million would come from tax relief.

Key Client Groups

Mr. Webb: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security, pursuant to his oral statement of 15 March 2000, Official Report, columns 307–21, if he will list his Department's key client groups other than children, people of working age and pensioners. [115851]

Angela Eagle: Our aim is to promote work for those who can and provide support and opportunity for all. As my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State said in his statement, we are focusing the Department on its key client groups: children, people of working age and pensioners. We recognise that within these key groups people will have different needs. Our approach will help us to focus services to meet these needs.

Australia (Pensions)

Mrs. Lait: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what recent discussions he (a) has had and (b) plans to have with the Australian Government about frozen state pensions of British people living in Australia; and if he will make a statement. [115101]

Mr. Rooker: The Australian Government's proposal for a limited unfreezing of pensions for some UK pensioners living in Australia were discussed at a meeting with the then Minister of State in July 1999. This proposal was rejected.

Formal notification of Australia's intention to terminate its social security agreement with the UK was received on 1 March. The agreement will end 12 months from this date. This action will have no effect on the great majority of UK pensioners living in Australia, nor will it affect those in receipt of an Australian age pension at the time the termination becomes affective.

It is unfortunate that the Australian Government has decided to end this long-standing agreement. We have no plans to unfreeze pensions in Australia or elsewhere.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Correspondence

Mr. Jenkin: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food when he will reply to the letter from the hon. Member for North Essex of 6 November 1999 concerning purchasing policies of local authorities. [116138]

Mr. Nick Brown: I replied to the hon. Member on 23 March 2000.

National Hunt Horses

Mr. Baker: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement on the practice of firing National Hunt horses' tendons. [115804]

Mr. Morley: This practice has been condemned by the Council of the Royal College of Veterinary Surgeons as being therapeutically ineffective and unjustifiable.

Food Supplements

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement on the timetable for the proposed Directive on Food Supplements; whether he has received a copy of the Draft Directive; what policy objectives he intends to pursue in connection with that Directive; and what steps is he taking to promote those objectives in discussions with other member states. [115798]

Ms Quin: In its White Paper on Food Safety published on 18 January, the Commission stated that it will adopt the proposal for a directive on food supplements in March 2000, with a view to it being adopted by the Council of Ministers and the European Parliament by March 20001. The draft directive has not yet been published.

The Government believe that the level of vitamins and minerals in supplements sold under food law should be limited only where this is necessary for safety reasons, and we are taking every opportunity to promote this approach during discussions in Brussels and other international forums.

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what plans he has to review food labelling regulations to ensure that consumers of food supplements and other health food products are given accurate, relevant information about these products, their safety, use and effectiveness in maintaining good health. [115795]

Ms Quin: The Government are committed to giving consumers clear, easily understood information so they can make informed choices about the food they buy. We have been pressing the European Commission for changes in existing food labelling rules, which are harmonised at Community level, to require mandatory nutrition labelling of all foods and for the development of harmonised rules on health and nutrition claims. In addition, we are supporting the work of the Joint Health Claims Initiative, an alliance of consumer, industry and enforcement groups, in the development of a Code of Practice on Health Claims.

In January, my noble Friend Baroness Hayman launched the "Better Food Labelling" initiative to identify whether current labelling rules and regulations meet the needs of consumers. The views received will be passed to the new Food Standards Agency to help judge whether the current regime is in need of reform, and for use in formulating its advice to Government on the UK's food labelling policy.

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what is his policy in relation to the availability on general retail sale of safe vitamin and mineral supplements. [115797]

Ms Quin: The Government believe that in the interests of consumer choice supplements sold under food law should, like other foods, be freely available.

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food when he expects to receive the report of the Expert Advisory Group on Vitamins and Minerals; and if he will arrange for the provisional findings of the Group to be made available for comment to consumer, retailer, practitioner and manufacturer representative groups prior to its publication. [115794]

Ms Quin: The Expert Group on Vitamins and Minerals is expected to submit its report to the Food Advisory Committee in spring 2001. Whether the provisional findings are the subject of consultation with interested parties prior to this is a decision for the group itself. However, the group is committed to publishing the scientific reviews of the nutrients that it is considering so that interested parties have an opportunity to comment. It is also aided in its work by observers from consumer, food and health food industries and alternative medicine who are free to participate in the discussion of the scientific reviews.

Meat and Bone Meal

Mr. Breed: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what has been the cost of storing meat and bone meal produced under the over-30-months scheme prior to incineration in each of the storage locations. [115110]

Ms Quin: The total cost of storing meat and bone meal produced under the over-30-months scheme is currently around £9 million per year. Specific rates are negotiated individually with contractors and are commercial confidential.

Quarantine Kennels

Mr. Baker: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food when his Department intends to enact the provisions of the Animal Health (Amendment) Act 1998, in respect of minimum animal welfare standards in quarantine kennels; and if he will make a statement. [115506]

Ms Quin [holding answer 22 March 2000]: Statutory welfare standards for dogs and cats in quarantine premises will be introduced in the same statutory instrument that will implement the full pet travel scheme. It is intended that this will be in place by the end of March 2001.

Regional Service Centres

Mr. Gill: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what plans he has to close regional service centres; and if he will make a statement. [116264]

Ms Quin [holding answer 23 March 2000]: No decisions have yet been taken on the future of the Ministry's regional service centres (RSCs) following the recent review of CAP scheme administration, which was commissioned to help us identify the best way to improve the service we offer to farmers and traders eligible to claim CAP payments, taking full advantage of the benefits offered by modern technology.

We are now considering, in the context of the spending review 2000, how best to restructure MAFF's RSCs and the Intervention Board Executive Agency. Any major restructuring will only be possible if funding can be made available.

My right hon. Friend the Minister has made it clear that he will not implement the recommendations of the review unless he is satisfied that we will be able to deliver real improvements in the service which MAFF and the Intervention Board currently provide to farmers and traders, as well as reductions in the cost to the taxpayer of administration of CAP payments.

We are also taking forward plans to align MAFF's other regional activities, particularly on rural development, with the Government Offices for the Regions. This will ensure that we are able to work effectively with other regional partners including the regional development agencies.

GM Crops

Miss McIntosh: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make it his policy to ban the commercial release of GM crops until tests demonstrate that they are safe for (a) people and (b) the environment. [115032]

Mr. Meacher: I have been asked to reply.

It is the Government's policy to ban the commercial release of GM crops until it can be demonstrated that they are safe for people and the environment. The current European and UK legislation prohibits the commercial release of any genetically modified organism, including GM crops, until the applicant can demonstrate to the satisfaction of European member states that they will not cause harm to human health or the environment and a marketing consent has been issued under the terms of the Directive 90/220.

PRIME MINISTER

Synchrotron

Mr. Brady: To ask the Prime Minister what representations were made to him by (a) Ministers and (b) officials in the Department of Trade and Industry regarding the Diamond Synchrotron Project. [115756]

The Prime Minister [holding answer 21 March 2000]: Since my response to a question in the House from the hon. Member for Wantage (Mr. Jackson) on 8 December 1999, Official Report, column 826. I have been kept fully informed by Ministers and officials in the Department of Trade and Industry on important issues relating to the New Synchrotron project.

Telecommunications Industry

Dr. Cable: To ask the Prime Minister what representations he received from, or on behalf of, the telecommunications industries between 20 January and 2 March in connection with the Utilities Bill; and if he will list the telecommunications companies involved. [115771]

The Prime Minister [holding answer 22 March 2000]: None.

Dr. Cable: To ask the Prime Minister if he will list (a) the meetings and contacts he had with the telecommunications industry between 20 January and 2 March and (b) the telecommunications companies involved; and on which occasions ministers from the Cabinet Office attended. [115783]

The Prime Minister [holding answer 22 March 2000]: I have meetings with a wide range of individuals and organisations.

UN Millennium Summit

Mr. Gill: To ask the Prime Minister which Government Ministers will attend the forthcoming United Nations Millennium Summit. [116252]

The Prime Minister: The United Kingdom delegation to the summit has yet to be decided.

Interactive Website

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Prime Minister with what frequency he examines the comments posted by members of the public on the No. 10 interactive website he established in February; and what criteria he uses to judge whether comments should be deleted. [116265]

The Prime Minister: The No. 10 Downing Street Internet Site was relaunched on 11 February 2000. The public can post comments in the "Your Say" section. There have been more than 17,000 postings since the site's launch. "Your Say" is divided into two parts:

(a) Policy Forum: the public are invited to respond to specific questions posed by the Government. I see a synopsis of the responses, and a selection of individual postings, which are sent to the relevant Government Department for a ministerial reply. I also receive a copy of the reply.

(b) Speakers' Corner: this is an open forum where people can submit postings on any issue. A monthly report is sent to me and I see a selection of individual postings.

Postings are deleted in the following circumstances:

(a) They are irrelevant (i.e. have no relation to the discussion stream into which they are posted);

(b) They are dormant (i.e. have not provoked any discussion for five or more days). This only applies to the Speakers' Corner section;

(c) They are inappropriate (including those containing offensive, defamatory or libellous comments).

Irrelevant and dormant postings are removed to ensure the site operates as quickly as possible, and users can enjoy a focused discussion on the issues they are interested in. Inappropriate postings are deleted so that everyone (including young children) can use the discussion forums.

Pig Farmers

Mr. Gill: To ask the Prime Minister, pursuant to his oral answer of 8 March 2000, Official Report, column 999, what steps he is taking to fulfil his commitment to assist pig farmers. [116239]

The Prime Minister: In my speech to the National Farmers Union AGM on 1 February, I made it clear that further Government help for the UK pig industry had not been ruled out. But I made it equally clear that any investment by Government must be linked to long-term change in the structure of the industry and be part of an agreed overall strategy. How we take this forward will be part of the meeting I am holding with leaders from the agriculture and food industries on 30 March.

Roger Liddle

Mr. Ottaway: To ask the Prime Minister, pursuant to his answer of 20 March 2000, Official Report, column 403W, on Roger Liddle, for what reason he did not provide the information requested about what occasions and at which venues during November and December 1999 his Defence and Foreign Affairs adviser made speeches in (a) the United Kingdom and (b) other European countries. [116127]

The Prime Minister [holding answer 24 March 2000]: As my answer of 20 March made clear, Mr. Liddle attended seminars during the period in question and made some introductory remarks. He did not speak from a written text.

EDUCATION AND EMPLOYMENT

"Computers for Teachers"

Mr. Breed: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment (1) if the £500 subsidy for teachers purchasing computer equipment will be liable for income tax; [115565]

(2) if the grant which teachers can claim towards computer purchase, as part of the "Computer for Teachers" initiative, is taxable as a benefit in kind. [115790]

Mr. Wills: The subsidy is an addition to income over and above salary, so income tax and national insurance contributions are payable. However, the DfEE has made arrangements with the Inland Revenue for these liabilities to be met centrally. No liability will fall on individual teachers, and they will not have to include the subsidy in any income tax return.

Advertising

Mr. Clappison: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how much has been spent by his Department on advertising in each of the last 10 years. [115094]

Mr. Wills: The Department's spending on advertising as the Department for Education and Employment, and previously as the Employment Department and Department for Education, over the past 10 years is:

	£
Employment Department
1989–90	2,016,305
1990–91	7,094,284
1991–92	9,154,140
1992–93	3,180,585
1993–94	7,259,450
1994–95	6,477,791
1995–96	7,713,740
Department for Education
1989–90	260,883
1990–91	2,405,522
1991–92	2,562,505
1992–93	734,599
1993–94	1,379,573
1994–95	114,423
1995–96	582,134
Department for Education and Employment
1996–97	7,537,917
1997–98	[1]9,992,350
1998–99	[2]15,673,258

[1] Of this £6,093.649 was used to attract businesses to New Deal
[2] Of this £6,578,202 was used to attract businesses to New Deal—by December 1999, New Deal had helped find jobs for 219,420 people and is helping cut welfare bills—and £1,848,223 was spent on a campaign to encourage parents to help with their children's reading.

New Deal (18 to 24-year-olds)

Mr. Allan: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if he will list by unit of delivery (a) the number of leavers from the full-time education and employment option of the New Deal for 18 to 24-year-olds from January 1998 to the end of July 1999 and (b) the number of those who left to (i) sustained, unsubsidised employment, (ii) jobs lasting less than 13 weeks (iii) no known destination and (iv) benefits other than the jobseeker's allowance. [113675]

Ms Jowell [holding answer 9 March 2000]: There is no full-time education and employment option in the new deal. However, there is a full time education and training option (FTET) and an employer option. For the period January 1998 to July 1999, the number of leavers from the full-time education and training option and their destinations are shown in tables placed in the Library.

Child Care

Mr. Clappison: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how many child care places for under-8s have been available in each of the last three years for which figures are available; and what was the breakdown of places available through (a) day nurseries, (b) pre-school playgroups and (c) child minders. [116083]

Ms Hodge: The available information is shown in the following table. This information was also published on 22 December 1999 in the Statistical Volume "Children's Day care Facilities at 31 March 1999", which is available in the Library.

Child care places in day nurseries, child minders and playgroups, 1997–99

As at 31 March	Day nurseries[1] Total places	Child minders[2] Total places	Playgroups[1] Total places
1999[3]	247,700	337,000	347,200
1998[3]	223,000	370,700	383,600
1997[3]	193,800	365,200	383,700

[1] The totals include local authority provided, registered and non-registered for day nurseries, and playgroups.
[2] Local authority provided and other registered persons for child minders.
[3] These figures have been rounded to the nearest 100 as appropriate.

Early Years Development Plans

Ms Buck: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if he will require local early years development plans to include data on the actual costs of nursery places and child minding places in each local authority. [116073]

Ms Hodge: We will consider requesting this information in future.

Employment Service

Mr. Oaten: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if employment service staff issuing equipment for the blind are required to declare interests in companies providing this equipment. [R] [115960]

Ms Jowell [holding answer 23 March 2000]: Responsibility for the subject of the question has been delegated to the Employment Service agency under its Chief Executive. I have asked him to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Leigh Lewis to Mr. Mark Oaten, dated 27 March 2000:

As the Employment Service is an Executive Agency, the Secretary of State has asked me to reply to your question regarding Employment Service staff declaring interests in companies providing equipment for the blind. This is something which falls within the responsibilities delegated to me as Chief Executive of the Agency.

Exceptionally, Employment Service staff may, through the Access to Work programme, purchase equipment for disabled people to use in their job. In most cases, employers actually buy the equipment and claim the costs from the Employment Service. In these cases, Employment Service staff may advise the employer on likely sources of supply, especially where equipment is specialised or there are only a few suppliers.

Employment Service staff who procure goods have to follow Treasury approved purchasing guidelines. These guidelines require that anyone with a personal interest in a purchase must report the fact to a senior manager. A decision is then made on whether the procurement should be passed to another member of staff who has no personal interest in the outcome.

I hope this is helpful.

Footballers

Mr. Brady: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if he will make a statement on negotiations between UEFA and the European Commission regarding the rules allowing professional footballers to work in any EEA country. [114850]

Ms Hodge: My Department notes with interest the discussions that have already taken place between the European Commission and UEFA and we will monitor closely any further developments on this matter.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Polis III System

Mr. Key: To ask the Chairman of the Information Committee if he will reintroduce the screen-based Polis III system for hon. Members and their staff in addition to the browser interface. [116347]

Mr. Allan: This is an operational matter falling within the remit of the Library and the Parliamentary Communications Directorate (PCD). I am advised that the decision to withdraw screen-based access to POLIS for the majority of PDVN users was implemented by PCD and the Library in order to comply with Parliament's IT convergence strategy. The cost of providing millennium compliant terminal emulation software to all PDVN users could not be justified, compared with the benefits of developing the browser-based version. The Library's POLIS development programme is now focused on that service. Future plans include active hypertext links to the text of the Official Report and other parliamentary publications in electronic format, and advanced search capability.

I gather that screen-based POLIS is still available via one of the public access PCs in the Official Publications Library. I have asked the Librarian to investigate whether it could also be placed on the PCs in the Members Library.

All-party Groups

Sir John Stanley: To ask the Chairman of the Administration Committee, pursuant to her answer to the hon. Member for Nuneaton of 22 February 2000, Official Report, column 844W, on all-party groups, if the new rules for all-party groups apply retrospectively from the date of a group's last AGM or from the date of a group's first AGM following her answer; if meetings held outside the Palace of Westminster count towards the minimum annual requirement; if a meeting of a group held separately from, but on the same day, and at the same place, as the group's AGM counts towards the minimum annual requirement; and if meetings at which the number of hon. Members present falls below five at any point can be counted towards the minimum annual requirement. [115775]

Mrs. Roe: I will answer the points raised in my right hon. Friend's question in the order listed.

The new rules have been applied simultaneously to all all-party parliamentary and associate parliamentary groups with effect from 29 February 2000 (ie the date on which each group was individually notified of them).

As long as a meeting has been called by a group, (and is not just an event at which some group members are present, eg a reception), such a meeting would count towards the minimum total, regardless of where it was held; however, the group must keep a record so that it can provide the same information as is required of meetings held on the Parliamentary Estate.

I understand that some groups' AGMs are solely to attend to administrative necessities (eg electing officers), while others may combine their AGM with an ordinary meeting (ie the AGM consists of a few minutes to attend to administrative necessities, followed by the real business). I think this is the separation to which my right hon. Friend refers; meetings count as separate meetings only if they are separated by a significant length of time (ie they are not held on the same day).

The rules require five hon. Members, who are members of the group, to be present for the duration of every meeting.

Overseas Research Assistants

Mr. Oaten: To ask the Chairman of the Administration Committee if she will list those hon. Members who currently have passes for temporary research assistants from overseas. [116018]

Mrs. Roe: No. Details of an hon. Member's staff are matters entirely for that hon. Member and the relevant House authorities.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Cluster Development

Mr. Pearson: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will publish further details of the new funding to support cluster development, announced by the Chancellor of the Exchequer on 21 March. [116660]

Mr. Byers: I can announce £50 million of new money to enable the RDAs to support clusters, including business incubation, in the English regions. The eight Regional Development Agencies (and the London Development Agency, when it is established in the summer) will be responsible for promoting the development of clusters in their respective regions: the new money, together with existing funding streams, will provide them with resources towards this. This new DTI initiative demonstrates the Government's commitment to strengthening the business agenda in the regions.

RDAs are being invited to prepare business plans for their regions setting out their proposals to support clusters development in line with the Regional Economic Strategies. These plans will set out details of what each RDA intends to achieve using money allocated to them from the new fund. The £50 million will cover the financial years 2000–01 and 2001–02. Financial allocations for future years are being considered as part of the current Spending Review. Each RDA (and the LDA) will receive an allocation from the Capital Modernisation Fund of £1½ million for the coming financial year (2000–01). For the following year (2001–02), we shall introduce a "Challenge" element in the allocations.

West Midlands Task Force

Miss Kirkbride: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what party affiliations are recorded against the members of the West Midlands Task Force dealing with the situation at Longbridge. [116281]

Mr. Alan Johnson: The Longbridge Task Force is a non-political group consisting of representatives drawn from a wide range of organisations across the West Midlands. Each member has been invited to join by the Chairman, Alex Stephenson, who has selected individual participants on the basis of their experience and the contribution they can make to the work of the Task Force. There is no record of their individual party political affiliations.

Hydro Agri (Immingham)

Shona McIsaac: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will make a statement on the job losses at Hydro Agri in Immingham. [113840]

Mr. Caborn [holding answer 10 March 2000]: I was aware that Hydro Agri's plant at Immingham was under review. I am naturally disappointed about the job losses which will result from the closure of the production side of the plant.

It would be inappropriate for me to comment any further as this is a commercial decision, but the Government Office for Yorkshire and the Humber stands ready to work with Yorkshire Forward and other relevant agencies to help with re-training and identifying new job opportunities if required.

Welding Institute, Cambridge

Mr. Paice: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will list the (a) grants made to and (b) contracts agreed by his Department or its agencies at the Welding Institute near Cambridge in (i) 1998 and (ii) 1999. [113879]

Mr. Alan Johnson [holding answer 10 March 2000]: In 1998 the Department made total payments of £1,370,000 in grants or contracts to TWI. Much of this was for technology transfer activity in areas such as laser, plastics, structural composites and joining generally. The largest project (with grant of around 70 per cent. of the total paid) was to develop an internet based technology transfer delivery system based on BT communications expertise.

In 1999 grants and contracts for similar work totalled £420,000 of which around 45 per cent. was to research the feasibility of developing their internet based technology transfer system into a knowledge trading system for other UK knowledge providers.

In addition over this period TWI have secured grants through the North East Region for several projects funded from European Structural Funds, which the Department manages.

Taiwan

Dr. Gibson: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what plans he has to develop relationships through the Office of Science and Technology with Taiwan in the areas of science and technology. [113828]

Mr. Byers: The Office of Science and Technology attaches importance to facilitating civil scientific co-operation between the UK and Taiwan. A number of visits have recently been made by officials from Taiwan's National Science Council to discuss aspects of UK civil science policy. Dr. Jenn-Tai Hwang, Chairman of the National Science Council, will visit London in May this year.

These contacts, and the work of staff in the British Trade and Cultural Office in Taipei to promote science and technology links, should raise the profile of UK science in Taiwan, and will help UK companies and the science base to gain access to Taiwanese innovation and technology.

Global Enterprise Initiative

Mr. Paul Marsden: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will make a statement on the effectiveness of the Global Enterprise Initiative. [116046]

Mr. Caborn: The Global Enterprise Initiative will be launched in the United Kingdom later this spring. It is a British Trade International scheme designed to bring British and Indian companies together in commercial co-operation—eg joint ventures or distribution agreements. We seek to encourage British firms to look again at the growing opportunities for them in India. The scheme has been tested successfully on the ground in India, and during his visit to India in January, my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry announced a target for the Global Enterprise Initiative to develop 200 new business partnerships over the next two years.

Banana Dispute

Mr. Sayeed: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what assessment he has made of the impact on United Kingdom companies of the banana dispute between the European Union and the United States. [115999]

Mr. Caborn: The United States has World Trade Organisation authority to retaliate up to an annual monetary value of $191.4 million against EU goods. The sectors that the US has chosen to include in this authorised retaliation, and the trends in US imports from the UK of these products, are as follows:

US imports from the UK

Description	US tariff code	1998 (£ million)	1999 (£ million)	Percentage change 1998–99	Absolute change (£ million)
Batteries	85072080	10.80	3.75	−65.3	−7.0
Bath oils	33073050	4.76	1.17	−75.5	−3.6
Lithographs	49119120	2.56	0.91	−64.3	−1.6
Bed linen	63022190	0.34	0.06	−82.0	−0.3
Cartons	48192000	1.19	0.79	−33.6	−0.4
Coffee makers	85167100	0.62	0.25	−60.2	−0.4
Wallets	42023210	0.17	0.07	−61.2	−0.1
Handbags	42022215	0.01	0.01	−12.2	0.0
Felt paper	48055000	0.00	0.00	—	—
Total	—	20.44	7.00	−66.0	−13.4

Source:
US International Trade Commission website. Converted to £ sterling using average sterling/dollar rates for each year.
ONS Economic Trends

The actual impact on UK companies in the targeted sectors will depend on a number of factors, including the length of time that the retaliatory measures remain in place, and the ability of affected companies to find alternative customers for their goods. However, I have received many representations from UK companies affected by the US retaliation. Taking into account these representations and the above data, my assessment is that there is a real risk of damage to UK companies in terms of lost trade and jobs.

Synchrotron

Ms Southworth: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if, when he wrote to the Wellcome Trust on 4 October 1999 to inform them that he was minded to locate Diamond at Daresbury, he wrote similarly to the French Government. [115632]

Mr. Byers [holding answer 21 March 2000]: I did not.

TREASURY

Departmental Secondment

Mr. Willis: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer, pursuant to his answer of 6 March 2000, Official Report, column 524W, on departmental secondment, if he will list the companies from which staff were seconded to his Department in the periods (a) May 1997 to April 1998, (b) May 1998 to April 1999 and (c) May 1999 to the latest date for which figures are available. [114544]

Miss Melanie Johnson [holding answer 15 March 2000]: The information is as follows:

1 May 1997 to 30 April 1998	1 May 1998 to 30 April 1999	1 May 1999 to date
British Petroleum	British Petroleum	—
Arthur Andersen	Arthur Andersen	Arthur Andersen
BZW	BZW	—
Coopers and Lybrand	Coopers and Lybrand	Coopers and Lybrand
Tarmac	Tarmac	—
Price Waterhouse	Price Waterhouse	—
Pannell, Kerr Foster Associates	Pannell, Kerr Foster Associates	Pannell, Kerr Foster Associates
Midland Bank	Midland Bank	Midland Bank
—	Slaughter and May	Slaughter and May
Ernst and Young	Ernst and Young	Ernst and Young
Quality Business Management	Quality Business Management	Quality Business Management
Esso	—	—
Peat Marwick	—	—
Robson Rhodes	—	—
—	Manpower	Manpower
—	Deloitte Touche	Deloitte Touche
—	Price WaterhouseCoopers	Price WaterhouseCoopers
—	Dilston Management	Dilston Management
—	—	Financial Services Agency
—	—	Brunswick Public Relations
—	—	Institute of Fiscal Studies

Bank Closures

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what representations he has made to the Chief Executive of Barclays Bank concerning its policy of closing banks in small towns and rural areas; and if he will make a statement. [116130]

Dr. Jack Cunningham: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what representations he has made to Barclays Bank plc about their branch closure policy; what reply he has received; and if he will make a statement. [115996]

Miss Melanie Johnson: [holding answer 24 March 2000]: I refer my hon. Friend and my right hon. Friend to the reply given on 20 March 2000, Official Report, column reference 444–45W.

Earnings Statistics

Mr. Moore: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer (1) what is the percentage of full-time workers in (a) Scotland, (b) each of the unitary local authority areas in Scotland and (c) Great Britain whose earnings on the basis of gross pay, (a) including and (b) excluding overtime were less than (i) £272.07 per week, (ii) £249.53 per week, (iii) £187.15 per week and (iv) £140 per week for the categories: (1) male manual, (2) male non-manual, (3) all male workers, (4) female manual, (5) female non-manual, (6) all female workers, (7) all manual, (8) all non-manual and (9) all workers at the latest date for which figures are available; [115789]

(2) if he will list the average weekly earnings on the basis of gross pay (a) including and (b) excluding overtime for full-time workers in (i) Scotland, (ii) each of the unitary local authority areas in Scotland and (iii) Great Britain for (1) all manual, (2) all non-manual and (3) all workers at the latest date for which figures are available. [115788]

Miss Melanie Johnson: The information requested falls within the responsibility of the Director of the Office for National Statistics. I have asked him to reply.

Letter from John Pullinger to Mr. Michael Moore, dated 27 March 2000:

The Director of the Office for National Statistics (ONS) has been asked to reply to your recent questions about earnings for workers in Scotland, the unitary areas in Scotland and Great Britain. I am replying in Dr Holt's absence.

The New Earnings Survey (NES) can provide earnings data for small geographical areas. However, the release of NES data is restricted to figures that are derived from a sufficiently large sample of employees, and have an acceptable level of accuracy. I have provided the available data for Scotland, the unitary authorities in Scotland and Great Britain in the attached tables. These are based on the 1999 NES, the latest survey for which data are available. These are large tables and copies of them are being placed in the Library of the House rather than reproduced in Hansard.

The NES is based on a one per cent sample of employees in the PAYE system and is therefore likely to under-represent relatively low paid staff earning below the tax threshold and in particular those who work part-time.

Working Families Tax Credit

Mr. Willetts: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how much he estimates will be spent in (a) 1999–2000 and (b) 2000–01 on the Working Families Tax Credit broken down between (i) basic tax credit, (ii) 30 hour tax credit, (iii) the child tax credits, broken down by age of child and (iv) the childcare tax credit. [115284]

Dawn Primarolo [holding answer 20 March 2000]: It is not possible to provide a split of total expenditure between types of credit. The amount of award payable is reduced for families whose incomes are above the threshold, and this reduction is applied to the total value of all credits taken together.

Dr. Jack Cunningham: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what estimate he has made of the take-up rate for Working Families Tax Credit in (a) Cumbria and (b) Copeland; and if he will make a statement. [115143]

Dawn Primarolo [holding answer 20 March 2000]: It is estimated that 7,600 families in Cumbria had been awarded the Working Families Tax Credit by the end of February 2000, of which 1,100 were families in Copeland.

Miss Geraldine Smith: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many people in Morecambe and Lunesdale have benefited from Working Families Tax Credit since its introduction. [115715]

Dawn Primarolo: It is estimated that 1,800 families in the Morecambe and Lunesdale constituency have been awarded the Working Families Tax Credit by the end of February 2000.

Mr. Kidney: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many residents of Stafford constituency have (a) applied for and (b) received working families tax credit; and what has been the average award. [115569]

Dawn Primarolo: It is estimates that 1,400 families in the Stafford constituency have been awarded the Working Families Tax Credit (WFTC) by the end of February 2000.

It is not possible to provide a reliable estimate of the average value of these awards. However, for the United Kingdom as a whole the average value of WFTC awards made up to the end of February 2000 was £71.48 per week, and for the West Midlands region the average was £72.42 per week.

Ms Harman: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer (1) how many families with children in Southwark he estimates are eligible for working families tax credit; [114840]

(2) how many people in Southwark were in receipt of (a) family credit and (b) the child care allowance in each of the last five years. [114835]

Dawn Primarolo: It is estimated that 2,800 families in Southwark have been awarded the Working Families Tax Credit by the end of February 2000.

Nationally, about 10 per cent. of awards of Working Families Tax Credit include a child care tax credit. There are too few cases in the 5 per cent. sample used for these analyses to provide a reliable estimate of the number of awards with a child care tax credit in Southwark.

Dr. Gibson: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer (1) what was the annual expenditure by Government on (a) working families tax credit and (b) childcare tax credit in Norwich in each of the last five years; [115100]

(2) how many families in Norwich are eligible for working families tax credit; [115097]

(3) how many people in Norwich are in receipt of (a) working families tax credit and (b) childcare tax credit. [115098]

Dawn Primarolo: It is estimated that 2,400 families in Norwich have been awarded the working families tax credit by the end of February 2000. Nationally, about 10 per cent. of awards of working families tax credit include a childcare tax credit. There are too few cases in the 5 per cent. sample used for these analyses to provide reliable estimates of the number of awards with a childcare tax credit in Norwich, or of expenditure on awards in Norwich.

Tax Credits

Mr. Willetts: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is the total cost of the (a) information packs and (b) videos that have been sent to those employers who are expected to administer the Working Families Tax Credit and the Disabled Persons Tax Credit. [113585]

Dawn Primarolo [holding answer 8 March 2000]: Information packs and videos have been produced by the Inland Revenue as part of a comprehensive programme of support for employers involved in administering the Working Families Tax Credit and the Disabled Persons Tax Credit. The total cost of adding tax credits material to the information packs already being sent to employers is £533,000. The total cost of making the video, and of sending a copy directly to smaller employers likely to benefit most from it, is £702,000.

Costs are inclusive of Value Added Tax.

National Insurance Contributions Office

Mr. Lidington: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what plans he has to subject the National Insurance Contributions Office to legal obligations equivalent to those imposed on employers by the Pensions Act 1995. [115982]

Dawn Primarolo [holding answer 23 March 2000]: There are no such plans.

Mr. Lidington: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what estimate he has made of the amount of money which the National Insurance Contributions Office will pay in the age-related element of the NIC rebate to contracted-out money purchase schemes for the financial year 1999–2000; how much of that sum has so far been paid into schemes by the National Insurance Contributions Office; and if he will make a statement. [115981]

Dawn Primarolo [holding answer 23 March 2000]: The overall amount of age-related rebates paid into the financial year 1999–2000, up to and including 1 March 2000, is £2,348,720,798. This amount includes rebates for personal pension and contracted-out money purchase schemes. The amount of rebates paid solely to contracted-out money purchase schemes in the 1999–2000 financial year is not currently available. All of the amount above has been paid to schemes, except £131,360,489 million that will be paid on 3 April 2000.

Disabled Person's Tax Credit

Mr. Ennis: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many disabled people in (a) Barnsley and (b) Doncaster have benefited from the disabled person's tax credit since its introduction. [115198]

Dawn Primarolo: 107 people in Barnsley, and 140 people in Doncaster, have been awarded the Disabled Person's Tax Credit by the end of February 2000.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Protected Tenancy Dwellings

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will list for each council area in Northern Ireland the number of protected tenancy dwellings; and, of these, in each area how many are (a) restricted tenancies and (b) regulated tenancies. [112939]

Mr. George Howarth: The information requested is as follows:

Council area	Restricted tenancies	Regulated tenancies	Total
Antrim	10	34	44
Ards	59	287	346
Armagh	3	40	43
Ballymena	3	55	58

Council area	Restricted tenancies	Regulated tenancies	Total
Ballymoney	1	32	33
Banbridge	3	31	34
Belfast	158	3,341	3,499
Carrickfergus	5	87	92
Castlereagh	5	128	133
Coleraine	1	76	77
Cookstown	3	38	41
Craigavon	55	397	452
Down	5	50	55
Dungannon and South Tyrone	2	67	69
Fermanagh	1	45	46
Larne	1	131	133
Limavady	0	24	24
Lisburn	27	217	244
Derry	3	52	55
Magherafelt	1	35	36
Moyle	1	9	10
Newry and Mourne	9	93	102
Newtownabbey	6	611	617
North Down	25	179	204
Omagh	0	35	35
Strabane	3	40	43

Household Division

Mr. DuncanSmith: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will place in the Library his recent correspondence with the Major General commanding the Household Division. [115377]

Mr. Mandelson: The correspondence referred to is personal between myself and the Major General commanding the Household Division. It is therefore not appropriate to place a copy in the Library. I made public my regrets for my remarks during Northern Ireland questions in the House on 15 March, and the Major General has stated that he is perfectly content with my response and that the matter is closed.

Police Authority

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what sums have been spent by the Police Authority on works to their office accommodation in each of the last three financial years and in the current year to date for which figures are available. [115587]

Mr. Ingram: Sums spent by the Police Authority on works to their office accommodation in each of the last three financial years and the current year to the latest date are as follows:

	£
1996–97	12,067
1997–98	62,597
1998–99	29,969
1999–2000	1,022

Prisoner Release

Mr. Pickthall: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make a statement on his recent decision to suspend the licence of a prisoner who was released under the Good Friday Agreement. [116694]

Mr. Mandelson: This was the first time this power has been exercised but should I receive evidence that any other prisoners who have benefited from early release breach their license conditions, I will act immediately.

Prisoners released early in accordance with the Good Friday Agreement are released on license and are subject to strict licence conditions.

For a fixed-term prisoner, these conditions are:

(a) that he does not support a specified organisation (within the meaning of section 3 of the Sentences Act), and

(b) that he does not become concerned in the commission, preparation or instigation of acts of terrorism connected with the affairs of Northern Ireland.

I have made it clear that anyone of whom I have evidence that they have breached these conditions would have their license suspended and be returned to custody.

Given the circumstances of the case in question, I had no hesitation in suspending the licence in accordance with the legislation.
The matter has been referred to the Sentence Review Commissioners (the prisoner may apply to them should he wish his case to be reconsidered).

CHURCH COMMISSIONERS

Church Sales

31. Mr. Paterson: To ask the hon. Member for Middlesbrough, representing the Church Commissioners, if he will make a statement on the Commissioners' policy on the conditions attached to the sale of redundant churches relating to their subsequent use. [114847]

Mr. Stuart Bell: The Commissioners normally impose covenants on the new owner restricting the use to that approved and prohibiting unauthorised architectural changes, the disturbance of any human remains or memorials and demolition.

Common Worship

32. Mr. Swayne: To ask the hon. Member for Middlesbrough, representing the Church Commissioners, what estimate the Commissioners have made of the impact of "Common Worship" on the number of vocations. [114848]

Mr. Stuart Bell: Liturgy and fostering vocations are not the direct responsibility of the Commissioners. It is not possible to demonstrate a correlation between new liturgy and the rise and fall in the number of ordinations and ordinands.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Chinese President (State Visit)

Mrs. Gillan: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations were made to his Department by the Chinese authorities regarding the policing of the Chinese state visit last October. [113744]

Mr. Battle: I refer the hon. Member to the answer given to my hon. Friend the Member for Cynon Valley (Ann Clwyd) on 28 October 1999, Official Report, column 993W.

Mrs. Gillan: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many meetings were held between his Department's officials and representatives of police services involved with policing the Chinese state visit. [113745]

Mr. Battle: I refer the hon. Member to the answer given to the hon. Member for Stratford-on-Avon (Mr. Maples) on 4 November 1999, Official Report, columns 271–72W. There was one meeting with the Cambridgeshire Constabulary on 1 October 1999.

Mrs. Gillan: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many meetings were held between his Department and Chinese authorities regarding the policing of the Chinese state visit last October. [113742]

Mr. Battle: I refer the hon. Member to the answer given to the hon. Member for Stratford-on-Avon (Mr. Maples) on 4 November 1999, Official Report, columns 271–72W.

Dialogue on Europe

Mr. Spring: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will estimate the cost to public funds of the training programme for young citizens of the member states who will be attending the launch of the European Commission's Dialogue on Europe. [114135]

Mr. Vaz [holding answer 14 March 2000]: The young people taking part in the launch of the European Commission's "Dialogue on Europe" were all participants in the long-standing programme of graduate traineeships with that institution. In 2000, 4.2 million euro have been allocated in the European Union budget for the operation of the traineeships programme.

The launch of "Dialogue on Europe" took place at the biannual welcome event for the new intake of trainees on 1 March 2000. The additional costs to the EU budget are estimated by the Commission at 25,000 euro.

The Government are keen to raise awareness of the European dimension of the work of UK Government Departments, and a secondment to one of the EU institutions serves that aim. Details of "stage" opportunities for UK civil servants are circulated biannually by the Cabinet Office, which also process the applications received. Staff input cannot be reliably quantified, but is not onerous. A maximum of five European Fast Streamers (the UK Government's development programme for British graduates who wish to make a career in the EU institutions) go on a "stage" in each biannual intake. Their salary and allowances while in Brussels are paid by the Cabinet Office.

Tibet

Mr. Stevenson: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will raise concerns on human rights abuses in Chinese-occupied Tibet in the United Kingdom's ministerial statements at the United Nations Commission for Human Rights. [115091]

Mr. Hain: I delivered the United Kingdom's opening plenary statement at the Commission on Human Rights on 23 March. A copy has been placed in the Library of the House. The speech is also available on the Foreign Office website (www.fco.gov.uk).

Gedhun Choekyi Nyima

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what reports he has received relating to the safety of Gedhun Choekyi Nyima and his possible release from his captivity; what is the UK's policy on the matter; and if he will make a statement. [115924]

Mr. Battle: We are concerned about the situation of Gedhun Choekyi Nyima, the Dalai Lama's choice as the 11th Panchen Lama, and take every appropriate opportunity to press the Chinese Government to allow access to the boy to verify his health and living conditions. I did so myself when I met the Chinese Vice-Foreign Minister, Wang Yingfan, on 9 November 1999, following the disturbing reports that Gedhun had died. We subsequently received a written assurance that he was alive and well.

The Chinese authorities maintain that Gedhun's parents want him to live a normal life and do not want visitors. While accepting the wishes of the parents, we continue to press the Chinese authorities to nominate an independent figure acceptable to the Chinese Government, the parents and the Tibetan leadership to meet with the boy.

East Timor

Ann Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what reports he has received about how many refugees have been returned from West Timor to East Timor and how many refugees remain in West Timor. [116105]

Mr. Battle: Over 150,000 refugees have now returned to East Timor. There are no reliable figures for the number remaining in West Timor, but as of 22 March the UN estimated the number at up to 100,000 refugees.

We will continue to press the Indonesian authorities to enable those who wish to return to East Timor to do so safely and speedily.

Diplomatic Relations

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list the countries with which the UK has no diplomatic relations. [116210]

Mr. Battle: The United Kingdom has no diplomatic relations with Bhutan, Iraq, the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia or North Korea.

Minority Languages

Mr. Andrew George: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what UK regional or minority languages the Government recognises in relation to the recent UK signing of the Council of Europe Charter on Regional or Minority Languages. [115997]

Mr. Vaz: The UK will apply the general provisions of the Charter in respect of all the languages which meet the Charter's definition of a regional or minority language. The Government recognise that this definition embraces Scots and Ulster-Scots and are considering what other languages, including Cornish, also meet the definition. To fulfil the Charter's requirement to implement specific provisions to promote the use of certain languages in public life, the Government intend to specify Welsh, Scots-Gaelic and Irish.

HEALTH

Medical Technical Officers

Mr. Austin: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what steps he plans to take in respect of the survey published recently by the MSF union on levels of pay and morale of medical technical officers in the NHS. [112443]

Mr. Denham [holding answer 1 March 2000]: We recognise that the Scientific and Technical staff groups employed and trained in the National Health Service have been experiencing recruitment, retention and a range of other human resource problems. Therefore, we aim to develop a human resource strategy that will underpin the education and training, recruitment and retention and general career development for NHS HCHS scientists and technicians. Medical Technical Officers (MTOs) are a part of this work force.

This work will be taken forward as an integral part of the work programme of the National Advisory Group for Scientists and Technicians (NAGST).

NAGST is collaborating with the professions to ensure the National Health Service has an adequate supply of competent scientists and technicians. There are three strands to the current work programme:

collection of work force data;

work force planning;

implementation.

A pay offer is with the staff side of the Professional and Technical Staffs' B Whitley Council covering Medical Technical Officers for:

an increase of 3 per cent. or £250, whichever is the higher for 1999–2000;

an increase of 3.25 per cent. or £300 whichever is the higher for 2000–01; and in the context of agreement on the negotiations on Agenda for Change (including the principle of pay linkage as set out in paragraph 7.4 of the Joint Framework of Principles and Agreed Statement on the Way Forward issued on 8 October 1999) and the joint commitment to lifelong learning, a minimum RPI(X) at December 2000 reported in January 2001, plus 0.5 per cent.

Adoption

Mrs. Spelman: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many adoption breakdowns there have been in each of the last five years; and what plans he has for greater funding of post-adoption support and advice. [112750]

Mr. Hutton: Information about the number of adoption breakdowns in the last five years is available in the form of the number of children who enter care as a result of adoption breakdowns. The figures do not distinguish between the adoption breakdowns of "looked after" children placed for adoption by local authorities; children placed by voluntary adoption agencies; children placed privately with relatives by birth parents; children adopted by step-parents.

Estimated numbers[1] of children who started to be looked after, with reason for being looked after coded as 'adopted child—breakdown of adoptive family', England, 1995 to 1999 [2,3]

Year ending 31 March	Number of children starting to be looked after
1995	50
1996	70
1997	60
1998[4]	50
1999[4]	50

[1] Data are rounded to the nearest 10

[2] Excludes children looked after under an agreed series of short term placements

[3] Only the first occasion on which a child started to be looked after in the year has been counted

[4] Estimates based on a one third sample of looked after children

The Government's Quality Protects programme aims to develop a modern adoption service that is more responsive in all its aspects, including post-adoption support, to meet the best interests of children and the needs of birth parents and adoptive parents. My right hon. Friend the Prime Minister is reviewing with ministerial colleagues how we can build on Quality Protects, moving further and faster to secure our aim of maximising the use of adoption for all children for whom it is appropriate and also minimising delay.

The table shows the number of pre-adoptive breakdowns for the same period.

Pre-adoptive breakdown: Estimated number[1] of placements for adoption ceasing during the years ending 31 March 1995 to 1999[2], England of which

Year	Total number of placements	Percentage that ended in adoption	Percentage that did not end in adoption
1995	1,600	80	20
1996	1,620	77	23
1997	1,560	78	22
1998[3]	1,790	85	15
1999[3]	1,800	82	18

[1] Data are rounded to the nearest 10

[2] Excludes children looked after under an agreed series of short term placements

[3] Estimates based on a one third sample of looked after children

HSG(94)27

Dr. Cable: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) if he will list by name of subject and health authority the independent inquiries established under HSG(94)27 which are currently being conducted; [113748]

BEST C

(2) if he will list by name of report and health authority all the independent homicide inquiries established under HSG(94)27, the reports of which were published since February 1994. [113749]

Mr. Hutton [holding answer 9 March 2000]: The information requested has been placed in the Library.

NHS Staff

Mr. Gareth R. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many (a) doctors and (b) nurses there were (i) nationally and (ii) in London in each year between 1979 and 1999. [115086]

Mr. Denham: The available information is shown in the table.

NHS Hospital and Community Health Services (HCHS): All nursing, midwifery and health visiting staff, Practice Nurses and NHS Doctors within London Regional Office Area and England as at 30 September each year

	All nursing, midwifery and health visiting staff				Practice nurses		NHS doctors
	Whole-time equivalent		Numbers (headcount)		Whole-time equivalent		Numbers (headcount)
	London regional office area	England	London regional office area	England	London regional office area	England	London regional office area	England
1979	[1]—	316,840	[1]—	372,070	[1]—	990	[1]—	59,850
1980	[1]—	327,800	[1]—	381,560	[1]—	1,070	[1]—	61,270
1981	[1]—	347,010	[1]—	397,420	[1]—	1,240	[1]—	62,560
1982	64,370	391,110	71,210	447,540	[1]—	1,450	[1]—	63,540
1983	67,380	394,680	76,410	452,380	[1]—	1,660	[1]—	64,820
1984	66,680	393,740	77,320	452,450	[1]—	1,920	[1]—	65,130
1985	64,990	397,030	77,270	458,410	[1]—	2,210	[1]—	66,040
1986	63,920	397,240	75,260	459,080	[1]—	2,500	[1]—	66,770
1987	59,270	397,910	72,900	463,310	[2]300	[2]2,770	11,800	69,530
1988	62,920	397,840	76,200	465,060	410	3,480	12,050	70,910
1989	63,670	398,660	77,890	467,700	570	4,630	12,580	72,450
1990	58,020	395,360	64,630	463,790	1,140	7,740	12,560	73,720
1991	63,960	396,130	73,520	477,570	1,230	8,780	12,880	74,680
1992	65,640	382,020	76,850	463,740	1,210	9,120	12,910	75,740
1993	57,480	366,240	66,160	450,360	1,390	9,600	13,910	77,280
1994	55,160	353,130	64,340	436,100	1,320	9,100	14,630	77,970
1995	49,410	330,440	59,010	411,840	1,370	9,740	15,560	81,000
1996	51,180	332,660	60,910	415,750	1,460	9,820	15,790	83,090
1997	51,450	330,620	62,140	417,570	1,530	10,080	16,550	86,050
1998	51,610	332,200	63,870	421,750	1,550	10,360	16,870	88,230

[1] Not applicable.

[2] Data for London in 1987 are incomplete, there are no data below national level prior to 1987. In April 1996, FHSAs merged to form Health Authorities, in this process some of Barnet FHSA split to form part of West Hertfordshire (which is not in the London Region).

Notes:

1. Figures are rounded to the nearest ten.

2. 1995 to 1998 figures exclude learners and agency staff. Figures from 1982 to 1994 include learners, trainees and students.

3. England figures for 1979 to 1981 include staff in certain centrally-based services, ie, family planning, occupational health and staff nurseries. Excluded are regional nursing officers, nursing cadets, agency staff and staff in the blood transfusion service and primary health care services. These figures were taken from 'Health and personal Social Services Statistics for England'.

4. London Regional Office Area figures from 1979 to 1981 are not available.

5. Due to a change in classification in 1995 for collecting the data, from payscale to occupation code, 1995, 1996, 1997 and 1998 figures are not comparable with earlier years.

Source:

Department of Health Non-Medical Workforce Census.

Notes for Practice Nurses:

1. The whole of Barnet FHSA has been included prior to 1996, data from 1996 onwards will not include staff who left Barnet FHSA to join West Hertfordshire HA.

Source:

Department of Health General and Personal Medical Services Statistics.

Notes for NHS Doctors:

1. All Doctors includes doctors in hospitals, public health medicine, the community health services. General Medical Services and Personal Medical Services. Hospital Practitioners and Clinical Assistants are excluded, as most of these are also GPs. The figures exclude doctors working in the HCHS sector in one of the dental specialities.

2. London figures should be interpreted with caution. The London Regional Office came into being on 1 April 1999 while the former Thames Regional Offices covered areas outside London. The 1998 figures are for the (shadow) London Regional Office. The 1987 to 1997 figures are estimates from Health Authorities (Family Health Service Authorities and District Health Authorities prior to 1996) or NHS Trusts that would now be in the London Region. Some HCHS doctors may be counted more than once. This is because they will be counted once for each region where they worked, based on the regional structure in place at the time, and also in the current London region which overlaps with more than one of the former regions.

3. It is not possible to provide numbers for all doctors in London from 1979 to 1986. While estimates for GPs are available, because these were returned by Family Service Health Authorities, estimates for all other doctors are not because these were only returned at regional level and the former Thames regions are not comparable with the new London region.

PY AVAILABLE

Drug Prescribing (Children)

Mr. Love: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) in what circumstances the prescribing of a drug to a child in care can be challenged by the parents, if they believe that the child may have suffered an adverse reaction to the drug, where that adverse reaction is (i) reported and (ii) unreported; [115521]

(2) in what circumstances independent medical advice can be sought when there is a disagreement between parents and the local authority with a duty of care for a child who may have suffered an adverse reaction to a drug, where that reaction is (a) reported and (b) unreported; and if he will make a statement; [115523]

(3) in what circumstances the local authority with a responsibility of care for a child could challenge the prescribing of a drug to that child if they believe the child may have suffered an adverse reaction to the drug, where that adverse reaction is (a) reported and (b) unreported. [115522]

Mr. Hutton: Where a child is looked after by a local authority and is on a care order, the local authority has parental responsibility for the child. It shares that parental responsibility with the child's parent(s), but the local authority has the power to determine the extent to which the parents may exercise their parental responsibility in relation to the child. Where a child is looked after by a local authority and the authority is accommodating the child, it does not have parental responsibility—but a person may arrange for someone else to discharge all or some of it on their behalf, so a parent whose child is accommodated may arrange for the local authority to be responsible on their behalf. Even without such an arrangement, the local authority may do what is reasonable for the purpose of safeguarding or promoting the child's welfare, which may include arranging for urgent medical attention.

Centrally Funded Special Schemes

Mr. Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what was the total spending by his Department for the last five available years on centrally funded special schemes in (a) the Northern and (b) the Yorkshire and Humberside Region. [114904]

Mr. Denham: The information requested has been placed in the Library.

Correspondence

Mr. Luff: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when he will reply to the letter from the hon. Member for Mid-Worcestershire of 24 January about care homes in Worcestershire. [115568]

Mr. Hutton: I replied to the hon. Member on 22 March.

Psychiatric Beds

Dr. Cable: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what percentage of available acute psychiatric beds were used in (a) 1997–98, (b) 1998–99 and (c) the first two quarters of 1999–2000. [115786]

Mr. Hutton: The percentages of available acute psychiatric beds used in 1997–98 and 1998–99 were 86.5 per cent. and 87.5 per cent. respectively.

Data for the first two quarters of 1999–2000 for the same breakdown are not available as the source of the acute psychiatric bed availability and occupancy figures are collected annually.

Children's Services (Human Rights Act)

Mr. Hammond: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what assessment he has made of the impact of the coming into force of the Human Rights Act 1998 on the provision of children's services. [115847]

Mr. Hutton: Government Departments are undertaking a broad assessment of the likely impact of the Human Rights Act 1998 on their work, as part of the preparations for implementation on 2 October 2000. This task is in progress in the Department of Health and includes children's services with our other responsibilities.

Waterhouse Report

Mr. Hammond: To ask the Secretary of State for Health for what reasons he was unable to act prior to publication of the Waterhouse report in extending the consultancy index to include people named in that report. [115848]

Mr. Hutton: We were unable to act on the information contained in the Waterhouse report until after the report had been presented to Parliament. However, following publication, immediate action was taken to extend the Department's consultancy index to include eligible named individuals who had been convicted of offences against children or against whom a clear finding had been made in the report. This action enabled us to include on the index individuals falling into these categories who had not previously been referred to the index through another route.

Outpatients (Avon)

Mr. Cotter: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what assessment he has made of Avon health authority's scheme to reduce outpatient waiting times by guaranteeing a number of outpatient appointments for each primary care group; and if he will make a statement. [116002]

Mr. Denham: Avon health authority, working with local general practitioners and trusts, is looking at ways of improving orthopaedic waiting times. As part of this work the health authority is considering how the successful pilot scheme, operated by North Bristol National Health Service Trust and North West Bristol Primary Care Group, which guarantees individual GP practices a specified number of outpatient appointments can be extended across the health authority area. No formal assessment of the North Bristol pilot scheme has been undertaken by the NHS Executive. We welcome local initiatives to reduce outpatient waiting times by involving PCGs.

Learning Disabilities

Mr. Cotter: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what measures he will take to ensure that services for children with learning disabilities in the Weston-Super-Mare area will not decline following the disbandment of Phoenix NHS Trust. [116010]

Ms Stuart: It is the responsibility of Avon health authority, working together with local National Health Service trusts and primary care groups, to ensure that appropriate services for children with learning disabilities are provided. I understand that the Chief Executive of the authority has recently written to the hon. Member assuring him of the health authority's commitment to ensuring that the same level of services is available following the disbandment of Phoenix NHS Trust.

Weston Area Health Trust

Mr. Cotter: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what is the staff to patient ratio for children with learning disabilities within the Weston Area Health Trust; [116006]

(2) if he will estimate the staff to patient ratio for children with learning disabilities within the Weston Area Health Trust following the disbanding of the Phoenix NHS Trust. [116007]

Ms Stuart: The Department does not collect the requested information. The hon. Member may wish to contact Ms Martha Perriam, Chairman of Weston Area Health National Health Service Trust, for the information.

Avon Health Authority

Mr. Cotter: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement on the annual NHS funding allocated to Avon Health Authority for 2000–01. [116004]

Ms Stuart: Avon Health Authority's revenue allocation for 2000–01 is £629.4 million, which represents a cash increase of £40.7 million (6.9 per cent.). Money from the £660 million announced by my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister on 22 March will be allocated to health authorities shortly.

Capital Prioritisation Process

Mr. Norman: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he has begun to consider the conclusions of the review of the Capital Prioritisation Process; and when he expects to make an announcement on the outcome. [116116]

Mr. Denham: The review of the capital prioritisation process is currently under way. Ministers will make an announcement about the outcome in due course.

Oxted and Limpsfield Community Hospital

Mr. Peter Ainsworth: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement on the future of Oxted and Limpsfield Community Hospital. [116043]

Mr. Denham [holding answer 23 March 2000]: The Surrey and Sussex National Health Service Trust is currently preparing a full business case for the reprovision of Oxted and Limpsfield Community Hospital. The case will be assessed by the South East Region of the NHS Executive once it has been submitted.

Hospital Waiting Lists

Mr. Oaten: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many people were on NHS inpatient waiting lists in each year since 1979 for which figures are available (a) nationally and (b) in each health authority (i) fully and (ii) partially in Hampshire, including the unitary authorities of Southampton and Portsmouth. [116019]

Mr. Denham [holding answer 23 March 2000]: The information requested can be found in the "Hospital Waiting List Statistics: England. Quarter ending", copies of which are available in the Library.

Children's Homes (Staff)

Mr. Ruane: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many staff of children's homes providing 24 hour care in the (a) voluntary, (b) local authority and (c) private sector were (i) raped, (ii) sexually assaulted, (iii) victims of grievous bodily harm and (iv) murdered by residents in the last three years. [116199]

Mr. Hutton [holding answer 24 March 2000]: Information about the number of incidents of violence against the staff of children's homes is not collected centrally. However, we are determined to reduce substantially the incidence of violence towards everyone working in social care. We have set up a taskforce to produce a national action plan by November 2000 with recommendations and timescales for action to reduce violence against social care staff and to promote the safety and welfare of all social care workers.

Oxaliplatin

Mr. Webb: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will ask the National Institute for Clinical Excellence to assess the effectiveness of the cancer drug Oxaliplatin. [116129]

Ms Stuart [holding answer 24 March 2000]: We are considering a number of possible additional topics for appraisal by the National Institute for Clinical Excellence during the year 2000–01, including a number of anti-cancer drugs. An announcement will be made shortly.

Prozac

Mr. Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement on the prescription of Prozac to children under 10 years; and what guidelines in respect of the prescription of Prozac his Department has issued. [116102]

Ms Stuart: Prozac is not licensed for treatment of children. Doctors prescribe medicines outside their licensed indications in the knowledge that they then bear the full legal and clinical responsibility for the patient's condition in relation to that treatment.

Doctors are advised of the clinical considerations which are relevant to their prescribing decisions in publications such as the British National Formulary (BNF). The BNF advises that Prozac is not recommended for children.

Broomfield Hospital

Mr. Burns: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, pursuant to his answer of 16 March 2000, Official Report, column 304W, and the appeal by the Mid-Essex CHC against the closure of wards at Broomfield Hospital, if he will order the three wards to be (a) kept open or (b) reopened until he has determined the appeal. [116027]

Mr. Denham: Following detailed discussions between North Essex health authority, Mid Essex Hospital Services National Health Service Trust and local primary care groups as part of the Service and Financial Framework for 2000–01, an agreement has been reached to reopen the remaining beds at Broomfield Hospital which had been taken out of use.

Long-term Care

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Coventry, South (Mr. Cunningham) of 20 March 2000, Official Report, column 430W, on long-term care, how many of the representations received were critical of the recommendation of the majority report of the Royal Commission on Long-term Care. [116273]

Mr. Hutton: A minority of the representations which we have received have preferred an alternative approach from that recommended by the Royal Commission on long-term care.

Seafood (Technetium)

Mr. Chaytor: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what research he has commissioned on the health implications of very high concentrations of technetium in seafood; and if he will make a statement. [115529]

Yvette Cooper: No specific research is currently carried out into the health effect of technetium-99 in seafood as the effects of ingested radioactivity have been studied for many years. The Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food carries out a comprehensive monitoring programme around the British Isles, which shows the most exposed seafood consumer received only 2 per cent. of the annual dose limit from exposure to technetium-99.

Perioperative Deaths

Mr. Waterson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what steps he is taking to implement the national confidential inquiry into perioperative deaths; and if he will make a statement. [110434]

Ms Stuart: The recommendations of the National Confidential Enquiry into Perioperative Deaths (NCEPOD) are primarily for the professions who need to re-evaluate their practice in the light of the evidence found. Other recommendations are concerned with organisational issues and are for local National Health Service management to address. The National Institute for Clinical Excellence is undertaking a review of all four confidential inquiries which will include an assessment of the impact of NCEPOD and the other inquiries.

NHS Funding

Mr. Cotter: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what plans he has to review the system used to assess annual increases in NHS funding. [116011]

Mr. Andrew Smith: I have been asked to reply.

The Chancellor of the Exchequer announced in his Budget medium-term plans for the NHS, involving average annual real terms increases of over 6 per cent. for the NHS.

CULTURE, MEDIA AND SPORT

Millennium Dome

12. Mr. Paterson: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what estimate he has made of the eventual total cost to public funds of the Millennium Dome. [114865]

Mr. Chris Smith: The Millennium Experience has a cash-limited budget of £758 million for the Dome at Greenwich and its associated national programme of events and activities. The budget is made up of grant from the Millennium Commission, private sector sponsorship and commercial income. The New Millennium Experience Company aims to stay within that budget. The project is receiving no funds from the Exchequer.

13. Mr. Efford: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what assessment he has made of the most recent attendance figures for the Millennium Dome. [114866]

Janet Anderson: The Government are extremely encouraged by the continuing upward trend in visitor numbers to the Millennium Experience at Greenwich—10 million paying visitors will enable the company to deliver a break-even operating budget. NMEC's target remains higher than that but its focus at this stage is achieving 10 million.

Over 1.25 million people have visited the Dome so far, which is remarkable in itself given that January, February and March are traditionally low season periods for visitor attractions.

Film Industry

14. Mr. Syms: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport if he will make a statement on the future of the British film industry. [114867]

Janet Anderson: Britain's world-class facilities continue to attract very substantial inward investment and we continue to turn out world-class talent, both in front of and behind the camera. But these great strengths are vulnerable without the commercial infrastructure, particularly in terms of film distribution, that would allow the UK film industry to realise the full economic potential of its talent and skills.

The Government's objective is to create the right conditions for a sustainable UK film industry, through the use of well-targeted tax incentives and the creation of a strategic body, the Film Council, which will provide support in key areas.

Regional Theatre

15. Charlotte Atkins: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what measures he is taking to assist regional theatres in attracting young audiences. [114868]

Mr. Alan Howarth: The Arts Council's Theatre Review will address the ways in which regional theatres can meet the needs of young people. Despite the recent misinformation in the press, classic texts are currently and will continue to be one of the most important ways of meeting the needs of young people.

19. Helen Jackson: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what advice the Arts Council's theatre review has issued to regional theatres about the use of classic texts. [114872]

20. Mr. Beard: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what advice the Arts Council's theatre review has issued to regional theatres about the use of classic texts. [114873]

Mr. Chris Smith: The Arts Council's theatre review is about ensuring the best possible access to the best possible theatre across the country. Classic texts are currently, and will continue to be, one of the most important strands of programming by regional theatres and especially popular with young people. Reports in the press suggesting that the ACE wants to downgrade classic theatre, or only favour lasers, acrobats or video technology, have absolutely no foundation in fact.

Sport Action Zones

16. Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what guidance he is issuing about applications for support in sport action zones. [114869]

Kate Hoey: Sport action zones are a direct response to the need to address sporting deprivation in some of the most socially and economically deprived areas of the country. Sport England is now discussing with all the local interests the production of a plan for each zone to ensure they meet the needs of the area. Those plans will form the basis of bids for lottery funding.

Libraries

17. Helen Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what guidance he provides to local authorities on the minimum level of service that public libraries should provide to their local communities. [114870]

Mr. Alan Howarth: There is currently no defined minimum level of public library service, but all library authorities must meet the requirement of the Public Libraries and Museums Act 1964 to provide a "comprehensive and efficient" service. In order to assist them, I will be issuing a draft set of public library standards for consultation later in the spring, and will be bringing the final version into force from 1 April 2001.

Tourism Summit

18. Mr. Rapson: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport if he will make a statement on the outcome of the recent tourism summit. [114871]

25. Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport if he will make a statement on the outcome of the recent tourism summit. [114878]

Janet Anderson: I am happy to say that the tourism summit held on 1 March was a great success. For the first time Ministers from a range of Departments whose policies significantly affect tourism were able to engage in close discussion on priorities for joint progress in the year ahead.

Ministers committed themselves to the fulfilment of the tourism strategy. Collectively, they also made two specific pledges. Most notable of those is the establishment of a cross-departmental network of officials to ensure close working on policies affecting tourism. They will also consider the forthcoming report from the Better Regulation Task Force on the impact of regulation and enforcement on the hotel and restaurant sector and how to improve co-ordination of regulation in this area.

We will publish a report on the summit.

School Sports

22. Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what contribution the national lottery is making towards encouraging the playing of competitive sporting fixtures in schools. [114875]

Kate Hoey: Inter-school competitive fixtures will be an important part of the job description of the School Sports Co-ordinators, a new initiative which is being supported by the Lottery Sports Fund with additional support expected to come from partnership funding, including the new opportunities fund. Detailed proposals for the initiative are being drawn up in conjunction with key partners.

Green Spaces Initiative

23. Caroline Flint: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport in what ways he expects children to benefit from the green spaces initiative funded by the new opportunities fund. [114876]

Mr. Chris Smith: The new opportunities fund launched the green spaces and sustainable communities initiative in January, and hopes to make its first grants this summer. The initiative covers, among other things, opportunities for children's play, organised and informal sport, playing fields, access to the countryside and creating safer routes to school. These opportunities will greatly benefit the health, happiness, safety and social well-being of children, particularly in areas of multiple deprivation.

Televised Sport Revenues

24. Dr. Whitehead: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what steps he is taking to encourage professional sport to invest income from the sale of television rights in amateur and youth sport. [114877]

Kate Hoey: A number of UK governing bodies have signed the Central Council of Physical Recreation's Voluntary Code, under which a minimum of 5 per cent. of broadcasting income is invested in grass roots development. The resulting arrangements in cricket, tennis and other sports appear to be working well. The football authorities are currently drawing up—in consultation with Sport England and my Department—detailed proposals for using their broadcasting income with the public funds to improve the development of grass roots football in England. An announcement will be made when discussions have been completed.

Seaside Resorts

26. Miss Geraldine Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what steps his Department is taking to encourage the regeneration of British seaside resorts; and if he will make a statement. [114879]

Janet Anderson: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply I gave earlier today to my hon. Friend the Member for Harwich (Mr. Henderson), Official Report, column 4.

Lottery Funding

Mr. Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport if he will make a statement about the distribution of lottery grants across the country. [114874]

Mr. Chris Smith: The Government are committed to ensuring that Lottery funding is distributed fairly both geographically and across all groups of society. This is reflected in the changes made to lottery distribution through the National Lottery Act 1998, and through the revised policy directions which I issued in summer 1998. My Department and the lottery distributors have jointly commissioned research, due shortly, into why coalfield areas have fared badly from the lottery, which I hope will hold lessons for distribution to other areas of low take-up.

Mr. Pendry: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport if he will list the amounts of moneys (a) distributed to good causes from the National Lottery Fund and (b) which have yet to be allocated. [116489]

Mr. Chris Smith: All the funds in the National Lottery Distribution Fund available for distribution have been allocated to the National Lottery Distributing Bodies, and all but £200 million of this money has already been committed by them. While money remains in this fund, it earns tax free interest which goes to the good causes, not Government.

National Sports Museum

Mr. Bob Russell: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what plans he has to establish a national sports museum; and if he will make a statement. [113734]

Kate Hoey: I refer the hon. Member to my answers of 15 March 2000, Official Report, column 251W.

Correspondence

Mr. Winnick: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport when the hon. Member for Walsall, North will receive a reply to his letter of 8 February regarding a constituent. [116381]

Janet Anderson: I have now replied to my hon. Friend, with an explanation of the reasons for the delay in responding to his correspondence.

Historic Railway Engines

Mr. Keetch: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport how much national lottery funding has been provided to historic railway engine restoration projects since the start of the national lottery; and if he will make a statement. [116100]

Kate Hoey: Since the beginning of the national lottery, the Heritage Lottery Fund has made 17 awards to historic railway engine restoration projects, and the total value is £2,161,158.

CABINET OFFICE

Drugs

Mr. Hurst: To ask the Minister for the Cabinet Office what new initiatives the Government are introducing to help vulnerable young people resist drugs. [116649]

Mr. Ian McCartney: I am pleased to announce that today my Department was able to help launch Positive Futures, a joint sports and drug prevention initiative designed to engage young people at risk.

The UK Anti-Drugs Co-ordination Unit in the Cabinet Office, Sport England and the Youth Justice Board have joined together to create the initiative, which will use sporting and drug education activities to divert vulnerable young people away from drug misuse and crime.

Between the three partners, £950,000 will be invested in 2000–01 to fund 24 projects around the country. By the end of October, all 24 will have begun.

As we set out in our 10-year anti-drugs strategy "Tackling Drugs to Build a Better Britain", the Government are committed to helping young people resist drug misuse in order to achieve their full potential in society. I believe that this initiative will give hope to young people in areas of deprivation, helping them to build self-esteem and confidence while, at the same time, offering a healthy alternative to involvement in drugs.

Bank Closures

Dr. Jack Cunningham: To ask the Minister for the Cabinet Office what representations she has made, in her role as interdepartmental co-ordinator of policy on rural affairs, to Barclays Bank plc about their branch closure policy; what reply she has received; and if she will make a statement. [116289]

Marjorie Mowlam: I refer my right hon. Friend to the answer that my hon. Friend the Economic Secretary gave on 20 March 2000, Official Report, column 445W.

Knowledge Network Project

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Minister for the Cabinet Office (1) if she will list the categories of information which are (a) held and (b) planned to be held on the Knowledge Network Project which are broken down by constituency level; [116290]

(2) which Ministers, special advisers and civil servants have control of the input of information to the Knowlege Network Project; and if she will make a statement. [116293]

Marjorie Mowlam: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given to the hon. Member for South Cambridgeshire (Mr. Lansley) on 24 March 2000, Official Report, column 691W.

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Minister for the Cabinet Office if she will publish the communications audit of Whitehall departments; and if she will make a statement. [116291]

Marjorie Mowlam: The communications audit of Whitehall Departments is part of Phase 1 of the work of the Knowledge Network Project. The results and findings of Phase 1 will be reported to me by July 2000 and will subsequently be made available on the Internet.

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Minister for the Cabinet Office what is the total planned and current cost of the Knowledge Network Project; and if she will make a statement. [116292]

Marjorie Mowlam: The estimated cost of Phase 1 of the Knowledge Network Project is £242,000. Subsequent work, including costs, will be planned following the outcome of Phase 1.

Euro

Mr. Portillo: To ask the Minister for the Cabinet Office how much money has been spent to date by her Office and by bodies funded by her Office in connection with the National Changeover Plan; under what headings this money has been spent; and how much her Office plans to spend on implementing the plan over the next 12 months. [112143]

Marjorie Mowlam: I refer the right hon. Gentleman to the answer given by my hon. Friend the Economic Secretary to the Treasury on 29 February 2000, Official Report, column 223W, and to the answer my right hon. Friend the Chancellor of the Exchequer gave on 9 March 2000, Official Report, column 1181 to my hon. Friend the Member for Stockton, South (Ms Taylor).

Written Answers to Questions

Tuesday 28 March 2000

EDUCATION AND EMPLOYMENT

Asylum Seekers (Children)

Mr. Steen: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if he will make arrangements to ensure that the children of political asylum seekers attend pre-school facilities; and what the cost of that would be to public funds. [116535]

Jacqui Smith: Local education authorities already have a legal duty to ensure that all eligible four-year-olds, including children of asylum seekers, are entitled to a free part-time place in any registered pre-school setting. In addition, from April 2000, all local education authorities will receive funding to provide a free early education place to the most needy three-year-old children in their area. It is up to local education authorities to set their own criteria of social need which may include providing places to children of asylum seekers.

Local education authorities receive funding from this Department for the provision of pre-school places in the form of a nursery education grant which is £1,130 per child per year for each eligible three and four-year-old child.

It is not possible to calculate the overall cost of pre-school education for children of asylum seekers, as separate records are not kept.

Teachers' Pay

Mr. Gray: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what provision has been made for the funding of the teachers' threshold pay rise after the first two years. [116528]

Ms Estelle Morris: Provision for teachers' pay beyond March 2002 falls into the next spending period and will be taken into account along with other factors when deciding future funding levels for education.

Schools Funding

Mr. Gray: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if he will make a statement on funding for schools in respect of post-16 education reforms. [116527]

Ms Estelle Morris: The £35 million that the Government have identified as the cost to LEAs in 2000–01 of implementing its post-16 curriculum reforms was added to Education Standard Spending (ESS) for that year. It is for local education authorities to decide how much funding to allocate through their individual schools budget to each of their schools to allow them to implement the reforms successfully. In addition, schools will receive £290 million in special grant for 2000–01. Secondary schools will receive between £30,000 and £50,000, depending on their size. This funding will be part of their delegated budgets: those with sixth forms will therefore be able to use it if they wish to supplement funding received through their local authority's allocation formula to implement the post-16 reforms.

Teacher Dismissals

Mr. Clappison: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how many teachers have been dismissed under the fast-track provisions. [116091]

Ms Estelle Morris: Teacher dismissals are not recorded centrally. The National Employers' Organisation for School Teachers have carried out a survey of LEAs in England and Wales on the use of the new capability procedures for teachers which have now been incorporated in most schools. The survey collected responses from 116 LEAs (68 per cent.) for three school terms ending with the spring term 1999 and suggests that for all LEAs over 3,000 teachers had been subject to some form of capability review during the year, with over 600 dismissals under the new procedure. In addition, 194 teachers showed sufficient improvement and a further 439 cases are currently being processed. Work continues on monitoring and reviewing practice in schools and LEAs and the Secretary of State will be issuing further guidance for schools on staff capability after further consultation.

Disabled People

Mr. Boswell: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what actions he will take in connection with the Prime Minister's recent internet initiative to forward the interests of disabled people, with particular reference to (a) access to public buildings housing internet terminals, (b) provision of sufficient large screens for those with reading difficulties, (c) availability of computers on a personal basis for rehabilitation and employment advisers and (d) the creation of a website for disabled jobseekers. [115759]

Ms Hodge [holding answer 21 March 2000]: We are determined that people with disabilities should benefit fully from the Prime Minister's recent internet initiative, particularly in their working lives.

Access to buildings housing internet terminals and the provision of large screen facilities intended for public use is covered by the goods and services provisions of the Disability Discrimination Act 1995. The new duties on providers of goods, facilities and services to the public to make reasonable adjustments for disabled people came into force in October last year.

Many of the Department's services used by people with disabilities are provided through the Employment Service. Its services are designed to meet the needs of all its clients, including people with disabilities. We believe that wherever possible help for disabled people should be offered as part of programmes used by a wide range of clients.

The Modernising Employment Service Programme is developing new ways in which all jobseekers can have improved access to services through information and communications technology. People with disabilities will gain from this programme. For example, the specification for the touch screen kiosk technology to be available in Jobcentres across the country from autumn 2001 has taken account of the needs of clients with visual impairment. The same programme will also make sure computer workstations are available in sufficient numbers to ensure that every member of ES staff will have access whenever they need it.

The Employment Service will continue to upgrade the information it provides on services used by jobseekers with disabilities on the Employment Service website. This includes information about the Access to Work programme and other specialist measures, as well as links to the DfEE Disability page at www.disability.gov.uk. The Employment Service plans to make improvements which will make their website even more user friendly.

Large screen technologies and other forms of help will continue to be available under the Access to Work programme when needed for employment.

Mr. Berry: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if he will break down the numbers of people whose level of Access to Work support last year fell into the bands (a) £0 to £1,000, (b) £1,000 to £5,000, (c) £5,001 to £10,000 and (d) more than £10,000. [115519]

Ms Hodge: The Employment Service does not collect information on Access to Work in the form requested. Access to Work has no upper or lower limit for support and applications fall within all the bands listed, including more than £10,000.

In 1998–99, £19.5 million was spent helping 16,000 disabled people in employment. The average cost of support was £1,200.

The following table gives a breakdown of the spend and numbers helped through the various elements of Access to Work during 1998–99:

Type of help	Spend (£)	Number helped	Average cost (£)
Special aids and equipment	9 million	10,000	900
Travel to work	5.4 million	4,500	1,200
Support workers	4.2 million	3,000	1,400
Adaptations to premises or equipment	0.7 million	400	1,750
Communicator support at interview	66,000	600	110
Miscellaneous support (not covered above)	300,000	550	545

Note:
Some disabled people receive more than one type of support

Education Action Zones

Mr. Clappison: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what plans he has for further rounds of education action zones. [116082]

Ms Estelle Morris: There are currently 73 large education action zones already running or in development and another 42 small education action zones will start in Excellence in Cities areas by September. In addition, as part of the expansion of Excellence in Cities announced by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State on 23 March, there are likely to be further small education action zones established next year.

Community Action Programme (Discrimination)

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if he will make a statement on his policy in respect of the Community Action Programme to Combat Discrimination 2000–06. [115621]

Ms Hodge: The Government fully support the principle of an Action Programme to complement legislative proposals under Article 13 of the Treaty establishing the European Community.

Training and Enterprise Councils

Gillian Merron: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment which TECs (a) have and (b) have not published audited accounts for the years 1997–98 and 1998–99. [116306]

Mr. Wicks: My Department holds copies of the audited statutory accounts for all 72 TECs in England for these years. Copies have also been placed in the House of Commons Library.

Rover

Mr. Boswell: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what plans he has to secure continuity for apprentices at Rover. [116295]

Mr. Wicks [holding answer 27 March 2000]: Through our contractual arrangements with Birmingham and Solihull Training and Enterprise Council, work is already well underway to ensure that the training programmes of apprentices at Rover continue with minimum disruption.

As an interim measure, where necessary, apprentices will continue full time training at local Colleges of Further Education while alternative employer placements are found.

The TEC has a wide network of training suppliers and employers in the area and is confident that alternative placements can be found quickly for all apprentices who may be affected.

Schools Access Initiative

Mr. Walter: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if he will make grant allocations available to debt-free local education authorities in fulfilment of his Department's obligations under the Schools Access Initiative 2000–01. [116495]

Jacqui Smith: The Schools Access Initiative (SAI) is part of the overall schools capital programme and so support is delivered through the usual capital mechanisms, which for local education authorities is by way of credit approvals. It is not possible to introduce a different funding arrangement for the SAI or to make an exception for an individual authority.

Class Sizes (Essex)

Mr. Burns: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what the average class sizes were in Essex (a) primary schools and (b) secondary schools on (i) 1 May 1997 and (ii) the latest date for which figures are available; and what were the comparable figures for the Mid-Essex area. [116028]

Ms Estelle Morris [holding answer 27 March 2000]: The information is not available in the form requested. The available information on average class size in maintained primary and secondary schools for January and September is shown in the tables.

The latest class size count was carried out in September 1999 for infant classes and found further reductions in the percentage of pupils in infant classes of over 30 in the local education authority areas of Essex, Thurrock and Southend-on-Sea. Between September 1998 and September 1999, the percentage of pupils in classes of 31 or more fell from 20 per cent. to 13 per cent. in Essex, 21 per cent. to 10 per cent. in Southend-on-Sea and from 15 per cent. to 11 per cent. in Thurrock. Information for September 1998 and September 1999 was published in separate Statistical First Releases entitled "Infant Class Sizes in England" on 4 March 1999 (99/99) and 21 January 2000 (2/2000), respectively. Copies of both releases are available in the Library.

The class size count for January 2000 is currently being undertaken and provisional national estimates are expected to be published in a Statistical First Release in April.

Average size of classes taught by one teacher in maintained primary and secondary schools in Essex, Southend-on-Sea, Thurrock and England: 1997–99

Position as at January	1999	1998	1997
Essex [1]
Primary	[3]—	27.6	27.3
Secondary	[3]—	21.7	21.7
Essex [2]
Primary	27.7	[3]—	[3]—
Secondary	21.6	[3]—	[3]—
Southend-on-Sea [2]
Primary	28.4	[3]—	[3]—
Secondary	20.9	[3]—	[3]—
Thurrock [2]
Primary	27.5	[3]—	[3]—
Secondary	23.7	[3]—	[3]—
England
Primary	27.4	27.7	27.5
Secondary	21.9	21.7	21.7

[1] Before local government re-organisation in April 1998
[2] After local government re-organisation in April 1998
[3] Not applicable

Average size of infant classes taught by one teacher in maintained primary schools in Essex, Southend-on-Sea, Thurrock and England: 1998–99

Position as at September	1999	1998
Essex	24.7	25.2
Southend-on-Sea	26.1	25.8
Thurrock	24.1	24.9
England	24.9	25.7

CABINET OFFICE

Lord Levy

Mr. Baker: To ask the Minister for the Cabinet Office on which dates Lord Levy has had meetings with (a) Ministers and (b) senior officials in her Department since 1 May 1997, giving in each case the purpose of the meetings; and if she will make a statement. [113500]

Marjorie Mowlam: Records of meetings with officials are not held centrally but, to the best of my knowledge, no Minister or senior official in the Cabinet Office has met Lord Levy since 1 May 1997 in his capacity as the Prime Minister's personal envoy delivering messages in the Middle East.

Better Government for Older People

Ms Perham: To ask the Minister for the Cabinet Office if the Inter-Ministerial Group for Older People has met the Advisory Group of the Better Government for Older People Programme. [115753]

Mr. Ian McCartney: The Minister of State, Department of Social Security, my right hon. Friend the Member for Birmingham, Perry Barr (Mr. Rooker), who chairs the Inter-Ministerial Group on Older People, is meeting representatives of the Programme's Older People's Advisory Group on 27 March.

Press Releases

Mr. Brady: To ask the Minister for the Cabinet Office on how many occasions since 2 May 1997 news releases were distributed by the Central Office of Information by courier to (a) national, (b) regional and (c) local newspapers and media organisations; and what was the total cost of using couriers for each of the above categories. [115638]

Mr. Stringer: There were no occasions on which couriers were used to distribute news releases from my Department. No cost was involved.

Diversity Strategy and Equal Opportunities

Ms Dari Taylor: To ask the Minister for the Cabinet Office if an appointment has been made to the post of Senior Adviser on Diversity Strategy and Equal Opportunities. [116825]

Marjorie Mowlam: I have today announced the appointment of Mr. Museji Ahmed Takolia to the position of Senior Adviser on Diversity Strategy and Equal Opportunities. Mr. Takolia will take up this important and vital new role within Government on 10 April 2000.

Mr. Takolia's role will be key to driving forward the Government's commitment to build a civil service which reflects the diversity of the society which it serves. His responsibility will include driving forward our efforts to increase the diversity of the civil service and to tackle the under-representation of ethnic minorities, particularly at senior levels. He will also be tasked with achieving early progress to demonstrate that faster change is possible, and to increase the level of appointments and secondments at senior levels from under-represented groups.

Mr. Takolia will advise us on the whole of our diversity programme across government and will have the full backing of myself and my ministerial colleagues in order to achieve his objectives.

Family Policy

Ms Kelly: To ask the Minister for the Cabinet Office if she will list the family policy responsibilities of each Government Department. [115748]

Mr. Straw: I have been asked to reply.

The family policy responsibilities of each Government Department are as follows:

The Home Office hosts the Family Policy Unit, set up in April 1999 to support the Ministerial Group on the Family and to co-ordinate family policy across Government. The Home Office funds ParentLine and joint-funds the National Family and Parenting Institute (with other Departments) and runs a Family Support Grant for the voluntary sector. The Home Office is also responsible for the law on marriage, and for policy on race equality, active communities, youth offending, and the criminal law on domestic violence.

The Department of Health has responsibility for children's social and health services. The Department funds a range of voluntary organisations concerned with children's welfare, and leads on the Quality Protects programme, improving the management of children's social services. The Department also has policy responsibility for child protection, adoption and fostering, support for children in need and their families, teenage pregnancy, and the contribution of health professionals to family support.

The Department for Education and Employment is responsible for Early Years services, the National Childcare Strategy, the new ConneXions Service for teenagers, and hosts the Sure Start Unit. The Department is also responsible for parenting and relationship education in schools, involving parents in education, policy on children with special educational needs and family support based in schools. The Department also supports families through the New Deal programme, and leads on the promotion of work-life balance for employees.

The Lord Chancellor's Department has responsibility for family law and court proceedings, and for marriage and relationship support. The Department funds family mediation through the legal aid budget and funds the work of marriage and relationship support organisations. The Department has policy responsibility for divorce and information meeting pilots, child abduction, private law Children Act applications, the division of property on divorce, the civil law on domestic violence, and the development of the new Children and Family Court Advisory and Support Service.

The Cabinet Office houses the Women's Unit, which has responsibility for ensuring that women's interests are mainstreamed in all government policy, including family policy. It also houses the Social Exclusion Unit, which is responsible for developing policies to tackle social exclusion, including in areas such as school exclusions and teenage pregnancy. Finally, the Modernising Public Services Group is responsible for developing more responsive public services (including extended opening hours of services where there is a demand), which will also help families and people with caring responsibilities.

The Department of Trade and Industry is responsible for parental and maternity leave rights and right to time off work for the needs of dependants.

The Department of Social Security has policy responsibility for benefits, including Child Benefit and Income Support. The Department is also responsible for child support.

The Inland Revenue is responsible for tax policy, including the development of the new integrated Child Credit, the Working Families Tax Credit and Childcare Tax Credit.

The Office for National Statistics is responsible for the civil registration service, including the registration of births, marriages and deaths.

The Department of the Environment, Transport and the Regions has responsibility for housing policy, including guidance to Local Authorities, and overall responsibility for regeneration policy.

LORD CHANCELLOR'S DEPARTMENT

House Repossessions (Hampshire)

Mr. Oaten: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department how many house repossessions there were in (a) England, (b) Hampshire and (c) each local authority area in Hampshire, for each year from 1979 to date. [116641]

Jane Kennedy: The information is not available in the form requested. However, the table shows the number of warrants of possession executed. The information is available from 1990 onwards and can be provided only on the basis of individual county courts and not by individual local authority.

Possession warrants executed in the county courts of Hampshire and for England and Wales during the period 1990–99

County court	1990	1991	1992	1993	1994	1995	1996	1997	1998	1999
Aldershot and Farnham	251	416	428	316	555	347	211	183	247	166
Andover	27	65	61	49	37	52	80	44	[1]—	[1]—
Basingstoke	136	237	193	219	70	117	98	115	181	205
Portsmouth	622	736	560	520	454	466	488	490	842	717
Southampton	122	494	545	421	401	347	303	314	234	327
Winchester	32	75	70	36	68	52	56	29	37	35
Hampshire	1,190	2,023	1,857	1,561	1,585	1,381	1,236	1,175	1,541	1,450
England and Wales	41,779	61,139	62,439	51,333	49,222	51,096	48,587	49,865	59,701	71,256

[1] Closed

Public Trust Office

Mr. Colman: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department when he will announce future arrangements for the Public Trust Office. [116123]

Jane Kennedy: I refer my hon. Friend to the written answer I gave my hon. Friend the Member for Bethnal Green and Bow (Ms King) on 8 February 2000, Official Report, column 132W.

DEFENCE

Rover Class Tankers

Mr. DuncanSmith: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what plans he has to replace the Royal Fleet Auxiliary's Rover class tankers. [116451]

Dr. Moonie [holding answer 27 March 2000]: We are currently considering options on how best to provide the Replenishment At Sea capability currently provided by the Royal Fleet Auxiliary's Rover class tankers, which are due to leave service in 2007.

Foden Thompson Carmichael MWD

Mr. Swayne: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what plans he has to fit (a) roll bars or (b) other anti-crash features to the Foden Thompson Carmichael MWD; and if he will make a statement. [116030]

Dr. Moonie: The cab of the Foden Thompson Carmichael MWD meets accepted European Safety Standards (ECE 29) set for roof crush, rear crush and front impact. There is no evidence to suggest that it is an unstable vehicle and there are no plans to fit roll bars to it. As I indicated in my earlier response on 7 March 2000, Official Report, column 648W, a modification programme to bring all MK1 vehicles up to full compliance with the Construction and Use Regulations has begun and will include the fitting of an anti-lock braking system (ABS). No other anti-crash features are planned and the vehicle is considered safe in all regards.

Mr. Swayne: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to his answer of 7 March 2000, Official Report, column 649W, what assessment his Department has made of evidence sworn by 24684328 Lance Corporal Seers RLC at Kupres, Bosnia-Herzogovina on 14 January 1998 in respect of the Foden Thompson Carmichael MWD braking system. [116031]

Dr. Moonie: The evidence referred to was given to a Board of Inquiry which investigated a fatal road traffic accident in Bosnia in July 1997. In respect of all the evidence considered by the Inquiry on the braking system fitted to the Foden Thompson Carmichael MWD, recommendations were made to review the driver training procedures for the vehicle, and to introduce an additional check in regard to the pawl lever on the Jacob's Brake—the engine brake system which is complementary to the service braking system. The recommendations have been acted upon.

Mr. Swayne: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to his answer of 7 March 2000, Official Report, column 649W, for what reason the two Foden Thompson Carmichael MWD vehicles were returned to BVD Ashchurch for repair by 6 Transport Squadron during Operation Lodestar in August 1996. [116032]

Dr. Moonie: Departmental records show that, in total, three Foden Thompson Carmichael MWD vehicles were returned to the UK for repair in 1996. All three vehicles were returned between January and July 1996 for repair following road traffic accidents while operating in Bosnia. It has not been possible to identify any Foden Thompson Carmichael MWD vehicles being returned to the Base Vehicle Depot (BVD) Ashchurch in August 1996.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Staff Age Profiles

Dr. Cable: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will state (a) the number and percentage of staff in his Department who are over the age of (i) 45 years and (ii) 55 years and (b) the average age of his staff. [115409]

Mr. Morley: At the end of 1999 the numbers and percentage of staff aged over 45 years and 55 years and the average age of staff in my Department and its Agencies was as follows:

Department/Agency	Age 45+		Age 55+
	Number	Percentage	Number	Percentage	Average age
Core—MAFF	2,501	36	772	11	39
Pesticides Safety Directorate	35	16	8	4	37
Veterinary Medicines Directorate	46	38	19	16	42
Veterinary Laboratories Agency	416	36	143	13	40
Farming and Rural Conservation Agency	209	32	48	7	38
Centre for Environment, Fisheries and Aquaculture Science	196	38	69	14	40
Meat Hygiene Service	509	34	165	11	41
Central Science Laboratory	152	26	31	5	36

Fisheries (Minimum Landing Sizes)

Mr. Moss: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what representations he has received from fishing organisations regarding the impact of the changes to minimum landing sizes for various species of fish; and what assessment he has made of the effect on fish stocks. [116093]

Mr. Morley: Under the revised EU Technical Conservation Regulation which came into effect on 1 January this year, Minimum Landing Sizes for brill, dab, witch, flounder, turbot and lemon sole were ended. Some fishermen's organisations have asked for their restoration. We are currently considering this with the industry in the UK Fisheries Conservation Group.

I have made clear that, if the industry so wishes, I would be prepared to reinstate some or all of these Minimum Landing Sizes on a national basis and seek to persuade the EU to restore them.

It is too early to assess the impact of the changes in the EU rules.

Waste Incineration Directive

Mr. Gill: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what representations he has received concerning the potential impact of the Waste Incineration Directive upon farmers; and if he will make a statement. [116248]

Mr. Morley: I have received representations about the implications for farmers of this Directive, for which the Department of the Environment, Transport and the Regions has lead responsibility, from the National Farmers Union, the Countryside Alliance and the National Pig Association.

Harbour Grants

Mr. Moss: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what harbour grants were granted for each of the last five years broken down by amount and location; when harbour grants were discontinued; and how many schemes were pending at that juncture. [116108]

Mr. Morley: The table shows awards of national harbour grant made in England over the last five financial years.

The Harbour Grant Scheme was closed to new applications in England on 21 May 1999. At the time the scheme closed, there were 10 projects which had been formally approved, plus a further 22 projects where applications had been submitted. All these projects are being considered for payment of grant.

National Harbour Grant Scheme
Amount of grant awarded by year and location [1]

Location	£
1994–95
Appledore	50,000
Bridlington	7,900
Broadstairs	5,340
Newlyn	20,000
Polperro	1,550
Queenborough	18,000
Ramsgate	84,500
West Mersea	7,900
Total for year	195,190
1995–96
Appledore	2,250
Cadgwith Cove	8,300
Hull	108,800
Looe	28,530
Mevagissey	2,300
Newlyn	5,500
North Shields	172,800
Scarborough	256,700
Scarborough	22,400
Scarborough	49,300
Wells	19,500
Total for year	676,380

National Harbour Grant Scheme
Amount of grant awarded by year and location [1]

Location	£
1996–97
Flamborough	2,760
Mevagissey	9,400
Mudeford	2,850
Padstow	22,600
Ramsgate	4,500
Sennen Cove	5,500
Total for year	47,610
1997–98
Cadgwith Cove	14,100
Hartlepool	470,500
Ilfracombe	10,150
Mevagissey	96,750
North Shields	43,000
Polperro	35,000
Rye	14,000
Scarborough	77,000
Seahouses	14,600
Total for year	755,100
1998–99
Amble	373,000
Bridlington	2,250
Grimsby	169,200
Polperro	2,300
Sunderland	122,100
Total for year	668,850

[1] Actual payments were not necessarily made in the same year as the award

Bass Trawling

Mr. Andrew George: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what were the results of the recent consultation on bass trawling regulations in respect of (a) the number, (b) the percentage of respondents (i) agreeing and (ii) disagreeing with the proposed regulations (c) the number and (d) the percentage of respondents in favour of (i) partial and (ii) complete closure of the offshore fishery for bass. [115774]

Mr. Morley [holding answer 27 March 2000]: There were a total of 174 responses to the consultation carried out last autumn about possible restrictions on landing bass from UK commercial vessels. Only 13 respondents (7.5 per cent.) were opposed to the proposals made. A total of 53 respondents (30.5 per cent.) wished to go further than the proposals and called for a complete closure of the fishery. The number of responses calling for a partial closure was not recorded.

Farmers (Early Retirement)

Mr. Salmond: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what plans he has to make assistance for early retirement available to farmers under the provisions of the Rural Development Regulation (EC No. 1750/1999). [116222]

Mr. Morley [holding answer 27 March 2000]: Neither the England Rural Development Plan nor the Northern Ireland Rural Development Plan include an early retirement scheme for farmers under the provisions of the Rural Development Regulation (EC No 1257/1999). These plans are subject to the approval of the European Commission and to mid-term reviews. Decisions on which measures to use were taken in the light of extensive consultation and an economic appraisal.

Implementation of the Rural Development Regulation in Scotland and Wales is a matter for the devolved administrations.

Agricultural Land Values

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what assessment he has made of recent trends in the value of agricultural land. [115949]

Ms Quin: The most comprehensive information on the sales of agricultural land is collected by the Valuation Office Agency and is analysed and published by MAFF. The table shows the average price of all agricultural land sold in England from 1993 to 1998.

Average sale	Price £/ha
1993	3,791
1994	4,229
1995	4,788
1996	6,058
1997[1]	6,456
1998[1]	6,185

[1] Provisional data

Initial information for sales in the first two quarters of 1999 indicate a slight increase in price compared with the same period in the previous year.

Similar data for Wales are published by the National Assembly for Wales.

Food Standards Agency

Dr. Naysmith: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement about his Department's future relations with consumers' organisations following the establishment of the Food Standards Agency. [116826]

Mr. Nick Brown: The Ministry already has well-developed relations with consumers and their representative organisations which we intend to build on, following separation of the Food Standards Agency on 1 April.

The consumer interest in food safety will become the principal responsibility of the Food Standards Agency. The Ministry's aim already states clearly the central role which consumer benefit plays in our work. This will not change, but the Ministry's first Objective will be amended (the word "food" in the former Objective will be replaced by the words "farm produce") to become:

> To protect public health in relation to farm produce and to animal diseases transmissible to humans.

The Ministry will retain all its other objectives unchanged as set out in the Departmental Report.

I want to strengthen the Ministry's links with consumer organisations. I have given my noble Friend Baroness Hayman specific responsibility for MAFF's relationship with consumers. She and I intend to meet representatives of the main consumer organisations as soon as possible after the establishment of the Food Standards Agency. Our goal is to ensure that consumer concerns are fully reflected in decision making across the Ministry's responsibilities.

We will also be looking to change existing arrangements, which no longer serve to deliver real benefits to consumers. The Consumer's Committee for Great Britain was established under the Agricultural Marketing Act 1958. Despite its name, the Committee's statutory responsibilities relate only to the interests of consumers in the operation of marketing schemes made under the Act. As a result of changes over the years, only one such scheme now remains, covering wool, and this scheme does not have any direct impact on consumers. We are considering, along with the Scottish Executive and the Welsh Assembly, whether the Agricultural Marketing Act 1958 should be amended. In the meantime, I intend to leave the Committee in abeyance and not re-appoint members.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Passports

Ms Oona King: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what measures he is taking to reduce the number of passports lost by his Department when returning them to their owners; and if he will introduce guidance to ensure they are returned using a registered delivery postal service. [115331]

Mrs. Roche: We believe that the most important factor in reducing the numbers of lost passports is the rapid turnaround of casework and the elimination of backlogs. Over 70 per cent. of all after entry casework is now completed within two weeks and we expect the backlog to be eliminated by the summer. In addition, we are examining our processes with a view to improving the security of passports. We are also examining the costs that would be associated with returning passports by recorded delivery.

Illegal Immigrants

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what was the estimated number of illegal immigrants who entered the United Kingdom by hiding in motor vehicles during 1999. [115596]

Mrs. Roche: Information is recorded centrally on the numbers of persons issued with notice of illegal entry as clandestine entrants. This information is collated by the date of issue of notice of illegal entry and does not contain details of the date of entry to the United Kingdom. We have no estimate of the number of persons entering clandestinely whose illegal entry has not yet come to light or of those who claim to have entered illegally, but where a notice of illegal entry has not yet been served. For these reasons, I am unable to provide the information requested.

Provisional information indicates that around 16,500 persons were issued with notice of illegal entry as clandestine illegal entrants during 1999.

Budget Expenditure

Miss Widdecombe: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) what proportion of the £100 million for modernising policing across the UK referred to in paragraph 5.75 of Budget 2000 (HC 346) will be spent on DNA technology; if this funding is in addition to the £34 million for the DNA database announced in Home Office Press Release 299/99; how the money will be spent; and if he will make a statement; [116256]

(2) what proportion of the £100 million for modernising policing across the UK referred to in paragraph 5.75 of Budget 2000 (HC 346) will be spent on accelerating recruitment under the Crime Fighting Fund; by how much recruitment will be accelerated; whether this funding is in addition to the funding for 5,000 additional recruits announced in Home Office Press Release 304/99; if this funding means that more than 5,000 recruits will be recruited over the next three years using money from the Crime Fighting Fund; and if he will make a statement; [116258]

(3) if he will list the capital modernisation projects that have been approved for criminal justice agencies, referred to in Paragraph 5.75 of Budget 2000 (HC 346); [116260]

(4) how the £100 million for modernising policing across the UK referred to in paragraph 5.75 of Budget 2000 (HC 346) is to be spent; and if he will make a statement; [116255]

(5) what proportion of the £100 million for modernising policing across the UK referred to in paragraph 5.75 of Budget 2000 (HC 346) will be spent on police radios; whether this funding is in addition to the £50 million of central funding announced for the Public Safety Radio Communications Project in Home Office Press Release 3033/99; and if he will make a statement. [116257]

Mr. Straw [holding answers 24 March 2000]: I refer the right hon. Member to the replies I gave my hon. Friend the Member for Coventry, South (Mr. Cunningham) on 27 March 2000, Official Report, columns 1–3W.

Home Detention Curfew Scheme

Miss Widdecombe: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many offenders released under the Home Detention Curfew scheme to date were convicted of each category of drug offence. [116661]

Mr. Boateng: Of those prisoners released up to 14 March 2000 under the Home Detention Curfew scheme, 2,931 were convicted of drugs related offences. The numbers of prisoners convicted of each type of drugs offence are shown in the table.

	Number
Production	103
Supply	969
Possession with intent	1,238
Possession	396
Unlawful import/export	190
Other drugs	35
Total drugs	2,931

Miss Widdecombe: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many offenders released on the Home Detention Curfew scheme have subsequently been (a) charged with and (b) convicted of further offences after completing the scheme; how many such offenders were charged with or convicted of an offence similar in character to the one for which they were originally convicted prior to their release through the scheme; and if he will make a statement. [116533]

Mr. Boateng: Information about offences committed by offenders who have completed a period on the Home Detention Curfew scheme is not held centrally.

Prisons (Drugs)

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list those prisons which he has assessed as being free from the use of illegal drugs. [115944]

Mr. Boateng: Figures from the random mandatory drug testing programme provide the best available measure of the levels of drug misuse across establishments, and over time. The table lists the establishments which have consistently produced rates of positive random drug tests of less than 5 per cent. during the last two years:

Prisons producing rates of positive random drug tests of less than 5 per cent. during the last two years

Establishments:

Albany

Blantyre House

Downview

East Sutton Park

Haslar

Parkhurst

Rochester

Wakefield

Werrington

Whatton

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many prisoners have been identified as heroin users as a result of random drug testing in each of the last five years. [115947]

Mr. Boateng: The table shows the number of samples which have tested positive for opiates under the random mandatory drug testing programme in each of the last four years during which the programme has been running nationally.

Year	Number of samples testing positive for opiates
1996–97	3,096
1997–98	2,720
1998–99	2,860
1999–2000[1]	1,831

[1] Year to date figure for April—December 1999

Asylum Seekers

Mr. Lidington: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department which retailers have agreed to take part in the asylum seeker support voucher scheme administered by Sodexho Pass. [116590]

Mrs. Roche: A number of the large retail chains have agreed to take part in the asylum seeker support voucher scheme. A considerable number of smaller retailers have also agreed to take part in the scheme. As of 27 March, 4,411 retailers incorporating 10,789 outlets have been signed up to the Sodexho Voucher Scheme.

Contractual negotiations are continuing with other retail chains and it would be inappropriate to release any of the names of the chains involved.

Global Cultural Diversity Congress

Mr. Lidington: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what adjustments he plans to make to his forecast of income and expenditure of the Commission for Racial Equality, published on page 113 of the Executive NDPBs 1999 report (Cm. 4657) to take account of the losses incurred following the collapse of the Global Cultural Diversity Congress. [116526]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: None.

The forecast of income and expenditure published on page 113 of the Executive Non-Departmental Public Bodies 1999 Report was made by the Commission for Racial Equality.

Mr. Lidington: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what estimate he has made of the total cost to public funds of the Global Cultural Diversity Congress. [116585]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: None. Until we have the report of the findings of the liquidator it is not possible to make any meaningful estimate of total costs.

Bonds

Mr. Lidington: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department to visitors from which countries he intends to apply his proposed pilot scheme for bonds. [116524]

Mrs. Roche: No decision has been made yet on where to run the pilot scheme. However, as the Minister of State, Foreign and Commonwealth Office, the hon. Member for Leicester, East (Mr. Vaz), announced on 20 March 2000, Official Report, columns 833–36, it will not operate in any of the countries in the Indian Subcontinent.

Public Bodies

Mr. Lidington: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what plans he has to review the arrangements for the financial accountability of non-departmental public bodies linked to his Department. [116529]

Mr. Straw: I have no plans for such a review. Responsibility for reviewing the arrangements for the financial accountability of non-departmental public bodies (NDPBs) lies with Her Majesty's Treasury and the Cabinet Office. Each Home Office NDPB has an Accounting Officer who is responsible to the Home Office Departmental Accounting Officer, and operates in accordance with a financial memorandum agreed by the Department.

Sex Offender Orders

Mr. Lidington: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many sex offender orders under the Crime and Disorder Act 1998 have been made. [116525]

Mr. Charles Clarke: Information on the number of Sex Offender Orders made is currently not held centrally, although we are working on a system to ensure that we receive this information on a regular basis.

We are aware of at least 20 sex offender orders having been granted.

Immigration Applications

Mr. Welsh: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what the current average processing time is for immigration applications requesting leave to remain indefinitely. [116580]

Mrs. Roche: The time taken to process an application for indefinite leave to remain in the United Kingdom is affected by a number of factors, including the complexity of individual cases. Over 70 per cent. of all after-entry casework, which includes applications for indefinite leave to remain, is now completed within two weeks of receipt. Applications where further inquiries are needed may take considerably longer. However, streamlined procedures have been introduced throughout the Integrated Casework Directorate to speed up the consideration of all applications, and these processes are regularly reviewed.

Police Statistics

Miss Widdecombe: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list the police officers available for ordinary duty on 30 September 1999, broken down by rank, for each police force in England and Wales. [116530]

Mr. Straw: The information requested is set out in the table.

Police strength in England and Wales—total strength for ordinary duty as at 30 September 1999

	All ranks[1]
Police force	Chief Constable	Assistant Chief	Superintendent	Chief Inspector	Inspector	Sergeant	Constable	Total police ranks[1]
Avon and Somerset	1.0	3.0	23.0	36.0	147.6	452.4	2,325.7	2,988.7
Bedfordshire	1.0	2.0	13.0	10.0	54.8	141.5	826.1	1,048.4
Cambridgeshire	1.0	2.0	14.0	13.0	61.3	203.5	977.4	1,272.2
Cheshire	1.0	3.0	19.0	30.0	98.0	328.0	1,564.6	2,043.6
City of London	1.0	2.0	8.0	12.0	46.0	100.8	574.8	744.6
Cleveland	1.0	1.0	24.0	2.0	60.0	196.0	1,088.6	1,372.6
Cumbria	1.0	2.0	10.0	19.0	51.0	170.0	839.9	1,092.9
Derbyshire	1.0	3.0	23.0	28.0	94.0	289.0	1,325.6	1,763.6
Devon and Cornwall	1.0	4.0	33.0	45.0	133.0	422.8	2,222.3	2,861.1
Dorset	1.0	2.0	17.0	22.0	66.0	204.1	964.1	1,276.1

Police strength in England and Wales—total strength for ordinary duty as at 30 September 1999

Police force	All ranks [1] Chief Constable	Assistant Chief	Superintendent	Chief Inspector	Inspector	Sergeant	Constable	Total police ranks [1]
Durham	1.0	2.0	18.0	24.0	77.0	208.7	1,224.0	1,554.6
Dyfed Powys	1.0	2.0	15.0	18.0	46.0	179.0	787.6	1,048.6
Essex	1.0	3.0	24.0	46.0	124.0	446.4	2,190.3	2,834.7
Gloucestershire	1.0	2.0	10.0	15.0	55.0	162.2	852.8	1,098.0
Greater Manchester	1.0	6.0	79.0	89.0	337.3	999.6	5,298.4	6,810.3
Gwent	0.0	0.0	14.0	16.0	54.0	200.0	977.3	1,261.3
Hampshire	1.0	3.0	39.4	36.0	164.8	531.4	2,635.2	3,410.8
Hertfordshire	1.0	3.0	20.0	23.0	96.0	259.3	1,357.7	1,760.0
Humberside	1.0	2.0	20.0	26.0	103.0	279.6	1,494.6	1,926.2
Kent	1.0	4.0	26.0	38.0	142.0	473.4	2,572.3	3,256.7
Lancashire	1.0	3.0	34.0	36.0	164.0	519.1	2,464.4	3,221.4
Leicestershire	1.0	3.0	16.0	19.0	95.0	271.4	1,592.1	1,997.5
Lincolnshire	1.0	2.0	11.0	17.0	65.0	185.5	829.3	1,110.8
Merseyside	1.0	3.0	50.0	55.0	176.0	615.8	3,170.1	4,070.8
Metropolitan Police	7.0	29.0	214.0	388.6	1,208.5	4,050.9	19,986.5	25,884.5
Norfolk	1.0	2.0	17.0	22.0	73.0	203.4	1,063.2	1,381.5
Northamptonshire	1.0	2.0	12.0	10.0	50.6	174.1	880.3	1,130.0
Northumbria	1.0	4.0	36.0	56.0	183.8	532.9	2,986.4	3,800.1
North Wales	1.0	1.0	16.0	29.0	71.0	232.0	1,049.0	1,399.0
North Yorkshire	1.0	1.0	12.0	12.0	53.0	215.5	999.2	1,293.7
Nottinghamshire	1.0	3.0	21.0	19.6	117.0	328.0	1,737.4	2,227.0
South Wales	1.0	4.0	30.0	36.0	159.0	442.0	2,311.0	2,983.0
South Yorkshire	1.0	4.0	38.0	46.0	168.0	485.8	2,422.2	3,165.0
Staffordshire	1.0	3.0	21.0	27.0	112.0	337.7	1,704.3	2,206.0
Suffolk	1.0	2.0	13.0	15.0	55.0	171.4	902.6	1,160.0
Surrey	1.0	3.0	16.0	19.0	76.5	261.8	1,343.9	1,721.1
Sussex	1.0	4.0	27.0	38.0	152.4	466.0	2,221.0	2,909.3
Thames Valley	1.0	3.0	43.0	28.0	194.0	565.4	2,915.2	3,749.5
Warwickshire	1.0	1.0	10.0	8.0	47.0	124.5	724.2	915.7
West Mercia	1.0	3.0	18.0	30.0	99.0	299.7	1,528.7	1,979.4
West Midlands	1.0	4.0	59.0	46.0	307.0	987.4	5,892.0	7,296.4
West Yorkshire	1.0	4.0	45.0	75.0	238.0	669.4	3,840.6	4,873.0
Wiltshire	1.0	2.0	14.0	18.0	62.0	177.9	875.3	1,150.2
Total all forces	48.0	141.0	1,222.4	1,598.2	5,937.5	18,564.8	95,537.9	123,049.7

[1] Full-time equivalents

Note:

In addition 2,414 officers were on secondment to NCS, NCIS and central services, making 125,464 as the total officer strength at 30 September 1999

Rolling Electoral Register

Miss Widdecombe: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he intends to implement the rolling electoral register under the provisions of the Representation of the People Act 2000; if he will publish regulations relating to the rolling register in draft form; and if he will make a statement. [116657]

Mr. Straw: My intention is to bring regulations providing for rolling electoral registration into force with effect from 16 February 2001 (when the next electoral register will take effect). I hope that it will be possible to publish the regulations in draft form.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Plastic Baton Rounds

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will provide funding for a research programme to find a less potentially lethal alternative to plastic baton rounds. [107812]

Mr. Ingram: The Government have accepted Recommendation 69 of the Report of the Independent Commission on Policing, that a research programme to find a less potentially lethal alternative to plastic baton rounds should be established. The issue is at present being actively considered and a decision on the way forward is expected in the near future.

Police Officers (Oath)

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what statutory provisions prohibit serving police officers swearing a new oath. [110957]

Mr. Ingram: There is no statutory prohibition on police officers swearing new oaths voluntarily. However, to take a new police declaration the attestation which they have already made would have to be set aside by statute.

Education and Library Boards (Discretionary Awards)

Mr. Öpik: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what the expenditure was on discretionary awards by each Education and Library Board in Northern Ireland in each of the last three years; and if he will make a statement. [114650]

Mr. Ingram: Discretionary awards expenditure by Education and Library Board in Northern Ireland in each of the last three years was as follows.

£000

	1997–98	1998–99	1999–2000 [1]	Total
BELB	1,006	718	558	2,282
WELB	1,382	778	676	2,836
NEELB	1,215	930	538	2,683
SELB	1,585	1,113	600	3,298
SEELB	1,014	575	280	1,869
Total	6,202	4,114	2,652	12,968

[1] Provisional figures

Further and Higher Education

Mr. Öpik: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland when the Charter for Higher Education for Northern Ireland will be published; and if he will make a statement. [114666]

Mr. Ingram: The Department of Higher and Further Education, Training and Employment has no plans to publish a Higher Education Charter for Northern Ireland.

Mr. Öpik: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what plans the Department of Education for Northern Ireland has to promote sporting provision and facilities in the further education sector; and if he will make a statement. [114653]

Mr. Ingram: The Department of Higher and Further Education, Training and Employment has worked with the Further Education Sector to develop guidelines for colleges on a number of health related issues, including physical activities. Further, it has undertaken a mapping exercise on the provision and use of physical education and sports facilities, as part of the Northern Ireland Physical Activity Strategy Action Plan 1999–2002, and as a result has written to the colleges encouraging them to make increased use of such facilities.

The Department has also recently nominated a representative to the Northern Ireland Physical Activity Implementation Group (NIPAIG) which will oversee the implementation of the NI Physical Activity Strategy. One of the key activities of the groups is to consider ways in which Further Education and Higher Education students' participation in fitness and sporting activities can be enhanced and how the time allocated to higher education based teacher training in Physical Education might be increased.

Mr. Öpik: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many applications have been made by students from Northern Ireland during the current year to UCAS and CAO/CAS; and if he will make a statement. [114659]

Mr. Ingram: For entry in 2000, there were 13,539 NI applicants to Higher Education courses through the Universities and Colleges Admissions Service (UCAS) and 1,242 through the Central Applications Office at their respective closing dates for applications. The closing date for applications to UCAS was 15 December 1999 and 1 February 2000 for applications to CAO. Both UCAS and CAO expect further applications after the closing date.

Mr. Öpik: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what the breakdown is by (a) gender, (b) age and (c) religious background of student enrolments in each further and higher education institution in Northern Ireland for each of the past five years; and if he will make a statement. [114676]

Mr. Ingram: The information requested has been placed in the Library.

Mr. Öpik: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many applications were made by students from Northern Ireland during each of the last three years to UCAS and CAO/CAS; and if he will make a statement. [114660]

Mr. Ingram: NI applicants to Higher Education courses through the Universities and Colleges Admissions Service (UCAS) and the Central Applicants Office (CAO) are as follows:

	UCAS applicants	CAO applicants
1998	15,515	1,348
1999	15,067	1,437
2000	13,539	1,242

Note:
Figures for 2000 are at the respective closing dates for applications (15 December for UCAS and 1 February for CAO) and do not include late applications

Mr. Öpik: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what the student dropout rates were for each further and higher education college in Northern Ireland in each of the past three years; and if he will make a statement. [114678]

Mr. Ingram: This Department does not calculate drop out rates for Higher Education institutions. The Higher Education Funding Council for England (HEFCE) has calculated projected non-completion rates for full-time students starting first degree courses in Higher Education institutions in the UK. Currently, values are available for 1996–97 only. The values for the Queen's University of Belfast are 10 per cent., and for the University of Ulster are 17 per cent. It should be noted that differences between institutions, such as subject mix or the qualifications on entry of their students make comparisons between institutions unreliable. For this reason HEFCE has produced benchmarks against which an institution's value can be compared. The benchmarks for the Queen's University of Belfast and the University of Ulster are 12 per cent. and 18 per cent. respectively. The methodology used to calculate values and benchmarks is contained in the HEFCE publication "Performance indicators in higher education 1996–97, 1997–98".

Student dropout rates for each further Education College are not available.

Mr. Öpik: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what research his Department has commissioned or evaluated on gender differences in the participation of Protestants from a manual work background in post-school education in Northern Ireland; and if he will make a statement. [114658]

Mr. Ingram: This Department has not commissioned or evaluated any research which has looked specifically at gender differences in the participation of Protestants from a manual work background in post-school education in Northern Ireland.

Mr. Öpik: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make a statement on the Government's current policy on promoting community relations programmes in post-school education in Northern Ireland. [114655]

Mr. Ingram: The Department fully recognises the importance of promoting community relations programmes in post-school education.

The Department is setting up a working group together with representatives from the further education sector and the National Union of Students/Unions of Students in Ireland (NUS/USI), to consider how cultural diversity can best be recognised and promoted.

The Northern Ireland Universities have affirmed their commitment to promoting a pluralist environment which celebrates diversity across their campuses. They are working closely with the Student Unions in support of their programme for promoting community relations among students.

Mr. Öpik: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make a statement on the PAFT analysis carried out by the Department of Education for Northern Ireland regarding recent changes to student financial support arrangements. [114664]

Mr. Ingram: The PAFT analysis of the student support arrangements introduced from the 1998–99 academic year recognised that the changes would have beneficial effects for some groups of students, but might also have the potential to act as a disincentive for others entering higher education. It concluded that, in general terms, the policy of maintaining parity in student support matters with England and Wales has been, over the long term, to the advantage of Northern Ireland students and that, in value for money terms, it represented an effective use of resources.

Mr. Öpik: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what the expenditure was on promoting community relations work in each further and higher education college in Northern Ireland in each of the past three years; and if he will make a statement. [114677]

Mr. Ingram: The Department does not hold these details.

Mr. Öpik: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what were the (a) number of and (b) expenditure on postgraduate awards in Northern Ireland in each of the last three years; and if he will make a statement. [114652]

Mr. Ingram: The number of, and expenditure on, postgraduate awards in each of the last three years are as follows:

Financial year	Number of awards	Expenditure (£000)
1997–98	575	4,565
1998–99	536	4,253
1999–2000	434	3,903

These figures exclude a small number of postgraduate awards made by the Education and Library Boards under the Department of Higher and Further Education Discretionary Awards arrangements. The collation of such information would involve disproportionate costs.

Mr. Öpik: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what plans the Government have to make UCAS collect data relating to the religious background of applicants from Northern Ireland; and if he will make a statement. [114654]

Mr. Ingram: My Department has written to the Universities and Colleges Admissions Service (UCAS) asking it to include a question about community background on UCAS application forms completed by Northern Ireland-domiciled students. The request is under consideration and a conclusion may not be reached for some months. Pending the outcome I should say there is no question of my Department forcing UCAS to include a question on community background. Such a question would in any event be subject to voluntary response by the student applicant.

Mr. Öpik: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what estimate his Department has made of the cost of restoring maintenance grants for students in Northern Ireland; and if he will make a statement. [114662]

Mr. Ingram: If maintenance grants for Northern Ireland-domiciled students were to be restored, the costs could be in the region of £40 million in a full year.

Mr. Öpik: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what the access fund allocation and take-up rate was for each institution of further and higher education in Northern Ireland in each of the last three years; and if he will make a statement. [114657]

Mr. Ingram: Access Funds allocation and take-up rates for the last three years are:

£

	Academic year
	1997–98		1998–99		1999–2000
	Allocation	Expenditure	Allocation	Expenditure	Allocation	Expenditure
Armagh	7,618	7,720	16,033	15,931	14,046	—
BIFHE	94,612	94,503	180,076	104,220	302,739	—
Castlereagh	7,612	7,612	14,779	14,779	28,047	—
Causeway	10,927	10,927	33,913	19,040	42,923	—
East Antrim	19,763	21,097	38,048	28,500	54,998	—
East Down	14,188	14,196	28,945	26,196	42,735	—
East Tyrone	17,830	18,370	30,704	26,071	36,986	—
Fermanagh	12,990	12,920	38,410	34,927	51,878	—
Limavady	3,236	3,236	32,293	32,293	37,541	—
Lisburn	8,958	8,958	14,231	14,230	30,371	—

£

	Academic year 1997–98		1998–99		1999–2000
	Allocation	Expenditure	Allocation	Expenditure	Allocation	Expenditure
Newry	44,212	43,480	53,168	48,444	70,229	[1]—
NIHCC	3,265	2,771	47,071	29,381	44,815	[1]—
North Down	33,202	33,202	68,075	60,639	89,571	[1]—
North East	40,522	42,997	67,303	54,521	74,053	[1]—
North West	31,142	33,235	102,440	95,961	118,265	[1]—
Omagh	12,595	12,595	18,902	18,902	28,507	[1]—
Upper Bann	28,264	26,066	32,920	26,015	60,296	[1]—
Total	390,936	393,885	817,311	650,050	1,128,000	[1]—

[1] Expenditure details not yet available

Note:

Funding has been substantially increased over this period and is evidence of Government's commitment to implementing their Lifelong Learning Policy

Mr. Öpik: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what estimate his Department has made of the cost of abolishing the system of student tuition fees in Northern Ireland; and if he will make a statement. [114661]

Mr. Ingram: If the contribution towards the cost of tuition fees was to be abolished, the cost would be in the region of £15.5 million in a full year.

Mr. Öpik: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many student enrolments there were on a full-time and part-time basis for each further and higher education establishment in Northern Ireland over the past three years; and if he will make a statement. [114675]

Mr. Ingram: The information requested is contained in the tables.

Enrolments at NI higher education institutions 1996–97 to 1998–99

	1996–97			1997–98			1998–99
	Full-time	Part-time	Total	Full-time	Part-time	Total	Full-time	Part-time	Total
The Queen's University of Belfast	11,763	6,794	18,557	13,750	6,712	20,462	13,575	7,446	21,021
University of Ulster	13,131	5,698	18,829	13,617	6,541	20,158	13,464	6,015	19,479
St. Mary's University College	601	19	620	590	22	612	609	29	638
Stranmillis University College	594	65	659	578	70	648	668	282	950
Total	25,989	12,576	38,665	28,535	13,345	41,880	28,316	13,772	42,088

Enrolments on vocational courses at NI further education colleges/institutes, by mode of attendance, 1996–97 to 1998–99

	1996–97			1997–98			1998–99
College/Institute	Full-time	Part-time	Total	Full-time	Part-time	Total	Full-time	Part-time	Total
Armagh	1,287	605	1,892	1,374	591	1,965	1,295	613	1,908
BIFHE	4,680	17,462	22,142	4,407	17,456	21,863	4,030	18,336	22,366
Castlereagh	777	2,552	3,329	851	2,463	3,314	767	2,487	3,254
Causeway	1,211	2,143	3,354	1,065	1,958	3,023	1,070	1,834	2,904
East Antrim	1,127	3,763	4,890	1,152	3,923	5,075	1,069	3,769	4,838
East Down	1,227	2,879	4,106	1,227	2,523	3,750	1,154	2,722	3,876
East Tyrone	863	1,817	2,680	868	1,978	2,849	828	1,879	2,707
Fermanagh	1,076	1,790	2,866	1,060	2,060	3,120	948	2,318	3,266
Limavady	839	1,046	1,885	821	1,116	1,937	934	1,374	2,308
Lisburn	1,103	2,562	3,665	1,108	2,333	3,441	1,097	2,417	3,514
North Down and Ards	1,878	4,183	6,061	1,973	4,409	6,382	2,049	4,580	6,629
North East	2,098	4,227	6,325	2,181	3,790	5,971	2,107	3,915	6,022
Newry and Kilkeel	1,858	3,241	5,099	1,820	3,682	5,502	1,774	3,831	5,605
NIHCC	378	162	540	422	226	648	395	158	553
North West	2,496	5,442	7,938	2,474	6,247	8,721	2,358	6,212	8,570
Omagh	918	1,822	2,740	917	1,977	2,894	778	1,715	2,493
Upper Bann	1,217	4,373	5,590	1,248	3,969	5,217	1,201	4,286	5,487
Total	25,033	60,069	85,102	24,968	60,701	85,669	23,854	62,446	86,300

Note:

Figures represent snapshots of enrolments at 1 November each academic year

Prisoners (Parole)

Mr. Hunter: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what financial grant was made available to prisoners who were subject to release under the early release scheme when they were granted parole over Christmas and the New Year. [115378]

Mr. Ingram: Each prisoner was paid a home leave allowance of £3 per day for every day he was on home leave. He also received a £1 subsistence allowance irrespective of the number of days out on home leave.

All prisoners granted Christmas Home Leave received the same financial allowances.

Cross-border Implementation Bodies

Mr. Robert McCartney: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if the remuneration and expenses due to board members of the cross-border implementation bodies continue to be paid since the suspension of the Northern Ireland Assembly on 11 February; and which members of the boards of the cross-border implementation bodies have declined to accept (i) remuneration and (ii) expenses since the suspension of the Northern Ireland Assembly on 11 February. [115336]

Mr. Mandelson: None of the members of the boards of the North/South Implementation Bodies has yet been paid any of the remuneration due to them since the bodies were established on 2 December 1999.

Since the suspension of the Northern Ireland Assembly, only members of the Board of the North/South Language Body have received reimbursement of expenses. These were in respect of a meeting that took place prior to suspension.

No members of the Boards have declined to accept remuneration or expenses since the suspension of the Northern Ireland Assembly.

RUC (Compensation Claims)

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland, pursuant to his answer of 14 March 2000, Official Report, column 124W, on RUC (Compensation Claims), what procedures are in operation recording expenses arising from compensation claims against the RUC; and for how long such records have been kept. [115799]

Mr. Ingram: From April 1998, following the introduction of the Police (Northern Ireland) Act, details of compensation claims against the Royal Ulster Constabulary are maintained under new claims; claims disposed of; damages paid; Plaintiff's solicitors costs; Crown Solicitors costs and Crown Solicitors outlay.

It is not possible to quantify other costs/expenses associated with compensation claims as work is carried out by many different branches within the RUC as a part of their overall responsibilities.

Adult Education

Mr. Hilary Benn: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland for what reason the decision was taken to discontinue funding awards for students from Northern Ireland to undertake courses at residential institutions for adult education in Great Britain from the beginning of the 1999–2000 academic year; and if he will make a statement. [115911]

Mr. Ingram: The Comprehensive Spending Review, which set public expenditure priorities for Government Departments in 1999–2000 and beyond, provided additional funding in education to develop Government policy of Lifelong Learning in a number of directions such as:

Increasing places in further and higher education;

establishing the University for Industry and Individual Learning Accounts in Northern Ireland, and putting in place actions to address significant problems of adult literacy and numeracy.

Inevitably, however, reductions had to be made in a number of student support programmes to allow priorities to be clearly targeted and, as a consequence, some difficult decisions had to be made. Underpinning these decisions was the objective of concentrating available resources on those students awards which support domestic provision and which have the most economic relevance to Northern Ireland, such as research studentships.

In light of this it was decided not to continue to fund the very small number of awards usually made available to Northern Ireland students wishing to undertake courses at residential institutions for adult education in Great Britain from 1999–2000 academic year.

Nevertheless, support has been sustained for adult education access courses to higher education in Northern Ireland, both through continuing bursaries available at Magee College, University of Ulster and, more importantly, through funding of higher education access courses provided by the Further Education and Higher Education Colleges in conjunction with the local universities. These provide a very important domestic route to higher education for mature students in Northern Ireland who would otherwise be unable to enter higher education through conventional academic channels.

Camperdown Garden Village

Mr. John D. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many dwellings are proposed in Planning Application No. X/2000/0001/0 for a residential development known as Camperdown Garden Village; what proposals there are for a foul sewage system for this development; how many new primary school places will be required for this development; what proposals there are to improve the existing road system at the site; and if he will make a statement. [116085]

Mr. George Howarth: Responsibility for this matter has been delegated to the Planning Service under its chief executive, Mr. H. S. Mckay. I have asked him to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from H. S. McKay to Mr. John D. Taylor, dated 28 March 2000:

The Secretary of State has asked me to reply to your recent Question about the proposed residential development known as Camperdown Garden Village.

A planning application received in December 1999 indicated a total of 2500 dwellings at the site.

There is no suitable foul sewage system to serve the proposed development and if permitted substantial infrastructure will be needed.

If the development were to be approved, additional education provision for about 665 children of primary school age would be required. A site for a new primary school is indicated on the sketch scheme submitted with the application.

Vehicular access to the site is via four junctions from existing roads; two are on the Comber Road and two are on the Ballyrainey Road, which is improved and re-aligned. The dedicated bus lane in the old railway line is served by a park and ride facility. The E-Way study, commissioned by the Northern Ireland Transport Holding Co. examines alternative public transport options for re-using the old railway line to Comber.

The application is currently under consideration and comments are awaited in relation to the application and the environmental statement. Following the receipt and consideration of these comments a decision will be taken on how best to progress the application.

I do hope you find this helpful.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Federal Republic of Yugoslavia

Dr. Ladyman: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when the EU flight ban against the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia was suspended. [116741]

Mr. Hain: I refer to the written answer given by the Minister for Europe to my hon. Friend the Member for Gedling (Mr. Coaker) on 14 March 2000, Official Report, column 142W. The EC Regulation required to give effect to Common Position 2000/176/CFSP suspending the flight ban against the FRY was adopted by the Council of the European Union on 20 March 2000. EC Regulation 607/2000 came into force on 22 March and, in addition to suspending EC Regulation 2151/1999 imposing the flight ban until 28 August 2000, permits, in relation to the suspension of the flight ban, specific exemptions from Regulation 1294/1999 concerning a freeze of funds and a ban on investment, and from Regulation 2111/1999 prohibiting the sale and supply of petroleum products to certain parts of the FRY.

Council of the European Union

Dr. Ladyman: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list the forthcoming business in the Council of the European Union for April together with the major European Union events for the next six months. [116742]

Mr. Vaz: The answer is as follows:

Monthly forecast of EU business: April 2000

This calendar is primarily concerned with European Union matters, but certain other relevant events are also included. Events and dates quoted are based on the information available on the date of issue.

April:

3–4 April—Cairo EU—Africa Summit

Socio-economic Issues

Prospects for Regional Integration

Integrating Africa into the world economy, including trade, investment, transfer of technology and debt.

Political Issues

Human rights, democratic principles and institutions, good governance and rule of law, including empowering the civil society, terrorism, migration issues and xenophobia.

Peace building, conflict prevention, management and resolution, including refugees and illegal arms trafficking.

Development Issues

Challenges to sustainable development in Africa, including poverty eradication, investment in human resources, education, health and environment

4 April—Brussels Intergovernmental Conference (Preparatory Group)

No agenda available

7–8 April—ECOFIN Council (Informal)

No formal agenda

10–11 April—Luxembourg General Affairs Council

No agenda yet available

11 April—Luxembourg EU/Turkey Association Council

Agenda not yet finalised

10–14 April—Strasbourg European Parliament Plenary

No agenda yet available

13 April—Luxembourg Consumer Affairs Council

No agenda yet available

14–16 April—Oporto Environment Council (Informal)

No formal agenda

17–18 April—Luxembourg Agriculture Council

No agenda yet available

European calendar: April—September 2000

This calendar is primarily concerned with European Union matters, but certain other relevant events are also included. Events and dates quoted are based on the information available on the date of issue.

Date	Venue	Event
April
3–4	Cairo	EU-Africa Summit
4	Brussels	Intergovernmental Conference (Preparatory Group)
7–8	Lisbon	ECOFIN Council (Informal)
10–11	Luxembourg	General Affairs Council
11	Luxembourg	EU/Turkey Association Council
10–14	Strasbourg	European Parliament Plenary
13	Luxembourg	Consumer Affairs Council
15–16	Oporto	Environment Council (Informal)
17–18	Luxembourg	Agriculture Council
May
2	Brussels	Telecommunications Council
3–4	Brussels	European Parliament Plenary
5–7	San Miguel, Azores	Informal Meeting of Foreign Ministers
8	Brussels	ECOFIN Council
8	Lisbon	EU/New Zealand Ministerial
11	Brussels	Health Council
15–16	Brussels	Agriculture Council
15–16	Oporto	WEU Council
15–19	Strasbourg	European Parliament Plenary
16	Brussels	Culture Council
18	Brussels	Industry Council
18	Brussels	Development Council
22–23	Brussels	General Affairs Council

Date	Venue	Event
May
25	Brussels	Internal Market Council
25–26	Lisbon	EuroMed Foreign Ministers Meeting (Informal)
28–30	Evora	Agriculture Council (Informal)
29–30	Brussels	Justice and Home Affairs Council
30	Brussels	Energy Council
June
5	Luxembourg	ECOFIN Council
6	Luxembourg	Social Affairs Council
7	Fiji	ACP/EU Ministerial
8	Fiji	Signing of post Lome convention
8	Luxembourg	Education Council
13–14	Luxembourg	General Affairs Council
13–16	Strasbourg	European Parliament Plenary
15	Luxembourg	Research Council
16	Luxembourg	Fisheries Council
19–20	Luxembourg	Agriculture Council
19–20	Sta. Maria de Feira	European Council
21–23	Cyprus	3rd Euro-Mediterranean Conference of the Ministers of Industry
22–23	Luxembourg	Environment Council
26–27	Luxembourg	Transport Council
28	Lisbon	EU/India Summit
July
3–7	Strasbourg	European Parliament Plenary
6–7	Lille	Culture Council
7–8	Paris	Social Affairs Council (Informal)
10–11	Brussels	General Affairs Council
15–16	Paris	Environment Council (Informal)
17	Brussels	ECOFIN Council
17–18	Brussels	Agriculture Council
24	Brussels	Budget Council
27	Bangkok	ASEAN Regional Forum (ARF) Ministerial
28–29	Bangkok	ASEAN Post Ministerial
28–29	Arles	Justice and Home Affairs Council (Informal)
August
There are no Councils scheduled for this month
September
1–2	Evian	Gymnich
3–5	Biarritz	Agriculture Council (Informal)
6	New York	EU/Ukraine Summit
9–10	Paris (tbc)	ECOFIN Council (Informal)
18	Brussels	Telecommunications Council
18–19	Brussels	General Affairs Council
25–26	Brussels	Agriculture Council
28	Brussels	ECOFIN Council
28	Brussels	Internal Market Council
28–29	Marseilles	Justice and Home Affairs Council

European Institutions

Mr. Chaytor: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what were the running costs in the last year for which figures are available of (a) the North Atlantic Assembly, (b) the WEU Parliamentary Assembly and (c) the OSCE Parliamentary Assembly; and what was the United Kingdom's contribution in each case. [116650]

Mr. Vaz: These are the figures for 1999 budgets and estimated costs for 2000:

Organisation/ Year	Total cost (£)	UK contribution (£)	UK cost share (%)
NATO
1999	1,764,634.91	316,233.42	18.32
2000	1,796,860.00	294,519.84	17.25
WEU
1999	3,825,724.23	650,375.21	16.75
2000	3,409,062.90	579,540.69	16.75
OSCE
1999	934,289	84,086	9
2000	No formal estimates available

Mr. Chaytor: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what was the cost of the UK delegations to (a) the North Atlantic Assembly, (b) the WEU Parliamentary Assembly and (c) the OSCE Parliamentary Assembly, in the last year for which figures are available. [116651]

Mr. Vaz: Authorities for the House of Commons and House of Lords are responsible for the financing of delegates' attendance at the Assemblies. Costs are borne on the votes of the House of Commons and House of Lords.

Kosovo

Mr. Maude: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs (1) what representations he has received from (a) the US authorities, (b) the EU authorities and (c) NATO member states, concerning the internal US Defense Department report into the leaking of NATO military information during the Kosovo conflict; [116349]

(2) what assessment he has made of the United States Defense Department report into alleged espionage at NATO during the Kosovo conflict; and if he will make a statement on it; [116351]

(3) when his Department was first informed of the US report into alleged espionage at NATO during the Kosovo conflict; [116350]

(4) what representations he has made to NATO countries about the US internal report on alleged espionage at NATO during the Kosovo conflict. [116352]

Mr. Vaz: NATO and Pentagon spokesmen have made it clear they have no evidence of Serbian espionage at NATO during the Kosovo conflict. In the light of initial media reports, there were contacts with US and NATO officials to establish whether there was any substance to the allegations. But there were no representations made to, or received from, EU partners or NATO Allies.

Tartan Day Reception

Mr. Salmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what discussions he has had with the British Ambassador in Washington concerning invitations to Scottish politicians to attend the Tartan Day Reception in the UK Ambassador's residence in Washington. [116574]

Mr. Battle: The Secretary of State has had no discussions with the British Ambassador concerning invitations to the Tartan Day Receptions in Washington.

Ambassadors (Political Impartiality and Discipline)

Mr. Salmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what (a) rules relating to political impartiality and (b) disciplinary procedures apply to ambassadors. [116575]

Mr. Hain: All members of the Diplomatic Service, regardless of grade or position, are subject to the Diplomatic Service Code of Ethics and to Diplomatic Service Regulations, which include Regulations on required standards of conduct. The Code of Ethics requires officers to maintain political impartiality at all times. Any member of staff found to have contravened Diplomatic Service Regulations is subject to the disciplinary procedures set out in the Regulations.

PRIME MINISTER

Health Spending

Mr. Corbett: To ask the Prime Minister, pursuant to his oral statement on 22 March 2000, Official Report, columns 981–84, what is the proportion of national income that is estimated will be spent on health by the end of 2003–04. [116869]

The Prime Minister: As announced by my right hon. Friend the Chancellor of the Exchequer on 21 March, provision has been made available for the UK which will allow the average real-terms increase for the UK health service over the next four years to be 6.1 per cent. So health service spending will rise from last year's £45.1 billion, and this year's £49.3 billion, to: next year, £54.2 billion; the year after, £58.6 billion; then £63.5 billion; and then from April 2003, £68.7 billion.

As a result, on current forecasts, UK health spending as a proportion of GDP will increase to around 7.6 per cent. by 2003–04. It is expected that spending within the private health care sector will remain at around 1 per cent. of GDP and the overall rise to 7.6 per cent. is almost solely accounted for by the real terms increase in NHS spending.

The 8 per cent. EU average, as calculated by the OECD, is based on total health care spending. It is therefore directly comparable to the 7.6 per cent. figure.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Taxis

Miss McIntosh: To ask the Chairman of the Administration Committee if the Committee will establish a booking system for taxis to be available to hon. Members after late-night sittings. [116041]

Mrs. Roe: I do not consider such a system to be necessary, as there are adequate facilities available already. In addition to the taxi light and bell at the Members' Entrance in New Palace Yard, there is an auto-dial telephone programmed with two numbers to the Millbank taxi rank. Hon. Members have absolute priority at all times in summoning taxis at the Members' Entrance, and prior booking arrangements with taxi firms should remain the responsibility of individual hon. Members.

CULTURE, MEDIA AND SPORT

Wembley Stadium

Mr. Faber: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what is the basis for the reference in his Department's news release no. 49/2000 of 2 March to a 20 ft high, 10 acre concrete platform at the new Wembley National Stadium. [115228]

Kate Hoey: The reference to the 20 ft high proposed platform was based on fact. The reference to a size of 10 acres was an unfortunate error, picked up from descriptions given at earlier meetings; the reference should have been to a size of about 5 acres. The proposed platform remains poor value for money and an inappropriate solution to the need for an international athletics facility.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

BNFL

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry, pursuant to his answer of 28 February 2000, Official Report, columns 51–52W, on the visit of British nuclear officials to Japan, for what reason details of the Nuclear Installations Inspectorate report on irregularities and safety of MOX production at Sellafield were released to the Japanese authorities prior to their official release in the United Kingdom; and which bodies in Japan received the NII reports and under what conditions of confidentiality. [114141]

Mrs. Liddell: The Health and Safety Executive's Chief Inspector of Nuclear Installations visited the Japanese nuclear regulator, the Ministry of International Trade and Industry (MITI), on 7 February 2000 when he made a detailed presentation of his findings into the falsification of pellet diameter quality assurance data in the MOX Demonstration Facility at Sellafield. He also handed over to MITI a pre-publication copy of the report prepared by HM Nuclear Installations Inspectorate (NII), "An investigation of pellet diameter data in the MOX demonstration facility at the BNFL Sellafield site and the effect of this on the safety of MOX fuel in use". He did this as part of the on-going dialogue between HSE/NII and MITI, as the relevant safety regulators, in view of the importance to Japan of the issues in the report and to allow the Japanese authorities sufficient time to prepare for any inquiries they might receive. The Japanese authorities agreed to make no public comment about the report or HM Chief Inspector's discussions with them before its publication.

Mr. Chaytor: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will make an assessment of the effectiveness of Lloyd's Register Quality Assurance Ltd. as verification agents of British Nuclear Fuels environmental, health and safety policies and practices at Sellafield. [114823]

Mrs. Liddell [holding answer 23 March 2000]: Lloyds Register Quality Assurance (LRQA) Ltd. is a commercial organisation accredited by the United Kingdom Accreditation Service for the certification of quality and environmental management systems (ISO 9000 and 14000). They are contracted by BNFL for this purpose. BNFL's decision to use LRQA is a matter for BNFL.

Dr. Jack Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what is the normal period of service for a non-executive director of British Nuclear Fuels Ltd. [115994]

Mrs. Liddell [holding answer 27 March 2000]: The length of service of non-executive directors of BNFL varies according to the needs of the company. Subject to this, a non-executive director can normally expect to be appointed for a period of up to three years and, assuming satisfactory performance, can expect a re-appointment for a second term of a similar duration. Further re-appointments are sometimes made, taking account of the Code and Guidance of the Office of the Commissioner for Public Appointments.

Electricity Industry (Safety)

Liz Blackman: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what account Ofgen took of the minimum staffing levels required in respect of safety when setting its revised price controls for the electricity industry; and if he will make a statement. [114132]

Mrs. Liddell [holding answer 13 March 2000]: Safety is of paramount importance in the electricity distribution industry and an issue which transcends price controls. Companies have statutory obligations, enforced by the Health and Safety Executive (HSE) as well as the Electricity Supply Regulations 1988, which is the responsibility of the Engineering Inspectorate in my Department. The Office of Gas and Electricity Markets, in proposing price controls, takes account of these obligations, and companies, in accepting the price controls, accept their obligations to operate safe networks with the revenues provided.

British Investments (Azerbaijan)

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will estimate the value of British investments in Azerbaijan in (a) oil and gas extraction, (b) oil and gas transport, (c) oil and gas support services, (d) hotels and leisure, (e) banking, (f) service industries, (g) manufacturing, (h) retail sales, (i) telecommunications, (j) construction and (k) agriculture. [115558]

Mr. Caborn: The exact figures are not available but our Embassy in Baku have estimated that the total amount of UK investment in Baku is around $1 billion. This represents money actually spent by UK companies like BP Amoco in the country on design or engineering work to date. The breakdown is as follows:

	$
(a) oil and gas extraction	755 million
(b) oil and gas transport	210 million
(c) oil and gas support services	25 million
(d) hotels and leisure	1 million
(e) banking	2 million
(f) service industries	2 million
(g) manufacturing	0
(h) retail sales	500 thousand
(i) telecommunications	2 million
(j) construction	2 million
(k) agriculture	500 thousand
Total	1 billion

Internal Market Council

Mr. Hood: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what was the outcome of the Internal Market Council held in Brussels on 16 March; and if he will make a statement. [115548]

Mrs. Liddell: I represented the UK at the Internal Market Council in Brussels on 16 March.

There was an open debate on the Commission's outline proposals for an EU Food Authority, guided by a series of Presidency questions on the separation of risk assessment and risk management, the relationship between the EU Authority and national bodies, the scope of the Authority's responsibilities and access to the Authority. Other Councils will also be considering the Commission's White Paper and there will be a report to the European Council in June. The Commission will take account of the Council's views in formulating its detailed proposals which will be issued in September.

There was discussion of the Cardiff Economic Reform Process and of the preparations for the Lisbon Special Summit. The Council agreed Conclusions on economic reform to be forwarded to the Lisbon Summit and there was general support for the Presidency framework for Lisbon. The Council acknowledged the significance of Lisbon as a starting point for economic reform for the new economy and discussed the need for return to be accompanied by rationalisation of the Council structure.

The Commission introduced a review—which took full account of UK views—of the Simpler Legislation in the Internal Market (SLIM) initiative; the Council will be asked to agree Conclusions on the review at the IMC on 25 May. There was a debate on the Commission's eEurope initiative and the Presidency noted that an Action Plan will be adopted at the June European Council in Feira.

The Council reached political agreement on amendments to the Community Customers Code and on the Jams Directive, where the exclusion of "bakery jams" is preserved and is therefore a satisfactory outcome for the UK. The Presidency reported briefly on the Copyright Directive and the Spanish asked for rapid progress on the Community Designs Regulation.

During lunchtime discussion of the Takeovers Directive, UK and Spain reported that a solution of the issue of communications between Gibraltar competent authorities and counterparts in other member states was in sight.

Habitats Directive

Mr. David Stewart: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will make a statement on the timing of the licensing of the White Zone. [115733]

Mrs. Liddell [holding answer 21 March 2000]: I refer my hon. Friend to my previous answer of 21 December 1999, Official Report, column 455W. I can inform him that officials are currently working to put in place a statutory framework for applying the Habitats Directive to offshore oil and gas activities.

Utilities Costs

Mr. Hilary Benn: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what was the average cost of (a) 650 therms of gas and (b) 8,000 units of electricity to consumers (i) paying by direct debit and (ii) paying by means of a pre-payment meter in the last 12 months for which figures are available. [115912]

Mrs. Liddell: Provisional estimates of these costs for 1999 are presented in the table, as are equivalent bills for customers on standard credit terms. The majority of customers are still on standard credit terms.

Provisional estimates of 1999 annual electricity and gas bills for domestic consumers [1]

£

Payment method	Gas (650 therms)	Electricity (8,000 kWh)
Standard quarterly credit	320	594
Direct Debit	281	574
Pre-payment meter	336	608

[1] Average UK bills, including VAT

Nuclear Industry

Mr. Chaytor: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry, pursuant to his answer of 15 March 2000, Official Report, column 190W, on the nuclear industry, if he will provide a technical description of the reasons which led to each of the shutdowns listed. [115914]

Mrs. Liddell: This information could be obtained only at disproportionate cost. All of the shutdowns are briefly described in each power station's fortnightly newsletters, which are in the public domain.

North Yorkshire Power Line

Miss McIntosh: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will investigate alternative methods of providing electricity other than the proposed Lackenby-Picton transmission line; and if he will make a statement. [116238]

Mrs. Liddell: The decision on the North Yorkshire power line was made in March 1998. Development consents were granted for this line in 1998 following exhaustive public inquiries and there is no machinery for now reviewing those consents.

Government Offices, Eastcote

Mr. Jenkins: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will make a statement on the future plans for the Government offices at Eastcote. [116739]

Mr. Byers: This site is currently owned by my Department (DTI), but shared with the MoD. DTI use has now come to an end, leaving the site under-utilised. It is my Department's intention, therefore, to make a free transfer of the Eastcote site to MoD ownership, as that department is best placed to explore the possibility of re-locating existing units to other sites. Depending on the outcome, this could lead to the site being released for alternative civilian use. This work will form part of MoD's ongoing review of its estate in Greater London, which has the objective of concentrating Defence activities on a smaller number of core sites.

Bilateral Concordat (Wales)

Mr. Levitt: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry when he expects to publish the bilateral concordat between his Department and the Cabinet of the National Assembly for Wales. [116740]

Mr. Byers: The First Secretary and I have today agreed the text of the Concordat between the Department of Trade and Industry and the Cabinet of the National Assembly for Wales. Copies of the Concordat have been placed in the Libraries of both Houses, and the text will be available on the Department of Trade and Industry website.

Rover

Mr. Burden: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what actions the Government have taken in relation to the decision by BMW to sell part of the Rover Group; and if he will make a statement. [116868]

Mr. Byers: BMW's recent decision to divest itself of elements of the Rover Group was a commercial one. The Government are determined to help the people, communities and businesses respond to BMW's decision.

On Thursday 23 March I met the Chairman of BMW AG, Professor Milberg, and his senior management, impressing upon them the need for BMW's continuing involvement. After a useful and constructive discussion, BMW has agreed to look at ways to try to maximise job retention and at how the company might work with the recently established Task Force to promote the regeneration of Longbridge and the other sites affected.

During my visit to the region on 17 March I announced the establishment of a Task Force, headed by Alex Stephenson, Chairman of Advantage West Midlands, the Regional Development Agency. The Task Force membership includes people from key organisations concerned with regenerating the economy of the affected parts of the West Midlands. I asked it to report to me within six weeks.

The Task Force will:

Assess the impact of any reduction in activity at Longbridge on the people, businesses and communities of the region;

Advise on the public and private resources needed to help deal with the consequences, and

Draw up proposals for action by local partners and by central government.

I announced that £129 million of government funding would be available to support projects in the region aimed at dealing with the consequences of BMW's decision.

The Employment Service is setting up a Rapid Response Unit at Longbridge to help deal with any redundancies. This will involve establishing a job shop to give advance notice about job vacancies, careers advice and benefits, a fast-track claims process for employees who were made redundant, and access through the local TEC to training to meet the needs of the employees.

The Task Force has also made contact with the 98 leading suppliers to Rover and expects to have an analysis of their situation later this week. In addition it is contacting the remaining suppliers, including second and third tier suppliers. A hotline for handling queries from suppliers and from individual employees affected is also being established.

The Task Force has also held preliminary discussions with BMW about the future of the Longbridge site and will be holding further discussions with BMW, Alchemy and Ford about future intentions so far as employment is concerned, about the site and development issues.

The Government have also raised with BMW a range of other issues including their plans in relation to other sites and plants and the concerns of the network of dealers.

SCOTLAND

Shipbuilding (Clyde)

Mr. Sarwar: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a statement on the Government's support for shipbuilding on the Clyde. [115197]

Dr. Reid: This Government fully recognise the importance of shipbuilding industry generally, and the Clyde shipbuilding industry in particular. We will continue to do everything we can to support the industry.

Assisted Areas

Mr. Maclennan: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland, pursuant to his answer of 29 February 2000, Official Report, column 260W, on assisted areas, what are the problems of population sparsity affecting the Inverness travel-to-work area. [115781]

Dr. Reid [holding answer 21 March 2000]: Extremely low population density leads to additional costs in the provision of goods and services. There is a lack of economies of scale and, in combination with peripherality, this makes for structural economic weaknesses. The whole of the Highlands and Islands Enterprise area was thus proposed for inclusion in the new Assisted Areas map.

Websites

Mr. Maclennan: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list the expenditure incurred by his Department, agencies and non-departmental public bodies on (a) the setting up and (b) the operation of websites, indicating the cases in which the expenditure has been above that budgeted; and if he will list for each website (i) the topics which have been covered, (ii) the current average number of hits per months and (iii) the estimated expenditure on each website for each of the next three years. [115802]

Dr. Reid: The information is as follows:

(a) Set up costs: £2,700

(b) Operating costs to date: £1,300

(c) Topics covered in the Scotland Office website (www.scottishsecretary.gov.uk):

Welcome message from the Secretary of State
Scotland Office news releases
Profiles of the Ministers
Transcripts of speeches
What the Scotland Office does
Advocate General for Scotland (currently under construction)
Contact addresses and phone numbers
Selected links to other sites (mainly Government)

(d) The website was launched in November 1999. The number of hits has risen from 14,775 in November to 83,857 in February 2000. The number of page requests per month over the same period has risen from 2,407 to 8,883. The number of unique visitors to the site is not currently measured.

(e) Annual expenditure on the website over the next three years is currently estimated at £2,000 per year but the design and content of the site will be kept under review.

Insolvency

Mrs. Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what advice is given by the Accountant in Bankruptcy in Scotland to insolvency practitioners in personal sequestrations with regard to the vesting of (a) personal pensions, (b) retirement annuity contracts and (c) occupational pension schemes. [116230]

Dr. Reid [holding answer 27 March 2000]: The Accountant in Bankruptcy provides written guidance in the form of "The Accountant in Bankruptcy's Notes for the Guidance of Interim and Permanent Trustees". Section 6.18 of this guidance covers the treatment of pensions.

ENVIRONMENT, TRANSPORT AND THE REGIONS

Housebuilding (Chelmsford)

Mr. Burns: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions, pursuant to his answer of 20 March 2000, Official Report, column 402W, on housebuilding (ref. 114782) and his proposed changes to Regional Planning Guidance for the South East and East of England on 27 March, if he will assess the impact of his statement on housebuilding on 7 March 2000, Official Report, columns 863–67, on the Chelmsford local authority area, indicating the number of houses to be built in Chelmsford over the next (a) five years and (b) 16 years. [116029]

Ms Beverley Hughes: I would refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave him on 16 March 2000, Official Report, column 330W and to the pursuant answer of 20 March 2000, Official Report, column 402W. Full details of our proposed changes to the draft RPG for the South East were published on 27 March. These included an illustrative breakdown of housing within the region to county level, including an annual rate of provision for Essex. It will be for the Essex County Structure Plan to determine the level of housebuilding to be included in the Chelmsford Local Plan area.

Hedges

Mr. Don Foster: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what response he has received to the consultation paper on controlling nuisance hedges in residential areas; and if he will make a statement. [116382]

Mr. Mullin: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given to my hon. Friend the Member for Coventry, South (Mr. Cunningham) on 21 March 2000, Official Report, column 471W.

Foreign Commercial Vehicles

Mr. Wyatt: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will introduce a road tax or vignette on foreign commercial vehicles entering the United Kingdom. [116536]

Mr. Hill: Any vignette scheme, or any form of levy, would have to apply to domestic vehicles as well as foreign. To discriminate against foreign vehicles would be illegal under Community law. The Transport Bill contains enabling powers for local authorities to introduce charging schemes on their roads, but there are no plans at present to introduce widespread charging on the trunk road network.

Electronic Vote Counting (London Elections)

Ms Rosie Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if electronic counting of votes will be used at the forthcoming election of the Mayor of London and the London Assembly on 4 May. [116695]

Mr. Hill: The Greater London Returning Officer has informed me that following a successful trial on 22 February 2000, he intends to use electronic counting equipment to count the votes cast in the first election of the Mayor of London and the London Assembly on 4 May. He is satisfied that the system can deliver a speedy and accurate result and at the same time safeguard the probity and secrecy of the ballot.

Wild Birds Directive

Angela Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will list the sites so far classified or identified for classification as special protection areas under the EC Wild Birds Directive (79/409/EEC) in the UK. [116738]

Mr. Mullin: The Joint Nature Conservation Committee, in co-operation with the statutory nature conservation agencies, have been conducting a major review of the UK list of Special Protection Areas following the agreement and subsequent publication of SPA selection guidelines in July 1999. Ministers will be consulting interested parties about those sites which are not already classified as SPAs. The new list has today been placed in the Library.

TREASURY

Climate Change Levy

Mrs. Ewing: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what assessment he has made of the impact of Article 52 of the EC Treaty on the provisions for persons to notify the Commissioners when they are liable to be registered for the climate change levy. [116581]

Mr. Timms: I am satisfied that the provisions for climate change levy which will appear in the Finance Bill will be compatible with all our obligations under the EC Treaty.

Mrs. Ewing: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer (1) if the climate change levy will be levied upon (a) actual and (b) estimated energy supply in a period; and what provisions are to be made for overpayment on the basis of estimated bills; [116586]

(2) what factors may be taken into account in determining culpability for the late submission of climate change levy returns; and if he will introduce an element of culpability to the penalty regime; [116587]

(3) if he will make a statement on the definition of (a) taxable commodity under schedule 1 paragraph A3(1)(b) of the climate change levy legislation and (b) utility, contained in the legislation to ensure that suppliers liable to climate change levy are easily identifiable. [116591]

Mr. Timms: HM Customs and Excise have undertaken an extensive consultation exercise on the draft climate change levy legislation published on 26 November 1999. The results of this consultation are being taken into account in the proposed legislation. This will be contained in the Finance Bill to be published shortly.

Mrs. Ewing: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will confer on Her Majesty's Customs and Excise discretion to reduce penalties for late submission of climate change levy returns; and if he will review the interest rate on the penalty for small businesses. [116588]

Mr. Timms: As a result of the consultation exercise undertaken on the draft climate change levy legislation by HM Customs and Excise, I will be proposing changes to the penalty system for late submission of climate change levy returns. I have no plans to review the interest rate on the penalty for small businesses.

Mr. Swinney: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement on his reasons for exempting Northern Ireland from the climate change levy. [116578]

Mr. Timms: I have announced that we shall be exploring with the European Commission the scope for allowing a temporary exemption from climate change levy for natural gas in Northern Ireland for a period of up to five years. This reflects the very different nature of the energy market in Northern Ireland and the fact that gas is only as yet available in a limited area. A temporary exemption will facilitate the development of the infrastructure and make gas available to a greater number of potential customers.

Mr. Swinney: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer to what extent the climate change levy will be charged on supplies of energy (a) from Northern Ireland to other parts of the United Kingdom and (b) from other parts of the United Kingdom to Northern Ireland. [116579]

Mr. Timms: Climate change levy is only charged on supplies to final consumers. If the proposed exemption from climate change levy for natural gas in Northern Ireland is approved by the European Commission, climate change levy will be charged on all sales of products within the scope of the levy where the customer is located in the United Kingdom, except for sales of natural gas where the customer is located in Northern Ireland. The location of the supplier is not relevant.

Scottish Power plc

Mr. Russell Brown: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement about Her Majesty's Treasury's holding of debt in Scottish Power plc. [116743]

Mr. Andrew Smith: On 24 March 2000 HM Treasury sold back to Scottish Power the £142 million (nominal) bond it had held since the privatisation of the company in 1991. Proceeds from the buyback were £148,469,927.55.

Working Families Tax Credit

Mr. Willetts: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many recipients of the working families tax credit have a child less than one-year-old. [115247]

Dawn Primarolo [holding answer 20 March 2000]: About 92,000 working families' tax credit awards made to the end of February 2000 were to families with children aged less than one year.

Road Fuel Duty

Mr. Welsh: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement on the levels of duty on unleaded petrol and lead replacement petrol. [116119]

Mr. Timms: In October 1999 the duty rate for higher octane unleaded petrol was cut from over 5 pence per litre to 2 pence per litre above the rate for unleaded. This was to facilitate the introduction of lead replacement petrol (LRP) which is treated as higher octane unleaded petrol for duty purposes. Following increases in road fuel duties announced in the Budget the rate of duty on higher octane unleaded petrol is now 2.07 pence per litre above that on unleaded petrol.

Although LRP does not contain lead, it will generally be used by cars that formerly used leaded petrol. This part of the car population tends to be older, less fuel efficient than newer cars and, consequently, to have poorer emissions performance. The twin aims therefore are to have a duty rate that is not as high as that on leaded petrol—indeed is less than the former rate on higher octane unleaded—but at the same time to leave in place a measure that encourages replacement of less fuel efficient cars.

Over-the-counter Drug Deaths

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what assessment he has made of the total number of deaths caused by (a) paracetamol/co-proxamol, (b) dothiepin, (c) aspirin, (d) ibuprofen and (e) benylin in each of the last five years. [115945]

Miss Melanie Johnson: The information requested falls within the responsibility of the Director of the Office for National Statistics. I have asked him to reply.

Letter from John Pullinger to Mr. Paul Flynn, dated 28 March 2000:

The Director of the Office for National Statistics (ONS) has been asked to reply to your recent question asking for the latest assessment of the total number of annual deaths caused by (a) paracetamol/co-proxamol (b) dothiepin (c) aspirin (d) ibuprofen (e) benylin. I am replying in Dr Holt's absence.

The latest figures of drug related deaths caused by the substances listed above are provided for England and Wales in 1997. The information is supplied using the ONS database of deaths where the underlying cause of death was drug-related as described in Health Statistics Quarterly, Number 5. The table shows the number of deaths where the substances were mentioned on the death certificate. No deaths were recorded as being attributed to benylin.

Drug related deaths [1] for specific substances in England and Wales, 1997

	Number
Paracetamol/Co-proxamol[2]	562
Dothiepin	235
Aspirin	51
Ibuprofen	2

[1] Deaths with underlying codes 292, 304, 305.2–305.9, E850-E858, E950.0-E950.5, E962.0 and E980.0-E980.5, using the International Classification of Diseases, Ninth Revision, where the named substance was mentioned on the death certificate.
[2] Includes deaths where paracetamol or any compounds containing paracetamol, such as co-proxamol are mentioned in the death certificate.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Abolition of Feudal Tenure (Scotland) Bill

Mr. Welsh: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what assessment he has made of the impact of compensation payments by those on benefits under the Abolition of Feudal Tenure (Scotland) Bill; if he will take steps to take into account such payments in the calculation of benefit entitlement; and if he will make a statement. [116520]

Mr. Bayley: Departmental officials are in contact with the Scottish Executive about the full impact of the Abolition of Feudal Tenure (Scotland) Bill and will be examining the implications for benefit recipients.

IT Services

Kali Mountford: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what plans he has for the strategic management of information technology services within his Department; and if he will make a statement. [116744]

Angela Eagle: Following a review carried out in 1999, my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State approved a recommendation to transfer responsibility for the strategic management of the Department's information technology (IT) services from the Information Technology Services Agency (ITSA) to within the Department's HQ. This change will help maximise our ability to get the most out of our IT suppliers and facilitate the continued development of the Department's corporate IT strategy.

This development has been endorsed by colleagues in the Treasury and Cabinet Office and means that the ITSA will cease to be an Executive Agency from 1 April.

Asylum Seekers (Social Security Payments)

Mr. Steen: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will make payment of social security to political asylum seekers with children of school age conditional upon their children attending the appropriate school. [116534]

Mr. Bayley: No.

Poverty (Leeds)

Mr. Hilary Benn: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will estimate the total number of people living below the poverty line in (a) the Leeds, Central parliamentary constituency and (b) the City of Leeds in each year since 1990. [112044]

Mr. Bayley: Poverty and social exclusion are complex multi-dimensional issues, affecting many aspects of people's lives—their income, health, housing, the quality of their environment and their opportunities to work and learn. There is no single measure which captures the complex problems which need to be overcome.

We are determined to tackle the problems that condemn many individuals and communities to poverty. That is why we set out our strategy for tackling poverty and social exclusion in our first annual report "Opportunity for All" (Cm 4445). The report includes a range of indicators that capture the many aspects of poverty and social exclusion.

We are unable to present low income statistics for Leeds, Central parliamentary constituency and the City of Leeds because they are not statistically robust for areas smaller than geographical regions. However, information for the whole of Yorkshire and Humberside Government office region is shown in the table.

Number of individuals below 60 per cent. median income in Yorkshire and Humberside, including the self-employed

Million

	Before housing costs	After housing costs
1994–95	1.1	1.4
1995–96	1.0	1.1
1996–97	1.1	1.2
1997–98	1.0	1.2

Note:
Some of the fluctuation in numbers between years may be due to sample variability
Source:
Households Below Average Income

Some indicators of poverty and social exclusion are available at the local authority level. For example, the following table shows the number of beneficiaries receiving Income Support or income-based Jobseeker's Allowance.

Number of beneficiaries on Income Support or Jobseeker's Allowance (income-based) for the City of Leeds and Leeds, Central parliamentary constituency

Thousand

Period	Yorkshire and Humberside GOR	Leeds local authority district	Leeds, Central parliamentary constituency
August
1993	894	n/a	n/a
1994	896	124	n/a
1995	901	118	n/a
1996	869	122	n/a
1997	805	108	30
1998	769	101	23
1999	763	98	23

n/a = Not available
Notes:
1. Beneficiaries are claimants, their partner, and any dependent child or young person aged 0 to 19.
2. Information by GOR is not available prior to 1993. However there were 747 thousand Income Support beneficiaries in May 1991, and 812 thousand beneficiaries in May 1992 in the Yorkshire and Humberside Government Standard Statistical region.
3. Information by parliamentary constituency is not available prior to August 1997.

4. Information on beneficiaries is not available for local authority districts prior to 1993.

5. Local authority areas are assigned by matching postcodes against the relevant ONS 1995–99 Version 1/Version 2 postcode directories.

6. Figures are rounded to the nearest thousand.

7. Numbers are based on a 1 per cent. sample up to 1994 and a 5 per cent. sample thereafter. Numbers are therefore subject to a degree of sampling error.

8. Income-based Jobseeker's Allowance replaced Income Support for the unemployed from October 1996.

9. Income Support (IS) figures quoted prior to October 1996, include unemployed IS claimants.

Improving educational attainment is an intrinsic part of our strategy for tackling the causes of poverty and social exclusion. In 1997 in Leeds, 63 per cent. of students in English and 63 per cent. in Maths achieved Level 4 and above in Key Stage 2. By 1999 this had improved to 72 per cent. in English and 71 per cent. in Maths.

The health of our children is also an important indicator of levels of poverty and social exclusion. In the City of Leeds in 1997–98, the rate at which children (aged under 16) were admitted to hospital as a result of an unintentional injury resulting in a hospital stay of more than three days was 1.0 per thousand (to the nearest 0.5 per thousand). This has fallen from 1.5 per thousand in 1995–96.

Further information on the indicators we will use to monitor its progress in tackling poverty and social exclusion, including definitions and baseline data, has been placed in the Library on 21 September to accompany "Opportunity for All".

Income-related Benefits

Mr. Dennis Turner: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will estimate the cost of raising the children's rates in the various income-related benefits (in addition to normal indexation) by (a) £5 per week in October 2000 and (b) a further £5 per week in April 2001. [115492]

Mr. Bayley: The cost of introducing these increases in Income Support, income-based Jobseeker's Allowance, Housing Benefit and Council Tax Benefit for children under 16, and those aged between 16–19 who remain in full-time non-advanced education, would be approximately £400 million in 2000–01 and £1.5 billion in 2001–02 (figures rounded to nearest £50 million).

These costs do not include the costs of any equivalent increases in working families tax credit but do include the impact that increases to working families tax credit would have on Housing Benefit and Council Tax Benefit.

Fraud

Mr. Sanders: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what action he will take to rectify the performance of local authorities where such performance is judged unsatisfactory by benefits fraud inspectors. [116115]

Angela Eagle: Following publication of a Benefit Fraud Inspectorate report, the local authority is invited to consider and respond to the report and to submit any proposals for improving its performance and remedying any failings that are identified.

The Secretary of State for Social Security has powers under section 139D of the Social Security Administration Act 1992 to direct an Authority as to the standards it is to attain and the time within which they are to be attained. As my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State announced in the House on 6 March 2000, Official Report, columns 755–56, councils have been warned that where investigation by the Benefit Fraud Inspectorate identifies persistent failings, he will use those powers to direct them to improve their performance.

Housing Benefit

Mr. Sanders: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what means he will use to ensure that the information collected by local authorities to meet the reporting requirements of the housing benefit best value performance indicators for 2000–01 is (a) verifiable and (b) accurate. [116114]

Angela Eagle: Best value performance indicators will from this April be the main yardstick against which local authorities' performance is judged. Authorities are required to set out each year in published best value performance plans details of past performance against the indicators and challenging targets for future improved performance. These plans and the performance information they contain are subject to statutory audit.

Auditors are responsible for ensuring that authorities have adequate systems in place for producing accurate performance data. In addition, the Department has made arrangements for performance data to be reported periodically by authorities as part of the normal provision of Housing Benefit management information. My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State has recently announced his intention to use his statutory powers to compel authorities to provide this information. Guidance on the Housing Benefit indicators and revised statistical forms were issued by the Department to all authorities last December.

The Benefit Fraud Inspectorate will also test the robustness of local authority performance data both as part of its on-going cycle of inspections of Housing Benefit administration, and in its role as a best value inspectorate.

Winter Fuel Payments (West Chelmsford)

Mr. Burns: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many men there are in the West Chelmsford parliamentary constituency aged between 60 and 64 years; and when they will receive the £100 winter fuel payments for last winter. [116299]

Angela Eagle: The Department does not hold data to enable us to determine the number of men aged between 60 and 64 years in the West Chelmsford constituency.

Arrangements regarding payments to those newly eligible for Winter Fuel Payments will be announced shortly.

HEALTH

Cardiac Services

14. Mr. Syms: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement on cardiac services in England. [115161]

15. Liz Blackman: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement on the national service framework for coronary heart disease. [115162]

Yvette Cooper: On 6 March my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State launched the National Service Framework for Coronary Heart Disease. This framework is a radical and far-reaching blueprint to transform prevention, diagnosis and treatment of coronary heart disease and will help save 200,000 lives by 2010.

18. Mr. Jack: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement on the future of cardio-thoracic services in the north-west of England. [115165]

Yvette Cooper: Cardiothoracic services in the north-west of England will be improved in line with the National Service Framework for Coronary Heart Disease and the Strategy for the Development of Invasive and Tertiary Cardiac Services in the North-West Region (Dargie Report), published in April 1999.

Waiting Lists

16. Mr. Paterson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement on acute waiting lists during the past winter. [115163]

Mr. Denham: The National Health Service has done this winter what it should always do—it has prioritised emergencies. There are always more pressures on the NHS from emergency admissions in the winter months. The waiting list figures for December and January reflect the fact that the NHS as planned did give priority to emergency cases.

The waiting list is currently 39,000 below the level inherited. We remain on track to achieve our manifesto commitment to reduce waiting lists by 100,000 from the level inherited.

Adoption

19. Ms Keeble: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement on the Government's plans to improve adoption procedures. [115166]

Mr. Hutton: My right hon. Friend the Prime Minister has announced that he is to conduct a review of adoption with ministerial colleagues. The review will consider how best to develop a modern adoption system which puts the interests of the child first and provides a sensitive and efficient service, building on the Government's Quality Protects programme for transforming children's services.

Intensive Care Beds

20. Mr. David Heath: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many additional intensive care beds have been made available in NHS hospitals since 1 January. [115168]

Ms Stuart: More than 100 additional critical care beds were available this winter, and more will be opened next winter, following the current thorough review of critical care services.

Treatment Variations

21. Mrs. Ann Cryer: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what action he is taking to tackle wide variations in treatment in different parts of the country. [115169]

Yvette Cooper: Tackling unacceptable variations in performance and treatment is one of the key challenges we have set the National Health Service. We have already established new mechanisms; we are setting standards across the NHS through the National Institute for Clinical Excellence and the National Service Framework programme; ensuring delivery of these locally through clinical governance, and monitoring delivery through the performance assessment framework, the Commission for Health Improvement and a programme of national patient surveys. Over the next few months we will work with key professionals and frontline staff to see how we can improve NHS performance and productivity so that we make the best use of the record increases in NHS funding announced in the Budget.

Accident and Emergency Departments

23. Mr. Love: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many accident and emergency departments are being modernised; and if he will make a statement on progress to date. [115172]

33. Mr. Anthony D. Wright: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many accident and emergency departments are being modernised; and if he will make a statement on progress to date. [115182]

Ms Stuart: The £115 million capital investment in accident and emergency services is enabling 244 improvement schemes to be carried out in 182 hospital trusts in England. Good progress is being made: almost all the schemes are already under way and 90 (37 per cent.) have now been completed. 194 schemes (80 per cent.) are scheduled for completion by July 2000.

Consultant Neurologists

24. Mr. Bob Russell: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will increase the number of consultant neurologists. [115173]

Mr. Denham: We review the requirements for consultants in neurology annually. There are around 150 specialists in training and we expect most of these to become available for consultant posts between 2003 and 2004. This will be 90 more than are needed to replace consultants expected to retire.

Family Friendly Working Practices

25. Mr. Watts: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what action he is taking to extend family friendly working practices in the NHS. [115174]

Mr. Denham: In 1999 the Government launched the Improving Working Lives campaign. Each region has appointed a Champion to lead a multi disciplinary task force to develop family friendly policies and identify and share good practice. They will pay particular attention to trusts with high levels of vacancies. A kitemarking system will be set up, so that National Health Service organisations that perform well can be recognised.

35. Mr. Drew: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement on progress made in introducing family friendly working practices in the NHS. [115184]

Mr. Denham: We have launched a £1 million Improving Working Lives campaign in the National Health Service. A similar budget has been agreed for 2000–01. Each region has set up a multi-disciplinary task force to share good practices. The task forces will support implementation of the Working Lives Standard and concentrate on those trusts with the most vacancies. In September 1999 Ministers launched a consultation exercise to develop a set of standards on good employment practices against which employers and their staff can measure themselves. Responses indicate general support from local NHS organisations, individuals and staff-side representatives. The re-drafted standards are currently out for consultation.

Last year's national recruitment campaign attracted over 5,000 former nurses back to the NHS, and 60 per cent. of those returning have taken up part-time posts, proving that NHS employers are becoming more flexible and family friendly.

Elderly People

26. Dr. Starkey: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement on the extra capitation given to health authorities in respect of the elderly. [115175]

Mr. Hutton: The current allocations formula recognises that the elderly make more use of health services than the rest of the population. Health authorities with a relatively elderly population have their weighted capitation targets increased accordingly.

NHS Funding

27. Mr. Swayne: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how much extra funding has been made available to the NHS since May 1997. [115176]

Mr. Denham: National Health Service net expenditure in 1996–97 was £32.9 billion. In 2000–01 NHS expenditure will be £44.2 billion, a real terms increase of 20.5 per cent. on 1996–97. By 2003–04 NHS expenditure will reach £56.4 billion, a real terms increase of 42.7 per cent. on 1996–97.

34. Mr. Alan W. Williams: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what percentage of the United Kingdom's gross domestic product was devoted to health care (a) in 1996–97 and (b) in 2000–01; and what was the European average for those years. [115183]

Mr. Denham: In 1996–97, United Kingdom Gross National Health Service expenditure was 5.7 per cent. of Gross Domestic Product (GDP).

Based on the latest forecasts of GDP and planned NHS expenditure figures, for 2000–01, UK gross NHS expenditure is forecast to be 6.1 per cent. of GDP.

The Department does not collect information on health care expenditure in other European countries. It is collected by the Organisation of Economic Co-operation and Development (OECD) and can be obtained from the 1999 OECD health database.

National Institute for Clinical Excellence

28. Mr. Brake: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what assessment he has made of the work of the National Institute for Clinical Excellence. [115177]

Mr. Denham: The National Institute for Clinical Excellence has made a good start to its work. NICE has produced a fast-track appraisal of the anti-flu drug Relenza and an appraisal on wisdom teeth. NICE's work programme was announced in November 1999 and has an agreed schedule of further appraisals, guidelines and GP referral protocols.

NHS Hospitals (Hygiene)

29. Dr. Cable: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what steps he is taking to raise standards of cleanliness and hygiene in NHS hospitals. [115178]

Mr. Denham: Trust chief executives are responsible for standards of cleanliness and hygiene in hospitals. All acute trusts have the assistance of the infection control team. The controls assurance framework published on 22 November 1999 has a section relating to infection control, including specific reference to cleanliness. The Infection Control Nurses Association and the Association of Domestic Managers have published "Standards for Environmental Cleanliness in Hospitals", which NHS Estates is sending to all NHS trusts.

Primary Care Trusts

30. Mr. Jenkins: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when he expects the first primary care trusts to become operational. [115179]

Mr. Denham: Seventeen primary care trusts will become operational on 1 April 2000. They will deliver more integrated primary and community services, ensuring better access for patients, therefore providing a stronger role for community services in the National Health Service.

32. Miss McIntosh: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what estimate he has made of (a) the cost of setting up primary care trusts and (b) the cost of their annual operation. [115181]

Mr. Denham: Each health authority where there is a proposal to establish a primary care trust (PCT) receives a contribution from central funds of £25,000 towards the costs of preparing the proposal for local consultation and of the consultation itself. If the proposal is approved by the Secretary of State, a further central contribution is made towards the preparatory costs of the PCT. This contribution comprises £100,000 for a commissioning only PCT or £175,000 for a PCT which will also provide services. In addition, local health systems are expected to contribute to the costs of establishing and developing a new PCT.

Seventeen PCTs have been approved to begin operating from 1 April at a total central cost of £3.325 million. Information is not, however, held centrally on the total cost of establishing each PCT.

NHS Direct (Cumbria)

31. Mr. Martlew: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when NHS Direct will start to operate in Cumbria. [115180]

Ms Stuart: The White Paper "The New NHS: Modern, and Dependable" announced the Government's commitment to NHS Direct. At present, NHS Direct covers 65 per cent. of the population. By the end of October this year, the whole of England, including Cumbria, will be covered.

Nurse Training

36. Mrs. Heal: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what steps he is taking to increase the number of places available for nurse training. [115185]

Mr. Denham: We provided increased investment to enable us to deliver 6,000 new nurse training places by 2002. This target was based upon delivering 1,000 of those new places in 1999–2000, but we are now planning to deliver around 1,600. Further investment will enable us to provide an additional 1,000 nurse and midwifery pre-registration training places in 2000–01.

Cancer

37. Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what steps are being taken to increase the availability of modern equipment for the diagnosis and treatment of cancer in NHS hospitals. [115186]

38. Mr. Gareth R. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what steps are being taken to increase the availability of modern equipment for the diagnosis and treatment of cancer in NHS hospitals. [115187]

Yvette Cooper: In January, the Government announced a £100 million cash injection which will pay for the most up to date equipment (computed tomography, scanners, simulators and planning computers to calculate radiotherapy doses) to diagnose and treat cancer more quickly and effectively. This £100 million cash boost for cancer is the biggest-ever single investment in cancer equipment in the history of the NHS.

This record investment is on top of the allocation of £93 million from the National Lottery that has been allocated for cancer diagnosis and treatment equipment (breast screening equipment—mobile trailers, ultrasound and mammography machines, MRI scanners and linear accelerators) to over 200 NHS hospitals.

Painkillers

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what proposals he has to reduce the number of deaths caused by painkillers. [115151]

Yvette Cooper: We have introduced tight restrictions on the pack sizes of over-the-counter painkillers, together with overdose warnings for paracetamol products. The effect of these measures is being monitored. We are currently reviewing the need for strengthened warnings for non-steroidal anti-inflammatory drugs with other European member states.

NHS Dentistry (Lincolnshire)

Gillian Merron: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what plans he has for improving access to NHS dentistry in Lincolnshire. [115171]

Mr. Hutton: The Investing in Dentistry initiative offered £210,000 in grants to Lincolnshire dentists in return for promises of 16,500 patient registrations. Lincolnshire Health Authority has submitted a proposal for a dental access centre which is now being considered. If the bid succeeds the centre will be operational by the end of this year. We will publish further plans to improve access to dentistry in a dental strategy for England in due course.

Miscarriages

Audrey Wise: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, pursuant to his reply of 14 February 2000, Official Report, column 387W, if he will list for the years for which they are available the estimated numbers of women diagnosed as receiving hospital care for miscarriage grossed to allow for missing, incomplete and inaccurate records; and if he will give an indication of the accuracy and completeness of this information. [113093]

Yvette Cooper: It is regretted that the reply of 14 February was incorrect. The information provided in the table showing the estimated numbers of women diagnosed as receiving hospital care for miscarriage for the years prior to 1997–98 was grossed to allow for missing, incomplete and inaccurate records. The difference between grossed and ungrossed figures in recent years is between 3–4 per cent. The following table contains the information requested.

Year	Number of miscarriages
1989–90	48,500
1990–91	50,600
1991–92	53,100
1992–93	52,400
1993–94	51,300
1994–95	48,700
1995–96	43,900
1996–97	44,500
1997–98	[1]41,800

[1] Provisional

The information in the table is obtained from the Hospital Episodes Statistics system. The data for the years prior to 1997–98 are grossed and have been adjusted to allow for missing, incomplete or inaccurate records.

Data extracted were those with the diagnosis code OO3 (ICD-10) Spontaneous Abortion.

Nursing Care

Mr. Burnett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what steps the Government plans to take to provide compensation for nursing home patients and their relatives who have suffered financial loss and hardship due to the imposition of means testing by social services departments based on eligibility criteria which have been found to be unlawful. [114741]

Mr. Hutton: The Department issued guidance in August 1999 following the Coughlan case (Health Service Guidance (1999) 180: Local Authority Circular (99)30) required health and local authorities to satisfy themselves that their criteria were lawful, taking legal advice where necessary. Where authorities subsequently revise their criteria in the light of the Coughlan judgment they should reassess clients against the revised criteria.

Any possible claims for compensation due to the operation of unlawful eligibility criteria for nursing home care are the responsibility of the relevant health authorities and local councils.

Psychiatric Beds

Dr. Cable: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what percentage of 24 hour staffed beds for people with severe and enduring mental illness were used in each health authority in London and the South East since 1998–99. [115787]

Mr. Hutton: Information on the percentage of 24 hour beds for people with severe and enduring mental illness used in each health authority in London and the South East since 1998–99 is not held centrally.

However the table contains data on the number of 24 hour beds in each health authority in London and the South East for the end of the financial year 1998–99 and the latest position available (December 1999).

Mental Health—number of 24 hour staffed beds

Region	Health authority	Position at March 1999	Position at December 1999	Increase
London	Barking and Havering	0	0	0
London	Barnet	15	15	0
London	Bexley and Greenwich	8	8	0
London	Brent and Harrow	32	32	0
London	Bromley	10	10	0
London	Camden and Islington	60	72	12
London	Croydon	0	0	0
London	Ealing, Hammersmith and Hounslow	39	43	4
London	East London and City	106	106	0
London	Enfield and Haringey	56	56	0
London	Hillingdon	0	28	28
London	Kensington, Chelsea and Westminster	13	13	0
London	Kingston and Richmond	62	62	0
London	Lambeth, Southwark and Lewisham	138	142	4
London	Merton, Sutton and Wandsworth	185	185	0
London	Redbridge and Waltham Forest	50	50	0
South East	Berkshire	0	0	0
South East	Buckinghamshire	29	29	0
South East	East Kent	45	45	0
South East	East Surrey	21	21	0
South East	East Sussex, Brighton and Hove	175	175	0
South East	Isle of Wight	0	8	8
South East	North and Mid Hampshire	167	167	0
South East	Northamptonshire	10	10	0
South East	Oxfordshire	0	20	20
South East	Portsmouth and SE Hampshire	47	54	7
South East	Southampton and SW Hampshire	83	83	0
South East	West Kent	0	0	0
South East	West Surrey	0	0	0
South East	West Sussex	18	18	0
England		4,013	4,301	288

Source:
Common Information Core, quarterly monitoring

Herbal Remedies

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement on the progress made by the Pharmaceutical Committee of the European Union in establishing a secure route to market for herbal remedies. [115793]

Ms Stuart: The European Pharmaceutical Committee on 22 March considered the interpretation of Directive 99/83/EC relating to the use of bibliographic data to demonstrate that a medicine has well established use. In the light of the Committee's discussion we are assessing how the Directive may help us to move towards our objective of achieving more effective regulatory arrangements for herbal medicines, balancing public safety and consumer choice. We will make a statement when we have completed this assessment.

Medicines Control Agency

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when he expects the Medicines Control Agency next to meet representatives of consumer, retailer and practitioner organisations. [115800]

Ms Stuart: The Medicines Control Agency has frequent meetings with a wide range of interest groups. The agency held meetings with a number of organisations including representatives of businesses and practitioners in the natural health sector on 21 March. Further discussions with organisations representing consumers, retailers and herbal practitioners are to be held on 28 and 31 March.

Hospital Consultants (Distinction Awards)

Mr. Nicholas Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many distinction awards were made to hospital consultants and at what total value in the last year for which figures are available. [116113]

Mr. Denham: In the 1999 awards round, a total of 481 new distinction awards were granted to hospital consultants. The breakdown of levels of award and their values is shown in the table.

Award	Value [1] (£)	Number granted	Total value [2] (£)
A+	58,525	37	2,165,425
A	43,125	142	6,123,750
B	24,640	302	7,441,280
Total		481	15,730,455

[1] As at 1 April 1999
[2] The total value of the awards granted assumes full-time employment

Hospital Matrons

Dr. Tony Wright: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what plans he has to reintroduce the post of matron in hospitals. [116356]

Mr. Denham: Each National Health Service trust has a nurse executive director who is a member of the trust board. Some are titled "chief nurse", and they could, if they so chose, be called "matron". They are therefore very senior people with influence in their organisation and are responsible for, among other things, quality and nursing standards.

Some are also patient services managers and their role equates more closely to the span of responsibility of the traditional matron. The role of the matron therefore still exists in many trusts across England, albeit with a different title.

Public Appointments

Mr. Amess: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list the chairmen of primary care trusts and primary care groups, indicating the political background and affiliation of each where it is known. [116648]

Mr. Denham: We do not collect monitoring information on the political activity or affiliation of primary care group members because primary care group appointments are not made by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State.

Primary care trust chairs are appointed by my right hon. Friend and, in accordance with guidance from the Commissioner for Public Appointments, information is collected on political activity undertaken by chairs and non-executives at the time they apply for a National Health Service appointment. The Department does not collect information on the political affiliation of those appointed to National Health Service bodies.

Primary care trust chair details are shown in the table.

PCT	Region	Chair	Political Activity
Southend	Eastern	Katherine Kirk	Labour
Southampton East	South East	Pauline Quan-Arrow	None
Epping Forest	Eastern	Susan Leggate	Other
South Manchester	North West	Michael Green	Labour
Poole Central and North	South West	Anne Holland	LibDem
Poole Bay	South West	Peter Harvey	None
Hillingdon	London	Sarah Pond	None
Mansfield	Trent	Tony Hughes	Labour
Newark and Sherwood	Trent	Bonnie Jones	None
Central Derbyshire	Trent	Stuart Fletcher	None
NE Lincolnshire	Trent	Valerie Waterhouse	None
Daventry and South Northants	South East	Simon Schanschieff	None
The Nelson	London	Kay Sonneborn	None
Fenland	Eastern	David Burall	LibDem
Peterborough North	Eastern	Mohammed Choudhary	Labour
Peterborough South	Eastern	Marco Cereste	Conservative
Tendring	Eastern	David Rex	Conservative

Transplants

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how much funding he has allocated to allow officials of his Department to study the co-ordination of transplant availability and organ procurement in Spain; and what were the results of the study, with special reference to early awareness by authorities of potential kidney donors. [115214]

Mr. Denham: As a matter of course, officials at the Department are in regular and frequent communication with the head of Organisation National de Transplant, Dr. Blanca Miranda, and the lead official in the Spanish Ministry of Health, Dr. Raphael Matesantz. The Department are aware of the Spanish developments in procurement of organs for transplantation.

In February we announced action plans for the modernisation of transplant services in England. These have taken into account lessons learned from the Spanish experience including all aspects of organ procurement.

Medicinal Drugs

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what estimate he has made of the cost of medicinal drugs as a percentage of NHS funding for the next five years; and what the figure was for the last five years. [115943]

Ms Stuart: Decisions about the amount spent on drugs over the next five years will be made locally.

The table shows the expenditure on drugs as a percentage of National Health Service funding for each of the past five years.

Total NHS drugs bill as a percentage of total NHS expenditure

Year	Percentage
1994–95	12.1
1995–96	12.7
1996–97	13.3
1997–98	13.7
1998–99	13.8

Correspondence

Sir Brian Mawhinney: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when the right hon. Member for North-West Cambridgeshire will receive a substantive reply to his letter of 9 February on behalf of 40 of his constituents. [116532]

Ms Stuart: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State replied to the right hon. Member on 27 March.

Trust Deficits

Mr. Swayne: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what plans he has to eliminate (a) current financial deficits of NHS trusts and (b) the accumulated NHS deficit; and if he will make a statement. [116537]

Mr. Denham: The new resources for the National Health Service announced by my right hon. Friend the Chancellor of the Exchequer in his Budget will help the NHS to run balanced budgets year after. A substantial part of the accumulated deficits represent longer term liabilities such as clinical negligence costs for which funding is made available as payment falls due.

Older Women

Mrs. Anne Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what steps he is taking to promote the health of older women. [115170]

Mr. Hutton: Modernising services for older people, including older women, is a priority for this Government. This is why we should be publishing a National Service Framework for Older People later this year. In the meantime, we have already launched an osteoporosis strategy and published an important resource pack for older women called "Enjoy your later life: Physical and Emotional Wellbeing for Older Women". These have been widely welcomed.

Written Answers to Questions

Wednesday 29 March 2000

ENVIRONMENT, TRANSPORT AND THE REGIONS

GM Crops

Joan Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what the cost is of farm-scale trials of GM herbicide tolerant crops; what is the contribution from public funds; and what is the Government's policy with respect to funding such trials. [116689]

Mr. Meacher: The Farm-Scale Evaluations of genetically modified herbicide tolerant crops are being organised by the Government, in conjunction with the industry body SCIMAC. SCIMAC are providing the required number of fields of GM crops and equivalent non-GM crops (the crops involved are forage maize, beet, spring and autumn sown oil seed rape). The Government are funding an independent research consortium to carry out ecological studies. The cost of the ecological studies is currently £4.4 million over the period March 1999 to December 2003.

It is usually the responsibility of the organisation applying for consent to place GM crops on the market to provide evidence of environmental impact. This is likely to include the results of studies carried out to support that evidence. In the case of the GM herbicide tolerant crops involved in the Farm-Scale Evaluations programme, the Government and industry agreed that additional research on the environmental impact of growing and managing the crops was required before general cultivation could be contemplated. It was agreed that these studies would be jointly funded as described above. It is anticipated that, in future, applicants will include such evidence in their dossiers when making applications.

The Advisory Committee on Releases to the Environment sub-group on Wider Biodiversity Issues, announced in February 1999, is working on guidance and criteria for carrying out such assessments in the future.

Number Plates

Mr. Watts: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what proposals he has for new regulations relating to number plates. [117295]

Mr. Hill: The Department has recently concluded public consultation on proposals for new regulations relating to the display of vehicle number plates. Details of the Department's response in the light of the comments made will be placed in the Library of the House tomorrow.

Two Metre Rule

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what assessment his Department has made of the environmental impact on (a) historic hedges and (b) wildlife of the implementation of the two metre rule for subsidies. [115542]

Ms Quin: I have been asked to reply.

This Department has held discussions with all the principal farming organisations and statutory environmental bodies on the issues mentioned by the hon. Member as well as with the European Commission.

Last week my right hon. Friend the Minister reached agreement with the EU Agriculture Commissioner, Franz Fischler, that the United Kingdom should, for this year, apply the same criteria as were used in 1999 and earlier years for determining the acceptability of hedges and other field margins included in claims based on whole Ordnance Survey field areas under the Integrated Administration and Control System. For 2001 and subsequent years, MAFF will work with the Commission in order to clarify what types of margins are acceptable for inclusion in aid claims and identify ways of safeguarding environmentally valuable hedges so that we can reach a permanent resolution of this issue.

Methyl Tertiary Butyl Ether

Ms Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions how many tonnes of methyl tertiary butyl ether were imported into the United Kingdom in each of the last five years. [116246]

Mrs. Liddell: I have been asked to reply.

Methyl Tertiary Butyl Ether (MTBE) is not separately identified within the system for classifying products imported into the UK used by HM Customs and Excise. As such it is not possible to provide the information requested. However, we estimate that the average MTBE content in petrol in the UK is less than one per cent.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Killyleagh Sewage Works

Mr. John D. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what is the estimated cost of his plans to pump foul sewage from Crossgar to Killyleagh; what percentage of the capacity of Killyleagh Sewage Works is available; what percentage of Killyleagh Sewage Works would still be available if the sewage were pumped from Crossgar into Killyleagh Sewage Works; what representations he has received concerning the plans to pump sewage from Crossgar to Killyleagh; what consultation there has been with the residents and elected representatives of Killyleagh; and if he will make a statement. [116088]

Mr. Ingram: Responsibility for this matter has been delegated to the Water Service under its Chief Executive, Mr. Robert C. Martin. I have asked him to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Robert C. Martin to Mr. John D. Taylor, dated 28 March 2000:

You recently asked the Secretary of State a Parliamentary Question about Killyleagh Sewage Works. I have been asked to respond as Chief Executive of Water Service with operational responsibility for the provision of water and sewerage services.

An appraisal of the options for improving wastewater treatment facilities at Crossgar concluded that the most cost-effective option was to pump wastewater from Crossgar to Killyleagh for treatment. The estimated cost of this is almost £1.6 million. The scheme will also help to improve the water quality in the River Quoile system.

In undertaking the appraisal study, account was taken of projected residential and industrial expansion to the year 2021 on the basis of figures provided by the Department of the Environment's Planning Service. These figures allow for an additional 350 houses at Crossgar and 335 houses at Killyleagh. Following the closure of local industry, the wastewater treatment works in Killyleagh is currently operating at approximately 32% of its design capacity. After the transfer of the wastewater from Crossgar, and taking into account the projected increases up to 2021, the Killyleagh works will operate at approximately 71% of its design capacity leaving considerable surplus capacity for additional residential and industrial expansion.

No significant development work is required at the Killyleagh Works. Indeed, the key changes envisaged are mainly of an operational nature. In these circumstances the residents of the Killyleagh area were not directly consulted about the project. However, Down District Council was consulted and we received a small number of written representations, about various aspects of the project, from public representatives including the constituency Member of Parliament, Mr. E. McGrady. Our proposals were fully explained to these public representatives.

Childhood Funds

Mr. John D. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if an application for a nursery unit at Kircubbin Integrated Primary School would be eligible for financial support from the childhood funds; and if he will make a statement. [116087]

Mr. George Howarth: No. The deadline for commitment of funds under the EU Special Support Programme for Peace and Reconciliation was 31 December 1999, and no new project could be approved at this stage.

Mr. John D. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland at which locations nursery units have been provided with financial support from the childhood funds; how many of these units are associated with the Council of Catholic Maintained Schools; how many children of (a) Catholics and (b) Protestant background attend each of the units associated with the CCMS; and if he will make a statement on the impact of the EU package for peace and reconciliation on provision of cross-community nursery units. [116086]

Mr. George Howarth: Capital funds under the EU Childhood Fund were distributed on the basis of applications received and considered in the first place by the relevant Area Early Years Committee (AEYC), which made recommendations to the Department of Education. The Department considered and approved applications on the basis of whether the proposed provision: was sited where it would have maximum educational impact, in targeting area of greatest social/educational need; would create access for as many children as possible; and represented good value for money, taking account of viability considerations in particular.

The deadline for commitment of funds under the EU Special Support Programme for Peace and Reconciliation was 31 December 1999.

Nursery units have been provided or offered funding at the following locations under each tranche of the EU Childhood Fund:

Tranche 1

Ashlea Primary School, Londonderry
Barrack Street Boys' Primary School, Strabane
Bushmills Primary School
College Farm Nursery School, Armagh
Enniskillen Nursery School
Glendermott Primary School, Londonderry
Harpur's Hill Primary School, Coleraine
Kilcooley Primary School, Bangor
Old Warren Primary School, Lisburn
St. James' Primary School, Whiteabbey
St. John's Primary School, Carnlough
St. Joseph's Primary School, Newry
St. Patrick's Primary School, Castlederg
St. Patrick's Primary School, Crossmaglen
St. Patrick's Primary School, Cullyhanna
St. Patrick's Primary School, Dungannon (one unit in the school, one unit in Ballysaggart estate)
St. Patrick's Primary School, Newry
St. Ronan's Primary School, Lisnaskea
West Winds Primary School, Newtownards

Tranche 2

Holy Family Primary School, Magherafelt
Kircubbin Community Nursery
Limavady Nursery School
Magherafelt Nursery School
Newcastle Primary School
North Lurgan Nursery School
Portavogie Primary School
St. Patrick's Primary School, Loughguile
St. Peter's Primary School, Ardboe

Tranche 3

Annalong Primary School
Ballyward/Drumadonnell
Clonoe Nursery School
Cookstown Nursery School (additional room)
Edwards Primary School, Castlederg
Killowen Primary School, Lisburn
Longtower Primary School, Londonderry
McKinney Primary School, Dundrod
St. Laurence's Primary School, Fintona
St. Patrick's Primary School, Rasharkin.

Twenty-one of the projects are associated with the Council for Catholic Maintained Schools.

In October 1999, the religious backgrounds of children attending each of the Tranche 1 nursery units associated with CCMS were as follows:

School name	Roman Catholic	Protestant	Other	Total
Barrack Street Boys' Primary School, Strabane	52	0	0	52
College Farm Nursery School, Armagh	51	1	0	52
Glendermott Primary School	25	0	1	26
St. James' Primary School, Whiteabbey	25	46	2	73
St. John's Primary School, Carnlough	31	1	0	32
St. Joseph's Convent Primary School, Newry	78	0	0	78
St. Patrick's Primary School, Castlederg	51	0	0	51
St. Patrick's Primary School, Crossmaglen	52	0	0	52
St. Patrick's Primary School, Cullyhanna	26	0	0	26
St. Patrick's School, Dungannon	72	0	1	73
St. Patrick's Primary School, Newry	73	0	0	73
St. Ronan's Primary School, Lisnaskea	50	0	0	50

The nine projects under Tranches 2 and 3 which are associated with CCMS have not yet opened.

The EU Special Support Programme for Peace and Reconciliation has facilitated the provision of several new cross-community nursery units and has provided a very welcome 14 per cent. increase in the availability of pre-school education across Northern Ireland generally. Many nursery units of all management types have an established pattern of cross-community attendance, and all funded pre-school education provision is and will continue to be open to children from all sections of the community.

Early-day Motions

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will place a copy of his letter concerning an early-day motion tabled by the hon. Member for North-East Derbyshire (Mr. Barnes) and others in the Library; and on how many occasions since May 1997 he or his predecessor has entered into correspondence about an EDM. [100175]

Mr. Ingram: A copy of my letter of 9 March 2000 to my hon. Friend the Member for North-East Derbyshire (Mr. Barnes) has been placed in the Library. It is not appropriate to comment on correspondence between Ministers and hon. Friends.

HEALTH

Hospital Waiting Times

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health in which health authority (a) more than 10 per cent. and (b) less than one per cent. of patients have been waiting for in-patient treatment for more than one year. [116068]

Mr. Denham: The information is given in the table.

Waiting list at 31 January 2000

Health authority	Percentage waiting 12 months or more
North Essex	10.90
Gloucestershire	0.90
Bradford	0.90
Solihull	0.80
Doncaster	0.40
Sunderland	0.10
Dorset	0.04

NHS Volunteers

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what action he has taken to implement the NHS Executive Working Party report entitled, "Making a Difference: Strengthening Volunteering in the NHS". [116443]

Mr. Denham: The National Health Service Executive has taken, and continues to take, action on the recom-mendations of the "Making a Difference: Strengthening Volunteering in the NHS" report. A response to the recommendations aimed specifically at the NHS Executive is summarised in Health Service Circular 1999–023, copies of which are available in the Library.

NHS Scientific Staff

Mr. Edwards: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what plans he has to review pay and grading of scientific staff in the NHS. [116441]

Mr. Denham: On 15 February 1999, the Department published proposals for modernising the National Health Service pay system in "Agenda for Change". Initial discussions with NHS trade unions on pay modernisation resulted in a Joint Framework of Principles and Agreed Statement on the Way Forward which was published on 8 October 1999. Negotiations continue, aiming for a pay system which pays fairly for work done, with career progression based on responsibility, competence and satisfactory performance.

The National Advisory Group for Scientists and Technicians is collaborating with the professions to develop a human resource strategy that will underpin the career development of scientists in the NHS.

Public Bodies

Mr. Quinn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many board members he appoints to each non-departmental public body. [116337]

Mr. Denham: Full lists of the non-departmental public bodies to which my right hon. Friend makes appointments are published in "Public Bodies 1999" (ISBN 0 11 430159 X) and in the "Department of Health Public Appointments Annual Report 1999", copies of which are available in the Library.

Severalls Hospital, Colchester

Mr. Bob Russell: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement on the sale of Severalls Hospital, Colchester. [116469]

Mr. Denham: Severalls Hospital land adjoins part of a larger developable site owned by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State, Colchester Borough Council, Essex Rivers Healthcare National Health Service Trust and North East Essex Mental Health National Health Service Trust.

In partnership with the trusts, the National Health Service Executive and National Health Service Estates are working to review the disposal strategy to maximise the income from the land sale to help meet the current and future healthcare need.

Food Standards Agency

Mr. Ian Stewart: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what arrangements he has made concerning the establishment of the Food Standards Agency; and if he will make a statement. [117044]

Ms Stuart: The provisions establishing the Food Standards Agency under the Food Standards Act 1999 are due to come into force on 1 April. The Food Standards Agency will act as a non-ministerial Department, which will be accountable to Parliament through Health Ministers. As of 1 April, I will have day-to-day responsibility for parliamentary business relating to food safety and standards matters, including questions from Members. I will also be responsible for dealing with relevant correspondence from Members of this House. Details of the Food Standards Agency's role and organisation will be placed in the Library.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Arson

Siobhain McDonagh: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he will respond to the report of the Scoping Study in relation to arson prevention in England and Wales. [117116]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: I am pleased to announce today that the Government have accepted all of the main recommendations of the Scoping Study.

We have pledged quite clearly our determination and commitment to providing safer communities. The police and fire services have a vital role to play in helping to maintain a safer society, not just by reducing crime and the fear of crime, but also by reducing the number of deliberate fires and associated deaths and casualties.

The report of the Arson Scoping Study was published last May and set out a series of recommendations aimed at addressing the growing problem of deliberate fires. The report was welcomed as an enormous opportunity for the Government and the police and fire services to reduce the pain and suffering caused by deliberately set fires.

When the report was published we made it clear that we wanted to hear the views of chief officers, local authorities, the insurers and all those involved in the administration of justice, all of whom have a crucial role to play in translating the recommendations into action. I am pleased to say that the response to the Scoping Study has provided a strong mandate to carry forward all of its key recommendations and for a refocusing of efforts to prevent arson.

I am writing to those same organisations today to explain how we intend to take the recommendations forward. In particular, I want to see the efforts of Government, police and fire authorities, the insurers and other local agencies integrated and co-ordinated as the Scoping Study recommended so that the whole effort achieves more than the sum of its parts. We shall be taking steps to put these arrangements in place shortly. I also accept, with the strong endorsement of the police and fire services and the insurers, the recommendation to create a new Government-led Arson Control Forum to take forward the arson prevention strategy.

Arson prevention must become a core activity of the police and fire services and we must work in partnership with other agencies and with business to eliminate deliberately set fires. The success of this approach will mean a safer society for us all.

Juvenile Offenders

Mr. Gareth Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what priorities will be set for placing juvenile offenders when the Detention and Training Order comes into operation. [117117]

Mr. Straw: The Detention and Training Order (DTO) will come into force on 1 April 2000. It will become the main custodial sentence for juvenile offenders aged 12 and under 18, replacing detention in a young offender institution for under-18s and the secure training order. Detention under section 53 of the Children and Young Persons Act 1933 will remain available for the minority of young offenders aged 10 and under 18 who commit grave crimes.

Subject to parliamentary agreement to an Order laid on 27 March, for under-18s sentenced to custody under the DTO or section 53, and those remanded to Prison Service custody or direct to local authority secure accommodation, new, more co-ordinated arrangements for the juvenile secure estate will start operation in April. The Youth Justice Board for England and Wales will commission and purchase places from the Prison Service, the Secure Training Centre (STC) contractors and Local Authority Secure Units (LASUs). This will give it considerable influence over the management of custodial placements for under-18s, and enable more appropriate and cost-effective use of facilities. The Board has drawn up commissioning and placement strategies to support its proposed new role and a copy of these has been placed in the Library.

Initially, there will be 13 Prison Service establishments holding under-18s, three STCs and 200 to 300 places the Youth Justice Board expects to purchase from LASUs, through current negotiations (LASUs have 480 places in total, but have to keep enough free for local authority placements for welfare purposes or for those placed in secure accommodation following a remand to ordinary local authority care). So altogether, there will initially be some 3,200 places for youth justice purposes.

Of these places, 2,800 will be provided by the Prison Service. There is £51 million being invested in a substantial capital development programme throughout the juvenile estate, plus improvements in education, training and work designed to prevent re-offending and drawing on "what works" evidence-based research. This will, over time, make its establishments better equipped to deliver the acceptable and positive environment required to meet the needs of those held within them. However, the Government and the Youth Justice Board believe that further steps should none the less be taken to protect the most vulnerable under-18s. Within its total budget for secure placements in 2000–01, the Board will push this process as far as it can during the coming year, particularly in respect of the 100 girls under 18 serving custodial sentences.

Beyond this, what the Youth Justice Board can do to move them elsewhere, and how quickly, depends on the numbers remanded and sentenced to custody by the courts and the physical and financial resources available to cater for them. If the numbers decline, the new powers will provide further opportunities to place more of these vulnerable young people in LASUs and STCs. In all placement decisions, the focus will be on matching the needs of individual young people to the available accommodation, based on the evidence of "what works", not least in reducing crime. The Board will monitor establishments' performance—within the Prison Service, LASUs and STCs—against service specifications to ensure regimes are of an appropriate standard and that the well-being of the young people is being properly addressed.

As to future years, we have previously announced plans for two more STCs providing approximately 80 places. The Youth Justice Board will take over development work on these in April. We will be considering in this year's Spending Review what further provision should be made for new establishments to be commissioned by the Board.

With the improvements to the quality of the Prison Service juvenile estate, the greater flexibility available to place DTO trainees and the consolidation of commissioning and purchasing responsibilities with the Youth Justice Board, the new arrangements represent a significant opportunity to drive up standards and place young people according to their relative needs in terms of welfare and action to prevent re-offending. I am confident that the Youth Justice Board, working with the various providers, will fully seize this opportunity.

Home Detention Curfew Scheme

Miss Widdecombe: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department, pursuant to his answer of 22 March 2000, Official Report, column 561W, on the Home Detention Curfew Scheme, if he will provide a breakdown by offence committed of the number of prisoners released listed under (a) other homicide and attempted homicide, (b) wounding, (c) assaults, (d) drugs, (e) other violence against the person and (f) other motoring offences. [116692]

Mr. Boateng: A breakdown of the first five categories of original offences in question committed by prisoners released up to 14 March 2000 under the Home Detention Curfew scheme, and the number convicted of each type of offence, are given in the table. A breakdown of the 1,530 offences listed as "other motoring offences" is not available centrally.

Offence	Number
Other homicide/attempted
Attempted murder	5
Making threats to kill	29
Conspire, aid, incite murder	1
Death by reckless driving	115
Total	150
Wounding
Wounding (inflicting GBH)	1,392
Assault occasioning ABH	819
Assault with intent to cause GBH	48
Total	2,258
Assaults
Assault with intent to resist arrest	8
Other assault	335
Obstruct/resist constable	7
Assault on police officer	91
Total	441
Drugs
Production	103
Supply	969
Possession with intent	1,238
Possession	396
Unlawful import/export	190
Other drugs	35
Total	2,931
Other violence against the person
Cause explosion, place explosive	2
Possess firearms with intent	133
Possess offensive weapon	83
Other violence against person	17
Total	235

Corporate Manslaughter

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will include in his proposals to combat crime further provisions relating to corporate manslaughter; and if he will make a statement. [116503]

Mr. Charles Clarke: The Government set up an inter-departmental working group of officials to consider the recommendations made by the Law Commission in their report number 237 "Legislating the Criminal Code: Involuntary Manslaughter". One of those recommendations was that there should be a new offence of corporate killing.

The conclusions of the inter-departmental working group were passed to Ministers in late December and we are continuing to consider how to take the matter forward. We expect to publish our conclusions for consultation shortly.

Correspondence

Mr. Brady: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he intends to reply to the letter dated 22 February from the hon. Member for Altrincham and Sale, West, regarding Samuel Adams. [115860]

Mr. Straw: I wrote to the hon. Member on 27 March.

Domestic Violence

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what training is given to police officers on dealing with domestic violence; and if he will make a statement. [115915]

Mr. Charles Clarke: National Police Training (NPT) deliver training on domestic disputes and domestic violence during the Probationer Training Programme undergone by all recruits to the police service. This training is designed to make students aware of the legal framework within which they will operate, the role of the police service and other agencies, and the powers open to them.

The National Operations Faculty, part of NPT, offers a three-day course at Bramshill called "Quality of Service to Women Victims of Domestic Violence". The course is open to senior police officers of the rank of Inspector and above and covers a range of issues including:

the criminal victimisation of women;

applying quality of service to the care of women victims;

strategies to develop an appropriate response to domestic violence;

current patterns of victimisation;

role and status of women as victims;

current legal remedies; and domestic violence and crime audits.

NPT has just completed a Training Needs Analysis to establish whether additional training is needed in this area of policing. The results are expected shortly and will be taken forward by the National Operations Faculty and NPT as quickly as possible.

Prisons (Reference Books)

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what requirement his Department imposes concerning the availability of updated legal reference books to prison inmates in England and Wales; and if he will make a statement. [116333]

Mr. Boateng: All prison establishments in England and Wales are required to make legal reference books available to prisoners. Prison Service Headquarters issue a mandatory list of publications to be held, which is currently being updated.

Demonstrations

Mr. Meale: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what his policy is on restrictions connected with demonstrations with placards within a one mile radius of the House of Commons. [116275]

Mr. Charles Clarke: There are no general restrictions connected with demonstrations with placards within a one mile radius of the House of Commons. Section 52 of the Metropolitan Police Act 1839 may be enforced when demonstrations may result in obstruction or disorder which may impede the free passage of Peers and Members to and from the Houses of Parliament on any day on which Parliament is sitting. Additional bye-laws apply within the Royal Parks and the Mall.

Remand Prisoners

Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what privileges are granted to (a) convicted and (b) unconvicted remand prisoners; and if he will make it his policy that all remand prisoners should be treated for this purpose as unsentenced prisoners. [116286]

Mr. Boateng: Under the national policy framework for incentives and earned privileges, Prison Service establishments in England and Wales operate local schemes which allow all prisoners to earn a range of privileges through good behaviour and performance. They include enhanced access to private cash, visits, pay, in-cell television, association, and the right of prisoners to wear their own clothes.

All unconvicted prisoners have certain minimum entitlements in view of their status. For example, they are permitted to have extra visits, letters and reading materials, to conduct business activities and to wear their own clothes. Incentive and privilege schemes for these prisoners must respect these minimum entitlements and provide further enhancements for good behaviour. We have no plans to extend unconvicted prisoners' privileges to convicted, but unsentenced, prisoners.

Crimestoppers

Mr. Bob Russell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what action he intends taking to increase public confidence in, and awareness of, the Crimestoppers system of reporting suspected criminals; and if he will make a statement. [116465]

Mr. Charles Clarke: The Government fully recognise the valuable work that Crimestoppers does to help in the fight against crime. Ministers attend Crimestoppers Trust events to support its work as other commitments allow. At the recent London Board of Crimestoppers annual dinner, my right hon. Friend the Home Secretary expressed his belief that all Crime and Disorder Reduction Partnerships should be aware of the potential benefits of involving Crimestoppers in their work when drawing up strategies. I intend to host a small seminar to discuss the possibilities of voluntary sector organisations such as Crimestoppers and Neighbourhood Watch working more closely together at local level to identify ways of increasing a more co-operative approach.

Mr. Bob Russell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many people have been arrested in each of the last five years as a result of information supplied to Crimestoppers; and if he will break down the categories of offence in respect of the most recent year for which figures are available. [116466]

Mr. Charles Clarke: According to information supplied by Crimestoppers Trust, the number of people arrested and charged for each of the last five years as a result of information supplied to Crimestoppers was as follows:

Year	Arrested and charged
1995	3,355
1996	4,347
1997	4,726
1998	5,169
1999	5,300

These figures can be broken down into the following categories for 1999:

Crime	Total arrested and charged
Murder	38
Attempted murder	22
Rape	13
Robbery	202
Assault	181
Burglary	338
Firearms	28
Handling stolen goods	209
Drugs	2,308
Arson	34
Theft	410
Vehicle crime	667
Sexual assault	18
Fraud	141
Other crimes	691
Total	5,300

The total number of people arrested and charged as a result of information supplied to Crimestoppers for the period 1 January 2000 to 29 February 2000 is given as 842.

Mr. Bob Russell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department on how many occasions he has met representatives of Crimestoppers. [116467]

Mr. Charles Clarke: Most recently, my right hon. Friend the Home Secretary attended the London Board of Crimestoppers' annual dinner on 14 March and attended a lunch to promote Crimestoppers to the Asian Community in October 1998. In addition, Ministerial colleagues attended the Crimestoppers' Tenth Anniversary Ball in December 1998 and intend to visit the Crimestoppers Trust Head Offices in Putney in the next few months.

Mr. Bob Russell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how much money was allocated by the Government to fund Crimestoppers in each of the last five financial years for which figures are available. [116468]

Mr. Charles Clarke: No funding has been allocated by the Government to Crimestoppers in the last five financial years.

Royal Prerogative

Mr. Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list the occasions in the last three months when powers under the Royal Prerogative were exercised on the advice of ministers. [113281]

Mr. Mike O'Brien [holding answer 7 March 2000]: I regret that this information is not held centrally.

Asylum Seekers

Miss Widdecombe: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department, pursuant to his answer to my hon. Friend the Member for Aylesbury (Mr. Lidington) of 23 March 2000, Official Report, column 672W, on asylum seekers, (a) for what reasons local authorities (i) claimed more than their gross expenditure and (ii) did not claim the full amount of their gross expenditure and (b) what estimate he has made of the cost to each local authority in the (1) 1999–2000 and (2) 2000–2001 financial years of providing support to asylum seekers which they are unable to claim from the Home Office under the grant rules and which has been or will be met from their own funds; and if he will make a statement. [116691]

Mrs. Roche [pursuant to her reply, 23 March 2000, c. 672W]: The gross expenditure figure for East Sussex should read £279,979.

Data are available for the 1999–2000 financial year only in relation to the period 1 April 1999 to 5 December 1999. The data for 6 December 1999 to 31 March 2000 are not yet available in full, as not all claims have been received from local authorities. For the period 1 April 1999 to 5 December 1999, those local authorities who received more than their gross expenditure (as defined in the grant report rules) did so as a result of allowable commissioning costs. The grant rules covering this period entitle local authorities to claim the costs involved in commissioning premises to be used to accommodate asylum seekers. At the discretion of the Secretary of State, payment of up to £10 per week for each person supported in such premises was available. The provision was taken up only by a small number of authorities. In some cases, local authorities could not be reimbursed the full amount of their identified gross expenditure for a number of reasons—for example, because they incurred expenditure on items which were not covered by the grant rules or had exceeded the unit costs limits set by the grant report. No estimate has been made for the whole of 1999–2000 and 2000–01 of the cost to each local authority of providing support to asylum seekers for which they are unable to claim from the Home Office under the grant rules.

Miss Widdecombe: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department for what reason, in his Department's monthly asylum statistics published on 24 March, the number of asylum applicants (a) granted asylum or exceptional leave to remain and (b) refused, was listed as not available; on what data the figure for decisions in total was based, and for what reasons this could not be broken down by category; if monthly asylum statistics have been published previously without such a breakdown; and if he will make a statement. [116693]

Mrs. Roche: The figure for total asylum decisions in February was obtained from a manual count by caseworkers and is consistent with figures provided in previous months. A breakdown of decisions, by type, was not available in February due to the transition to a new computer system, the Asylum Cases Information Database (ACID). Although information on asylum decisions is satisfactorily recorded on this system for operational purposes, further quality checks are being carried out to ensure accurate statistical information is published.

It is expected that a full breakdown of the decisions will be published in due course. A preliminary analysis has shown that the breakdown of decisions, for cases considered under normal procedures, in February was consistent with that seen in recent months with a high proportion of refusals of asylum. Monthly asylum statistics have not been published previously without such a breakdown.

Criminal Justice and Court Services Bill

Miss Widdecombe: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department, pursuant to his answer of

22 March 2000, Official Report, column 559W, on release of prisoners, if he will provide a breakdown by type of offence of the additional prisoners he estimates would be released earlier than now as a result of the electronic monitoring provisions of the Criminal Justice and Court Services Bill. [116690]

Mr. Boateng: It is not possible to give such a breakdown at this stage. The new powers will be carefully tested in pilot schemes before they are made available, and it would be premature to judge the possible outcomes of those pilots. However, there is no question of electronic monitoring being used to facilitate the early release of sex offenders or other high risk offenders. The availability of electronic monitoring for such offenders will not influence the Parole Board when making decisions or recommendations on release. The Secretary of State will be issuing Directions to the Parole Board to make this clear, using the powers available to him under section 32(6) of the Criminal Justice Act 1991.

The measures in the Criminal Justice and Courts Services Bill will not change any prisoner's eligibility for release, and any discretionary release decision will continue to be subject to careful risk assessment. These proposals should provide additional protection for the public. High risk offenders—when eventually released at the end of their term in custody—could be made subject to electronic monitoring as a means of reinforcing curfew or exclusion conditions in their licences.

TREASURY

Tax Credits

Dr. Godman: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer (1) what was the (a) average working families tax credit and (b) average child care tax credit payment per week for persons in (i) Inverclyde and (ii) Scotland in the past year; [115950]

(2) what was the annual expenditure by Her Majesty's Government on (a) the working families tax credit and (b) the child care tax credit in (i) Inverclyde and (ii) Scotland in the past two years; [115951]

(3) if he will estimate the number of families with children in (a) Inverclyde and (b) Scotland who are eligible for the working families tax credit; [115952]

(4) how many persons in (a) Inverclyde and (b) Scotland are in receipt of (i) working families tax credit and (ii) the child care tax credit. [115953]

Dawn Primarolo: It is estimated that 83,900 families in Scotland had been awarded the working families tax credit (WFTC) by the end of February 2000, of which 1,700 were in Inverclyde.

About 8,900 of the awards in Scotland included a child care tax credit. There are too few cases in the 5 per cent. sample used for these analyses to provide a reliable estimate of the number of these in Inverclyde.

The average value of WFTC awards made by the end of February 2000 in Scotland is estimated at £69.91 per week. For families with eligible child care costs, the average extra amount of WFTC arising from the child care tax credit is estimated at £28.63 per week. It is not possible to provide reliable corresponding estimates for Inverclyde.

WFTC was introduced on 5 October 1999. It is estimated that expenditure in 1999–2000 on awards in Scotland will be about £80 million. Recalculating the awards excluding the child care tax credit would reduce this by about £5 million. It is not possible to provide corresponding estimates for Inverclyde.

Ms Harman: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer (1) what was the average (a) working families tax credit and (b) child care tax credit payment per week for people in Southwark in the last 12 months; [114836]

(2) what was the annual expenditure by Government on (a) working families tax credit and (b) child care tax credit in Southwark in each of the last five years. [114837]

Dawn Primarolo: The working families tax credit (WFTC) was introduced in October 1999. It is not possible to provide reliable estimates of the average award, or expenditure, for Southwark. However, for the United Kingdom as a whole, the average value of WFTC awards made up to the end of February 2000 was £71.48 per week, and for London the average was £73.92 per week. For the United Kingdom as a whole, for those with eligible child care costs, the average extra amount of WFTC arising from the child care tax credit was £31.04 per week.

Ms Buck: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer (1) how many claims for working families tax credit have been received in each region; [110544]

(2) what has been the average gain to working families from the working families tax credit in each region. [110545]

Dawn Primarolo: The estimated number of awards of the working families tax credit made by the end of February 2000 by region are given in the table. Estimates of the average weekly gain for families in receipt of WFTC compared with Family Credit in a full year were given to my hon. Friend on 14 July 1999, Official Report, column 245W. Full year figures made on actual awards are not yet available.

Government office region	Number of WFTC awards made to end February 2000
United Kingdom	879,400
England	712,300
North East	52,300
North West	127,700
Yorkshire and the Humber	96,900
East Midlands	70,100
West Midlands	89,900
East of England	59,200
London	64,900
South East	80,100
South West	71,100
Wales	52,400
Scotland	83,900
Northern Ireland	30,700

Ms Kelly: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer (1) what estimate he has made of the impact of the working families tax credit on the income of a couple, both earning the minimum wage, and with two children under 11 years, where one parent works full-time and the other (a) full-time and (b) 16 hours per week; [106100]

(2) what assessment he has made of the impact of the working families tax credit on the income of a couple, both earning the minimum wage, with two children under 11 years, where one parent works full-time and the other works (a) full-time and (b) 16 hours per week if the income were divided equally and the credit calculated on each half; [106101]

(3) what estimate he has made of the impact of the working families tax credit on the income of a single parent, with two children under the age of 11 years, earning the minimum wage and working (a) full-time and (b) 16 hours per week. [106099]

Dawn Primarolo: The amounts of working families tax credit for 1999–2000 payable to those earning the minimum wage and with two children under 11 are given in the table.

Amount of working families tax credit

	£ per week
Couple:
both working full-time	25.13
one working full-time, one working 16 hours per week	56.12
Lone Parent:
working full-time	87.80
working 16 hours per week	92.00

Figures on gross earnings, and earnings after income tax and national insurance contributions were as follows:

£ per week

	Couple, both working full-time	Couple, one working full-time, one working 16 hours per week	Lone parent working full-time	Lone parent working 16 hours per week
Gross earnings	252.00	183.60	126.00	57.60
Earnings net of income tax and national insurance contributions	231.67	175.33	117.73	57.60
Amount of working families tax credit	25.13	56.12	87.80	92.00

The estimated expenditure on the working families tax credit for 2000–01, the first full year of the credit, is £4.7 billion. If each partner in a couple received the full amount of credits, and each had an award based on half the couple's earnings, then the expenditure would increase to over three times this figure. Lone parents would be unaffected.

Heavily-indebted Poor Countries

Dr. Tonge: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what plans he has to review the HIPC II process at the G8 Summit in Okinawa. [116545]

Miss Melanie Johnson: The Chancellor of the Exchequer discusses progress on the HIPC initiative with G7 colleagues on a regular basis, and will do so at the G7 meeting of Finance Ministers and Central Bank Governors on 15 April, and in the run-up to the Okinawa Summit.

Heads of Government will, at the G8 Summit in Okinawa, discuss progress on implementing the enhanced HIPC initiative agreed at last year's Cologne Summit.

Dr. Tonge: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what recent discussions he has had with the World bank and IMF concerning the heavily-indebted poor countries due to qualify for debt cancellation by the end of 2000. [116546]

Miss Melanie Johnson: The Chancellor and Secretary of State for International Development wrote to the Managing Director of the IMF and the Chairman of the World bank in January. In addition, the Chancellor will be holding discussions with the World bank and IMF during the course of the Spring Meetings next month, in his capacity as chairman of International Monetary and Finance Committee. The Secretary of State for International Development, as a member of the Development Committee, will also be discussing the issue of HIPC and progress on Poverty Reduction Strategies.

National Insurance Contributions Office

Mr. Lidington: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what target he has set the National Insurance Contributions Office for the prompt payment to the contracted-out money purchase pension schemes of the age-related element of NIC rebates; what proportion of payments met that target in (a) 1997–98, (b) 1998–99 and (c) 1999–2000 to date; and if he will make a statement. [115983]

Dawn Primarolo [holding answer 23 March 2000]: There is no target for the payment of age related rebates to contracted-out money purchase schemes. Rebate payments depend on the successful processing of employers' end of year returns.

The targets set for processing of employers' End of Year Returns are as follows:

Percentage

Tax year/description	Target set	Achieved
1997–98
National Insurance contributions properly recorded for 80 per cent. of appropriate notifications from employers in respect of Class 1 contributions by 31 December 1998	80	62.2
National Insurance contributions properly recorded for 98 per cent. by 31 March 1999	98	85.9

Tax year/description	Target set	Percentage Achieved
1998–99
National Insurance contributions properly recorded for 80 per cent. of appropriate notifications from employers in respect of Class 1 contributions by 31 December 1999 and 93 per cent. by 31 March 2000	93	[1]98.53

[1] To date

Disincorporation

Mr. Burnett: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what steps he plans to take to reduce the tax burden of disincorporation; and if he will make a statement. [115240]

Dawn Primarolo [holding answer 17 March 2000]: The Government have no plans to change the tax rules applying to disincorporation. Given the likely complexity, and length, of legislation needed to change the tax law affecting disincorporation there would need to be a strong case for making a change. Officials have consulted with representative bodies and other interested parties, but no strong case for change has so far emerged.

Income Tax

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will estimate the reduction in tax paid per year in cash terms, and as a percentage of total gross annual income, for each income decile group, resulting from a 1p reduction in the basic rate of income tax. [114179]

Dawn Primarolo [holding answer 14 March 2000]: This Government have introduced a range of measures designed to make work pay and to increase support for families with children, including the 10p starting rate of tax, the national minimum wage and the working families tax credit. The cut in the basic rate is another of those measures.

For taxpayers in 2000–01, the estimates for the reduction in tax paid and reduction as a percentage of total gross annual income for each income decile group resulting from a 1p reduction in the basic rate of income tax are given in the table.

Decile	Reduction in tax paid from 1p cut in basic rate in 2000–01 (£ million)	Reduction as a percentage of total gross income
Lowest	[1]—	[1]—
2nd	25	0.12
3rd	70	0.27
4th	125	0.39
5th	180	0.49
6th	250	0.56
7th	330	0.62
8th	420	0.66
9th	580	0.71
Highest	720	0.41

[1] Negligible

Note:

The estimates exclude an offsetting effect from the working families tax credit because this is allocated at family level and not at individual level.

The estimates are based on the 1997–98 Survey of Personal Incomes and are consistent with the November 1999 pre-Budget Report.

Mrs. Anne Campbell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how much revenue would have been raised by one penny on the basic rate of income tax in (i) May 1997, (ii) May 1998 and (iii) May 1999; and if he will estimate the amount for May 2000. [112746]

Dawn Primarolo: In the March 1999 Budget material the tax ready reckoner was published on a pre-Budget regime basis. This showed a figure for changing the basic rate by 1p in 1999–2000 of £1.85 billion compared with the estimate based on the current regime of £2.5 billion.

In the 1997 edition of Inland Revenue Statistics a figure of £1.8 billion was published for the full-year effect of a change in the basic rate of 1p in 1998–99.

In the 1996 edition of Inland Revenue Statistics a receipts figure of £1.3 billion was published for the in-year effect for changing the basic rate by 1p in 1997–98. We would expect this to be much lower than the current full-year figure of £1.65 billion, because only around 88 per cent. of the full year would be received in year.

Tax Benefit Reference Manual

Mr. Willetts: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will place in the Library the latest edition of the Tax Benefit Reference Manual. [113578]

Dawn Primarolo: [holding answer 8 March 2000]: The latest edition of the Tax Benefit Reference Manual, for 1999–2000, was placed in the Library in July 1999.

Single Parents

Mr. Cox: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many (a) men and (b) women are single parents in the UK. [115917]

Miss Melanie Johnson: The information requested falls within the responsibility of the Director of the Office for National Statistics. I have asked him to reply.

Letter from John Pullinger to Mr. Tom Cox, dated 20 March 2000:

The Director of the Office for National Statistics (ONS) has been asked to reply to your recent question about the number of single parents in the United Kingdom. I am replying in Dr Holt's Absence.

Latest estimates for the period September to November 1999 show that there were 166,000 male and 1,490,000 female single parents with dependent children. The estimates are drawn from the Labour Force Survey (LFS) household databases. Lone parents are defined in the LFS as those who are non-married, which includes single (never married), widowed, divorced, or separated, and not cohabiting.

PAYE

Mr. Ottaway: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what estimate he has made of the aggregate cost to the Inland Revenue of issuing notices of pay-as-you-earn coding prior to 6 April 2000 for the tax year 2000–01 for those aged 65 years and over which will have to be re-issued after 5 April 2000, in order to include an uplift in personal allowances as set out in section 257C TA1988. [115710]

Dawn Primarolo: There is no requirement to issue revised notices of PAYE codings solely to reflect any rise in the levels of personal income tax allowances announced in the Budget.

Mr. Ottaway: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will estimate the interest on the revenue collected early from pensioners by the Exchequer through the temporary over-deduction of income tax caused by the Inland Revenue issuing pay-as-you-earn codings prior to 6 April 2000 for the tax year 2000–01 for those aged 65 years and over without taking account of section 257C TA1988. [115707]

Dawn Primarolo: Notices of coding issued to pensioners take full account of the requirements of Sections 203 and 257C of the Income and Corporation Taxes Acts 1988.

Mr. Ottaway: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if, to prevent confusion, he will ensure that the only notice of pay-as-you-earn coding for the tax year 2000–01 pensioners receive before 6 April 2000 is based on the anticipated level of personal allowances for that year for those aged 65 years and over, increased as required by section 257C TA1988. [115708]

Dawn Primarolo: No. We believe that this would itself lead to confusion and, in some circumstances, could mean that people underpaid tax which had to be recovered.

Finance Bill

Mrs. Lawrence: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer when the Finance Bill will be published; and if he will make explanatory notes on the Bill's clauses available to hon. Members. [117043]

Dawn Primarolo: The Finance Bill will be published on Friday 7 April. Explanatory Notes on the Bill's clauses will be placed in the Vote Office and the Libraries of both Houses that day. Members of the public will be able to obtain copies of the Explanatory Notes from the Treasury; these will also be available on the Treasury's Internet site (http://www.hm-treasury.gov.uk).

Earnings (Greater London)

Mr. Cox: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is his estimate of the number of (a) men and (b) women living and working in the Greater London area who earn less than £4 per hour. [116321]

Miss Melanie Johnson: The information requested falls within the responsibility of the Director of the Office for National Statistics. I have asked him to reply.

Letter from John Pullinger to Mr. Tom Cox, dated 27 March 2000:

The Director of the Office for National Statistics (ONS) has been asked to reply to your recent question on workers living and working in London earning less than £4 per hour. I am replying in Dr Holt's absence.

The Labour Force Survey (LFS) is the ONS's major source of labour market data on individuals. It can provide information on the earnings of employees both by their region of workplace and their region of residence. In autumn (September to November) 1999 the number of male employees living and working in London earning less than £4.00 per hour was 102,000. The corresponding figure for female employees was 120,000.

The LFS is the most appropriate source of data to answer this question. It provides fuller coverage of people on low pay than the other major source of earnings data, the New Earning Survey (NES). In addition the NES can only supply earnings information for the region of workplace of employees.

Tax Relief (Pensions)

Mrs. Lait: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will break down the amount of tax relief for approved pension schemes by each category of scheme. [116322]

Miss Melanie Johnson: Available information on the breakdown of the costs of tax reliefs for approved pension schemes was published in table 7.7 of "Inland Revenue Statistics 1999", a copy of which is in the Library.

Software Provision

Mr. Luff: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what plans he has to provide software to (a) self-employed persons and (b) small and medium sized businesses, to enable them to calculate money owed to Her Majesty's Government as a result of taxes (i) due from them and (ii) collected by them from their employees; and if he will make a statement. [116362]

Dawn Primarolo: The Budget contained a number of substantial new measures to help small firms comply with their payroll obligations. They will be able to claim 100 per cent. Capital Allowances for investment in Information and Communications Technology equipment, and will be eligible for discounts for internet filing and the use of Internet payroll services. A £60 million package of measures will help them get on-line and use on-line services. And the Inland Revenue Payroll Software Standard will further encourage small employers to use software packages, Internet payroll services and payroll bureaux to calculate their payroll.

Banking Services

Mr. Wray: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what incentives the Government will propose to encourage wider use of banking services among benefit claimants. [116366]

Miss Melanie Johnson: The Government wish to encourage banks to develop basic bank accounts suitable for those who are financially excluded. From 2003 to 2005 the DSS will move progressively to the use of automated credit transfers to make benefit payments into bank or building society accounts. People who wish to continue to collect their cash at post offices will continue to be able to do so, before and after the change in 2003.

Mr. Wray: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many adults purchased no banking services (a) within the United Kingdom and (b) within Scotland in each of the last three years. [116367]

Miss Melanie Johnson: Various surveys indicate that the percentage of adults in the United Kingdom who have neither a current account nor a savings account is in the range 2.5 to 3.5 million. Figures supplied by the Association for Payment Clearing Services in respect of Great Britain and Scotland, for adults aged 18 and over without a bank, building society or National Savings account are as follows:

Thousand

	Great Britain	Scotland
1997	2,222	271
1998	2,331	286
1999	2,381	312

CULTURE, MEDIA AND SPORT

Arts Council

Mr. Peter Ainsworth: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport how many employees the Arts Council of England (a) has currently, (b) had on 1 May 1997 and (c) had on 1 May 1999. [116540]

Mr. Chris Smith [holding answer 28 March 2000]: The number of full-time equivalent employees of the Arts Council of England was: 240.52 in May 1997; 278.3 in May 1998; 212.7 in May 1999; and 204.5 in March 2000. The Arts Council's staff numbers rose between May 1997 and May 1998, largely because of the operation of the Lottery Arts4Everyone programme, a major lottery revenue programme run centrally by the Arts Council of England.

Arts Boards

Mr. Peter Ainsworth: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport if he will list the number of employees (a) currently, (b) in May 1997 and (c) in May 1999 of each of the regional arts boards. [116539]

Mr. Chris Smith [holding answer 28 March 2000]: I have asked the Arts Council of England, as the body responsible for the regional arts boards, to provide this information. When it is available, I will write to the hon. Member and place a copy in the Library of the House.

EDUCATION AND EMPLOYMENT

Quigley Committee

Mr. Michael J. Foster: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if he will make a statement on the report of the Quigley Committee. [117208]

Mr. Blunkett: I established a committee under the chairmanship of Sir George Quigley in December 1998, as required by section 25(4) of the Teaching and Higher Education Act 1998, to review fee support for students from England, Wales and Northern Ireland in the fourth year of first degree courses at Scottish institutions. The report is laid today before Parliament and placed in the National Assembly for Wales and the Scottish Parliament.

I welcome the report and congratulate Sir George and the other members of the committee on their thorough examination of all the relevant issues. The Government accept the recommendations addressed to it set out in the report. The Scottish Executive has accepted that it should meet the net costs of the tuition fees of students from England, Wales and Northern Ireland in their fourth year in Scottish universities.

The Government will discuss with the Executive the precise mechanism for paying those fees and the impact on student support. I expect this to come into effect for students who enter the first year of their courses in September 2001.

Public Bodies

Mr. Quinn: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how many board members he appoints to each non-departmental public body. [116339]

Mr. Wills: A full list of the non-departmental bodies to which the Secretary of State makes appointments can be found in the document "Public Bodies 1999" (ISBN 0–11–430159-X), copies of which are available in the House Library.

"Computers for Teachers"

Mr. Swayne: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what plans he has to include school librarians in the Computers for Teachers scheme; and if he will make a statement. [115591]

Dr. Cable: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what plans he has to classify school librarians as teachers for the purposes of the Computers for Teachers initiative. [115810]

Mr. Wills [holding answer 22 March 2000]: The scheme, as currently constituted, is focused upon serving teachers in state maintained schools. Schools have a legal obligation to teach Information Technology, both as a curriculum subject in its own right and across all other subjects. The burden of this teaching role falls largely upon the classroom teacher.

In order to provide teachers with the skills to discharge this responsibility, the New Opportunities Fund (NOF) ICT Training programme was developed specifically for teachers in schools, and it aims to give serving teachers the opportunity to raise their pedagogical capability to that now required of newly qualified teachers. The purpose of the Computers for Teachers initiative is to complement that training by raising teacher competence and confidence in their personal use of ICT. Given the access which school librarians generally have to ICT within the school library, the Government have decided to give priority for the funding available under this initiative to teachers.

Departmental Staff

Caroline Flint: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what provisions are made available to (i) departmental staff and (ii) employees of executive agencies under the control of his Department, for (a) maternity leave, (b) maternity pay, (c) paternity leave, (d) parental leave, (e) flexible working hours, (f) part-time work, (g) job sharing, (h) leave to care for sick children, (i) home-working, (j) term-time contracts, (k) annual hours contract, (l) child care allowances, (m) careers' leave and (n) career break schemes; and what criteria are used to judge eligibility in each case. [108843]

Mr. Wills: The following provisions are made available to departmental staff and employees of executive agencies (the Employment Service) under the control of the Secretary of State for Education and Employment:

(a) Maternity Leave

All employees are entitled to Statutory Maternity Leave of 18 weeks (for women with an expected week of childbirth on or after 30 April 2000. Before this date the entitlement is 14 weeks). Permanent employees are entitled to 52 weeks maternity leave provided they intend to return to work after the birth, are in paid service when the maternity period begins, and agree to refund any Departmental Maternity Pay (see below) if they do not return.

(b) Maternity Pay

All employees are entitled to Statutory Maternity Pay (SMP) for 18 weeks provided they fulfil the statutory requirements. Permanent employees who fulfil these requirements plus have one year's paid service are entitled to Departmental Maternity Pay (16 weeks at full pay) plus two weeks at SMP.

(c) Paternity Leave

Men are entitled to five days paid paternity leave which can be taken at or around the birth of the child.

(d) Parental Leave

Entitlement to Parental Leave follows the recently introduced regulations and parents of children born or adopted on or after 15 December 1999 are entitled to 13 weeks unpaid leave in blocks of weeks (limited to four in any year) for up to five years following birth or adoption. Parents of disabled children are entitled to the leave in days rather than weeks and up to the child's 18th birthday.

(e) Flexible Working Hours

Most people work flexi-time but have the option to work a set pattern of hours. Whatever pattern is worked, full-time employees are paid a salary that includes a paid lunch break. The full-time conditioned hours of work are 42 (London pay area 41) hours over a five day week, Monday to Friday (this includes a paid lunch break of one hour a day). The hours of work for people who work part-time will vary and will be agreed with their manager. The hours do not include a paid lunch break but the hourly rate is higher to compensate. Individuals have the right to use the Flexible Working Hours (FWH) scheme if one is operated within their office.

(f) (g) Part-time Work or Job Sharing

Part-time working or job sharing is generally open to anyone (subject to operational needs). All vacant posts are regarded as being open to people who work part-time or job share unless it is specifically stated otherwise in the vacancy notice. However, this is currently under review in the DfEE.

(h) Leave to care for sick children

The Employment Relations Act provides for individuals to apply for emergency leave to deal with events such as dependants being ill. DfEE and ES complies fully with the new and revised regulations.

(i) Homeworking

In DfEE homeworking is open to all staff. Managers must consider the needs of the individual applying to work from home, including the individual's welfare, the operational needs of the team and environmental issues such as health and safety. As ES is largely a front line organisation, homeworking will be relevant only to a small range of jobs within ES and operational requirements will need to be considered. For the majority of ES employees this flexibility may be considered only for small periods of ad hoc at-home working.

(j) Term Time Contracts

Part year appointments (of which term time is just one option) are open to all employees. Managers should try wherever possible to accommodate individuals' requirements. If however, having assessed all possible options, to do so would leave the office operationally deficient, managers have the right to refuse an application.

(k) Annual Hours Contracts

Annual Hours Contracts are not operated within the DfEE or Employment Service.

(l) Child Care Allowances

Child care subsidies are payable in certain circumstances (although child care allowances as such do not operate within DfEE or Employment Service). Where a business case supports the provision of nursery/playscheme places in a specific location a subsidy may be payable. Additional child care costs are reimbursed where staff have to work longer than their normal hours. DfEE is currently developing its child care policy and looking at ways of extending child care provision. In particular it is working towards improving equity on all four Head Office sites. User-friendly child care information is being developed to assist parents in finding the information they need on child care provision, both within and outside the Department.

(m) Careers Leave

This is not a term the DfEE or ES recognises, how ever, if my hon. Friend means leave to work in other organisations, the DfEE and ES operates loan/secondment/attachment schemes to outside organisations where there will be a possible business benefit to either organisation. If my hon. Friend means leave to pursue further education to enhance career prospects, individuals can apply for special leave to study for qualifications linked to their field of work.

(n) Career Break

A career break allows individuals to take an extended period of leave to cope with domestic responsibilities. This may be to care for young children, elderly or sick relatives. This allows individuals to preserve their career in the DfEE and ES and allows the organisation to retain skills and experience. Career breaks are taken as special unpaid leave and are classed as continuous employment. A career break may be allowed for a minimum of six months up to a maximum of five years. Individuals may take more than one career break or extend a career break, provided the period of absence does not exceed a total of five years. Applicants must have a good attendance record and a "satisfactory" marking on their most recent annual report.

Robert Schuman Week

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if he will make a statement on planned United Kingdom participation in Robert Schuman Week. [115546]

Mr. Vaz: I have been asked to reply.

In the week commemorating the 50th anniversary of the Robert Schuman Declaration, the UK will be participating in "my EUROPE week", organised by the European Schoolnet, a joint initiative of 20 European Ministries of Education.

UK participation is being organised by DfEE.

Capital Funding

Mr. Boswell: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how much money to date has been allocated to each higher education institution from the Joint Infrastructure Fund for capital projects; and how much remains unallocated. [116488]

Ms Hewitt: I have been asked to reply.

The Joint Infrastructure Fund (JIF) awarded just over £150 million to 22 universities in Round 1 and £320 million to 27 universities in Round 2.

Headline details for Round 3 will be announced on 4 April 2000. Bids to Round 4 will be considered in November 2000 and bids to Round 5 will be considered in March 2001.

The amounts awarded to each institution in Round 1 are listed in the table. The awards for Round 2 are still subject to negotiation to ensure best price and value for money for the funds approved. Final figures for Round 2 and Round 3 will be available as soon as those negotiations have been completed.

Institution	Value of awards (£ million)
Cambridge	30.4
Queen Mary and Westfield College	24.8
Oxford	17.9
Imperial College, London	11.3
Birmingham	11.1
London School of Economics and Political Science	6.6
Edinburgh	6.3
Liverpool	6.1
Nottingham	5.0
Surrey	4.7
Newcastle	4.4
Scottish Universities Environmental Research Centre	3.9
Southampton	3.8
University of Wales, Bangor	2.8
Leeds	2.4
Glasgow	2.1
Bristol	2.0
Manchester	1.8
Strathclyde	1.2
Warwick	1.0
Lancaster	0.6
Queen's University, Belfast	0.4
Total	150.4

WALES

Taskforces

Mr. Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list the Government taskforces selecting to Wales and their members in (a) 1992, (b) 1993, (c) 1994, (d) 1995, (e) 1996, (f) 1997, (g) 1998, (h) 1999 and (i) 2000. [116325]

Mr. Paul Murphy: I will write to the hon. Member as soon as possible and place a copy of my reply in the Library of the House.

Office Running Costs

Mr. Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what is the cost for the current financial year of running the office of the Secretary of State for Wales. [116328]

Mr. Paul Murphy: The running costs budget for the Wales Office is £2,030,000 for 1999–2000, including Lord Lieutenants' expenditure.

Steel Industry

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what assessment he has made of the prospects for the steel industry in Wales; and if he will make a statement. [116232]

Mr. Paul Murphy: I am extremely optimistic about the future of the Welsh steel industry, particularly in light of the substantial restructuring the UK steel industry has undergone making it among the most efficient and cleanest in the world.

Naturally the Government keenly maintain an on-going dialogue with the steel industry.

National Assembly

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will bring forward legislation to empower the National Assembly for Wales to amend those Acts which have effect in Wales; and if he will make a statement. [115954]

Mr. Paul Murphy: A general power for the Assembly to amend Acts of the UK Parliament having effect in Wales would be unconstrained and inconsistent with the devolution settlement for Wales.

There are, and will continue to be, occasions when it is appropriate to give the National Assembly a power to amend Acts of Parliament for particular purposes. Powers of this kind are included in the Government of Wales Act 1998 and the Health Act 1999 and also in the Care Standards Bill, the Local Government Bill and the Transport Bill.

Employment Statistics

Mrs. Ann Cryer: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what figures he can require from local authorities about the composition of their workforces in terms of (a) standard age groups, (b) ethnic origins and (c) gender. [104014]

Mr. Paul Murphy: I do not have executive functions which would require me to seek this kind of information from local authorities. My statutory powers to obtain information from local authorities were transferred to the National Assembly for Wales by the National Assembly for Wales (Transfer of Functions) Order 1999 No. 672. Among these powers is section 141(2) of the Local Government Act 1972 which allows the Assembly to require any information held by or available to a principal council in consequence of the exercise of any of the council's statutory powers.

DEFENCE

AWE Sites

Mr. Salter: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on what arrangements have been made to operate the Atomic Weapons Establishment sites at Aldermaston and Burghfield from 1 April. [117045]

Mr. Spellar: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Defence announced on 21 February 2000, Official Report, column 1223, that we were reviewing the AWE contract to operate Aldermaston and Burghfield to ensure the pre-eminence of public health and safety. The Government have always made it clear that we would not allow the AWE Management Ltd. consortium to take over the operation of AWE unless we were convinced that safety would not be compromised.

As part of this review each nominee for a director's post at AWE was checked for suitability and to confirm they were not connected with any of the incidents that have caused concern at Lockheed Martin's US facilities or to problems at BNFL Sellafield. The Chief of Defence Procurement also carried out a detailed scrutiny of the terms and conditions of the contract placed with AWE ML. He has confirmed that safety was treated as the highest priority.

The Chief Executive of the Nuclear Installations Inspectorate (NII) has also confirmed that he is satisfied with the ability of AWE ML to operate the sites safely and effectively. He has therefore issued new nuclear site licences. The Environment Agency (EA) has already granted new site discharge authorisations under the Radioactive Substances Act to take effect from 1 April. As a condition of this the EA require AWE ML to submit a report by 30 April 2000 of any proposed changes to the existing management systems and resources and not to implement any changes without the prior consent of the EA. The NII and EA will of course continue to monitor rigorously the safety performance of the new company. Both have also agreed separately to carry out in-depth reviews of all aspects of safety at AWE and to issue public reports after three and 12 months.

Hugh Collum, the new Chairman of BNFL, is currently preparing a report for the Department of Trade and Industry on management and organisation at Sellafield and he has assured us that there will be nothing in his review that could reasonably be read as detrimental to the safe operation of AWE. The NII has also assured the MOD that the problems experienced at Sellafield will have no application to BNFL's proposed role as a shareholder in the AWE ML consortium.

A strict and comprehensive safety regime already exists, monitored by MOD officials as well as the EA and NII. All three authorities carry out regular inspections and have the powers to scrutinise any paperwork, interview any individual, and visit any of the facilities at Aldermaston or Burghfield. They have the authority to close down any part or all of the facilities for whatever reason should safety be put at risk. AWE ML does not have the authority to alter significantly the existing operating procedures without first seeking the approval of the regulators.

In view of the satisfactory outcome of these checks along with the effectiveness of the existing safety regime at AWE, we are satisfied that safety will not be compromised by the implementation of the new contract. This is also the opinion of the EA and the NII. Accordingly, we have decided that AWE ML will take over operation of the AWE sites as from 1 April 2000. However, we will continue to scrutinise closely the safety performance of the new management. We will also be looking to the new operators to preserve and, where possible, extend the policy of openness adopted by Hunting BRAE over the last seven years.

German Army

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what assessment he has made of the benefits to the United Kingdom of the German Army joining the L15A4 projectile programme; and if he will make a statement. [113899]

Dr. Moonie: None. We are currently in the process of procuring the L15A3 155 mm high explosive artillery shell as part of a five year large calibre training ammunition contract which was placed with Royal Ordnance in December 1998. An assessment of possible options for a new generation of high explosive shell to replace existing L15A2 and A3 shells has not yet been undertaken. We do not therefore have an approved L15A4 projectile programme, but any future procurement of a replacement for our existing L15 shells would examine all options, including collaboration.

Landmines

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what studies his Department has carried out into the movement of anti-personnel landmines in flood waters. [114370]

Mr. Spellar: None. My Department is keeping the possible requirement for such studies under review.

Armed Forces Personnel

Mr. Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many people left (a) the Army, (b) the Royal Navy and (c) the Royal Air Force in (i) 1996, (ii) 1997, (iii) 1998 and (iv) 1999. [116326]

Mr. Spellar: The total number of people leaving the UK Regular Forces in 1996–99 is as follows:

	Army	Naval Service	RAF
1996	15,368	7,123	10,542
1997	13,993	5,263	7,512
1998	17,074	5,508	4,838
1999	15,951	5,889	4,712

The titles Army, Naval Service and RAF include Nursing Services. Naval Service includes Royal Navy and Royal Marines.

These figures are taken from Tri-Service Publication 1, which is available in the Library of the House.

University Cadetships

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) what is the average amount of money that has been expected to have been paid back by service personnel in the last 10 years in the (a) Royal Navy, (b) Army and (c) RAF who have received university education through cadetships and have subsequently left before completion of service; how this sum of money is calculated; and if he will make a statement; [116511]

(2) how many (a) Army, (b) RAF and (c) Navy personnel who were awarded cadetships in the last 10 years and subsequently left before completion of service were required to pay back money received for university education; how much money was expected to be paid back; how many cadets were required to pay the full amount; and if repayment was weighted against the time that they served; [116515]

(3) how many people were recruited into the (a) RAF, (b) Army and (c) Royal Navy on cadetships and how many of them (i) had their fees paid and (ii) received a salary, in each of the last five years; and if he will make a statement; [116512]

(4) what are the conditions relating to the award of cadetships in the (a) RAF, (b) Navy and (c) Army when students join the services, have their fees and a grant paid to them while completing university and then subsequently leave the force; what is his policy on the repayment of such funds by cadets if they leave before completion of service; and if he will make a statement; [116513]

(5) how many (a) Army, (b) RAF and (c) Royal Navy personnel who were awarded cadetships in the last 10 years subsequently left before completion of service; [116510]

(6) on what occasions in the last 10 years Army personnel leaving other than on health grounds were allowed to forgo repayment of money received from the Army for the cost of university education. [116559]

Mr. Spellar: I will write to the hon. Member and copies of my letters will be placed in the Library of the House.

South Korea (Joint Military Exercise)

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what British forces are involved in the proposed joint military exercise with South Korea in June 2000. [116666]

Mr. Spellar: There are no plans for British forces to conduct a joint military exercise with South Korea in June 2000. However, we will be conducting a short maritime exercise with the South Koreans in late August/early September as part of the Naval Task Group Deployment to the Far East (NTG 2000).

Territorial Army (Working Time Directive)

Mr. Key: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what advice he has issued to the Territorial Army on compliance with the Working Time Directive. [102901]

Mr. Spellar [holding answer 20 December 1999]: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave him on 27 March 2000, Official Report, column 28W.

Cadets (Seatbelts)

Mr. Key: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when his Department issued instructions that Army, Royal Navy and Royal Air Force cadets must not travel in 4-tonne trucks or other military vehicles without seatbelts; and what assessment he has made of the impact of this ruling on (a) cadet training and (b) cadet financing. [107642]

Mr. Spellar [holding answer 1 February 2000]: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave him on 27 March 2000, Official Report, columns 25–26W.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Incapacity Benefit

Mr. Boswell: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will make a statement on developments over the last three years in Incapacity Benefit, including (a) the total number of claimants by quarter, (b) the number of appeals and (c) changes in the qualification criteria. [116487]

Mr. Bayley: Information on numbers of claims and appeals is not available in the form requested. Such information as is available is in the tables. There have been no changes to the qualification criteria for Incapacity Benefit in the last three years.

We are committed to removing barriers to work. We have introduced the New Deal for Disabled People, funded by £195 million from the Windfall Tax, which is helping disabled people to move into, or remain in, work. From October 1998 we introduced a new rule allowing people who leave incapacity benefits for work to return to their old rate of benefit if they have to stop working and make a reclaim within a year, and we removed the 16 hours a week restriction on voluntary work. In April 1999 we raised the limit on earnings for those doing therapeutic work from £48.00 to £58.00 a week. We are also currently piloting a range of measures to help sick and disabled people to return to work and from next month those on incapacity benefits will be able to take part in Work Trials or Work Placements without losing their benefit entitlement.

From 3 April the All Work Test for incapacity benefits will be replaced by the Personal Capability Assessment, which will focus not just on what people cannot do but also on what they are able to do despite their illness or disability; this will help Personal Advisers give people the assistance they need to return to work where that is what they want to do. In the coming year we will also be trialling initiatives to ensure regular contact with people on incapacity benefits to check their circumstances, give benefits advice and offer assistance with a return to work.

From April 2001, we will introduce further changes. The contribution conditions for Incapacity Benefit will be modernised to ensure a closer link between benefit entitlement and recent work; some account will be taken of occupational and personal pensions, to reduce duplicate provision between the State and employers or individuals; and people disabled in youth, who have never had the opportunity to work, will be able to qualify for Incapacity Benefit without having made National Insurance contributions.

Number of claims to Incapacity Benefit in each quarter ending

	Number
30 November 1996	276,343
28 February 1997	269,062
31 May 1997	258,985
31 August 1997	255,657
30 November 1997	259,671
28 February 1998	238,514
31 May 1998	226,137
31 August 1998	232,210
30 November 1998	242,930
28 February 1999	224,952
31 May 1999	230,059
31 August 1999	230,503

Note:

Includes claims that are subsequently withdrawn and accident declarations (which are made in case a claim to benefit becomes necessary at a later date as a result of an industrial accident).

Source:

100 per cent. clerical count.

Number of appeals

	Number
1996	62,303
1997	76,132
1998	79,800

Sources:

Data up to July 1997—100 per cent. extract from ITS computerised records

Data from August 1997—100 per cent. download from the Generic Appeals Processing System (GAPS)

Disability Living Allowance

Mr. Boswell: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many people have claimed disability living allowance in each quarter of the last three years. [116554]

Mr. Bayley: The information is in the table.

Number of claims made for disability living allowance

Quarter ending	Claims
1997
March	124,281
June	132,092
September	121,067
December	110,813
1998
March	97,387
June	96,125
September	103,061
December	96,022
1999
March	103,069
June	98,997
September	97,542
December	91,311

Source:

Analytical Services Division: 100 per cent. data.

Mr. Gordon Marsden: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what the success rate of applications for Disability Living Allowance has been for (a) schizophrenia sufferers, (b) all categories of people suffering from mental illness and (c) all applicants for each of the most recent five years for which figures are available. [116514]

Mr. Bayley: The information is not available in the format requested. Such information as is available is in the table.

Applications for disability living allowance

Year	All decisions	Successful decisions	Percentage successful
1995	501,247	248,017	49
1996	523,812	246,173	47
1997	486,566	220,228	45
1998	391,583	178,802	46
1999	373,645	176,371	47

Source:

Analytical Services Division: 100 per cent. data.

Retirement Pension

Laura Moffatt: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what plans he has to improve the time it takes to calculate the state retirement pension for those in their final year of work. [116363]

Mr. Rooker: There are no plans to improve the time it takes to calculate the state retirement pension for those in their final year of work. I refer my hon. Friend to the answer I gave on 25 January 2000, Official Report, column 168W, relating to the time scales for processing claims to retirement pension.

Radiation Exposure (Compensation)

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many (a) former service personnel and medical auxiliaries and (b) members of their families, have made appeals to the Pensions Appeals Tribunal for compensation due to exposure to radiation from British nuclear weapons tests in the Pacific since 1970; how many have been awarded compensation; how many are awaiting adjudication; and if he will make a statement. [116014]

Mr. Bayley: The administration of War Pensions is a matter for Gordon Hextall, Chief Executive of the War Pensions Agency. He will write to my hon. Friend.

Letter from Gordon Hextall to Mr. Llew Smith, dated 28 March 2000:

The Secretary of State for Social Security has asked me to reply to your recent Parliamentary Question asking how many (a) former service personnel and medical auxiliaries and (b) members of their families, have made appeals to the Pensions Appeals Tribunal for compensation due to exposure to radiation from British nuclear weapons tests in the Pacific since 1970; how many have been awarded compensation and how many are awaiting adjudication.

The War Pensions Agency processes claims for war disablement pensions, war widows and other dependants' pensions and associated supplementary allowances under the provisions of the War Pension Scheme.

Details of claims relating to exposure to radiation in certain sites, including the South Pacific, are recorded on a radiation database. The earliest date of appeal recorded on the database is 1989. The database shows that from that date 57 service personnel and 31 widows have made appeals to the Pensions Appeal Tribunals. At the 22 March 2000 there have been 27 appeals allowed by the Tribunal of which 21 were former service personnel and 6 were widows. There are currently 5 appeals awaiting adjudication, 4 from former service personnel and 1 widow.

I am sorry to tell you that information relating to appeals in respect of exposure to radiation made before 1989 is not readily available and could only be obtained at a disproportionate cost.

If I can be of any further assistance then please do not hesitate to contact me.

Sure Start

Mr. Ennis: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many mothers he estimates will benefit from the Sure Start maternity grant in (a) Barnsley and (b) Doncaster. [116079]

Angela Eagle: The administration of the Social Fund is a matter for Peter Mathison, Chief Executive of the Benefits Agency. He will write to my hon. Friend.

Letter from Peter Mathison to Mr. Jeff Ennis, dated 28 March 2000:

The Secretary of State for Social Security has asked me to reply to your recent Parliamentary Question asking how many mothers he estimates will benefit from the Sure Start Maternity Grant in (a) Barnsley and (b) Doncaster.

An estimate is not available in the format requested. It is expected that the Sure Start Maternity Grant (SSMG) take-up will be at approximately the same level as the existing Social Fund Maternity Payment, though because Working Families Tax Credit gives qualification to more mothers than Family Credit did, there could be a small rise.

The smallest unit for which we can supply information is at the level of the BA district. Both Barnsley and Doncaster are in the South East Yorkshire District, which also includes Goole. Such information as is available is in the attached table.

I hope this is helpful.

Social Fund Maternity Payments/SSMG estimate in South East Yorkshire

Year	Number
1997–98	2,060
1998–99	2,150
1999–2000[1]	1,773
2000–01[2]	2,495

[1] To February 2000
[2] Estimate

Notes:
1. The figures do not distinguish male and female applicants.
2. The 1997–98 figure is the total of the figures for Barnsley (799) and the former South East Yorkshire District (1,261) which were then separate.
3. Goole was not included until 1998–99. It was formerly a part of the East Yorkshire district. Separate figures are not available.

Pensioner Incomes

Mr. Sanders: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many pensioners in (a) the Torbay constituency and (b) Torbay Unitary Authority are in receipt of the minimum income guarantee. [116447]

Mr. Bayley: The administration of benefits is a matter for Peter Mathison the Chief Executive of the Benefits Agency to answer. He will write to the hon. Member.

Letter from Peter Mathison to Mr. Adrian Sanders, dated 28 March 2000:

The Secretary of State has asked me to respond to your recent Parliamentary Question asking how many pensioners in (a) the Torbay constituency and (b) Torbay Unitary Authority are in receipt of the minimum income guarantee.

The minimum income guarantee relates to Income Support (IS) pensioners aged 60 and over.

The information is displayed in the table attached.

I hope this is helpful.

Income Support pensioners aged 60 and over, by parliamentary constituency/local authority—November 1999

Thousand

Area	Pensioners aged 60 and over
Torbay parliamentary constituency	4.9
Torbay Unitary Authority	6.0

Notes:
1. Sample size 5 per cent. therefore subject to sampling error.
2. Pensioners are defined as benefit units where either the claimant and/or their partner are aged 60 years or over.
3. Figures have been rounded to the nearest hundred and quoted in thousands.

Source:
Income Support quarterly Statistical Enquiry, November 1999.

Benefits Agency Staff

Mr. Welsh: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) how many visiting officers there are in each Benefits Agency in Scotland; [116558]

(2) what was the cost of travel and subsistence for officers based in Edinburgh visiting clients throughout the rest of Scotland for each of the last three years; how many visits were involved and to what destinations. [116521]

Angela Eagle: This is a matter for Peter Mathison, the Chief Executive of the Benefits Agency. He will write to the hon. Member.

Letter from Peter Mathison to Mr. Andrew Welsh, dated 28 March 2000:

The Secretary of State has asked me to reply to your recent Parliamentary Questions asking for the cost of travel and subsistence for officers based in Edinburgh visiting clients throughout the rest of Scotland for each of the last three years; how many visits were involved and to what destinations. Also, how many visiting officers there are in each Benefits Agency (BA) office in Scotland.

The BA does not hold data on the cost of travel and subsistence by geographical location. Most visiting officers are based in District Offices and do not make visits outside their home areas. Officers based in Edinburgh who visit customers outside the Edinburgh area provide the Benefits Agency's Out of Hours Service (OOHS) and the Benefit Fraud Investigation Service (BFIS). Their travel and subsistence costs cannot be broken down for visiting officers as they are aggregated across the Agency. Figures would include travel for other official duties such as training courses and meetings.

BEST C

The Disability Carer Benefits Directorate (DCBD) has calculated travel and subsistence costs of £8976.24, for the period from April 1999 to date, for their officers in Edinburgh visiting customers throughout Scotland.

The BA does not hold information centrally on the number of visits and destinations. These figures could only be obtained at disproportionate cost by manually counting entries in visiting officer's diaries.

The number of visiting officers based in Scotland is as follows:

	Number
Benefits Agency District Officers	352
DCBD (Disability Benefits Centres in Edinburgh and Glasgow)	13
Benefit Fraud Investigation Service	275
Benefits Agency Security Investigation Service (Organised Fraud)	16

I hope this is helpful.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Dialogue on Europe

Mr. Spring: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is the cost to public funds of the launch of the European Commission's Dialogue on Europe. [114136]

Mr. Vaz [holding answer 14 March 2000]: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave him on 27 March 2000, Official Report, column 53W.

General Affairs Council

Mr. Hood: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what was the outcome of the General Affairs Council held in Brussels on 20 and 21 March; and if he will make a statement. [115957]

Mr. Vaz: The General Affairs Council in Brussels on 20–21 March adopted the "A" points listed in document no. 6962/00 and noted resolutions, decisions and opinions of the European Parliament in its sessions of 2–3 February, 14–18 February and 1–2 March listed in documents nos. 5614/00, 6130/00 and 6490/00. Copies of these documents will be placed in the House Libraries as soon as they become available.

1. MEPs' Statute

The Presidency updated the GAC on its discussions with the European Parliament over a Statute for Members of the European Parliament.

2. Economic situation in Bulgaria and Romania

In line with a decision of the Helsinki European Council in December 1999, Enlargement Commissioner Gunter Verheugen reported to the GAC on economic developments in Bulgaria and Romania.

3. Mozambique

The GAC agreed that the member states and the European Community would continue actively to participate in the rehabilitation efforts in Mozambique and looked forward to making a positive contribution to the Donor Conference on 26–27 April in Rome.

4. EU-Africa Summit

The Presidency briefed partners on preparations for the Africa-Europe Summit (Cairo, 3–4 April).

5. Conflict in Africa

The GAC considered a discussion paper by the Council Secretariat Policy Planning and Early Warning Unit on the crisis in the Great Lakes region. They agreed to discuss it further at the April GAC if possible.

6. Freelance Interpreters

The GAC agreed that freelance interpreters should be taxed on the same basis as other employees of the EU institutions.

7. Council Formations

The GAC discussed Presidency proposals to reduce the number of Council formations to 16.

8. Lisbon European Council

The GAC discussed arrangements for the European Council on 23–24 March.

9. Inter-governmental Conference

The GAC held an exchange of views, focusing on vote re-weighting and the size and structure of the Commission after enlargement. Discussion will continue in the IGC Preparatory Group. The Presidency will report to the Feira European Council in June.

10. Defence/ESDP

The GAC discussed a draft Presidency report to the Lisbon European Council on follow-up to the Helsinki European Council report on strengthening the common European security and defence policy, including annexes on: elaboration of the 'head-line goal on military capabilities agreed at Helsinki; military bodies in the European Union; and the possible establishment of a committee for civilian crisis management.

11. UN Human Rights Commission—China

The GAC expressed its concern at the human rights situation in China and agreed to review the EU/China human rights dialogue to make it more focused and result-orientated. The GAC agreed to continue regularly to review its policy on human rights in China.

12. Russia

The GAC reiterated its deep concern over Russian actions in Chechnya, in particular continued reports of gross violation of human rights and international humanitarian law. It deplored the lack of Russian action to meet the EU's specific demands at the EU/Russia Summit on 3 March in Lisbon aimed at improving the international relief effort in Chechnya. The GAC called on Russia quickly to accede to the ICRC's request for free access to detainees in Chechnya. The GAC welcomed the Russian invitation to the UN High Commissioner for Human Rights and the OSCE Chairman-in-Office to visit Chechnya in April. It also welcomed Russia's invitation to the OSCE to monitor the presidential elections on 26 March and expressed the hope that the elections would further contribute to the development of democratic and economic reforms in Russia.

13. Mexico

The GAC gave political agreement for the formal adoption of the EU/Mexico Free Trade Agreement in the margins of the European Council in Lisbon.

PY AVAILABLE

14. Western Balkans

Kosovo

The GAC adopted conclusions deploring the security situation in Mitrovica and Presevo. It condemned extremism from both sides and reminded political leaders in Kosovo that they would be held accountable for any further spread of violence. It called for Kosovo Serb participation in the Joint Interim Administration structures and for the proper preparation of elections. It recalled the massive resources allocated by the EU for assistance to Kosovo.

Former Republic of Yugoslavia (FRY)

Following the recent extension of the visa ban list, the Council adopted a Regulation suspending the flight ban for six months, agreed to adopt revised financial sanctions before the end of the month. It condemned the harassment of the independent media and urged FRY democratic forces to intensify their efforts to build a unified front. It expressed its readiness to assist Montenegro and to consider the extension of the Kosovo reconstruction agency to Montenegro.

Danube

The GAC stressed the urgency of resolving the obstacles to freedom of navigation.

Bosnia

The GAC welcomed the road-map for Bosnia to help pave the way towards a feasibility study on a Stabilisation and Association Agreement. It stressed that the rate of progress will depend on the actions of the Bosnian authorities to take advantage of the opportunities offered by the SAA process.

Stability Pact

The GAC invited the Commission to present urgently a detailed proposal for the EU's contribution to the Stability Pact Regional Financing Conference at the end of March and stressed that EU support must be matched by credible and consistent reforms by the countries of the region.

European Community Monitoring Mission

The GAC underlined its wish for a restructured, flexible and streamlined European Community Monitoring Mission to support the EU's Common Foreign and Security Policy.

15. East Timor

Ireland briefed partners on the Taoiseach's visit to East Timor on 9 March.

Information and Intelligence Sharing

Mr. Maude: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what recent representations he has received from US authorities concerning information and intelligence sharing between the United States and Britain. [116353]

Mr. Vaz [holding answer 28 March 2000]: Any correspondence of this nature is covered by Exemption 1c of the Code of Practice on Access to Government Information. It is long-standing practice of successive Governments that such information is not released.

Tartan Day Reception

Mr. Salmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs (1) if invitations have been sent to representatives of the Scottish National Party to attend the Tartan Day Reception at the British Ambassador's residence in Washington; who was responsible for drawing up the guest list; and what role the British ambassador had in monitoring and approving the guest list; [116576]

(2) if he will list the hon. Members and Members of the Scottish Parliament who have been invited to attend the Tartan Day Reception at the British Ambassador's residence in Washington; on what date each invitation was sent out; and if he will make a statement; [116584]

(3) if he will order a report from the British Ambassador in Washington on the preparations for Tartan Day in the USA and his discussions with the organising committee regarding the inclusion of Scottish National Party representatives in the organised events; and if he will place a copy of the report in the Library. [116583]

Mr. Battle [holding answer 28 March 2000]: The Ambassador and the Embassy have made clear from the outset that invitations will be sent to all visiting Members of the Scottish Parliament. They have been working with the Tartan Day Committee in the US to organise the reception and to draw up the guest list, which was seen and cleared by the Ambassador. The Ambassador has been in touch with the First Minister, Donald Dewar, and with the Presiding Officer of the Scottish Parliament, Sir David Steel.

The Embassy has been told that George Reid MSP and Patricia Fergusson MSP, two Deputy Presiding Officers, will be coming to Washington to represent the Scottish Parliament, and that John Swinney MSP and Fiona McLeod MSP will also be attending. All these were immediately sent invitations to the reception. If other Members of the Scottish Parliament are visiting Washington for Tartan Day they might like to get in touch with the Embassy, either direct, through the office of the Presiding Officer, or through the Tartan Day Committee. The Embassy will be delighted to include them in the reception.

In view of the above, a report will not be requested from the Ambassador in Washington on the preparations for Tartan Day.

British Overseas Territories

Dr. Tonge: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, pursuant to his answer of 16 March 2000, Official Report, column 288W, on British overseas territories, when his Department expects to finish the review of whether to impose an order in council to ensure that the British Virgin Islands, Cayman Islands and the Turks and Caicos islands change their existing legislation on homosexual acts. [116556]

Mr. Battle: There is no set date for the completion of the review. Discussions are currently in progress with the relevant territory governments. We are pursuing these with all due expedition.

Indonesia

Dr. Tonge: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what recent representations he has made to the Indonesian Government concerning the situation in West Papua. [116549]

Mr. Battle: We have made no recent representations on Irian Jaya. However, we closely monitor developments in West Papua. Our Ambassador to Indonesia and a visiting member of our South East Asia Department are visiting West Papua this week, where they will hold meetings with a wide range of contacts, including NGO representatives.

Zimbabwe

Dr. Tonge: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what recent representations he has made to the Government of Zimbabwe concerning the situation of white farmers. [116551]

Mr. Hain: I spoke to the Zimbabwean Vice President on 6 March and wrote to the Foreign Minister on 7 March. My right hon. Friend the International Development Secretary wrote to the Vice-President on 15 March. The High Commission at Harare is in close touch with the Commercial Farmers' Union. The Government of Zimbabwe are in no doubt of our concern at the farm invasions.

UN Rapid Reaction Force

Dr. Tonge: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what proposals for the establishment of a United Nations rapid reaction force the Government will put forward at the Millennium Assembly and Summit in September. [116553]

Mr. Hain: We are keen to improve the UN's rapid reaction capability to enable it to respond more effectively to emerging crises. We are encouraging the UN Secretary-General to address this issue in his report on UN Peace Operations, due for publication this summer. We hope that rapid reaction will also be a subject for high-level discussion at the Millennium Summit, in the context of a wider discussion of peace, security and disarmament issues.

Tokyo Embassy

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will appoint a member of a non-Governmental organisation as the Atomic Energy Counsellor at the British Embassy in Tokyo. [116274]

Mr. Hain: There are no plans to make such an appointment at this time.

PRIME MINISTER

Engagements

Sir Peter Tapsell: To ask the Prime Minister if he will list his official engagements for Wednesday 29 March. [116300]

The Prime Minister: This morning I had meetings with ministerial colleagues and others. In addition to my duties in the House I will have further such meetings later today.

Rosemary Nelson

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Prime Minister what representations he has received calling for an independent judicial inquiry into the circumstances surrounding the murder of Mrs. Rosemary Nelson on 15 March 1999; and if he will make a statement. [115280]

The Prime Minister [holding answer 21 March 2000]: Both my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland and I have received a number of representations, including some from Mr. Paul Nelson and the Magee family and a number of Human Rights organisations.

The Government have not ruled out an independent judicial inquiry. However we have made it clear that we will not consider an inquiry while the criminal investigation is ongoing and there remains the possibility of bringing the perpetrators to justice.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Two Metre Rule

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what discussions his Department has held with (a) farming organisations and (b) environmental organisations over the impact on (i) historic hedges and (ii) wildlife of the implementation of the two metre rule. [115543]

Ms Quin: This Department has held discussions with all the principal farming organisations and statutory environmental bodies on the issues mentioned by the hon. Member as well as with the European Commission.

Last week my right hon. Friend the Minister reached agreement with the EU Agriculture Commissioner, Franz Fischler, that the United Kingdom should, for this year, apply the same criteria as were used in 1999 and earlier years for determining the acceptability of hedges and other field margins included in claims based on whole Ordnance Survey field areas under the Integrated Administration and Control System. For 2001 and subsequent years, MAFF will work with the Commission in order to clarify what types of margins are acceptable for inclusion in aid claims and identify ways of safeguarding environmentally valuable hedges so that we can reach a permanent resolution of this issue.

Rendering

Mr. Randall: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many companies offering (a) rendering followed by incineration and (b) direct incineration, that were awarded a contract under the over-30-months scheme have not had contracts renewed; and if he will make a statement. [114826]

Ms Quin: The Intervention board (IB) has let a large number of contracts for services connected with the operation of the OTMS. In line with good procurement practice, IB has a rolling programme for reviewing and, if necessary, re-tendering these contracts which may involve changes to the service required or its delivery. IB reserves the right to terminate contracts if contractors fail to meet their obligations.

Since 1996, when the scheme began, 13 companies have been contracted to render OTMS material. Five of these companies are currently contracted for this service, contracts having been let following a competitive tender in 1997. Each of the five companies is burning OTMS tallow produced on-site to fuel their rendering process. One of the contracts also covers the incineration of the OTMS meat and bone meal (MBM) in an incinerator that is under construction and due to start operation in late summer 2000.

IB awarded six contracts for direct incineration of carcase material following a competitive tender in 1996. One contract was terminated, but the remaining five companies are currently fulfilling their contracts to incinerate OTMS carcase material. One of these contracts was extended for a further period of 12 months during 1999.

Inshore Fishing

Mr. Moss: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will support the lifting of the ban on the Fleetwood inshore fishing fleet from fishing in their traditional waters in zone VIIa; if he will act to curtail the activities of Belgian and Irish beam trawlers catching cod in the same zone; and if he will compensate the Fleetwood inshore fleet for the time they have been laid-up under the ban under Article 16 of the Structures Regulation. [116094]

Mr. Morley: The priority at present in the Irish Sea (zone VIIa) is to protect cod spawning given the serious state of cod stocks in this area. With this in mind the European Commission decided in February to close the area to most demersal fishing from 14 February until 1 May 2000. Shrimp and nephrops fisheries (in designated areas), however, remain open. I announced on 10 March that a voluntary agreement had been reached between the UK, Belgium and Ireland to withdraw flatfish beam trawlers from the closed area until 1 May. This has been welcomed by the industry.

In conjunction with the Fleetwood Fish Producers' Organisation, CEFAS is conducting trials in the inshore fishery to see what proportion of cod is likely to be taken. Results from these trials will enable us to decide what inshore fisheries could remain open without jeopardising the recovery of cod stocks in the event of closures in future years.

There are a number of conservation closures in place. The Government do not believe it is appropriate to compensate fishermen for a decline in stocks or for conservation measures designed to improve stocks and hence fishing opportunities in the future; there is no history of this under preceding Governments. Those fishermen who are unable to work in the nephrops and shrimp fisheries or in other fisheries outside the closed area may be entitled to claim Job Seeker's Allowance and other benefits.

Beef Imports

Mr. Cox: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what was the (a) amount and (b) value of beef imported from the Argentine to the UK in 1999. [116211]

Ms Quin: The volume and value of imports of beef and beef products from the Argentine during 1999, as recorded in the Official Overseas Trade Statistics, are shown in the table.

Product	Tonnes	£ million
Meat and offal preparations[1]	7,719	10.9
Carcase meat	2,058	6.4
Offal	305	0.6
Total	10,082	17.9

[1] Primarily corned beef

BSE

Mr. Cox: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list the EU countries that have detected BSE in their cattle. [116247]

Ms Quin: BSE has been reported in home-bred cattle in Belgium, Denmark, France, Ireland, Luxembourg, the Netherlands and Portugal. In addition, cases of BSE have been reported in cattle imported into Germany and Italy, but these countries have reported no cases in native cattle.

Mr. Livsey: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food when he will publish the results of the BSE inquiry conducted by Lord Justice Phillips. [116461]

Ms Quin [holding answer 28 March 2000]: The BSE Inquiry requested a six-month extension beyond the deadline of 31 March 2000 to complete their task. The Government have agreed this extension and the report will be published shortly after receipt by Ministers.

Chernobyl

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what restrictions exist on use of land and the movement of livestock as a result of the 1986 Chernobyl nuclear accident; and if he will estimate the cost to United Kingdom farmers of the restrictions introduced because of radioactive pollution from Chernobyl. [116269]

Ms Quin: There have never been restrictions on the use of land in the UK as a result of the nuclear accident at Chernobyl. However, restrictions on the movement, sale and slaughter of sheep were placed in certain areas of the UK. These restrictions have been progressively lifted from affected holdings so only approximately 430 of the holdings originally under restrictions are still under controls. This represents a decrease of around 95 per cent. Although the Chernobyl incident has undoubtedly affected the husbandry practices within the affected areas, the Government and devolved Administrations operate the Mark and Release Sheep Compensation Scheme to reimburse farmers for any market losses incurred.

Milk

Mr. Paice: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will give the unit levels of export refunds in (a) euros and (b) sterling for (i) skimmed milk powder, (ii) whole milk powder, (iii) butter and (iv) condensed milk for each of the last 12 months. [116135]

Ms Quin [holding answer 27 March 2000]: The information in the form requested could be produced only at disproportionate cost.

Hop Growers

Mr. Paice: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food (1) if he will make a statement on the terms of special temporary measures for hop growers and (a) identify the reference date from which areas should not increase and (b) specify if that date refers to areas planted or areas harvested; [116136]

(2) for what reason some hop growers received lower payments under special temporary measures for 1999 than those for which they applied. [116137]

Ms Quin [holding answer 27 March 2000]: The aim of the special temporary measures for hops is to allow producer groups and individual growers to adjust their production to market requirements during the period 1998–2002 by receiving aid on areas temporarily rested or permanently grubbed-up, provided certain requirements are met.

Under current arrangements, the reference date from which the total area should not increase is the area harvested in 1997. Payments to hop growers were made on this basis by the Intervention Board Executive Agency, which administers the scheme in the UK. In some cases, payments were reduced because growers did not comply with these arrangements. The arrangements have been questioned by some hop growers and we are presently reviewing the matter.

INTERNATIONAL DEVELOPMENT

Third-world Debt

3. Mr. Cash: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development if she will make a statement on current third-world debt. [115431]

Clare Short: Debt relief under the enhanced Heavily Indebted Poor Countries (HIPC) Initiative has been agreed for the first three countries, with Mozambique, Senegal and Tanzania being assessed next. Under the new framework, countries are required to develop poverty reduction strategies to qualify for debt relief. We are concerned that progress in finalising enhanced debt relief is slower than was originally agreed.

Conservation Projects

8. Mr. Andrew George: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what assessment she has made of the impact of UK-sponsored conservation projects upon indigenous and nomadic people in Africa. [115437]

Clare Short: We have recently completed a substantial evaluation of British-funded project support for environmental improvement in five countries including Kenya and Tanzania. The study found that nearly two thirds of these projects achieved their objectives successfully but that they had a limited impact on the livelihoods of local people. Our current environmental policy places much greater focus on the need to improve the livelihoods of the poor to achieve sustainable development.

Kosovo

9. Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what discussions she had concerning the funding of post-conflict initiatives in Kosovo when she last met her colleagues from other member states of the European Union. [115438]

Clare Short: The UK has provided more than £100 million in humanitarian and rehabilitation assistance to Kosovo. The European Union has pledged 865 million euro over the last two years—of which the UK share is £112 million. I am frequently in contact with my EU colleagues on this and other issues.

10. Dr. Starkey: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development if she will make a statement on continuing support from her Department for projects in Kosovo. [115439]

Clare Short: The UK has provided more than £100 million in humanitarian and rehabilitation assistance to Kosovo. The European Union has pledged 865 million euro over the last two years—of which the UK's share is £112 million. I am frequently in contact with my EU colleagues on this and other issues.

17. Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development when she next intends to visit Kosovo to discuss aid for reconstruction. [115446]

Clare Short: I have no present plans to re-visit Kosovo. We are working closely with the United Nations Mission in Kosovo and other international agencies to support reconstruction.

Mozambique

11. Miss McIntosh: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development if she will make a statement on relief operations in Mozambique. [115440]

Clare Short: The search and rescue phase is over. Relief operations continue to progress as access improves under the co-ordination of the Government of Mozambique with support from the United Nations. The priority remains to stabilise the conditions of the flood-affected population by providing sufficient shelter, food, water, sanitation and healthcare both in accommodation centres and also to those returning to their homes.

We have allocated a total of £20 million for humanitarian assistance to those affected by the floods. This money is being channelled both to ensure the effective continuation of relief efforts, but also to start immediate work on establishing emergency physical access through repairs to roads and bridges, rehabilitating health and education services and also to help re-establish the livelihoods of the affected population.

We are assessing the need for additional longer-term support. We expect to concentrate on feeder roads, seeds and small livestock restocking and on strengthening planning in health and education. We already have plans to spend around £70 million over the next two years. This can be increased if necessary. We will attend the proposed donor conference on reconstruction in Rome at the end of April.

14. Mr. McCabe: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development if she will make a statement on her Department's plans for longer-term reconstruction and development in Mozambique. [115443]

Clare Short: We have already committed £70 million to our development programme in Mozambique over the next two years. We are currently assessing how our plans should be modified to help Mozambique recover from the recent crisis.

Sri Lanka

12. Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what assistance her Department plans to give to Sri Lanka in 2000–01. [115441]

Clare Short: Our development assistance programme for Sri Lanka focuses on three areas—providing relief and rehabilitation for those affected by conflict in the North and East; improving the quality of education (particularly at primary level); and exploring how we might help promote reconciliation.

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development if she will make a statement on the present British aid projects in place in Sri Lanka; and what is the value of those projects. [114253]

Clare Short: We published a Country Strategy Paper for our development assistance to Sri Lanka last year. I have placed a copy in the Library of the House. Our programme in Sri Lanka focuses on three issues important for poverty reduction: improving the quality of education, particularly at primary level; providing relief and rehabilitation for those affected by conflict; and promoting intercommunal reconciliation.

We expect to spend around £6.3 million this financial year. The major elements will be on education (£1.5 million), helping those affected by conflict (£3.5 million), and the final expenditure on some environmental projects approved under the previous Administration (£0.5 million).

25. Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what financial assistance is being given to the Government of Sri Lanka; and if she will make a statement. [115454]

Clare Short: Our bilateral development assistance programme to Sri Lanka will be around £6.3 million in the current financial year (1999–2000); next year we expect to spend around £6 million.

We published a Country Strategy Paper for our development assistance to Sri Lanka last year. I have placed a copy in the Library of the House. Our programme in Sri Lanka focuses on three areas—improving the quality of education, particularly at primary level; providing relief and rehabilitation for those affected by conflict; and promoting intercommunal reconciliation. Not all of the programme works directly through the Government of Sri Lanka; a significant proportion is channelled through international organisations and NGOs (including UNICEF, UNHCR, the International Committee of the Red Cross, Oxfam and Save the Children Fund).

Volunteers

13. Mr. Gapes: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development if she will make a statement on her Department's support for the work of British volunteers. [115442]

Clare Short: We support five British volunteer programmes: Voluntary Service Overseas, International Co-operation for Development, Skillshare Africa, International Service and British Executive Service Overseas. In 1999–2000, we provided over £28 million to support over 2,700 volunteers working world-wide.

Disaster Relief

15. Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development if she will set up permanent arrangements for disaster relief operations. [115444]

Clare Short: Such arrangements and mechanisms already exist internationally through the United Nations and within the UK under the co-ordination of the Department for International Development.

Primary Education (Africa)

16. Mr. Win Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what measures are being taken by her Department to improve (a) access to and (b) the quality of, primary education in Africa. [115445]

Clare Short: We are committed to the International Development Targets of achieving universal primary education by 2015 and gender equality in primary and secondary schooling by 2005. In our bilateral programmes in Africa, substantial resources are allocated to education for the achievement of these targets. And in my meetings with representatives of African governments, I take every opportunity to discuss their commitment to, and progress in, achieving these targets.

We believe four things need to be done if these targets are to be met and there is to be significant improvement in access to, and the quality of, primary education in Africa. First, we need a real and sustained commitment by African governments to securing universal primary education. We need to work with those governments committed to reform, and help them put in place the structural changes necessary to deliver quality primary education for all their children.

Second, we need to address the issue of resourcing for education. There is a clear need to increase the level of resources that African governments commit to primary and basic education. Too often, the needs of the primary sector are not funded because the university sector has more vocal and politically influential constituents. In Africa, the public subsidy for a university student is 20 per cent. of a primary school pupil. And investing in primary and basic education should be a vital priority area for development assistance.

Third, we need to shift from a projects-based approach to a sector-wide approach which gives appropriate priority to basic and primary education. And we need to pull together the work of all the different development donors around a focused, agreed strategy drawn up by the government of the country concerned. This means encouraging and supporting a sound macro-economic framework which ensures a sustainable flow of resources for primary education. And it means help with reforms to ministries of education, to systems of management and teacher training, book production, and tax reform.

The fourth thing we need to do if we are to achieve universal primary education by 2015 is to link education policy with the wider development strategy of the country, including policies on health, sanitation, livelihoods and rural transport. African governments and donors need to address the serious obstacles that often exist to enrolment, as well as the causes of drop out from school. This is particularly vital in the case of girls, who often face barriers of prejudice and discrimination, as well as economic disadvantage.

These are our priorities for Africa. This is also the agenda that we will be taking to the World Education Forum in Dakar next month. This meeting provides an important opportunity for African government, development agencies and non-governmental organisations—from North and South—to recommit themselves to a quality primary education system for all Africans.

AIDS (Africa)

18. Mr. Coaker: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what assessment she has made of the impact on children in Africa of the spread of AIDS. [115447]

Clare Short: AIDS is now the biggest killer in Africa. A first major impact on children in Africa is that there are now 10.4 million African children who will have lost their mothers or both parents to AIDS. This is 90 per cent. of the global total of AIDS orphans. Many of these orphans are infected with the disease from birth or from breast feeding, reversing the gains made in child survival rates over the last 30 years. DFID is working in collaboration with NGO partners in many countries in Africa to reach AIDS orphans with the care and support they need. We are a significant contributor to UNICEF who have extensive programmes with orphans throughout Africa (£10.5 million contributed in 1998).

A second major impact of the disease is on young people. About half of all new HIV infections world-wide occur in young people aged 15–24, with girls being particularly at risk to the disease. We need to reach children and young people early on and enable them to make preventative choices. DFID is funding a number of multi-media projects such as the BBC Great Lakes Lifeline service, and a children's radio service for the Great Lakes region, Angola and Mozambique. These services seek to reach young people and children with the right health and sex education information and messages.

Finally, the impact of HIV/AIDS on the education system is staggering. In the worst affected countries, more than 30 per cent. of teachers are infected with HIV, and many more students and teachers are not able to attend school because they are needed at home to care for sick relatives. Girls are particularly affected, often being the first family members to be pulled out of education to help in the home. DFID is working with a number of Governments in sub-Saharan Africa to assess and plan for the impact of the pandemic on their education systems, and to develop effective HIV/AIDS education programmes for schools. DFID is also working with NGO partners to provide support to girls and boys whose involvement in education is threatened by HIV/AIDS.

Mongolia

19. Mr. Ian Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what assistance her Department is giving to Mongolia. [115448]

Clare Short: Most UK aid to Mongolia is channelled through multilateral agencies, in particular the European Commission, the World Bank and the Asian Development Bank. The UK contributes around £5.7 million through these agencies and this figure is set to rise slightly over the next two to three years.

We also support UK non-governmental Organisations' work in Mongolia, focusing on activities which benefit the poorest. Our bilateral development assistance totalled £470,000 in 1998–99 and a similar figure is expected for the current year.

In response to the recent severe weather crisis, we are contributing to the purchase of essential relief supplies in Mongolia. To date, the UK Government have contributed around £50,300 to the relief effort.

Madagascar

20. Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what action her Department is taking in Madagascar; and if she will make a statement. [115449]

Clare Short: Cyclones Eline and Gloria and the ensuing floods have caused damage directly affecting some 500,000 people in Madagascar. However, the number of people requiring immediate assistance is about 45,000. We have contributed some £600,000 for immediate relief including food, clean water, health services and the necessary logistics to ensure delivery of items to isolated communities. This funding has been channelled through UNICEF and the World Food Programme.

We continue to monitor the situation closely through our Embassy in Madagascar and operational partners in the field. We stand ready to respond further to assessed needs.

EU Tobacco Subsidies

21. Mr. Wilkinson: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development if she will propose to the Council of Ministers the transfer of the budgetary allocation for subsidies to European Union tobacco growers to international development projects outside the EU. [115450]

Clare Short: The Government strongly disapprove of subsidies to EU tobacco growers under the Common Agricultural Policy and would like to see an end to the tobacco regime on the grounds of health and cost. We believe that the Community should progressively disengage from support for tobacco production and will continue to press for further reform of the regime.

At the Berlin European Council of March 1999, EU heads of government agreed the overall ceiling and division of the Community's spending for the period 2000–06. Transferring funds from the Agriculture budget to the External Action budget would mean breaking this agreement on overall budget discipline.

Rather than increasing the EC's development budget, my Department is working with the EU to improve the effectiveness of its programmes, and focus them more on the poorest countries.

Debt Relief

22. Mrs. Ann Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development which countries have agreed to adopt (a) poverty relief and (b) education programmes to qualify for debt relief and further aid. [115451]

Clare Short: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave my hon. Friend the Member for Edinburgh, South (Mr. Griffiths) on 1 March 2000, Official Report, column 295W.

Dakar Education Summit

23. Mr. Boswell: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development if she will make a statement on the World Education Forum at Dakar. [115452]

Clare Short: The World Education Forum in Dakar from 26–28 April provides an important opportunity for governments, development agencies and non-governmental organisations—from North and South—to recommit themselves to Education for All (including the achievement of universal primary education by 2015, and gender equality in primary and secondary education by 2005). We have seven major priorities for this Forum.

First, we believe there must be collective re-affirmation of the Education for All (EFA) goals, allied to focused strategies for their achievement, and particularly the attainment of the international development targets for education. We know that where there is strong political commitment allied to well-defined and well-managed education strategies, dramatic progress can be made, even in some of the poorest countries.

Second, developing country governments need to give priority to basic education. In many countries, this will require greater efficiency of spending within the education sector and greater focus on basic education; it may also require an increased share of national income to education. But even with the improved mobilisation of resources within country there will be the need for additional funding from development agencies. The Dakar Framework for Action should also make clear the willingness of funding agencies to allocate significant additional resources to support the achievement of Education for All, where governments have developed well-focused education strategies. No government seriously committed to basic education within a sustainable development framework should be thwarted in the achievement of this goal by lack of resources.

Third, basic education should be firmly set within an overall, sustainable education sector framework. Funding agencies should shift from individual projects to broader support for a government-led education sector strategy which is coherent and able to exploit linkages with wider poverty elimination and development efforts.

Fourth, on gender, we must move beyond the language of awareness to the language of action. We have learned that where gender is mainstreamed through government development policy there is progress. Where it is "projectised" the gains are local and slow. The Framework for Action should set out these lessons and their implications for effective gender equity strategies.

Fifth, sub-Saharan Africa and south Asia should be accorded international priority. These regions are where the challenge to meet Education for All goals is greatest; they are also where efforts are greatly impeded by poverty, HIV/AIDS and by conflict.

Sixth, we need better monitoring of progress towards goals and targets. This requires investment in the development of national capacity allied to efficient international monitoring systems. The potential of UNESCO's Institute of Statistics will be important in this field.

Seventh, Dakar should look seriously at whether the existing inter-agency EFA structure will be adequate to its purpose in the future. Dakar should agree on principles for follow-up and monitoring which better engage national governments, civil society, bilateral and multilateral agencies and highlight Education for All as a development priority in all relevant international and regional fora, including the G8 and relevant high level meetings of the United Nations.

These are the priorities which the Government will be pursuing at Dakar.

Horn of Africa

24. Sir Sydney Chapman: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what assessment she has made of the likely effects of crop failures in the Horn of Africa. [115453]

Clare Short: Crop failure is a regular occurrence in the Horn of Africa and communities have developed strategies for dealing with its effects. These include diversification of agricultural production systems and other socio-economic strategies, such as migration. Extreme hardship through crop failure is usually the result of conflict or poor crop management.

Harvests were poor in 1999 in some parts of the Horn of Africa. It is too early to say if 2000 is likely to see serious crop failure in Ethiopia and Somalia but the UN estimates emergency food needs for 2000 will be as follows:

Ethiopia (Disaster Preparedness and Prevention Commission)—900,000 metric tonnes for 8.1 million people

Eritrea (United Nations Country Team)—25,000 metric tonnes for 211,750 people

Somalia (United Nations Appeal)—25,000 metric tonnes for 400,000 people.

St. Helena

26. Mr. Bob Russell: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what progress has been made towards constructing an airport on the Island of St. Helena. [115455]

Clare Short: I have agreed that my Department will finance a comparative study of air and sea access costs in order to identify the most cost-efficient permanent solution to the island's international passenger and cargo transportation needs. Terms of Reference for the study are currently being prepared and will be agreed with the St. Helena Government. Consultants are expected to start work in the middle of the year.

Southern Africa

27. Mr. Fabricant: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development if she will make a statement on her policy regarding bilateral aid to Southern Africa. [115456]

Clare Short: Our policy for bilateral assistance to Southern Africa is set out in our Country Strategy Papers, copies of which are available in the Library of the House. Throughout Southern Africa we are working with the international community in support of national and regional programmes to achieve the international development targets, through public sector reform, better education and health, HIV/AIDS prevention and promoting economic growth and sustainable livelihoods.

Cuba

28. Angela Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what discussions she has had with representatives of the United States Government regarding medical services in Cuba. [115457]

Clare Short: I have not held discussions with the United States Government regarding medical services in Cuba. The United Kingdom Government are committed to providing medical care and equipment through the European Community Humanitarian Office (ECHO). The EC is the largest aid donor to Cuba and provided US$15.2 million in official development assistance (ODA) in 1998. In 1997, (the latest figures available) the UK share of the EC's £12.39 million aid programme to Cuba was £1.85 million.

Small Arms (Africa)

29. Mr. Burstow: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what projects her Department supports which tackle the problems of small arms trafficking in sub-saharan Africa. [115458]

Clare Short: Working through sub-regional organisations and institutions, we support a number of projects aimed at reducing the proliferation of small arms in Africa including through controlling trafficking.

DFID has provided some £300,000 through UNDP for the implementation of the Economic Community of West Africa States (ECOWAS) Moratorium on the importation, exportation and manufacture of light weapons.

This year, we funded the conference on "Tackling Small Arms Proliferation in Eastern Africa and the Greater Horn" which led to an outline Action Plan for the sub-region which will tackle the subject of arms trafficking. This contributed to the March 2000 Nairobi Declaration which maps out a sub-regional approach to the proliferation of small arms.

In 1998, DFID funded the seminar that produced the EU/Southern Africa Development Community (SADC) sub-regional action programme on small arms which was endorsed by EU/SADC Ministers in Vienna. DFID has provided funding to take this action programme forward, including holding a conference in South Africa in May 1999 with all key stakeholders to define practical measures. We have also supported the participation of representatives of the sub-region at the UN Firearms Protocol negotiations.

Indonesia

Dr. Tonge: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development which environmental projects her Department supports in Indonesia. [116541]

Mr. Foulkes: The importance of environmental protection and sustainable management in Indonesia cannot be denied. They are essential if poverty is to be eliminated.

Illegal logging, land clearing and forest fires, habitat loss and haze are among the problems focusing the environment and which ultimately affect poor people's livelihoods. These issues pose a very significant threat to the environment as deforestation continues at an alarming rate.

We intend to help tackle these problems but as part of a collective effort with the international community to facilitate Indonesian solutions to Indonesian problems. The result should be a programme that helps Indonesia to manage forests more equitably and sustainably, giving poor people a greater share of the benefits.

Drug Enforcement

Dr. Tonge: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what recent representations she has made to the UNDCP concerning the programme scope. [116548]

Clare Short: My Department continues to contribute to the Government's dialogue with United Nations Drug Control Programme (UNDCP) on the scope of their programme. DFID officials were involved in the Government's preparations for the meetings in March of the Commission on Narcotic Drugs which oversees the work of UNDCP, and of the Major Donors to UNDCP.

Drug Eradication Programmes

Dr. Tonge: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what recent discussions she has held with the World bank concerning its policy towards drug eradication programmes in poor countries. [116547]

Clare Short: My Department scrutinises World bank Country Assistance Strategy Papers to ensure that illicit drugs are properly covered in countries where they are an issue. Discussion on illicit drugs takes place with the bank at official level where appropriate.

Forest Fires (Sumatra)

Dr. Tonge: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what recent representations her Department has received concerning forest fires in Sumatra; and if she will make a statement. [116542]

Clare Short: No formal representations have been made to my Department regarding the forest fires in Sumatra. Rapid deforestation over the past two decades has led to a situation where forest fires and smoke pollution from illegal land clearing has become an annual problem during the mid-year dry season. The fires have started unusually early this year, although most recent reports suggest that the rains have again quelled the fires in both Sumatra and Kalimantan.

A number of donors are supporting efforts to combat forest fires directly. My Department is keen to work with others to address the underlying causes. We are helping design a programme that will promote more equitable and sustainable management of Indonesia's forests and give poor people a greater share of the benefits.

Seychelles

Dr. Tonge: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what financial assistance her Department has provided to the Government of the Seychelles; and if she will make a statement. [116552]

Clare Short: Britain's bilateral assistance to the Seychelles since 1996–97 was as follows:

	£
1996–97	406,000
1997–98	328,000
1998–99	216,000

Uruguay Round

Mr. Alexander: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what plans she has to support calls from developing countries to extend the deadline for compliance with the Uruguay Round agreements. [116111]

Clare Short: The UK, with our EU partners, recognises the difficulties faced by some developing countries in implementing WTO Agreements. We are ready to look sympathetically at requests for deadline extensions on a case-by-case basis, and agree that there should be no action to enforce implementation for the duration of negotiations on a new trade Round. Consultations are currently under way in Geneva on this and other implementation issues and I hope that a formally agreed position will emerge soon.

In the meantime, our £16 million programme of trade-related technical assistance is helping developing countries participate in the multilateral trading system more effectively. (Details have been placed in the House of Commons Library). This programme provides assistance with implementation of Uruguay Round Agreements.

Education Aid

Dr. Harris: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what percentage of United Kingdom aid to developing countries is for basic education. [115791]

Clare Short: In 1998 about 5 per cent. of the UK's bilateral official development assistance, which is £800 million, was spent on basic education.

Zimbabwe

Mr. Nicholas Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development if she will make a statement on the future of her Department's aid programme in Zimbabwe. [115434]

Clare Short: Our programmes in Zimbabwe are focused on assisting the poor—who are suffering most from the current crises. We have made clear since 1997 that we strongly support the case for land reform in Zimbabwe and have been willing to support reforms that are transparent, lawful and focused on providing land for poor Zimbabweans. I have recently approved a £5 million programme to support a land reform initiative that respects these principles which are being organised by civil society and the private sector.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Company Mergers

Mr. Berry: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what research his Department has undertaken into the effect on employment of mergers. [115517]

Dr. Howells: The Department of Trade and Industry has not undertaken any research specifically on the employment effects of mergers. However, last year the Invest in Britain Bureau commissioned a study on the effects of acquisition of UK manufacturing companies by foreign investors. This included some analysis of the effects of foreign acquisition on employment. This report is available from the IBB.

Mr. Berry: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how many mergers between UK companies have taken place in each of the last five years; how many of these mergers have been referred to him; and in how many of these mergers he has intervened. [115518]

Dr. Howells: The annexe gives details of merger cases in the last five years.

Annexe—Merger Statistics 1995–99

1. Table 1 details the number of mergers that there have been between UK companies in the last five years.

Table 1: Mergers between UK companies

	Number
1995	505
1996	584
1997	504
1998	635
1999	492

Source:
Office for National Statistics

2. Strictly comparable figures are not-readily available, but the number of merger cases (which includes mergers between foreign and UK companies) in the last five years on which the Director

General of Fair Trading (DGFT) has submitted advice to the Secretary of State on whether to refer them to the Competition Commission is given in Table 2.

Table 2: Mergers cases on which DGFT advised the Secretary of State

	Number
1995	203
1996	198
1997	186
1998	222
1999	220

3. Table 3: gives information on the Secretary of State's decisions in the light of the DGFT's advice. He could refer the merger to the MMC/Competition Commission (CC); ask the DGFT to seek undertakings in lieu of reference; or clear the merger without a reference.

Table 3: Secretary of State's decisions on advice from the DGFT

	1995	1996	1997	1998	1999
Referred to the MMC/CC	9	13	10	8	10
Undertakings in lieu	2	4	1	3	4

4. Table 4: gives information on the Secretary of State's decisions in the light of the MMC/CC report. In all newspaper cases, and for other cases where the MMC/CC has found that the merger may be expected to operate against the public interest, the Secretary of State can allow the merger to proceed with no conditions; allow it to proceed under certain conditions; or prohibit it. In non-newspaper cases where the MMC/CC has found that the merger may be expected not to operate against the public interest, the Secretary of State can take no action on the merger.

Table 4: Decisions on mergers referred to the MMC/CC in each year

	1995	1996	1997	1998	1999
Mergers referred	11	14	11	9	18
Cleared	5	4	4	1	7
Prohibited	3	6	2	4	0
Conditions	3	4	2	3	3
Set aside	0	0	3	1	4
Not yet published	0	0	0	0	4

Notes:
1. The number of mergers referred includes newspaper cases on which the DGFT does not give advice. This accounts for the discrepancy between the first rows of tables 3 and 4.
2. Although this table details decisions in the year in which the reference took place, the decision on a merger which has been referred is often taken in a year other than that in which the reference took place.

Blue Arrow

Mr. Peter Bradley: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what other DTI investigations into Blue Arrow have been (a) undertaken or (b) commissioned by his Department other than that which led to the report published on 24 September 1992. [114471]

Dr. Howells [holding answer 16 March 2000]: It is my Department's well established practice not to comment on whether or not confidential investigations have been or are being carried out.

Mr. Peter Bradley: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry (1) to whom the inspectors' report on Blue Arrow was distributed prior to its publication in September 1992; [114468]

(2) which (a) companies and (b) individuals who had access to the inspectors' report on Blue Arrow prior to its publication in September 1992 made representations as to its contents; [114469]

(3) if amendments to the draft inspectors' report on Blue Arrow report were made following representations by interested parties prior to its publication. [114470]

Dr. Howells [holding answer 16 March 2000]: It is standard practice to offer the parties involved, which would include the company, those criticised and other principal figures, access to an inspectors' signed report prior to its publication. This is in accordance with section 437(3) of the Companies Act 1985. The practice, which was followed prior to publication of the Blue Arrow report, is a confidential process. Representations were received about the content of the report and its publication but no amendments were made to it prior to publication. The report published was that signed by the inspectors on 4 June 1991.

Phoenix Fund

Mr. Chope: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how many applications have been received for payments from the Phoenix Fund for the current financial year; how many have been successful; and how much money has been distributed. [114389]

Mr. Caborn [holding answer 13 March 2000]: The only application for payment this year has been in respect of the Business Volunteer Mentoring Association, details of which were set out in the answer on 16 March 2000, Official Report, column 273W.

Mr. Chope: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will place in the Library a copy of the guidance issued to applicants to the Phoenix Fund, pursuant to his News Release of 10 November 1999; and if he will make a statement. [114390]

Mr. Caborn [holding answer 13 March 2000]: In line with the timetable set out in the report of the Policy Action Team 3 (on Enterprise and Social Exclusion), guidance will be published next month. I shall ensure that a copy will be placed in the Library of the House.

Astra

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he was requested to hand over file bundles 120, 121, 140 and 141 in the Astra case to the JDS tribunal in the case of Gerald James; and what factors underlay his decisions in respect of those file bundles. [115411]

Dr. Howells: No requests for disclosure of information were received from the JDS tribunal in the case of Gerald James.

Pakistan (Exports)

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will list the (a) standard and (b) open individual export licences for export to Pakistan that have been granted since 12 October 1999, showing in each case the Military List rating; and how many applications for each category of licence are awaiting a decision. [116124]

Dr. Howells: For the period 12 October 1999 to 14 January 2000, I refer my hon. Friend to the answer I gave him on 25 January 2000, Official Report, column 202W.

The entry in the relevant legislation under which the export of goods is controlled is known as their rating. The Export Control Organisation's computer databases have been interrogated. Between 15 January 2000 and 17 March 2000, no Standard Individual Export Licences (SIELs) and no Open Individual Export Licences (OIELs) were issued covering the export to consignees or end-users in Pakistan of goods subject to export control by being listed in Part III of Schedule 1 to the Export of Goods (Control) Order 1994, commonly known as the Military List.

As at 17 March 2000, decisions had not yet been taken on 85 applications for a SIEL and 15 applications for an OIEL to export such goods to Pakistan.

Individual licence applications pending as at 17 March 2000 covering the export to Pakistan of goods on the Military List

Rating	Number of pending applications for SIELs covering goods with this rating	Number of pending applications for OIELs covering goods with this rating
ML1	5	0
ML2	2	0
ML3	4	0
ML4	5	0
ML5	1	0
ML6	5	2
ML9	10	4
ML10	32	7
ML11	2	0
ML13	1	4
ML14	1	1
ML16	4	1
ML17	2	1
ML18	11	0
ML21	0	1
ML22	1	4
PL5001	0	1
PL5017	3	1
End-use	1	0

This information should be considered in light of the answer I gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Kingswood (Mr. Berry) on 27 July 1999, Official Report, columns 307–08W.

In addition, Pakistan is a permitted destination on certain Open General Export Licences covering the export of goods on the Military List; copies of all Open General Export Licences valid at any time during the period are in the Library of the House.

Regional Aid

Mr. Redwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will amend his regional aid map proposals to bring them into line with EU rules. [115839]

Mr. Byers [holding answer 22 March 2000]: Discussions with the Commission on a new regional aid map are continuing. The new regional aid map must be approved by the Commission.

Mr. Redwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if regional aid can be paid prior to the regional aid map being approved. [115961]

Mr. Byers [holding answer 23 March 2000]: I refer the right hon. Member to the reply which I gave my hon. Friend the Member for Bolton, North-East (Mr. Crausby) on 21 December 1999, Official Report, column 465W.

Mr. Redwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how large a reduction in the number of people covered by the regional aid map the United Kingdom is required to make. [116595]

Mr. Byers [holding answer 28 March 2000]: I refer the right hon. Member to the reply given to the hon. Member for Christchurch (Mr. Chope) on 31 March 1999, Official Report, columns 804–05W.

Mr. Redwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if Alchemy has applied for regional selective assistance for the Longbridge site. [116218]

Mr. Byers [holding answer 24 March 2000]: No.

Mr. Redwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how much regional aid money will be available in the financial year 2000–01 for (a) England, (b) Scotland, (c) Wales and (d) the UK. [116216]

Mr. Byers [holding answer 24 March 2000]: The figures for England will be set out in the DTI's Expenditure Plans, Command Document 4611, which we expect to publish on 11 April. A copy will be placed in the Library of the House. Expenditure in Scotland and Wales is a devolved matter.

Mr. Redwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how much regional aid he plans to spend in the budget year 2000–01 in (a) the North-East, (b) Devon, (c) Cornwall and (d) the West Midlands. [115963]

Mr. Byers [holding answer 23 March 2000]: Details of regional aid will be set out in the DTI's Expenditure Plans, Command Document 4611, which we expect to publish on 11 April. A copy will be placed in the Library of the House.

Mr. Redwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry when he plans to meet the EU Commissioner to discuss the regional aid map. [115837]

Mr. Byers [holding answer 22 March 2000]: Commissioner Monti and I have regular contact on a range of issues including the regional aid map. I last met him on 2 March 2000 when we discussed the regional aid map.

Mr. Redwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he is able to make regional aid available to Alchemy to invest at Longbridge on the same basis as was proposed for BMW. [115838]

Mr. Byers [holding answer 22 March 2000]: The area in which Longbridge is located will qualify for Regional Selective Assistance.

Rover Dealerships

Mr. Redwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what assessment he has made of the number of jobs which are dependent on Rover dealerships. [115962]

Mr. Byers [holding answer 23 March 2000]: Almost 12,000 people are employed in Rover's 300 franchised dealerships in the UK.

Arachnoiditis

Mr. David Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will commission research into the causes and treatment of arachnoiditis; and if he will make a statement. [116107]

Ms Hewitt: The Government fund health and medical research mainly through the Medical Research Council (MRC) and the Department of Health.

The MRC has a broad remit which covers all areas of research relating to human health. Although the MRC do not fund research specifically into the treatment of arachnoiditis, the MRC are funding research on one of the causes of arachnoiditis, meningitis. In 1998–99 the MRC spent about £525,000 on research of direct relevance to the cause and treatment of meningitis.

Ice-cream Market

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will implement the findings of the Competition Commission to ensure that consumers obtain the benefits of effective competition in the impulse ice-cream market for the coming season. [115955]

Dr. Howells: My right hon. Friend announced on 28 January his proposals for remedying the adverse findings of the Competition Commission report.

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry on what date the undertakings by Birds Eye Walls will come into effect in relation to the impulse ice-cream market. [115956]

Dr. Howells: Undertakings on interim remedies given on the 16 February came into effect immediately. The Director General of Fair Trading is negotiating further undertakings concerning outlet and freezer exclusivity and retrospective discounts. My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State asked the Director General of Fair Trading to seek to obtain undertakings by 31 March. The date at which they would come into effect, together with the terms themselves, are subject to negotiation.

National Weights and Measures Laboratory

Mr. Anthony D. Wright: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what his plans are for the next quinquennial review of the National Weights and Measures Laboratory. [117206]

Mr. Byers: The Modernising Government White Paper (Cm 4310, March 1999) set out the Government's commitment to delivery of high quality, responsive public services and the approach to quinquennial reviews of Executive Agencies has now been re-focused to reflect this modernisation agenda. I have set in train therefore a Review of the National Weights and Measures Laboratory (NWML) which will, in keeping with the new approach, consider all the organisational options for the Laboratory and ways in which to improve performance.

The Review Steering Board is chaired by Mr. Robert Foster, Director, Innovation Policy and Standards, at the DTI. Mr. John Lee of the National Measurement Laboratories Unit in the DTI is the Secretary to the Board. The Board has appointed Mr. Martin Rumbelow as Reviewer.

The Board has adopted the following Terms of Reference for the Review:

The Reviewer is to consider and recommend:

first, whether Agency status remains the most suitable way of delivering the services provided by NWML, considering all the options, including abolition, continued Agency status, market testing, merger or rationalisation, privatisation and strategic contracting out, taking into account NWML's contribution to the objectives of the Department and of the Government as a whole, developments in the national and international legislative, regulatory and commercial environment in which it operates, and the views of its customers and staff; and second, what additional services and functions could be provided, whether fee income could be increased, whether NWML's call on DTI resources could be reduced, and how its services and functions could be provided more effectively, for example through the increased use of partnership working and better use of information and communication technology, ensuring that lessons learned and best practice are clearly identified in the Report.

The review is to be undertaken in accordance with the latest Cabinet Office guidance. The Reviewer will report at intervals to a Steering Board. It will be the task of the Steering Board to respond flexibly to the Reviewer's proposals during the progress of the Review, each member contributing guidance and knowledge, including where appropriate the good offices of his or her parent department. The Steering Board will ensure that Ministers, the Treasury, the Cabinet Office, and the staff and customers of the NWML are kept informed of the progress of the Review and will facilitate the gathering of information for the Reviewer and his or her communication with staff and customers.

The membership of the Review Steering Board is as follows:

Mr. Robert Foster (Chairman)—Director, Innovation Policy and Standards, DTI

Mr. Noel Hunter—County Trading Standards Officer, Warwickshire County Council

Mr. Dick Farman—Strategic Planning Director, Avery Berkel Group

Mr. Harold Gay—Group Trading and Safety Legislation Manager, The Boots Company plc

Dr. Seton Bennett—Director and Chief Executive, National Weights and Measures Laboratory

Mr. Shelley Charik—Director, National Measurement System, DTI

Mr. Howard Ewing—Director, Consumer Advice and Information, DTI

Dr. Les Whalley—Deputy Director, Standards and Technical Regulations, DTI

Mr. Clive Fleming—Assistant Director, Executive Agencies, NDPBs And Service First, DTI

Mr. Tim Dymond—Cabinet Office

Ms Debbie Edwards—Enterprise Team, HM Treasury.

The Reviewer, Mr. Rumbelow is contacting interested parties he believes can provide information and advice to assist him with his work. Information and advice from other interested parties is also welcome and should be sent to the Secretary to the Board:

Mr. John Lee
National Measurement Laboratories Unit
Room 351
Department of Trade and Industry
151 Buckingham Palace Road
London
SW1W 9SS
Telephone: 020 7215 1416
Fax: 020 7215 1350
E-mail:john.lee@dti.gsi.gov.uk

BNFL

Mr. Blizzard: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will make a statement on the timing of a public-private partnership for BNFL. [117205]

Mrs. Liddell: Recent events at BNFL have clearly been a set back for the company. It is important that BNFL now responds positively to the HSE's reports on the Sellafield site and works to achieve necessary improvements in its safety and commercial performance. This will take time. As a result, it now appears that the earliest possible date for the introduction of any PPP into BNFL could not be before the latter part of 2002. The introduction and timing of any PPP remains subject to BNFL's performance against the targets set by Government as well as the further work being undertaken by the Government and their advisers.

EEA (Parallel Trading)

Mrs. Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will make a statement on Her Majesty's Government's policy regarding the legality of parallel trading of goods from outside the European economic area markets; and what estimate he has made of the impact on United Kingdom manufacturing if such trading is rendered lawful. [116589]

Dr. Howells: The judgment of the Court of Justice of the European Communities in the Silhouette case [C-355/96] of July 1998 highlighted the extent of powers afforded by European law to trade mark owners. In particular, the Court decided that they can prevent the import into the Community of goods which they themselves have already sold in other parts of the world. This confirmed as a matter of law that the European Trade Marks Directive does allow trade mark owners to use their rights to prevent import of their goods into the Community after they have been marketed elsewhere.

Since this judgment, the European Commission has produced a study [Trade Mark exhaustion—Study on the economic consequences of alternative regimes, by National Economic Research Associates for the European Commission] on the economic affects of such rights, and the results which can be expected if trade mark owners were to be denied them. The conclusions of this study are that a move to so-called international exhaustion would create beneficial impacts on the European economy. In particular, prices in some key consumer sectors would fall significantly, and competition in these sectors would increase as brand owners and retailers respond to increasingly competitive markets.

Our own studies agree with the conclusions reached by the Commission. In particular there is likely to be a beneficial, if small, impact on the United Kingdom economy. We expect a maximum of about £400 million of additional imports would be generated by moving to international exhaustion. Total United Kingdom imports are around £220 billion, of which £180 billion are imports of goods. Additional levels of parallel imports would, therefore, be equivalent to approximately 0.2 per cent. of United Kingdom imports. Such imports are likely to arise in a limited number of sectors, principally clothing, footwear, sports and luxury goods for which there is already a strong import market. It seems likely that parallel imports would take market share from existing imports rather than domestic manufacturers.

In the light of these studies, we are discussing trade mark rights with our European partners with a view to changing current legislation. However, in some sectors where the Single Market is not yet complete or which are subject to other special conditions, for example pharmaceuticals, the benefits of international exhaustion are not clear, and care will be needed to ensure that unwanted results do not arise.

Synchrotron

Mr. Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry which physical scientists were consulted and on what dates as part of the decision-making process for the relocation of the synchrotron. [116672]

Mr. Byers: A user consultation for the physical scientists was held on 22–23 January 1999 and on 14 December 1999 that addressed issues relating to the synchrotron location.

Telewest Communications

Dr. Cable: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will invite the Office of Fair Trading to investigate Microsoft's proposed purchase of a stake in Telewest Communications. [116658]

Dr. Howells [holding answer 28 March 2000]: The size and European dimension of this case mean that it has fallen to the consideration of the EC competition authorities under the EC Merger Regulation (ECMR).

I understand that the European Commission announced on 22 March that it was opening a full investigation into this case and it now has four months within which to come to a final decision. Member states have a formal role in this process.

Zimbabwe

Mr. Salmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what military materials have been given approval for delivery to Zimbabwe in (a) 1999 and (b) 2000. [116263]

Dr. Howells [holding answer 27 March 2000]: The entry in the relevant legislation under which the export of goods is controlled is known as their rating. The Export Control Organisation's computer databases have been interrogated. Between 1 January 1999 and 17 March 2000, 18 Standard Individual Export Licences (SIELs) and six Open Individual Export Licences (OIELs) were issued covering the export to consignees or end-users in Zimbabwe of goods subject to export control by being listed in Part III of Schedule 1 to the Export of Goods (Control) Order 1994, commonly known as the Military List. Individual licences may cover a range of goods with various ratings (and OIELs may also cover a range of countries). Where this is so, the licence is included in the table in the total for all of the relevant ratings.

Individual Licences issued between 1 January 1999 and 31 December 1999 and 1 January 2000 and 17 March 2000 covering the export to Zimbabwe of goods on the Military List

	No. of SIELs issued covering goods with this rating		No. of OIELs issued covering goods with this rating
Rating	1999	2000	1999	2000
ML1	1	2	1	0
ML2	5	0	1	0
ML3	1	0	0	0
ML4	0	0	0	0
ML5	0	0	1	0
ML6	1	0	1	0
ML7	0	0	0	0
ML8	0	0	0	0
ML9	0	0	0	0
ML10	0	7	0	0
ML11	0	0	2	0
PL 5002	0	0	1	0
PL 5018	1	0	2	0

This information does not cover any Media OIELs that may have been issued during this period. Media OIELs authorise the export to all destinations of protective clothing, mainly for the protection of aid agency workers and journalists, when working in areas of conflict.

Information on export licensing decisions in 1999, including details of the military equipment licensed, will be set out in the 1999 Annual Report on Strategic Export Controls, which will be published in due course. Similar details of the military equipment licensed in later years will be set out in the relevant Annual Reports.

This information should be considered in light of the answer I gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Kingswood (Mr. Berry) on 27 July 1999, Official Report, columns 307–08W.

In addition, Zimbabwe is a permitted destination on certain Open General Export Licences, covering the export of goods on the Military List; copies of all Open General Export Licences valid at any time during the period are in the Library of the House.

Rome Convention

Mr. Duncan: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry (1) what (a) committees and (b) working groups his Department has set up to consider the revision of the Rome Convention; and if he will list the members and meetings scheduled; [116060]

(2) what consultation (a) he has undertaken and (b) is planned by his Department on the revision of the Rome Convention; [116062]

(3) if he will list the meetings his Department has held with outside bodies on the revision of the Rome Convention; what conclusions were reached; and if he will deposit these in the Library. [116065]

Dr. Howells [holding answer 24 March 2000]: I refer the hon. Member to the answer given by my hon. Friend the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department on 24 March 2000, Official Report, column 691W.

Mr. Duncan: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what discussions have taken place with the Lord Chancellor's Department on the implications of the revision of the Rome Convention for electronic commerce; and if he will make a statement. [116063]

Dr. Howells [holding answer 24 March 2000]: The Department and the Lord Chancellor's Department have had a number of general discussions about the Rome Convention and electronic commerce. Recently these have concentrated on the timing of the review of the Convention. When the plans for the review are known the Departments will work closely together on the policy issues affecting electronic commerce, in consultation with business and other organisations.

West Midlands Task Force

Miss Kirkbride: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what representation will be given to Bromsgrove District Authority on the West Midlands Task Force. [116280]

Mr. Alan Johnson: The Chair of the Longbridge Task Force has invited David Bryant, Chief Executive of Bromsgrove District Council to join the Development SubGroup of the Task Force.

The Task Force will take the work of the SubGroup into account when producing its comprehensive report and supporting recommendations to my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry.

BMW

Mr. Redwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what reports he has received concerning BMW's plans for the location of the production of the new medium saloon. [116215]

Mr. Byers [holding answer 24 March 2000]: BMW are still considering where to locate production of their new medium saloon.

Mr. Redwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what estimate he has made of the number of people employed in BMW dealerships and spares operations in the UK. [116221]

Mr. Byers [holding answer 24 March 2000]: Approximately 5,550 people are employed in BMW dealerships in the UK and about 1,000 more are employed in BMW's parts operations.

Mr. Redwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what estimate he has made of the number of people employed in Rover dealerships in the UK. [116220]

Mr. Byers [holding answer 24 March 2000]: Almost 12,000 people are employed in Rover's 300 franchised dealerships in the UK.

Mr. Redwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what representations he has made to BMW about the sale of the new Mini through Rover dealerships. [116214]

Mr. Byers [holding answer 24 March 2000]: Discussions with representatives of BMW continue. They include the situation faced by Rover dealerships.

Mr. Redwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what financial aid packages will be made available and on what timescale to assist workers who lose their jobs following the sale of Rover. [116217]

Mr. Byers [holding answer 24 March 2000]: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given to my hon. Friend the Member for Birmingham, Northfield (Mr. Burden) on 28 March 2000, Official Report, columns 109–10W.

Mr. Redwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what estimate he has made of the number of jobs that will be lost at Longbridge in the next 12 months. [116219]

Mr. Byers [holding answer 24 March 2000]: Neither BMW nor Alchemy Partners have given an estimate of the number of jobs which might be lost.

LORD CHANCELLOR'S DEPARTMENT

Independent Tribunal Service

Mrs. Fyfe: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department, what criteria are applied for selecting members for Independent Tribunal Service panels. [116302]

Mr. Lock: Job descriptions and statements of eligibility and criteria are available for applicants for each office advertised. Copies of the eligibility and criteria for appointment guidance for posts within the Appeals Service have been placed in the Libraries of both Houses.

Mrs. Fyfe: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department, what reasons have been given to former members of the Independent Tribunal Service panels in the past year as to why their services were no longer required. [116301]

Mr. Lock: All former panel members who satisfied the age and appropriate qualifications criteria were offered interviews. Those who accepted and were unsuccessful at interview were given only this information, but were provided with the panel's reasons for rejection on request.

Mrs. Fyfe: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department, what is the process for selecting members of the panels for the Independent Tribunal Service. [116303]

Mr. Lock: Vacancies are advertised in the national press and professional journals. Appointment is on the basis of interview and of consultation with the relevant professional community. The Lord Chancellor appoints the candidates who best demonstrate that they meet the appropriate criteria.

Mrs. Fyfe: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department how many persons with a trade union background were appointed or re-appointed as members of the panel for hearing appeals by the Independent Tribunal Service for (a) Glasgow and (b) Scotland in 1999; and how many in each category held a position on such panel immediately before panel members were informed that they had to re-apply for their positions. [116555]

Mr. Lock: There is not, nor ever has been, a formal requirement that any panel members have a trade union background and this information is not accordingly collected. It is not therefore possible to provide a breakdown by category. An independent review of all relevant appointments could be conducted only at disproportionate cost.

Legal Services Ombudsman

Helen Jones: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department if Ms Ann Chant has completed her review of the Office of the Legal Services Ombudsman; and when it is intended to publish her report. [117207]

Mr. Lock: Ms Chant has completed her Review of the Office of the Legal Services Ombudsman. The Department has today published her Report and copies have been placed in the Libraries of both Houses.

CABINET OFFICE

Advertising Budgets

Mr. Baker: To ask the Minister for the Cabinet Office what is her Department's advertising budget for (a) 1999–2000 and (b) 2000–01. [110257]

Mr. Stringer: The advertising budgets for the Cabinet Office for the 1999–2000 and 2000–01 are as follows:

Year	£000
1999–2000	8,998
2000–01	69.5

These figures include the advertising undertaken by executive agencies in publicising their services provided to other parts of government. The Central Office of Information undertakes advertising on behalf of other parts of government, and this expenditure is excluded from Cabinet Office figures. Of the 1999–2000 total, £8,918,000 is associated with the Millennium Bug Information Programmes.

Civil Service (Secondment)

Dr. Tony Wright: To ask the Minister for the Cabinet Office how many people from the private sector are on secondment to the Civil Service; and in which Departments they are employed. [116357]

Mr. Stringer: The Modernising Government White Paper and Sir Richard Wilson's recent report to the Prime Minister on Civil Service reform made it clear that this Government are keen to promote the exchange of people and good practice between the Civil Service and other organisations. Such opportunities can take many forms, ranging from temporary secondments, to short term attachments, to job sharing and joint training.

In the year ended 31 March 1999 there were 362 secondments and attachments from business and industry to the Civil Service. A breakdown of this figure by Department is attached. Figures from 1 April 1999 to 31 March 2000 are due to be provided by Departments.

Interchange returns—1998–99

Inward only	Industry and Commerce—secondments			Industry and Commerce—attachments
Department/agency	Male	Female	Total	Male	Female	Total
Cabinet Office	3	5	8	0	0	0
Charity Commission	0	0	0	0	0	0
COI	0	0	0	0	0	0
CPS	0	0	0	0	0	0
Crown Office	0	0	0	0	0	0
DCMS	—	—	0	0	0	0
DETR	14	3	17	3	1	4
DfEE	0	0	0	1	3	4
DfID	0	1	1	1	0	1
DoH	6	4	10	0	0	0
DSS	0	0	0	—	—	0
DTI	160	23	183	3	0	3
Employment Service	16	11	27	0	0	0
FCO	0	0	0	0	0	0
Government. Actuary's Department	0	0	0	0	0	0
Government. Office for the Regions	16	3	19	0	0	0
GCHQ	0	0	0	0	0	0
Health and Safety Executive	2	0	2	0	0	0
HM C and E	0	1	1	0	0	0
HM Land Registry	—	—	0	—	—	0
HM Treasury	16	5	21	1	0	1
Home Office	0	0	0	0	1	1
Inland Revenue	0	1	1	0	0	0
Intervention Board	0	0	0	0	0	0
LCD	0	1	1	0	0	0
Legal Sec. to Law Officers	0	0	0	0	0	0
MAFF	0	0	0	1	0	1
MOD	23	2	25	1	0	1
National Savings	0	0	0	0	0	0
NILO	0	0	0	0	0	0
Northern Ireland Office	0	0	0	0	0	0
Northern Ireland Court Service	0	0	0	0	0	0
Offer	—	—	0	—	—	0
Ofgas	0	0	0	0	0	0
Oflot	—	—	0	—	—	0
Ofsted	0	0	0	0	0	0
Oft	0	0	0	0	0	0
Oftel	3	3	6	0	0	0
Ofwat	0	0	0	0	0	0
Ohmcis	0	0	0	0	0	0
Opraf	—	—	0	—	—	0
Ordnance Survey	0	0	0	0	0	0
ORR	0	0	0	0	0	0
Privy Council Office	0	0	0	0	0	0
Public Record Office	—	—	0	—	—	0
Registers of Scotland	0	0	0	0	0	0
Royal Mint	0	0	0	0	0	0
Scottish Office	7	8	15	0	1	1
Serious Fraud Office	0	0	0	0	0	0
Treasury Solicitors Department	0	0	0	0	0	0
War Pensions Agency	0	0	0	0	0	0
Welsh Office	4	4	8	0	0	0
Total	270	75	345	11	6	17

Car Pool

Mr. Cox: To ask the Minister for the Cabinet Office how many motor vehicles in the Government car pool are available for use by Ministers. [116334]

Mr. Ian McCartney: Responsibility for this matter has been delegated under the terms of the Framework Document to the Government Car and Despatch Agency. I have asked its Chief Executive, Mr. Nick Matheson, to write to my hon. Friend.

Letter from Nick Matheson to Mr. Tom Cox, dated March 2000:

The Minister of State, Cabinet Office has asked me in my capacity as the Chief Executive responsible for the Government Car Service to reply to your Parliamentary Question about the number of cars available to ministers.

The Government Car Service (GCS) provided 85 vehicles allocated permanently to Ministers' Private Offices. In addition, GCS has a fleet of 28 "pool" cars which Ministers may use if their usual car and driver is unavailable.

Ministers are not obliged to use GCS and Departments are free to choose other providers of these services.

Written Answers to Questions

Thursday 30 March 2000

CABINET OFFICE

Modernising Government

Angela Smith: To ask the Minister for the Cabinet Office what changes she intends to make to the Modernising Government Action Plan targets for delivery of Government services electronically. [117046]

Mr. Ian McCartney: In October 1997, the Prime Minister announced that within five years a member of the public would be able to carry out a quarter of dealings with Government electronically through their telephone, television, or computer. Further, in March 1999, in our Modernising Government White Paper we proposed that all Government services should be available online by 2008.

We have been making good progress. Already, we offer online tax returns and online advice in areas such as health, overseas travel and consumer protection. Businesses can make online returns to Companies House, and soon they will be able to make VAT returns online. Next week the Small Business Service will launch a website offering small and medium businesses tailored advice based on their size, location, and sector.

But we want to increase the pace of change in Government so that we can offer our businesses and citizens more efficient and effective services. I am pleased to announce that the Prime Minister has today decided to bring forward the date by which all Government services should be available online from 2008 to 2005. Also, in line with the outcome agreed at the Lisbon summit, Government Departments will be expected to prioritise their proposals for offering all services online by 2005 so as to ensure online access to main basic public services by 2003.

We are also introducing an improved monitoring regime. Progress towards the target will no longer be based on the number of individual transactions with Departments. Instead we will monitor progress on the basis of the number of services that we deliver online. The monitoring regime for UK based services will as far as possible be aligned with public service agreements and service delivery agreements.

Business Regulation

Mr. Page: To ask the Minister for the Cabinet Office if she will estimate the total administrative cost imposed on businesses as a result of regulation since May 1997. [R] [115689]

Mr. Stringer: The information required is not held in the form requested and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

All regulatory proposals likely to impact on business are subject to Regulatory Impact Assessment (RIA). RIAs are published and placed in the Libraries of the House. In addition a series of Command Papers list RIAs for each six month period, the most recent being Cm 4664.

RIAs contain a wide range of information on the costs and benefits of each proposal.

Taskforces

Mr. Maclennan: To ask the Minister for the Cabinet Office if an agreed definition of taskforces has been identified since the publication of the sixth report of the Neill Committee (Cm 4557-I). [116640]

Mr. Stringer: I refer the right hon. Member to the answer given to the right hon. Member for Wells (Mr. Heathcoat-Amory), on 9 December 1999, Official Report, column 634W. We are considering carefully the recommendations made in the sixth Report of the Committee on Standards in Public Life and will respond in due course.

EDUCATION AND EMPLOYMENT

Disability Rights Taskforce

Mr. Berry: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment when the Government will respond to the final report of the disability rights taskforce. [117387]

Ms Hodge: The final report of the Disability Rights Taskforce, "From Exclusion to Inclusion", was published on 13 December 1999. The Government have already announced that they intend to legislate to address the Taskforce's recommendations on education, introducing significant new civil rights for disabled children and students in school, further, higher and adult education. We issued a public consultation paper on the measures to be included in the legislation on 17 March 2000.

Further to the response to the education recommendations, the Government have issued today an interim response to the Taskforce's report, which is available on the Government's Disability website at www.disability.gov.uk or from the DDA Helpline on 0345 622 633. Copies have been placed in the House Libraries. The interim response covers a range of the Taskforce's recommendations in the areas of local government, health and social services, housing and the environment and participation in public life.

The Taskforce made a number of recommendations that require changes to the Disability Discrimination Act and the Government are still considering these. A final response to the report will be made in due course.

Teachers' Pension Scheme

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if he will make a statement about the outcome of the latest valuation of the teachers' pension scheme. [117306]

Mr. Wicks: I have today laid formally before both Houses; the Report and Supplementary Report of the Government Actuary on the Teachers' Pension Scheme for the period 1991–96. As a result of the Supplementary Report, the rate of contribution payable by employers will be increased by 0.95 per cent. from 1 April 2002.

In the Government Actuary's initial report on the valuation of the scheme he recommended that the employer contribution rate should be increased from April 2000 to remove the balance of liability over the next 40 years as required under the pension regulations. The Government Actuary was subsequently asked to advise on the consequences of an alternative approach which would enable the increase in the employer contribution rate to come into effect in 2002, but with the deficit still being removed within 40 years from 2000. We have decided to adopt the alternative approach with the result that some £90 million will be available in each of the next two years for the direct benefit of schools. Teachers can be assured that this approach does not in any way affect the security of the Teachers' Pension Scheme or the level of benefits payable to its members.

Education Spending

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what amounts are projected to be spent from public funds in (a) the United Kingdom, (b) England, (c) Wales, (d) Scotland and (e) Northern Ireland (i) in cash terms and (ii) as a proportion of GDP for financial years 1999–2000, 2000–01 and 2001–02 on education; and if he will make a statement. [116645]

Mr. Blunkett: Next year, the proportion of GDP spent on UK education and training will be around 5.0 per cent., not including education and training supported under the New Deal.

UK education spending will increase from £41.1 billion in 1999–2000 to £45.8 billion in 2000–01, using the narrower definition of education in "Budget 2000", and, subject to spending review decisions to be announced in the summer, £48.0 billion in 2001–02.

The Manifesto commitment was to increase the share of national income spent on education. We shall meet that commitment: spending will be higher as a proportion of GDP by 2001–02 than it was in 1996–97, and over 16 per cent. higher in real terms.

Details of spending in England will be published shortly in the DfEE Departmental Report. Spending in Wales, Scotland and Northern Ireland is the responsibility of the National Assembly, Scottish Executive and Northern Ireland Office.

Internet Access

Dr. Cable: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what impact there has been on (a) the timetable for and (b) the cost of providing internet access to schools as a result of delays caused by the Competition Commission's review of the proposed acquisition by NTL of Cable and Wireless Communications' cable interests. [116960]

Mr. Wills: The Government do not anticipate any delays in the programme for connecting all schools to the internet by 2002. The cost of providing internet access for schools is subject to a number of factors, including the availability of relevant services and competition in the market. It is not yet clear what effect, if any, the proposed merger will have on the cost of such services.

Permanent Exclusion

Ms Buck: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what was the permanent exclusion rate (a) per 1,000 pupils, (b) per 1,000 white pupils and (c) per 1,000 black pupils in each local education authority in (i) 1996–97, (ii) 1997–98 and (iii) 1998–99. [116075]

Ms Estelle Morris: The information requested is available in tables, copies of which have been placed in the Library. Information on permanent exclusions for the academic year 1998–99 is currently being collected and national estimates are expected to be published in a Statistical First Release in May.

New Deal (Young People)

Mr. Allan: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if he will list by unit of delivery (a) how many people joined the full-time education and employment option of the New Deal for 18 to 24-year-olds between January 1998 and the end of September 1999 and (b) how many people were on this option at the end of each month between January 1998 and the end of September 1999. [113677]

Ms Jowell [holding answer 9 March 2000]: There are four separate New Deal options—full-time education and training, employment, voluntary sector and environment task force. There is no full-time education and employment option.

Teacher Training

Mr. Clappison: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what factors he took into account in setting recruitment targets for 1999–2000 for recruitment into initial teacher training for secondary school teachers of (a) mathematics, (b) science, (c) languages and (d) technology. [112978]

Ms Estelle Morris: Targets for recruitment to initial teacher training use teacher supply models which take into consideration: future demand for teachers; projected flows of teachers into and out of the maintained nursery, primary and secondary sectors, split by age and gender.

Further details of assumptions used in the Teacher Supply Models can be found in 'Teacher Supply and Demand Modelling: A technical description', published in July 1998, copies of which are available in the Library.

DEFENCE

Chemical Protection Programme

Helen Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will publish information about the United Kingdom's chemical protection programme. [117307]

Mr. Spellar: The UK's chemical protection programme is designed to protect against the use of chemical weapons. Such a programme is permitted by the Chemical Weapons Convention, with which the United Kingdom is fully compliant. Under the terms of the Convention, we are required to provide information annually to the Organisation for the Prohibition of Chemical Weapons. In accordance with the Government's commitment to openness, I am placing in the House of Commons Library a copy of the summary which has been provided to the Organisation outlining the UK's chemical protection programme for 1999.

Infantry Units

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) what proposals he has for moving infantry units to the north of Scotland; [116781]

(2) what plans he has to assess proposals for the closure of the Aldershot infantry base; [116784]

(3) when Major General Anthony Palmer's report on location changes for Army units will be (a) published and (b) evaluated by Ministers. [116782]

Mr. Gerald Howarth: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement about the future of the Aldershot military garrison. [116783]

Mr. Spellar: An internal discussion document entitled, "The Strategic Development of the Army Training and Recruiting Agency" has been prepared by the Chief Executive of the Agency. The document does not address the location of trained units of the Field Army but rather outlines a possible future strategy for the Agency and covers training establishments only. The report constitutes internal discussion and advice and will not be published under Exemption 2 of the Code of Practice on Access to Government Information.

The work is at a very early stage and recommendations will not be made to Ministers until detailed staffing at an official level has taken place.

Naval Vessels

Mr. Duncan Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what plans he has to acquire Primary Casualty Receiving ships. [116452]

Dr. Moonie [holding answer 27 March 2000]: Our current requirement for a Primary Casualty Receiving ship capability was identified in the Strategic Defence Review and is based on the provision of two ships at different states of readiness each capable of carrying a 200 bed hospital. We hope to place a contract for this in 2002 with the ships being available from 2005.

Mr. Duncan Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what progress has been made in the upgrading of afloat medical support facilities. [116450]

Dr. Moonie [holding answer 27 March 2000]: The three vessels whose medical support facilities are to be upgraded are the Royal Fleet Auxiliaries Argus, Fort George and Fort Victoria. The design work necessary to upgrade the facilities is well advanced and the procurement of equipment has commenced. We plan to carry out the installation work on Argus and Fort George in 2001 and on Fort Victoria in 2002, during scheduled maintenance periods.

Mr. Duncan Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) when the expected in-service date is for the Royal Navy survey ships which will replace HMS Beagle and HMS Bulldog; [116454]

(2) when he will withdraw from service (a) HMS Roebuck, (b) HMS Hecla and (c) HMS Herald; [116455]

(3) what plans he has to procure new survey ships for the Royal Navy. [116456]

Dr. Moonie [holding answer 27 March 2000]: The existing Royal Navy Hydrographic Survey Squadron includes HMS Herald, HMS Bulldog, HMS Beagle, and HMS Roebuck (HMS Hecla was taken out of service in December 1996). The first three of these vessels are planned to leave service between mid 2001 and early 2002 with HMS Roebuck being maintained into 2003.

To meet our future requirements, we plan to replace these ships with new, more capable, multi-role survey vessels, backed by a long-term in-service support contract. These new vessels will provide both hydrographic and oceanographic military surveying data, as well as a combat survey and mine warfare support capability. Balance of investment considerations, including the number of vessels to be acquired, are ongoing, as are contractual negotiations with the preferred bidder, Vosper Thornycroft. We plan to place a contract in the next few months, with new vessels entering service from 2002.

Mr. Duncan Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what will be the cost of each Type 45 destroyer. [116449]

Dr. Moonie: This is a matter for the Chief Executive of the Defence Procurement Agency. I have asked the Chief Executive to write to the hon. Member.

Letter from Robert Walmsley to Mr. Iain Duncan Smith, dated 30 March 2000:

I am replying to your question to the Secretary of State for Defence about the cost of the Type 45 destroyer. This matter falls to me to answer within my area of responsibility as Chief of Defence Procurement and Chief Executive of the Defence Procurement Agency.

The total programme cost for the twelve currently planned Type 45 warships including their missiles is approximately £6Bn. This includes approximately £1.2Bn for the development, design and build of the first of class ship and £1Bn for the development and initial production of the Principal Anti Air Missile System (PAAMS). The balance contains funding for further missile procurement and allows for the incremental acquisition of the combat system. As a result, the platform design will incorporate significant growth margins. The actual cost per individual ship is thus difficult to assess but the average is expected to be within a target cost of about £270M excluding missiles.

Ro-ro Ferries

Mr. Key: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what civilian use he envisages for the new roll-on, roll-off ferries on order for his Department. [116132]

Mr. Spellar [holding answer 27 March 2000]: This is a matter for the Chief Executive of the Defence Procurement Agency. I have asked the Chief Executive to write to the hon. Member.

Letter from Robert Walmsley to Mr. Robert Key, dated 30 March 2000:

I am replying to your question to the Secretary of State for Defence asking whether civilian use is envisaged for the roll on roll off ships that will be provided to meet the MOD's strategic sealift requirements. This matter falls within my area of responsibility as Chief of Defence Procurement and Chief Executive of the Defence Procurement Agency.

MOD is currently proposing to meet its strategic sealift requirement through Private Finance Initiative arrangements, with the objective of maximising value for money and affordability. Rather than procuring ships ourselves we plan, instead, to procure sealift capability in the form of a service. This will comprise a number of vessels (with crews) at differing readiness periods designed to meet our needs, including those of the Joint Rapid Reaction Force. This approach will afford the ship-owner the opportunity to use the vessels for commercial trading when they are not required by MOD. The extent of such commercial use of any underused capacity will depend upon the service provider. Selection of a preferred bidder will be made in late Spring.

Alternative Landing Ships

Mr. Duncan Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when he will place a contract for the Alternative Landing Ships Logistic Programme; and at which shipyard the work will be carried out. [116458]

Dr. Moonie [holding answer 27 March 2000]: This is a matter for the Chief Executive of the Defence Procurement Agency. I have asked the Chief Executive to write to the hon. Member.

Letter from Robert Walmsley to Mr. Iain Duncan Smith, dated 30 March 2000:

I am replying to your question to the Secretary of State for Defence about the Alternative Landing Ships Logistic (ALSL) Programme. This matter falls within my area of responsibility as Chief of Defence Procurement and Chief Executive of the Defence Procurement Agency.

An Invitation to Tender (ITT) has been prepared by the ALSL Integrated Project Team and on current plans will be issued to 5 UK Shipyards in late Spring 2000. Contract placement would occur in late 2000 on completion of tender assessment and final negotiations.

The contract will be awarded to the shipyard that offers the highest confidence that they will provide the best whole life value for money.

United States National Missile Defense Strategy

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what proposals have been made by the United States Department of Defense to use the communications bases at Menwith Hill and Fylingdales as part of the planned United States National Missile Defense Strategy. [116271]

Mr. Spellar: We have received no formal request to this effect, nor would we expect any until after a US decision on whether or not to proceed towards deployment of such a system.

WALES

Workplace Parking

Mr. Gray: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many workplace car parking spaces are available at the buildings used and controlled by his Department. [116771]

Mr. Paul Murphy: My Department uses and controls only one building, which has six workplace car parking spaces available.

Additionally, my Department has offices in the National Assembly building in Cardiff, where we share the car parking facilities, although no specific car parking spaces are reserved for my Department's use.

Websites

Mr. Maclennan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list the expenditure incurred by his Department, agencies and non-departmental public bodies on (a) the setting up and (b) the operation of websites, indicating the cases in which the expenditure has been above that budgeted; and if he will list for each website (i) the topics which have been covered, (ii) the current average number of hits per month and (iii) the estimated expenditure on each website for each of the next three years. [115843]

Mr. Paul Murphy: My Department has one website which contains information about the purpose and structure of my office, together with all our press notices. It was built "in house" at no extra cost to the Welsh Office, our predecessor Department. It is operated on our behalf by NISS (National Information Systems and Services) based at Bath University. Their charges—now and in the future—are a matter of commercial confidentiality but are well within the expenditure budgeted for them. At the present time we are averaging 4,000 (mainly document) hits per month.

New Deal (Over-50s)

Mr. Rowlands: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what estimate he has made of the expenditure on the New Deal for those aged over 50 years in 1999–2000; and what is his estimate for 2000–01. [115077]

Ms Jowell: I have been asked to reply.

New Deal 50 plus was introduced in nine selected areas in October 1999. Forecast expenditure for 1999–2000 is £1.7 million. The New Deal for 50 plus will be available nationally from 3 April 2000 with estimated expenditure for 2000–01 set at £16.1 million from the Windfall Tax and a further £102 million set aside within this Department's Annually Managed Expenditure to cover Employment Credits.

New Deal (Over-25s)

Mr. Rowlands: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what estimate he has made for the New Deal expenditure for over 25-year-olds in 1998–99 and 1999–2000; and if he will estimate the expenditure for 2000–01. [115076]

Ms Jowell: I have been asked to reply.

My Department has spent or allocated the following sums to the New Deal for people aged 25 years and over:

	£ million
1998–99[1]	26
1999–2000[2]	90
2000–01[3]	130

[1] Outturn
[2] Estimated outturn
[3] Provisional allocation

In addition New Deal for 25 plus clients have access to the Work Based Learning for Adults programme which has an annual budget of £328 million.

New Deal (Under-25s)

Mr. Rowlands: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what estimate he has made of the spending on the New Deal for 18 to 24-year-olds in each year since 1997–98; and what estimate he has made of expenditure in 2000–01. [115075]

Ms Jowell: I have been asked to reply.

My Department has spent or allocated the following sums to the New Deal for 18 to 24-year-olds in each year since 1997–98:

	£ million
1997–98[1]	36
1998–99[1]	254
1999–2000[2]	345
2000–01[3]	470

[1] Outturn figures
[2] Estimated outturn
[3] Provisional allocation

HOME DEPARTMENT

Metropolitan Police

Mr. Dismore: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on the progress towards implementing the change to the boundaries of the Metropolitan Police District to make them coterminous with the boundaries of the London boroughs. [117309]

Mr. Straw: The change to the boundaries takes effect on 1 April, as planned. The responsibility for policing those parts of Essex, Hertfordshire and Surrey which are currently within the Metropolitan Police District will pass from the Metropolitan Police to the respective county forces.

Essex Police, Hertfordshire Constabulary, Surrey Police, their Police Authorities, and the Metropolitan Police have prepared for the changeover in a thorough and professional manner. A great deal of detailed work has been put in since I announced the change in June 1998. I commend them for their close co-operation, and I am confident that there will be a smooth transfer of responsibilities. People in the transferring areas need have no concerns about disruption to their local policing service.

The funding for the three county Police Authorities will be increased from April to reflect their enlarged areas. In addition, we are making special payments out of the police grant totalling £10 million to go towards costs arising out of the transfer.

I am confident that the benefits of the boundaries change will soon show through. I decided to change the boundaries for three main reasons.

First, it makes it easier for the criminal justice agencies in the area to work together in the fight to reduce crime. Local councils and other agencies will no longer have to work with two different police forces when discharging their responsibilities under the Crime and Disorder Act 1998. This is an important step towards aligning boundaries in the criminal justice system, thereby improving efficiency and effectiveness.

Secondly, the change supports democratic accountability. It gives local people a say, through their county Police Authority, in the way their area is policed. People in the transferring areas will not have a vote in the forthcoming election for London's Assembly members, who will be in the majority on the new Metropolitan Police Authority. It is right that these areas be policed by county forces whose Police Authorities, with councillor members in the majority, already provide local democratic accountability.

Thirdly, the change allows the Metropolitan Police to focus its efforts on the huge task of policing the nation's capital.

The Metropolitan Police have policed the transferring areas since the time of Sir Robert Peel. I would like to pay tribute to the efforts of all the officers and civil staff of the Metropolitan Police who have worked in these areas over the years. They deserve the Government's thanks, and the thanks of the local communities.

Mr. Dismore: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when the Metropolitan Police Commissioner's Policing and Performance Plan for 2000–01 will be published. [117310]

Mr. Straw: The Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis tells me that he will be publishing details of his Policing and Performance Plan for 2000–01 on the Metropolitan police website http://www.met.police.uk on Friday 31 March.

Advertisements have also been placed in the London press summarising key performance data and targets set out in the Plan.

Some of the performance data for 1999–2000 are provisional. Audited data will be included in a hard copy version of the Plan to be published in June.

The Policing and Performance Plan combines the requirements of an annual Policing Plan, an annual Efficiency Plan and, for the first time, an annual Best Value Performance Plan.

The Plan sets out the Metropolitan police's two key priorities for 2000–01: reducing crime and disorder and diversity. The Plan sets out the Metropolitan police's crime reduction targets—a two per cent. reduction in burglary, stopping the increasing level of street crime and an eight per cent. reduction in vehicle crime—together with key activities for delivery. It also contains a suite of Best Value Performance Indicators (BVPIs) with a summary of the Metropolitan police's performance against those BVPIs for which historical data is available and targets for future performance. The Plan also sets out a five year plan of Best Value reviews. The areas selected for review in the coming year are; investigating and detecting crime; combating bureaucracy and managing information; and consultation.

The Plan also sets out the means by which the Metropolitan police aims to exceed the two per cent. efficiency gains required by the Government from all police forces.

The Commissioner will report on performance against the Plan to me, in my capacity as the Metropolitan police's police authority, and to the Metropolitan Police Committee, until 3 July, when the Metropolitan Police Authority (MPA) is established.

I believe that the Commissioner's Plan will enable the MPA to make an effective start by providing a solid basis for monitoring and interrogating the Metropolitan police's performance as the foundation for the Plan the MPA will develop for 2001–02.

Prison Service

Mr. Hope: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he will publish the Prison Service's Business Plan and the Key Performance Indicators for 2000–01. [117466]

Mr. Boateng: The Prison Service Business Plan for 2000–01, which includes the key performance indicators, has been published today and copies have been placed in the Library.

Police Sick Leave

Mr. Jenkin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what was the absence through sickness rate among (a) police officers and (b) civilian support staff in the Essex police for each month since 1 May 1997. [116859]

Mr. Charles Clarke: The information requested for monthly sickness rates is not held centrally but annual sickness rates for the last three years for Essex police are given in the table.

Essex police—sickness absence for police officers and civilian support staff

	1996–97	1997–98	1998–99
Police officer working days lost through sickness	28,399	34,066	38,748
Average days sickness per police officer	10	12	13
Civilian support staff working days lost through sickness	16,903	21,309	19,232
Average days sickness per civilian support staff	12	14	13

Scientific Procedures Committee

Dr. Ladyman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what requirement, in terms of objectivity, is requested of members of the Scientific Procedures Committee. [116952]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: The Animal Procedures Committee was established by the Animals (Scientific Procedures) Act 1986. The Act requires the Secretary of State, who appoints members, to have regard to the desirability of ensuring that the interests of animal welfare are adequately represented. There is also a requirement that the committee shall have regard both to the legitimate requirements of science and industry and to the protection of animals. The key consideration in making appointments to the committee is the need to maintain a breadth of professional experience and a proper balance of views among the membership.

In 1998, the committee adopted a Code of Conduct for Members. This requires members at all times to act in good faith and observe the highest standards of impartiality, integrity and objectivity in relation to the conduct of the Committee's business; to declare any personal or business interest which may influence their judgment: not to participate in discussion of matters in which they have a personal or business interest; and to understand that they are appointed as individuals and not as representatives of organisations with which they have significant contacts.

Vivisection

Dr. Ladyman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on the progress of negotiations with the British Union for the Abolition of Vivisection in respect of their lifting their restrictions on the full publication of the Harlan report; and if he will publish the full report. [117012]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: I am pleased to report that the British Union for the Abolition of Vivisection (BUAV) agreed on Monday 27 March to waive confidentiality of all of the material in the report stemming from videotapes, an audio tape and diaries kept by the undercover investigator and an interview conducted with her during the course of the Animals (Scientific Procedures) Inspectorate's investigation. I have, therefore, today laid in the Library, copies of a fuller version of the report in which only those sections containing commercially sensitive information, or information relating to individuals and third parties remain censored. I regret that the BUAV were unable to agree to release this information earlier as I requested.

Dr. Ladyman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if the author of the British Union for the Abolition of Vivisection report on Harlan UK is a member of the Scientific Procedures Committee. [116958]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: The administration of the Animal Procedures Committee is the responsibility of the Chairman, the Reverend Professor Michael Banner. He will write to my hon. Friend.

Racism and Xenophobia

Mr. Lidington: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department who will represent the United Kingdom at the official opening of the European Monitoring Centre on Racism and Xenophobia on 7 and 8 April in Vienna. [116955]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: The United Kingdom will be represented at the official opening of the European Monitoring Centre on Racism and Xenophobia on 7–8 April in Vienna by either a Minister or a senior official (yet to be finalised) from the Foreign and Commonwealth Office, and by the Director of Constitutional and Community Policy from the Home Office.

This Government remain committed to the work undertaken by the Centre. The event in Vienna marks the official opening of the Centre, but in fact it has been in existence for over a year now. The Centre is supported financially by the European Commission; the Home Office provided £48,000 to cover the running costs of the Centre's United Kingdom Secretariat during 1999–2000.

Public Bodies

Mr. Quinn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many board members he appoints to each non-departmental public body. [116336]

Mr. Straw: A full list of the non-departmental public bodies to which I make appointments is published in the publication "Public Bodies 1999", a copy of which is available in the Library.

Workplace Parking

Mr. Gray: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many workplace car parking spaces are available at the buildings used and controlled by his Department. [116761]

Mr. Straw: The Home Office Central London Estate, which comprises six buildings, has a total of 177 car park spaces. Figures for the rest of the Home Office estate could be obtained only at disproportionate cost. We are extending travel plans for all our key buildings in line with the commitment set out in the Transport White Paper and are reviewing the scope for reducing our car parking requirements in that context.

Consultants

Mr. Heald: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department, pursuant to his answer of 14 March 2000, Official Report, column 168W, concerning external consultants used by his Department since 1997, if the individual value of every consultancy contract is commercial in confidence, with particular reference to Clear Communications; and if he will indicate the reasons for commercial confidentiality in each case. [116774]

Mr. Straw: In line with the Code of Practice on Access to Government Information issued by the Cabinet Office, my Department encourages transparency and openness in the tendering and contracting process and where possible, we will publish information on individual contract values. However, where publishing such information would prejudice the legitimate commercial interest of any person or competition between service providers or where such information has been given in confidence, it is my Department's policy to treat this information as commercial in confidence unless consent to publish has been obtained.

It had not been possible, in the reply I gave the hon. Gentleman on 14 March 2000, Official Report, columns 168–69W, in the time available, to obtain consent from Clear Communication to disclose information on contract value. I have now obtained their consent and the information available is as follows:

Clear Communication Contract Value £46,000

In the time available, I have been unable to seek consent from other consultancy companies listed in my previous reply.

Mr. Heald: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what consultancy contracts the Smith Group has entered into with his Department since May 1997. [116775]

Mr. Straw: From the information available, there is no record of the Smith Group entering into any contracts with my Department since May 1997.

Jon Riser

Mr. Streeter: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will order an external inquiry into the handling of the immigration case of Jon Riser, deceased. [116733]

Mr. Straw: Following Mr. Riser's tragic death in the United States of America, I am making arrangements for a senior officer within the Home Office to conduct an urgent and detailed investigation into the handling of the case by the Immigration and Nationality Directorate. I have asked to be provided with a full report of the findings.

I will of course inform the hon. Member of the outcome. I should also be happy to meet the hon. Member to discuss his concerns, and am making arrangements to do so.

HEALTH

Research and Development

Angela Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how he intends to take forward the reform of research and development in the NHS. [117075]

Yvette Cooper: We are today announcing a programme of modernisation to give strategic direction to the management of Research and Development in the National Health Service.

High quality modern health care depends on high quality research-based evidence. These changes bring the management of R&D in the NHS into line with the principles set out in "The new NHS" (Cm 3807, December 1997). They provide a quality framework within which all R&D funded from NHS resources will respond to the priorities and needs of the NHS.

The Department of Health will take the lead in expressing priorities for the national effort in health services research, on behalf of the NHS. The NHS will work with other funding bodies and the universities to deliver advances in knowledge the NHS needs for evidence-based practice and policy.

Collaboration will replace unproductive competition. There will be no time-consuming NHS-wide bidding for NHS R&D allocations from April 2001. Instead, the Government will use a modernisation fund to encourage research partnerships and networks in areas of high priority for the NHS. We want to ensure that consumers of health services are involved at every stage in the research process. New guidance will reinforce the standards of governance and performance management required of R&D in the NHS.

The NHS is part of the national science base. These reforms ensure the NHS and the Department of Health meet the obligations of their partnership with other research funding bodies. Within this framework, the NHS will target resources on providing a suitable environment for high quality research conducted within strategies that take account of its priorities and needs.

The paper, "Research and Development for a First Class Service: R&D funding in the new NHS", sets out a new statement of policy and principles together with plans for implementation. Copies have been placed in the Library. It is also available on the Department of Health's website.

These reforms build on a review led by Professor Michael Clarke on behalf of the Central R&D Committee for the NHS. We are today making his report available on the Department of Health's website. As well as the management and funding of R&D in the NHS, Professor Clarke's review considered NHS priorities for R&D related to cancer, the elderly, heart disease and stroke, mental health, and primary care and took account of a review of research priorities for accidental injury. We are placing these reports on the Department's website. We intend to make early progress with the R&D priorities for cancer, heart disease and stroke, and mental health.

Local Government Expenditure

Mr. Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what account he takes of the expenditure by local authorities on social service functions in framing his Department's expenditure plans. [116777]

Ms Stuart: The Department takes full account of the current level of service provided by local government to social services recipients when considering the level of specific and special grants paid to local authorities.

Mid-Essex Hospital Trust

Mr. Burns: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how much the Mid-Essex Hospital Trust has spent from 6 April 1999 to the latest date for which information is available on having NHS patients treated in the private healthcare sector. [116732]

Ms Stuart: The information requested is not available centrally.

Workplace Parking

Mr. Gray: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many workplace car parking spaces are available at the buildings used and controlled by his Department. [116769]

Ms Stuart: There are 1,745 car parking spaces available for use by visitors and staff at premises occupied by the Department and its agencies.

Waiting Lists (Essex)

Mr. Jenkin: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how much money Essex Rivers Healthcare Trust has spent in the latest financial year for which figures are available for the treatment of NHS patients by the private healthcare sector. [116840]

Ms Stuart: The information requested is not available centrally.

Antenatal Screening

Mr. Key: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will introduce antenatal screening for genetic abnormality, including biochemical screening for Down's syndrome; and if he will make a statement. [116731]

Yvette Cooper: The United Kingdom National Screening Committee advises the Government on all aspects of screening policy. It considers the aim of all antenatal screening to be informed choice for parents. The NSC would rarely recommend the introduction of a blanket test such as a blood test for chromosomal disorders for all or most pregnant women, but rather a specific test for a known disorder. At present, individual women who have already had an affected pregnancy or have a family history of a genetic disorder should be offered specific genetic testing and counselling. We are currently considering the Committee's recommendation to offer all pregnant women second trimester serum screening for Down's Syndrome.

Cleft Lip and Palate Patients

Mr. Lidington: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement about his plans for the future treatment of cleft lip and palate patients from Buckinghamshire. [116956]

Ms Stuart: A final decision on the future configuration of cleft lip treatment centres is still to be taken. Any changes to services will be subject to full statutory public consultation.

Crown Report

Mr. Oaten: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when he will respond to the Crown report on the Review of Prescribing, Supply and Administration of Medicines. [116905]

Ms Stuart: We announced our decisions on the implementation of the main recommendations of the Review on 13 March.

Meningitis C Vaccine

Mrs. Spelman: To ask the Secretary of State for Health for what reasons some private practices are being denied access to the meningitis C vaccine. [107990]

Yvette Cooper: The campaign to immunise all children and young people under the age of 18 with the new meningococcal Group C conjugate vaccine is being undertaken by the National Health Service. Any child eligible to receive this vaccine can do so via the NHS. Any individual in the country may approach a general practitioner for NHS treatment, including immunisation if appropriate. Treatment is conditional on the GP's acceptance of the patient for NHS services.

The meningococcal Group C conjugate vaccine is new and manufacturers held no stockpiles in advance of the launch. We have distributed every batch of vaccine as fast as it has been released. Distribution has been in line with the implementation schedule with the vaccine being targeted specifically at those groups at highest risk first.

The only way to guarantee a successful roll-out of the new vaccine, which is in limited supply, has been to ensure it is available through the NHS. The Department of Health has therefore bought all the vaccine available for the NHS. Once the NHS programme to immunise every child under-18 has been completed, sometime later this year, the vaccine will then be available to others outside of this group.

Mrs. Spelman: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how he intends to ensure sufficient supplies of the meningitis C vaccine are produced. [107992]

Yvette Cooper: The meningococcal Group C conjugate vaccine is a brand new vaccine. The Department has calculated the amount of vaccine needed to immunise those covered by the immunisation programme and has contracted with vaccine manufacturers to ensure sufficient vaccine is available to implement the programme. The Department continues to liaise closely with manufacturers and the National Institute for Biological Standards and Controls, which tests every batch of vaccine for safety and potency, to ensure vaccine is made available to the NHS as soon as it becomes available. The Department will continue to seek to ensure adequate supply through close liaison with vaccine manufacturers. The NHS is the first healthcare system in the world to protect people with this new vaccine.

Mrs. Spelman: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if the meningitis C inoculation programme for the under-18s will be completed this year. [107993]

Yvette Cooper: Yes, subject to manufacturers meeting their supply contracts.

Vaccinations

Mrs. Spelman: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if a non-NHS patient in the high risk categories can receive a vaccination by a GP working in the NHS. [107991]

Yvette Cooper: Any individual in the country may approach a general practitioner for National Health Service treatment, including immunisation if appropriate. Treatment is conditional on the GP's acceptance of the patient for NHS services.

Renewable Energy

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make it his policy to discover what proportion of the energy supplied to his Department by utility companies comes from renewable sources. [116270]

Ms Stuart: Buildings occupied by the Department and its agencies currently purchase energy from utility companies through contracts let by the buying agency.

In future procurement of energy, where the Department of Health is the lead Department, we will require the supplier to provide information on the proportion of the energy supplied that comes from renewable sources.

NHS Volunteers

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what progress has been made in giving an individual trust board member the responsibility for volunteer involvement; and how many NHS trusts have achieved this. [116444]

Mr. Hutton: The National Health Service Executive has taken, and continues to take, a great deal of action on the recommendations of the "Making a Difference: Strengthening Volunteering in the NHS" report. NHS trusts were asked to name a volunteering 'champion' at Board level. A recent progress update showed that 76 per cent. of trusts have a member in place.

Political Activities

Mr. Brady: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list the (a) chairmen and (b) non-executive directors of health trusts and health authorities who have made a declaration of political activity indicating the party affiliated in each case. [116973]

Ms Stuart: Information on candidates appointed to National Health Service boards and any political activity declared is recorded in the Department of Health Public Appointments Annual Report for 1999, a copy of which is in the Library. The 2000 report will be published in May.

Residential Care

Ms Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what his timetable is for reviewing the residential care allowance as proposed in the White Paper, "Modernising Social Services". [116750]

Mr. Hutton: As my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State announced in the House on 2 December 1999, Official Report, columns 444–45, we are examining the implications of phasing out the residential allowance and transferring the resources to councils as part of the year 2000 spending review, which will be completed this summer. We are planning to seek the views of councils, service users and their carers and families and care providers on the impact of such a change over the next few weeks. We shall publish a White Paper on long-term care later this year.

LORD CHANCELLOR'S DEPARTMENT

Executive Agencies

Mr. Hope: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what the key performance targets are for Her Majesty's Land Registry and the Public Record Office executive agencies for 2000–01. [117393]

Mr. Lock: The following tables set out the key performance targets that the Lord Chancellor has set for Her Majesty's Land Registry and the Public Record Office for 2000–01.

HM Land Registry—key performance indicators and targets 2000–01

Indicator	Target
Financial
Percentage return on average capital employed	6
Efficiency
Cost per unit in real terms	£25.09
Cost per unit in cash terms[1]	£30.87
'Service First' Standards
Speed
Percentage of office copy and official search applications processed within two working days, and	98
Percentage of office copy and official search applications processed within three working days	100
Percentage of all registrations processed within 25 working days[2]	80
Accuracy
Percentage of registrations processed free of any error	98.5
Percentage of customers responding to the Annual Survey who perceive the accuracy of registrations to be excellent or good	Better than 90[2]
Delivery of Electronic Services
Percentage of dealings (key customer interactions) capable of electronic delivery	50
Percentage of titles in the land register capable of electronic delivery	96
Percentage of title plans in the land register capable of electronic delivery	All
Number of scanned pages of filed documents (millions)	11

[1] The inflation factor for the cost per unit in cash terms is derived from the GDP indices announced by HM Treasury in December 1999
[2] In 2000–01 the categories will be 'very satisfied' and 'satisfied' with the accuracy of registrations
Notes:
1. The financial target of £0 External Financing Limit shown in the corporate plan 1998–2003 has been removed at the request of HM Treasury.
2. Fuller details of HMLR's targets are in its Business Plan.

Public Record Office—key performance targets 2000–01

Indicator	Target
1. Efficiency
Unit cost of activities:
(a) selecting and preserving the public records	Limit increase to 3 per cent. in real terms
(b) giving access to records	Reduce by 26 per cent. in real terms
Backlog of records in departments reported as being over 30 years old and awaiting review	Reduce by 397 metres
Management efficiency in running support services and projects	Reduce the level of staff sick absence in 2000 by 8.2 per cent. Pay 99 per cent. of invoices within 30 days
2. Quality of service
The achievement of Charter Standards:
(a) Charter Standards targets for: making newly opened records and their catalogues available to users; answering letters; delivering records to users; supplying copies of records; answering the telephone; and keeping appointments	Achieve 98.5 per cent. against the targets
(b) User satisfaction surveys	Carry out four satisfaction surveys and achieve assessments of 'good' or 'excellent' from 90 per cent. of those expressing a view
3. Effectiveness
Performance in achieving specified milestones towards strategic objectives in the light of emerging Government policies	(a) Facilitate the achievement by the Departments of the Modernising Government Action Plan objective for managing records electronically, by testing electronic records management systems and by providing details of those which are suitable for inclusion in GCat (the Government Catalogue) by 30 September 2000 (b) Increase revenue by 3 per cent. against the 1999–2000 outturn

Note:
Fuller details of the Office's targets are given in its Business Plan which is available from the Public Record Office

Access to Justice Act 1999

Ms Keeble: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department which bodies the Lord Chancellor intends to prescribe as entitled to take advantage of the costs recovery provisions contained in section 30 of the Access to Justice Act 1999; what criteria he will take into account in determining status as a prescribed body; and what procedure membership organisations should follow if they wish to be approved as prescribed bodies. [117308]

Mr. Lock: Section 30 of the Access to Justice Act 1999 comes into force on 1 April. From that date membership organisations with prescribed body status will be able to recover a sum as part of legal costs from unsuccessful opponents to reflect the provision of legal help for members and their families.

By virtue of the Access to Justice (Membership Organisations) Regulations 2000 which also come into force on 1 April bodies which are prescribed for the purpose of section 30 of the Act are those bodies which are for the time being approved by the Lord Chancellor.

From 1 April the Lord Chancellor will approve all trade unions listed by the Certification Officer as at 31 March 2000 as prescribed bodies. Other membership organisations may apply to him for approval.

Rather than setting down rigid criteria for prescription in regulations the Lord Chancellor believes that there should be a flexible approach with each application for approval treated on its merits. Therefore, in deciding whether an organisation should be approved, the Lord Chancellor will take account of any relevant representations in its application, but will be mindful, so far as it is relevant, of whether the organisation in question:

Exists to protect, defend, represent and promote the interests of its members.

Has a range of benefits for members.

Offers litigation funding as one of those benefits and on a discretionary basis, at no additional charge.

Publishes annual accounts.

Uses monies paid by members to promote their interests and benefits.

Covers all those deemed eligible by the organisation (not only members).

Organisations wishing to seek the Lord Chancellor's approval as prescribed bodies for the purposes of section 30 of the Act should apply in writing to:

Costs and Litigation Funding Branch
Lord Chancellor's Department
3rd Floor Selborne House
54–60 Victoria Street
London SW1E 6QW

Workplace Parking

Mr. Gray: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department how many workplace car parking spaces are available at the buildings used and controlled by his Department. [116760]

Mr. Lock: The information requested is not held centrally and could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

ENVIRONMENT, TRANSPORT AND THE REGIONS

Departmental Expenditure

Mr. David Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what plans he has to change his departmental expenditure limits for 1999–2000. [117304]

Mr. Prescott: (i) The DETR Main Programmes Departmental Expenditure Limit will be increased by £700,000 from £10,403,990,000 to £10,404,690,000 as a result of a transfer of this amount from the DETR Local Government Departmental Expenditure Limit. There are also changes between the Voted and non-Voted elements of the Main Programmes Departmental Expenditure Limit. The changes are set out in greater detail as follows.

(a) Provision within the non-Voted element of the DETR Main Programmes Departmental Expenditure Limit will be increased by £7,413,000 from £1,697,254,000 to £1,704,667,000. This reflects a transfer of £700,000 from the DETR Local Government Departmental Expenditure Limit, a transfer of £910,000 from Class III, Vote 2 (Planning, roads, local transport and vehicle safety); and £5,803,000 from Class III, Vote 6 (Transport industries).

(b) The transfer of £700,000 from the DETR Local Government Departmental Expenditure Limit to the non-Voted element of the DETR Main Programmes Departmental Expenditure Limit is to provide other capital support to the London Borough of Haringey.

(c) The change for Class III, Vote 2 (Planning, roads, local transport and vehicle safety) is a transfer of £910,000 to the non-Voted element of the DETR Main Programmes Departmental Expenditure Limit for transport Supplementary Credit Approvals.

(d) The change for Class III, Vote 6 (Transport industries) is a transfer of £5,803,000 to the non-Voted element of the DETR Main Programmes Departmental Expenditure Limit to take account of British Rail's revised grant claim for 1999–2000.

(ii) The DETR Local Government Departmental Expenditure Limit will be increased by £720,000 from £34,218,737,000 to £34,219,457,000. This increase is the net effect of a take-up of end year flexibility of £1,420,000 and a transfer of £700,000 to the DETR Main Programmes Departmental Expenditure Limit. The changes are set out in greater detail as follows.

(a) Provision within the non-Voted element of the Local Government Departmental Expenditure Limit will be increased by £720,000 from £371,906,000 to £372,626,000. This reflects a take-up of end year flexibility of £1,420,000 for the Local Authority Capital Challenge programme, and a transfer of £700,000 to the DETR Main Programmes Departmental Expenditure Limit for other capital support to the London Borough of Haringey.

The transfers will be offset by transfers or charged to the DEL Reserve and will not therefore add to the planned total of public expenditure.

Air Pollution Control

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will provide the details of the 2000–01 charging scheme for local air pollution control under Part I of the Environmental Protection Act 1990. [117388]

Mr. Hill: Charges to cover the costs of local enforcing authorities in regulating processes which are subject to Part I of the Environmental Protection Act 1990 were introduced in April 1991.

With the approval of the Treasury, and following consultation with local authority associations and industry, my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions has made a revised scheme specifying the scale of fees and charges to take effect from 1 April 2000.

The initial application fee will be unchanged and the annual subsistence fee will be increased by roughly 0.75 per cent. The main change is that the standard subsistence fee is increased by £6 from £790 to £796. The standard application fee remains at £1,280.

The scheme will be laid before both Houses and copies placed in the Libraries.

GLA Transport Grant

Mr. Fitzpatrick: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what amount of Greater London Authority transport grant he has determined for 2000–01. [117389]

Mr. Hill: I have today formally determined GLA Transport Grant at £392,700,000. £73,768,000 is to cover period before Transport for London assumes its full responsibilities on 3 July 2000. This is therefore for amounts to be spent by the relevant predecessor bodies of Transport for London, including the Secretary of State himself. The balance of £318,932,000 will be paid in instalments to the Greater London Authority for the purposes of Transport for London.

Maritime and Coastguard Agency

Mr. Ivan Henderson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions when he expects to announce the key targets for the Maritime and Coastguard Agency for 2000–01. [117390]

Mr. Hill: I have today placed in the House Library a copy of the Agency's Business Plan which includes its key targets for 2000–01. The key targets are:

to agree a new statutory safety regime for under 12 m fishing vessels by 31 october for implementation by 30 April 2001;

to complete at least 95 per cent. of the agreed programme of vessel inspections by March 2001;

to decide on the search and rescue response to accidents and life-threatening situations, and to initiate action if necessary, within 5 minutes of being alerted in at least 95 per cent. of cases;

to undertake a review of the UK Search and Rescue Helicopter coverage as recommended in the National Audit Office report, "Civil Maritime Search and Rescue", and make recommendations to Ministers by December;

following the Marine Environment High Risk Areas consultation we will prepare for Ministers a response plan by autumn 2000 proposing the most cost effective options for Emergency Towing Vessel provision; to evaluate and report to Ministers on the effectiveness of the National Contingency Plan for Counter Pollution by March 2001;

to evaluate the provision of UK port waste reception facilities and report to Ministers on this by December;

following an analysis of Headquarters and regional management costs, produce a specific programme for new efficiency measures and proposals to reduce such costs, and set targets for Agency management costs against pay and non-pay costs by July, for each of the years 2001–04;

to analyse the first annual cycle of the time-recording Management Information System to agree, by September, specific national and regional targets for chargeable, other core and non-core activities undertaken by operational staff for 2001–04; to complete re-location programme by releasing properties in Liverpool, Great Yarmouth, Plymouth and Newcastle by 31 March 2001.

London Underground

Ms Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what further progress has been made with the London Underground public private partnership; and if he will make a statement. [117391]

Mr. Hill: London Transport awaits bids for the two deep tube infrastructure service contracts tomorrow. These will be very detailed, weighty proposals. It will take several weeks to analyse and clarify them properly. When this process is completed, the bids will be tested for best value against the public sector comparator.

I have today placed in the Library of the House a detailed note which describes how London Transport have constructed the public sector comparator against which bids for infrastructure improvement and maintenance contracts under the Public Private Partnership (PPP) can be tested.

The methodology on which the comparator has been built is designed to offer a fair and reliable estimate of how much it would cost London Underground itself to carry out all the work needed to upgrade and maintain the Underground network over the next 30 years, to the standard required under the PPP contracts. The comparator will show the cost for each of the three infrastructure companies separately, so that each bid can be directly assessed against its public sector alternative.

The comparator will also explicitly establish how much it would cost to deliver the required contract outputs if London Underground were to raise the necessary finance through the issuance of public sector bonds. The bids will also be tested against this means of raising finance.

The methodology which London Underground is using, and which is described in the note that I have placed in the Library, has been reviewed by KPMG as London Underground's independent, external auditors. KPMG were asked to consider whether the note accorded with the relevant Treasury guidance and was appropriate to the circumstances of the PPP. KPMG will also be asked to review the actual comparator and the bond-financed variant before they are used to test bids for best value.

The actual values produced by the comparator can be released only once negotiations with bidders have been completed, so as not to expose the taxpayer's negotiating position, and thus jeopardise the chances of securing best value.

As well as the external audit undertaken by KPMG, the design, construction and use of the comparator will be made available for scrutiny by the National Audit Office (NAO). The NAO has made clear that while it is always available to give guidance to the bodies whom it audits on areas of risk and uncertainty, and to draw attention to relevant financial experience in NAO and Public Accounts Committee reports—my Department has accordingly received such guidance—it could not go further and become involved in the decision-making process. This would inevitably lead to questions about its ability subsequently to carry out an independent examination for Parliament, once the key decisions on the PPP have been taken.

The NAO, however, notes that as part of the decision-making process, London Transport is having its work on building and using the public sector comparator reviewed by KPMG. The NAO regards it as being in line with good practice for such comparators to receive scrutiny external to the project.

Highways Agency

Mr. Salter: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what targets he has set for the Highways Agency for 2000–01. [117392]

Mr. Hill: The key targets set for the Highways Agency are included in the Agency's business plan for 2000–01, which is being placed in the Library.

The key targets are to:

in order to deliver best value for money, maintain the network so that the proportion of the network requiring maintenance within the next year is held between 7 and 8 per cent;

achieve a saving of 250,000 estimated vehicle hours from the network communications and economy local network management schemes completed in the year;

to demonstrate progress towards achieving the 2010 targets for motorways and trunk roads set out in "Making the Network Safer: the Highways Agency's Strategic Plan for Safety" published on 1 March:

- reduce the number of people killed and seriously injured on trunk roads in 2000 to 5,056 (compared with the 1994–98 average of 5,589);
- reduce the slight casualty rate in 2000 to 21.13 slight casualties per million vehicle km (compared with the 1994–98 average of 21.76);
- in each case to allow for expected year-to-year fluctuations in casualty levels, the Agency will be deemed to have met the target if the result is no more than 5 per cent. above the milestone target figure; achieve an average target of 85 per cent. across the four environment programme sub-indicators;

achieve by the end of the year no less than 90 per cent. of the 24 targeted programme of improvement scheme milestones listed in Chapter 3.4 of the business plan.

Planning Inspectorate

Mr. Paul Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what plans he has to review the Planning Inspectorate. [117394]

Mr. Raynsford: My Department has today launched a review of the Planning Inspectorate. The Planning Inspectorate was established as an Executive Agency in April 1992 and, in line with Cabinet Office guidelines for all executive agencies, it must be reviewed at least every five years.

The last review of the Inspectorate in 1995 confirmed its Agency status. This review which will be completed by the end of 2000 will be undertaken in two stages.

The first will consider all the organisational options for the Inspectorate including abolition; continued agency status; contracting-out; market testing; merger or rationalisation; privatisation.

If Agency status is confirmed, the second stage will consider how the Inspectorate's efficiency could be improved.

The review will be undertaken jointly by DETR and the National Assembly for Wales. The Agency's customers and other interested parties will be consulted.

Energy-from-waste Plants

Mr. Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what compensation payments are available to those living in an area where an energy-from-waste plant is to be constructed. [116779]

Ms Beverley Hughes: None. A planning application for such a plant would be determined by a local planning authority in accordance with the development plan for the area, unless material considerations indicated otherwise. Such considerations could include the effects of the proposal on the locality and the views of local people. In some cases planning conditions or obligations might be appropriate to mitigate the effects of a proposed scheme.

Social Services Expenditure

Mr. Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what was the actual expenditure on social services for each local authority in England for (a) 1997–98 and (b) 1998–99; and what is the estimated expenditure for (i) 1999–2000 and (ii) 2000–01. [116836]

Ms Beverley Hughes: English local authorities have reported a total net current expenditure on social services of £8,454 million in 1997–98 and £9,059 million in 1998–99 and a budgeted expenditure of £9,645 million in 1999–2000. The information for 2000–01 is not yet available.

The information by local authority has been placed in the Library of the House.

Housing Improvement Agencies

Sir Paul Beresford: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what organisation has been contracted to undertake the administration of grants to the housing improvement agencies; when the contract was granted and at what value; which organisations (a) sought and (b) were short-listed for the contract; and if the contract was let under the European negotiated procedure. [116888]

Mr. Mullin: Collective Enterprises Ltd. has been appointed the national co-ordinating body for home improvement agencies under a contract awarded on 8 March. The value of the contract is £1,576,515 (excluding VAT) over four years. Five organisations expressed interest in the contract of which two, Care and Repair England Ltd. and Collective Enterprises Ltd., were invited to tender. The contract was awarded under the EU Restricted Procedure.

Airports

Sir Paul Beresford: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will make public the options he decides to take forward following the decision-making process outlined in the consultation paper, Appraisal Framework for Airports in the South East and Eastern Regions, to reduce the potential for blight and developmental delays. [116885]

Mr. Mullin: As I stated in my answer to the hon. Member on 14 March 2000, Official Report, column 116W, the options will be appraised through the process of successive sifts, and following completion of the study there will be a public consultation on the options arising from it. In advance of that consultation, it would be premature to comment on the status of any option.

The approach adopted in this study is consistent with my Department's Code of Practice on the Dissemination of Information during Major Infrastructure Developments. Releasing information in the earliest stages of a possible project, in advance of final options, could result in unnecessary and lengthy blight, as well as multiplying uncertainty and anxiety.

Sir Paul Beresford: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what assessment the South East and East of England Air Study will make of work done by the Runway Capacity to serve the South-East Working Group. [116887]

Mr. Mullin: The final terms of reference for the South East and East of England Regional Air Services Study make it clear that in undertaking the study it will be necessary to take advantage, where appropriate, of the technical work done on the options examined by the Working Group. As my right hon. Friend the Member for Hamilton, North and Bellshill (Dr. Reid) indicated in his announcement on 11 March 1999, Official Report, columns 360–61W, the study has started from the position that nothing is ruled in or ruled out.

I announced publication of the final terms of reference to the House on 9 February 2000, Official Report, column 106W. Copies are available in the House Libraries.

Sir Paul Beresford: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if the South East and East of England Air Services Study will include an assessment of the effects of growth of aircraft movements at airports in the South East and East of Manchester Airport. [116886]

Mr. Mullin: Forecasts of future aircraft movements at airports in the South East and East of England used in the assessment of options in the South East and East of England Regional Air Services study (SERAS) will take into account potential capacity gains at other airports including Manchester Airport.

Sir Paul Beresford: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if, in announcing new housing development for the South East, an assessment was made of the effects of any increases in runway capacity at South East airports. [116889]

Ms Beverley Hughes: No assessment has been made of the effects of airport proposals which are not covered in current permissions or development plans. The South East and East of England Regional Air Services study is examining a wide range of options to address changes in demand for air services. In doing so it will, among other impacts, assess regional planning guidance implications and urbanisation impacts, including housing, of airport development options. Following completion of the study, we shall consult on a shortlist of options. After decisions have been taken on airport development, any implications for housing provisions will be taken into account in future revisions of housing rates in the light of the monitoring and review arrangements set out in draft Regional Planning Guidance for the South East and East Anglia.

Transport Council

Mr. Hood: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what was the outcome of the Transport Council held in Brussels on 28 March; and if he will make a statement. [117118]

Mr. Jenkin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will make a statement on the outcome of this week's EC Council meeting of Transport Ministers. [116843]

Mr. Hill: The Transport Council met in Brussels on 28 March. My right hon. and noble Friend the Minister for Transport represented the United Kingdom.

The Commission gave a further report on progress of the definition phase of the Galileo satellite navigation project. Commissioner de Palacio asked for member states' support at the forthcoming World Radio Conference, to ensure that the Galileo project has the radio frequencies needed. She reported that the public private partnership had attracted expressions of interest from the private sector. My right hon. and noble Friend emphasised the need for full cost benefit analysis of the project. The Presidency asked for a written report from the Commission to the June Council.

There was a debate on the Commission's Communication on air transport and the environment, first presented at the December 1999 Council. The Communication describes the Commission's proposed five-year work plan for policies and measures to limit or reduce noise and gaseous emissions from aircraft. Member states broadly welcomed the Commission's approach. The UK was among the member states which emphasised that, where possible, international noise standards should be developed at the global level through the International Civil Aviation Organisation. Likewise, on the question of aviation fuel tax, my right hon. and noble Friend joined others in stressing that this was best handled at the global level. Council Conclusions were adopted, confirming the Commission plan and setting priority areas for action.

The Commission set out recent development on the hushkits issue. The Regulation on the use of hushkitted aircraft would come into force on 4 May; it was possible that some changes could be made to the date of application to third country aircraft. Work would continue on a joint declaration, committing the EU and the US to a new standard in ICAO. My right hon. and noble Friend referred to the need for a new international standard, and stressed that the Commission should do all possible to seek a solution. The Council agreed Conclusions, endorsing the Commission's further engagement with the US.

The Commission stated that it would be producing a list of air passengers' existing rights. This would be followed by legislative proposals. At the June Council, they would report in full on the recent consultation exercise. The Presidency, identifying the issue of a European Charter of Air Passenger Rights as a priority, encouraged the Commission to submit its Communication, including legislative proposals in time for the June Council.

The Commission presented a working paper on establishment of a European aviation safety authority (EASA). My right hon. and noble Friend expressed disappointment that the paper did not provide a full analysis of the options of an international organisation or an EU agency, as the December Council had requested. The Presidency said that the Transport Council should aim to take a decision in June on the best legal form for the EASA.

The Presidency tabled a revised text of the draft directive on the interoperability of conventional rail systems, which had been presented by the Commission to the December Council, and which the UK broadly supports. The Presidency noted that substantial progress had been made in the Working Group. The Commission agreed that progress had been made and felt that a common position on the draft directive should be possible in June.

The Commission presented to the Council its Communication on road safety. Key proposals for action were: further development of the European new vehicles crash testing programme (ENCAP), use of speed limiters on larger vehicles, higher levels of seatbelt and child restraint usage, safer car fronts, and targeting of accident blackspots. Legislative proposals would follow in these areas. My right hon. and noble Friend welcomed the general approach of the Communication, which fitted in well with the recently announced UK road safety strategy. The Communication also refers to the Commission's intention to bring forward a recommendation for a maximum blood alcohol level of 0.5 milligrams per millilitre. The Presidency concluded that further work should be done on the Communication, in preparation for discussion at the June Council.

The Commission introduced new proposals on maritime safety, stressing that it was important to make progress in preventing future accidents like that involving the Erika. Action was proposed in two stages. The first stage would involve measures tightening the regulation on port state control of ship standards, improving control of classification societies, and phasing out single-hulled tankers, the last in line with the US timetable. In the short-term, oil companies would be asked to avoid voluntarily the use of tankers more than 15 years old. The second stage of the Commission's proposals involves a change in the information system for all ships, building on the new EQUASIS international database, better monitoring of sea movements of freighters, setting up a European Maritime Safety Agency, and examination of the liability and compensation aspects of oil pollution accidents. Member states supported the proposals for directives on port state control and classification societies, but, more generally, the need for the International Maritime Organisation to be involved was widely stressed. The UK was among member states which stressed the importance of a proper prior assessment of the economic impact of a rapid phase-out of single hulled tankers. My right hon. and noble Friend also noted the UK's recent proposals to increase the ceiling for payments from the International Oil Pollution Compensation Fund (IOPCF), and suggested that wider reform should be pursued through the IMO. The Commissioner felt that global action alone was not enough and argued for her proposal on single hulls. The Presidency, however, asked for more work to be done in preparation for the June Council. They urged member states to work together to increase compensation levels in the IOPCF.

Under other business, the Commission reported that there had been good progress in the High Level Group set up following the presentation at the December Council of the Commission Communication on air traffic management ("A Single European Sky").

Manchester Metrolink

Mr. Jenkin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions (1) under what headings of expenditure the aid to be provided for the Manchester Metrolink will be spent; [116864]

(2) what proportion of the aid to be provided for the Manchester Metrolink will be given as (a) grant and (b) credit approval. [116863]

Mr. Hill: As my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State made clear in his reply to my hon. Friend the Member for Manchester, Central (Mr. Lloyd) on 22 March 2000, Official Report, column 549W, the final details of the funding package are still to be determined. However, it will include both grant and credit approvals. Public support will be towards the capital costs of the project which would typically include construction costs, rolling stock, utility diversion and land purchase.

Aircraft Noise

Mr. Jenkin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what EU measures he supports to reduce noise from civil aircraft. [116846]

Mr. Mullin: The UK broadly supports the Commission's proposals in the recent communication on Air Transport and the environment, particularly the need to work through the International Civil Aviation Organisation for new standards. We shall consider the proposals as they come forward on their merits. My hon. Friend the Member for Streatham (Mr. Hill) will report the conclusions of the transport council today.

Mr. Jenkin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what measures he will adopt to reduce the noise of civil aircraft over the Stour Valley in Essex and Suffolk. [116845]

Mr. Mullin: Local concerns about an increase in overflight, following the introduction of a second stack for Stansted, have been addressed as far as possible, given the competing demands for airspace and the general build up of air traffic in the South East. We shall continue to press for international agreement on higher noise certification standards and the phasing out of noisier aircraft. This will benefit people there and elsewhere.

European Aviation Safety Authority

Mr. Jenkin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if it is his policy to support the establishment of EASA as an international rather than an EU body; and if the rules of EASA are intended to have direct effect and direct applicability in the law of the member states. [116867]

Mr. Mullin: The Government are committed to taking action with their Community partners on setting up a new aviation safety body which will raise aviation safety standards across Europe in an effective and efficient way.

In June 1998, during the UK Presidency, the Council mandated the Commission to develop, on behalf of the European Community and the member states, a treaty for a new international organisation to be known as the European Aviation Safety Authority, involving both EU and non-EU member states, as well as the Community itself. The mandate required the Commission first to submit a draft outline text of the founding treaty to a Special Committee of member states representatives.

The draft treaty agreed by the Special Committee assumes that the most effective way of achieving uniformly applied, high safety standards was to provide that all EASA rules should be directly applicable in Contracting Parties' law. The draft also provides for extensive judicial control mechanisms. Member states and the Commission have been unable to agree this draft treaty in its entirety and the Commission has suggested an alternative option, based on a community agency. The Council on 28 March agreed that further analysis should be undertaken of the best legal form for EASA.

Air Cargo

Mr. Jenkin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what encouragement he gives to research into ways of reducing the hazards associated with the transport of air cargo. [116849]

Mr. Mullin: Certain types of cargo are known to present specific hazards when transported by air and these are categorised as dangerous goods. The carriage of dangerous goods by air is governed by the Air Navigation (Dangerous Goods) Regulations 1994 which implement the requirements of Annex 13 to the Chicago Convention. This requires that all dangerous goods transported by air must be carried in accordance with the International Civil Aviation Organisation's Technical Instructions for the Safe Transport of Dangerous Goods by Air. The Technical Instructions themselves are based upon the UN Recommendations on the Transport of Dangerous Goods.

The Technical Instructions are reviewed regularly by an ICAO panel of experts on dangerous goods. The Department funds a dangerous goods specialist from the Civil Aviation Authority to participate in the panel, which she currently chairs. The ICAO panel does not consider that any research is necessary.

Mr. Jenkin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what assessment he has made of the adequacy of the regulations governing the use of frozen carbon dioxide for packaging for chilled and frozen goods transported by air. [116848]

Mr. Mullin: In accordance with Annex 18 to the Chicago Convention the transport of all dangerous goods by air in the UK is governed by the International Civil Aviation Organisation's (ICAO) Technical Instructions for the Safe Transport of Dangerous Goods by Air. The Technical Instructions are regularly reviewed by an ICAO panel (which includes a UK member) and revised biennially. The hazards from frozen carbon dioxide are well known and the ICAO panel considers that the present requirements for its carriage are adequate.

Galileo Project

Mr. Jenkin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if it remains his policy to oppose the EU Galileo project; and if he will make a statement. [116844]

Mr. Mullin: The Government have not opposed the EU Galileo project. They have adopted a prudent approach to the project as they consider that key issues such as cost, funding (including arrangements for a public-private partnership), user benefits, security and management arrangements need to be properly evaluated. Such views are shared by other EU member states. Hence, the Transport Council, at its meeting in June 1999, adopted a Resolution that invited the European Commission to proceed only with the Definition Phase of Galileo in conjunction with member states and the European Space Agency. This phase has begun and includes detailed work on the issues of concern to the UK and other EU states. Based on the results of this work and negotiations with the US and the Russian Federation, the Commission is required, by the end of this year, to put forward proposals to the Council on the best way to proceed with the project either independently or in co-operation with international partners.

Regional Planning Guidance

Mr. Brake: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what is the assumed scale of net regional population migration underlying the projected level of household formation proposed for the current round of draft regional planning guidance (a) in each of the eight English regions and (b) for the spatial development plan for London. [116653]

Miss Melanie Johnson: I have been asked to reply.

The information requested falls within the responsibility of the Director of the Office for National Statistics. I have asked him to reply.

Letter from Tim Holt to Mr. Tom Brake, dated 30 March 2000:

As Director of the Office for National Statistics (ONS), I have been asked to reply to your recent question on the assumed scale of net regional population migration, underlying the projected level of household formation proposed for the current round of draft regional planning guidance.

You requested information for each of the eight English regions and for the spatial development plan for London. The 1996-based household projections are one factor taken into account in arriving at the level of housing and households provision in regional planning guidance and spatial development plans.

The latest household projections are consistent with the 1996-based subnational population projections at regional level. The attached table provides the assumed levels of migration in the subnational population projections for each government office region. Projections of migration are shown for five different years in the projection period and those for the intervening years are consistent with these figures.

Subnational population projections: assumed net annual migration for projected years

Thousand

Government office region	Mid year ending 2001	2006	2011	2016	2021
North East	−3.2	−2.6	−1.8	−1.1	−0.1
North West	−8.0	−7.8	−6.8	−5.0	−3.6
Yorkshire and the Humber	1.6	1.5	1.3	1.4	2.2
East Midlands	13.1	12.5	12.0	12.0	12.0
West Midlands	−2.9	−2.3	−1.7	−0.9	0.0
East	19.8	19.6	19.4	19.6	19.7
London	−18.2	−17.4	−17.9	−21.8	−26.4
Sough East	34.2	32.7	31.2	30.6	30.5
South West	29.5	29.7	30.1	30.9	31.6

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Advisory Committee on Works of Art

Mrs. Roe: To ask the hon. Member for Roxburgh and Berwickshire, representing the House of Commons Commission, if he will make a statement about the membership of the Advisory Committee on Works of Art. [116746]

Mr. Kirkwood: Madam Speaker has appointed the hon. Member for West Ham (Mr. Banks) in place of the hon. Member for Dudley, North (Mr. Cranston) as a Member of the Advisory Committee on Works of Art.

Research Assistants

Mr. Oaten: To ask the Chairman of the Administration Committee how many hon. Members currently have passes for temporary research assistants from overseas. [116957]

Mrs. Roe: Forty-seven.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Employment Regulations

13. Mr. Brooke: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what recent representations he has received from businesses on the introduction of employment regulations. [115672]

Mr. Alan Johnson: I receive many representations from business on a variety of employment issues.

Regulation

14. Mr. Love: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what steps his Department is taking to relieve small businesses of regulatory burdens. [115673]

Ms Hewitt: One of the primary functions of the Small Business Service will be to ensure that the "Think Small First" philosophy is applied across Whitehall. The Small Business Service will also encourage Government Departments to make information on regulations more comprehensible and accessible, including through an SBS gateway.

Textile and Clothing Industry

15. Charlotte Atkins: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what the Government's initial response is to the consultation document, "A National Strategy for the UK Textile and Clothing Industry". [115674]

Mr. Caborn: The Government welcome the production of the consultation document "National Strategy for the UK Textile and Clothing Industry". We shall make a detailed response to the report, including the recommendations, when the final document is produced later in the spring.

Employment Agencies

16. Mr. Hope: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will make a statement on the regulation of employment agencies. [115675]

Mr. Alan Johnson: Our review of the agency conduct regulations, following last year's consultation, is progressing well. The new regulations will be laid before Parliament shortly. We will streamline and clarify the existing regulations while ensuring workers' and hirers' interests are properly protected.

Cybersquatting

17. Mr. Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what recent discussions he has had with interested parties relating to cybersquatting. [115676]

Ms Hewitt: The Department of Trade and Industry has been working for some time both in the UK and in international fora to develop consistent and workable procedures for resolving domain name disputes.

The law applies online just as much as it does offline so, where the UK courts have jurisdiction, owners of trade marks and other well known names can pursue legal remedies against cybersquatters who infringe their rights under UK law.

Post Office

18. Shona McIsaac: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how the Post Office will help tackle financial exclusion. [115677]

Mr. Byers: The Horizon project to computerise the whole of the post office network will provide an automated IT platform from which basis the Post Office can substantially extend its arrangements to act with banks and building societies on an agency basis. In addition, my right hon. Friend the Chancellor of the Exchequer announced in his recent Budget statement that he has asked the banks to work with the Post Office to offer a universal banking service available at post offices. Development of these measures has the potential to provide banking facilities to the substantial number of people currently financially excluded.

Milk Industry

19. Mr. David Heath: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will make a statement on competition in the milk industry. [115678]

Mr. Byers: I welcomed the voluntary decision by the members of Milk Marque to break up into three independent successors. All sectors of the UK dairy industry will benefit from a more competitive structure.

I have asked the Director General of Fair Trading to advise me by Easter whether the market is now operating competitively. I will make an announcement once I have considered his advice.

Minimum Wage

21. Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry when he next expects to review the level of the national minimum wage. [115680]

Mr. Alan Johnson: We are asking the Low Pay Commission, in its new remit, to continue to monitor the minimum wage and advise on a range of issues including whether there is a case for a further increase in the minimum wage rates and, if so, by how much. The Commission has been asked to report again by July 2001, and the Government will implement any rate changes in October of that year.

Meanwhile, in the light of the Low Pay Commission's positive findings in its second report, which we published on 15 February, we have already announced increases in the minimum wage rates later this year. The youth rate increases to £3.20 on 1 June 2000 and the main rate increases to £3.70 on 1 October 2000.

31. Mr. Swayne: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what account is taken of an employer's provision of board and lodging when calculating the minimum wage payable. [115693]

Mr. Alan Johnson: The only benefit in kind which counts towards national minimum wage pay is accommodation. The maximum amount which can be offset against national minimum wage pay by employers who provide accommodation is £19.95 per week.

The provision of other benefits such as meals is not taken into account when calculating whether the national minimum wage has been paid. This approach follows recommendations by the Low Pay Commission in its first and second reports and its special report into the accommodation offset.

Sub-post Offices

22. Dr. Palmer: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will make a statement on the role of sub-post offices in supplying electronic services to local communities. [115681]

Mr. Alan Johnson: The Government are fully committed to a nationwide network of post offices and are contributing nearly £500 million towards the cost of equipping the network with a modern, automated IT platform. The system will be installed at some 18,000 post offices throughout the country by spring 2001, to enable the Post Office to improve services and take advantage of new business opportunities. Creation of an extensive automated infrastructure will facilitate the use of the Post Office network as a delivery channel for electronic Government services.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry when he expects to receive the Performance and Innovation Unit report on the sub-Post Office network; and if he will make a statement. [115769]

Mr. Byers [holding answer 22 March 2000]: As my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister indicated in his answer to the hon. Member for Torbay (Mr. Sanders) on 17 January 2000, Official Report, column 267W, the Performance and Innovation Unit's report on the Post Office network is expected to be completed this spring.

EU Membership

23. Helen Jackson: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will make a statement on the benefits to British manufacturing of membership of the European Union. [115682]

Mrs. Liddell: For British business, the greatest of all benefits of our membership of the EU is being part of the European single market. This gives all UK manufacturers access to the largest single market in the world—a market of nearly 380 million consumers.

Almost 60 per cent. of the UK's trade, worth nearly £120 billion a year, is with the EU. In addition we attract a huge amount of inward investment as a gateway to the single market, for countries outside the EU.

Internet Access

24. Mr. Peter Bradley: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what steps he is taking to overcome difficulties in improving access by rural communities to the internet; and if he will make a statement. [115683]

Ms Hewitt: The Prime Minister recently announced the Government's goal of universal internet access by 2005. People in rural areas can already get such access via a PC and a telephone line. The Government are also making sure that there are public internet access points widely spread across the country, including in rural areas.

Pirate Radio Stations

25. Mr. Gerrard: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what steps he is taking to curb the activities of pirate radio stations. [115685]

Ms Hewitt: My Department's Radiocommunications Agency is constantly active against pirates. Last year it conducted a record 1,414 operations against pirates across the UK and successfully prosecuted 47 people.

Competition

26. Mr. Sheerman: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what assessment he has made of the competitiveness of UK industry in relation to its major European rivals. [115686]

Mrs. Liddell: Competitiveness depends on a wide range of factors as discussed in the Government's Competitiveness White Paper. Following on from the White Paper, the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry published, in December 1999, a set of indicators which provided a systematic assessment of the UK's competitiveness against the world's leading economies, including its major European rivals.

The overall message from the Indicators is that the UK is beginning to succeed as a knowledge driven economy, but in many areas has some way to go to match the standards of the best.

Communications Regulation Reform

27. Mr. Ian Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will bring forward the publication of the White Paper on communications regulation reform; and if he will make a statement on its proposed contents. [R] [115687]

Ms Hewitt: The White Paper is a priority for both the Department of Trade and Industry and the Department for Culture Media and Sport. It will cover areas such as the economic regulation of broadcasting and telecommunications, content regulation, media ownership and the role of public service broadcasting. It will be published as soon as possible before the end of the year.

Small Business Service

28. Mrs. Curtis-Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will make a statement about the recent consultation exercise conducted with businesses by the Small Business Service. [115688]

Ms Hewitt: We published and laid in the House on 17 January the results of the very extensive consultation carried out last year, together with the Government's response. We had 700 replies, from a complete cross-section of all those with an interest.

Working Time Directive

29. Mr. Shaw: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what assessment he has made of the impact of the working time directive. [115690]

Mr. Alan Johnson: The Government commissioned an interim report of research on the implementation of the Working Time Regulations. A copy of the report is available from the Library of the House.

Electricity

32. Mr. Stunell: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what measures he proposes to encourage micro-cogeneration of electricity within the UK. [115694]

Mrs. Liddell: The Chancellor announced his intention in the Pre-Budget Report of trebling support for energy efficiency measures under the climate change levy to around £150 million for 2001–02. This has been confirmed in the Budget.

Final decisions on use of the £50 million "energy efficiency" fund will be made in the 2000 spending review. The overall aim will be to encourage take-up of low-carbon technologies, including renewables, with an expanded programme of support.

The Budget has also confirmed, subject to obtaining EU State Aids clearance, that a system of 100 per cent. first year capital allowances will be introduced for certain eligible technologies—to include "good quality" CHP—from April 2001.

Micro-CHP giving energy saving benefits to consumers could also be eligible for Utilities' programmes to meet Energy Efficiency Standards of Performance Obligations.

The draft Strategy for CHP to 2010 is due to be published soon by my right hon. Friend the Minister for the Environment. It will invite comments on how we can achieve our CHP objectives, including developing the market for micro-CHP.

Consumer Protection

33. Dr. Tony Wright: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what proposals he has to protect consumers in relation to schemes run by trade associations. [115695]

Dr. Howells: When seeking to buy products or services many consumers will be influenced by logos or membership of trade associations. Consumers need to know that these provide effective redress and are properly enforced. The Government propose to change the law to give the Director General of Fair Trading a power to give a seal of approval to effective codes. This will enable the consumer to choose a supplier with confidence, knowing that if something does go wrong, redress is available.

Inward Investment

34. Mr. Brady: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will make a statement on inward investment to the North West of England. [115696]

Mr. Caborn: Since May 1997 my Department has made 672 offers of Regional Selective Assistance in the North West of England, including 51 offers to overseas companies, creating or safeguarding nearly 33,000. Major inward investment successes have included MBNA in Chester and New Balance Athletic Shoes in Cumbria.

Business Burdens

35. Mr. Blizzard: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what initiatives his Department is taking in conjunction with other Departments to reduce the burdens on business. [115697]

Ms Hewitt: The Small Business Service is working closely with other Government Departments to reduce burdens on business. For example it is working closely with the Inland Revenue's business support teams to make it easier for employers to establish and operate their payroll operations; and it is working with the HSE to help implement the Health and Safety Commission's strategy for small firms.

BMW (Land Rover)

36. Mr. John M. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what is the position regarding BMW's ownership of Land Rover in Solihull; and if he will make a statement. [115698]

Mr. Byers: I understand that Ford has reached a memorandum of understanding with BMW to acquire Land Rover. The transaction is subject to BMW and Ford achieving a definitive agreement, due diligence and regulatory approvals. If successful the acquisition is expected to be completed in the second quarter of this year.

Aerospace Projects

37. Mr. Wilkinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will list the five aerospace projects on which his Department has disbursed the most launch aid in the last 20 years, indicating the sums involved in each case. [115699]

Mr. Byers: In the last 20 years, the five largest launch investment commitments which the Government have made are:

To BAE SYSTEMS for the Airbus A3XX in March 2000, £530 million

To British Aerospace for the Airbus A340–500/600 in February 1998, £123 million

To Rolls-Royce for the Trent aeroengine in November 1997, £200 million

To British Aerospace for the Airbus A330/340 in December 1988, £447.1 million

To British Aerospace for the Airbus A320 in March 1985, £249.3 million.

Enterprise

Mr. Healey: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what steps he is taking to encourage the growth of enterprise in areas of high unemployment. [115691]

Mr. Caborn: The Government recognise the need to encourage the growth of enterprise in disadvantaged areas such as those with high unemployment.

One of the Policy Action Teams set up by the Social Exclusion Unit was asked to look at the role of 'Enterprise and Social Exclusion'. It reported in November 1999.

The report made several recommendations for the Government's new Small Business Service (SBS). A key role for the SBS will be to identify those people who face specific barriers to entrepreneurship, for example some ethnic minorities and those in disadvantaged communities and to ensure that business support is tailored to meet their needs.

At the local level there will be a new network of SBS franchises which will replace the Business Links network. The Government's SBS franchise bidding guidance has set out a clear message to the potential franchisees to demonstrate how they will deliver their services to those in deprived communities and other under-represented groups.

The SBS has established a new social inclusion team to take these issues forward and in all aspects of this work, the SBS will build on the excellent work that is already going on at the local level. It will identify good practice and ensure that it is shared widely.

Another area of assistance is Enterprise Grants. These are available to SMEs in the 'Assisted Areas' and in additional areas of identified special need, including local authorities with high unemployment or low employment rates.

In addition, the Phoenix Fund was announced by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry in November 1999 to take forward specific activities in deprived areas. The fund will have a budget of £30 million over three years. The Fund will support entrepreneurship in deprived areas and will respond to issues raised in the PAT 3 report. It will provide funding for:

piloting of the new Business Volunteers Mentor Association; support for new and existing community finance initiatives;

a development fund for innovative ways of supporting enterprise in deprived areas.

The Department is currently considering ways of developing the fund for the benefit of business.

State Aid

Mr. Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry, pursuant to his answer of 22 March 2000, Official Report, column 613W, on state aid to industry, what formal investigation procedures concerning the United Kingdom have been initiated by the Commission since May 1997 other than that relating to the Rover/BMW plant in Birmingham; and if he will place the information supplied to the Commission by (a) Her Majesty's Government and (b) other parties in each such case in the Library. [116835]

Mr. Byers: Other than the proposed aid for Rover/BMW plant in Birmingham, the Commission has initiated two formal investigation procedures into aid concerning the United Kingdom since May 1997. The cases were as follows: Pig Welfare Slaughter Compensation Scheme (C76/98) in Northern Ireland and the English Partnership/Investment Programme (N31/95).

I will arrange for the information requested to be placed in the Library of the House.

Small Businesses

Mr. Steinberg: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how many small businesses are based in North East England; and what percentage this represents of the UK total. [117215]

Ms Hewitt: The total number of small and medium enterprises in the North East is 39,600 and this represents 3 per cent. of the equivalent figure for the UK.

Part-time Workers Directive

Fiona Mactaggart: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will make a statement on progress in consultation about the part-time workers directive. [115684]

Mr. Alan Johnson: The Government are currently considering the responses to the consultation on part-time work. We will announce the outcome and lay the regulations on part-time work as soon as possible.

Gas Directive

Mr. Doran: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what plans he has to implement Article 23 of the Gas Directive (98/30/EC) in respect of access to upstream pipeline networks. [117465]

Mrs. Liddell: I have today issued a consultation document outlining proposals to implement those aspects of the Gas Directive which apply to upstream pipeline networks.

The consultation document outlines proposals to amend the Pipelines Act 1962 and the Petroleum Act 1998 in order to give effect to Article 23 of the Gas Directive by placing a duty on upstream pipeline owners to consider applications for access to their pipelines against certain criteria and placing certain new duties and powers on the Secretary of State to settle disputes between pipeline owners and applicants for access.

As many upstream pipelines carry a complex mix of hydrocarbons from which gas and oil may be extracted at a processing facility, the consultation document proposes applying the provisions of Article 23 of the Directive to certain upstream pipelines which carry either gas or oil or both. It proposes a definition of "upstream pipeline network" which would include offshore and onshore pipelines of any length carrying gas or oil from an oil or gas production field to processing terminals in the United Kingdom or carrying gas to terminals in another country. The definition would also include pipelines carrying gas directly from a production field to a power station or industrial plant.

The consultation document seeks views on all of these proposals and, in particular, on how the interconnecting pipeline between the United Kingdom and Belgium should be regarded for the purposes of the Directive.

The proposals clarify certain aspects of the Pipelines Act 1962 and the Petroleum Act 1998, in particular the Secretary of State's role as the dispute settlement authority, and reflect current practice in the offshore industry under the Offshore Infrastructure Code of Practice. The material impact on business is expected to be negligible.

Comments on the consultation document have been requested by 30 May 2000.

A copy of that document has been placed in the Library of the House. The document is also available on the Department's website (www.og.dti.uk).

NORTHERN IRELAND

Parliamentary Questions

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland, pursuant to his reply to the hon. Member for Fermanagh and South Tyrone (Mr. Maginnis) of 29 February 2000, Official Report, column 200W, on Parliamentary Questions, what expense was incurred in answering questions from the hon. Member for Hull, North (a) concerning the circumstances surrounding and subsequent inquiries into the deaths of (i) Patrick Finucane, (ii) Rosemary Nelson and (iii) Robert Hamill and (b) concerning (1) the RUC's response to the Patten report and (2) the Police Federation's response to the Patten report. [113435]

Mr. Ingram: During the period 1 June 1999 to 31 January 2000, my hon. Friend tabled a total of 25 Parliamentary Questions on these issues. A rough calculation of the cost of answering these questions has been estimated at £8,500.

Mrs. Rosemary Nelson

Mr. Donaldson: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many RUC detectives are engaged in the investigation into the death of Rosemary Nelson. [114717]

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many RUC (a) detectives and (b) other officers are working (i) full-time and (ii) part-time, on the investigation into the death of Mrs. Rosemary Nelson. [114935]

Mr. Ingram: The number of officers involved in this investigation has varied at different times to accommodate the needs of the necessary inquiries. However, I can advise that, for example, on 14 March there were a total of 68 officers attached to the inquiry, 22 of whom were RUC officers.

Probation Board

Mrs. McKenna: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland when he will publish the Probation Board for Northern Ireland's Corporate Plan for 1999 to 2002. [117395]

Mr. Ingram: The Probation Board for Northern Ireland's Corporate Plan was published on 28 March 2000. Copies of the plan have been placed in the Library.

Fuel Poverty

Mr. Don Foster: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what plans he has to monitor the number of households in fuel poverty in Northern Ireland. [116679]

Mr. George Howarth: The Department of Social Development is in the process of developing a scheme of assistance to address fuel poverty in Northern Ireland, similar to the Home Energy Efficiency Scheme (HEES) in England. As part of this, monitoring procedures will be produced to determine the effectiveness of the energy efficiency measures installed in the homes of the fuel poor.

Workplace Parking

Mr. Gray: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many workplace car parking spaces are available at the buildings used and controlled by his Department. [116772]

Mr. Ingram: There are approximately 7,300 car park spaces attached to office buildings owned or leased by Office Accommodation Branch.

PRIME MINISTER

Prime Ministerial Appointments

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Prime Minister if he will list the (a) non-departmental public bodies and (b) Task Forces for which he holds sole responsibility for making appointments. [113286]

The Prime Minister: I am required by legislation to make a number of appointments to non-departmental public bodies. However, this is usually done in consultation with, and on the advice of, appropriate departmental Ministers.

In addition, I am consulted on a number of appointments made by departmental Ministers and I advise The Queen on appointments made under the Royal Prerogative.

Appointments to Task Forces are made by the relevant departmental Minister. I have sole responsibility for the following appointments to non-departmental public bodies:

Advisory Committee on Business Appointments

Committee on Standards in Public Life

Senior Salaries Review Body.

Lord Levy

Mr. Baker: To ask the Prime Minister what authority he has given Lord Levy in his capacity as his personal envoy to meet and deal with senior civil servants in the UK. [113507]

The Prime Minister [holding answer 7 March 2000]: Access to civil servants is determined by the Secretary of State of the Department in question.

Mr. Maude: To ask the Prime Minister what representations he made to the Secretary of State for the Foreign and Commonwealth Office about Lord Levy's role as the Prime Minister's personal envoy. [113565]

The Prime Minister [holding answer 8 March 2000]: My right hon. Friend the Foreign Secretary and I have of course discussed the outcome of the meetings Lord Levy has held.

Mr. Maude: To ask the Prime Minister when he asked Lord Levy to become his personal envoy to the Middle East. [113567]

The Prime Minister [holding answer 8 March 2000]: I refer the right hon. Member to the answer I gave the hon. Member for Lewes (Mr. Baker) on 22 February 2000, Official Report, column 852W.

Mr. Maude: To ask the Prime Minister, pursuant to his answer of 22 February 2000, Official Report, column 852W, which senior officials and which Ministers Lord Levy met during each of his visits. [113930]

The Prime Minister [holding answer 10 March 2000]: Lord Levy has met a range of senior figures during his visits, including President Assad of Syria, King Abdullah of Jordan, the Sultan of Oman, the Amir of Qatar, the Amir of Bahrain, Prime Minister Al-Hoss of Lebanon, Prime Minister Barak of Israel, Foreign Minister Moussa and Presidential Adviser Al-Baz of Egypt, President Ben Ali of Tunisia and King Mohammed VI of Morocco.

Mr. Maude: To ask the Prime Minister, pursuant to his answer of 22 February 2000, Official Report, column 852W, on which occasions Lord Levy has stayed in British Government accommodation while carrying out official business on behalf of the Prime Minister during his visits to Israel and the Middle East. [113928]

The Prime Minister [holding answer 10 March 2000]: In connection with his work on my behalf, Lord Levy has stayed in the Ambassador's residence in Syria, Jordan, Oman and Qatar, and (since my answer of 22 February 2000, Official Report, column 852W) in Tunisia and Morocco. He has stayed at the Ambassador's residence in Israel once, when accompanying my right hon. Friend the Foreign Secretary as part of my right hon. Friend's delegation.

Mr. Maude: To ask the Prime Minister what restrictions there are on persons conducting party political business while acting as the Prime Minister's personal envoy on business overseas. [114592]

The Prime Minister [holding answer 15 March 2000]: Lord Levy conducts no Labour Party political business in the Middle East or North Africa on his visits as my personal envoy.

Mr. Maude: To ask the Prime Minister if Lord Levy has conducted business on his behalf while on personal visits to Middle Eastern states other than Israel. [114681]

The Prime Minister [holding answer 15 March 2000]: No. Since April 1999 Lord Levy has conducted business on my behalf in the Middle East only during the visits referred to in my answer of 22 February 2000, Official Report, column 852W, and during his recent visit to Tunisia and Morocco.

Mr. Maude: To ask the Prime Minister what account he took of the business interests of Lord Levy in deciding whether to appoint Lord Levy as his personal envoy. [114591]

The Prime Minister [holding answer 15 March 2000]: Lord Levy has no business interests in the Middle East or North Africa.

Mr. Maude: To ask the Prime Minister what representations or inquiries he has received from Israeli authorities about Lord Levy's role as his personal envoy or otherwise acting on his behalf. [114694]

The Prime Minister [holding answer 15 March 2000]: None.

Mr. Maude: To ask the Prime Minister if he will set out the distinction between visits conducted by Lord Levy (a) travelling as the Prime Minister's personal envoy and (b) travelling in his personal capacity while also having discussions on the Prime Minister's behalf. [114690]

The Prime Minister [holding answer 15 March 2000]: Lord Levy has been described as my personal envoy when the main purpose of his travel was to pass messages on my behalf. Only his visits to Israel, which have been primarily for private and family reasons, have been described as travel in his personal capacity.

Lindisfarne Gospels

Mr. Beith: To ask the Prime Minister what discussions he has had about the displaying of the Lindisfarne Gospels in (a) Durham, (b) Newcastle and (c) Holy Island; and if he will make a statement. [115941]

The Prime Minister [holding answer 23 March 2000]: I very much welcome the work done by the British Library and Northumberland county council to enable the display of the Lindisfarne Gospels in the North East. Although primarily a matter for the two parties involved, I have taken a keen interest in this partnership and am pleased that they have reached an agreement which will allow the people of the North East to see the Gospels when they are loaned to the Laing Art Gallery in Newcastle later this year. Thanks to the British Library, the North East will also have a permanent digital copy of the Gospels using the Library's award winning "Turning the Pages" technology.

Nuclear Weapons

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Prime Minister when NATO will commence a review of its nuclear weapons policy. [116505]

The Prime Minister: At the Washington Summit in April 1999, the Alliance approved a revised Strategic Concept which set out NATO's political and military policy, including nuclear policy. All aspects of this policy are kept under regular review.

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Prime Minister how he has responded to the request from the United Nations Messenger of Peace, Michael Douglas, that he take the lead in promoting a new round of multilateral negotiations on nuclear weapons non-proliferation and disarmament. [116506]

The Prime Minister: When they met on 21 March, my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs emphasised to Mr. Douglas our commitment to advancing the goal of nuclear disarmament and to reaching a successful outcome to the forthcoming Review Conference of the Treaty on the Non-proliferation of Nuclear Weapons.

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Prime Minister if he will appoint a special representative to promote non-proliferation of nuclear weapons. [116504]

The Prime Minister: I have no plans to do so. We are unequivocally committed to nuclear non-proliferation, and to the goal of nuclear disarmament. This can be best achieved through the Treaty on the Non-proliferation of nuclear weapons. The Minister of State, Foreign and Commonwealth Office, my hon. Friend the Member for Neath (Mr. Hain), who has responsibility for non-proliferation issues, will represent the United Kingdom at the Review Conference of the Non-proliferation Treaty in New York from 24 April to 19 May.

Genetics

Mr. David Heath: To ask the Prime Minister (1) if he will make a statement on the outcome of his recent discussions with President Clinton on the subject of the human genome project; [115656]

(2) what recent discussions he has had with the Government of the United States on patent law with regard to genetic sequencing. [115659]

The Prime Minister [holding answer 27 March 2000]: On 14 March President Clinton and I agreed a joint statement on access to information produced by researchers into human genetics. Our statement recognised that research into human genetics offers enormous potential for new ways of understanding, treating and curing disease. It goes on to say:

> To realise the full promise of this research, raw fundamental data on the human genome, including the human genome, including the DNA sequence and its variations, should be made freely available to scientists everywhere. Unencumbered access to this information will promote discoveries that will reduce the burden of disease, improve health around the world, and enhance the quality of life for all humankind. Intellectual property protection for gene-based inventions will also play an important role in stimulating the development of important new health care products.

Mr. David Heath: To ask the Prime Minister (1) what proposals he has to seek to amend the law relating to patents with regard to genetic sequencing; [115657]

(2) what recent discussions he has had with (a) other European Union Governments and (b) the European Commission on reform of patent law with regard to genetic sequencing. [115658]

The Prime Minister [holding answer 27 March 2000]: A European Directive on legal protection of biotechnological inventions which establishes rules for patents relating to gene sequences, has been adopted with the support of the United Kingdom and passed into European law in July 1998. It is due to be implemented in all member states including the United Kingdom by 30 July 2000. Implementation of the Directive will require amendment of the Patents Act 1977. An Order under section 2(2) of the European Communities Act 1972 to make the required changes is being prepared. Comprehensive discussions with the European Commission and all Governments of our European Union partners over several years culminated and are reflected in the adoption of this Directive. No further discussions have taken place since the adoption of this Directive.

Lisbon Summit

Mr. Lansley: To ask the Prime Minister what the breakdown was of the cost of Cabinet Ministers' flights to the European summit in Lisbon. [116569]

The Prime Minister: A detailed list of Cabinet Ministers' visits overseas, and information on spend by all Ministers on travel overseas for the period 1 April 1999 to 31 March 2000 will be published as soon as possible after the end of the current financial year.

Mr. Lansley: To ask the Prime Minister (1) how many meetings Cabinet Ministers attended in their official capacity during the European summit in Lisbon; [116652]

(2) if he will publish the itineraries of the Cabinet Ministers attending the European Union summit in Lisbon. [116568]

The Prime Minister: Together with my right hon. Friends the Foreign Secretary and the Chancellor of the Exchequer, I attended a special meeting of the European Council from 22 to 24 March in Lisbon. The main purpose of the meeting was to agree measures to bring about comprehensive economic reform within the European Union. I refer the hon. Member to the Oral Statement I made on the outcome of the Council on 27 March 2000, Official Report, columns 21–23.

In addition, my right hon. Friends and I held meetings with EU counterparts and others during which a broad range of issues were discussed.

SCOTLAND

Assisted Areas

Mr. Maclennan: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland, pursuant to his answer of 29 February 2000, Official Report, column 260W, on Assisted Areas, if he will place in the Library the representations he has received from Highlands and Islands Enterprise about the Assisted Areas map proposals. [115782]

Dr. Reid [holding answer 21 March 2000]: Following the consultation on the Assisted Areas map carried out in 1998, all replies to that consultation were made available for inspection in the library of the Department of Trade and Industry, including the response from Highlands and Islands Enterprise. I am arranging for copies of this response to be placed in the Library of the House.

Workplace Parking

Mr. Gray: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many workplace car parking spaces are available at the buildings used and controlled by his Department. [116770]

Dr. Reid: There are six car parking spaces available at buildings used and controlled by my Department.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Prime Minister's Summit

Dr. Naysmith: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement on the outcome of the Prime Minister's summit on the Government's strategy for agriculture. [117545]

Mr. Nick Brown: I have placed in Libraries of both Houses a paper outlining the Government's strategy for agriculture as discussed at the Prime Minister's summit today.

Departmental Contracts

Mr. Willis: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what is the number and value of contracts let by his Department since May 1997 to external consultants and advisers for the management of competitive tendering processes. [109455]

Mr. Morley [holding answer 10 February 2000]: From records held centrally, since May 1997, the Ministry has let 11 contracts to external consultants and advisers for the management of competitive tendering processes. The total value of these contracts is £345,265 excluding VAT.

BSE

Mr. Todd: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if traces of agents thought to be sources of BSE have been found in meat imported into the United Kingdom since 1996. [115092]

Ms Quin: No test has been validated for the purpose of detecting the BSE agent in meat.

Over-30-months Scheme

Mr. Cotter: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what measures he is taking to reduce the backlog in payments due under the over-30-months scheme. [116012]

Ms Quin: Compensation payments under the over-30-months slaughter scheme (OTMS) are usually made within the Intervention Board's published target of 21 days. However, in the run-up to the extended Millennium break demand for the scheme reached the highest level since 1996, typically 20–25 per cent. above forecasts. This unexpected surge led to some payments being made outside target.

I am pleased to report, however, that since the end of February all payments have been made within the target.

Farmers (Bankruptcies)

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many bankruptcies there have been among farmers in England in each of the last 10 years. [115948]

Ms Quin [holding answer 28 March 2000]: Data on bankruptcies are available only for England and Wales combined as set out in the table.

Number of bankruptcies in the agricultural and horticultural sector: England and Wales 1989–99

Year	Bankruptcies of self-employed individuals	Company[1] insolvencies	Total
1989	142	78	220
1990	198	111	309
1991	266	135	401
1992	313	191	504
1993	277	157	434
1994	231	166	397
1995	218	99	317
1996	168	89	257
1997	155	51	206
1998	157	65	222
1999	[2]149	[2]52	[2]201

[1] Including partnerships

[2] Not including data for the fourth quarter

Source:

Department of Trade and Industry

Regional Service Centres

Mr. Bradshaw: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what the operating costs are of each of his Department's regional service centres; what refurbishment costs have been incurred at each centre in each of the last three years; and on what terms each of the buildings accommodating the regional service centre are secured, indicating which are (a) freehold and (b) leasehold. [115920]

Ms Quin: The data requested are set out in the table. This shows the latest forecast operating costs for the 1999–2000 financial year for each RSC; the expenditure on refurbishments (excluding normal maintenance) for the years from 1997–98 to 1999–2000; and the terms of occupancy at each site.

Operating and refurbishment costs of regional service centres

£000

RSC	Operating costs [1]	Refurbishment costs 1997–98	1998–99	1999–2000	Terms Freehold/leasehold
Bristol	3,590	105	232	0	Ground lease
Cambridge	4,497	173	80	0	Freehold
Carlisle	4,262	0	33	0	Freehold
Crewe[2]	4,056	0	0	0	Freehold
Exeter	5,143	0	0	0	Leased
Northallerton[3]	6,016	0	0	0	Leased
Nottingham	4,349	424	0	0	Leased
Reading	4,023	13	0	340	Freehold
Worcester	3,583	104	0	170	Freehold

[1] Pay, non-pay running costs and decentralised capital costs
[2] Newly built office acquired in 1998
[3] Newly built office completed in 1999

Milk

Mr. Ainger: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list the countries from which (a) raw milk and (b) UHT milk was imported into the United Kingdom in (i) 1997, (ii) 1998, and (iii) 1999, indicating the quantities in each case. [116573]

Ms Quin: Total imports of raw (ie untreated) milk are shown in the table. The vast majority of imports of raw milk into the United Kingdom are from the Republic of Ireland. Between 1997 and 1999 small quantities were also imported from Austria, Belgium, Denmark and the Netherlands.

Raw (ie untreated) milk imported into the UK

Million litres

	Total imports
1997	128.2
1998	128.7
1999	112.7

Source:
IBEA, DARD

It is not possible to separately identify trade in UHT milk from trade in other types of liquid drinking milk (eg fresh pasteurised milk). The following table shows total imports of all liquid drinking milk (in packages not exceeding two litres), by main country of origin.

Drinking milk imported into the UK, in packages not exceeding two litres

Million litres

	1997	1998	1999
Belgium and Luxembourg	14.2	10.4	6.7
France	19.7	20.3	13.2
Germany	20.6	20.4	10.2
Ireland	6.8	4.2	5.7
Others	0.3	0.0	0.1
Total imports	61.6	55.4	36.0

Note:
Due to rounding the totals may differ from the sum of the individual figures
Source:
Overseas Trade Statistics

Forest of Bowland

Mr. Keetch: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what assessment he has made of the Special Area Project for Forest of Bowland; what plans he has to introduce schemes to address the needs of areas in England that contain sites of international importance for wildlife; and if he will make a statement. [116319]

Mr. Morley: The Forest of Bowland was one of two areas selected in 1999 for a two-year, experimental project to test an integrated approach to environmental and rural economy issues in the uplands. A review of the project (and the experiment in the other areas—Bodmin Moor in Cornwall) will be carried out after an economic evaluation has taken place next year.

The Ministry already operates agri-environment schemes which help to address the needs of areas in England that contain sites of international importance for wildlife. We announced on 7 December 1999 that the funding for these schemes will be increased significantly. By 2007 it is expected to be double its present level.

EU Rural Development Regulation

Mr. Keetch: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what plans he has to make use of the provisions of the EU Rural Development Regulation allowing support of agricultural production to be conditional on the carrying out of measures to protect wildlife; and if he will make a statement. [116320]

Mr. Morley: There are already measures in our livestock subsidy schemes to prevent overgrazing and environmentally damaging feeding practices and in our arable payments schemes relating to the management of set-aside land.

Consultation last year on the European Commission's Agenda 2000 reforms revealed numerous suggestions of additional environmental conditions which might be attached to agricultural support payments. These need to be considered very carefully with regard to whether they would be easily understood, their ease of enforcement, the environmental benefits and the cost to farmers. Further work is being done on this. If possible measures are identified, a further round of consultation on detailed proposals would be needed before introducing them.

Organic Farming

Mr. Oaten: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list the number of (a) organic farms, (b) farms currently in the process of converting into organic farms and (c) farms that have applied for the organic farming scheme, in (i) England, (ii) Hampshire, (iii) each local authority in Hampshire and (iv) each constituency in Hampshire. [116478]

Mr. Morley [holding answer 27 March 2000]: Information is currently available only for England. The number of applications to the Organic Farming Scheme that passed the initial validity checks is currently 1,185. A small number of these were either withdrawn or were not accepted onto the Scheme. As at November 1999 in England there were 34,534 hectares of land converted to organic farming and 94,144 hectares in conversion.

Spanish Fishermen

Mr. Gill: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what EU funds have been made available to Spanish fishermen to compensate them for the loss of access to Moroccan fisheries waters. [116249]

Mr. Morley: According to our information, all compensation paid so far to Spanish fishermen, available from 30 November 1999 to 31 May 2000, has come from national funds made available by the Spanish Government.

Under the new Financial Instrument for Fisheries Guidance (FIFG), which came into force on 1 January 2000, aid is available for vessel owners and fishermen whose activities are temporarily ended due to the non-renewal of a fisheries agreement. If offered, this aid would count against the allocation for Spain under the new FIFG.

Inshore Fishing

Mr. Moss: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food (1) what representations he has received from the inshore fishermen at Hastings and Rye with regard to illegal fishing in their traditional waters by boats of over 10 m in length which hold licences for 10 m and under; [116090]

(2) what assessment he has made of the extent of illegal fishing in inshore waters along the South Coast of England by boats with under 10 m licences but which are above 10 m in length; how many such boats are involved; and what action his Department is taking and planning to take. [116092]

Mr. Morley: Following representations from inshore fishermen and my hon. Friend for Hastings and Rye (Mr. Foster), the Ministry identified more than 20 vessels, licensed as 10 m and under vessels, whose overall length appeared to have been extended by adding structures (removable or otherwise) and which were effectively operating as over 10 m vessels.

The owners concerned have been advised that they must reduce the overall length of their vessel to 10 m or under, or acquire over 10 m licences by 30 June 2000. If they fail to do so their fishing vessel licences will not be renewed from 1 July 2000. A number of owners have already taken appropriate action and others are planning to do so.

Fisheries Agreement

Mr. Gill: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what is the estimated number of fishing vessels affected by the absence of a new fisheries agreement between the EU and Morocco. [116250]

Mr. Morley: The European Commission has estimated that 500 Community vessels operated in Moroccan waters during the period of the EC/Morocco fisheries agreement from 1 December 1995 to 30 November 1999.

INTERNATIONAL DEVELOPMENT

Workplace Parking

Mr. Gray: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development how many workplace car parking spaces are available at the buildings used and controlled by her Department. [116765]

Clare Short: There is a total of 356 car parking spaces available at buildings controlled by my Department, with 305 spaces in East Kilbride and 51 spaces in London.

Zimbabwe

Mrs. Gillan: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what was the value of aid from (a) the EU and (b) the British Government directly paid to the Zimbabwean Government in the last 12 months. [116900]

Clare Short: The most recent figures available on EC aid for Zimbabwe are for 1998, when total EC official development assistance was £13.2 million. The figure for EU member programmes plus the EC was £99.7 million. We have no information on how much of this was paid direct to the Government of Zimbabwe. In 1998–99, the value of British assistance to the Zimbabwe Government is estimated at £10 million.

TREASURY

Migrants

Mr. Brake: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what mechanism is in place to ensure that, for the purpose of compiling the sub-national population projections, migrants to the United Kingdom are not recorded at the point of entry to the United Kingdom as well as at subsequent places of residence elsewhere in the United Kingdom within the same statistical period. [116572]

Miss Melanie Johnson: The information requested falls within the responsibility of the Director of the Office for National Statistics. I have asked him to reply.

Letter from Tim Holt to Mr. Tom Brake, dated 30 March 2000:

As Director of the Office for National Statistics (ONS), I have been asked to reply to your recent question on recording of migrants to the United Kingdom in the subnational population projections at point of entry as well as subsequent places of residence elsewhere in the United Kingdom within the same statistical period.

The projections model takes the ONS mid-year population estimates for the base year. The population is then projected one year ahead, by ageing on the population one year and applying assumptions on births, deaths, international migration to and from England and internal migration within England. This process is then repeated for each year projected.

The model treats international and internal migrants separately. The assumptions on international migration in the subnational projections are based on recent past information using a range of survey and administrative data. International in-migrants are assigned to their final destination, not their port of entry and added to the general population in the year of their arrival. As they are then included in the general population, any subsequent moves within England are covered in the internal migration element of the model.

Death Rates (Merseyside)

Mrs. Curtis-Thomas: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what were the average death rates allowing for age and sex standardisation for (a) all causes, (b) coronary heart disease, (c) stroke and (d) cancer, for each ward in the Crosby parliamentary constituency and for the City of Liverpool as a whole in the last year for which figures are available. [116674]

Miss Melanie Johnson: The information requested falls within the responsibility of the Director of the Office for National Statistics. I have asked him to reply.

Letter from Tim Holt to Mrs. Curtis-Thomas, dated 30 March 2000:

As Director of the Office for National Statistics (ONS), I have been asked to reply to your recent question on the average death rates for each ward in the Crosby parliamentary constituency and for the City of Liverpool as a whole.

The attached table shows indirectly standardised mortality ratios (SMRs) for all causes of death, coronary heart disease, stroke and cancer, for each ward (as constituted at the time of the 1991 Census) that lies wholly in Crosby parliamentary constituency, in the years 1991–1993, based on populations from the 1991 Census. Comparable figures are also provided for Liverpool metropolitan county district (based on 1991 boundaries).

We have provided indirectly standardised ratios rather than European standardised rates as the latter do not incorporate sex standardisation and are likely to be less accurate for small numbers of deaths by cause in each ward.

An SMR is defined as the ratio of the observed deaths in a given population over the expected deaths in that population if it experienced the age-specific death rates of a standard population (in this case the United Kingdom). The SMR for the UK is 100. Values greater than 100 indicate higher than average mortality and values lower than 100 indicate lower than average mortality.

Standardised Mortality Ratios (SMRs) by ward and cause of death [1]—1991–93

Wards in Crosby parliamentary constituency and Liverpool MCD

		Standardised Mortality Ratio (SMR)
	Wardcode	All causes	Coronary heart disease	Stroke	Cancer
Wards in Crosby
Blundellsands	CAFC	117	109	134	113
Church	CAFE	140	122	131	150
Harington	CAFJ	92	95	74	94
Manor	CAFN	96	108	85	106
Ravenmeols	CAFW	90	98	87	96
Victoria	CAFZ	96	100	87	113
Liverpool metropolitan county district		105	103	99	110

[1] Cause of death is based on the underlying cause, using the following codes from the International Classification of Diseases, Ninth Revision
Coronary Heart Disease: 410–414
Stroke: 430–438
Cancer: 140–208

National Insurance Contributions Office

Mr. Lidington: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is his policy on requiring the National Insurance Contributions Office to pay interest on the late payment of the age-related element of NIC rebates to contracted-out money purchase schemes; how much has been paid in such interest payments for (a) 1997–98, (b) 1998–99 and (c) 1999–2000 to date; and if he will make a statement. [115984]

Dawn Primarolo [holding answer 23 March 2000]: The National Insurance Contributions Office applies the policy set out in the Inland Revenue's code of practice 1 when paying interest on the late payment of age-related rebates to contracted-out money purchase schemes. However, special arrangements were made for the 1997–98 tax year where payments were made at 0.5 per cent. of the rebate cumulatively for each month of delay after October 1998. The objective was to replace any State Earnings Related Pension benefits foregone at an annual rate of 6 per cent. (the prevailing gilt interest rate).

The 0.5 per cent. payable for the 1997–98 tax year includes both personal pension and money purchase schemes and a separate breakdown for each category is not yet available.

Compensation amounting to £40.9 million has been paid due to the late payment of age-related rebates for the 1997–98 tax year as a result of introducing the 0.5 per cent. addition. To date no compensation has been paid to contracted-out money purchase schemes for the 1998–99 tax year and as we have not yet commenced the processing of 1999–2000 employers end of year returns compensation is not yet an issue for this tax year.

Banking Services

Mr. Wray: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement on the Cruickshank report, Competition in United Kingdom Banking. [116368]

Miss Melanie Johnson: The Government welcome the report and will act on its recommendations to improve competition in banking and services to customers. On 20 March, the Chancellor of the Exchequer and the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry referred the provision of banking services to small and medium enterprises to the Competition Commission for examination under the complex monopoly provisions of the Fair Trading Act 1973. The Chancellor announced in the Budget on 21 March that the Government would legislate to open up access to payments systems and to oversee access charges; and that he had asked the Financial Services Authority to consider the recommendations in the Report concerning consumer information and to report to him within three months, consulting widely, on how they propose to respond. The Government will respond to the other recommendations in the report shortly.

Genetic Testing

Dr. Gibson: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what assessment he has made of the use by members of the Association of British Insurers of genetic tests that have not been approved by the Department of Health's Genetics and Insurance Committee for insurance purposes. [116566]

Miss Melanie Johnson: None.

Migration (London)

Mr. Blunt: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is his estimate of the size of annual migration into and out of London from other parts of the United Kingdom, broken down by region, in each of the last five years. [116139]

Miss Melanie Johnson: The information requested falls within the responsibility of the Director of the Office for National Statistics. I have asked him to reply.

Letter from Tim Holt to Mr. Crispin Blunt, dated 30 March 2000:

As Director of the Office for National Statistics (ONS), I have been asked to reply to your recent question about the estimated migration between London and other parts of the United Kingdom for each of tne last five years.

The enclosed table presents the information that you require. The latest year for which estimates are available is 1998. The estimates of internal migration within the United Kingdom are based on the movement of NHS doctor's patients between the former Family Health Service Authorities. They should not be regarded as a perfect measure of migration as there is variation in the delay between a person moving and registering with a new doctor. Additionally some moves may not result in a re-registration: for example, individuals may migrate again before registering with a doctor. Conversely, there may be others who move and re-register several times a year.

Moves between the individual Government Office Regions (GOR's) and the rest of the United Kingdom are published in Key Population and Vital Statistics, which is available in the House of Commons Library.

Migration into and out of London from other parts of the United Kingdom broken down by region

Thousand

Area	1994	1995	1996	1997	1998
To London from:
North East	4.7	5.3	4.9	4.9	5.0
North West	13.2	14.0	13.7	13.6	13.9
Yorkshire and the Humber	9.7	10.6	10.6	10.3	10.6
East Midlands	9.2	10.4	10.0	10.1	10.3
West Midlands	11.0	11.8	11.8	11.5	11.3
East	29.2	30.8	29.7	30.6	31.6
South East	54.0	56.3	55.6	54.7	57.0
South West	15.5	16.7	16.2	16.9	16.5
England	146.4	156.0	152.6	152.6	156.1
Scotland	7.0	7.3	7.8	7.6	8.0
Wales	5.4	5.8	5.7	5.6	5.6
Northern Ireland	1.6	1.7	1.9	1.5	1.5
Total	160.4	170.7	168.0	167.3	171.2
From London to:
North East	3.7	3.7	3.7	3.6	3.8
North West	10.8	11.1	10.8	10.8	10.5
Yorkshire and the Humber	8.2	8.5	7.9	8.1	8.1
East Midlands	10.0	10.2	10.0	10.3	10.4
West Midlands	8.9	9.8	9.3	9.7	9.6
East	49.5	50.3	52.8	56.7	55.4
South East	80.6	78.9	84.0	86.6	85.4
South West	20.3	20.4	21.2	21.8	20.4
England	192.1	193.0	199.8	207.6	203.5
Scotland	6.8	6.4	6.3	7.0	7.1
Wales	5.2	5.5	5.2	5.4	5.3
Northern Ireland	2.2	2.7	2.2	1.8	2.0
Total	206.3	207.6	213.4	221.7	217.9

Migration into and out of London from other parts of the United Kingdom broken down by region

Thousand

Area	1994	1995	1996	1997	1998
Net gain to London:
North East	1.0	1.5	1.3	1.4	1.2
North West	2.4	2.9	2.9	2.8	3.4
Yorkshire and the Humber	1.4	2.1	2.7	2.2	2.5
East Midlands	–0.8	0.2	0.0	–0.2	–0.1
West Midlands	2.0	2.0	2.5	1.8	1.7
East	–20.3	–19.5	–23.1	–26.1	–23.8
South East	–26.6	–22.6	–28.4	–31.9	–28.4
South West	–4.8	–3.7	–5.0	–4.9	–3.9
England	–45.6	–37.0	–47.2	–55.0	–47.4
Scotland	0.1	0.8	1.5	0.6	0.9
Wales	0.3	0.3	0.6	0.3	0.3
Northern Ireland	–0.7	–1.0	–0.3	–0.3	–0.4
Total	–45.9	–36.9	–45.4	–54.5	–46.7

Statistics Commission

Mrs. Lawrence: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what progress has been made with plans to establish the Statistics Commission; and if he will make a statement. [117386]

Miss Melanie Johnson: The Statistics Commission will be set up early in the next financial year.

Parliamentary approval of the expenditure will be sought in the 2000–01 Main Estimate for HM Treasury, Class XVI, Vote 1. Pending that approval, urgent expenditure estimated at £500,000 will be met by a repayable advance from the Contingencies Fund.

Capital Modernisation Fund

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer which allocations of spending referred to in his oral statement of 21 March 2000, Official Report, columns 858–72, were from the Capital Modernisation Fund; if he will list the projects to which the allocations have been made; if he will list the amounts allocated and unallocated from the Capital Modernisation Fund for financial years 1999–2000, 2000–01 and 2001–02; and if he will make a statement. [116646]

Mr. Andrew Smith: The Budget statement included the following allocations from the Capital Modernisation Fund:

£ million

	Total	2000–01	2001–02
Addition to total CMF	200	200	0
SMEs on-line (DTI/IR)	60.0	55.0	5.0
Innovative Clusters package (DTI)	50.0	15.0	35.0
Criminal Justice Package	184.6	103.4	81.2
of which:
Home Office[1]	154.8	88.2	66.6
Lord Chancellor's Department[1]	23.3	10.0	13.3
CPS joint police units	5.0	3.8	1.3
Integrated Business Information Systems	1.5	1.5	—
DLR extension to City airport (DETR)	30.0	9.6	20.4
Unallocated	516.0	[2]185.2	330.8

[1] Detailed announcements to be made by the Home Secretary and Lord Chancellor respectively
[2] Includes underspend from 1999–2000

Further details will be set out in the Public Expenditure Statistical analyses to be published in April.

Social Services Funding

Mr. Baker: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what plans he has to increase the funding available for social services functions in line with planned increases on health service funding. [116778]

Mr. Andrew Smith: Funding for social services will be set as part of the Spending Review.

Spending Review

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer when he will announce the outcome of the second comprehensive spending review. [116675]

Mr. Andrew Smith: The 2000 Spending Review will conclude by July.

Working Families Tax Credit

Mr. Kidney: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make working families tax credit a qualifying benefit for free school meals. [116702]

Dawn Primarolo: The provision of free school meals in England and Wales is a matter for the Secretary of State for Education and Employment, and in Northern Ireland it is a matter for the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland. In Scotland, free school meals are a devolved issue for the Scottish Executive.

The child tax credit elements of a Working Families Tax Credit award were built on the child credit rates in family credit, which WFTC replaced from October last year. The child credit rates in family credit included, from the outset, an additional weekly cash sum, provided to replace the value of entitlement to free school meals. These rates have been uprated annually in line with the Rossi index.

Customs Officers (UK Airports)

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many customs officers (a) are employed at each UK airport and (b) have been employed at each UK airport in each of the last five years. [116717]

Dawn Primarolo: It is policy not to make public details of the deployment of Customs anti-smuggling officers at each individual UK airport.

Customs (Drugs Seizures)

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many drug seizures have taken place in 1999–2000 and in the previous three years at airports in the UK; and if he will list them by airport. [116719]

Dawn Primarolo: Customs made 1,369 drug seizures at UK airports in 1996; 1,259 in 1997; and 1,412 in 1998. Figures for 1999 have yet to be validated.

It is policy not to make public details of Customs drug seizures at each individual UK airport.

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many drug seizures have taken place in the year 1999–2000 and in the previous three years at ports in the UK; and if he will list them by port. [116716]

Dawn Primarolo: Customs made 798 drug seizures at UK sea ports in 1996; 791 in 1997; and 673 in 1998. Figures for 1999 have yet to be validated.

It is policy not to make public details of Customs drug seizures at each individual UK port.

Climate Change Levy

Mrs. Ewing: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what assessment he has made of the compatibility of the penalty regime for the climate change levy with the European Convention on Human Rights. [116582]

Mr. Timms [holding answer 28 March 2000]: In accordance with section 19 of the Human Rights Act 1998, the Chancellor of the Exchequer will publish a statement about the compatibility of the provisions of the Finance Bill, including those relating to the climate change levy, when the Bill is published.

Workplace Parking

Mr. Gray: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many workplace car parking spaces are available at the buildings used and controlled by his Department. [116758]

Mr. Timms: The number of workplace car parking spaces available at the two buildings used and controlled by the Treasury is shown in the table:

Building	Number of spaces	Allocated to other Departments
Parliament Street (GOGGS), London SW1P 3AG	42	9—Cabinet Office 3—Cabinet War Rooms
Allington Towers, 19 Allington Street, London SW1E 5EB	11	Nil

In March 1999 we introduced a Green Transport Plan covering both buildings. These plans are in line with the commitment set out in the Transport White Paper and we have reviewed the scope for reducing our car parking requirements in that context.

Landfill Tax

Mr. Baker: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will extend the landfill tax provisions in so far as they relate to making available funds to local communities for energy from waste plants. [116780]

Mr. Timms: Operators of landfill sites who are registered for landfill tax may claim for tax credits for contributions that they make to support environmental projects. These may include research for the purpose of encouraging the use of more sustainable waste management. Landfill site operators may choose to support research into energy from waste as part of such projects.

Further information regarding the scheme can be obtained from the regulatory body, ENTRUST Ltd., at the following address:

ENTRUST
Acre House
2 Town Square
Sale
Cheshire
M33 7WZ

CULTURE, MEDIA AND SPORT

NESTA Fellowship Awards

Mr. Peter Ainsworth: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport if NESTA fellowship awards will be regarded as prizes for tax purposes. [116538]

Mr. Chris Smith [holding answer 28 March 2000]: NESTA's fellowships are not regarded as prizes for tax purposes. Fellows will receive individually tailored personal development programmes which will be designed to make the most of their potential. As each of these programmes will vary according to individuals' needs, the tax implications of the awards will also differ from case to case. NESTA is exploring the tax position of its programmes with the Inland Revenue with a view to ensuring that its Fellows and other grant recipients can receive the maximum benefit from their awards.

Stonehenge

Mr. Key: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport if the preferred commercial operator of the proposed visitor centre at Stonehenge has been chosen; and if he will make a statement. [116486]

Mr. Alan Howarth [holding answer 28 March 2000]: No decision has yet been made. English Heritage is still in confidential commercial negotiations with shortlisted bidders. The outcome of these negotiations will be announced as soon as possible.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Lord Levy

Mr. Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs on which dates Lord Levy in his capacity as the Prime Minister's special envoy has had meetings with (a) ministers and (b) senior officials in his Department since 1 May 1997, giving in each case the purpose of the meetings; and if he will make a statement. [113498]

Mr. Maude: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list the dates when he held discussions with Lord Levy about his role as the Prime Minister's personal envoy; and if he will make available minutes of those meetings. [113566]

Mr. Hain [holding answer 7 March 2000]: Lord Levy liaises regularly with the Foreign Secretary, Ministers and a limited number of officials in the Foreign and Commonwealth Office. The Foreign Secretary most recently spoke to Lord Levy on 16 March. I spoke to him on 21 March.

Mr. Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if Lord Levy reports directly to him on his activities as the Prime Minister's personal envoy; what mechanism exists to ensure information gathered by Lord Levy while acting as personal envoy to the Prime Minister is communicated to his Department; and if he will make a statement. [113506]

Mr. Maude: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when he held discussions with Lord Levy about Lord Levy's visits to the Middle East dated (a) 9 to 10 April 1999, visit to Syria, (b) 5 to 7 June 1999, visit to Jordan, (c) 7 to 10 June 1999, visit to Syria, (d) 8 October 1999, visit to Egypt, (e) 9 to 11 October 1999, visit to Oman, (f) 11 and 12 October 1999, visit to Qatar, (g) 12 to 14 October 1999, visit to Bahrain, (h) 29 November to 1 December 1999, visit to Syria, (i) 2 and 3 February, visit to Syria, (j) 3 February, visit to Lebanon and (k) 3 February, visit to Egypt. [113877]

Mr. Hain [holding answer 7 March 2000]: Lord Levy's visits are reported to the Prime Minister and Foreign Secretary, in person by Lord Levy and by telegram from the Ambassador in the country concerned.

Mr. Maude: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, pursuant to his answer of 22 February 2000, Official Report, column 852W, what practical support was given by his Department to Lord Levy during his visits to Middle Eastern states, apart from Israel, on official business as the Prime Minister's personal envoy. [114680]

Mr. Hain [holding answer 15 March 2000]: I refer to the answer given by my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister on 30 March 2000, Official Report, columns 245–46W. In addition, Lord Levy has been briefed by Ambassadors. Embassies have assisted in arranging programmes, and have provided accompanied transport by road. Lord Levy has been accompanied by a Foreign and Commonwealth Office official from London on some of his trips.

Mr. Maude: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, pursuant to his answer of 22 February 2000, Official Report, column 852W, what practical support was given by his Department to Lord Levy during his visits to Israel (a) on official business as the Prime Minister's personal envoy and (b) on private visits during which Lord Levy conducted business on behalf of the Prime Minister. [114693]

Mr. Hain [holding answer 15 March 2000]: Practical support has been determined on a case-by-case basis, and has included briefing Lord Levy and providing accompanied transport by road when he is working on the Prime Minister's behalf.

Miss McIntosh: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what recent meetings he has had with Lord Levy to discuss the Middle East peace process. [115222]

Mr. Hain: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave to the hon. Member for Lewes (Mr. Baker) on 30 March 2000, Official Report, column 261W.

Iraq

Mr. Galloway: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs in the most recent year for which figures are available, how many applications were made to the UN Sanctions Committee under (a) the Oil for Food programme and (b) other humanitarian programmes; how many of these applications were (i) approved and (ii) refused; how many are outstanding; and what was the average length of time taken to consider each application. [116311]

Mr. Hain: Between December 1999 and 6 March 2000, 2,443 applications were submitted to the UN Iraq Sanctions Committee under the Oil for Food programme. None of these applications was refused. The Committee raised no objection to 1,883 of these applications. Additional information was requested on 560 applications.

Detailed information on all Oil for Food applications submitted over the last year can be found on the UN website at http://www.un.org/Depts/oip.html.

During the period 1 August 1998 to 20 November 1999 over 6,000 applications were received for humanitarian goods outside the Oil for Food programme. Of these 2,654 were approved, 427 were placed on hold for further information, and 2,823 were refused since the Committee considered them inconsistent with the relevant resolutions on Iraq. Some applications were withdrawn or nullified. A key factor here is the potential for dual use.

Medical supplies and food applications are circulated under a no objections procedure within two business days; applications for other humanitarian supplies within seven business days. Under the terms of United Nations Security Council resolution 1284, it has been agreed that a wide range of humanitarian items will no longer require Sanctions Committee approval. These items include foodstuffs, pharmaceutical and medical supplies, medical equipment and educational items. These items require notification to the UN's Office of the Iraq Programme.

Mr. Galloway: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will give details of each application refused by the UN-Iraq Sanctions Committee under (a) the Oil for Food programme and (b) other humanitarian programmes in the last year for which the information is available. [116309]

Mr. Hain: I refer my hon. Friend to my answer of 30 March 2000, Official Report, column 263W.

Detailed figures on all applications to the United Nations Oil for Food programme, giving the number of applications and the status of the applications, can be found on the United Nations website at: http://www.un.org/Departments/oip.html

Mr. Galloway: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what procedures the UN Iraq Sanctions Committee use in reaching decisions on applications under (a) the Oil for Food Programme and (b) other humanitarian programmes. [116310]

Mr. Hain: The UN Iraq Sanctions Committee established by United Nations Security Council resolution 661, comprising all members of the UN Security Council, reaches decisions on applications under the Oil for Food programme or under other humanitarian programmes by consensus in accordance with the relevant resolutions on Iraq. A significant number of applications, for essential civilian needs, medical supplies and foodstuffs, are circulated under a no objection procedure. Medicines are generally exempt from Committee approval.

Under the terms of United Nations Security Council resolution 1284, it has been agreed that an even wider range of humanitarian items will no longer require Sanctions Committee approval. These items include foodstuffs, pharmaceutical and medical supplies, medical equipment and educational items. These items require notification to the UN's Office of the Iraq Programme.

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, pursuant to the oral statement of the Minister of State, the hon. Member for Neath (Mr. Hain), of 24 March 2000, Official Report, column 1290 on Iraq, if it is part of Yuli Vorontsov's brief to make inquiries about missing Iraqi nationals in Kuwait. [116870]

Mr. Hain: Mr. Vorontsov's brief is set out in paragraphs 13–14 of Security Council resolution 1284. He has been appointed as a high-level coordinator to pursue Iraq's obligations since the Gulf War and to return stolen Kuwaiti property, in collaboration with the International Committee of the Red Cross.

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, pursuant to the oral statement of the Minister of State, the hon. Member for Neath (Mr. Hain), of 24 March 2000, Official Report, column 1292, to which brutality in relation to the Shia, the Minister was referring other than that which took place in 1991 in the Kerbala area. [116872]

Mr. Hain: I refer my hon. Friend to the regular reports from the UN Special Rapporteur on Human Rights in Iraq, particularly that of February 1999, which record the systematic assassinations, attacks and threats carried out against the Shiite leadership since 1991. The November 1999 Amnesty International report on Iraq also documents the assassinations of prominent Shia clerics over the previous 18 months. These documents are available on the UN website (www.un.org).

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, pursuant to the oral statement of the Minister of State, the hon. Member for Neath (Mr. Hain), of 24 March 2000, Official Report, column 1292 on Iraq, in what ways the Shia population of Iraq is protected by UK forces. [116874]

Mr. Hain: UK and US aircraft patrolling the southern No Fly Zone serve to protect the population, primarily Shia, from attacks by the Iraqi air force.

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, pursuant to the oral statement of the Minister of State, the hon. Member for Neath (Mr. Hain), of 24 March 2000, Official Report, column 1292 on Iraq, from which countries of origin Saddam Hussein is smuggling materials for chemical and biological weapons. [116873]

Mr. Hain: As the record makes clear, I was describing the hypothetical situation if we were, inadvisedly, to lift sanctions prematurely.

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, pursuant to the oral statement of the Minister of State, the hon. Member for Neath (Mr. Hain), of 24 March 2000, Official Report, column 1293 on Iraq, what assessment he has made of the threat to the Kirkuk oil field arising from the shortage of oil industry spare parts. [116936]

Mr. Hain: We have noted the comments on the Kirkuk oil field in the UN's latest report on Iraq's oil industry.

The Security Council is expected to adopt a new resolution on 31 March which will implement the Secretary-General's recommendation for an additional allocation of $600 million from oil for food revenue for the purchase of oil spare parts.

Zimbabwe

Mrs. Gillan: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when he last met representatives of farmers in Zimbabwe; and if he will place the minutes of that meeting in the Library. [116494]

Mr. Hain: The High Commission in Harare is in regular touch with the Commercial Farmers' Union. They have not sought a meeting in London.

Mrs. Gillan: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many farmers in Zimbabwe are British passport holders. [116493]

Mr. Hain: We have no precise figures of how many Zimbabwe farmers hold British passports. British passport holders are not obliged to register their presence with the High Commission in Harare.

Mrs. Gillan: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make representations to the Commonwealth Secretary General calling on him to suspend Zimbabwe from the high-level group formed by the Commonwealth Ministerial Action Group. [116893]

Mr. Hain: No.

Mrs. Gillan: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what requests he has made to the Zimbabwean Government to allow election observers to attend the forthcoming general election. [116899]

Mr. Hain: None this far.

Mrs. Gillan: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what recent representations he has made to President Mugabe concerning the (a) postponement of the general election and (b) invasion of farms. [116969]

Mr. Hain: We have not made representations to President Mugabe about the postponement of the elections. On farm invasions, I spoke to the Vice-President on 6 March and wrote to the Foreign Minister on 7 March. My right hon. Friend, the Development Secretary, wrote to the Vice-President on 15 March.

Mrs. Gillan: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what plans there are for the emergency evacuation of British passport holders from Zimbabwe. [116891]

Mr. Hain: We have a Civil Contingency Plan for Zimbabwe, as we do for many other countries. The Contingency Plan is designed to help the British community in a crisis, and in a worst case scenario, to provide for their evacuation. The Contingency Plan comes into effect if there is a breakdown in law and order leading to a significant risk to the safety of British nationals. We do not believe this is the case in Zimbabwe and our travel advice reflects that view. Our travel advice, and the safety of British nationals, is kept under constant review.

Mrs. Gillan: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many officials have been sent to Zimbabwe in the last 12 months to enhance the consular operation there. [116896]

Mr. Hain: Four.

Mrs. Gillan: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many Zimbabwean nationals are currently in possession of (a) a UK work permit and (b) a holiday working visa. [116898]

Mr. Vaz: A total of 526 work permits were approved by the Overseas Labour Service for Zimbabwean nationals in 1998 and 905 in 1999.

Our High Commission in Harare issued 389 working holiday-maker visas in 1998 and 303 in 1999. However, since visa statistics are not collected on the basis of the nationality of applicants, these figures may include applications made in Harare by non-Zimbabwean nationals. Figures for the number of Zimbabweans applying for working holiday-maker visas at entry clearance posts worldwide are not available and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Mrs. Gillan: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when he last met (a) civil and (b) human rights organisations to discuss Zimbabwe; and if he will publish the minutes of those meetings. [116894]

Mr. Hain: We are in close and regular touch with civil and human rights organisations in Zimbabwe through our High Commission in Harare.

Mrs. Gillan: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many residents of Zimbabwe are eligible for British passports; and how many British passport holders there are in Zimbabwe. [116892]

Mr. Hain: We cannot provide exact figures because British nationals are not obliged to register with the High Commission in Harare. Our High Commission currently have 6,700 British nationals and some 5,000 dual British/Zimbabwe nationals registered. Actual numbers will be higher.

Mrs. Gillan: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many UK visa applications have been received in the last 12 months from Zimbabwean nationals. [116897]

Mr. Vaz: Zimbabweans do not normally require visas before travelling to the United Kingdom though some in certain categories may do so. However, statistics on visa applications received worldwide are not collected on the basis of the nationality of applicants. We do not therefore have figures for the number of Zimbabweans applying at entry clearance posts worldwide. This could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Chechnya

Mr. McCabe: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what recent discussions he has had with his Russian counterparts concerning the exchange between the UK and Russia of anti-terrorist information, with particular reference to Chechnya. [116563]

Mr. Battle: The Foreign Secretary discussed counter terrorism and Chechnya when he met the Russian Foreign Minister and the then Acting President Putin in February this year. It was agreed that the UK and Russia should continue to work together in combating terrorism.

Bangladesh

Ms Oona King: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what reports he has received concerning the impact of the Public Safety Act (Special Powers) introduced by the Government of Bangladesh on 30 January. [116671]

Mr. Hain: There are reports of some arrests under the Public Safety Act. Our High Commissioner has raised our concerns about the Act with Bangladeshi Ministers. We continue to monitor the situation.

Moldova

Mr. Browne: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what the Government are doing to ensure that the commitments agreed at the OSCE Istanbul Summit concerning Russian withdrawal from the Transdniestrian region of Moldova are met. [117385]

Mr. Vaz: Her Majesty's Government fully support the OSCE Istanbul Declaration on Moldova, which called for complete withdrawal of Russian troops, armaments and ammunition from Moldovan territory by the end of 2002. Her Majesty's Government regularly emphasise the need to comply with this agreement in our discussions with the Russians, Moldovans and Ukrainians (the latter as guarantors of the peace). The Declaration agreed to consider the establishment of a voluntary fund for international assistance to facilitate the withdrawal. The Foreign and Commonwealth Office has contributed £100,000 to this fund from its ASSIST budget.

An international Needs Assessment Mission to explore the removal and destruction of the ammunition and armaments is negotiating for access to Transdniestria. The UK is planning to contribute military experts to this Mission.

Iran

Mr. Amess: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement about the death sentences passed on three Iranian Baha'is and a sentence of 10 years prison imposed on a fourth in the city of Mashad and the impact this will have on the Anglo-Iranian dialogue on human rights. [117221]

Mr. Hain: We remain concerned at reports of the death sentences passed on Mr. Najafabadi, Mr. Moghaddam and Mr. Khulusi in Mashad on 3 February. The picture has been somewhat confused by the recent statement by Mr. Sadeqi, spokesman for the Iranian Judiciary, that no such sentences had been passed. The Portuguese Presidency, on behalf of EU partners, presented a demarche to the Iranian authorities expressing our concern and seeking clarification as to the current status of these three gentlemen on 17 February. This was followed up with a further demarche in Tehran on 19 February. We took similar bilateral action with the Iranian Ambassador on 21 February. I raised this issue with Deputy Foreign Minister Sarmadi on 6 March.

Iran is aware of our serious concern about the Baha'is. Persecution of individuals on religious grounds is totally unacceptable.

Mr. Amess: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what support the Government will give to the resolution condemning Iran at the Commission on Human Rights in relation to the death sentences passed on three members of the Baha'i community in Iran on 3 February. [117220]

Mr. Hain: We, in conjunction with our EU partners, have drafted and will table the resolution to which the hon. Gentleman refers. We hope that the resolution will accurately reflect the human rights situation in Iran, both the improvements and the outstanding concerns such as the plight of the Baha'i community, as did the EU-sponsored resolution on human rights in Iran adopted at the United Nations General Assembly on 17 December.

Mercenaries

Mrs. Gillan: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will bring forward proposals in the UN for the drafting of a UN Convention on banning the use of mercenary soldiers. [116890]

Mr. Hain: The Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs has no plans to bring forward proposals in the UN on this subject. The Government are committed to issuing a Green Paper on mercenary activity by November 2000. We will consider the way ahead in the light of the public response to that Green Paper.

Workplace Parking

Mr. Gray: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many workplace car parking spaces are available at the buildings used and controlled by his Department. [116759]

Mr. Battle: My Department has a total of 1,018 car parking spaces—88 in London and 930 at Hanslope Park, near Milton Keynes.

EU Legislation

Mr. Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what arrangements exist for regulatory impact assessments to be made for prospective items of European Union legislation. [116317]

Mr. Stringer: I have been asked to reply.

The Government take the same approach to prospective European legislation as to our own national proposals. We assess and scrutinise proposals in line with the requirements set out in our "Better Regulation Guide and Guide to Better European Regulation", copies of which are in the Libraries of the House. Government Departments carry out regulatory impact assessments (RIAs) for prospective European legislation where this imposes additional costs or savings, or has an impact on business, charities, or voluntary bodies. Subject to the expectations set out in the "Guide to Better European Regulation", an RIA must accompany any Explanatory Memorandum (EM) on prospective European legislation submitted to Parliament for its consideration.

The European Commission has its own internal rules for evaluating prospective European legislation to take account of costs and benefits, called the fiche d'impact or business impact assessment. It is applied only to a limited range of legislative proposals.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Housing Benefit

Mr. Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) what are the estimated total savings to date for each month during which the non-redirection of benefit post scheme has been running; and how many local authorities have been running the scheme during each of those months; [114001]

(2) what the average savings per local authority per week have been to date from the non-redirection of benefit post scheme. [114002]

Angela Eagle [holding answer 10 March 2000]: The figures given are based on a series of estimates and assumptions set out in the notes to the table. They do not include the deterrent effect of the Royal Mail "do not redirect" scheme.

The table shows the number of local authorities (LAs) using the Royal Mail "do not redirect" service in each month since it became available in February 1999. It also shows the estimated number of frauds identified and total savings achieved on the assumption that each fraud case saved an average of £1,600.

On the basis of these estimates and assumptions the average weekly benefit savings achieved by each LA using this service would be around £250, which equates to £13,000 per authority per year. This means that on current information, were all local authorities to use this service, we would expect it to realise total savings of around £5.3 million per year.

Month	Number of LAs using the service [1]	Number of LAs that are in their second or subsequent calendar month of using the service [2]	Estimated number of fraudulent cases identified [2]	Estimated savings (£000) [3]
1999
February	3	1	1	1
March	16	3	2	3
April	31	16	11	18
May	76	31	22	35
June	101	76	53	85
July	104	101	71	113
August	112	104	73	116
September	169	112	78	125
October[4]	194	169	118	189
November[4]	211	194	136	217
December	213	211	148	236
2000
January	248	213	149	239
February	256	248	174	278

[1] Data are provided by Royal Mail HQ based on information supplied by Delivery Offices.
[2] Assumes that LAs identify an average of 0.7 fraudulent case per month in all months other than the first month that they use the service when it is assumed that no fraudulent cases are identified (based on data collected in a telephone survey of LAs).
[3] Assumes that the saving from identifying a fraudulent case is £1,600 (based on data supplied by a sample of LAs).
[4] Data supplied by Royal Mail listed some LAs as using the scheme but gave no date. These LAs are assumed to have started between October and November 1999.

Mail (Non-redirection)

Mr. Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will estimate what proportion of the savings from the non-redirection of mail accrue from claims made by (a) landlords, (b) private tenants and (c) local authority or housing association tenants. [114672]

Angela Eagle [holding answer 14 March 2000]: While estimates can be made of the average and total savings to date for local authorities from the non-redirection of benefit post scheme, the level of data available is insufficient to assess what proportion accrues from different types of tenancies.

Lone Parents

Mr. Webb: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if the benefits of lone parents will in future be administered by the new agency dealing with people of working age. [115850]

Angela Eagle: The new organisation will administer benefits including Jobseeker's Allowance, Income Support for people of working age, Incapacity Benefit, Widow's Benefit, Severe Disablement Allowance, Invalid Care Allowance and industrial injury disablement benefits. This will therefore include benefits for lone parents of working age. It will also administer the New Deal for Lone Parents, and other employment-focused programmes.

Pensions (Self-employed)

Mrs. Lait: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security when he plans to announce his conclusions on pensions for the self-employed. [115909]

Mr. Rooker: In our Green Paper, "A new contract for welfare: PARTNERSHIP IN PENSIONS", we invited views on the proposal to bring self-employed people into the State Second Pension. The results of that exercise were inconclusive.

We also asked the independent Pension Provision Group for their views. We are now considering their report, which we intend to publish shortly.

Child Care Disregard

Ms Buck: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many households currently in receipt of the child care tax credit component of the working families tax credit will gain from the amendment of housing benefit regulations introducing a disregard of the child care component; what will be the average gain; and what is the total cost. [116076]

Angela Eagle: We made changes in Housing Benefit and Council Tax Benefit to take account of the introduction of the working families tax credit in October 1999. These changes included an increase in the amount deducted from earnings for child care costs. The effect of this change is minimal.

This summer, subject to parliamentary approval and consultation with the Social Security Advisory Committee and the Local Authority Associations, we will be introducing a further amendment in Housing Benefit and Council Tax Benefit to increase the help available for child care. This amendment will allow child care costs to be deducted from working families tax credit or disabled persons tax credit in addition to earnings where those earnings are less than their eligible child care costs.

Estimate of the number of gainers, average gain and the total cost of the effect of proposed changes to Housing Benefit/Council Tax Benefit summer 2000

£

	Housing Benefit	Council Tax Benefit	Total
Cost (£ million per annum)	1	1	2
Gainers	1,000	1,000	n/a
Average gain (£ per week)	18	16	n/a

Notes:

1. Based on data taken from 1998 HBMIS datasets.
2. Costs are quoted in millions and are rounded to the nearest million.
3. Gainers are rounded to the nearest 1,000. Gainers cannot be added together because some people will benefit in both Housing Benefit and Council Tax Benefit.
4. Average gains are rounded to the nearest pound.

Widowers

Mrs. Curtis-Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many men have been widowed and left with children under 16 years of age in each year since 1995. [116670]

Angela Eagle: The information is not available in the format requested. Such information as is available is in the table.

Number of existing widowers with children who are aged under 16 in Great Britain

	Number
Spring 1995	15,000
Spring 1996	15,000
Spring 1997	15,000
Spring 1998	20,000
Spring 1999	20,000

Note:
Estimates rounded to nearest 5,000
Source:
Labour Force Survey

Widowers' Benefits

Mrs. Curtis-Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many ex gratia payments have been made by his Department in respect of benefits for widowers in each of the last five years. [116881]

Angela Eagle: One widower has been paid ex gratia payments of widows' benefits in the current year. No other such payments have been made in the last five years.

Workplace Parking

Mr. Gray: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many workplace car parking spaces are available at the buildings used and controlled by his Department. [116766]

Mr. Bayley: There is a total of 29,960 car parking spaces at 492 buildings used and controlled by the Department. These buildings are where either the Department is the sole occupier or buildings where the Department is the major occupier and other Government Departments or private tenants share the premises.

We are preparing Green Transport Plans for our key buildings in line with the commitment set out in the Transport White Paper and are reviewing the scope for reducing our car parking requirements in that context.

Websites

Mr. Maclennan: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will list the expenditure incurred by his Department, agencies and non-departmental public bodies on (a) the setting up and (b) the operation of websites, indicating the cases in which the expenditure has been above that budgeted; and if he will list for each website (i) the topics which have been covered, (ii) the current average number of hits per month and (iii) the estimated expenditure on each website for each of the next three years. [115842]

Angela Eagle: The Department and its agencies use the internet as one of a variety of methods to communicate with the public. The DSS website is updated regularly and includes separate webpages for the individual agencies and others. The website covers numerous topics and contains over 3,000 pages providing a range of information on benefits, complaints procedures and corporate documentation such as press releases, Ministerial speeches and Agency business plans.

The Departmental website is currently under development and is due to be relaunched shortly to take account of the Department's priorities in delivering services to its identified client groups. £245,000 has been allocated from the Departmental publicity budgets for this relaunch to ensure the DSS website meets Government website standards and addresses the criticisms voiced in the NAO report. Ongoing departmental costs at this stage are not yet finalised but are likely to change to reflect the need to improve content and service provision.

The information that is available on costings and visits to the website are shown in the tables. To provide further breakdowns of the figures and costings would incur disproportionate costs.

£000

	Approximate costs
Initial start up costs (including staff and resources for the launch of the service)	430
Annual cost for service and maintenance	80
Costs for annual licence	50

Note:
These costs are only available for the Department as a whole and are borne by the Information Technology Services Agency who undertake a corporate role with respect to DSS Internet service provision.

	Statistics
Average hits (departmental)	2,510,316
Estimated average user sessions (departmental)	636,967

	Topics
BA site	Benefit Information, Local office details, reports and leaflets, Press Releases, Customer Charter, Complaint Procedures, Pension Forecasting Information, Feedback section
CSA site	Child Support Maintenance leaflets, CSA publications, frequently asked questions and answers and CSA contact details
HQ site	General DSS information, DSS Facts and Figures, DSS reports and publications, speeches, press releases, the Decision Makers Guide, statistical information from ASD
ITSA site	ITSA publications, ITSA fact sheets and the history of ITSA
WPA site	Background to the scheme, War Pension Welfare Service, types of claim, how to make a claim, supplementary allowances, war widows entitlement, treatment and allowance, your rights to appeal and contacting WPA

Appeals Service Agency

Mrs. Anne Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security when the Appeals Service Agency will be introduced; and if he will make a statement. [117573]

Angela Eagle: The Appeals Service agency will be established with effect from Monday 3 April 2000. This new executive agency will be responsible for administration of appeals, and its Chief Executive will be accountable to Parliament for performance. Appeal tribunals will remain independent of the Department with the President, who remains head of the tribunal Non Departmental Public Body, and panel members being appointed by the Lord Chancellor. The new structure will bring greater accountability, but will also retain and support the independence and impartiality of tribunals.

In the past year, following the introduction of the new decision making and appeals arrangements, the Appeals Service under its Chief Executive designate has achieved both substantial reductions in the backlog of older cases and reduced waiting times for appeals to be heard. Full agency status, and the fact that the Chief Executive will be accountable to Parliament for the agency's performance for the first time, will provide the scope to consolidate these gains and wherever possible improve upon them over the coming year.

A Framework Document for the agency will set out its aims and objectives, together with lines of accountability and details of planning, reporting, personnel and finance arrangements. A Service First statement will set out the standards of service appellants can expect from the agency. A Business Plan has also been published, together with Secretary of State targets for the forthcoming year. Copies of these documents are being placed in the Library.

Performance Targets

Mrs. Anne Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what performance targets he has set his Department's agencies for 2000–01; and if he will make a statement. [117574]

Mr. Darling: The targets I have set the Child Support Agency (CSA), War Pensions Agency (WPA) and The Appeals Service (TAS) for 2000–01 are as given. The targets reflect our determination to reform the welfare state and to modernise the Social Security system to encourage work for those who can and provide security for those who cannot. They underpin the Departmental Aim and Objectives set out in our Public Service Agreement.

Further information on CSA, WPA and TAS plans for 2000–01 is contained in their individual business plans, which have been published today. Copies have been placed in the Library.

The targets I have set for the Benefits Agency and publication of its Business Plan will be announced in due course.

Targets for 2000–01 are:

CSA Secretary of State Targets 2000–2001

Outstanding Work

The Agency will reduce its outstanding work to a prescribed level in all key business processes by 31 March 2001. The reduction in outstanding work to be achieved is based on a prescribed level of work equivalent to (x) weeks of intake and is different for each business process:

Pre Maintenance Assessment (18 weeks)

Revisions, Supercessions and Case Checks (6.2 weeks)

Account Advice (4 weeks)

Interim Maintenance Assessment (49 weeks)

Account Maintenance (1.4 weeks)

Debt Management (12 weeks)

Enforcement (30 weeks)

Case Compliance

To collect child maintenance and arrears from 71 per cent. of non resident parents with maintenance liability due to be paid through the Agency's collection service.

Cash Compliance

To collect 68 per cent. of child maintenance and arrears due for payment through the Agency's collection service.

Accuracy

The cash value of all assessments checked in the year to be correct to the nearest penny in at least 78 per cent. of cases.

Complaints

To reduce the number of complaints received compared with current caseload to less than 0.15 per cent.

Customer Service Standards

The Agency will demonstrate improvement across the range of the Customer Service Standards.

Secretary of State Milestone Targets

The Change Agenda—Child Support Reform

(a) establish Process Learning Centres by 30 April 2000

(b) complete the introduction of customer account statements for clients by 30 June 2000

(c) establish a Model Office by 31 December 2000

(d) commence data cleansing by 31 January 2001

Debt Reduction

To reduce the outstanding level of debt owing from full maintenance assessments at 31 March 2000 by 25 per cent. by 31 March 2001.

Staffing

(a) by March 2001, work with others in the Department to develop, pilot and evaluate new ways of measuring staff perception of the organisation to improve satisfaction and motivation; and

(b) contribute to the reduction in public sector sickness by reducing absences by 10 per cent. from 1998 Public Service Agreement baseline levels by 31 December 2000.

Investors in People

Individual Business Units will maintain Investors in People accreditation during 2000–01 and the Agency will achieve Investors in People accreditation by 31 March 2001.

Fraud/Security Measures

To develop and implement shadow measures for fraud/security by 1 July 2000; and for these measures to be reported on for the remainder of the year to inform the development of targets for 2001–02.

Customer Service Standards:

Payments

98 per cent. of payments made to the Parent with Care (or their bank or building society) to be made within 10 working days of receipt from the Non Resident Parent.

Customer Account Statements

When requested, we aim to issue the majority of customer account statements within 40 working days.

Office Interview

98 per cent. of clients to be seen within 10 minutes of the time of a pre-booked office appointment.

Client Helplines and the National Enquiry Line

80 per cent. of telephone calls to Client Helplines and the National Enquiry Line to be answered first time.

Correspondence

65 per cent. of letters to be answered within 10 working days of receipt.

Customer Satisfaction

95 per cent. of customers surveyed on quality call backs (following contact with the National Enquiry Line/Client Helplines and Face-to-Face) to be at least satisfied with the service received.

Complaints

To resolve the majority of customer complaints within 20 working days of receipt.

The Appeals Service Agency Targets 2000–01

Active Customer Focused Service Delivery

1. By March 2001, the average waiting time for an appeal to be heard will be no more than 14 weeks from time of receipt within the Appeals Service.

2. By March 2001, no more than 10 per cent. of cases will have been outstanding for more than 26 weeks.

3. To publish a Service First Statement, put in place arrangements to collect information on performance against the new measures, and meet the published standards.

4. To put in place monitoring systems to allow a Secretary of State target for customer satisfaction to be set in April 2001.

5. To reduce instances of avoidable adjournments by 25 per cent.

Investing in People

6. To lead and manage people effectively through specified measures and contribute to the reduction in public sector sickness absence levels by reducing absences by 10 per cent. from 1998 Public Service Agreement baseline levels by 31 December 2000.

7. By 31 March 2001, work with others in the Department to develop, pilot and evaluate new ways of measuring staff perception of the organisation to improve satisfaction and motivation.

War Pensions Agency Targets 2000–01

Putting Service First

1. To deliver a quality service to war pensioners and war widows by achieving the standards published in the War Pensions Agency's Service First Charter.

Working in Partnership

2. By 31 March 2001, to implement those recommendations of the 1999 War Pensions Agency Prior Options Review which relate to the objectives of the War Pensioners' Welfare Service and the partnership opportunities associated with the management of the Ilford Park Polish Home to the standards and timetable agreed with the Department.

Modernisation and Managing Change

3. To work with the Lord Chancellor's Department, Ministry of Defence and the voluntary sector/ex-service organisations to implement the recommendations of the War Pensions Agency's 1999 Decision Making and Appeals Study to the standards and timetable agreed with the Department.

Valuing our People

4. To lead and manage people effectively through specified measures and contribute to the reduction in public sickness absence levels by reducing absences by 17 per cent. from 1998 Public Service Agreement baseline levels by 31 December 2000.

Efficiency

5. To generate efficiencies during 2000–01 to absorb the effect of pay and price pressures; and introduce additional cost saving measures that will enable the War Pensions Agency to operate within its running cost allocation.

BEST COPY AVAILABLE

Written Answers to Questions

Monday 3 April 2000

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Public Bodies

Mr. Quinn: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will list the notional time commitment of each chair of the regional non-departmental public bodies. [116360]

Dr. Howells: The time commitment for chairs of the Post Office Users Councils for Scotland, Wales and Northern Ireland is up to 50 days per annum. The average commitment for the chairs of the seven Regional Industrial Development Boards is of the order of one meeting a month lasting approximately two hours, plus the time required to read case papers beforehand.

Mr. Quinn: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry (1) how many (a) male and (b) female board members each regional non-departmental public body for which he is responsible has; [116373]

(2) how many board members he appoints to each non-departmental public body. [116372]

Dr. Howells: A list of non-departmental public bodies to which DTI Ministers make appointments, and information on the numbers of male and female board members each body has, can be found in the publication "Public Bodies 1999" (ISBN 0 11 430159 X), copies of which are available in the Library of the House.

Synchrotron

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry when the French Government first publicly expressed a preference for the Rutherford Appleton Laboratory as the site for the diamond synchrotron. [116945]

Mr. Byers: The preference was first stated publicly in a letter from the French Minister of National Education, Research and Technology to my noble Friend the Under-Secretary of State for Science on 14 March 2000. They had made clear to him in private discussions in October 1999 that this was their view.

Super Jumbo Aircraft

Mr. Gibb: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry, pursuant to his answer of 24 March 2000, Official Report, column 781W, on the super jumbo aircraft, if he will place in the Library a copy of his Department's independent assessment of the likely demand for the A3XX. [116950]

Mr. Alan Johnson: No, because this assessment contains commercially confidential and market-sensitive information. It was prepared following discussions with manufacturers, suppliers and airlines of commercially sensitive issues, which were of considerable assistance to my Department in drawing up the assessment. If such information were circulated more widely, the understanding on which it had been obtained would be breached, and in future my Department would be less able to serve the interests of taxpayers, since they would not be able to gain access to such a wide range of informed opinion when preparing market assessments.

Websites

Mr. Maclennan: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will list the expenditure incurred by his Department, agencies and non-departmental public bodies on (a) the setting up and (b) the operation of websites, indicating the cases in which the expenditure has been above that budgeted; and if he will list for each website (i) the topics which have been covered, (ii) the current average number of hits per month and (iii) the estimated expenditure on each website for each of the next three years. [115844]

Ms Hewitt [holding answer 30 March 2000]: Management of the websites of my Department, agencies and non-departmental public bodies, and Government Offices for the Regions is devolved to those with responsibility for particular areas. The costs associated with setting up and on-going operation of sites are not held or collected centrally and therefore the information requested could be provided only at disproportionate cost. The same is true both for future expenditure plans and for information on final costs versus initial budget estimates.

In terms of topics covered, the DTI site and associated sites offer information on nearly every area of the Department's responsibilities. The central DTI site (those within the Web domain www.dti.gov.uk) received an average of just over 5,600,000 hits per month over the last six months. Again, hits for all the sites for which my Department is responsible could be calculated only at disproportionate cost.

Workplace Parking

Mr. Gray: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how many workplace car parking spaces are available at the buildings used and controlled by his Department. [116768]

Dr. Howells [holding answer 30 March 2000]: 182 plus a further eight set aside for bicycles and motorcycles.

Departmental Properties

Mr. Don Foster: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what (a) number and (b) percentage of properties in his charge are empty; and what steps are being taken by his Department to reduce the number of such properties. [116913]

Dr. Howells: None. There are two empty floors, which are currently being marketed, in Atholl House, Aberdeen.

As announced on 28 March 2000, Official Report, column 108W, responsibility for a partly empty site at Eastcote has been transferred to my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State Defence.

US International Trade Commission

Mr. Fabricant: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what representations the Foreign and

Commonwealth Office has made to visiting analysts from the United States International Trade Commission in respect of their inquiry on behalf of the United States Senate Finance Committee on the impact on the United States economy of including the United Kingdom in NAFTA. [116315]

Mr. Vaz: I have been asked to reply on behalf of my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry.

I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave to him today, Official Report, column 285W.

PRIME MINISTER

Ministerial Travel

Mr. Jenkin: To ask the Prime Minister what aircraft he has at his disposal for travelling on official business; what the cost is in the current financial year; what proposals he is evaluating for acquiring further aircraft for the purpose; and at what cost. [115266]

The Prime Minister [holding answer 20 March 2000]: The rules on air travel by Ministers are set out in "Travel by Ministers", a copy of which is in the Library of the House. Decisions on which aircraft to use will be determined on cost, the number of people travelling with me, security and business considerations and the availability of aircraft. A list of Cabinet Ministers' visits overseas, and information on spend by all Ministers on travel overseas for the period 1 April 1999 to 31 March 2000 are currently being assembled, and will be published as soon as possible after the end of the current financial year. This will include information on when I have used RAF and other charter flights and the cost.

US International Trade Commission

Mr. Fabricant: To ask the Prime Minister if he, or his officials, during the last two weeks, advised visiting analysts from the United States International Trade Commission, or asked United States Government members or officials to ask the visiting analysts, not to meet hon. Members. [116318]

The Prime Minister: I refer the hon. Member to the answer given to him today by the Minister of State, Foreign and Commonwealth Office, my hon. Friend the Member for Leicester, East (Mr. Vaz), Official Report, column 285W.

Interception of Communications

Mr. Baker: To ask the Prime Minister if it is Government policy that none of the security and intelligence agencies is permitted to intercept communications initiated by hon. Members nor to conduct electronic surveillance thereon. [116904]

The Prime Minister [holding answer 30 March 2000]: I refer the hon. Member to the Answer I gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Walsall, North (Mr. Winnick) on 30 October 1997, Official Report, column 861W and to the hon. Member on 17 November 1997, Official Report, columns 17–18.

Mr. Baker: To ask the Prime Minister if he will list the tests which apply before authorisation is given for an interception of a communication initiated by a newspaper or other media concern. [116903]

The Prime Minister [holding answer 30 March 2000]: The tests which apply for the inception of all communications are as set out in the Interception of Communications Act 1985. These tests are that a warrant cannot be issued unless it is considered necessary:

(a) in the interests of national security;

(b) for the purpose of preventing or detecting serious crime; or

(c) for the purpose of safeguarding the economic well-being of the United Kingdom.

Subject to the approval of Parliament, the Interception of Communications Act will be replaced by provisions in the Regulation of Investigatory Powers Bill. The tests for interception will however remain the same.

President Clinton

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Prime Minister how many times he has met President Clinton outside (a) the United Kingdom and (b) the United States since 1 July 1998; and what was the (i) date, (ii) location and (iii) purpose of each meeting. [117067]

The Prime Minister: The information requested is as follows:

8 February 1999, Amman, at the funeral of King Hussein;

18 June, bilateral in the margins of the Cologne G8 Summit;

30 July 1999, Sarajevo Summit; and 20 November 1999, meeting in Florence for "Third Way" conference.

Voting Systems

Mr. Lansley: To ask the Prime Minister if Mr. Geoff Mulgan of his Policy Unit is involved in policy relating to voting systems. [117153]

The Prime Minister: No.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Human Rights Training (RUC)

Mr. Hesford: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what progress has been made in the training of RUC officers in human rights issues. [108061]

Mr. Ingram: As with all police forces in the UK, the Royal Ulster Constabulary is examining all aspects of human rights including training in preparation for the Human Rights Act coming into force in October 2000.

It is in contact with the Northern Ireland Human Rights Commission and with national police training colleges and plans are at an advanced stage for all RUC officers and civilian staff to receive training.

Union Flag

Mr. John D. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if a Union flag was provided for, if arrangements were made to fly the Union flag on the designated dates at, and if the Union flag was flown on 17 March at (a) Department of Agriculture, The Mall,

Armagh, (b) Department of Agriculture, Newry Road, Armagh, (c) Southern Education and Library Board, The Mall, Armagh, (d) Southern Education and Library Board, Market House, Armagh, (e) Crown Buildings, Alexander Road, Armagh, (f) RUC Station, Newry Road, Armagh, (g) Department of Environment, Ballinakone, Armagh and (h) Vehicle Testing Station, Hamiltonstown Road, Armagh; and if he will make a statement. [116089]

Mr. Ingram: All central Government buildings are provided with a Union flag and a list of those dates on which the Union flag should be flown.

The Union flag was provided and flown on 17 March at the Department of Agriculture and Rural Development's offices on the Mall, Armagh and Crown Buildings, Alexander Road, Armagh and the Department of the Environment's Vehicle Testing Station, Hamiltonstown Road, Armagh. Arrangements have been made to fly the Union flag at these buildings on all designated dates.

It is assumed that the building referred to in (g) is the Department of Regional Development's Roads Service Depot at 17 Ballinahonemore Road, Armagh. Although the Union flag was provided and arrangements are in place to fly the flag on all designated dates at this building, and at the Department of Agriculture and Rural Development's office at Newry Road, Armagh, it was not flown on these buildings on 17 March due to an oversight.

The Union flag is not flown at RUC Stations on Public and/or Bank holidays.

The decision whether or not to fly the Union flag on Southern Education and Library Board property is a matter for that Board.

Employment Equality

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what progress has been made in developing a memorandum of understanding between the Northern Ireland Human Rights Commission and the Equality Commission. [117357]

Mr. George Howarth: This is a matter for the Commissions themselves.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Iraq

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, pursuant to the oral statement of the Minister of State of 24 March 2000, Official Report, columns 1292–93 on Iraq, what assessment he has made of the letter of 9 March from Riad El-Taher of Friendship Across Frontiers. [116875]

Mr. Hain: FCO officials replied to Mr. El-Taher's letter of 9 March on 29 March addressing his comments on the humanitarian situation in Iraq.

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, pursuant to the oral statement of the Minister of State of 24 March 2000, Official Report, columns 1292–93 on Iraq, what evidence he has received that Iraq is manufacturing chlorine-based mustard gas. [116871]

Mr. Hain: To reiterate the point in my statement of 24 March 2000, Official Report, columns 1292–93, chlorine is a constituent of mustard gas which was used by Iraq in the attack on Halabja in 1988. It is therefore clearly important that we are sure that chlorine imported into Iraq under the "oil for food" programme is used for the purposes for which it was approved.

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, pursuant to his letter to the hon. Member for Linlithgow, concerning his willingness to debate Government policy on Iraq, if he will do so at Kensington Town Hall on 6 May with Denis Halliday and Hans von Sponeck. [117247]

Mr. Hain: As my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State said in his letter, he is happy to debate Government policy on Iraq, as am I. Indeed I debated our policy with my hon. Friend in the House most recently on 24 March.

Zimbabwe

Mrs. Gillan: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is the scope of the projects of the British military advisers working in Zimbabwe; and how many such advisers there are. [116895]

Mr. Hain [holding answer 30 March 2000]: There are five military advisers providing peacekeeping training to the Southern African Development Community region, including modules on human rights, rights of the child, the role of the ICRC, democratic control of the armed forces, structure of the UN and non-governmental organisations and three other advisers involved in peacekeeping training in support of UN priorities.

Iran

Mr. Dismore: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the visiting rights available to (a) members of the family and (b) legal advisers, in respect of the 13 Jews detained in Iran. [117251]

Mr. Hain: We have regularly raised with the Iranian authorities our concerns at the detention on espionage charges of a number of Iranian nationals including 10 members of the Jewish community, following the release on bail in February of three of the Jewish detainees. I discussed this matter with the Deputy Foreign Minister Sarmadi on 7 March. It is our understanding that visits by some family members have been allowed and that some of the defendants have appointed legal representatives. We are seeking clarification from the Iranian authorities on the latter point. The Iranian authorities are fully aware of the importance that we and our EU partners attach to this issue.

Mr. Dismore: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the availability of legal representation for the 13 Jews detained in Iran. [117252]

Mr. Hain: Our understanding is that some of those detained have appointed legal representation. However, we are aware of recent reports that legal representation has been denied to some of the detainees. We are seeking clarification from the Iranian authorities on this point. The Iranian authorities are fully aware of the importance that we and our EU partners attach to this issue.

Mr. Roger Crooks

Mr. Mackinlay: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs on which occasions Roger Crooks was present at meetings referred to in (a) Sir Thomas Legg's report, Session 1997–98, HC 1016, (b) the First Special report of the Foreign Affairs Select Committee sessions 1997–98, HC 760, (c) the Second Special report of the Foreign Affairs Select Committee session 1997–98, HC 852 and (d) the Second report of the Foreign Affairs Select Committee sessions 1998–99, HC116-I; and if he will make a statement. [116932]

Mr. Hain: This information is not held centrally and to provide such details would incur disproportionate costs.

Mr. Mackinlay: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if Mr. Roger Crooks was present at the official meeting held on 3 December 1997 between his Department's officials, and representatives of the (i) Cabinet Office, (ii) Department for International Development and (iii) Ministry of Defence; and if he will make a statement. [116925]

Mr. Hain: No.

Mr. Mackinlay: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list the occasions on which Mr. Peter Penfold had meetings with Roger Crooks (a) in Sierra Leone, (b) in Conakry, (c) in the United Kingdom and (d) on board a Royal Naval vessel. [116928]

Mr. Hain: Mr. Penfold confirms that he spoke to Mr. Crooks occasionally in Sierra Leone and Conakry, but that he had no meetings with Mr. Crooks in the UK or elsewhere.

Mr. Mackinlay: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, pursuant to his answer of 16 March 2000, Official Report, column 287W, for what purposes his Department has had discussions on the general situation in Sierra Leone; and if he will make a statement. [116968]

Mr. Hain: As stated in my answer of 16 March, Mr. Crooks is refurbishing one of the main hotels in Freetown to be used as the Headquarters of UNAMSIL. FCO and MOD personnel have had occasional contacts with him over the last few years. Discussions have focused on the general situation in Sierra Leone, not arms or military matters.

Mr. Mackinlay: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs on which occasions John Flynn, the Foreign Secretary's Special Representative for Sierra Leone, met Mr. Roger Crooks. [116931]

Mr. Hain: Never.

Mr. Mackinlay: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, pursuant to his answer of 16 March 2000, Official Report, column 287W, if his Department knew of Roger Crooks' dual US/Sierra Leone citizenship at the time of their discussions; and if these discussions have continued since Roger Crooks' expulsion from Sierra Leone. [116962]

Mr. Hain: The information is as follows:

(a) No.

(b) The Government of Sierra Leone expulsion order on Mr. Crooks was lifted in May 1999. The High Commissioner reports that he had one discussion with Mr. Crooks since his return to Sierra Leone.

Mr. Mackinlay: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs on which occasions (a) Miss Ann Grant, (b) Mr. Richard Dales, (c) Craig Murray, (d) Mr. Tim Andrews, (d) Mr. John Everad and (f) Lynda St. Cooke met Roger Crooks. [116927]

Mr. Hain: We believe that none of the six has met Roger Crooks. We have not yet been able to confirm this with one of them. When we have confirmation I will write to my hon. Friend.

Oxford Forum

Mr. Mackinlay: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs who selects hon. Members to attend the Oxford Forum. [116929]

Mr. Vaz: There is no organisation called the Oxford Forum in which the Foreign and Commonwealth Office is involved.

Sierra Leone

Mr. Mackinlay: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs who were (a) the three officials from other Foreign and Commonwealth Office departments, (b) the official from the Cabinet office and (c) the official from the Department for International Development who attended the meeting referred to in the Second report of the Foreign Affairs Committee, Session 1998–99 (HC 116) at footnote 163, page xxi. [116926]

Mr. Hain: My right hon. Friend the Foreign Secretary has already given a full account to Parliament of the events covered in the FAC report. There is nothing to add to his previous statements.

Kazakhstan

Mr. Oaten: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what recent representations he has made to the Government of Kazakhstan about freedom of the press. [117113]

Mr. Vaz: This is an issue of concern to us and our EU partners. We have ensured that it has been raised in EU statements, including at the OSCE Review Conference in Vienna and Istanbul in September 1999, and more recently in the EU response to the statement by President Nazarbaev at the OSCE Permanent Council meeting in Vienna in February.

Mr. Oaten: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what recent discussions he has had with European Foreign Ministers on human rights in Kazakhstan. [117114]

Mr. Vaz: We and our EU and OSCE partners continue to monitor developments in Kazakhstan, including those relating to progress on democratic reform there, and will raise issues of concern as necessary. We shall also seek to ensure that, in the context of the Partnership &

Co-operation Agreement, these issues are adequately addressed at the next EU-Kazakhstan Co-operation Council due in June.

China

Mr. Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what decision was taken by the General Affairs Council on 20 March on sponsoring a resolution on China at the 56th Conference on Human Rights. [116279]

Mr. Battle: I refer the hon. Member to the answer given to my hon. Friend the Member for Clydesdale (Mr. Hood) on 29 March 2000, Official Report, columns 167–68W.

The position the EU will take on the US resolution on China will reflect developments up until the time the resolution is considered by UNCHR.

US International Trade Commission

Mr. Fabricant: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs for what reason, when his officials met analysts from the United States International Trade Commission during the last two weeks, they advised the analysts not to meet hon. Members. [116312]

Mr. Vaz: UK Ministers and officials did not advise the visiting International Trade Commission analysts not to meet with hon. Members, nor was any such advice given to US Government members or officials. Meetings between officials and the analysts were wide-ranging covering the Government's policy towards the EU, the assumptions underlying the ITC inquiry and the economic consequences of the scenarios the ITC are considering.

EU Treaties

Mr. Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs which proposals made by EU institutions and member states for incorporation into a new treaty, other than those relating to composition of the Commission, cannot be adopted via the fast track option contained in the Treaty amendments agreed at Amsterdam in 1997. [116308]

Mr. Vaz: There is no fast-track option for Treaty change. The Treaties can only be changed through an IGC. All amendments need to be agreed unanimously by member states' Governments and ratified by the member states before they can come into force.

SCOTLAND

Departmental Properties

Mr. Don Foster: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what (a) number and (b) percentage of properties in his charge are empty; and what steps are being taken by his Department to reduce the number of such properties. [116923]

Dr. Reid: My Department has no empty properties.

INTERNATIONAL DEVELOPMENT

Websites

Mr. Maclennan: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development if she will list the expenditure incurred by her Department, agencies and non-departmental public bodies on (a) the setting up and (b) the operation of websites, indicating the cases in which the expenditure has been above that budgeted; and if she will list for each website (i) the topics which have been covered, (ii) the current average number of hits per month and (iii) the estimated expenditure on each website for each of the next three years. [115391]

Clare Short: The Department for International Development's website was set up at an initial cost of £10,000. Operating costs have been £16,000 per annum and expenditure has been within the allocated budget. The topics covered are: "Who We Are"—an introduction to DFID; "What We Do"—an introduction to DFID's work around the world; "Working with Us"—information for users seeking to work with DFID; "News Centre"—information on press releases, speeches etc.

The average number of hits per month is 55,000. Maintenance costs for the next three years are likely to be around £12,000 per annum. The website will be re-designed over the coming year at a cost of up to £50,000.

Sudan

Mr. Paul Marsden: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what recent discussions she has had with the Canadian Government regarding exports to Sudan; and if she will make a statement. [115719]

Clare Short: I have held no discussions with the Canadian Government regarding exports to Sudan.

Forest Fires (Ethiopia)

Dr. Tonge: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what representations she has received concerning the forest fires in Oromiya state, Ethiopia; and if she will make a statement. [116550]

Clare Short: It is reported that tens of thousands of hectares of natural forest have been razed by fires in the forest areas of Bale and Borana Administrative Zones. It is believed that the fires were started by local farmers burning land for local cultivation that escalated out of control. The Ethiopian Government sought donor help to combat the fires in February 2000. A number of donor countries who were well placed to address the problem helped form and deploy an International Fire Emergency Advisory Group. Donors, including DFID, maintain daily contact in Addis Ababa.

International experts travelled down to Bale and Borana to assess the damage and map out a strategy to contain the fires. Their findings were presented to the Ethiopians on 6 March. A US expert was brought in to head up the fire-fighting operation with support and equipment from South Africa and Germany. On 9 March, South Africa announced that it would provide a further 22 fire-fighters and other experts. We concluded that as the UK has limited experience in fighting large-scale forest fires it was best for those with expertise and technical equipment to take the lead.

Departmental Properties

Mr. Don Foster: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what (a) number and (b) percentage of properties in her charge are empty; and what steps are being taken by her Department to reduce the number of such properties. [116910]

Clare Short: No properties in my charge as Secretary of State for International Development are empty.

EDUCATION AND EMPLOYMENT

Higher Education

Dr. Lynne Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how many people aged (a) 18 to 21, (b) 21 to 24 and (c) 25 years and over have applied for higher education in each of the last three years; and what percentage of the population in each age group these figures represent. [109978]

Mr. Wicks: The latest data on applicants via UCAS are shown in the following table. Although applicants fell between 1998 and 1999, the final number of accepted applicants increased by 1.6 per cent. over the same period.

Home domiciled applicants for entry to full-time and sandwich [1] undergraduate courses in the United Kingdom through the universities and colleges admission system (UCAS) 1997–99

	1997		1998		1999
Age	Number	Percentage of population [1]	Number	Percentage of population [1]	Number	Percentage of population [1]
Under 21	300,926	43.1	303,729	[2]41.0	306,809	40.9
21 to 24	41,000	5.3	37,287	5.1	36,361	5.1
25 and over	56,401	6.0	48,572	5.2	45,521	5.0
Total	398,327		389,588		388,691

[1] Based on the averaged 17 and 18 year old population for under 21s, the averaged 21–24 year old population for 21–24s, and the averaged 25–34 year old population for 25s and over.
[2] The drop in the participation rate between 1997 and 1998 reflects the unusually large increase in the number of 18 year olds in the population between these years, resulting from a rise in the birth rate.

UCAS covers only applicants to full-time and sandwich courses; although similar data for part-time courses are not available, entrant numbers are. The following table shows the numbers of entrants to part-time courses as a proportion of the age group, for the two most recent years; data on part-time entrants for 1999 will not be available until April 2000. The figures show that, in contrast to applicants to full-time courses, participation rates for mature part-time students have risen. The majority of mature students opt to enter higher education via part-time courses.

Home domiciled entrants to part-time undergraduate courses [1] in the United Kingdom

	1997		1998
Age	Number	Percentage of population [2]	Number	Percentage of population [2]
Under 21	15,227	2.2	16,236	2.2
21 to 24	26,116	3.5	26,645	3.8
25 and over	176,139	18.9	181,572	19.8
Total	217,482		224,453

[1] Includes courses in HE institutions, including the Open University, and FE institutions. The figures for the Open University will include some double counting of students who enrol on more than one course.
[2] Based on the averaged 18 and 19 year old population for under 21s, the averaged 21–24 year old population for 21–24s, and the averaged 25–34 year old population for 25s and over.

New Deal (Ethnic Minorities)

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what assessment he has made of the impact of the New Deal on ethnic minorities. [110592]

Ms Jowell [holding answer 22 February 2000]: We have set a target that all New Deal partnerships achieve parity of job outcomes between ethnic minority and white clients by the end of this Parliament. We recognise the additional disadvantages which can be faced by ethnic minority jobseekers and that is why the Employment Service is working so closely with key organisations such as the Commission for Racial Equality, Local Race Equality Councils and community groups in this important area of work.

At the end of November 1999, we know that nearly 20,000 young people from ethnic minorities had gone into work from the New Deal for young people. 13,700 had benefited from training and work experience under the New Deal options. At present, the New Deal appears to be doing less well in helping young people from ethnic minorities in obtaining jobs than young white people, although much of the discrepancy may be in part due to less complete destination data for ethnic minority leavers and from variation in performance between delivery areas. They are, however, leaving the Gateway more quickly and are slightly less likely to return to JSA after finding employment. We also assess the performance of different ethnic minority groups and are aware of the variations in outcomes between the groups. For example, we know that those of Indian, Bangladeshi and Chinese origin are closer to achieving equality of job outcomes with white participants than are Black-African participants.

The table shows jobs as a percentage of New Deal starts for each ethnic grouping.

	Percentage
White	48
Black Caribbean	36
Black African	30
Black Other	38
Indian	43
Pakistani	37
Bangladeshi	40
Chinese	36
Other	35

There is a feature article on New Deal and ethnic minority participants in the February edition of Labour Market Trends that sets out in more detail the findings of experience so far.

Socrates Programme

Mr. Boswell: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if he will make a statement on (a) participation in, (b) the costs to United Kingdom and European funds and (c) the educational benefits of the first Socrates programme; and what his plans are for the second Socrates programme. [116017]

Ms Jowell [holding answer 23 March 2000]: The first phase of the EU Education action programme Socrates ran from 1995 to 1999. During that period some 920 million euros were available for activities across the European Union, many of which will continue until the end of this academic year.

Participation

In the UK, during academic year 1997–98, the latest year for which figures are available, the following were funded:

1,108 school partnership projects; 323 school preparatory visits; 161 teacher training projects; 655 teachers took part in language training abroad; 80 UK teacher trainees took up language assistant posts in other European countries; 166 Higher education institutions took part; 10,592 students studied in another country; 10 Adult Education projects and nine Open and Distance Learning projects were funded; and 159 policy study visits were made to another country.

In the EU, throughout the period of the first phase, the European Commission estimates that nearly half a million students received grants for an integrated period of study in another European country under the Erasmus action; over 50,000 teachers in higher education undertook teaching assignments at higher education institutions in another European country; over 10,000 schools were involved in joint projects (a great many of them involving UK schools); and around 150,000 young people were involved in joint activities.

Costs

The average annual cost to the UK is 28 million euros. Incoming grants total 25 million euros.

Educational benefits

All participants have built and strengthened links with colleagues in other participating countries. Many institutions have gained access to, and developed, innovative training materials and methods. Individual participants have gained an appreciation of each others' cultures and working practices, have developed communication, new technology and other core skills and have improved their employability and confidence levels.

Plans for the new programme

The total budget for the second phase of the programme is 1.85 million euros for the seven years from 2000 to 2006. Priorities and budget allocations for the new programme for the year 2000 are currently under discussion in the Socrates programme management committee. During the course of these discussions the UK will use its best endeavours to ensure that the priorities set for the programme are compatible with the UK's domestic policy agenda for each of the education sectors the programme serves.

Early Years Education

Mr. Oaten: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if he will list for (a) England and (b) each local education authority in Hampshire the number of three-year-olds with free early years education places providing five or more sessions of education per week in (i) 1979, (ii) 1990 and (iii) each year from 1992 to 1999. [115964]

Ms Hodge [holding answer 23 March 2000]: The latest available January census information on three-year-olds educated in maintained schools is shown in the following table.

Places for 46,000 children have been created in 64 local authorities with the greatest social need, from the £40 million Nursery Education Grant made available during 1999–2000. Expenditure of £390 million is being made available over the three financial years 1999–2000 to 2001–02 to increase by 190,000 the number of new, free, good quality, early education places for three-year-olds. The priority is to reach those three-year-olds in social need who could most benefit from a free nursery place.

Information on three-year-olds educated in maintained schools for January 2000 is currently being collected as are the actual figures for three-year-old places created in the private and voluntary sector from September 1999 onwards. Provisional estimates of both sets of figures are expected to be published in a Statistical First Release in May.

Numbers of full and part-time pupils aged three [1] in maintained schools [2] in Hampshire local education authority area and in England: 1979, 1990 and 1992–99 (position as at January each year)

	England		Hampshire [3]		Portsmouth [3]		Southampton [3]		Hampshire [4]
	Part-time	Full-time	Part-time	Full-time	Part-time	Full-time	Part-time	Full-time	Part-time	Full-time
1999	267,928	34,288	999	4	706	1	546	0	[5]—	[5]—
1998	270,286	33,003	969	13	726	0	501	2	[5]—	[5]—
1997	262,110	29,815	[5]—	[5]—	[5]—	[5]—	[5]—	[5]—	2,218	10
1996	261,654	28,818	[5]—	[5]—	[5]—	[5]—	[5]—	[5]—	2,082	10
1995	253,537	27,818	[5]—	[5]—	[5]—	[5]—	[5]—	[5]—	1,922	20
1994	242,187	27,263	[5]—	[5]—	[5]—	[5]—	[5]—	[5]—	1,916	28

Numbers of full and part-time pupils aged three [1] in maintained schools [2] in Hampshire local education authority area and in England: 1979, 1990 and 1992–99 (position as at January each year)

	England		Hampshire [3]		Portsmouth [3]		Southampton [3]		Hampshire [4]
	Part-time	Full-time	Part-time	Full-time	Part-time	Full-time	Part-time	Full-time	Part-time	Full-time
1993	231,907	26,014	[5]—	[5]—	[5]—	[5]—	[5]—	[5]—	1,533	35
1992	225,521	25,579	[5]—	[5]—	[5]—	[5]—	[5]—	[5]—	1,542	18
1990	200,397	25,294	[5]—	[5]—	[5]—	[5]—	[5]—	[5]—	1,485	40
1979	88,372	26,330	[5]—	[5]—	[5]—	[5]—	[5]—	[5]—	769	43

[1] Ages as at start of academic year (31 August)
[2] Includes maintained nursery, primary and special schools
[3] Local education authority areas created after the Local Government Re-organisation in April 1997
[4] Before the Local Government Re-organisation in April 1997
[5] Not applicable for that year

Schools (Capital Allocations)

Judy Mallaber: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if he will break down the capital allocations since May 1997 to schools in (a) the Amber Valley constituency and (b) Amber Valley District. [116376]

Ms Estelle Morris [holding answer 27 March 2000]: The information requested is shown in the following tables.

Capital Allocations for the Amber Valley Constituency since May 1997

£

School name	New Deal for Schools	Supplementary Credit Approvals	Grant Maintained Schools Funding	Special Educational Needs	Outside Toilets Initiative	Class Size Initiative	Annual Capital Guidelines	Voluntary Aided Grants	School Formula Capital (Minimum)	Grand Total
Aldercar Infant	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	5,555	5,555
Aldercar	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	10,765	10,765
Ambergate Primary	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	4,905	4,905
Breadsall C of E Primary	—	—	—	—	50,000	—	—	—	—	55,170
Christ The King RC Primary	—	—	—	10,500	—	2,938	—	107,776	5,245	126,459
Codnor C of E VC Primary	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	7,190	7,190
Coppice Primary	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	6,255	6,255
Copthorne Infant	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	4,940	4,940
Corfield C of E Infant	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	4,860	4,860
Crich C of E Infant	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	4,430	4,430
Crich Junior	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	4,670	4,670
Croft Infant	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	5,660	5,660
Denby Free C of E Primary	—	6,675	—	—	—	—	—	85,934	4,161	96,770
Fritchley C of E (VA) Primary	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	35,145	4,078	39,223
Heage Primary	240,000	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	5,990	245,990
Heanor Gate School	—	—	326,822	—	—	—	—	—	23,875	350,697
Heanor Langley Infant	—	—	—	—	—	96,400	—	—	5,240	101,640
Holbrook Centre for Autism	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	4,540	4,540
Holbrook C of E Primary	110,000	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	5,485	115,485
Horsley C of E Primary	70,000	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	4,770	74,770
Horsley Woodhouse Primary	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	4,855	4,855
Ironville and Codnor Park Primary	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	5,915	5,915
John Flamsteed Community	669,163	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	12,715	681,878
Kilburn Infant	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	5,820	5,820
Kilburn Junior	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	6,110	6,110
Langley Mill C of E Infant	—	—	—	10,000	—	—	—	—	4,985	14,985
Langley Mill Junior	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	6,700	6,700
Leys Junior	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	5,540	5,540
Little Eaton Primary	—	—	—	—	—	86,400	—	—	6,445	92,845
Lons Infant	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	4,690	4,690
Loscoe C of E Primary	—	—	—	—	23,575	—	—	—	5,225	28,800
Mapperley C of E Cont Primary	—	—	—	—	44,000	—	—	—	4,490	48,490
Marlpool Infant	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	4,440	4,440
Marlpool Junior	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	5,900	5,900
Mary Howitt Infant Community	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	6,320	6,320
Mill Hill	—	—	116,231	—	—	—	—	—	24,280	140,511
Morley Primary	—	—	—	—	35,190	—	—	—	4,685	39,875
Mortimer Wilson	—	525,000	—	—	—	—	—	—	18,460	543,460
Mundy C of E Junior	—	—	—	—	65,000	—	—	—	5,920	70,920
Parkwood	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	5,485	5,485
Pottery Primary	225,000	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	8,325	233,325
Richardson Endowed Primary	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	5,195	5,195
Riddings Infant	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	5,780	5,780
Riddings Junior	—	—	—	—	40,250	—	—	—	6,360	46,610
Ripley Infant	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	5,955	5,955
Ripley Junior	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	8,030	8,030
Somercotes Infant	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	6,180	6,180
Somerlea Park Junior	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	6,470	6,470
South Wingfield Primary	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	5,050	5,050
St. Andrew's C of E Primary	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	4,850	4,850
St. John's C of E Primary	—	—	—	1,000	—	86,400	—	—	8,480	95,880
Stanley Common C of E Primary	—	—	—	—	50,000	—	—	—	4,770	54,770
Street Lane Primary	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	4,500	4,500
Stanwick Hall	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	20,395	20,395
Stanwick Primary	205,000	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	7,960	212,960
The Delves	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	6,910	6,910

Capital Allocations for the Amber Valley Constituency since May 1997

£

School name	New Deal for Schools	Supplementary Credit Approvals	Grant Maintained Schools Funding	Special Educational Needs	Outside Toilets Initiative	Class Size Initiative	Annual Capital Guidelines	Voluntary Aided Grants	School Formula Capital (Minimum)	Grand Total
Waingroves Primary	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	6,265	6,265
William Howitt Junior Community	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	6,820	6,820
Woodbridge Junior	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	6,500	6,500
Annual Capital Guidelines	—	—	—	—	—	—	315,706	—	0	315,706
Total	1,519,163	531,675	443,053	21,500	308,015	272,138	315,706	228,855	411,855	4,051,664

Judy Mallaber: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what has been the total capital allocation since May 1997 to schools in (a) the Amber Valley constituency and (b) Amber Valley District. [116377]

Ms Estelle Morris [holding answer 27 March 2000]: The resources allocated since May 1997 for capital purposes to schools in the (a) Amber Valley constituency amount to £4,051,664 and for (b) Amber Valley District amount to £4,415,068.

Careers Guidance Services

Mr. Boswell: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if he will make a statement on the performance by careers guidance services of the terms of their contracts over the last three years. [116462]

Mr. Wicks [holding answer 28 March 2000]: For the financial years 1997–98 and 1998–99, Careers Service performance was based upon a range of activities including individual interviews, group sessions and personal action plans. During this period, most Careers Services achieved their agreed targets and many exceeded them.

More recently Careers Services have focused on those who need help most in support of social inclusion and achieving National learning targets. In the financial year 1999–2000, Careers Services made significant shifts in their activities, increasing their resources on work engaging 16 to 17-year-olds in learning by 37 per cent. compared with the previous year.

Despite the change in focus of Careers Services young people have, however, suffered from a lack of co-ordinated advice and guidance and gaps in provision. That is why we have launched the Connexions Service. It will take forward the provision of careers information, advice and guidance as part of a radical new approach to raising standards and ensuring coherent and co-ordinated support for all young people.

Standard Spending Assessment

Mrs. Anne Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if he will estimate the cost of raising the level of education SSA per child to at least (a) the level of that of the median authority and (b) the level of the median authority minus five per cent. [116754]

Ms Estelle Morris: We estimate that it would cost £511 million to raise the per pupil funding of all Local Education Authorities to the level of that of the median authority and £96 million to raise it to the level less 5 per cent. of that of the median authority.

Mr. St. Aubyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment (1) what assessment he has made of the equity of the standard spending assessment for education as a method of allocation; [117128]

(2) what recent representations he has received regarding measures being taken to reform received standard spending assessment for education, with particular reference to the (a) areas cost adjustment and (b) additional educational needs allowance. [117134]

Ms Estelle Morris: My right hon. Friend has received a number of representations on the area cost adjustment and additional education needs elements of the standard spending assessment. We have already acknowledged that there are valid objections to the current SSA formula. The Government, in partnership with local government, have set up a review to see whether there is a better way of determining the distribution of funds which is simpler, more stable, more robust and fairer than the present arrangements.

Mrs. Anne Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if he will estimate the cost of raising the standard spending assessment per pupil for each local education authority in England to at least that of Hertfordshire for 2000–01. [117225]

Ms Estelle Morris: We estimate that it would cost £760 million to raise the standard spending assessment per pupil for each local education authority in England to the level of that of Hertfordshire for 2000–01.

Access to Work (Disabled People)

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what plans he has to improve Access to Work for disabled people. [116988]

Ms Hodge: The Access to Work programme has been successful in helping an increasing number of disabled people to remain or move into employment year on year. Over the next financial year we expect to help more than 23,000 people through Access to Work at a cost of nearly £26 million. This represents an increase of over 3,000 compared with the current year.

The Employment Service is also planning to improve the quality of service offered through Access to Work. Over the next year, it is strengthening the Disability Service training, conducting a customer satisfaction survey, and undertaking a review to streamline Access to Work processes.

Dyslexia

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what plans he has to improve the special tuition available to dyslexic children. [116974]

Jacqui Smith: It is the responsibility of schools and local education authorities (LEAs) to ensure that children with dyslexia receive appropriate tuition. Schools and LEAs must have regard to guidance in the Code of Practice on the Identification and Assessment of Special Educational Needs (SEN). This guidance recognises a continuum of special educational needs and advocates a staged approach to meeting such needs. The Code provides advice on the needs of children with specific learning difficulties, including dyslexia. A revised version of the Code is expected to be issued next year, which will place a stronger emphasis on the importance of early identification of SEN, so the appropriate help can be given as soon as possible. Under the National Literacy Strategy all children are being taught phonics, spelling and grammar. This has been shown to be particularly helpful for children with mild dyslexia. Children who demonstrate particular difficulties at word level, which are due to their SEN, can be identified much earlier and more focused support added. Such children have also been helped by the requirement, since September 1998, for newly qualified teachers to show that they can identify pupils who have special educational needs, including dyslexia, and know where to get help in order to give positive and targeted support to children.

My Department is also part funding a two year study programme by the Dyslexia Institute in partnership with the Centre for Reading and Language Studies at the University of York. The research has at its heart a controlled intervention study designed to evaluate the effects of structured programmes of intervention for seven-year-old pupils who are experiencing specific difficulties to read, write and spell.

Workplace Parking

Mr. Gray: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how many workplace car parking spaces are available at the buildings used and controlled by his Department. [116762]

Mr. Wills [holding answer 30 March 2000]: In total, there are 900 workplace car parking spaces available at the Department's head office buildings in Darlington, London, Runcorn and Sheffield. We have prepared travel plans for all our key buildings in line with the commitment set out in the Transport White Paper and are reviewing the scope for reducing our car parking requirements in that context.

Learning Accounts

Mr. Boswell: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how many people are currently waiting for individual learning accounts; and what is the average period between application and allocation. [117244]

Mr. Wicks: The first trance of individual learning accounts are being administered and funded solely through Training and Enterprise Councils. In England alone, over 101,000 accounts had been opened by the end of February 2000, against a UK target of 100,000 accounts opened by April 2000, and we are on track to achieve the target of one million accounts opened in the lifetime of this Parliament. Information on how many people are currently waiting for individual learning accounts; and the average period between application and allocation is not held centrally.

School Meals

Helen Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if he will list the local education authorities in which no schools provide hot school meals. [117145]

Jacqui Smith: This information is not collected centrally. Under current education legislation, it is up to local education authorities, and schools with delegated budgets for school meals, to decide on their presentation and content, including whether a meal should be hot. The Government's minimum nutritional standards for school lunches will apply to both hot and cold lunches.

Helen Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what estimate he has made of the number of families eligible to claim free school meals which do not do so. [117144]

Ms Estelle Morris: Information reported by maintained schools in England to the Department for Education and Employment in January 1999 showed that there were 1,417,300 pupils on the schools' register (on the census day) who were known by schools to be eligible for free school meals. Of these, 1,088,800 pupils were reported to have taken a free school meal on the census day.

Further information provided by the Department of Social Security, for November 1999, showed overall that there were an estimated 1,490,000 school age children (5–16 years) in England from 849,000 families in receipt of Income Support or Income-based Jobseeker's Allowance. No information is available from the Department of Social Security on the number of these children who took their free meals.

Standards and Effectiveness Unit

Mrs. May: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what was the number of staff and the budget for the Standards and Effectiveness Unit at the end of (a) September 1999 and (b) December 1999. [117507]

Ms Estelle Morris: At the end of September and December 1999, the number of staff in the Unit was 204. The running cost budget for the Unit in the current year is £6.421 million.

Class Sizes

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what plans he has to ensure that schools have sufficient accommodation to meet the pressures on class sizes when the cohorts of children currently benefiting from the class size reduction initiative turn eight years old. [116736]

Ms Estelle Morris: The Department's guidance to LEAs on drawing up infant class size implementation plans made clear that the criteria for plan approval included the need to ensure no adverse impact upon the size of junior classes.

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what assessment he has made of the impact of the class size reduction initiative on smaller schools where site constraints limit expansion and published admission numbers are reduced as a result. [116737]

Ms Estelle Morris: The Department issues regular monitoring questionnaires, to all LEAs, which seek information on the implementation of the infant class size initiative. We have no evidence to suggest that the initiative has had an adverse impact on smaller schools which have reduced their admission numbers in order to comply with the infant class size limit.

Local Education Authorities

Mrs. May: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if he will make a statement on the future of local education authorities. [117511]

Ms Estelle Morris: Local education authorities have four key functions related to schools: school improvement, special education needs, access and strategic management.

We believe that LEAs should be held accountable by regular inspections, which is why Ofsted has a programme of inspections in place—and why we introduced legislation allowing intervention and outsourcing where necessary.

We believe that as far as possible schools should manage themselves and their budgets. That is why we are delegating far greater resources to schools than the previous Administration.

Departmental Properties

Mr. Don Foster: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what (a) number and (b) percentage of properties in his charge are empty; and what steps are being taken by her Department to reduce the number of such properties. [116911]

Mr. Wills: There are currently eight Departmental headquarters properties and 53 Employment Service (ES) properties that are either fully or partly vacant. Using the standard measure of square metreage, these figures represents 3.19 per cent. of vacant space against the total headquarters property for DfEE and 4.9 per cent. against the total for ES. Both ES and DfEE use the services of external estates surveyors, under contract, who advise on the best method of achieving a speedy and cost effective disposal. This will include assignment, sub-letting or surrender. The option pursued will depend upon, for example, the terms of the lease, the wishes of the landlord and market conditions. In line with usual practice, retained estates surveyors employ local estate agents who market vacant premises.

Teachers (Performance-related Pay)

Mrs. May: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how many external assessors for the performance-related pay scheme for teachers have been recruited and how many remain to be recruited; and by what date they will be recruited. [117510]

Ms Estelle Morris: The actual numbers of external assessors to be deployed will depend on the number and distribution of teachers who apply to cross the threshold. Numbers are likely to peak in the first two years of the new arrangements when very large numbers of teachers will be eligible for assessment. The maximum requirement in year one will be in the region of 520 full-time equivalents. The recruitment process for external assessors is nearly complete.

Schools Funding

Mrs. May: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what is (a) the breakdown for the financial year 1999–2000 and (b) the forecast breakdown for 2000–01, of funding for schools between the Standards Fund, local education authority expenditure, and other Government grants. [117506]

Ms Estelle Morris: The following table sets out: (a) Education Standard Spending, which is the amount the Government assume local authorities will spend for the purpose of setting Standard Spending Assessments; (b) Standards Fund Grant; and (c) Other Government Grants, which include Nursery Grant for three and four-year-olds, Class Size Grant, and Special Grants to be paid under the Local Government Act 1988.

	1999–2000	2000–01
Education Standard Spending	20,414	21,479
Standards Fund Grant	563	1,077
Other Government Grants	247	877
Total	21,224	23,433

DEFENCE

Weapons Failures

Mr. Duncan Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what the figures are for the mean time between failure for the British Army Light Support Weapon (a) modified and (b) unmodified, and for other Light Support Weapon equivalents used by other armed forces tested by the British army. [114214]

Mr. Spellar [holding answer 13 March 2000]: The mean time between failure expressed as mean rounds between failure for modified Light Support Weapon as tested on recent trials, firing a Battlefield mission of 960 rounds in 37 minutes, is greater than 2,500 rounds in all climates and with all NATO qualified ammunition types. Of the other Light Support Weapon systems tested, the mean rounds between failure range from 398 to 2,008 rounds.

I am withholding details of the performance of the unmodified LSW under Exemption 1 of the Code of Practice on Access to Government Information.

Mr. Duncan Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will place in the Library a copy of the most recent field trial report on (a) SA80 and (b) LSW. [114215]

Mr. Spellar [holding answer 13 March 2000]: The report to which the hon. Member refers is classified and is withheld under Exemption 1 of the Code of Practice for the release of Government Information.

Mr. Duncan Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) what are the figures for the mean time between failures for (a) the SA80 as modified, (b) the G36, (c) 5IG (Swiss Army), (d) DEMAR. Co, (e) M16 and (f) other personal weapons recently tested by the Army; [114217]

(2) what reliability tests the armed forces have carried out on personal weapons used by other armed forces, with particular reference to (a) G.36, (b) S/G (Swiss Army), (c) DEMAR. Co (upgraded M16) and (d) M16. [114216]

Mr. Spellar [holding answer 13 March 2000]: The mean time between failure expressed as mean rounds between failure for the modified SA 80 Individual Weapon (IW) as tested on recent trials, firing a Battlefield mission of 150 rounds in eight minutes 40 seconds, is greater than 2,500 rounds in all climates and with all NATO qualified ammunition types.

The mean round between failure for G36, Diemaco and SIG is commercially sensitive. However only one Weapon system was considered comparable to the modified SA80 1W.

The reliability tests for all the Weapons systems have been based on the firing of 21 Battlefield missions.

Websites

Mr. Maclennan: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list the expenditure incurred by his Department, agencies and non-departmental public bodies on (a) the setting up and (b) the operation of websites, indicating the cases in which the expenditure has been above that budgeted; and if he will list for each website (i) the topics covered, (ii) the average number of hits per month and (iii) the estimated expenditure on each website for each of the next three years. [115090]

Mr. Spellar: The information requested by the right hon. Member is not held centrally or in the form requested. I will write to the right hon. Member and a copy of my letter will be placed in the Library of the House.

Heavy-lift Aircraft

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what aircraft was used to take Puma helicopters to Mozambique; how long the journey took; and what estimate he has made of how long it would have taken for an equivalent number of helicopters to have arrived in a complete state had Boeing C-17 aircraft been used for the transportation. [116599]

Mr. Spellar: An An-124 aircraft was used to carry four Puma helicopters to Heudspruit, South Africa. The journey time from Brize Norton to Heudspruit took 16 hours 50 minutes; the flight time was 14 hours ten minutes. Two C-17 aircraft would have been required to transport the four Pumas and, as the cruise speeds are similar, the flight times would have been similar to the An-124. It was necessary to remove the rotors and rotor head for the Pumas to be transported in the An-124. It is assessed that the same degree of dismantlement would have been necessary had C-17 been used.

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how long it would take for an Antonov 124, if purchased by his Department, to be placed on the British Military List; and what impact this would have on protecting its operation from interference by foreign powers. [116598]

Dr. Moonie: Details of our assessment of these issues forms part of the current decision making process on options to meet our short-term strategic airlift requirement. I am withholding information under Exemption 2 (internal discussion and advice) of the Code of Practice on access to Government Information.

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the unit cost for the purchase of (a) an Antonov 124 and (b) a Boeing C17. [116560]

Dr. Moonie: This information is commercially sensitive. I am withholding it under Exemption 13 (third party's commercial confidences) of the Code of Practice on Access to Government Information.

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many aircraft would be available under (a) the Antonov 124 package and (b) the Boeing C17 package. [116497]

Dr. Moonie: A final decision on aircraft numbers has yet to be reached and will form part of our overall decision on airlift requirements.

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how long it would take for (i) an Antonov 124, and (ii) a Boeing C17 to carry 40 battle tanks to the Balkans. [116502]

Dr. Moonie: That information is not available and could be calculated only at disproportionate cost.

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when the C-17 was chartered by the Ministry of Defence from the USAF during the Kosovo conflict; and what the payload was which was offered. [116562]

Dr. Moonie: A request for airlift assistance to move the vehicles of a High Velocity Missile Battery was submitted to the USAF on 29 March 1999. The move involved seven C-17 flights using two aircraft flying from Hanover to Skopje. The lift commenced on 1 April and was completed on 4 April 1999.

Under the UK/US Acquisition and Cross Service Agreement, the USAF determine the most appropriate means of transportation, based on their resources available at the time. Therefore, while no actual offer of payload was made, the USAF provided sufficient airlift to meet the stated requirement.

MPs' Visits

Mr. Walter: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list (a) the visits by hon. Members to his Department's establishments in Wales since May 1997 and (b) invitations declined by local hon. Members to visit establishments in their constituencies. [116348]

Dr. Moonie [holding answer 27 March 2000]: The visits by hon. Members of Parliament to Ministry of Defence (MOD) establishments in Wales since May 1997 are listed in the table. It is not however possible to list the invitations declined by local hon. Members to visit establishments in their constituencies, as such records are not comprehensively maintained.

Date of visit	Location/unit	MP/Constituency
6 February 1998	DERA Pendine	Mr. Nick Ainger MP (Carmarthen West and South Pembrokeshire)
5 March 1998	HQ 160 (Wales) Brigade and Infantry Training Centre, Brecon	The right hon. Sir George Young MP (North West Hampshire)
8 March 1998	C Flight 22 Squadron RAF Valley	The right hon. Dr. John Reid MP (Hamilton North and Bellshill)
18 May 1998	3 Royal Welsh Fusiliers, Wrexham	Mr. Martyn Jones MP (Clwyd South) The right hon. Barry Jones MP (Alyn and Deeside) Dr. John Marek MP (Wrexham)
26 May 1998	3 Royal Welsh Fusiliers, Wrexham	Mr. Gareth Thomas MP (Harrow West)
2 June 1998	DERA Pendine	Mr. Nick Ainger MP (Carmarthen West and South Pembrokeshire)
19 June 1998	3 Royal Welsh Fusiliers, Caernarfon	The right hon. Dafydd Wigley MP (Caernarfon) Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones MP (Ynys Mon)
25 June 1998	C Flight 22 Squadron, RAF Valley	Mr. Brian Donohoe MP (Cunninghame South) Mrs. Ann Keen MP (Brentford and Isleworth)
1 July 1998	Royal Marine Commando Logistic Regiment, Castlemartin Range	Mr. Michael Fabricant MP (Lichfield) Mr. Stephen Hepburn MP (Jarrow) Hon. Lindsay Hoyle MP (Chorley) Mr. Sydney Rapson MP (Portsmouth North)
2 July 1998	Senneybridge Training Camp	Mr. John Spellar MP (Warley)
10 July 1998	3 Royal Welsh Fusiliers, Wrexham	Mr. Elfyn Llwyd MP (Meirionnydd Nant Conwy)
19 July 1998	14 Signal Regiment, Brawdy	Mrs. Jackie Lawrence MP (Preseli Pembrokeshire)
3 August 1998	Royal Monmouthshire Royal Engineers, Monmouth	Mr. Huw Edwards MP (Monmouth)
16 September 1998	3 Royal Welsh Fusiliers, Queensferry	The right hon. Barry Jones MP (Alyn and Deeside)
22 September 1998	Pennally Training Camp	Mr. Peter Hain MP (Neath)
13 November 1998	1223 (Machen) Detached Flight Air Training Corps	The right hon. Ron Davies MP (Caerphilly)
14 November 1998	3 Royal Welsh Fusiliers, Wrexham	Mr. Martyn Jones MP (Clwyd South)
25 November 1998	1358 (Pontardwe) Squadron Air Training Corps (ATC)	Mr. Peter Hain MP (Neath)
4 December 1998	Army Careers Information Office, Rhyll	Mr. Chris Ruane MP (Vale of Clwyd)
18 January 1999	Defence Aviation Repair Agency, St. Athan	Mr. Anthony Coleman MP (Putney) Mr. Dan Morris MP (Wansdyke)
25 January 1999	Defence Aviation Repair Agency, Sealand	Mr. Anthony Coleman MP (Putney) Mr. Dan Morris MP (Wansdyke)
11 March 1999	RAF Valley—Search and Rescue	Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones MP (Ynys Mon)
7 April 1999	Defence Aviation Repair Launch Day, St. Athan	Mr. John Spellar MP (Warley) Mr. John Smith MP (Vale of Glamorgan) The right hon. Barry Jones MP (Alyn and Deeside) Mr. Peter Viggers MP (Gosport)
26 May 1999	C Flight 22 Squadron, RAF Valley	Mr. Iain Coleman MP (Hammersmith and Fulham) Mr. Stephen McCabe MP (Birmingham Hall Green) Mr. Dan Norris MP (Wansdyke)
10 June 1999	104 Regiment Royal Artillery (Volunteers), Cardiff	Mr. Martin Bell MP (Tatton)
17 June 1999	101 Battalion REME (Volunteers), Wrexham	Hon. Lindsay Hoyle MP (Chorley)
4 August 1999	6 Cadet Battalion Royal Welsh Fusiliers, Swynnerton	The right hon. Dafyyd Wigley MP (Caernarfon)
1 September 1999	Defence Storage and Distribution Centre, Llangennech	The right hon. Denzil Davies MP (Llanelli)
11 September 1999	104 Regiment Royal Artillery (Volunteers), Royal Artillery Range, Manorbier	Mrs. Jenny Jones MP (Wolverhampton South West)
29 September 1999	RAF Valley	Mr. Lembit Öpik MP (Montgomeryshire)
20 January 2000	RAF DARA Sealand	The right hon. Barry Jones MP (Alyn and Deeside)
25 January 2000	DERA Aberporth	Mr. Gareth Thomas MP (Clwyd West)
28 January 2000	DERA Pendine	Mr. Nick Ainger MP (Carmarthen West and South Pembrokeshire)

Notes:

1. The Under-Secretary of State for Defence approves the visits of MPs to establishments. However, it is possible that MPs may have visited local establishments or cadet units on public open days and such visits are not included in the list.
2. There is no requirement for the Department to keep records of such visits and some establishments only have records available since March 1998. The list should therefore not be viewed as exhaustive.

Tritium

Mr. Welsh: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what quantities of tritium have been produced at the Chapelcross nuclear facility in each month since April 1995; and what percentage of the tritium produced by this facility has been exported to Governments and agencies outside the United Kingdom. [116592]

Mr. Hoon [holding answer 28 March 2000]: To reveal such information would be contrary to national defence and security interests and I am therefore withholding details under Exemption 1 of the Code of Practice on Access to Government Information.

Defence Diversification Council

Mr. Wood: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what progress has been made on the establishment of a defence diversification council. [116713]

Dr. Moonie: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply I gave my hon. Friend the Member for Birmingham, Selly Oak (Dr. Jones) on 22 March 2000, Official Report, column 566W.

Workplace Parking

Mr. Gray: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many workplace car parking spaces are available at the buildings used and controlled by his Department. [116773]

Dr. Moonie [holding answer 30 March 2000]: This information is not held centrally and could be provided only at disproportionate cost. The provision of parking facilities is being addressed in the development of my Department's corporate Environmental Management System, which incorporates Travel Plans.

Gulf War Illnesses

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many meetings officials from the Gulf Veterans' Illnesses Unit held with the United States Department of Veterans' Affairs between 15 October and 31 December 1999, indicating the date and location of each meeting and the section of the Department of Veterans' Affairs in which the officials who attended each meeting worked. [117092]

Mr. Spellar: During the period 15 October to 31 December 1999, an official from my Department's Gulf Veterans' Illnesses Unit in London attended two meetings at which officials from the US Department of Veterans' Affairs, Veterans Health Administration Section, would have been present. One meeting was on 20 October and the other was on 21 October. Both meetings took place in Washington DC.

In addition to the above, a member of the Gulf Veterans' Illnesses Unit based in Washington DC maintains a continuous dialogue with United States Department of Veterans' Affairs colleagues.

Mr. Roger Crooks

Mr. Mackinlay: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence on which occasions (a) Vice Admiral Alan West and (b) Major Peter Hicks have met Roger Crooks since 1995. [116930]

Mr. Spellar: Vice Admiral Sir Alan West, the current Chief of Defence Intelligence, has never met Mr. Crooks. Major Peter Hicks served as a Military Liaison Officer with the Defence Intelligence Staff from 1994–98. He deployed to Sierra Leone on three occasions to support contingency planning for the evacuation of UK and other foreign nationals. In 1997, he directly assisted in a civilian evacuation from Sierra Leone. He had no professional contact with Mr. Crooks and recalls only one occasion at which he may have briefly met him socially.

Service Personnel

Mr. Duncan Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many people (a) left and (b) joined the (i) Army, (ii) Royal Navy, (iii) Royal Air Force, (iv) Royal Marines, (v) Territorial Army, (vi) Royal Naval Reserve and (vii) Royal Auxiliary Air Force in each of the last six months. [117564]

Mr. Spellar: The latest available figures on a consistent basis across all Services are as follows. They include both trained and untrained personnel.

(a) Number of people who left in the month of:

	August 1999	September 1999	October 1999	November 1999	December 1999	January 2000
Army	1,219	1,355	1,462	1,326	1,063	1,557
Royal Navy	288	425	476	412	370	396
Royal Air Force	387	437	433	352	332	392
Royal Marines	72	144	128	98	91	86
Territorial Army	698	919	863	957	544	1,214
Royal Naval Reserve	50	4	50	63	114	36
Royal Auxiliary Air Force	24	38	49	26	23	21

(b) Number of people who joined in the month of:

	August 1999	September 1999	October 1999	November 1999	December 1999	January 2000
Army	1,216	1,908	1,390	1,583	639	2,280
Royal Navy	87	548	320	450	44	413
Royal Air Force	228	406	453	314	289	390
Royal Marines	62	151	106	111	59	101
Territorial Army	471	531	1,779	712	474	607
Royal Naval Reserve	23	33	63	69	94	31
Royal Auxiliary Air Force	13	40	28	37	16	25

Helen Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what progress has been made in updating guidance to the Services on the values and standards expected of Service personnel; and if he will make a statement. [117640]

Mr. Spellar: The Army and RAF have revised and updated the guidance given to their personnel on the values and standards of each Service and the standards of behaviour and conduct to which they are expected to adhere. This underpins Service ethos and so helps to sustain the operational effectiveness of the armed forces.

The revised guidance is set out in publications entitled "Values and Standards of the British Army" and "Core Values and Standards of the Royal Air Force" which are being widely distributed in the Services. Copies have been placed in the Library of the House.

Nuclear Weapons

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list the (a) names, (b) dates and (c) locations of joint US/UK nuclear weapon exercises which have been held since 1993. [117093]

Mr. Spellar: The following joint UK/US nuclear weapon accident response exercises have been held since 1993:

Date	Name	Location
April 1994	Diver Mist	Suffolk
September 1998	Diagonal Glance	Somerset

Food Products (Welfare Standards)

Mr. Key: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will set out the prescribed welfare standards which govern imported food products supplied to HM forces. [112967]

Dr. Moonie [pursuant to his reply, 6 March 2000, c. 498W]: I regret the answer given was incorrect in referring to an "EC Meat Commission". In the case of meat sourced in EC countries quality standards are based upon the EC Meat Classification Scheme as operated in the UK by the Meat and Livestock Commission and set down in The Meat Buyers Guide.

ENVIRONMENT, TRANSPORT AND THE REGIONS

Fossil Fuel

Mr. Stunell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what assessment he has made in (a) preparation for negotiating limits to fossil fuel use internationally and (b) setting limits to fossil fuel use in the United Kingdom of (i) the availability of fossil fuel reserves (1) worldwide and (2) in the United Kingdom and (ii) the cumulative impact of emissions from fossil fuel burning on the rate and extent of climate degradation. [113862]

Mr. Meacher: I know of no negotiations on setting limits to fossil fuel use, either internationally or in the UK. There are negotiations about targets for reducing greenhouse gas emissions, which will inevitably affect countries' use of fossil fuels, which is a major source of carbon dioxide emissions, the main man-made greenhouse gas.

Assessments published by the Department of Trade and Industry indicate that estimates of the UK's remaining proven, probable and possible oil reserves have been broadly unchanged since the 1980s, and estimated gas reserves have increased slightly over the same period, despite large increases in production.

In numerical terms UK reserves of oil and gas are currently estimated to be around 1,750 million tonnes and 1,750 billion cubic metres (about 1,450 million tonnes of oil equivalent), respectively. Work undertaken in 1998 for DTI by International Mining Consultants Ltd. estimates the reserves, resources and mineral potential at UK mines to be about 620 million tonnes of coal (about 370 million tonnes of oil equivalent). This estimate is on a more restricted basis than the oil and gas estimates because it takes no account of coal reserves other than those at mines that were operating at the time of the report. An alternative estimate contained in the BP Amoco Statistical Review of World Energy puts UK coal reserves at 1,500 million tonnes of coal.

According to the BP Amoco Statistical Review of World Energy, world reserves of oil, gas and coal are about 140 billion tonnes, 130 billion tonnes, 650 billion tonnes respectively, all converted to oil equivalent. These refer to quantities estimated with reasonable certainty to be present and recoverable under existing economic and operating conditions; the ultimately recoverable amounts could be much larger.

The UK is likely to start importing gas at some point between 2003 and 2010. Through access to world energy markets, the Government's assessment is that fossil fuel resource availability by itself will not constrain consumption for the foreseeable future and is correspondingly unlikely to be a factor in the international negotiations.

The most recent report from the Met Office's Hadley Centre estimated that, under the 'business as usual' scenario, the global temperature will be 2°C warmer than now by the 2050s. This temperature rise would be delayed by 50 years with stabilisation of carbon dioxide in the atmosphere at 750 parts per million and by over 100 years with stabilisation at 550 parts per million. About 70 per cent. of the climate change impact will be due to fossil fuel burning between now and 2100.

Waste Incinerators

Mr. Brake: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will list the locations by region of (a) existing waste incinerators and (b) pending planning applications for waste incinerators. [114150]

Mr. Mullin: The following list shows the location, by Environment Agency Region, of waste incineration processes regulated by the Environment Agency under the Integrated Pollution Control regime in England and Wales. The Environment Agency is responsible for regulating chemical waste, drum and other waste (at a rate of one tonne per hour or more) incineration processes under Part I of the Environmental Protection Act 1990. The majority of small incineration processes under one tonne per hour are regulated by local authorities. Detailed information on the location of these incinerators is not held centrally.

Environment Agency Region	Town	Operator
Anglian	Grimsby	The BOC Group
Anglian	Ipswich	White Rose Environmental Ltd.
Anglian	Royston	Vetspeed Ltd.
Anglian	Southend-on-Sea	Defence Evaluation and Research Agency
Midlands	Birmingham	Severn Trent Water Ltd.
Midlands	Birmingham	Tyseley Waste Disposal Ltd.
Midlands	Buxton	Durga Environmental Ltd.
Midlands	Cinderford	Engelhard Sales Ltd.
Midlands	Coventry	Coventry and Solihull Waste Disposal Co. Ltd.
Midlands	Dudley	MES Environmental Ltd.
Midlands	Nottingham	Wastenotts (Reclamation) Ltd.
Midlands	Nottingham	WRE Services Ltd.
Midlands	Redditch	Medical Energy (Worcs) Ltd.
Midlands	Sandwell	BIP Limited
Midlands	Scunthorpe	Fibrogen Ltd.
Midlands	Shrewsbury	WRE Services Ltd.
Midlands	Stoke-on-Trent	MES Environmental Ltd.
Midlands	Stourbridge	Severn Trent Water Ltd.
Midlands	Wolverhampton	Leigh Environmental Ltd.
Midlands	Wolverhampton	MES Environmental Ltd.
North East	Billingham	Northumbrian Environmental Management Ltd.
North East	Bradford	Yorkshire Water Services Ltd.
North East	Doncaster	Amlon Metal Ltd.
North East	Huddersfield	Kirklees Waste Services Ltd.
North East	Knottingley	Laporte Performance Chemicals UK Limited
North East	Leeds	Yorkshire Environmental Solutions Ltd.
North East	Leeds	Yorkshire Water Services Ltd.
North East	Middlesbrough	Fine Organics
North East	Sheffield	SARP (UK) Ltd.
North East	Sheffield	Sheffield City Council
North East	Sheffield	Yorkshire Water Services Ltd.
North West	Bolton	GM Waste Ltd.
North West	Morecambe	British Energy Generation Ltd.
North West	Preston	Royal Ordnance (Weapons and Munitions) Ltd.
North West	Runcorn	ICI Chemicals And Polymers Ltd.
North West	South Wirral	Cleanaway Ltd.
North West	South Wirral	Shell (UK) Ltd.
North West	Ulverston	Glaxo Operations UK Ltd.
North West	Widnes	North West Water Ltd.
North West	Wirral	Lubrizol Ltd.
South West	Bristol	Blagden Packaging NV
South West	Bristol	Bristol City Council
South West	Castle Cary	Bronzeoak Thermal Processing
South West	Weymouth	Defence Research Agency
South West	West Woodlands	Wessex Incineration Co. Ltd.
Southern	Ashford	White Rose Environmental Ltd.
Southern	Dartford	Wellcome Foundation Ltd.
Southern	Fareham	Southern Water Services Ltd.
Southern	Portsmouth	Onyx Hampshire Ltd.
Southern	Romney Marsh	Magnox Electric Plc
Southern	Sittingbourne	Powergen CHP Ltd.
Southern	Southampton	Shanks Chemical Services Ltd.
Thames	Barking	Blagden Packaging NV
Thames	Barking	Thames Water Utilities Ltd.
Thames	Basingstoke	Onyx Hampshire Ltd.
Thames	Belvedere	Riverside Resource Recovery Ltd.
Thames	Harrow	Northwick Park Hospital
Thames	London	London Waste Ltd.
Thames	London	South East London Combined Heat And Power Ltd.
Thames	London	Thames Water Utilities Ltd.
Thames	Slough	S. Grundon (Services) Limited
Thames	Slough	S. Grundon (Waste) Ltd.
Thames	Thornton Heath	Mayday Energy Centre Ltd.
Thames	Uxbridge	Clinical Energy Limited
Thames	Stevenage	Glaxo Research and Development Ltd.
Wales	Bridgend	Davies Brothers Waste Ltd.
Wales	Cemaes Bay	Magnox Electric Plc
Wales	Deeside	J. Reid Trading Ltd.
Wales	Neath	HLC Neath Port Talbot Ltd.
Wales	Pontypool	Shanks Chemical Services Ltd.

Information on planning applications for waste incinerators is held by the respective planning authorities and not by the department. However, the Environment Agency has received IPC applications for a new incinerator, or a variation of the existing authorisation at the sites listed. This list also includes sites where the Agency intends to vary the conditions of the existing authorisation.

Environment Agency Region	Town	Operator
South West	Bristol	Medipower Services Ltd.
Southern	Maidstone	Kent Enviropower Ltd.
Southern	Sittingbourne	Sita Holding UK Ltd.
Southern	Southampton	Onyx Hampshire Ltd.
Southern	Southampton	Shanks Chemical Services Ltd.
Thames	Harlow	Merck Sharp and Dohme Ltd.
Thames	London	Thames Water Utilities Ltd.

London Transport

Mr. Brake: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions (1) if he will list quality targets set for (a) London Underground and (b) London Buses, giving in each instance performance against them for each of the years they have been in existence; [115417]

(2) if he will make a statement on the revision of the quality targets set for London Underground and London Buses. [115418]

Mr. Hill: The current performance targets set for London Underground and London Transport Buses are as follows. London Transport report on progress against these targets and those set in previous years in their Annual Reports, which are published in the early summer for the previous financial year.

London Underground (all targets for two years 1999–2000 and 2000–01)

Measure	Target
Capacity (train kms run)	10 per cent. increase on 1998–99 performance
Reliability (unweighted excess journey time—minutes)	4 per cent. improvement on 1998–99 level
Customer satisfaction measures [1,2]:
Train service	77
Information	77
Customer safety and security	83
Staff helpfulness and availability	70
Cleanliness	69

[1] Measured through LT's Customer Satisfaction Survey
[2] Average score out of 100

London Transport Buses

		Percentage
Customer satisfaction measure	1999–2000 Target [1]	2000–01 Target [1]
Service reliability	54	55
Personal safety and security	79	80
Smoothness and freedom from jolting during the journey	58	59
Attitude and behaviour of staff	78	79
Cleanliness and condition of buses	69	70
Information on buses	68	69
Information at bus stops	64	65

[1] These targets are measured as the proportion of passengers—asked in surveys—who marked the service 7.5 or better out of a total of 10

From 3 July London Transport Buses will become part of the new body, Transport for London, under the Greater London Authority, and targets will be subject to review by the Mayor.

Mr. Brake: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions how much London Transport has spent on external consultants in each of the last five years. [115419]

Mr. Hill: I understand from London Transport that they have spent the following amounts on external consultants in each of the last five years:

£ million

Year	Spend
1995–96	50.81
1996–97	40.35
1997–98	42.35
1998–99	91.16
1999–2000	[1]108.10

[1] Provisional—final figure not yet available

London Underground

Mr. Brake: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions how many escalators on the London Underground are out of order in each zone; for how long the escalator has been out of order in each case; and when they are expected to be fixed. [115416]

Mr. Hill: These are operational matters for London Underground who have provided the information in the following table.

Escalators—the situation on 17 March 2000

Station	Out of service	Back in service
Zone 1
Charing Cross	9 February 2000	22 September 2000
Bank	17 March 2000	[1]—
Bond Street	16 March 2000	[1]—
Chancery Lane	16 March 2000	[1]—
Holborn	16 March 1999	[1]—
Holborn	2 November 1999	22 May 2000
Holborn	25 August 1997	27 March 2000
Notting Hill Gate	1 February 2000	20 June 2000
Notting Hill Gate	6 January 2000	10 July 2000
Oxford Circus	10 February 2000	11 July 2000
Oxford Circus	9 February 2000	22 September 2000
Oxford Circus	9 February 2000	11 July 2000
Oxford Circus	8 February 2000	22 September 2000
Oxford Circus	8 February 2000	11 July 2000
Oxford Circus	17 January 2000	2 July 2000
Oxford Circus	12 August 1999	25 April 2000
St. Pauls	16 March 2000	[1]—
London Bridge	26 January 2000	[1]—
Westminster	15 March 2000	[1]—
Baker Street	11 February 2000	15 August 2000
Kings Cross	16 March 2000	[1]—
Kings Cross	16 March 2000	18 August 2000
Kings Cross	15 September 1999	11 July 2000
Liverpool Street	14 March 2000	[1]—
Paddington	13 March 2000	[1]—
Euston	10 February 2000	[1]—
Euston	25 February 2000	11 July 2000
Old Street	24 September 1999	8 August 2000
Old Street	10 November 1999	2 May 2000
Tottenham Court Road	19 July 1998	8 August 2000
Leicester Square	11 March 2000	[1]—
Knightsbridge	8 March 2000	[1]—
Vauxhall	10 January 2000	15 August 2000

Escalators—the situation on 17 March 2000

Station	Out of service	Back in service
Victoria	11 February 2000	18 August 2000
Victoria	10 February 2000	3 August 2000
Warren Street	12 January 2000	23 August 2000
Total 36
Zone 2
Bethnal Green	5 November 1999	2 July 2000
Shepherds Bush	24 September 1999	26 June 2000
St. Johns Wood	28 July 1999	18 May 2000
Rotherhithe	17 March 2000	[1]
Archway	17 March 2000	[1]
Archway	18 February 2000	[1]
Clapham North	3 October 1999	1 June 2000
Clapham South	28 September 1999	3 November 2000
Oval	16 March 2000	[1]
Manor House	16 February 2000	[1]
Manor House	29 March 1999	7 May 2000
Brixton	9 February 2000	18 August 2000
Highbury	7 February 2000	18 August 2000
Total 13
Zone 3
South Wimbledon	2 October 1999	5 April 2000
Wood Green	21 February 2000	[1]
Seven Sisters	11 February 2000	18 August 2000
Turnpike Lane	17 March 2000	[1]
Walthamstow Central	11 February 2000	8 May 2000
Walthamstow Central	11 February 2000	11 July 2000
Total 6

[1] To be announced

Mr. Andrew George: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions, pursuant to his answer of 14 March 2000, Official Report, columns 118–19W, on London Underground, what is the nature of the plans that are in hand to bring the lifts at Westminster Underground Station into service. [117101]

Mr. Hill: This is an operational matter for London Underground. However, I understand that LUL will shortly invite the HMRI to inspect the lifts to ensure that they can be entered into public service.

Departmental Inquiries

Mr. Loughton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will list the (a) reviews, (b) public inquiries and (c) commissions of inquiry announced by his Department since May 1997. [115123]

Ms Beverley Hughes [holding answer 17 March 2000]: The information for reviews and inquiries is as follows. My Department has announced no commissions of inquiry since May 1997.

Reviews

Bus Review.

Competition in the Water Industry in England and Wales.

Comprehensive Spending Review of Housing.

Financial Management and Policy Review of the Audit Commission.

Financial Management and Policy Review on the Darwin Advisory Committee.

Finance Management and Policy Review of the Housing Corporation.

Financial Management and Policy Review of the Rent Assessment Panels.

Financial Management and Policy Review for the Royal Commission on Environmental Pollution.

Financial Management and Policy Review of the UK Ecolabelling Board.

Fundamental Review of the Laws and Procedures relating to Compulsory Purchase and Compensation.

Housing Fitness Standard Review Steering Group.

Inter-departmental Review of Fuel Poverty.

Marine Nature Conservation Review Group.

Next Steps Review of the Highways Agency.

Opencast Coal: Review of Planning Policy.

The Provision of New Drains and Sewers in England and Wales.

Review of Bird Registration procedures under Section 7 of the Wildlife and Countryside Act 1981.

Review of Business Rates Revaluation.

Review of Compulsory Competitive Tendering in Local Government.

Review of Controls over Demolition in the light of the 'Shimizu' judgment.

Review of Criminal Prosecutions and Sanctions for Pollution of the Sea following Marine Accidents.

Review of the Environmental Action Fund.

Review of Expert Panel on Air Quality Standards.

Review of Fees and Charges for Bird Registration and CITES Wildlife Trade Applications.

Review of the 5-Year Strategy for HM Coastguard.

Review of Global Wildlife Division's panel of part-time Wildlife Inspectors.

Review of the Hedgerows Regulations 1997.

Review of Heritage Notifications.

Review of the House buying and selling process.

Review of Implementation of 1995 guidance on signing for tourist attractions and facilities in England.

Review of the implementation of Part IIA of the Environmental Protection Act 1990 (contaminated land).

Review of the Index of Local Deprivation.

Review of Legislation relating to integration within the Environment Agency and Scottish Environment Protection Agency.

Review of Marine Nature Conservation.

Review of the Missions to search for the fishing vessel 'Gaul' lost in 1974 and identification of bodies washed ashore along the coast of Russia.

Review of the National Contingency Plan for Marine Pollution from Shipping and Offshore Installations.

Review of the Pilotage Act.

Review of Policy on Chemicals in the Environment.

Review of policy within the OSPAR Commission for the protection of the marine environment of the NE Atlantic on hazardous substances, radioactive substances, nutrients and marine biodiversity. (Outcome announced in a PQ in September 1997).

Review of the Noise Act.

Review of Policy on International Access to Regional Airports.

Review of Political Restrictions on Local Government Officers.

Review of procedures for statutory and non-statutory consultation on planning applications.

Review of Railtrack's Safety and Standards Directorate.

Review of Rolling Stock Leasing Market.

Review of Salvage and Intervention and their Command Control.

Review of the Secretary of State's standards of modern zoo practice.

Review of Single Vehicle Approval.

Review of Speed Policy.

Review of Trust Ports.

Review of the Water Abstraction Licensing System in England and Wales.

Review of the Water Charging System.

Review of UK National Air Quality Strategy (NAQS).

Revenue Grant Distribution Review Group.

Local Government Capital Finance Review.

Roads Review (published as 'A New Deal for Trunk Roads in England')

Transport Safety Review.

Inquiries

Inquiry into rolling stocks.

Inquiry into Safety on the River Thames.

Inquiry into South Hampshire Rapid Transit Project.

Inquiry into Merseyside Rapid Transit Project

Inquiry into Gaul tragedy.

Inquiry into Paddington rail crash directed by Health and Safety Commission.

Inquiry into Marchioness tragedy.

Bournemouth—Swanage Ferry tolls public inquiry June 1997.

Inquiry into Southall train crash directed by Health and Safety Commission.

Nuclear Regulation

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what additional resources have been (a) sought by and (b) provided to the Nuclear Installations Inspectorate to cover the additional work needed to assess the new regulatory regime requirements for (i) British Nuclear Fuels in preparation for PPP and (ii) British Energy as a private company. [115358]

Mr. Meacher: Resources for the regulation of British Nuclear Fuels and British Energy are provided for within the Nuclear Installations Inspectorate's current staffing plans for 2000–01. HSE plans to recruit up to 30 additional inspectors to increase its cadre of nuclear inspectors in 2000–01 to deliver its programme of inspection which will include the regulation of British Nuclear Fuels and British Energy.

M4 Bus Lane

Mr. Jenkin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions how many (a) buses and (b) passengers have used the M4 bus lane on each day since the ending of Reading Buses' services to and from London; and if he will make a statement. [115267]

Mr. Hill [holding answer 20 March 2000]: The bus lane continues to help provide a first-class service for passengers using buses, coaches and taxis and benefits all road users. Use of the bus lane has increased by over 20 per cent. from 3,000 vehicles in the last week of operation to 3,700 vehicles using the bus lane each day. Of these 600 are buses (including coaches), and each bus carries 15 passengers, an average of 9,000 bus passengers each day. Under normal traffic conditions, time savings of up to nine minutes are being obtained by users of the bus lane, and the reliability of their journey increases.

Reading Buses will withdraw their London service on Sunday 7 May 2000. Therefore data on changes to usage of the M4 bus lane will not be available until some time later Reading Buses use the lane 15 times per day. This accounts for only 2.5 per cent. of buses and coaches using the lane and is much less than the typical week by week variation in these vehicles.

I am disappointed Reading Buses are withdrawing their London service. I understand that this was on economic grounds, and that they say that the services would have stopped earlier but for the M4 bus lane. I am however pleased that another operator has increased use of this section of the M4 by 30 buses per day since the bus lane opened.

Jubilee Line

Mr. Kaufman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions, pursuant to his answer of 16 March 2000, Official Report, column 328W, concerning the Jubilee line, what other recently completed railways (a) in the United Kingdom and (b) abroad have experienced delays at one point which resulted in delays and train cancellations throughout the line; and for what reason the doors designed to lead to trains on the westbound Jubilee line platform at Westminster station are not in use. [115751]

Mr. Hill: The information requested in answer to the first part of my right hon. Friend's question is not held centrally and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

However, London Underground is a member of an international group of Metro operators. I understand that within this group over half have constructed new lines in recent years; of these new lines more than half have experienced "teething problems".

I understand from London Underground that the platforms at Westminster are designed to accommodate seven car trains (to allow for capacity increases in later years). Jubilee line trains presently consist of only six cars. The rear platform edge doors of the Westbound platform are therefore not currently in use and are kept closed for safety reasons. I am advised that information notices are posted on the relevant doors.

Quangos

Mrs. Ellman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions how many quangos operate (a) nationwide (b) with a regional remit and (c) within the north-west region. [116071]

Ms Beverley Hughes: The Department currently sponsors 31 executive NDPBs, 13 of which operate nationwide. The eight NDPBs that have a regional remit are the Regional Development Agencies. Two of the Department's NDPBs operate solely within the North-West region: the North West Development Agency and Liverpool Housing Action Trust.

GM Crops

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what assessment has been made of the ways in which it is possible to recover pollen dispersed from GM plants in field trials in the event of the experiment demonstrating environmental harm. [116267]

Mr. Meacher: It would not be possible to recover pollen released from field trials. This is one of the reasons why no genetically modified crops may be released for field trials in the United Kingdom without a detailed risk assessment of the possible harm to human health and the environment. This includes specific consideration of the possible effects of the dispersal of GM pollen. The risk assessments are reviewed critically by the scientific and technical experts on the Advisory Committee on Releases to the Environment (ACRE). If ACRE had any concern that GM pollen would cause environmental harm, then the release would not be allowed.

Mr. Alan Simpson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what plans he has to place conditions in the contracts for biodiversity research relating to farm-scale trials of GM crops to ensure there are no conflicts of interest among contractors which might undermine the credibility of research. [116208]

Mr. Meacher: I have no plans to place conditions in the contracts. The research contractors involved in the evaluations are respected Government research institutions who have no corporate links to any vested interest. The research methodology and findings for the farm-scale evaluations are reviewed and agreed by an independent Scientific Steering Committee and the overall findings of the evaluations will be peer reviewed by other independent scientists, completely outside the research programme. This all guarantees that the findings of the farm-scale evaluations will be unbiased and science based.

Mr. Alan Simpson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will list the criteria used to assess the scientific independence of scientific contractors working on farm-scale evaluations of GM crops before contracts were awarded. [116207]

Mr. Meacher: The Department invited 15 organisations to tender for the farm-scale evaluations. These were chosen to be Government funded bodies (such as research council institutes or universities) or independent research bodies. In the event, the contractors chosen were all Government funded institutes and had demonstrated that they had the capacity to carry out the work, as well as the required scientific expertise. As with all Government contracts of this nature, the researchers were asked to provide details of all personnel expected to carry out the work, along with their CVs.

Mr. Alan Simpson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what assessment he has made of potential conflicts of interest relating to the contract given to the Institute of Arable Crop Research for farm-scale evaluation of GM crops following the recruitment of staff involved by CropGen. [116209]

Mr. Meacher: Three members of staff employed by the Institute of Arable Crop Research have been recruited to advise CropGen. Two were previously involved with the farm-scale evaluations in a specialist advisory role but neither will be involved in the next stage of the project.

Cycling

Mr. Robathan: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what discussions he had with the Dutch Transport Minister during her recent visit concerning policies to (a) increase the distance cycled and (b) to reduce cycling fatalities; and if he will make a statement. [116081]

Mr. Hill: My right hon. and noble Friend the Minister for Transport met the Dutch Transport Minister on 7 March. Cycling issues were not on the agenda on this occasion.

Education Standard Spending Assessments

Mr. Nicholas Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will calculate in percentage terms the difference between his Department's most recent standard spending assessment in education for the counties of (a) Cheshire and (b) Hertfordshire; and if he will make a statement on the reasons for the difference. [116122]

Ms Beverley Hughes: The education standard spending assessments (SSA) for 2000–01 for Cheshire county council and Hertfordshire county council are £275,998,592 and £471,433,598 respectively, a difference of 71 per cent. This arises from applying the SSA formula to the numbers relevant to each county. The great majority of the difference is accounted for by the greater number of pupils in Hertfordshire.

Mr. Nicholas Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will calculate the value of his Department's most recent (a) standard spending assessment for education for the county of Cheshire and (b) average standard spending assessment for the shire counties. [116117]

Ms Beverley Hughes: The education standard spending assessment for 2000–01 for Cheshire county council is £275,998,592. The average education standard spending assessment for 2000–01 for shire county councils is £272,584,489.

Mr. Nicholas Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will calculate the value of his Department's most recent (a) standard spending assessment per pupil for the county of Cheshire, (b) average standard spending assessment per pupil for shire counties and (c) average standard spending assessment per pupil for the Metropolitan and London authorities; and if he will make a statement. [116118]

Ms Beverley Hughes: The information requested is given in the table:

£ per pupil

	Under 5s Education SSA	Primary Education SSA	Secondary Education SSA	Post-16 Education SSA	Education SSA [1]
Cheshire County Council	1,962	2,257	2,898	3,236	2,602
Shire County Council Average	2,109	2,348	3,024	3,426	2,715
Metropolitan District Average	2,414	2,456	3,168	3,813	2,863
London Borough Average	3,394	2,982	3,802	4,194	3,510
Met District and London Borough Average	2,777	2,645	3,386	3,978	3,094

[1] This column is calculated by dividing the Education SSA (including the element for 'other' education, such as adult education) by the sum of Under 5, Primary, Secondary and Post-16 pupils

Planning Applications

Sir Sydney Chapman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions how many of the town and country planning applications called in by him in each of the last 10 years (a) were recommended by his inspector for approval and (b) were accepted by him; in how many cases his inspector recommended refusal; and of these how many were accepted by him. [116282]

Mr. Raynsford: Information is available on the following basis:

Year	Number approved	Number in line with Inspector	Number refused	Number in line with Inspector
1996–97	56	55	51	43
1997–98	[1]24.5	[1]23.5	[1]63.5	[1]61.5
1998–99	46	44	73	65
1999–2000[2]	41	39	36	35

[1] Includes a split decision on one case
[2] Provisional
Note:
Figures are not available for earlier years

Company Cars

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what estimate he has made of the number of company cars in use in the UK in 1999. [116327]

Mr. Hill: At the end of June 1999, the latest date for which we have figures, there were 2.53 million cars licensed in Great Britain that were registered to companies. Equivalent information for Northern Ireland is not readily available.

Audit Commission (Quality Control Review)

Dr. Julian Lewis: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions to which officials and members of the Audit Commission the Quality Control Review team submits its preliminary findings in respect of the work of an individual auditor. [116435]

Ms Beverley Hughes: The views of the Review Team are not submitted to officials or members of the Audit Commission prior to the submission of the final Quality Control Report, which is submitted to the Director of Audit Policy and Appointments.

Dr. Julian Lewis: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will list the quality control reviews conducted in (a) 1994, (b) 1995 and (c) 1996, when (i) the Controller or (ii) any other official or member of the Audit Commission altered, or asked or required to be altered, the team's findings in respect of an individual auditor. [116438]

Ms Beverley Hughes: Apart from members of the Review Team and the Director of Audit Policy and Appointments, neither the Controller nor any other official nor any Commissioner is involved in determining the results of Quality Control Reviews.

Dr. Julian Lewis: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will list the auditors in London who were subjected to the Audit Commission's Quality Control Review process in (a) 1994, (b) 1995 and (c) 1996, together with the findings of (i) unsatisfactory, (ii) satisfactory and (iii) excellent in each case and on each occasion. [116439]

Ms Beverley Hughes: The Audit Commission did not operate a grading system of unsatisfactory, satisfactory and excellent for the years in question. The work of no audit supplier was considered unsatisfactory in the period concerned.

Dr. Julian Lewis: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions which officials and members of the Audit Commission have the authority to alter, or ask or require to be altered, a preliminary finding by the Audit Commission's Quality Control Review team. [116437]

Ms Beverley Hughes: Apart from the Review Team and the Director of Audit Policy and Appointments, no officials or Commissioners have any involvement in determining the results of a Quality Control Review.

Dr. Julian Lewis: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what is the basis on which the work of an individual auditor is selected for review by the Audit Commission's Quality Control Review team. [116434]

Ms Beverley Hughes: The basis of selection is to choose:

an audit from each District Auditor and Partner every year;

an audit from each Audit Manager at least every three years;

the same audited body no more often than every three years;

an approximate apportionment of Quality Control Review effort between NHS and local government audits each year.

Dr. Julian Lewis: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will list (a) the preliminary and (b) the final findings of (i) unsatisfactory, (ii) satisfactory and (iii) excellent awarded by the Audit Commission's Quality Control Review process on (1) the two occasions in 1994, (2) the two occasions in 1995 and (3) the occasion in April 1996 when reviews were undertaken of the Auditor's investigation into Westminster City Council's designated sales policy. [116440]

Ms Beverley Hughes: Only one of the reviews conducted in the years 1994, 1995 and 1996 was a comprehensive QCR report on the audit of the accounts of Westminster City Council and that related to the 1994–95 audit year. I understand that the auditor's overall performance was adjudged better than the level required by the Commission's Code of Audit Practice.

Dr. Julian Lewis: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions how many quality control reviews were carried out in (a) 1994, (b) 1995 and (c) 1996, where the preliminary finding awarded differed from the final finding awarded. [116436]

Ms Beverley Hughes: This information about the overall number of reviews is not available centrally.

Regional Assemblies

Mr. Quinn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will make a statement on progress with the creation of directly elected regional assemblies in England. [116371]

Ms Beverley Hughes: I refer my hon. Friend to the answer I gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Liverpool, Riverside (Mrs. Ellman) on 27 March 2000, Official Report, column 17W.

Public Bodies

Mr. Quinn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions (1) if he will list the notional time commitment for each chair of the regional non-departmental public bodies; [116361]

(2) how many (a) male and (b) female board members each regional non-departmental public body for which he is responsible has; [116374]

(3) if he will list the regional non-departmental public bodies for which he is responsible. [116375]

Ms Beverley Hughes: The table provides the information requested.

Non-departmental body: regional	Chairman's time input [2]	Board membership [1] Total	(a) Male	(b) Female
Regional Development Agencies
Eastern	2 dpw	13	10	3
North East	3 dpw	13	10	3
North West	3 dpw	13	9	4
South East	2 dpw	13	9	4
South West	2 dpw	13	10	3
East Midlands	3 dpw	14	10	4
West Midlands	3 dpw	13	10	3
Yorkshire and Humberside	3 dpw	13	10	3
Total (RDAs)		105	78	27

[1] Includes Chairmen and Deputy Chairmen
[2] Days per week

Mr. Quinn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions how many board members he appoints to each non-departmental public body. [116335]

Ms Beverley Hughes: A full list of the non-departmental public bodies to which the Secretary of State makes appointments is published in the publication Public Bodies 1999 (ISBN 0 11 430159 X), copies of which are available in the House Library.

Regional Government

Mr. Quinn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what assessment he has made of the accountability of regional quangos to the people of their regions. [116329]

Ms Beverley Hughes: As executive NDPBs, the eight Regional Development Agencies are accountable to Ministers and Parliament. They are required, by the Regional Development Agencies Act 1998, to take account of the views of voluntary regional chambers in preparing their strategies, and to give an account of their activities to the chambers. Chambers are representative of the people in the regions that they serve: 70 per cent. of their members are elected members of the region's local authorities, with the remaining 30 per cent. drawn from the region's social, economic and environmental sectors.

Mr. Quinn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions when he last met representatives of the regional chambers to discuss possible future development in regional Government. [116330]

Ms Beverley Hughes: My right hon. Friend the Minister for Local Government and the Regions and I met representatives of all but one of the regional chambers on 16 December to discuss a range of issues, including the future development of regional governance.

Mr. Quinn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions when he will set a date for a referendum on the creation of a directly elected regional assembly in Yorkshire and Humberside. [116370]

Ms Beverley Hughes: The Government are committed to move to directly elected regional government in England, where there is support demonstrated in a referendum. While no date has yet been set, Yorkshire and the Humber is strengthening its regional presence through the work of Yorkshire Forward, the Regional Chamber for Yorkshire and Humberside, and other regional stakeholders.

Millennium Dome

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what estimate he has made of the value of the site of the Dome (a) with and (b) without the Dome building. [116364]

Ms Armstrong: A pre-sale valuation of the site is being undertaken in the context of the competition to identify a use for the Dome when the Millennium Experience finishes. The Government estimate of the financial value of the site is commercially confidential until the end of the competition.

Drinking Water

Mr. Brake: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what was the cost of removing (a) pesticides and (b) nitrates from drinking water supplies in each of the last five years. [116656]

Mr. Mullin: The Director General of the Water Services collects this information from each of the licensed water and sewerage companies in England and Wales, via their July Return. The Director General informs me that capital expenditure to remove nitrates and pesticides from drinking water supplies (in 1998–99 prices) in each of the five years was:

Capital expenditure

£ million

	To remove nitrates from drinking water supplies	To remove pesticides from drinking water supplies
1994–95	20	138
1995–96	9	160
1996–97	5	121
1997–98	6	64
1998–99	6	11
Total	46	494

There are also running costs associated with nitrate and pesticide removal but neither the Director General or the Government hold this information.

New Dwellings

Mr. Brake: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what annual scale of migration of (a) people and (b) households into the South East from (i) London and (ii) the rest of England is assumed in his proposals for new dwellings to be provided in the next five years. [116654]

Ms Beverley Hughes: The latest sub-national population projections, from the Office for National Statistics, project annual net migration in 2001 into the South East Government Office region from London to be 28,200, and annual net migration from the region to the rest of England to be 5,400. By 2006 annual net migration into the region from London is projected to be 28,000 and annual net migration from the region to the rest of England to be 6,700.

The population projections take account of these migration assumptions. They are one of the inputs used to calculate the household projections. No explicit migration components are identified in the household projections.

Household Statistics

Mr. Brake: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will estimate the number of households for each five year period between 1996 and 2021 for each English county and metropolitan area assuming zero net internal migration. [116655]

Ms Beverley Hughes: This information is not currently available and could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

DVLA

Mr. Gibb: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions how many birth and marriage certificates have been lost by the DVLA since the introduction of the new driving licence with a photograph. [116507]

Mr. Hill: DVLA had reimbursed the replacement cost of 220 birth certificates and the 32 marriage certificates. Of these, the Royal Mail accepted responsibility for the loss of 141 birth certificates and 20 marriage certificates. During the period April 1999 to date DVLA has issued over 3 million photocard licences.

Rateable Values (Water)

Jane Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will list the avenues open to a member of the public to resolve a dispute with a water company about the notional rateable value of their home. [116491]

Mr. Mullin: Notional rateable values are used by water companies to set water charges for some premises. Rateable values ceased to be used for local taxation in 1990.

Customer complaints are investigated by the regional Customer Service Committees (CSC) of the Office of Water Services on behalf of the Director General. If the CSC does not resolve a complaint to the customer's satisfaction, the customer can ask for the complaint to be considered by the Director.

The exercise of the Director's statutory functions is subject to the scrutiny of the courts and the Parliamentary Commissioner for Administration.

Traffic Growth

Mr. Oaten: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will list the levels of traffic growth for (a) England, (b) Hampshire and (c) each local authority in Hampshire in (i) 1979, (ii) 1990 and (iii) for each year from 1992 to date. [116477]

Mr. Hill [holding answer 27 March 2000]: The table provides annual growth estimates for all motor vehicle traffic on English roads. Separate estimates for England are not available before 1988; the growth figures for 1979 to 1988 are therefore based on Great Britain as a whole.

Estimated annual traffic growth on English roads 1979 to 1998

Year	Annual percentage change in motorised road traffic
1979	–0.2
1980	6.2
1981	1.8
1982	2.7
1983	1.3
1984	5.2
1985	2.2
1986	5.1
1987	7.7
1988	7.2
1989	7.8
1990	1.4
1991	0.0
1992	–1.2
1993	0.6
1994	2.2
1995	1.4
1996	3.6
1997	2.5
1998	1.7

Note:
Data for 1979 to 1988 based on Great Britain averages.

The Department's annual road traffic statistics are currently based on 12-hour manual counts at about 8,500 sites each year, supplemented by data from automatic traffic counters. Although this sample is now sufficient to provide reliable estimates by road type at a regional level, it is not large enough to provide estimates at the county or local authority level, particularly for minor roads. The 1999 manual count data are currently being analysed with a view to publication of a 1999 traffic growth estimate in May.

Shot (Toxic Substances)

Mr. Corbett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what research his Department is carrying out or evaluating on the effect of the use of toxic substances in shot. [117523]

Mr. Meacher: The Department of the Environment, Transport and the Regions is not currently carrying out or evaluating any research specifically on the effects of the use of toxic substances in shot. However, from 1993 to 1996, the Department part-funded the development by University College, London of a ballistics testing facility, in order to assist the evaluation of non-toxic shot and provide the shooting community with guidelines for judging alternative shot types. In addition, the Department also funded Cranfield University to design a comprehensive computerised predictive model of the effectiveness of differing shot types against wildfowl; this work was completed in 1998.

Sustainable Construction

Mr. Geraint Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions when he will publish the Government's strategy for more sustainable construction. [117619]

Ms Beverley Hughes: "Building a better quality of life—a strategy for more sustainable construction" will be published on 4 April. The document will set out how we want the construction industry to contribute to sustainable development. The strategy will be a catalyst for change in the way buildings and infrastructure are designed, procured, constructed, maintained and used. It will lead to greater social, economic and environmental value in the built environment needed to modernise Britain.

Copies of the strategy will be placed in the Libraries of the House on 4 April.

Residential Units (Shops)

Mr. Don Foster: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what is his estimate of the potential number of residential units which could be formed in empty or under-used space above shops; and what his target is for the number of such units to be formed in the next five years. [116906]

Mr. Raynsford: We estimate that the potential number of residential units that could be formed in empty or under-used space above shops to be 300,000 in England. This estimate does not take account of any space which may not be suitable for conversion. Nor does it take account of the significant financial, managerial and attitudinal obstacles which will need to be overcome if a high proportion of these spaces are to be brought into use.

Given the constraints that may exist, we have not set a target for conversion of vacant space above shops. However, my Department recently published a report "Conversion and Redevelopment: Process and Potential" which looked at the potential for residential conversions in detail. Copies of the report have been placed in the Library.

Empty Homes

Mr. Don Foster: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what his target is for reducing the number of empty homes over the next five years. [116907]

Mr. Raynsford: We recognise that it is necessary for a proportion of the housing stock to be empty at any point in time to enable the process of buying, selling and letting to work efficiently. It is also inevitable that properties will be empty when under repair. We estimate the effective minimum level of empty properties is between 2 per cent. and 3 per cent. 3.7 per cent. of the housing stock was vacant on 1 April 1999.

We are pursuing policies designed to reduce the number of empty homes towards the minimum level.

Dial-a-ride

Mr. Pickthall: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what assessment he has made of the balance of advantage and disadvantage in establishing a fuel duty rebate for dial-a-ride services. [117149]

Mr. Hill: Possible changes to the scope of the existing fuel duty rebate scheme are currently being considered by the Commission for Integrated Transport, as part of its review of value for money from public financial support for the bus industry. At present a key eligibility criterion for rebate is that the bus service concerned should be available to the general public; we will give careful consideration to the case for extending eligibility in the light of the Commission's report expected later this year.

Housing Adaptations (Disabled Children)

Ms Rosie Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what plans he has to make housing adaptations more affordable for families with disabled children; and if he will make a statement. [117650]

Mr. Raynsford: Each year, nearly 25,000 people receive disabled facilities grants to help with the cost of adapting their homes. However, some parents of disabled children are finding it difficult to afford their contributions, because no account is taken of the additional cost of housing a disabled child.

To make adaptations more affordable, I am introducing into the grant assessment a new housing allowance of £65 for applications on behalf of a disabled child. For other applicants, the allowance for housing costs will increase by £10 to £50. The new allowances, which come into effect today, will save parents of disabled children up to £9,000 and other applicants up to £3,500, depending on the size of their contributions.

Methyl Tertiary Butyl Ether

Ms Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what information he has collated on the manufacture in the United Kingdom of methyl tertiary butyl ether; when he expects the Environment Agency to complete its research project on the incidence of methyl tertiary butyl ether; and if this report will be published. [116237]

Mrs. Liddell: I have been asked to reply.

It is estimated that about 90,000 tonnes of MTBE was manufactured in the UK in 1999, although not all of this was blended into petrol. The research undertaken by the Environment Agency will provide information on the incidences of MTBE in groundwater in England and Wales and should also provide further information on the amount of MTBE and other oxygenates used in petrol. The results of the research are due to be published in the summer.

Hedges (EU Biodiversity Regulations)

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what steps he plans to take to ensure that the EU Court of Auditors' decision permitting release of agricultural support to farmers on condition that they minimise the width of hedges between fields, does not undermine the EU directives on biodiversity in the countryside. [116266]

Ms Quin: I have been asked to reply.

I refer my hon. Friend to the reply given to the hon. Member for Southport (Mr. Fearn) on 29 March 2000, Official Report, column 172W.

Rents

Mr. Kidney: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will list for (a) 1996–97, (b) 1997–98 and (c) 1998–99 gross expenditure on (i) rent allowances and (ii) rent rebates for each local authority in England. [116700]

Angela Eagle: I have been asked to reply.

The information has been placed in the Library.

Green Belt

Mr. Fitzpatrick: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions when he will publish statistics on the extent of Green Belt land in each local authority. [117772]

Ms Beverley Hughes: I am today publishing estimates of the extent of Green Belt land in each local authority in England in the Information Bulletin 'Local Planning Authority Green Belt Statistics: England 1997'. A copy will be placed in the Library of the House.

The bulletin shows that there was very little change in the extent of Green Belt land between 1993 and 1997—an estimated net increase of just 1,850 hectares. This net increase is significantly less than that indicated by a comparison between 1993 figures published in PPG2, which have now been shown to be inaccurate, and the figures for 1997 calculated using digital (computerised) boundaries. Separately, we estimate that some 30,000 hectares have been added or proposed for addition to the Green Belt since May 1997.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Waste Incineration Directive

Mr. Gill: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list the exemptions agreed in respect of farmers and growers in other EU countries to the Waste Incineration Directive. [116253]

Mr. Hill: I have been asked to reply.

The European Council agreed a Common Position on the proposed Waste Incineration Directive in June 1999. The Common Position text excludes from the scope of the Directive experimental plants used for research, development and testing in order to improve the incineration process and which treat less than 50 tonnes of waste per year, and plants treating only the following wastes:

(i) vegetable waste from agriculture and forestry,

(ii) vegetable waste from the food processing industry,

(iii) wood waste with the exception of:

wood waste that may contain halogenated organic compounds or heavy metals as a result of treatment;

treated wood originating from building and demolition waste,

(iv) cork waste,

(v) waste excluded from the scope of the Waste Framework Directive (75/442/EEC) as amended, pursuant to Article 2(1) of that Directive. (Article 2(1) excludes from the scope of the Waste Framework Directive the following:

(a) gaseous effluents emitted into the atmosphere;

(b) where they are already covered by other legislation:

(i) radioactive waste;

(ii) waste resulting from prospecting, extraction, treatment and storage of mineral resources and the working of quarries;

(iii) animal carcases and the following agricultural waste: faecal matter and other natural, non-dangerous substances used in farming;

(iv) waste waters with the exception of waste in liquid form;

(v) decommissioned explosives; and

(vi) waste resulting from the exploration for, and the exploitation of, oil and gas resources from off-shore installations and incinerated on board the installation.

The Council decided it was appropriate to consider vegetable waste from the food processing industry and cork waste as biomass, and therefore to add them to the exclusions from the scope of the proposal alongside those originally proposed by the European Commission to avoid discouraging use of biomass for energy purposes.

The European Parliament is seeking to amend the list of exclusions, including by the addition of an exclusion for fibrous vegetable waste from sorting, screening and washing of virgin pulp and paper production, if it is co-incinerated at the place of production and the heat generated is recovered.

There are no country specific exclusions from the scope of the proposal, nor does any individual member state have the right to opt out of parts of the proposal.

Workplace Parking

Mr. Gray: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many workplace car parking spaces are available at the buildings used and controlled by his Department. [116767]

Mr. Morley [holding answer 30 March 2000]: The Ministry and its Agencies are made up of more than 200 separate sites and this information is not readily available for all of those sites. We are preparing travel plans for all our key buildings (offices with over 50 staff) in line with the commitment set out in the Transport White Paper and we are reviewing our car parking requirements in that context. The number of workplace car parking spaces available at the buildings where we are developing travel plans are shown in the table.

Building	Total car parking spaces
Nobel House, London, SW1P 3JR	12
Ergon House, London, SW1P 3JR	1
55 Whitehall, London, SW1A 2EY	0
3/8 and 10 Whitehall Place, London, SW1A 2HH	0
Eastbury House, London, SE1 7TL	15
Page Street, London, SW1 4PQ	[1]5
Foss House, 1–2 Peasholme Green, Kings Pool, York, YO1 2PX	270
Government Buildings, Epsom Road, Guildford, GU1 2LD	335
Lion House, Willowburn Trading Estate, Alnwick, NE66 2PF	56
Wessex RSC, Block 3, Government Buildings, Burghill Road, Bristol, BS10 6NJ	150
Northern RSC, Eden Bridge House, Lowther Street, Carlisle, CA3 8DX	34
North Mercia RSC, Electra Way, Crewe, CW1 6GJ	150
North East RSC, Government Buildings, Crosby Road, Northallerton, DL6 1AD	168
South Mercia RSC Block C, Government Buildings, Whittingdon Road, Worcester, WR5 2LQ	[2]176
East Midlands RSC Block 7, Government Buildings, Chalfont Drive, Nottingham, NG8 3SN	[2]170
Anglia RSC Block B, Government Buildings, Brooklands Avenue, Cambridge, CB2 2DR	450
South East RSC Block A, Government Buildings, Coley Park, Reading, RG1 6DT	136
South West RSC Clyst House, Exeter, EX5 1DY	242
Quantock House, Paul Street, Taunton, TA1 3NX	52
Central Science Laboratories, Sand Hutton, York, YO4 1LZ	496
Centre for Environment, Fisheries and Aquaculture Science (CEFAS), Pakefield Road, Lowestoft, NR33 OHT	117
CEFAS, Burnham Remembrance Avenue, Burnham-on-Crouch, CM08HA	15
CEFAS, The Nothe, Barrack Road, Weymouth, DT0 8UB	28
Veterinary Laboratory Agency and Veterinary Medicines Directorate, New Haw, Addlestone, KT15 3NB	440

[1] A travel plan has not yet been prepared for this site as the Ministry only fully occupied the building in February this year.
[2] The Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food is not the major occupier at these sites. Car parking spaces at the sites are allocated on a first come first served basis. The figures represent a percentage of the total car parking spaces available based on the number MAFF staff as a percentage of all staff on the site.

Plant Viruses

Miss McIntosh: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what assessment he has made of recent research from the Research School of Biological Sciences at the Australian National University concerning plant viruses recombining with vertebrate-infecting viruses; what evaluation he made of the risks of parts of the HIV virus being used as carriers in the context of his risk assessment of GM crops; and if he will make a statement. [115200]

Ms Quin: We will be studying the research referred to carefully. No parts of the HIV virus have been used in the construction of GM plants assessed for safety in the UK. If any such GM plants were to come forward for assessment they would be subject to stringent scrutiny.

Field Boundaries

Mr. Paice: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will defer for 12 months the alteration to Integrated Administrative and Control System rules regarding the width of field boundaries; and if he will make a statement on his discussions with the European Commission regarding these rules. [116688]

Ms Quin [holding answer 29 March 2000]: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given to the hon. Member for Southport (Mr. Fearn) on 29 March 2000, Official Report, column 172W.

TREASURY

Personal Tax Allowance

Mr. Ottaway: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what estimate he has made of the full-year cost to the Exchequer from April 2000 of transferring an unused personal tax allowance to an earning spouse. [116067]

Dawn Primarolo: The estimated cost for 2000–01 of allowing a married person to transfer an unused personal allowance to their earning spouse is £2,000 million. The estimated cost of allowing a married person to transfer a personal allowance in the way most beneficial to the couple, regardless of whether it would be otherwise unused, or either or both spouses are earning, is £4,250 million.

Child Care Tax Credit

Ms Kelly: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what would be the additional cost to the Exchequer of replacing the child care tax credit with a non-means-tested parenting allowance of £70 a week for one child, £105 a week for two or more children, available to all families with a child under the age of three years, regardless of the parents' employment status or the form of child care used and assuming that the child care tax credit still applied to families with children where the youngest child was over the age of three years and the parenting allowance did not apply to Statutory Maternity Pay recipients. [116642]

Dawn Primarolo [holding answer 28 March 2000]: If a weekly, non-means-tested allowances of £70 were to be given to all families with a single child under the age of three years and of £105 to families with two or more children, at least one of whom is under the age of three years, then the current full-year cost, based on data from the Family Resources Survey, would be about £8.5 billion.

Sterling

Mr. Welsh: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what estimate he has made of the impact of his budget proposals on the value of sterling. [116522]

Mr. Andrew Smith [holding answer 28 March 2000]: Sterling's exchange rate is affected by many factors and events, both here and abroad. It is not possible to isolate the impact of the Budget on the value of sterling with any degree of precision.

Mr. Welsh: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what estimate he has made of the value of sterling for (a) 2000, (b) 2001 and (c) 2002 using Treasury models. [116523]

Mr. Andrew Smith [holding answer 28 March 2000]: The Treasury does not forecast movements in the exchange rate.

Working Families Tax Credit

Mr. Kidney: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what arrangements are in place to help with the transition from weekly to monthly payments for those recipients of Working Families Tax Credit who will receive the credit through a monthly pay packet from April. [116701]

Dawn Primarolo: Tax credits will start being paid through the pay packet from 18 April and this will help to demonstrate the rewards of work and to make work pay for families on low incomes. Tax credits will be paid at the same intervals as pay—weekly for employees paid weekly, fortnightly for those paid fortnightly and monthly for those paid monthly.

In the first few weeks of a 26-week tax credit award, the Inland Revenue will pay the tax credit direct to the employee—either direct to a bank account or by Girocheque. These initial payments will be made fortnightly (one week in arrears and one week in advance). The guidance notes for tax credit applicants make it clear that tax credit payments by employers will be made at the same frequency as wages or salary.

Travel-to-Work Areas

Mr. Sanders: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will list the travel to work areas in order of the fall in unemployment during the past (a) 12 months, (b) 24 months and (c) 36 months for which figures are available. [116720]

Miss Melanie Johnson: The information requested falls within the responsibility of the Director of the Office for National Statistics. I have asked him to reply.

Letter from Tim Holt to Mr. Adrian Sanders, dated 3 April 2000:

As Director of the Office for National Statistics (ONS), I have been asked to reply to your recent question on the fall in unemployment in travel-to-work areas (TTWA's).

The ONS publish a monthly count of claimants of unemployment-related benefits. The claimant count consists of all people claiming Jobseeker's Allowance or National Insurance credits at Employment Service local offices. They must declare that they are out of work, capable of, available for and actively seeking work during the week in which the claim is made.

Information on the falls in the levels of the claimant count by TTWA during the past 12 months, 24 months and 36 months can be obtained from the Nomis database at the House of Commons Library.

Parliamentary Questions

Mr. Brady: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will list the subjects of the parliamentary questions which have been transferred to his Department from other Departments in each session since 1 May 1997. [117222]

Mr. Timms: The Treasury, in common with other Departments, does not keep records relating to transferred questions.

Family Benefits

Mr. Brazier: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement on the take-up of the child care credit in the Working Families Tax Credit. [115876]

Dawn Primarolo: The childcare tax credit component of the Working Families Tax Credit has been particularly successful, with over 90,000 recipients at the end of February. At its peak, in August 1999, 47,000 families claimed the child care disregard in Family Credit.

Cruickshank Report

Mr. Field: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what action he proposes to take to stimulate development of credit unions following the Cruickshank report. [117106]

Miss Melanie Johnson: The Government announced moves to encourage credit unions to develop on 16 November 1999, including the creation of a new central services organisation and regulatory changes designed to help them to deliver a more consistent and flexible service to members.

Departmental Properties

Mr. Don Foster: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what (a) number and (b) percentage of properties in his charge are empty; and what steps are being taken by his Department to reduce the number of such properties. [116921]

Mr. Timms: None of the properties owned or leased by the Treasury are empty.

Civil Procurement

Barbara Follett: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what progress he has made in implementing the recommendations of the Review of Civil Procurement in Central Government; and if he will make a statement. [117778]

Mr. Andrew Smith: From 1 April 2000, the Office of Government Commerce (OGC) will be operational. Peter Gershon has been appointed Chief Executive and Brian Rigby deputy Chief Executive. The Chief Executive will be responsible to Treasury Ministers on both policy and executive matters. The OGC will include the Private Finance Policy Team, and staff dealing with Procurement Policy and Procurement Practice and Development.

On 1 April 2000 the OGC will inherit from the Cabinet Office responsibility for the Buying Agency (TBA), Property Advisers to the Civil Estate (PACE) and the Central Computer and Telecommunications Agency (CCTA). Their Chief Executives will report to Peter Gershon. These new arrangements will help improve the efficiency and effectiveness of the Government's £13 billion annual civil procurement budget by creating a single, unified operation at the centre to focus on high value added activities.

A Supervisory Board chaired by the Chief Secretary to the Treasury and constituting officials and external representatives will help ensure a coherent cross departmental approach to procurement and provide on-going top-level support and strategic direction to the OGC.

Banking Services

Mr. Wray: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what percentage of people in receipt of Income Related Benefit do not have use of banking services (a) in the UK and (b) in Scotland. [116369]

Mr. Rooker: I have been asked to reply.

Over 80 per cent. of all benefit recipients have bank accounts. Estimates from the 1997–98 Family Resources Survey are that 28 per cent. of individuals in Great Britain who are in receipt of Income Related Benefits do not have access to banking services and 38 per cent. of individuals in Scotland in receipt of Income Related Benefits do not have access to banking services.

Notes:

1. The source of the data used to answer the question is the Family Resources Survey (Great Britain only). The latest year for which data are available is 1997–98.

2. The estimates are based on sample counts, which have been adjusted for non-response using multipurpose grossing factors that control for region, Council Tax band and a number of demographic variables. Estimates are subject to sampling error and to variability in non-response.

3. The figures given have been rounded to the nearest whole per cent.

4. For the purposes of answering this question, income related benefits (IRBs) are taken to be Income Support, Jobseeker's Allowance (Income Based), Family Credit, Housing Benefit, Council Tax Benefit, Disability Working Allowance and Social Fund Grants.

5. Where two people are living together as husband and wife and they are in receipt of one or more IRBs between them, it should be noted that one of the couple claims the benefit(s) on behalf of both individuals. However, both individuals are regarded here as being in receipt of the benefit(s). Therefore, for such couples, the access of both recipients to banking facilities has been considered, as opposed to solely those of the claimant.

6. For the purposes of this analysis, an individual's access to Banking facilities has been defined as whether or not they have in their name (on a sole or joint basis) any one of a Current Account, a Post Office Ordinary/Investment account or any other type of savings/bank account held with either a bank or a Building Society.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Housing Benefit

4. Sir Teddy Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what progress he has made in dealing with fraudulent claims for housing benefit. [115866]

Mr. Darling: I wrote to all council chief executives on 6 March warning them to act immediately to remedy weaknesses identified by the Benefit Fraud Inspectorate.

I am today announcing a further 30 inspections of a range of councils including a number which are not operating all of the Departments anti-fraud initiatives.

If the BFI report to me a local authority's persistent failings I will direct them to achieve the standards I set within a rigorous timescale.

Mr. Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security by what percentage the budget for housing benefit has increased in real terms (a) in each year since the introduction of housing benefit and (b) in total since the introduction of housing benefit. [117279]

Angela Eagle: The information is in the table.

Real annual change in expenditure on housing benefit, 1988–89 to 1999–2000, Great Britain

Financial year	Percentage increase on previous financial years in real terms
1989–90	6.3
1990–91	11.0
1991–92	18.8
1992–93	17.4
1993–94	13.9
1994–95	8.1
1995–96	4.6
1996–97	1.4
1997–98	–4.4
1998–99	–4.1
1999–2000 (estimated)	–0.9
Whole period	95.4

Notes:

1. Figures represent changes in the total amount of Rent Rebates and Rent Allowances paid to recipients, regardless of the source of funding.

2. Figures for 1999–2000 are based on estimates that underlie the March 2000 Financial Statement and Budget Report.

3. Expenditure figures have been converted to constant prices (real terms) using the Gross Domestic Product deflator underlying the March 2000 Financial Statement and Budget Report.

State Second Pension

6. Mrs. Organ: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many people he estimates will benefit from the proposed state second pension. [115868]

Mr. Rooker: I refer my hon. Friend to the answer I gave my hon. Friend the Member of Halesowen and Rowley Regis (Mrs. Heal) earlier today at column 616.

Pensioners (Minimum Income Guarantee)

21. Ms Rosie Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what action he is taking to improve the take-up of the minimum income guarantee among pensioners. [115885]

Mr. Rooker: Our unprecedented take-up campaign will commence in the spring.

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many pensioners have incomes which are below the level of the minimum income guarantee. [115864]

Mr. Rooker: We currently estimate that just over half a million people are missing out on their Minimum Income Guarantee. We have announced details of a take-up campaign which will identify pensioners who may be entitled, and encourage them to claim. Details are in the Vote Office.

McDonald Report

22. Mr. Flight: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will make a statement on the Government's response to the McDonald report on pension provisions. [115886]

Mr. Rooker: We welcome the publication of the Retirement Income Working Party's Report as a contribution to an important debate. We are assessing the implications of the Report's proposals for pension scheme members, for the Exchequer and for private pension provision generally. Our willingness to be flexible for the benefit of pensioners is demonstrated by our recent decision to allow more pensioners to buy an investment-linked annuity as an alternative to a limited price indexed annuity.

Child Poverty

23. Mr. Hope: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what progress the Government are making in tackling child poverty. [115887]

Mr. Bayley: We have pledged to eradicate child poverty over the next 20 years and to halve it within 10 years. We are making good progress. Our £7 billion tax and benefit package will lift 1.2 million children out of poverty. And by helping parents back into work we are tackling the biggest cause of child poverty.

35. Mr. Gordon Marsden: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what assessment he has made of the impact to date of Government measures to reduce child poverty in the north-west of England. [115900]

Mr. Bayley: We are committed to halving child poverty over the next 10 years and to eradicating it within 20 years. And this strategy covers all regions of the UK.

Child poverty is a problem which has built up over generations and it will take time to eradicate. But we are already making substantial progress. Our £7 billion tax and benefit package will lift 1.2 million children out of poverty. As a result, the poorest two-child families will be £1,500 a year better off in 2001 than they were in 1997.

Poverty is multi-dimensional. It is characterised not just by low income, but also by factors such as poor educational attainment, poor housing and deprived communities. It is about the lack of opportunity and aspiration. That is why we are investing heavily in measures to provide children with a better start in life and to increase the opportunities to allow them to break out of the cycle of deprivation.

We are prepared to be judged on our results. We set out our indicators for tackling poverty in "Opportunity for all" (Cmd. 4445) and we will report progress against these in the autumn.

Disabled Workers

24. Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what steps he is taking to help disabled people stay in work. [115888]

Mr. Bayley: We have a range of measures to help disabled people stay in work. These include the Disabled Person's Tax Credit to help make work pay; improvements in the support provided by the Independent Living Funds to allow severely disabled people to keep a higher proportion of their work income; and the New Deal for Disabled People pilots to help people to move into or stay in employment.

The Budget announced new plans to develop pilots to test the effectiveness of helping people when they become ill in work.

Marginal Tax and Benefit Withdrawal Rates

25. Mr. Goggins: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what action he is taking to reduce the number of people who face high marginal tax and benefit withdrawal rates. [115889]

Mr. Rooker: As a result of the tax and benefit changes announced in the last three Budgets around half a million fewer working households will face the very high marginal rates of 70 per cent. or more.

Winter Heating Allowance

26. Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many households containing elderly persons in (a) Inverclyde and (b) Scotland received the winter heating allowance in the last year. [115890]

Angela Eagle: Last winter in Scotland [99/00] around 900,000 Winter Fuel Payments were made at a cost of around £70 million. We estimate that approaching 12,000 payments were made to around 9,000 households at a cost of more than £900,000 in the Greenock and Inverclyde constituency area.

Next winter [00/01] payments will be increased from £100 to £150 per eligible household.

Pensions

27. Mr. Blizzard: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what plans he has to ensure that pensions are increased at least in line with the rise in the cost of living. [115891]

Mr. Rooker: We have said that the basic pension will remain as the foundation of income in retirement, that it will not be means-tested and that we will increase it at least in line with prices. We have increased Retirement Pension in line with the Retail Prices Index for third year running at a cost of £375 million.

29. Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how the Government propose to ensure that pensioners share in rising national prosperity. [115893]

32. Fiona Mactaggart: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what steps he has taken to increase the disposable income of pensioners since 1997; and if he will make a statement. [115897]

Mr. Rooker: The measures flowing from the Green Paper "Partnership in Pensions", together with those announced in the last two Budgets, demonstrate the priority we have given to improving pensioners' incomes.

We have introduced a Minimum Income Guarantee for today's pensioners which is being increased in line with earnings each year during this Parliament. From April 2001, it will be increased to £82 a week for a single pensioner and £90 for a pensioner over 80. The lower capital limit for the Minimum Income Guarantee will be doubled from £3,000 to £6,000 while the upper limit will be raised from £8,000 to £12,000, benefiting around 500,000 pensioners who have modest savings.

In addition, we have recognised that pensioners have special needs. That is why the £100 Winter Fuel Payment has been introduced and will be increased next winter from £100 to £150 per eligible household.

Other measures which impact favourably on pensioners' incomes include the reduction of VAT on fuel from 8 per cent. to 5 per cent., the introduction of free TV licences for people over 75 next Autumn, the restoration of free eye tests, and the minimum tax guarantee which will help take 200,000 pensioners out of tax completely.

Fraud

28. Mr. Bercow: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will make a statement on the progress made by his Department in combating fraud in the social security system. [115892]

Mr. Rooker: We set out our strategy for combating fraud and reducing error in "Safeguarding Social Security", published on 23 March 1999. We are putting this strategy into practice with strong and sensible safeguards to ensure the right money goes to the right people.

33. Mr. Brooke: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will make a statement on the Government's interaction with local authorities in the detection and prevention of benefit fraud. [115898]

Angela Eagle: Local authorities are responsible for the administration of Housing Benefit and we are working in partnership with them in developing and implementing anti-fraud initiatives such as the Verification Framework and the use of direct computer links between local authorities and the Department's benefit systems. We have recently reformed the anti-fraud financial incentive scheme for local authorities to ensure they can be rewarded for detecting and prosecuting cases of fraud and for the longer term we are working with local authority representatives to develop revised incentives for rewarding local authorities for their efforts to prevent, detect and deter fraud.

We have also made available extra funding for local joint anti-fraud activities between local authorities and the Benefits Agency in addition to funding for national initiatives.

Mr. Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security, pursuant to his oral statement of 27 March 2000, Official Report, column 42, concerning 400 new fraud investigators (1) what the net increase in fraud investigation staff will be for each of the organisations relevant to his announcement when the recruitment is completed; [117277]

(2) how many of the new investigators will be recruited to each relevant organisation. [117278]

Mr. Rooker: This Department and the Revenue Departments are in discussion about the best deployment of additional staff to meet the business need identified by the noble Lord Grabiner. No decision has yet been made as to how many new investigators will be recruited to each relevant organisation.

Lone Parents

30. Mr. Brady: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will make a statement on the new deal for lone parents. [115894]

Angela Eagle: Independent evaluation has shown that the New Deal for Lone Parents (NDLP) is helping lone parents move into work. Since the launch of the national programme, over 103,000 lone parents have volunteered to participate in the programme and over one in three of these have obtained jobs.

As announced in the budget, from April 2001 we will be asking lone parents with a youngest child of five or over to come forward for a work-focused interview with a personal adviser. We want to ensure that all lone parents have the opportunity to find out about the choices, and the support, available to help them move into work.

Mr. Healey: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will make a statement on progress with the new deal for lone parents (a) in the UK and (b) in Yorkshire. [115882]

Angela Eagle: Independent evaluation shows that the New Deal for Lone Parents is working. Since the launch of the national programme, in October 1998, over 116,000 lone parents have attended an interview with 89 per cent. agreeing to participate and over one in three of these obtaining jobs. In Yorkshire and Humberside 9,137 have agreed to participate and 3,440 have obtained jobs.

Child Support Agency

31. Helen Jackson: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what measures he is taking to ensure that the self-employed comply with Child Support Agency instructions. [115895]

Angela Eagle: We expect all parents to meet their responsibilities to their children by providing information to the Child Support Agency. If a self-employed person refuses to provide details of their income, the CSA has a range of measures available to obtain the information, including powers to examine accounts and, as a last resort, to ask the Inland Revenue for information about earnings provided for tax purposes.

34. Mr. Blunt: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will make a statement on his proposals for reform of the Child Support Agency. [115899]

Angela Eagle: Our reforms will introduce a customer focused child support system that parents will be able to understand. It will ensure regular and reliable maintenance for over one million more children.

Barbara Follett: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what plans he has to introduce a statutory obligation on the Child Support Agency to pay compensation to its clients for delays and mistakes they have experienced. [115873]

Angela Eagle: In common with other Government Departments, the DSS and its Agencies have a discretionary compensation scheme to cover financial loss, suffering or distress caused by poor administration. The CSA also has the power to write off child support arrears and compensate the parent with care where substantial delays have occurred. Provisions in the Child Support, Pensions and Social Security Bill, currently before the House will put these arrangements on to a statutory basis.

Stakeholder Pensions

36. Dr. George Turner: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many people he estimates will take out stakeholder pensions. [115901]

Mr. Rooker: There are around 5 million people in the target group for stakeholder pensions, but some of those initially in that group will have personal pensions and may be unlikely to take up stakeholder pensions when they are introduced. Take up will depend on how stakeholder and other pensions are marketed by providers, and on individual choices by savers.

Disability Living Allowance

37. Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what the percentage of successful appeals in tribunals was against a refusal of disability living allowance in (a) 1997, (b) 1998 and (c) 1999; and if he will make a statement. [115902]

Mr. Bayley: The information is not available in the format requested. Such information as is available is in the table.

Disability living allowance appeal decisions

Percentage

	1997	1998	1999
All decisions which were successful[1]	54	48	48
Successful decisions which were against refusal (as opposed to awarded level) of benefit[2]	67	66	67

[1] Based on 100 per cent. data. Includes cases where increased level of benefit awarded.

[2] Based on 5 per cent. data.

Source:

Analytical Services Division

Benefits Agency Inspectors

Mr. John Cryer: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many inspections of building sites have been made in the past 12 months by Benefits Agency inspectors to check on the employment status of construction workers. [115053]

Angela Eagle: This information is not kept centrally and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Benefits Agency Delays

Mr. Edward Davey: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many (a) national insurance number applications and (b) benefit applications are awaiting processing due to delays in clarification being received by the Benefits Agency from the Immigration and Nationality Directorate; and if he will make a statement. [116078]

Angela Eagle: The administration of benefits is a matter for Peter Mathison, the Chief Executive of the Benefits Agency. He will write to the hon. Member.

Letter from Peter Mathison to Mr. Edward Davey, dated 30 March 2000:

The Secretary of State has asked me to respond to your recent Parliamentary Question asking how many (a) national insurance number (NINO) applications and (b) benefit applications are awaiting processing due to delays in clarification being received by the Benefits Agency (BA) from the Immigration and Nationality Directorate (IND).

BA allocate, when necessary, a NINO to a benefit applicant. The process rarely requires any contact with or information from the IND.

Information on the number of benefit applications awaiting clarification from IND is not held. Collation of these statistics would involve a sift of files held at over 400 offices and would entail disproportionate cost.

Retirement Pensions

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will amend the regulations relating to the date from which retirement pensions are payable to persons reaching retirement age, to ensure that such people receive their full entitlement, including any part-weeks, from the date of the relevant birthday; and if he will estimate the cost in the next financial year of such changes to the Exchequer. [116830]

Mr. Rooker: We do not intend to amend the present regulations which provide for payment of retirement pension in whole weeks in advance.

There would be no costs to the Exchequer for part weeks because it would follow that recovery of overpaid benefit would take place upon the death of the pensioner. It is because we are not prepared to countenance this recovery that we plan no change.

Bereavement Benefit

Mrs. Curtis-Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what estimate he has made of the number of men who will be eligible for bereavement benefit when the relevant provisions of the Welfare Reform and Pensions Act 1999 are implemented. [116882]

Angela Eagle: The information is in the table.

Number of men who will be eligible for each of the bereavement benefits in the first year of implementation

	Number
Bereavement Payment	15,000
Widowed Parent's Allowance	25,000
Bereavement Allowance	10,000

Notes:
1. Figures provided by the Government Actuary's Department.
2. Rounded to nearest 5,000 for each benefit.

Social Fund

Mrs. Humble: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what gross budget will be set for the Social Fund in 2000–01. [117673]

Angela Eagle: The gross discretionary Social Fund budget for 2000–01 will be £596 million. This represents an increase of £60.8 million over the total gross budget for 1999–2000 made possible by improved loan recovery performance.

As part of this allocation we have increased the Community Care Grant budget by £2 million to £100 million. All Benefits Agency Districts will receive an increase. This will provide more help to grant applicants, in particular families with children and the disabled.

The loans budget will be £494 million; an increase of £57.3 million. To improve the fairness of the scheme this increase will be allocated to Benefits Agency Districts in a way that will, over time, achieve greater consistency of outcome for applicants wherever they live.

£2 million will be retained centrally as a contingency reserve to provide additional help to any Benefits Agency Districts that face unexpected and unplanned expenditure as a result of a local emergency or disaster.

Details of individual District budget allocations will be placed in the Library today.

Benefits Agency/Employment Service Merger

Miss McIntosh: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what representations he has received on the proposed merger of the Benefits Agency and the Employment Service; and if he will make a statement. [115878]

Angela Eagle: My right hon. Friend the Prime Minister announced on 16 March our intention to create a new, modern organisation for people of working age helping more people on welfare towards independence and into work. Ministers have had discussions with representatives from a range of interested groups in the short period since the announcement. The response to date has been a widespread welcome of this move and a positive reaction to creating a single agency focused on work for those who can and ensuring proper support when they cannot.

SERPS

Mr. Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what estimate his Department has made of the cost to public funds arising from compensation to those who were misinformed about SERPS entitlement, other than the cost of postponing the change to surviving spouses entitlement to SERPS. [117104]

Mr. Rooker: It is not possible to estimate with confidence how many people will apply successfully to the Inherited SERPS scheme and therefore no estimate has been made of the cost to the National Insurance fund. I refer my right hon. Friend to the estimates made by the National Audit Office in the recently published report.

Family Benefits

Mr. Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many families have been in receipt of (a) Family Credit but not the Working Families Tax Credit, (b) Working Families Tax Credit but not Family Credit and (c) Family Credit and Working Families Tax Credit for each month since February 1999. [117105]

Angela Eagle: Family Credit was replaced with Working Families Tax Credit from 5 October 1999.

The information is in the table.

Numbers of families in receipt of Family Credit and WFTC, for each month from February 1999 to February 2000

Thousand

Month	Family Credit	WFTC	Total
February 1999	789	—	789
March 1999	792	—	792
April 1999	793	—	793
May 1999	791	—	791
June 1999	801	—	801
July 1999	797	—	797
August 1999	784	—	784
September 1999	758	—	758
October 1999	625	253	878
November 1999	464	466	930
December 1999	365	566	931
January 2000	249	701	950
February 2000	109	849	958

Notes:
1. These figures, and in particular the WFTC figure for February, exclude awards made after February and backdated.
2. Figures are for Great Britain only.
3. Sample size 5 per cent., therefore subject to sampling error.
4. Figures have been rounded to the nearest thousand.

Source:
Family Credit/Working Families' Tax Credit 5 per cent. sample of awards.

Departmental Properties

Mr. Don Foster: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what (a) number and (b) percentage of properties in his charge are empty; and what steps are being taken by his Department to reduce the numbers of such properties. [116922]

Mr. Rooker: In early 1998, all of the Department's properties were transferred to the private sector under two separate Private Finance Initiative contracts. We no longer hold or own any property. Instead, serviced accommodation is purchased from our two private sector partners, Trillium plc and the Newcastle Estate Partnership.

The deal that we negotiated with Trillium, the PRIME contractor, allowed us to hand back all of our "surplus" space, in both wholly and partly occupied buildings. On 1 April 1998, 134,991 sq m of vacant space transferred to Trillium so that there is now no continuing cost to the Department. The Department also has the flexibility to vacate and hand back further space over the period of the contract, at nil cost.

As a result of the PRIME contract there are now no vacant properties still being paid for by the Department.

Mortgage Interest

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will lay the necessary regulations to amend the standard rate for income support mortgage interest payments. [117038]

Mr. Bayley: Regulations were laid before Parliament on 24 March 2000.

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how much it would have cost his Department if he had amended the standard rate for paying mortgage interest in January when the January rate of 6.29 per cent. was more than the 0.25 per cent. point change required to trigger a change. [117028]

Mr. Bayley: The Office for National Statistics informed the Department on 8 March 2000 that a change in the standard interest rate had been triggered. Regulations were laid on 24 March 2000 and will come into force on 16 April 2000. There was no delay.

HEALTH

London NHS Trust Budgets

Mr. Coleman: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will publish the projected budget forecasts for each of the London NHS trusts for the end of the current financial year; and if he will make a statement. [110538]

Mr. Denham: The latest available information, based on income and expenditure forecasts by National Health Service trusts and health authorities at Quarter 3 (December 1999) has been placed in the Library.

The total deficit position includes the impact of technical accounting changes. The forecast deficit excluding this technical element is £36 million, which represents a very small deterioration from original plans for the year.

Intensive Care Beds

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many of the new 100 intensive care beds announced earlier in the year are now in place; if he will give the location and the number of beds that have been provided in each health authority area; and if he will make a statement. [113867]

Mr. Denham: Fast-track information on the number of critical care beds on 17 January 2000 compared with the position in a census on 31 March 1999 was placed in the Library on 1 February 2000.

Dr. Julian Lewis: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, pursuant to his answer of 27 January 2000, Official Report, column 346W, on intensive care beds, when the hon. Member for New Forest, East will receive the information promised. [117151]

Mr. Denham: The information was placed in the Library on 1 February.

Pay Award

Mr. Austin: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what the percentage increase in the total pay bill for the NHS will be as a result of the Pay Review Body award to (a) nurses, (b) midwives and (c) health visitors for the year commencing April 2000. [114748]

Mr. Denham: Implementing the recent Review Body recommendations on pay for midwives, health visitors and other nursing and midwifery staff will increase the total National Health Service paybill by an estimated 0.1 per cent., 0.1 per cent. and 1.3 per cent. for each respective group, giving an overall increase of 1.4 per cent.

Correspondingly, the awards will increase the paybill for midwifery staff by 3.4 per cent., the paybill for health visitors by 3.4 per cent. and the nursing paybill by 4.1 per cent.

Note:

Figures may not add due to rounding

Tobacco

Mr. Cummings: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what mandate he has given to the European Commission to negotiate on behalf of Her Majesty's Government in meetings on the World Health Organisation's Convention for Tobacco Control; [114944]

(2) what estimates he has made of the impact on (a) employment and (b) exports of the World Health Organisation's Framework Convention for Tobacco Control, indicating the constituencies affected in each case; [114940]

(3) what recent discussions (a) he, (b) Ministers in his Department and (c) officials have had with (i) EU partners, (ii) other nations, (iii) the World Health Organisation and (iv) the European Commission regarding the World Health Organisation's Framework Convention for Tobacco Control; [114943]

(4) if he will make a statement on the position of Her Majesty's Government in relation to the World Health Organisation's Framework Convention for Tobacco Control. [114941]

Yvette Cooper: The White Paper "Smoking Kills" makes clear our strong support for the World Health Organisation's (WHO) Framework Convention on Tobacco Control. The first and current phase in the development of the convention is to consult the 191 World Health Member States for their views on the Convention and its protocols. The second phase will cover negotiations on the content of the Convention.

The United Kingdom has been, and will continue to be, an active participant in the European Union and WHO working groups, which are the main bodies for taking forward work on the Convention, and in bilateral discussions with the Commission, WHO and other member states. The Commission's mandate for participation on issues where it has a legal competence, was developed by the EU's Health Working Group and reported to the EU Health Ministers at the Health Council in November 1999. The Commission's mandate will be kept under review as the work develops.

It is too early to say what the likely impact of the Convention on employment and exports will be, as this depends on the content of the Convention, which is yet to be negotiated. However, the World Bank's recent study on tobacco control "Curbing the Epidemic" concludes that adopting effective tobacco control policies would result in no net job losses in most countries, and even a net gain in some.

NHS Pensions Agency

Mr. Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what plans he has to consult on allowing the NHS Pensions Agency to pay benefits from the NHS pension scheme to a contributor's unmarried partner. [115116]

Mr. Denham: Providing survivor benefits for unmarried partners is one of a number of possible changes to the National Health Service Pension Scheme currently under consideration. There are no firm proposals for change at this time.

We have made our position clear at paragraph 60, Chapter 8 of the Green Paper "A new contract for welfare: partnership in pensions" published on 15 December 1998 Cm 4179. If the general membership of a public service scheme wanted, in future, to extend eligibility for survivors' pensions to unmarried partners and were prepared to meet the additional costs, the Government would be prepared to consider how practicable arrangements could be devised for achieving this in the context of a statutory scheme.

NHS Bodies (Budgets)

Mr. Gareth R. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what was the level of deficit allocated to (a) NHS trusts and (b) health authorities, and their predecessors where applicable, for 1979 to 1999. [115106]

Mr. Denham: The information requested is given in the table.

Surplus/(deficits) of NHS trusts and health authorities (and predecessors) England 1984–85 to 1998–99

£000

	Health authorities [1] (including predecessors)	NHS trusts [2]
1984–85	(51,778)	—
1985–86	(76,145)	—
1986–87	(110,400)	—
1987–88	(10,756)	—
1988–89	(48,212)	—
1989–90	(237,786)	—
1990–91	(125,170)	—
1991–92	57,255	46,065
1992–93	(34,983)	88,445
1993–94	(56,071)	185,608
1994–95	(153,237)	178,678
1995–96	(296,242)	46,097
1996–97	(238,206)	(221,488)
1997–98	(7,681)	(103,720)
1998–99	18,350	(35,908)

Note:

Changes (in line with best accounting practice) since 1979 in the accounting and financial reporting arrangements for Health Authorities and subsequently NHS trusts mean that comparable information is not available prior to 1984–85. The changes also mean that the figures provided over the period 1984–85 through to 1998–99 are not directly comparable.

Sources:

[1] 1984–85 to 1995–96—Summarised account of Regional and District Health Authorities and Special Health Authorities for the London Postgraduate Teaching Hospitals

[1] 1985–86 to 1989–90—Summarised account of Family Practitioner Committees

[1] 1990–91 to 1995–96—Summarised account of the Family Health Services Authorities

[1] 1996–97 to 1998–99—Summarised account of the Health Authorities

[2] 1991–92 to 1998–99—Summarised account of NHS trusts except for 1996–97 which has been adjusted to take account of a change in the financial regime of NHS trusts.

Cancer Patients

Mr. Paul Marsden: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what assessment he has made of (a) the quality of treatment and (b) survival rates among cancer patients on low incomes; and if he will make a statement. [115716]

Yvette Cooper: As part of the national performance assessment framework, the Government are developing the national cancer standard and performance indicators to improve consistency in the quality of cancer services across the country. In addition, both the National Institute for Clinical Excellence and the Commission for Health Improvement have been set up specifically to help to reduce variations and ensure fair access to high quality treatment.

Data published in Cancer Survival Trends in England and Wales 1971–95 produced by the Office for National Statistics show that survival rates for adults in deprived groups are lower than those in more affluent groups for several cancers.

We have appointed Professor Mike Richards as the National Cancer Director to spearhead the drive to modernise all aspects of cancer care. He has indicated our intention to develop a national cancer programme building on the Calman/Hine Report to set out action to improve prevention of cancer and ensure patients from all social groups have access to faster better cancer care. The National Cancer Director will be developing the plan over the coming months and will engage with clinicians, managers and patients in the process.

MRSA

Mr. Edwards: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) if he will commission an independent inquiry into the incidence of MRSA; [115928]

(2) what was the incidence of MRSA in hospitals in England and Wales for 1996. [115927]

Yvette Cooper: MRSA is the antibiotic-resistant form of Staphylococcus aureus, a bacterium which is carried harmlessly on the skin by at least a third of the population. About 80 per cent. of the population who acquire MRSA similarly carry it harmlessly on the skin and do not suffer from any infection. Neither the number of hospitals recording MRSA outbreaks nor the total number of patients in National Health Service hospitals who have MRSA are recorded centrally. The Public Health Laboratory Service (PHLS) compiles aggregate data on numbers of incidents of MRSA which are voluntarily reported by NHS trusts. The available data on MRSA for England and Wales show that there were 2,107 reported incidents in 1996. An incident is three or more patients infected or colonised by the same strain of MRSA in the same month from the same hospital. We are working with the PHLS on improving surveillance systems so as to provide more complete data on MRSA and so that we can consider what further action is required.

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is his assessment of the total number of deaths which have resulted from (a) MRSA and (b) other hospital-acquired infection in each of the past 10 years. [115946]

Yvette Cooper [holding answer 28 March 2000]: There are no centrally held statistics on deaths caused by hospital-acquired infections (HAIs), including Methicillin resistant Staphylococcus aureus (MRSA). Different doctors will have different views on the role of HAI in a patient's death.

MRSA infection can take the form of many different diseases from trivial skin infection to pneumonia or septicaemia. Often the causative micro-organism is not specified on the death certificate. MRSA does not have a distinct code within the revision of the International Classification of Diseases used for encoding death registration data at the Office for National Statistics.

Hospices

Mr. Swayne: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what representations he has received regarding the payments negotiated by NHS trusts and hospices for the provision of services in hospices; and if he will make a statement; [116009]

(2) what guidelines his Department issues to NHS trusts regarding the purchase of services from hospices. [116008]

Yvette Cooper: Successive guidance to health authorities has made clear their responsibilities for commissioning services that meet the assessed needs of their local communities. Health Service Circular 1998/99: "Palliative Care" states that commissioners, including primary health care groups need to work together with providers to develop a palliative care strategy which is right for their population, based on health needs assessment.

HSC 1998/198: "Commissioning in the new National Health Service" makes it explicit that full development of the new commissioning arrangements needs to involve partnership working both in and beyond the NHS. The guidance also states that regional offices should pay particular attention to the commissioning of cancer services in the follow-up to Calman/Hine.

Where services are commissioned from the non-NHS sector, commissioners should ensure the service provided is valuable, effective and offers value for money. The decision to commission services provided by non-NHS facilities will continue to be made locally and will be made in the best interests of the patient.

I met members of the National Council for Hospices and Specialist Palliative Care Services, including representatives of the independent sector and also attended a recent All Party Group on Hospices meeting. On both occasions the issue of funding of hospices was raised.

Professor Mike Richards, the National Cancer Director, is working to develop a supportive care strategy as part of his wider work programme, and this will set the context for future developments in the commissioning of services from hospices.

Mr. Pickthall: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement on the funding of (a) children's hospices and (b) adult hospices. [117150]

Yvette Cooper: The funding of adult and children's hospices is a matter for local discussion and agreement and must be based on local health needs assessment. The Health Improvement Programme (HImP) is and will continue to be the funding mechanism for palliative care services. Voluntary healthcare providers are viewed as important players in the planning and provision of services and should be involved in the development of HImPs. From this should flow more detailed plans for commissioning services, including arrangements for palliative care.

Chronic Diseases

Mr. Gill: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is the incidence of (a) ME, (b) MS and (c) HIV/AIDS, and what was the level of public expenditure, in each of the past five years in respect of each category. [116254]

Ms Stuart: Information on the incidence and level of public expenditure on Chronic Fatigue syndrome (CFS)/Myalgic Encephalomyelitis (ME) is not available in the format requested. A number of definitions, disease descriptions or diagnostic criteria have been proposed to describe CFS/ME. However, there is no general agreement as to which should be used. This makes the results from studies on the prevalence of CFS/ME difficult to interpret and there is no agreement on the incidence of the illness.

Services for people with CFS/ME are funded from baseline expenditure.

The Department is currently supporting a number of projects at a total cost of £221,000 on CFS/ME research. In addition, we have also awarded the ME Association a total of £30,000 for 1998–99 and 1999–2000 and the Association of Youth with ME a total of £6,200 in 1998–99 under the Section 64 scheme of grants.

Information on the incidence and level of public expenditure on Multiple Sclerosis is not available in the format requested. MS is one of the most common diseases of the central nervous system. It is estimated to affect between 80–90,000 people in the UK. However, the incidence (new diagnoses each year) is not known.

Services for people with MS are funded from baseline expenditure.

The Medical Research Council supported about a dozen projects on multiple sclerosis and associated demyelinating diseases in 1998–99 representing a spend of approximately £640,000 in that year.

The Department funds research to support policy and the delivery of effective practice in the National Health Service. The Department is currently spending approximately £150,000 per year on projects related to MS.

In addition, we have awarded the MS Society £15,000 per year from 1997–98 until 1999–2000 under the Section 64 scheme of grants, for their emerging therapies project.

The table reports new diagnoses of HIV and AIDS for England in each of the last five years.

As people with HIV infection may not have symptoms for some time, new diagnoses are dependent on people coming forward for testing; however, the data on new diagnoses based on clinical reports of AIDS cases are a reasonable measure of AIDS incidence.

Year of diagnosis	New diagnoses of HIV infection	New diagnoses of AIDS
1995	2,412	1,587
1996	2,438	1,298
1997	2,441	960
1998	2,557	677
1999	2,289	460

Notes:
1. Data reported by end 1999.
2. Numbers, particularly for the more recent years, will rise as further reports are received.

Funding for HIV/AIDS

£ million

Year	Health authorities	Local authorities	Voluntary organisations	Public education	Research	Total
1995–96	244.7	13.4	1.54	8.0	20.6	288.2
1996–97	237.7	13.7	1.63	5.2	19.5	277.7
1997–98	251.9	13.7	1.52	5.2	15.4	287.7
1998–99	281.4	13.7	1.58	4.8	16.2	317.6
1999–2000	286.4	15.0	1.60	4.5	16.0	323.5
Total	1,302.1	69.5	7.87	27.7	87.7	1,494.7

NHS Volunteers

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what plans the Training Organisation for Personal Social Services has to incorporate volunteers and their management into the training strategy. [116445]

Mr. Hutton: The training strategy set out to identify how a fully skilled and qualified workforce could be obtained to meet the future requirements for modernised social care. This included determining the qualifications needed to meet appropriate care standards, the career pathways to promote life-long learning, and the recruitment strategies to ensure an adequate supply of suitable people. The strategy has considered the skills needed to manage social care teams, including the use of volunteers.

NHS Staff (Suspensions)

Mr. Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what estimate he has made of the total (a) number and (b) costs of suspensions of consultants, doctors and other medical staff on pay pending inquiries in each year since 1996; [116278]

(2) how many consultants, doctors or medical staff have been suspended on full pay for more than two months in each hospital trust in the Northern and Trent Regions in (a) 1998, (b) 1999 and (c) 2000 to date; and what his estimate is of the cost to the NHS of their suspensions. [116277]

Mr. Denham: National Health Service trusts routinely report suspensions lasting six months or longer. The information requested is not broken down by year. Since 31 March 1995 a total of 75 cases of suspension lasting six months or over have been reported. At 31 December 1999, the latest date for which figures are available, 27 hospital and community medical and dental staff had been suspended for six months or more at an estimated cost of £2.5 million.

Since 31 March 1998 the Northern and Yorkshire and Trent regions have reported 18 suspensions lasting six months or more at a total cost of approximately £2 million. At 31 December 1999, the latest date for which figures are available, 10 hospital and community medical and dental staff had been suspended for six months or more at a cost of approximately £1 million.

An internal management review has identified four areas for improvement in the current suspension procedures. Further work on these findings has been subsumed into the wider proposals for managing poor performance set out in the Chief Medical Officer's consultation document "Supporting doctors, protecting patients". The consultation period has just ended and the Department is currently considering the responses.

NHS Dentistry

Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when he expects to announce his new NHS dental service strategy. [116340]

Mr. Hutton: Our plans for modernising National Health Service dentistry will be published shortly.

MMR Vaccines

Jackie Ballard: To ask the Secretary of State for Health which EU countries allow the use of single-dose vaccines for measles and mumps; and if he will make a statement about the use of such vaccines in the UK. [116492]

Yvette Cooper: Measles, mumps and rubella vaccine is recommended in all European Union countries, none recommend the use of single vaccines. The availability of single dose vaccines is a matter for individual countries.

To protect public health, United Kingdom medicines legislation restricts the importation of all unlicensed medicines, including single-dose vaccines. Unlicensed medicines may be imported only if there is no licensed medicine available or suitable for the individual patient concerned, and the Medicines Control Agency (MCA) does not object on specific grounds of safety or efficacy. In the case of unlicensed single vaccines, the MCA will object to their import unless a prescribing doctor has decided that the patient has a known medical condition that makes the licensed product (MMR) unsuitable. In addition the MCA objects to the import of the single dose mumps vaccine (Rubini strain) because of concerns about its efficacy.

There is no evidence that the use of single vaccines benefits children and good reasons exist why their use may put children at significant disadvantage.

Sellafield

Mr. Chaytor: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what research he has commissioned on the health implications of the Sellafield MOX plant; and if he will make a statement. [115530]

Yvette Cooper [holding answer 27 March 2000]: No specific study into the possible effects of the MOX plant at Sellafield on the health of the general public has been commissioned. However, the independent advisory Committee on Medical Aspects of Radiation in the Environment (COMARE) has been asked to examine the geographical distribution of childhood cancer in Great Britain, and as part of this study the committee will investigate the incidence of these diseases around all British nuclear installations. This study will include the Sellafield site.

Genetic Tests (Insurance)

Dr. Gibson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many responses were received by his Department's Genetics and Insurance Committee to their recent consultation on the use of genetic test results for insurance risk assessment; and if he will list the organisations and individuals concerned. [116571]

Yvette Cooper: The Genetics and Insurance Committee received 15 responses to the recent consultation on the criteria that GAIC will use to assess specific genetic tests and the use of their results for insurance purposes. Responses were received from:

the Association of British Insurers;

the Alzheimer's Association

Comments from Advisory Committee on Genetic Testing members (obtained at an ACGT meeting);

the Genetic Interest Group;

the Huntingtons Disease Association;

the Nuffield Council on Bioethics;

the Royal College of General Practitioners;

the Royal College of Pathologists;

the Royal College of Psychiatrists (Ethics Sub Committee);

the Scottish Huntingtons Association;

the Scottish Executive;

Health Department;

Public Health Policy Unit;

the UK Forum of Genetics and Insurance (which includes the response from the Faculty and Institute of Actuaries) and from three individuals who provided personal responses.

I have arranged for a list of the organisations concerned to be placed in the House of Commons Library.

Dr. Gibson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list the (a) organisations and (b) individuals asked by his Department's Genetics and Insurance Committee to submit responses to their recent consultation on the use of genetic test results for insurance risk assessment. [116570]

Yvette Cooper: The consultation on the criteria that the Genetics and Insurance Committee will use to assess specific genetic tests and the use of their results for insurance purposes was sent to patient support organisations, academics, insurers and actuaries and was made available on the Department website. I have arranged for a list of the organisations and individuals concerned to be placed in the House of Commons Library.

Cancer Surgery

Mr. Stephen O'Brien: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement about the adequacy of cancer surgery provision within the NHS. [115167]

Yvette Cooper [holding answer 28 March 2000]: We are determined to improve our cancer services and to tackle variations in treatment across the country. The National Cancer Director will be developing over the next few months a national cancer programme which will build on the Calman/Hine Report: "A Policy Framework for Commissioning Cancer" and set out our action to ensure all patients have access to faster better cancer care.

Since 1997 we have invested significant extra resources in workforce, equipment and facilities to speed access to high-quality, evidence-based diagnosis, treatment and care. By the end of 2000, patients with a suspected cancer referred urgently by their general practitioner will see a specialist within two weeks. Over the next five years, the number of cancer specialists will increase by 60 per cent.

and we will work with professionals and local cancer networks to identify future workforce demands and ways in which they could be met.

Ambulances (Response Times)

Mr. Breed: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what percentage of requests for ambulances were met within the target response time in (a) urban and (b) rural areas in the last three years for which figures are available. [117057]

Ms Stuart: Details about the performance of each National Health Service ambulance trust are contained in the Department of Health Statistical Bulletin "Ambulance Services, England 1998–99", copies of which are available in the Library.

Bed Numbers

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many NHS beds in each category will form the starting point against which any future changes in bed numbers can be measured. [117027]

Mr. Denham: Statistics on hospital bed numbers are published in the annual publication "Bed availability and occupancy—England", copies of which are in the Library. Latest figures are for 1998–99.

Smoking

Ms Church: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what estimate he has made of the amount to be spent in financial year 1999–2000 on smoking-related illnesses. [117030]

Yvette Cooper: The information requested is not available on a year-by-year basis. However, a study "Cost Effectiveness of Smoking Cessation Interventions" by the Health Education Authority, in collaboration with the University of York published in 1997, estimated the annual cost to the National Health Service of treating smoking-related disease was between £1.4 billion and £1.7 billion for England.

Waiting Lists (Essex)

Mr. Jenkin: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many people were waiting for hospital treatment at Essex Rivers Health Care Trust on (a) 31 March 1997 and (b) the latest date for which figures are available. [116839]

Mr. Denham [holding answer 30 March 2000]: The information is as follows:

Total number of patients waiting at Essex Rivers Healthcare National Health Service Trust on 31 March 1997 and 31 January 2000 (the latest date for which figures are available)

Month	Total number waiting
31 March 1997	6,737
31 January 2000	6,212

Source:
Form KH07 completed Quarterly
Monthly waiting list return

Mr. Jenkin: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many people have been waiting for 12 months or more for hospital treatment at Essex Rivers Healthcare Trust on (a) 31 March 1997 and (b) on the latest date for which figures are available. [116847]

Mr. Denham [holding answer 30 March 2000]: The information is as follows:

Number of patients waiting over 12 months at Essex Rivers Healthcare National Health Service Trust

Month/year	Number
31 March 1997	6
31 January 2000[1]	534

[1] The latest date for which figures are available

Sources:
Form KH07 completed Quarterly
Monthly waiting list return

Mr. Jenkin: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many people had waited 13 weeks or more for an outpatient appointment at Essex Rivers Healthcare Trust on (a) 31 March 1997 and (b) 31 December 1999. [116842]

Mr. Denham [holding answer 30 March 2000]: The information is as follows:

Number of patients waiting over 13 weeks for a first outpatient appointment at Essex Rivers Healthcare National Health Service Trust

Month/year	Number
31 March 1997	1,821
31 December 1999[1]	3,916

[1] The latest date for which figures are available

Source:
Form QMO8 completed quarterly

Mr. Jenkin: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many people had waited over 26 weeks for an outpatient appointment at Essex Rivers Healthcare Trust on (a) 31 March 1997 and (b) 31 December 1999. [116838]

Mr. Denham [holding answer 30 March 2000]: The information is as follows:

Number of patients waiting over 26 weeks for a first outpatient appointment at Essex Rivers Healthcare National Health Service Trust

Month/year	Number
31 March 1997	404
31 December 1999[1]	1,336

[1] The latest date for which figures are available

Source:
Form QMO8 completed quarterly

Intensive Care Units

Mr. Keetch: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what were the staffing levels of intensive care units in each year from 1995 to 1999, (a) nationally and (b) in Herefordshire; and if he will make a statement. [116901]

Mr. Denham: The information requested is not collected centrally.

BCG Vaccinations

Mr. Lidington: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement on the BCG vaccination programme for the current academic year. [116953]

Yvette Cooper [holding answer 30 March 2000]: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave the hon. Member for Brentwood and Ongar (Mr. Pickles) on 10 February 2000, Official Report, column 261W.

Ambulances (Durham)

Mr. Steinberg: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many emergency calls were made to ambulance brigades in Durham Health Authority in the last five years; and what was the average response time for each of those years. [117214]

Ms Stuart: Details about the performance of all National Health Service ambulance trusts are contained in the Department of Health Statistical Bulletin Ambulance Services, England 1998–99, copies of which are available in the Library.

Food Action Plans

Mr. Edwards: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what progress the Government have made in implementing the WHO (Europe) proposals for national and local food and nutrition action plans following the Malta 1999 consultation. [117527]

Ms Stuart: We recognise the importance of good nutrition throughout life for maintaining health. We are playing an active role in supporting the development of the World Health Organisation (WHO) Food and Nutrition Action Plan with a view to its adoption by the WHO's Regional Committee in September 2000. We agree that each member state should develop its own action plan in response, taking into account the remit of other key organisations, particularly the European Union. We have set out the role of diet in promoting health and preventing disease in "Saving Lives: Our Healthier Nation", particularly in the key priority areas of coronary heart disease, stroke and cancer. The National Service Framework for Coronary Heart Disease requires local players, co-ordinated by the local health authority, to develop and implement a comprehensive programme of effective policies including promoting healthy eating by April 2001.

Departmental Properties

Mr. Don Foster: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what (a) number and (b) percentage of properties in his charge are empty; and what steps are being taken by his Department to reduce the number of such properties. [116912]

Ms Stuart: The Department occupies administrative property (the civil estate). The Department has no empty properties.

My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State's retained estate comprises surplus or potentially surplus property not transferred to National Health Service trusts, and is managed by NHS Estates. There are about 85 properties that are empty, which is about 17 per cent. of the estate.

All of these sites are in the course of being sold on an accelerating basis. All surplus property is sold as soon as possible after they become vacant, but only when planning consent for alternative use has been obtained from the relevant local planning authority.

Prescription Charges

Mr. Harvey: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what assessment he has made of the total cost to the NHS of (a) instituting charges per script and (b) allowing prescription charges to be paid by instalments; and if he will make a statement. [116680]

Ms Stuart: Based on 1998–99 figures for charges collected by pharmacists and dispensing doctors in England, it is estimated that around £50 million in prescription charge revenue would have been lost if the prescription charge had been paid for each chargeable form rather than each item. It is likely that there would also be additional costs to the drugs bill arising from the prescribing of items which can be purchased from pharmacies for less than the prescription charge. The current process of paying prescription charges is widely understood by the public and simple to administer. Introducing payment by instalments is impractical as it would unnecessarily complicate the current arrangements and require additional bureaucracy to keep track of instalment payments for each charge payable.

Cleaning Staff

Mr. Harvey: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what was the spending on cleaning services and how many cleaning staff were employed in the NHS in the last year for which figures are available; and if he will make a statement. [116682]

Ms Stuart: The information is not available as requested. National figures are collected centrally on the number of support staff employed in National Health Service trusts; cleaning staff are included within this category. Similarly, national figures on expenditure are collected centrally on contract hotel services and laundry and cleaning equipment. Expenditure on cleaning staff is included within this category.

Hospital Infections

Mr. Harvey: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what assessment he has made of the cost to the NHS of hospital acquired infections in the last five years; what measures his Department is taking to tackle such infections and at what cost; and if he will make a statement. [116683]

Yvette Cooper: The recently quoted figure of £1 billion is an estimate derived from a Department commissioned study of one hospital. It is not possible to accurately estimate the cost to the whole National Health Service from these findings. Infection control is a "must do" in current NHS National Priorities Guidance. New standards on infection control were issued in November 1999 and an action plan setting out specific objectives and targets was issued to the NHS on 11 February 2000. Costs of activity to prevent hospital acquired infections are impossible to assess because much of this activity is a fundamental part of the work of all health care staff.

Nursing

Helen Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many health care assistants are seconded into nurse education. [117147]

Mr. Denham: Since the 1 April 1997, a total of 1,230 existing National Health Service employees have been seconded on to pre-registration nursing and midwifery diploma training courses. Data are not collected centrally on the proportion of these who are health care assistants seconded on to such courses.

Helen Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many trainee nurses are (a) seconded on salary, (b) receiving his Department's bursary and (c) in receipt of a student loan. [117146]

Mr. Denham: Since the 1 April 1997, a total of 1,230 existing National Health Service employees have been seconded on a salary to pre-registration nursing and midwifery diploma courses.

Information on the number of trainee nurses receiving NHS funded bursaries is not held centrally. Of the 17,451 student nurses currently paid an NHS bursary by the NHS Student Grants Unit (SGU), 14,156 are diploma level students who are not eligible for student loans. The remaining 3,295 are degree-level students who are eligible for student loans.

Student loans are a matter for the Department for Education and Employment.

Helen Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what percentage of student nurses left training before completing their course in each year since 1996. [117148]

Ms Stuart: Information on the percentage of student nurses who left training before completing their course in each year since 1996 is shown in the table. We do not yet have the data to provide an attrition rate for the 1999–2000 student.

Year	Percentage
1995–96	17
1996–97	17
1997–98	15
1998–99	7

Note:
The data on attrition are based on a snapshot in time of a particular cohort(s). Since nursing and midwifery students can take up to five years to complete their three-year course, for each year there will be students who have yet to complete their training.

Age Discrimination

Mr. Paul Marsden: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what recent representations he has received from organisations on age discrimination against elderly patients in the NHS. [117294]

Mr. Hutton: We have received from Age Concern their thoughtful report "Turning your back on us—Older people and the NHS" which highlighted concern that older people experience ageism within the National Health Service. I met representatives from Age Concern on 6 March to discuss these concerns. Age Concern, Help the Aged and others involved in the care of older people have all contributed to the development of the National Service Framework for Older People which will set national standards for the care of older people. This work covers issues of greatest concern to older people such as promotion of health and well-being, and fair access to services. We hope to publish the NSF later this year.

Mr. Paul Marsden: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will initiate an inquiry into age discrimination against elderly patients in the NHS. [117293]

Mr. Hutton: Discrimination on the grounds of age within the National Health Service is completely unacceptable. Action is and will be taken to challenge and correct any such unfair practices. The task now is to get on with ensuring this delivers the improvements we intend, so that eliminating discrimination and promoting fair access are firmly embedded as mainstream business for the NHS.

The provision of first class care on the NHS is our priority and later this year we will be publishing the National Service Framework (NSF) for Older People. This, for the first time, will set national standards for the care of older people, driving up quality and reducing the variations. The NSF will include performance measures for monitoring progress. The development of the NSF has involved many groups, including service users and carers, and has included the issue of access to services.

We have no plans however to set up any inquiry. Equal opportunities and work against discrimination must be embedded in our total way of working, rather than being treated as a separate and one-off activity.

"Fit for the Future?"

Mr. Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many copies of "Fit for the Future?" were (a) printed and (b) requested; if he will increase the number of copies available; and if he will make a statement. [117344]

Mr. Hutton: 10,000 copies of "Fit for the Future?" were printed and over 8,000 copies have been sent out in response to requests. We have no plans to print further copies. The document was also made immediately accessible on the Department's internet website, and as at 26 March the "Fit for the Future?" web had been accessed over 46,000 times.

The consultation period ended on 21 January. We are currently carefully considering the comments received on the proposals. "Fit for the Future?" identified over 260 possible standards. We believe that some of the proposals may have only a marginal impact on the quality of care and it is highly unlikely that this many standards will be needed. We intended to publish the final standards and a timetable for implementing them later this year.

Brittle Bone Disease

Mrs. Spelman: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make funding available to health authorities to ensure that children with severe brittle bone disease will be able to receive bisphosphonate treatment. [117102]

Mr. Denham: The National Specialist Commissioning Advisory Group is considering the current and proposed service for children with brittle bones, including the use of bisphosphonate treatment, and will make recommendations on appropriate commissioning arrangements in the summer.

Parliamentary Questions

Mrs. Spelman: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when he will reply to the question tabled on 27 January (ref. 107991) by the hon. Member for Meriden concerning vaccinations. [117108]

Yvette Cooper: I replied to the hon. Member on 30 March.

Health Food Promotion

Mr. Edwards: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what plans he has to require local authorities to promote healthy food policies. [117526]

Ms Stuart: Although this Department cannot force local authorities to promote healthy food policies, there are a number of initiatives that we are undertaking with the co-operation of these agencies as part of our strategy for combating heart disease, stroke and cancer. For example, the Heartbeat Award Scheme, which promotes healthy eating in restaurants, cafés and other catering establishments, has been running for a decade with the support of local and health authorities. Furthermore, the recently published National Service Framework for Coronary Heart Disease set out several health milestones, one of which is the delivery by April 2001, of a wide-ranging healthy eating promotion in conjunction with local authorities. Co-operation also extends to local education authorities as part of the Department of Health and Department for Employment and Education-funded Healthy Schools Programme. This initiative requires schools to adopt consistent messages about healthy eating in order to meet the Healthy Schools Standard.

Primates

Mr. Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many diseases non-human primates are known to carry; how many of these are screened for when such animals are brought into the United Kingdom; and if he will make a statement. [115275]

Ms Quin: I have been asked to reply.

The diseases that non-human primates are known to carry are numerous and can be found in text books dealing with diseases of non-human primates. The hazards associated with simians are listed in the Advisory Committee on Dangerous Pathogens' publication "Working safely with simians: Management of infection risks". A copy has been placed in the Library of the House.

All simians that are imported into the UK are required to undergo six months' quarantine against rabies in premises authorised by the Department.

CULTURE, MEDIA AND SPORT

Millennium Dome

Mr. Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport (1) what the maximum daily capacity of the Millennium Dome is between 21 March and 31 December; [115273]

(2) pursuant to his answer of 14 March 2000, Official Report, column 153W, on the Millennium Dome, for what reason the total number of available tickets varies on a daily basis. [115726]

Janet Anderson [holding answer 21 March 2000]: The licensed capacity of the Millennium Experience site, including the Dome, is 35,000 visitors at any one time during opening hours.

During the early weeks of operation, fewer tickets were released for sale than the optimum number allowed under the operating licence. This was to ensure a high-quality visitor experience while the inevitable teething problems were being addressed, at a time when many visitors were staying inside the Dome to shelter from poor weather conditions. The number of schools participating in free Education Tours during the morning and afternoon sessions also has some bearing on the quantity of tickets released for sale.

Parliamentary Questions

Mr. Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport how many parliamentary questions asked in respect of the millennium dome since 1 January 1999 have received holding answers; what percentage of such questions this represents; and what has been the average time taken to answer written questions on the millennium dome during this period. [109913]

Janet Anderson [holding answer 11 February 2000]: Since 1 January 1999, 102 written parliamentary questions on the millennium dome have received holding answers. This represents 96 per cent. of the total number of Named Day questions tabled on this subject, 39 of which have been from the hon. Member. The average time taken to answer written questions on the millennium dome during this period is 20 days.

My Department makes every effort to answer questions on time, but the need to ensure that responses are completely accurate can make the issuing of a holding answer unavoidable. Holding answers are usually issued while relevant information is being obtained from the New Millennium Experience Company.

New Millennium Experience Company

Mr. Peter Ainsworth: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what percentage of the total (a) value and (b) number of contracts to provide services to the New Millennium Experience Company were awarded following an open competition tender process. [109723]

Janet Anderson [holding answer 11 February 2000]: 100 per cent. of key service contracts, i.e. electricity, security, waste disposal and cleaning, were awarded following open competition. The overall value of these key contracts is about £15.5 million.

Library Services

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what action has taken place since the publication of the paper entitled, "Libraries for All: Social Inclusion in Public Libraries", to involve more volunteers in strengthening library services. [116446]

Mr. Alan Howarth: We are still evaluating the consultation responses to "Libraries for All: Social Inclusion in Public Libraries". We will then be undertaking a similar consultation on social inclusion in museums, galleries and archives. We expect to make an announcement on the way forward for both policies later in the year.

Pirate Ship (Kensington Palace Gardens)

Mr. Tyler: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport for what reason the Royal Parks Agency did not invite open tenders for the pirate ship in Kensington Palace Gardens; and if he will make a statement. [116296]

Mr. Alan Howarth [holding answer 27 March 2000]: Responsibility for the subject of this question has been delegated to the Royal Parks Agency and I have asked them to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Viviane Robertson to Mr. Paul Tyler, dated 3 April 2000:

Pending the appointment of a new Chief Executive, the Secretary of State for Culture, Media, and Sport has asked me to reply to your Parliamentary Question about the tender for the ship in Kensington Gardens, which is an operational matter for which the Agency is responsible.

In commissioning the design and construction of the play ship in the Diana, Princess of Wales playground in Kensington Gardens, the Agency followed the guidance in the "Guide to the Appointment of Consultants and Contractors" produced by Property Advisers to the Civil Estate. This guide promotes the procurement of services on the basis of best value for money. There is no requirement under this procedure to invite open tenders because the EC procurement rules do not apply in the case of this contract.

The Agency identified some 70 suppliers and from them drew up a list of 7 potential tenderers. This in turn was reduced to a short list of three by evaluating them against the original selection criteria. The three short-listed companies were interviewed and the contract was awarded to the company which, in the opinion of the Agency, met the selection criteria and offered the best value for money.

BBC News 24

Mr. Peter Ainsworth: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport when he plans to commence his Department's review of BBC News 24. [117241]

Mr. Chris Smith: I aim to announce my proposals for the reviews of the BBC's digital services in due course.

London Film Commission

Mr. Peter Ainsworth: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport if he will make a statement on the future of the London Film Commission. [117571]

Mr. Chris Smith: My Department has been working closely with the London Film Commission and the Film Council to ensure that the valuable services provided by the Commission continue to be provided. I am very pleased that a solution has been found which will enable the Commission to focus on its main priorities while seeking to ensure that it has a sound financial basis for its future operation.

Departmental Properties

Mr. Don Foster: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what (a) number and (b) percentage of properties in his charge are empty; and what steps are being taken by his Department to reduce the number of such properties. [116920]

Mr. Chris Smith: My Department has the following properties unoccupied at present:

Address of property	Wholly or partly unoccupied	Date vacated
Core Department
2nd Floor, 179a Tottenham Court Road, W1[1]	Partly	January 2000
Basement, 7 St. James's Square, SW1[2]	Partly	January 2000
Royal Parks Agency
Brew House Bushey Park[3]	Wholly	© 1998
New Lodge Bushey Park[4]	Wholly	December 1999
White Lodge, Bushey Park[4]	Wholly	© 1980
Vanburgh Gate Lodge, Greenwich Park[4]	Wholly	January 2000

[1] Area became vacant following closure of Y2K contingency office. Temporarily occupied by the Film Council but being actively marketed.
[2] Area became vacant following Commission for Architecture and the Built Environment (CABE) reducing their occupation prior to finding alternative premises. Being actively marketed.
[3] Requires the completion of restoration before re-occupation.
[4] Expected that re-occupation by RPA staff will occur during 2000–01.

The Department's office premises that are partly vacant are being marketed with a view to occupation during the new financial year (2000–01), and the Royal Parks Agency expects at least three of the four properties listed above to be re-occupied by members of staff during 2000–01.

Parliament Square (Demonstrations)

Mr. Meale: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what his policy is on the use of Parliament Square by campaigning organisations for demonstrations. [116276]

Mr. Charles Clarke: I have been asked to reply.

The use of Parliament Square requires the permission of the Royal Parks Agency, which I understand was not given in the case of the current protest by pig farmers. Any action to remove demonstrators is an operational matter for that Agency.

CABINET OFFICE

Corporate IT Strategy

Mr. Coaker: To ask the Minister for the Cabinet Office what plans she has to publish the Government's corporate IT strategy. [117305]

Mr. Ian McCartney: I have today launched the re-titled 'e-Government Strategy' which meets this commitment.

I have placed copies of the e-Government Strategy in the Libraries of the House.

Civil Service College

Mr. Peter Bradley: To ask the Minister for the Cabinet Office if she will make a statement on the future arrangements for the Centre for Management and Policy Studies and the Civil Service College. [117612]

Mr. Ian McCartney: From 1 April 2000 the Civil Service College will be fully integrated into the Centre for Management and Policy Studies (CMPS) at the heart of government within the Cabinet Office. As a result, the College will no longer operate as an executive agency.

CMPS will enjoy extensive management delegations and will operate within the terms of a framework document. Copies will be placed in the Libraries of the House.

Civil Service Leavers

Mr. Pond: To ask the Minister for the Cabinet Office how many male ex-Government employees there are under the age of 65 years. [117127]

Mr. Stringer: The information is not held in the form requested and could only be provided at disproportionate cost. The number of male permanent staff who have left the Civil Service during the last 10 years who, if still alive, would have been under the age of 65 at 1st April 1999 was approximately 167,000.

GM Plants

Dr. Gibson: To ask the Minister for the Cabinet Office what plans she has to visit a research laboratory engaged in research into genetically modified plants. [116565]

Marjorie Mowlam: I have recently accepted an invitation to visit the John Innes Centre in order to learn more about the implications of GMO's for the environment and their potential applications in UK industry and agriculture. I meet a range of outside organisations as part of the Government's ongoing dialogue on biotechnology, including environmental groups, consumer bodies and industry representatives. The UK's commitment to a science based approach to biotechnology which protects public health and the environment is made clear in all such discussions.

US International Trade Commission

Mr. Fabricant: To ask the Minister for the Cabinet Office (1) for what reason, when her officials met analysts from the United States International Trade Commission during the last two weeks, they advised the analysts not to meet hon. Members; [116313]

(2) what representations her Department has made to visiting analysts from the United States International Trade Commission in respect of their inquiry on behalf of the United States Senate Finance Committee on the impact on the United States economy of including the United Kingdom in NAFTA. [116316]

Mr. Stringer: I refer to the answer given today by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, Official Report, column 285W.

Privy Council Judicial Committee

Ms Roseanna Cunningham: To ask the Minister for the Cabinet Office what plans there are for the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council to meet in Scotland when dealing with Scottish devolution or European Convention on Human Rights cases. [116518]

Mrs. Beckett: I have been asked to reply.

There are presently no plans for the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council to sit in Scotland.

Scottish Law Books

Ms Roseanna Cunningham: To ask the Minister for the Cabinet Office how many (a) Scottish legal texts, (b) Scottish session cases and (c) other Scots law books are held by the Privy Council; and if she will place a list of all such material in the Library. [116517]

Mrs. Beckett: I have been asked to reply.

As at 29 March 2000 there were 16 volumes of Scottish legal materials held in the library of the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council. Details are as follows:

Laws of Scotland 1828 (comprising Laws and Acts of Parliament)

Erskine's Institute of the Law of Scotland—(1871)

Stair's Institutions of the Law of Scotland—(1832)

Bell's Principles of the Laws of Scotland—(1899)

Bell's Commentaries on the Laws of Scotland—(1826) 5th and (1858) 6th

Bell's Dictionary Scotch Law A-E

Bell's Dictionary Scotch Law F-Z

Compendium of English & Scotch Law (Paterson)—(1865)

Session Cases (Cases decided in the Court of Session and also in the Court of Justiciary etc. and House of Lords)—(1998) and (1999)

Scots Law Times (Reports) (News. Sheriff. Lord)—(1998) and (1999)

The Scotland Act (Hinsworth & Munro)—(1998).

In addition the following are on order and due to be delivered shortly: a set of Sessions Cases from 1821; a set of Scots Law Times Reports from 1893; the Parliament House Book (five volumes); Current Law Statutes; together with updating material on the above as it is issued.

Ms Roseanna Cunningham: To ask the Minister for the Cabinet Office what resources are available to the Privy Council this year to purchase Scottish texts, Scottish sessions cases and Scots law books. [116519]

Mrs. Beckett: I have been asked to reply.

An additional sum of £20,000 has been allocated on the current year's allowance for the acquisition of textbooks and other reference material for use for the purposes of devolution appeals and references to the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council from Scotland, Wales and Northern Ireland.

LORD CHANCELLOR'S DEPARTMENT

Prescribed Drugs (Compensation)

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department, what plans he has to introduce legislation to ensure higher levels of compensation from pharmaceutical companies to those suffering from the deleterious effects of the prescribed use of drugs. [116986]

Mr. Lock: The level of damages is a matter of common law for the courts to decide, in their own independent sphere. The Government have no plans to introduce legislation on levels of damages in the categories of cases specified.

Legal Aid

Dr. Starkey: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department, what was the annual cost of legal aid in spousal maintenance cases in each of the last five years. [116707]

Mr. Lock: The Legal Aid Board does not record separately expenditure on spousal maintenance cases. I am, however, able to provide information on expenditure in respect of all ancillary relief cases, which includes both child maintenance and spousal maintenance:

	£ million
1993–94	47.6
1994–95	45.9
1995–96	51.6
1996–97	54.9
1997–98	53.5

The figures provided are derived from closed cases. A case is regarded as closed when all outstanding matters relating to the certificate are completed. They may include payments made in more than one year. Due to changes in the Legal Aid Board's computer systems, we do not have as yet closed case data for 1998–99.

Magistrates Courts

Mr. Sheerman: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department, what steps he is taking to ensure that justices of the peace are properly valued in the criminal justice system. [R] [116971]

Jane Kennedy: More than 95 per cent. of criminal cases begin and end in the Magistrates courts. They also deal with many family, civil and licensing matters. Magistrates courts play a key role in our system of justice. I and my colleagues take every opportunity to make it clear publicly how much we value the work of Justices of the Peace. Their voluntary contribution to civic life is much appreciated by this Government. They put great time and effort into their judicial duties, in their own time and without any remuneration.

Mr. Sheerman: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what recent research his Department has commissioned into the level of truthfulness and accuracy of financial statements of personal circumstances provided by those who have been found guilty in magistrates' courts. [116943]

Jane Kennedy: None.

Mr. Sheerman: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what action his Department takes to ensure that magistrates' courts provide facilities for magistrates that are of a high standard. [R] [116942]

Jane Kennedy: The Lord Chancellor's Department has issued guidance to Magistrates Courts Committees and local authorities on the type of facilities it is expected should be provided in new or refurbished court buildings. Provision of such facilities is a matter for the Magistrates Courts Committee and local authority.

Mr. Sheerman: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what steps he is taking to ensure that magistrates courts check the financial details provided by defendants. [116941]

Jane Kennedy: Magistrates Courts Sentencing Guidelines shortly to be produced by the Magistrates' Association, with the support of the Lord Chancellor, are expected to remind magistrates that section 18 of the Criminal Justice Act 1991 requires courts to look into the financial circumstances of the offender before fixing the amount of a fine. If magistrates are not satisfied with the information available, they are able to adjourn the case for further information to be given.

Departmental Properties

Mr. Don Foster: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what (a) number and (b) percentage of properties in his charge are empty; and what steps are being taken by his Department to reduce the number of such properties. [116916]

Jane Kennedy: The Court Service currently has six vacant properties and holds vacant space in another six Government buildings. In total this represents 3.1 per cent. of the Court Service estate. Of the six vacant buildings, five are being actively marketed and the Court Service is actively trying to negotiate early surrender of the sixth. Of the space held in the six other Government buildings, the Court Service is about to serve notice to terminate occupation in two. Attempts are being made to sub-let or negotiate early surrender of the remainder.

The Northern Ireland Court Service currently has three properties vacant which represents 9 per cent. of its estate. These three properties are in the late stages of disposal.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Jury Trial

Mr. Lidington: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department, pursuant to his answer of 9 March 2000, Official Report, column 820W, on jury trial, for what reasons he has assumed that eight per cent. of formerly electing defendants would be committed for sentence to the Crown Court under the provisions of the Criminal Justice (Mode of Trial) (No. 2) Bill. [115060]

Mr. Charles Clarke [holding answer 17 March 2000]: Home Office Research suggests that the magistrates would be able to sentence in cases where the Crown Court currently imposes a custodial sentence of up to 15 months—since sentences are two and a half times longer for defendants who elect Crown Court trial than for equivalent cases sentenced in the magistrates courts. In 1996, 76 per cent. of defendants in either-way cases dealt with at the Crown Court fell into this category. However, only one third of these defendants would have elected jury trial, and since defendants who elect are four times less likely to receive such a sentence compared with directed defendants, this means that magistrates would be able to sentence 92 per cent. of such defendants. The remainder, eight per cent., would be committed for sentence.

Criminal Justice and Court Services Bill

Miss Widdecombe: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what estimate he has made of the number of prisoners who will be returned to prison after breaching the (a) monitoring and (b) drug testing requirements of their release on licence under the provisions of Part III of the Criminal Justice and Court Services Bill; and if he will make a statement. [115821]

Mr. Boateng [holding answer 22 March 2000]: The use of the new licence conditions provided for under Part III of the Criminal Justice and Court Services Bill will be subject to piloting before any consideration is given to wider implementation.

For full national implementation, the estimated additional number of people who would be returned to prison every year is as follows:

between 200 and 600 people returned following breach of the electronic monitoring requirements of their licence, or following breach of other licence conditions identified through electronic monitoring; and between 500 and 2,700 people returned for breach of the drug testing requirements of their licence, or as a result of drug use identified through testing.

The actual figures will depend on the extent to which the new licence conditions are used, and the breach rate.

Asylum Seekers

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what his policy is on housing asylum seekers on ships; and if he will make a statement. [116305]

Mrs. Roche: All offers of accommodation for asylum seekers under the national asylum support scheme are assessed with regard to the suitability of the accommodation offered, including its quality and whether it is in a location where the support needs of the asylum seekers are capable of being met. We would also assess its cost and whether any necessary planning permission has been issued. The National Asylum Support Service has also undertaken to consult with local authorities before any contract for accommodation is signed.

Any offer of accommodation that includes facilities to accommodate people on floating accommodation will be considered in the same way and in accordance with the same criteria as any other offer of accommodation.

Mr. Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many people from each country which is a candidate for EU membership applied for refugee status in the United Kingdom in (a) 1999 and (b) 2000 to date; how many were accepted in each case; and what criteria each successful applicant and their family fulfilled. [116307]

Mrs. Roche: All asylum applications are considered against the criteria specified in the 1951 United Nations Convention relating to the Status of Refugees. In order to qualify for asylum, a person must be outside his/her country of nationality and have a well-founded fear of persecution for reasons of their race, religion, nationality, membership of a particular social group or political opinion. The spouse and minor children who accompany an asylum applicant to the United Kingdom will normally be recognised as refugees if the principal applicant's application is successful.

Asylum applications [1] received in the United Kingdom, excluding dependants, and initial decisions [2] on applications, 2000

Principal applicants

		Decisions
	Total applications	Total decisions	Grants of asylum	Grants of ELR	Total refusals	Grants of ELR underbacklog criteria	Non compliance refusals under backlog criteria
Turkey	640	[3]—	[3]—	[3]—	[3]—	[3]—	[3]—
Poland	275	[3]—	[3]—	[3]—	[3]—	[3]—	[3]—
Lithuania	125	[3]—	[3]—	[3]—	[3]—	[3]—	[3]—
Romania	585	[3]—	[3]—	[3]—	[3]—	[3]—	[3]—

Asylum applications [1] received in the United Kingdom, excluding dependants, and initial decisions [2] on applications, 2000

Principal applicants

		Decisions
	Total applications	Total decisions	Grants of asylum	Grants of ELR	Total refusals	Grants of ELR underbacklog criteria	Non compliance refusals under backlog criteria
Slovakia	[4]—	[3]—	[3]—	[3]—	[3]—	[3]—	[3]—
Czech Republic	345	[3]—	[3]—	[3]—	[3]—	[3]—	[3]—
Latvia	80	[3]—	[3]—	[3]—	[3]—	[3]—	[3]—
Estonia	90	[3]—	[3]—	[3]—	[3]—	[3]—	[3]—
Bulgaria	5	[3]—	[3]—	[3]—	[3]—	[3]—	[3]—
Cyprus	10	[3]—	[3]—	[3]—	[3]—	[3]—	[3]—
Slovenia	[4]—	[3]—	[3]—	[3]—	[3]—	[3]—	[3]—
Hungary	—	[3]—	[3]—	[3]—	[3]—	[3]—	[3]—

[1] Figures rounded to nearest 5, with [4] = 1 or 2
[2] Information is of initial determination decisions, excluding the outcome of appeals or other subsequent decisions
[3] Not available
[4] = 1 or 2

Asylum applications [1] received in the United Kingdom, excluding dependants, 1999 and initial decisions [2,3] on applications, January to May 1999

Principal applicants

		Decisions
	Total applications	Total decisions	Grants of asylum	Grants of ELR	Total refusals	Grants of ELR under backlog criteria	Non compliance refusals under backlog criteria
Turkey	2,870	625	15	[5]—	100	505	5
Poland	1,865	160	[4]—	—	160	[5]—	—
Lithuania	615	130	—	—	130	[5]—	—
Romania	1,990	65	—	—	60	5	—
Slovakia	75	90	—	—	90	—	—
Czech Republic	1,790	50	—	—	50	—	—
Latvia	520	15	—	—	15	—	—
Estonia	455	5	—	—	5	—	—
Bulgaria	85	40	—	—	10	30	—
Cyprus	25	75	[5]—	—	—	75	—
Slovenia	5	—	—	—	—	—	—
Hungary	15	[5]—	—	—	—	[5]—	—

[1] Figures rounded to nearest 5, with [5] = 1 or 2
[2] Information is of initial determination decisions, excluding the outcome of appeals or other subsequent decisions
[3] January to May only
[4] Not available
[5] = 1 or 2.

Deportations

Mr. Sanders: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many people have been deported from the UK in each of the last five years for which figures are available. [116485]

Mrs. Roche: The numbers of people removed or departing voluntarily from the United Kingdom under port, illegal entry or deportation procedures between 1995 and 1999 are shown in the table.

Passengers refused entry and removed and persons removed or departing voluntarily as a result of illegal entry or deportation action [1], 1995 to 1999

	1995	[2]1996	1997	1998	[2,3]1999
Passengers refused entry and removed	18,950	21,430	24,540	27,600	31,300
Removals and voluntary departures under illegal entry procedures[1]	3,160	3,460	4,540	5,580	5,220
Removals and voluntary departures under deportation procedures[1]	1,920	2,000	2,070	1,720	1,150
Total	24,030	26,880	31,140	34,900	37,660

[1] Includes only those voluntary departures taking place after the initiation of such action
[2] Data are revised
[3] 1999 data are provisional

Note:

Data are rounded to 10

Animal Experiments

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) what experiments took place under licence at Wickham Research Laboratories, Wickham, Hampshire, in each of the last two years; what animals were involved; and if he will make a statement; [116939]

(2) how many applications for licences for experiments in the Wickham Research Laboratories, Wickham, Hampshire have been made in each of the last five years; and how many applications were successful. [116940]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: Section 24 of the Animals (Scientific Procedures) Act 1986 prevents disclosure of detailed information about individual establishments licensed under the Act that has been given in confidence.

Wickham Laboratories Ltd. has agreed to release the following information about its work. Wickham Laboratories Ltd. has applied for three project licences under the Animals (Scientific Procedures) Act 1986 during the last five years and currently holds three licences under the 1986 Act. The establishment undertakes mandatory safety testing of pharmaceutical and medical products. The animals used are rabbits, guinea pigs and mice.

We are reviewing section 24 in the context of the Freedom of Information legislation.

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many laboratory rodents were killed in each of the last four years as a result of scientific procedures; and if he will make a statement. [116715]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: Information on the number of rodents killed as a result of their use in scientific procedures is not collected centrally by the Home Office. The number of rodents used in scientific procedures is set out in Table 1a of the Statistics of Scientific Procedures on Living Animals Great Britain published annually. Figures for 1999 are being collected now and will be published in July. Figures for the four years up to 1998 are as follows:

	Number
1995	2,270,097
1996	2,304,483
1997	2,248,094
1998	2,243,377

These figures represent the number of rodents on which scientific procedures were started during the reporting year. Almost all of these animals would have been killed when the procedures were completed, but this would not necessarily have been in the same year.

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many scientific procedures were started on laboratory animals in 1999–2000 and in each of the previous three years. [116718]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: The number of scientific procedures carried out by species of animal and primary purpose of procedure is set out in Table 1 of the Statistics of Scientific Procedures on Living Animals Great Britain published annually. Figures for 1999 are not yet available and will be published in July. Those for the previous three years are as follows:

	Number
1996	2,716,587
1997	2,635,969
1998	2,659,662

Prisons (Drug Free Units)

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many drug free units there were in (a) men's and (b) women's prisons, and how many (i) male and (ii) female inmates there were in such units, in England and Wales on 1 February. [116827]

Mr. Boateng: The table shows the latest available figures for voluntary testing units sub-divided by male/female prisons.

Voluntary testing units in prison establishments

	Prisons with unit	Capacity
Male	56	6,350
Female	5	223
Mixed—Male/Female	2	56
Total	63	6,629

Prisons (Segregation Units)

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what his policy is on who should adjudicate on breaches of prison rules by inmates held in a segregation unit in a prison in England and Wales; and if he will make a statement. [116828]

Mr. Boateng: The Prison Rules and Young Offender Institution Rules give authority to conduct adjudications to the governor of the establishment, or the controller in the case of contracted out prisons. Any governor, or controller who conducts an adjudication must have been specifically trained for the purpose.

Speeding Fines

Mr. Gibb: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what was the revenue from speeding fines (i) nationally and (ii) in each police area in (a) 1992–93, (b) 1993–94, (c) 1994–95, (d) 1995–96, (e) 1996–97, (f) 1997–98 and (g) 1998–99. [116947]

Mr. Charles Clarke: Information on the revenue raised from speeding fines is not available.

However, the table shows the total amount of fines ordered to be paid following conviction for speeding offences. As the majority of such offences are dealt with by the issue of a fixed penalty, the table also shows the total amount of fixed penalties ordered to be paid. The readily available information relates to the calendar years 1992 to 1997. Information for 1998 and 1999 is not yet available.

Not all fines and fixed penalties will have been paid.

Total amount of fines and fixed penalties ordered to be paid for speeding offences—England and Wales 1992 to 1997

£000

	1992	1993	1994	1995	1996	1997
Fines
Avon and Somerset	532	408	376	621	479	798
Bedfordshire	139	89	75	89	73	177
Cambridgeshire	127	233	131	135	463	453
Cheshire	175	148	100	49	99	400
Cleveland	79	48	30	43	58	51
Cumbria	478	494	245	197	223	240
Derbyshire	251	226	226	241	317	318
Devon and Cornwall	343	258	399	395	377	496
Dorset	94	115	131	101	115	95
Durham	90	82	69	50	41	47
Essex	1,121	965	793	608	627	644
Gloucestershire	284	317	254	266	304	185
Greater Manchester	725	807	925	1,141	1,017	942
Hampshire	693	631	686	820	778	610
Hertfordshire	169	150	172	243	179	352
Humberside	117	135	82	105	129	122
Kent	239	444	491	296	233	255
Lancashire	476	269	234	268	395	438
Leicestershire	220	329	238	186	137	152
Lincolnshire	264	223	110	23	164	234
City of London	14	6	6	17	14	17
Merseyside	128	116	247	541	331	285
Metropolitan Police	1,053	1,319	1,254	1,261	1,310	1,403
Norfolk	308	191	113	100	137	193
Northamptonshire	146	138	85	64	22	19
Northumbria	322	282	275	254	151	216
North Yorkshire	197	135	127	137	170	313
Nottinghamshire	52	32	30	36	49	75
South Yorkshire	251	192	174	211	252	294
Staffordshire	206	195	161	233	174	387
Suffolk	198	216	154	168	133	178
Surrey	203	173	131	115	162	227
Sussex	299	282	333	281	338	477
Thames Valley	532	574	778	959	981	1,325
Warwickshire	214	230	127	201	200	198
West Mercia	304	453	347	334	337	382
West Midlands	366	413	407	651	586	580
West Yorkshire	455	422	451	416	418	499
Wiltshire	363	272	274	261	323	582
Dyfed-Powys	69	54	54	60	90	95
Gwent	108	175	148	120	258	372
North Wales	211	148	154	142	166	163
South Wales	81	84	79	71	95	233
Total	12,697	12,475	11,676	12,512	12,904	15,523
Fixed penalties
Avon and Somerset	574	298	237	211	240	292
Bedfordshire	91	97	99	142	225	348
Cambridgeshire	422	324	221	293	255	593
Cheshire	541	255	132	165	333	431
Cleveland	286	118	105	181	158	130
Cumbria	282	287	203	226	185	195
Derbyshire	348	283	402	469	624	698
Devon and Cornwall	344	562	1,037	1,043	1,163	1,446
Dorset	378	416	497	546	399	447
Durham	196	156	171	167	125	129
Essex	850	623	911	1,227	902	1,925
Gloucestershire	263	162	224	191	182	250
Greater Manchester	1,051	1,200	1,261	2,224	1,947	2,188
Hampshire	632	795	1,254	1,196	1,085	1,098
Hertfordshire	162	188	404	452	474	704
Humberside	307	194	156	222	365	389
Kent	495	438	461	500	690	1,148
Lancashire	405	322	318	515	821	953
Leicestershire	226	262	210	165	184	224
Lincolnshire	372	307	183	295	278	264
City of London	24	6	25	17	15	21
Merseyside	398	345	735	748	692	472
Metropolitan Police	1,729	1,612	1,668	1,876	2,030	1,820

Total amount of fines and fixed penalties ordered to be paid for speeding offences—England and Wales 1992 to 1997

£000

	1992	1993	1994	1995	1996	1997
Norfolk	342	162	150	146	195	196
Northamptonshire	164	92	71	46	81	149
Northumbria	491	395	350	413	738	1,028
North Yorkshire	270	227	245	250	387	467
Nottinghamshire	51	35	58	70	159	185
South Yorkshire	692	558	649	745	896	1,562
Staffordshire	357	355	496	430	699	902
Suffolk	208	211	212	295	283	291
Surrey	344	245	136	266	520	214
Sussex	512	679	742	514	862	1,005
Thames Valley	551	860	2,055	2,003	1,988	2,131
Warwickshire	156	106	116	123	146	74
West Mercia	497	485	486	507	677	616
West Midlands	453	382	413	445	573	375
West Yorkshire	752	602	530	524	594	964
Wiltshire	465	388	524	529	434	453
Dyfed-Powys	200	187	211	233	227	268
Gwent	104	136	90	104	171	211
North Wales	290	252	262	326	353	366
South Wales	212	182	166	168	446	889
Total	17,485	15,790	18,899	21,207	23,802	28,510

Income-related Fines

Mr. Gibb: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what assessment his Department has made of relevant overseas practice in relation to income-related fines. [116946]

Mr. Charles Clarke: No research has been conducted recently into use of income-related fines overseas.

EU Justice and Home Affairs Council

Mr. Hood: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what was the outcome of the Justice and Home Affairs Council held in Brussels on 27 March; and if he will make a statement. [116833]

Mr. Straw: The Minister of State, my hon. Friend the Member for Hornsey and Wood Green (Mrs. Roche), represented the United Kingdom at the Council. The main matters dealt with were as follows:

'A points'

The list of 'A' points was agreed in full, including, among other things, the Europol Work Programme for 2000; the exchange of information in the evaluation of risks and control of new synthetic drugs; and the Council Decision concerning the better exchange of information in order to fight the use of counterfeit travel documents.

Open Debate on the protection of victims in the European Judicial Area

The priority being given to improving the position of victims in the European Union was welcomed wholeheartedly by the Council. The Commission's consultation paper was regarded as the basis for future work. All member states had domestic schemes to assist victims, but it was agreed that action was needed at Union level to ensure adequate protection for those who were victims abroad. The right to compensation was also discussed.

Adoption of the Agenda

In view of ongoing discussions between Spain and the United Kingdom, in consultation with the Government of Gibraltar, the Presidency dropped four items (Insolvency, Service of Documents, Eurodac Regulations, Mandate for a parallel Dublin Agreement with Norway and Iceland) from the meeting's agenda, since the outstanding issue on these dossiers was the question of application to Gibraltar.

Tampere Score-Board

There was a presentation by the Commission. The Council gave broad endorsement to the objectives, structure and deadlines set out in the Commission Score-Board, as a political, not legal, commitment. It was acknowledged that the document should be flexible, with deadlines and substance being kept under review. A revised version would be presented for review once per Presidency. Member states set out their priorities, with the next Presidency giving a detailed picture of its Presidency objectives.

Counterfeiting the euro

There was political agreement, subject to one member state's parliamentary scrutiny reserve. The Commission announced its intention to bring forward a supplementary instrument including provisions on co-operation, training and exchange of information.

Draft Mutual Legal Assistance Convention

Agreement was reached on outstanding issues except territorial scope and data protection. The draft Convention would be submitted for adoption at the May Council, following further consultation and consideration.

Framework Decision establishing Joint Teams to conduct criminal investigators in one or more member state

Member states remained divided as to the most appropriate means of implementing the paragraph of the Tampere conclusions calling for the establishment without delay of Joint Investigation Teams to conduct criminal investigations. The issue would be remitted back to the appropriate working group.

The prevention and control of organised crime: a European strategy for the beginning of the new Millennium

The text of the strategy was approved and would be published in the Official Journal in due course.

Collective Evaluation preliminary country reports on Czech Republic and Hungary

The Council noted the reports by the Collective Evaluation Working Group. The importance of Justice and Home Affairs matters in the enlargement exercise was stressed. Member states would assist applicant countries all they could, but it was considered important that pressure should continue to be placed on the applicant counties themselves. It was agreed that the Council Secretariat would prepare a document for the Enlargement Working Group setting out any areas of omission or weakness identified in the country reports.

Brussels II Regulation (proposal for a Council Regulation on jurisdiction and the recognition and enforcement of judgments in matrimonial matters and in matters of parental responsibility for joint children)

Substantial progress was made on this item, subject to the outstanding issue of territorial scope. The United Kingdom did not lift its parliamentary reserve and in that respect the reference in the press statement by the Council reporting on the outcome of the proceedings that "political agreement" has been reached on the draft instrument was incorrect.

Brussels I Regulation (proposal for a Council Regulation on jurisdiction and the recognition and enforcement of judgments in civil and commercial matters)

The Presidency gave a 'state of play' report on discussion of the draft Regulation. It was noted that the European Parliament's opinion was awaited. The Commission announced its intention to propose an amendment to Article 15 of the Regulation to make clear that it applied to distance contract only.

Charter of Fundamental Rights

The Presidency gave a 'state of play' report on discussions. A final draft would be prepared by June and adopted by the end of October, for submission to the European Council. Major issues such as scope, legal status and relationship with the European Court of Human Rights would be considered once agreement had been reached on the body of the text. There was no discussion.

Commission's proposal for a European Refugee Fund

The Presidency gave the state of play, reporting on discussion in the Strategic Committee on Immigration, Frontiers and Asylum, noting the need for the proposal to be clearer on the aims and target of the fund, on future financing and on the allocation criteria. The Commission was invited to bring forward a proposal on temporary protection as soon as possible.

Following discussion, the Commission expressed the hope that the proposal could be adopted during the current Presidency.

Revision of the Dublin Convention

The Commission paper (analysing the current problems with the operation of the Dublin Convention and considering alternatives for a replacement Title IV measure) was generally welcomed. The Commission planned to consult widely. A proposal would then be made at the turn of the year.

High Level Working Group on Asylum and Migration

The Presidency noted that the Action Plan on Albania and the neighbouring region had now been agreed by the High Level Working Group and would go to the General Affairs Council for adoption in June. New working methods had been established to take forward the implementation of all the Action Plans.

United Kingdom Drugs Initiative

We provided information on the United Kingdom Initiative for European Union action to tackle drugs with the aim of achieving a drug-free enlarged Union. The Presidency asked the Committee of Permanent Representatives to remit this to the Article 36 committee to take forward.

German Initiative on Public Contract Law

Germany introduced its initiative for a Framework Decision to establish uniform minimum standards under criminal law for unlawful/uncompetitive behaviour in the award of public contracts.

Relations with Mediterranean countries

An Israeli request to increase the dialogue on judicial co-operation between the European Union and Mediterranean countries through the Barcelona process was noted by the Council.

Asylum conference

The Presidency confirmed that it would host a joint conference with the Commission in Portugal on 15–16 June, on asylum issues.

Recidivism (Canada)

Dr. Palmer: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will study the reasons for the fall in recidivism in Canada; and if he will make a statement. [116745]

Mr. Charles Clarke: The Government are taking account of the work in North America, including Canada, in reducing recidivism when developing their own policies to reduce reconvictions of offenders. In particular, when developing the accredited offender programmes for offenders in the prison and probation services.

Evidence on what works in reducing offending is summarised in the Home Office Research Series Number 187, 'Reducing Offending', published in 1998, in particular Chapter 8, which deals with effective interventions with offenders and references many United States of America and Canadian reports. Close contact is maintained with those working in Canada, and a recent Home Office seminar was given by Dr. James Bonta from the Canadian Department of Corrections.

The Joint Accreditation Panel, set up in 1999 under the chairmanship of Sir Duncan Nichol to accredit offender programmes in the prison and probation services, includes several members from North America.

Postal Voters

Mr. Sanders: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list the parliamentary constituencies ranked from highest to lowest by (a) number of postal voters and (b) postal voters as a percentage of registered electors. [116723]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: The lists of parliamentary constituencies ranked by the number of postal voters at the 1997 general election and postal voters as a percentage of registered electors as at the 1997 general election have been placed in the Library.

Domestic Violence

Mr. Sheerman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what measures he plans to introduce to combat domestic violence against women. [116944]

Mr. Boateng: We are taking forward the agenda for action set out in "Living without Fear: an integrated approach to tackling violence against women" which the Home Office, in conjunction with the Women's Unit, published last year.

Most recently, in addition to the new multi-agency guidance for addressing domestic violence which we issued in early March, the Government have issued more detailed guidance specifically for Health Service professionals. Similar guidance for the police will be issued shortly. Projects on domestic violence within the violence against women initiative of the Crime Reduction Programme will be funded from June.

Police Numbers (Hampshire)

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what was the change in (a) total police strength, (b) the number of police constables and (c) the number of special constables in (i) Hampshire and (ii) each division within Hampshire, between (1) 1992 and 1997 and (2) 1997 and the latest date for which figures are available; and if he will make a statement. [117037]

Mr. Charles Clarke: The available information is set out in the table. I understand from the Chief Constable that as a consequence of boundary changes to the Division over the years specified and because of further boundary changes being implemented from 1 April, that will make the territorial divisions more co-terminous with local authority boundaries, it is not possible to provide information on police numbers on a divisional basis which would be comparable or helpful.

Hampshire constabulary—police numbers for 1992, 1997 and 1999

	31 March 1992[1]	Increase	31 March 1997	Increase/Decrease	30 September 1999
Police Officers	3,211	+241	3,452	−41	3,411
Constables	2,484	+214	2,698	−63	2,635
Special Constables	529[2]	+82	611	+109	720

[1] Figures for 1992 are a pure headcount of staff numbers. From 1995 information on police numbers was collected on a full-time equivalent basis following changes to police regulations to allow the employment of part-time police officers.
[2] Information on the numbers of special constables was collected only annually. This figure is therefore for 31 December 1991.

Oakington Detention Centre

Mr. Lidington: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) how many asylum seekers and dependants are being held at Oakington Detention Centre; [117099]

(2) how many asylum seekers have been held at Oakington Detention Centre since it opened; and in how many of those cases the initial decision on an application was made during the asylum seeker's stay at Oakington. [117248]

Mrs. Roche: As of midnight on 30 March, 47 asylum applicants had been detained at Oakington Reception Centre since it opened. Of these, 21 have so far received a decision on their claim while at Oakington and the remainder are at various stages of consideration. 24 applicants, but no dependants, were detained at midnight on 30 March.

Mr. Lidington: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is his policy on allowing detainees at Oakington temporarily to leave the centre. [117100]

Mrs. Roche: The purpose of Oakington is to deal with straightforward asylum claims in about seven days. If a decision cannot be taken within this period, the applicant will either be transferred to an ordinary detention centre or given temporary admission. As the process for consideration of the asylum claim will be very intensive, applicants will not be allowed to leave the site unless absolutely necessary, for example to attend a hospital out patient appointment.

Mr. Lidington: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many detainees have been permitted temporarily to leave Oakington Detention Centre; how many have failed to return; and if he will make a statement. [117098]

Mrs. Roche: As of midnight on 30 March, no detainees had been released from the Oakington Reception Centre subject to a condition that they return there.

Mr. Lidington: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many asylum seekers have been dispersed from Oakington Detention Centre before a decision on their case has been made; where they have dispersed to; and if he will make a statement. [117249]

Mrs. Roche: As of midnight on 30 March, one detainee had been released from the Oakington Reception Centre before a decision on his case had been made. This applicant was granted temporary admission to reside with relatives and was not dispersed under the interim dispersal arrangements.

Global Cultural Diversity Congress

Mr. Lidington: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he expects to receive the report of the Liquidator of Global Cultural Diversity Congress Ltd; and when he expects that report to be available to members of the Commission for Racial Equality. [117250]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: The issue of reports produced as part of the liquidation process is a matter for the Liquidator.

Rachel Nickell Murder

Mr. Mackinlay: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many (a) serving and (b) retired police officers who took part in the Rachel Nickell murder inquiry (1) have had documents seized by the Metropolitan police; and if he will make a statement; [117107]

(2) have (i) been subject to disciplinary action and (ii) been interviewed by (A) CIB and (B) SO13. [116967]

Mr. Charles Clarke: The Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis informs me that this information is not readily available. I will write to my hon. Friend as soon as I have received it.

Operation Nightshade

Mr. Mackinlay: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department, pursuant to his answer of 16 March 2000, Official Report, column 268W, what was the purpose and cost of Operation Nightshade; and when it was completed. [116965]

Mr. Charles Clarke: The Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis informs me that Operation Nightshade was an investigation into the activities of criminals involved with importation of drugs, the supply of firearms and money laundering. It was completed in June 1994. He also informs me that information about the cost of the Operation is not available.

Keith Green

Mr. Mackinlay: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department, pursuant to his answer of 16 March 2000, Official Report, column 269W on Mr. Keith Green, if the officer who interviewed Mr. Keith Green in the hospital wing of Brixton Prison on 16 December 1997 was the officer referred to in his answer relating to the interview of 9 December 1997; and if he will make a statement. [117014]

Mr. Charles Clarke: The Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis informs me that the answer is yes.

Mr. Mackinlay: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when (a) the Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis and (b) the PCA received the report of the investigating officer into the complaint of Keith Green; and what has been the cause of delay in its completion. [117017]

Mr. Charles Clarke: The Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis informs me that the investigating officer's report was received by the Complaints Investigation Branch on 23 June 1999 and not sent to the Police Complaints Authority (PCA). The Complaints Investigation Branch wrote to the PCA on the 10 December 1999 to inform them of the decision of the Crown Prosecution Service not to proceed further with the complaint. He also informs me there was no delay in the completion of the investigation.

Mr. Roger Crooks

Mr. Mackinlay: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department, pursuant to his answer of 16 March 2000, Official Report, column 268W, for what purpose Roger Crooks was interviewed by SO13 on 24 June 1994; and if he will make a statement. [116964]

Mr. Charles Clarke: The Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis informs me that officers of SO13 interviewed Mr. Roger Crooks on 21 June 1994 about matters that involved the supply of firearms.

Mr. Mackinlay: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department, pursuant to his answer of 16 March 2000, Official Report, column 268W, on which occasions, subsequent to 24 June 1994, Roger Crooks has been interviewed by SO13; and if he will make a statement. [116963]

Mr. Charles Clarke: The Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis tells me that there is no record that SO13 interviewed Roger Crooks after 21 June 1994.

Detective Keith Pedder

Mr. Mackinlay: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department under what powers manuscripts and other documents belonging to former detective Keith Pedder were (a) seized and (b) continue to be held; and if Keith Pedder is entitled to have access to them. [117016]

Mr. Charles Clarke: I refer to the reply I gave my hon. Friend on 16 March 2000, Official Report, column 268W. The Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis tells me that the documentation forms part of an ongoing investigation and that it would not be appropriate for him to comment further at this stage.

Mr. Mackinlay: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will write to the hon. Member for Thurrock when the inquiry into the complaint of former detective Keith Pedder is completed. [117013]

Mr. Charles Clarke: Yes.

Police Complaints Process

Mr. Mackinlay: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department, pursuant to his answer of 16 March 2000, Official Report, column 267W, on the CIB/Kent police investigation, what was the purpose and cost of the CIB/Kent police investigation; and when it was completed. [116966]

Mr. Charles Clarke: The Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis informs me that the purpose was to investigate the criminal activities of persons involved in the supply of drugs. The combined cost of the Criminal Investigation Bureau/Kent investigation was in the region of £417,000. It was completed in November 1999.

Operation Cornwall

Mr. Mackinlay: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the estimated cost, to date, of Operation Cornwall. [117015]

Mr. Charles Clarke: The Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis informs me that it would be inappropriate, for operational reasons, to provide details of the costs associated with this ongoing inquiry.

Prison Service

Mr. Pickthall: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many women are employed in the Prison Service; and what proportion this represents of the total work force. [116850]

Mr. Boateng: The total number of women employed in the Prison Service in England and Wales on 29 February 2000 was 11,639. This represents 26.7 per cent. of the total work force.

DNA Samples

Mr. Webb: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what plans he has to legislate to allow DNA samples given voluntarily by members of the public in the course of a police investigation to be retained by the police provided consent has been given by the donor. [117283]

Mr. Charles Clarke: This proposal was included in the consultation exercise on "Proposals for Revising Legislative Measures on Fingerprints, Footprints and DNA Samples", launched on 30 July 1999. We are now considering the most appropriate way to take these proposals forward.

Metropolitan Police Vehicles

Mr. Coaker: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) what assessment he has made of the effectiveness of the Metropolitan police PFI contract for vehicle supply and maintenance; [117333]

(2) what recent representations he has received from the Nottinghamshire police about the effectiveness of the Metropolitan police PFI contract for vehicle supply and maintenance. [117332]

Mr. Charles Clarke: The Chairman of the Nottinghamshire Police Authority wrote to my right hon. Friend the Home Secretary on 2 March seeking information about the Metropolitan Police Service contract for the repair and maintenance of its vehicle fleet. It is for the Metropolitan police to assess the effectiveness of the contract. I understand from the Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis that the monitoring of repairs has shown some work not up to the required standard and that the Metropolitan police is taking a rigorous approach with the contractor in addressing those concerns.

Firearms

Mr. Corbett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the average time taken for (a) issuing and (b) renewing firearm certificates and shotgun licences in (i) Devon and Cornwall, (ii) Avon and Somerset, (iii) South Wales, (iv) Northumberland, (v) West Midlands and (vi) Cambridgeshire; and what the figures were in each of the previous five years. [117525]

Mr. Charles Clarke: The information is not kept centrally, but I understand from the forces concerned that the average number of weeks taken for issuing and renewing firearm certificates and shotgun licences is given in the tables.

	Issue		Renewal
	Firearms	Shotguns	Firearms	Shotguns
Devon and Cornwall	10–12	10–12	10–12	10–12
Avon and Somerset	6	6	8	8
South Wales	8–10	6–8	8–10	6–8
Northumbria	6–8	6–8	6–8	6–8
West Midlands	4	4	4	4
Cambridgeshire	5.2	4.2	4.6	4.1

	1995	1996	1997	1998	1999
Devon and Cornwall	[1]—	[1]—	[1]—	[1]—	[1]—
Avon and Somerset	[1]—	[1]—	[1]—	[1]—	[1]—
South Wales
Firearms grant	6–8	6–8	6–8	6–8	6–8
Firearms renewal[2]	6–8	6–8	6–8	[1]—	[1]—
Shotgun grant	5–7	5–7	5–7	5–7	5–7
Shotgun renewal[2]	6–8	6–8	6–8	[1]—	[1]—
Northumbria
Firearms grant	6–8	6–8	6–8	6–8	6–8
Firearms renewal[3]	.5	.5	.5	[1]—	[1]—
Shotgun grant	6–8	6–8	6–8	6–8	6–8
Shotgun renewal[3]	.5	.5	.5	[1]—	[1]—
West Midlands	[1]—	[1]—	[1]—	[1]—	[1]—
Cambridgeshire
Firearms grant	4.4	5.4	4	3.8	4.3
Firearms renewal	3	5	3.1	[1]—	[1]—
Shotgun grant	3	4.7	4.6	3.4	3.6
Shotgun renewal	1.7	3.4	2.4	[1]—	[1]—

[1] Not applicable
[2] Renewals by post 1–3 weeks
[3] Postal
Note:
Not all forces were able to provide information for the previous 5 years. There were in any event no renewals in 1998 and 1999 due to the extended life of certificates from 3–5 years.

Mr. Corbett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many (a) police officers and (b) civilians are involved in the administration of firearm and shotgun controls; and what the figures were in each of the previous five years in (i) Devon and Cornwall, (ii) Avon and Somerset, (iii) Northumberland, (iv) West Midlands and (v) Cambridgeshire. [117539]

Mr. Charles Clarke: The information is not held centrally, but the information, obtained from the forces concerned, is given in the table.

	Devon & Cornwall	Avon & Somerset	Northumbria	West Midlands	Cambridgeshire
Police Officers
2000	[1]27	0	[3]150	2	0
1999	[2]22	0	25	3	0
1998	[2]22	0	25	7	0
1997	[2]22	0	25	11	0
1996	[2]22	0	25	12	0
1995	[2]22	[2]—	25	12	0

	Devon & Cornwall	Avon & Somerset	Northumbria	West Midlands	Cambridgeshire
Civilians
2000	[1]47	22	8	17	9.5
1999	10	19	8	16	9.5
1998	10	19	8	13	9.5
1997	13	19	9	12	10.5
1996	13	19	9	8	10.5
1995	13	11	9	8	10.5

[1] Also deal with other non-firearms related inquiries as part of their duties.
[2] Supported by beat officers as needed.
[3] Specifically trained to carry out firearms inquiries as well as their other duties.

Casinos

Mr. Burgon: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what responses he has received to his consultation letter regarding proposals to extend the opening hours of casinos in England and Wales; and if he will make a statement. [117693]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: I published this consultation paper on 11 November 1999 and the consultation period ended on 31 January 2000. The Home Office received 2,820 responses, mostly from casino staff. 2,809 of the responses opposed the proposals. Six were neutral and five expressed support.

Many casino staff were concerned about the impact which the proposal would have on them and their families, about the difficulties in travelling home especially for female staff in the early hours, and about more exposure to passive smoking. Some also said that management had not consulted them about the proposed change. They wanted us to regulate these employment issues by using the law rather than through employee/employer negotiations.

The unions opposed the change. They drew attention to the lack of recognition for collective bargaining purposes in casinos and to the timing of the implementation of the union recognition provisions of the Employment Relations Act 1999.

Some residents' associations were also worried about increased noise early in the morning and additional traffic.

Having considered the responses very carefully, I have nevertheless concluded that we should proceed with the proposal. The issue is not the number of responses, but the strength of the argument for restricting commercial freedom. Casinos will not be obliged to adopt longer opening hours, but they will have more flexibility to meet consumer demand and increase their competitiveness. The changes will not so significantly affect the running of casinos as to require deferment pending the outcome of the independent gambling review, which is to start after Easter. The Gaming Board for Great Britain has no objections.

The Government understand the concerns about the impact of additional operating hours on casino staff and their families or on local residents. But the Gaming Act 1968 provides a regulatory framework for gambling in the public interest and is not designed to regulate normal employer/employee relations, which is subject to employment laws and the new provisions of the Employment Relations Act 1999. We agree with the view expressed by the unions that any changes to casino hours should not be made before the union recognition provision of the Act is in force. The longer hours will not, therefore, be available until the end of July this year. In addition, it will continue to give to licensing authorities power to impose restrictions on casino hours where necessary to prevent disturbance or annoyance to the occupiers of other premises in the vicinity so that the concerns of residents can be considered.

The Scottish Executive has consulted on a similar exercise in respect of casinos in Scotland and will report the outcome separately.

We will place a revised Regulatory Impact Assessment in the Library when the Order is laid.

Written Answers to Questions

Tuesday 4 April 2000

CABINET OFFICE

Regulatory Reform

Mr. Quinn: To ask the Minister for the Cabinet Office if she will list the Ministers responsible for regulatory reform; and if she will make a statement. [117920]

Marjorie Mowlam: The Ministers for Regulatory Reform in the key regulatory Departments are:

HM Treasury—Paymaster General (Dawn Primarolo MP)

Department of Trade and Industry—Minister of State (Patricia Hewitt MP)

Department of the Environment, Transport and the Regions—Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State (Lord Whitty)

Department of Health—Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State (Lord Hunt)

Home Office—Parliamentary Under-Secretary (Mike O'Brien MP)

Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food—Minister of State (the right hon. Joyce Quin MP)

Department for Education and Employment—Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State (Margaret Hodge MP).

Ministers for Regulatory Reform in other regulatory Departments are:

Department for Culture, Media and Sport—Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State (Janet Anderson MP)

Department for Social Security—Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State (Hugh Bayley MP)

Ministry of Defence—Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State (Dr. Lewis Moonie MP)

Lord Chancellor's Department—Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State (Jane Kennedy MP).

The Ministers were appointed to drive forward the better regulation agenda throughout Government. They are charged with:

removing any regulations which are outdated or burdensome, and;

ensuring that any necessary new regulations are introduced at the least cost to business.

On 30 March the Prime Minister and I met Regulatory Reform Ministers at Downing Street to discuss progress.

Works of Art

Mr. Brake: To ask the Minister for the Cabinet Office how much has been spent on (a) the upkeep and (b) the purchase of works of art in her Department for each financial year since 1992. [117469]

Mr. Stringer: I refer the hon. Member to the answer given today by my hon. Friend the Minister for the Arts, Official Report, columns 392–93W.

Knowledge Network Computer System

Mr. Lansley: To ask the Minister for the Cabinet Office (1) who will have access to the full Knowledge Network Computer system; [117033]

(2) what information held on the Knowledge Network Computer system will not be placed on the internet; [117034]

(3) if information relating to opposition parties will be held on the Knowledge Network Computer System. [117097]

Marjorie Mowlam: Access to the full Knowledge Network will be restricted to Ministers and civil servants (including Special Advisers).

On the question of availability of information from the Knowledge Network, I refer the hon. Member to the reply given to him on 23 March 2000, Official Report, column 691W and to the letter sent on 24 March from the Secretary of the Cabinet and Head of the Home Civil Service to the Chairman of the Public Administration Select Committee, a copy of which I am placing in the Library of both Houses.

EDUCATION AND EMPLOYMENT

Footballers

Mr. Brady: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment, pursuant to his answer of 27 March 2000, Official Report, column 42W, if it is the Government's policy to (a) support or (b) oppose the exemptions from EU employment law which are being sought by UEFA in its negotiations with the European Commission. [117625]

Ms Hodge: No specific proposals have yet emerged from the EC. The Government expect that all member states would have the opportunity to discuss any possible changes to EU employment law. Consultation with national sporting bodies and other interested parties would be an important element of this.

Disability Equipment and Services

Mr. Boswell: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what response he has made to the Audit Commission's report, "Fully Equipped", on the provision of disability equipment and services. [117367]

Ms Hodge: I welcome the contribution to improving services for disabled people of the Audit Commission's report "Fully Equipped", which was addressed to the Department of Health.

The hon. Gentleman may wish to refer to the response given by my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister to my hon. Friend the Member for Birmingham, Hall Green (Mr. McCabe) on 29 March 2000, Official Report, column 336, regarding the Government's intentions following publication of this report.

Regulatory Reform

Mr. Cotter: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment which Minister in his Department has responsibility for regulatory reform; and if he will make a statement. [117421]

Ms Hodge: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given today to my hon. Friend the Member for Scarborough and Whitley (Mr. Quinn) by my right hon. Friend the Minister for the Cabinet Office.

Higher Education

Mr. Boswell: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what studies he has made of the relative attractiveness and cost of study at United Kingdom higher education institutions compared with those in (a) developed anglophone countries and (b) other members of the European Union, for overseas students (i) in receipt of and (ii) without bursaries from public funds. [117363]

Mr. Wicks: The Government commissioned the British Council last year, as part of the initiative to bring more international students to the UK, to research the relative attractiveness and the actual and perceived costs of studying in the UK compared with other developed anglophone countries. No distinction was made between students with or without bursaries. The summary of this research, the Brand Report, is available on the EducationUK website at www.educationuk.org. We have made no similar studies on other European Union member countries.

Young Children (Hearing Loss)

Mr. Boswell: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if he will make a statement about the current responsibilities of his Department towards supporting the language and educational development of children under two years of age with a recognised hearing loss. [117364]

Jacqui Smith: It is for local education authorities to make educational provision for children of statutory school age, and those over the age of two with a statement of special educational needs, including those with a hearing-impairment. Where appropriate, local education authorities may also make special educational provision for children under two years of age.

Teachers of the Deaf

Mr. Boswell: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment (1) how many teachers enrolled on mandatory courses leading to a qualification as a teacher of the deaf in each of the last five years; [117365]

(2) how many teachers undertook a mandatory course to train as a teacher of the deaf on a self-funding basis in each of the past five years. [117366]

Jacqui Smith: The Department does not collect this information.

School Meals

Helen Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment (1) what estimate he has made of the cost of extending free school meals to (a) all families in receipt of working families tax credit and (b) families in receipt of working families tax credit with less than half the average family income; [117142]

(2) what estimate he has made of the cost of extending free school meals to families where a parent is in receipt of the disabled person's tax credit. [117143]

Jacqui Smith [holding answer 3 April 2000]: The Department does not collect information on the cost of providing free school meals. We estimate that the annual cost in England of extending free school meals to children in full-time education (a) whose families are in receipt of working families tax credit would be over £400 million; (b) whose families are in receipt of working families tax credit with less than half the average family income would be slightly lower than £400 million; and (c) from families where a parent is in receipt of disabled person's tax credit could be in the region of £0.5 million.

We have no current plans to extend eligibility for free school meals (which would require primary legislation), but we are working closely with the Child Poverty Action Group on ways of increasing take-up by entitled pupils.

Standard Assessment Testing

Mr. Blizzard: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if he will use the number of pupils eligible for free school meals as a criterion for determining in which group a school is placed for the purpose of evaluating SATs results. [117229]

Jacqui Smith: My officials already use eligibility for free school meals as a criterion in the presentation of the Autumn Package of pupil performance information to schools.

The Autumn Package, in conjunction with the Performance and Assessment (PANDA) Report for schools produced by the Office for Standards in Education (Ofsted), allows schools to compare their Key Stage 1, 2 and 3 SAT results with other schools with similar eligibility for free school meals.

Early Years Education

Mr. Oaten: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if he will list for (a) England and (b) each local education authority in Hampshire the number of additional free early years education places that would be required to meet the Government's target of free places being available for 66 per cent. of three-year-olds by 2002. [115965]

Ms Hodge [holding answer 23 March 2000]: We shall have created 190,000 new free early years education places for three-year-olds by March 2002, at a cost of £390 million over three years. This will meet the national target of providing 66 per cent. of all three-year-olds in England with a free place.

The following table shows the estimated number of new places required in the local education authorities in the county of Hampshire to take the number of free places available in their areas to the level of the national target.

The criteria for distributing places have not yet been decided for 2001–02. The distribution will take account of factors such as social need. As a result, individual authorities may have higher or lower proportions of free places than the national average.

	Number
Hampshire	9,174
Southampton	1,080
Portsmouth	828

PRIME MINISTER

Interception of Communications

Mr. Baker: To ask the Prime Minister if he will make a statement on his policy in relation to information derived from interception of communications of United Kingdom citizens where that has been undertaken by foreign powers, and where Her Majesty's Government's policy would not have allowed such an interception to have been initiated by any of the security and intelligence agencies. [116902]

The Prime Minister [holding answer 30 March 2000]: The Interception of Communications Acts make clear that the interception of communications on a public telecommunications network in the United Kingdom may not lawfully be carried out without a warrant signed by a Secretary of State. These arrangements will be enhanced by the provisions in the Regulation of Investigatory Powers Bill, now in Standing Committee.

It would be unacceptable for our Security and Intelligence Agencies to ask foreign agencies to undertake on their behalf interception which our agencies could not lawfully carry out themselves. They do not do this.

Paternity Leave

Mr. Paul Marsden: To ask the Prime Minister what considerations underlie his policy on paternity leave; and if he will make a statement. [117292]

The Prime Minister: The Maternity and Parental Leave Regulations 1999 give both employed parents of a child born or placed for adoption after 15 December 1999 a minimum entitlement of 13 weeks unpaid parental leave during the first five years of parenthood. These regulations implement the Parental Leave Directive and reflect the Government's wish to help the parents of young children strike a better balance between their work and family commitments. The Government encourage employers to improve on these minimum requirements where this accords with the needs of employees and is compatible with the efficient running of the business.

Council of Ministers

Mr. Sanders: To ask the Prime Minister if he will make it his policy to publish the agenda of the Council of Ministers and make a statement to the House in advance of Council summit meetings. [116722]

The Prime Minister: We give the House each month a forecast of EU business in the months ahead, including details of the agenda of Council of Ministers meetings when available. We will maintain established procedures for briefing Parliament before and after European Councils.

BNFL

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Prime Minister what assessment he has made of the comments concerning the future of BNFL posted on the Speakers' Corner section of the Downing street interactive website. [116998]

The Prime Minister: The comments have been noted.

Correspondence

Mr. Norman: To ask the Prime Minister when he will reply to the letter of 13 March from the hon. Member for Tunbridge Wells regarding the Deputy Prime Minister. [117789]

The Prime Minister: My office has passed the hon. Member's letter to the office of my right hon. Friend the Deputy Prime Minister for reply. My right hon. Friend has asked for advice from the Parliamentary Commissioner for Standards and will reply to the hon. Member when he has received that advice.

European Council (Lisbon)

Mr. Lansley: To ask the Prime Minister if he will list the personnel who attended the European Council in Lisbon on 23 to 24 March, indicating their functions in each case. [117115]

The Prime Minister [holding answer 3 April 2000]: The composition of the United Kingdom Delegation was as follows:

Myself

The Chancellor of the Exchequer

The Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs

The Minister for Europe (Mr. Vaz).

In addition to HM Ambassador to Lisbon and the UK Permanent Representative to the European Union, the delegation comprised five No. 10 officials and one Special Adviser, six Foreign and Commonwealth Office officials, five HM Treasury officials and a single official from each of the Cabinet Office, the Department of Trade and Industry, the Department for Education and Employment and the Department of Social Security. An official from the Northern Ireland Office also travelled with the delegation for my bilateral meeting in the margins of the Council with the Taioseach. A further British official attended the European Council in his capacity as President of the Economic Policy Committee.

Staff from the British Embassy in Lisbon and UKREP Brussels provided further support to the Delegation. I, and my colleagues, were supported by the usual number of administrative, security and secure telecommunications staff associated with a visit abroad by the Prime Minister or a senior Cabinet Minister. This is in line with the practice adopted by previous Administrations.

Mr. Lansley: To ask the Prime Minister using what mode of travel, and when, (a) he, (b) the Chancellor of the Exchequer and (c) the Foreign Secretary returned to the UK from the European Council in Lisbon on 24 and 25 March. [117141]

The Prime Minister [holding answer 3 April 2000]: I returned to the UK by air on Friday 24 March 2000. My right hon. Friend the Chancellor of the Exchequer returned to the UK by air on Thursday 23 March. My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs accompanied his French counterpart on a French aircraft for a meeting in Paris on Friday 24 March and returned to London by air that evening.

All travel was undertaken fully in accordance with the rules set out in the "Ministerial Code" and "Travel by Ministers", copies of which are available in the Library.

CULTURE, MEDIA AND SPORT

Websites

Mr. Maclennan: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport if he will list the expenditure incurred by his Department, agencies and non-departmental public bodies on (a) the setting up and (b) the operation of websites, indicating the cases in which the expenditure has been above that budgeted; and if he will list for each website (i) the topics that have been covered, (ii) the current average number of hits per month and (iii) the estimated expenditure on each website for each of the next three years. [116202]

Mr. Chris Smith: The Department's new website www.culture.gov.uk was launched on 28 February.

It is designed to meet customer requirements—allowing new and regular visitors to discover more about the cultural assets of this country and the role of the Department within Government. It is a portal site which guides the browser through an array of governmental, public body and other cultural and sporting sites. The Department's news releases, publications, consultation papers and extensive contact information are all available on the site.

The site cost £80,000 to redevelop. This included costs for:

tendering the work;

site redesign and development;

the introduction of a text only version of the site to help users with visual disabilities;

the introduction of a search engine; and the incorporation of a previously separate lottery site which allows browsers to have access to information about every lottery award made since the introduction of the National Lottery.

The cost of the site redevelopment was met from the Department's 1999–2000 publicity budget—which was within budget for the year.

The operation of the site was within the budgeted £40,000.

The new site averages 34,000 hits per day, or just under 1,000 visitors per day.

Expenditure in future years to maintain the site is as given above. There are no current plans for further redevelopment of the site.

Information on the costs of non-departmental public body sites could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Regional Cultural Distinctions

Mr. Andrew George: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what plans he has to provide support for regional cultural distinctions. [116162]

Mr. Chris Smith: It is the policy of my Department to encourage greater devolution of responsibility and support to the regions. I therefore fully support, for example, the policy of the Arts Council for England to bring decisions on funding closer to those most affected by them by devolving many responsibilities to the regional arts boards. Furthermore, the Regional Cultural Consortiums have been given the task of producing regional cultural strategies which will set out how they can best support and promote each region's distinct cultural identity.

Regulatory Reform

Mr. Cotter: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport which Minister in his Department has responsibility for regulatory reform; and if he will make a statement. [117420]

Janet Anderson: I refer the hon. Member to the written answer given today to my hon. Friend the Member for Scarborough and Whitby (Mr. Quinn) by my right hon. Friend the Minister for the Cabinet Office, listing the Ministers for Regulatory Reform in the key regulatory departments.

My Department is working with a wide range of other Government Departments to identify ways of easing regulatory burdens on industries and bodies which DCMS sponsors. My Department is also actively examining many of the regulations for which it is responsible. In particular, the independent Television Commission is currently conducting an audit of all its regulatory requirements with the aim of regulating with a lighter touch.

Works of Art

Mr. Brake: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport how much has been spent on (a) the upkeep and (b) the purchase of works of art in his Department for each financial year since 1992. [117476]

Mr. Alan Howarth: The Government Art Collection (GAC), part of the Department for Culture, Media and Sport, acquires and displays works of art by British artists in major Government buildings in the UK and around the world. In so doing it plays a significant role in promoting British art and culture across diverse and international environments.

The cost of purchases, transport/installation and the conservation and framing of works of art in the Collection are met from the GAC's Annual Programme Vote. Within this overall figure, the amounts spent on each of these elements varies from year to year:

£

Year	Upkeep (Conservation and Framing)	Purchase
1992–93	148,204	137,843
1993–94	141,022	122,542
1994–95	142,200	127,155
1995–96	158,177	82,471
1996–97	123,285	122,826
1997–98	104,100	137,000
1998–99	108,300	126,600
1999–2000	87,350	184,672

The GAC operates across Government, lending its works of art for display in a variety of Departments. Within any given year the number and disposition of its works of art within any given Department varies according to circumstances. It is therefore not possible to break down the figures for upkeep and purchase of works of art in the Collection in relation to the individual Departments in which they are displayed.

HEALTH

Unused Drugs

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what was the quantity and value of unused drugs returned to pharmacists for disposal for each year since 1995; and if he will make a statement. [116365]

Mr. Denham: Information on the quantity and value of unused medicines is not collected centrally. It is important both that patients take the medicines they need, and that they are not prescribed more medicines than they need, since this wastes money which could otherwise be used to benefit other patients. We have put in place a number of initiatives to reduce the quantity of unused medicines, such as making regular review of patients' medication by general practitioners a condition for payment of the Sustained Quality Allowance and funding pilot schemes where pharmacists manage repeat prescriptions, including checking that patients are taking the medicines that they have been prescribed and actually need further supplies. We will consider extending this initiative if the results of the pilots show that this reduces waste.

Prescription Charges

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how much was collected from prescription charges in the last year for which figures are available. [116876]

Ms Stuart: In 1998–99 prescription charge revenue in England, including fees from the sale of pre-payment certificates, was £341 million.

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list the income received from prescription charges by constituency in the last year for which figures are available. [116878]

Ms Stuart: Information about charge revenue is not collected in England in the form requested.

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what estimate he has made of the administrative cost of changing prescription charges by 10 pence. [116877]

Ms Stuart: These costs are not identified separately within the administrative costs of the Department and National Health Service bodies in England.

Pharmacy Strategy

Mr. Love: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what progress has been made in the preparation of the pharmacy strategy; and if he will make a statement. [116696]

Ms Stuart: We are considering how pharmacists can best contribute to our agenda for the modernisation of primary care, in the light of the National Priorities Guidance for the National Health Service we published last December and the key challenges set out by my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister in his statement on NHS modernisation on 22 March 2000, Official Report, columns 982–83W.

Antidepressant Drugs

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what was the cost in the last year for which figures are available to the National Health Service of the prescribing of drugs to combat depression. [116977]

Ms Stuart: The net ingredient of prescription items dispensed in the community for antidepressant drugs in England in 1998 was £279 million. Information on antidepressant drugs dispensed in hospitals is not available.

The data are based on items and cover all prescriptions dispensed by community pharmacists, appliance contractors, dispensing doctors and prescriptions submitted by prescribing doctors for items personally administered. The data cover all prescriptions dispensed in England and exclude prescriptions written in England but dispensed outside England.

The net ingredient cost (NIC) is the basic cost of a drug and does not take account of discounts, dispensing costs, fees or prescription charges income.

Antidepressant drugs are contained in the British National Formulary section 4.3—antidepressant drugs.

The data do not include dispensing in hospital or private prescriptions.

Clinical Negligence

Mr. Edward Davey: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many (a) clinical negligence cases and (b) clinical negligence cases related to radiotherapy treatment, have been settled out of court in the past two years by each health authority; what has been the cost to health authorities of settling (i) clinical negligence cases and (ii) clinical negligence cases related to radiotherapy treatment, out of court over the past two years; and if he will make a statement. [117269]

Ms Stuart: Historically, data on numbers of claims have not been collected centrally.

The total costs for all clinical negligence claims for the last available two years are:

1996–97: £235 million

1997–98: £144 million.

Figures for 1998–99 are not yet available. It should also be noted that, due to changes to accounting practice required by the National Audit Office, these figures are not directly comparable.

It is not possible to say what proportion of clinical negligence claims are settled out of court, or which relate to radiotherapy treatment.

Meningitis Vaccinations

Mr. Harvey: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what assessment he has made of (a) the cost to the NHS of providing a nationwide meningitis vaccination programme and (b) the total number of people for whom such a programme would be clinically appropriate; and if he will make a statement. [116681]

Yvette Cooper [holding answer 3 April 2000]: Meningococcal infection can affect anyone of any age. However, the greatest number of cases and deaths occur in the under 18s and hence the prioritisation within this age band. By the end of the year the new meningococcal Group C conjugate vaccine will have been offered to all under 18s. The cost of the programme will include vaccine purchase, distribution and local implementation through schools and primary care. We will not know the full costs until the programme is completed later in the year.

National ME Centre

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) how many beds are currently available at the National ME Centre; [117515]

(2) how many people are currently waiting for a bed at the National ME Centre; and for what periods of time they have been waiting. [117516]

Ms Stuart: The information requested is not collected centrally. The National Myalgic Encephalomyelitis Centre and Centre for Fatigue syndromes is not a National Health Service organisation but a registered charity which is based at the Disablement Services Centre at Harold Wood Hospital.

DEFENCE

Defence Agencies

Mr. Ernie Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement about the Defence Agency status of Military Survey and the Joint Air Reconnaissance Intelligence Centre. [117834]

Mr. Spellar: On 10 May 1999 I announced that the Military Survey and Joint Air Reconnaissance Intelligence Centre (JARIC) Defence Agencies were to be merged into a single combined Agency, Official Report, columns 19–20W. The Defence Geographic and Imagery Intelligence Agency (DGIA) will be launched today.

DGIA will be based at four main UK sites: Feltham in West London, Brampton near Huntingdon, Tolworth in Surrey and Hermitage near Newbury. The Headquarters will be Feltham alongside its largest business unit, the Defence Geographic Centre. DGIA will have some 1,700 staff; over half will be civilians and all three Services will be represented.

The Agency will act as the Department's centre of excellence for the production of imagery intelligence and geographic information in support of current military operations, defence planning, general intelligence requirements and wider Government interests.

The Agency has the following Key Targets for the year 2000–01.

Key Target 1

To satisfy operational requirements for imagery intelligence and geographic support within timescales and to standards agreed between the Agency and its customers as follows:

(a) For imagery intelligence, providing at least 95 per cent. of requirements overall, while delivering not less than 98 per cent. of Priority 1 tasks.

(b) For geographic support, providing 100 per cent. of geographic products and services essential to support current operations, both from the Agency's UK based capabilities and its deployable units.

Key Target 2

To achieve the required level of operational readiness in line with Defence Planning Assumptions, while continuing to meet those deployable element outputs required under Key Target 1.

Key Target 3

To satisfy strategic and contingency requirements for imagery intelligence and geographic support within timescales and to standards agreed between the Agency and its customers as follows:

(a) For imagery intelligence providing at least 85 per cent. of requirements overall, while delivering not less than 92 per cent. of Priority 1 tasks.

(b) For geographic support, completing at least 90 per cent of a customer endorsed programme of work for geographic products and services.

Key Target 4

To demonstrate a 1 per cent. improvement in the coverage of geographic information holdings and to maintain their quality for Defence use in comparison with the baseline established in 1999.

Key Target 5

To achieve a 2.5 per cent. improvement in efficiency.

Copies of the DGIA Framework Document and the Agency's first Corporate Plan will be placed in the Library of the House.

Reservists

Mr. Ernie Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if reservists will continue to be called out to support military operations in the Balkans and the region of Iraq. [117835]

Mr. Spellar: A new call-out order has been made under section 54 of the Reserve Forces Act 1996 which allows the call out of members of the reserve forces to continue so that they may support operations in Yugoslavia and in the region of Iraq. The call-out order has effect until 31 March 2001. Since NATO operations commenced in the former Yugoslavia, the reserve forces have historically provided some 10 per cent. of the total UK manpower in theatre. As in previous years, only volunteers for these duties will be called out.

Regulatory Reform

Mr. Cotter: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence which Minister in his Department has responsibility for regulatory reform; and if he will make a statement. [117413]

Dr. Moonie: I refer the hon. Member to the answer given to my hon. Friend the Member for Scarborough and Whitby (Mr. Quinn) by my right hon. Friend the Minister for the Cabinet Office and the Chancellor for the Duchy of Lancaster today.

Radiation (Chatham Dockyard)

Mr. Shaw: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when he will provide the information promised in his answer to the hon. Member for Chatham and Aylesford of 27 July 1999, Official Report, column 205W, concerning the number of former Chatham Dockyard workers who have received compensation under the no-fault scheme. [117664]

Dr. Moonie: I have written to my hon. Friend today.

Israel (Training Exercises)

Mr. Duncan Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what plans has he to send British forces to Israel for joint training exercises. [117562]

Mr. Spellar [holding answer 3 April 2000]: There are no such plans at present.

Mr. Duncan Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what meetings have been held with Israeli Government officials and his Department in the United Kingdom in the last year. [117563]

Mr. Spellar [holding answer 3 April 2000]: During the past year there have been numerous meetings between MOD and Israeli officials in the UK and a wide range of issues were discussed. Similar meetings and contacts will continue this year.

AGM-154C Joint Stand-off Weapon

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what assessment he has made of the impact which a US decision to outfit its AGM-154C Joint Stand-off Weapon with BAe Systems' Bomb Royal Ordnance Augmented Charge would have on the UK defence industry; and if he will make a statement. [116937]

Dr. Moonie: Although no decision has yet been made by the US authorities, the selection of BROACH as the preferred warhead for its Navy's Joint Stand-Off Weapon would be an important success for the UK defence industry. If successful, there would be new jobs created in both the UK and the US.

DERA

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence in which overseas countries the Defence Evaluation and Research Agency has offices; and what are their functions. [117080]

Dr. Moonie: This is a matter for the Chief Executive of the Defence Evaluation and Research Agency. I have asked the Chief Executive to write to the hon. Member.

Letter from John Chisholm to Mr. Matthew Taylor, dated 4 April 2000:

I am replying to your parliamentary question about overseas offices of the Defence Evaluation and Research Agency (DERA).

DERA has offices in Brussels and Moscow. The Brussels offices was established to develop DERA's commercial business and status in mainland Europe. This includes support to the European Commission and NATO. The Moscow office was set up as part of the DERA Programme for Partnership in Technology (PPT). The programme establishes and develops contacts between DERA scientists and those in the Russian Federation working in related fields. In some cases this has led to joint research projects being set up to the benefit of both partners. More information about both these offices may be found on the DERA website (www.dera.gov.uk/dera) under "Who we are" and then "Organisation".

I hope the above is helpful.

Israeli Ballistic Missile System

Mr. Duncan Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what discussions (a) he and (b) his officials have had in the last year with his Israeli counterpart on ballistic missile defence; and if he will make a statement. [117559]

Mr. Spellar [holding answer 3 April 2000]: Neither the Secretary of State nor officials have held discussions with the Israelis on ballistic missile defence within the last year.

Craigiehall

Miss McIntosh: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) what the area is of office space in the Craigiehall building to be occupied by Command HQ civilian and service personnel; and if the trade unions have been given this information; [116054]

(2) if he will make a statement on the risk assessment relating to the Craigiehall building to be used for Army 2 Division Headquarters under Regulation 3 of the Management of Health and Safety at Work Regulations 1992; [116045]

(3) how many personnel and what volume of office equipment can be safely accommodated in the Craigiehall building; [116052]

(4) how many (a) civilian and (b) service personnel are planned to occupy the Craigiehall building following the transfer there of Army 2 Division Headquarters; and if this information has been disclosed to the relevant trade unions; [116037]

(5) if he will estimate the numbers of (a) civilian and (b) service personnel planned to occupy Craigiehall; [116051]

(6) what investigation has been carried out in the Craigiehall building, which is to house the Army Headquarters 2 Division, to establish the extent of the use of asbestos in its fabric and whether it is safely inert; what alterations to the interior of the Craigiehall building are planned that could disturb existing asbestos installation; at what cost; and what are the health and safety implications for his Department's personnel being accommodated there; [116036]

(7) what load-bearing tests have been carried out in the Craigiehall building to establish whether it can safely accommodate the personnel and equipment needed in the reorganised Army Headquarters 2 Division; when and by whom the tests were conducted; what the findings of the tests were; and whether the report of the tests was disclosed to the trade unions; [116039]

(8) what representations he has received concerning the proposed accommodation to be provided for Army 2 Division HQ at Craigiehall; [116053]

(9) what is the total office space in the Craigiehall building to be occupied by Army Command HQ civilian and service personnel; and when the trade unions were given this information. [116038]

Mr. Spellar: Following the move of the Headquarters 2 Division from York to Edinburgh, a total of up to some 262 staff posts are planned to be accommodated within Annandale Block, which is the Headquarters 2 Division HQ Building, Craigiehall. Of this total, some 204 are civilian and 58 military. Some 35 of the total number work for organisations other than Headquarters 2 Division. All these staff can be safely accommodated within the building.

The gross floor office space of the building, excluding corridors, is approximately 4,000 sq m, some 3,475 sq m of which will be utilised by Headquarters 2 Division staff. It is not possible to provide a meaningful figure of the maximum number of personnel and amount of office equipment that could be safely accommodated within the building, as the occupation of each room would be dependent on individual circumstances. Planning for reorganisation of accommodation within the building has been undertaken with due regard to The Workplace (Health, Safety and Welfare) Regulations and the Approved Code of Practice 1992, Regulation 10 (Room Dimension and Space).

The presence of asbestos as an insulator behind convected heating panels and in ceiling tiles of the building was identified in December 1997. Although it was judged to be safely inert, it was nevertheless recorded as a potential hazard and brought to the attention of all staff. In line with the requirements of the Management of Health and Safety at Work Regulations 1992, Regulation 3 (Risk Assessment), a reassessment was carried out on Annandale Block in early 1999, and the judgment was that it remains safely inert.

In addition, a Legionellosis Risk Assessment relating to the building was carried out in February this year. The assessment made a number of minor recommendations to comply with statutory obligations, and implementation of these recommendations is now in hand.

Currently, alterations relating to the reconfiguration of the reprographic room in Annandale Block are being carried out at an estimated cost of £3,400. Safe systems of work have been applied and all necessary precautions have been taken in accordance with the control of Asbestos at Work (Amendment) 1992. No further work is currently planned for the building.

An intrusive structural survey has been carried out in March this year by Posford Duvivier Scotland Ltd., Edinburgh on behalf of the Estate Adviser Scotland and this confirmed that the structural integrity of the building and, in particular, the steelwork remained sound. The survey made a number of recommendations about the positioning of heavy objects such as filing cabinets on the upper floors with which the Headquarters is complying.

The health and safety of personnel accommodated within the building, and indeed throughout the HQ 2 Division, Craigiehall remains a high priority. This will remain the case.

No formal representations have been made concerning accommodation at Craigiehall. Prior to the move of the Headquarters 2 Division from York to Edinburgh, a formal consultation document associated with the restructuring, which included cost data, was given to the national and local trade unions in October 1998. Local trade unions have been kept informed of office moves within the headquarters of HQ Scotland, Craigiehall, including internal moves within Annandale Block, on an informal basis.

National Missile Defence System

Dr. Starkey: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what assessment his Department has made of the implications for United Kingdom defence of agreeing to the use of facilities in the United Kingdom as part of the proposed national missile defence system. [116748]

Mr. Spellar: We have not received a request from the US regarding the use of facilities in the UK as part of the proposed US National Missile Defence system, nor would we expect any until after a US decision on whether or not to proceed with deployment of such a system. We would consider such a request carefully, taking account of any implications for UK defence.

Dr. Starkey: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list the dates on which he has met representatives of the US Administration in connection with United States plans for their national missile defence system. [116862]

Mr. Spellar: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Defence has discussed the issue with representatives of the US Administration on a number of occasions, including during recent talks with US Defense Secretary Cohen and others in Washington between 24 and 27 January 2000, and with US Deputy Defense Secretary Hamre in London on 21 March 2000.

Dr. Starkey: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) what requests he has had from the US Government for the use of facilities in the United Kingdom as part of their proposed national missile defence system; [116747]

(2) if the US Government have requested the upgrading of facilities at (a) Fylingdales, (b) Menwith and (c) other sites in the United Kingdom as part of proposals for their national missile defence system. [116749]

Mr. Spellar: I refer my hon. Friend to the answer I gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Newport, West (Mr. Flynn) on 30 March 2000, Official Report, column 209W.

LORD CHANCELLOR'S DEPARTMENT

Regulatory Reform

Mr. Cotter: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department which Minister in his Department has responsibility for regulatory reform; and if he will make a statement. [117425]

Jane Kennedy: I am the Minister responsible for regulatory reform in the Lord Chancellor's Department. I refer the hon. Member to the written answer given to my hon. Friend the Member for Scarborough and Whitby (Mr. Quinn) today by my right hon. Friend the Minister for the Cabinet Office.

Walter Monckton Papers

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department if the Public Record Office held discussions with Oxford University with regard to the opening of the papers of Walter Monckton at the Bodleian Library on 1 March. [117072]

Mr. Lock: The Public Record Office held no discussions with Oxford University with regard to the opening of these papers. One inquiry has been received from Oxford University about the extent to which papers relating to the abdication of Edward VIII held by the PRO were open to the public.

Appeals Tribunals

Mr. Cox: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what is the procedure for appointing members of an appeals tribunal for the hearing of applications on the granting of an incapacity benefit. [117095]

Mr. Lock: Vacancies are advertised in the national press and professional journals. Appointment is on the basis of interview and of consultation with the relevant professional community. The Lord Chancellor appoints the candidates who best demonstrate that they meet the appropriate published criteria.

Asylum Seekers

Dr. Harris: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what estimate he has made of the cost of legal aid for asylum seekers and illegal immigrants in each of the last three years. [117048]

Mr. Lock: An estimate is not possible as the Legal Services Commission does not separately identify applications made for legal aid by asylum seekers and illegal immigrants. However, the amount paid out for Legal Advice and Assistance in respect of all Immigration and Nationality matters, over the last three years, was as follows:

	£ million
1998–99	48.8
1997–98	35.2
1996–97	26.1

SCOTLAND

Regulatory Reform

Mr. Cotter: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland which Minister in his Department has responsibility for regulatory reform; and if he will make a statement. [117417]

Mr. Wilson: I am the Minister with responsibility for regulatory reform within the Scotland Office. I refer the hon. Member to the reply given today to my hon. Friend the Member for Scarborough and Whitby (Mr. Quinn) by my right hon. Friend the Minister for the Cabinet Office.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Gas and Electricity Supplies

Mr. Efford: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will make a statement on the financial difficulties caused to public utility ETM customers when extra emergency credit is given to them without advanced notification; and what is being done to safeguard their interests in the future. [114627]

Mrs. Liddell [holding answer 23 March 2000]: At the end of 1999 the Office of Gas and Electricity Management (Ofgem) asked energy suppliers to increase temporarily the amount of emergency credit (where this was available) to people using electronic token prepayment meters, so as to ensure that vulnerable customers would be protected from loss of gas or electricity supplies over the long Christmas/Millennium holiday period. For example, the amount of emergency credit available on Centrica (British Gas) after prepaid supplies had been used up was increased from £2 to £10. Ofgem decided that it would be unwise to publicise this measure—which would in some cases effectively increase consumers' level of debt because they would consume extra energy which would need to be repaid—and so the advance publicity before the holiday period merely encouraged customers to ensure that they had sufficient prepaid credit to get through the holiday, and advised them of the availability of charging points over the period.

In the event, a relatively small number of customers used a significant amount of emergency credit, such that some of the money they spent after the holiday to recharge payment cards was taken up in repaying this emergency credit rather than providing new supply. This may have come as a surprise to some customers—although the information displays on the meters would have warned them of the increased emergency credit level; and they were not obliged to use it.

The need to ensure continuing energy supplies to vulnerable consumers over the long Christmas 1999/ Millennium holiday period was very much a "one-off" problem, and the extension of emergency credit was designed to resolve any potential difficulties arising from it. The level of emergency credit has now reverted to the pre-holiday norm. Ofgem will ensure that if such a measure should be needed again, there will be a more proactive campaign of informing customers of the change.

Insolvency

Mr. Kidney: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what progress he has made in his review of the law and practice relating to insolvency. [116705]

Dr. Howells: A consultation document setting out proposals to reform the law relating to personal insolvency will be published shortly. A report on the work of the joint DTI/Treasury Review of Company Rescue Mechanisms will be submitted to Ministers in April and there will be a further consultation on the subject as soon as possible after that.

Ice Cream

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what discussions he has had with ice cream manufacturers, other than Birds Eye Walls, concerning the decision of his Department not to implement the Competition Commission's recommendations against direct distribution; and for what reasons he rejected this recommendation. [116829]

Dr. Howells: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry announced on 28 January that it was a drastic step to prevent a company from distributing its own products and he was not convinced that the Commission's remedy was necessary. He has not had discussions with any ice cream manufacturers concerning this decision.

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will list the recommendations of the Competition Commission in relation to the Birds Eye Walls ice cream inquiry, which he (a) has rejected and (b) will only partially implement, indicating the reason in each case. [116755]

Dr. Howells: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry has accepted undertakings from Birds Eye Walls in line with the interim measures recommended by the Competition Commission. No other final decisions have been taken with regard to the remedies recommended by the Competition Commission.

My right hon. Friend will announce his decisions as soon as possible.

Nuclear Installations (Safety)

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry, pursuant to his answer of 24 March 2000, Official Report, column 720W, what information he has sought from the European Commission in respect of the prospective publication date of the report of the Commission's Euratom Safety team visit to Dounreay in March 1999. [116972]

Mrs. Liddell: The report of the Commission's verification visit in March last year to Caithness (Dounreay) is a matter for the Scottish Executive which has the lead for environmental matters in Scotland. I understand from the Scottish Executive that finalisation of this report might be expected within the next three months.

Atomic Energy Constabulary

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry on how many occasions the United Kingdom Atomic Energy Constabulary has conducted investigations into alleged criminal malpractice in each year since 1990. [116999]

Mrs. Liddell: The UKAEA Constabulary is responsible for the policing of the nuclear licensed sites operated by BNFL, UKAEA and Urenco, including the protection on site and in transport of nuclear material. They therefore are responsible for investigating all the normal range of criminal offences on those sites, e.g. theft (the vast majority) and car crime. The figures are published in the UKAEA Constabulary's Annual Reports, copies of which are available in the Library of the House. The total figures for 1999–2000 (to date), which are not yet published, are 206 offences of which some 155 are theft.

Mixed Oxide Fuel

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will make it his policy to assess the merits of the report, Fundamental Deficiencies in the Quality Control of Mixed-Oxide Fuel, released by Green Peace International on 27 March. [116987]

Mrs. Liddell: I have not received a copy of the report. The Health and Safety Executive (HSE) has independently investigated and reported on the MOX fuel quality assurance data falsification issue on 18 February. A copy of this detailed report is available in the Library of the House. The Government consider that BNFL should respond to HSE's recommendations constructively, fully and by the 18 April deadline set by HSE.

BNFL

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will meet a delegation from the Socialist Environment Resources Association to discuss the future of British Nuclear Fuels. [117000]

Mrs. Liddell: If I receive a request from the Socialist Environment and Resources Association for a meeting I will give it due consideration.

Car Pricing

Ms Perham: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how many (a) e-mails, (b) letters and (c) other responses he has received on the issue of car pricing from members of the (i) public, (ii) consumer groups and (iii) industry since September 1999. [117713]

Dr. Howells: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State has received a large number of representations on the issue of car pricing, primarily from members of the public, but also from car manufacturers, car dealers and consumer groups.

Retail Measures

Mr. Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what plans he has to issue a statement informing retailers of the legal requirements regarding the sale of goods in imperial and metric measures; and if he will make a statement. [117660]

Dr. Howells: Under legislation made in 1994, goods sold loose by weight—mainly fresh foods—have been required to be priced and weighed in grams and kilograms from 1 January 2000.

The Government have publicised this in a number of ways:

(i) holding roadshows for local authority trading standards officers and providing stocks of DTI leaflets for use in the local authority education programme for retailers

(ii) a publicity campaign in the summer of 1999 consisting of the issue of free leaflets for traders and consumers and wall charts showing weight comparisons

(iii) the placing of advertisements in the trade press in the period just before Christmas 1999 aimed largely at small retailers

In total over 275,000 "selling metric" retailer leaflets (including over 6,000 in languages other than English), over 860,000 "shopping metric" consumer leaflets (including 30,000 in languages other than English) and over 140,000 wallcharts have been issued. In addition information is available in Braille and audio form.

Company Accounting

Mr. Godsiff: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what action he plans to take in the light of the recent consultations on the statutory audit requirements for smaller companies and other simplifications of small company accounting requirements. [117867]

Mr. Byers: The consultation on the statutory audit showed wide support for a significant increase in the threshold below which companies were not required to have a full statutory audit of their accounts.

I intend to raise the audit exemption threshold to the maximum level allowed under EU law—£4.8 million turnover. This will be achieved in two stages.

I shall lay an Order before both Houses as soon as possible which would raise the threshold to £1 million this year. This will bring the benefits to the majority of small companies as soon as possible. It has the potential of relieving up to 150,000 small companies from the burden of the statutory audit. We estimate the potential savings as up to £180 million a year.

I intend at a later date to lay a further Order to raise the threshold to £4.8 million, in the light of the conclusions of the independent Company Law Review on small companies. The Review group is considering whether, for companies in the range of £1 million to £4.8 million turnover, the audit should be replaced by a lighter, less costly form of assurance. I shall take their final recommendations into account before proposing what, if any, statutory requirement should replace the full audit for companies in that size range.

In addition, I have decided to simplify and reform the law on dormant companies, following a separate consultation. These proposals will relieve the regulatory burdens placed upon dormant companies. The key changes are to:

remove the requirement for dormant companies to have to pass a special resolution not to appoint auditors; require dormant companies which act as agents for other companies to disclose that fact in their annual accounts; disregard the payment of certain statutory fees for the purposes of claiming dormancy.

I have also decided that the current thresholds in the Companies Act which define small and medium companies for accounting purposes should be changed to the maxima allowed under EU law. However, this change will be made as part of the implementation of wide-ranging proposals on small companies which we expect to emerge from the Company Law Review.

Sri Lanka

Mr. Gardiner: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how much his Department has spent to promote British trade and investment in Sri Lanka annually since 1997. [117645]

Mr. Caborn: British Trade International (since 1999—previously the Department of Trade and Industry) has given financial support to British companies going on trade missions to Sri Lanka, as follows:

	Number of:
Year	Missions	Companies participating	Expenditure (£)
1997	5	109	70,200
1998	2	42	27,600
1999	4	84	54,000

Other expenditure to encourage trade and investment in Sri Lanka is part of our regional programme for the markets of Southern Asia. The following indicates expenditure on promoting Sri Lanka as part of that programme:

£

Year	Expenditure on Southern Asia	Of which expenditure on Sri Lanka
1997–98	214,916	29,660
1998–99	177,086	50,413
1999–2000	160,639	39,017

Gas-fired Power Stations

Mr. Blizzard: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry when he will review the stricter consents policy on the construction of gas-fired power stations. [117227]

Mrs. Liddell: As the Government made clear in their October 1998 Energy Sources White Paper, the stricter consents policy is a temporary measure to protect diversity and security of supply while distortions in the electricity market are removed. The Director General of Electricity Supply is keeping my Department informed of progress in addressing the competition issues and the Government expect that the policy will be relaxed as soon as they conclude, on the basis of that advice, that the reform programme is under way and the distortions removed.

Oil Fabrication (Scotland)

Mr. David Stewart: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what plans he has to meet the work force of the Barmac oil fabrication yards in the north of Scotland. [101437]

Mrs. Liddell [holding answer 6 December 1999]: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State has no plans to do so at this time.

I, however, have met with interested constituency MPs and trade union representatives since the announcement of job losses by Barmac.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Regulatory Reform

Mr. Cotter: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland which Minister in his Department has responsibility for regulatory reform; and if he will make a statement. [117419]

Mr. Ingram: During suspension of the Northern Ireland Assembly and Executive, I am responsible for regulatory reform.

PRESIDENT OF THE COUNCIL

Appointments Commission

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the President of the Council how many applicants were identified as being suitable for appointment as Chairman of the Appointments Commission; when the appointment will be made; and if she will make a statement. [116125]

Mrs. Beckett: A short list of applicants to be interviewed for the position of Chairman of the independent and non-statutory Appointments Commission has now been drawn up.

The plan is still that the appointment should be made around Easter although the priority will be to get the best person for the job.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Grimsby (Employment)

Mr. Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, pursuant to the Minister of State for Europe's letter of 21 March on the threat to employment in Grimsby, if he will list the industries and firms in which the threatened workers are employed, and how many such jobs will be lost. [116832]

Mr. Vaz: Britain in Europe's research was based on a national estimate of British jobs dependent on servicing EU export markets. The figures were broken down by constituency based on share of national employment within that constituency and its industrial breakdown. This methodology makes it impossible to predict precisely which jobs would be lost.

Britain in Europe

Mr. Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will estimate the cost of his circulating hon. Members with material from Britain in Europe about the effect of withdrawal from the EU on jobs. [116728]

Mr. Vaz: It is standard parliamentary practice for Members of Parliament to circulate information in the House. There was no cost to the Foreign and Commonwealth Office.

EU Withdrawal

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what measures he took to assess the reliability of the study by Professor Iain Begg on jobs dependent on United Kingdom membership of the European Union, details of which he circulated to hon. Members. [116976]

Mr. Vaz: The European Institute of South Bank University is a highly respected academic institution. Professor Begg is a respected and well-known economist who has published widely on European economic issues. His methodology is described in the report, which is publicly available.

US National Missile Defence System

Dr. Starkey: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what consultations his Department has had over the implications of the American proposals for a national missile defence system with the Governments of (a) Denmark, (b) Canada, (c) other EU member states, (d) Russia, (e) China and (f) other countries. [116727]

Mr. Vaz: We have discussed issues relating to the United States' proposals for National Missile Defence with a range of countries, including all those individually mentioned, in the course of regular consultations on security-related issues.

Dr. Starkey: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what assessment his Department has made of the implications for Britain of agreeing to the use of facilities in the United Kingdom as part of the US national missile defence system. [116726]

Mr. Vaz: We have received no request to this effect, nor would we expect any until after a US decision on whether or not to proceed with deployment of such a system. If the US were to ask for our assistance we would examine any such request carefully, taking account of the implications for the UK.

Dr. Starkey: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what recent discussions he has had, and when, with representatives of the US Government about American plans for a national missile defence system. [116724]

Mr. Vaz: We have discussed, and continue to discuss many aspects of National Missile Defence with the United States across a range of Government Departments, on many occasions. My right hon. Friend the Foreign Secretary discussed the issue with Mrs. Albright when he visited Washington in February.

Dr. Starkey: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what assessment his Department has made of the implications for (a) arms control and (b) the forthcoming conference on review of the Non-Proliferation Treaty of the proposed US national missile defence system. [116725]

Mr. Vaz: The US made clear that the President will not decide on NMD deployment before the summer at the earliest, and that there is a range of complex issues, including the need to preserve strategic stability, that they need to consider beforehand.

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what meetings Ministers in his Department have held with members and officials of the United States Government to discuss the proposed US plan to deploy a national missile defence system since 1 January 1999; when each meeting took place; where each meeting took place; which Ministers were involved at each meeting; which members and officials of the United States Government attended each meeting; and from which United States Government Department they were drawn. [117061]

Mr. Vaz: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Milton Keynes, South-west (Dr. Starkey) today, Official Report, column 408W, in response to her question, ref. 116724.

Regulatory Reform

Mr. Cotter: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs which Minister in his Department has responsibility for regulatory reform; and if he will make a statement. [117423]

Mr. Robin Cook: I refer the hon. Member to the answer given today to my hon. Friend the Member for Scarborough and Whitby (Mr. Quinn) by my right hon. Friend the Minister for the Cabinet Office.

Ministerial Visit (Brazil)

Mr. Loughton: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what the cost was to diplomatic posts in Brazil of the recent visit by the Secretary of State for Environment, Transport and the Regions. [117768]

Mr. Battle: My right hon. Friend the Deputy Prime Minister led a delegation of 13 business men representing a wide range of industry and sectors campaigning to increase the UK's market share in Brazil.

The cost to our Diplomatic Posts in Brazil was £10,746. This figure includes accommodation costs, official reception, and the travel costs of the Ambassador and Embassy staff supporting the Deputy Prime Minister and the accompanying business delegation.

Mr. Loughton: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what modes of transport were used by the Secretary of State for Environment, Transport and the Regions during his recent visit to Brazil. [117770]

Mr. Battle: Commercial flights were used to travel to and from Brazil and between Rio de Janeiro, Brasilia and Sao Paulo; and cars, people-carriers and coaches were used by my right hon. Friend the Deputy Prime Minister and accompanying business delegation in the cities.

Mr. Loughton: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what role was played by diplomatic posts in Brazil in the recent visit by the Secretary of State for Environment, Transport and the Regions. [117769]

Mr. Battle: The diplomatic posts in Brazil made the programme arrangements, and provided advice and administrative support.

Iraq

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, pursuant to the oral statement of the Minister of State of 24 March 2000, Official Report, column 1293 on Iraq, how many Iraqis visited the UK in (a) 1989 and (b) 1999. [116884]

Mrs. Roche: I have been asked to reply.

Total admissions of Iraqi visitors to the United Kingdom were 11,700 in 1989 and 2,900 (provisional) in 1999.

ENVIRONMENT, TRANSPORT AND THE REGIONS

Parish and Town Councils

20. Mr. Nicholas Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will make a statement on the future of parish and town councils. [116163]

Ms Beverley Hughes: Our policy on parish and town councils was set out in the White Paper "Modern Local Government: In Touch with the People". Parish councils are an essential part of the structure of local democracy in this country and they will continue to play a key role in many of our towns and villages.

Tramway and Light Railway Systems

21. Mr. Bob Russell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what plans he has to fund new tramway and light railway systems. [116164]

Mr. Hill: We believe that light rail can have an important role to play in delivering integrated transport in major conurbations. Decisions on whether to provide Central Government support for light rail systems are taken on a case-by-case basis on the merits of the particular scheme. Where systems cannot be funded entirely from local sources or by the private sector, promoters must demonstrate that their scheme provides good value for money, forms an essential part of a local transport plan, and that the objectives of that plan cannot be met in better ways.

Second Home Ownership

22. Mr. Tyler: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what steps he proposes to take to enable local authorities to mitigate the impact of second home ownership on the social, economic and environmental conditions of their areas. [116165]

Mr. Mullin: We are considering a number of proposals for tackling the problems raised by second homes in preparation for the forthcoming Rural White Paper.

Housing Demand

23. Mr. Ruane: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will make a statement on variations of regional demand for housing. [116167]

Mr. Raynsford: The latest, 1996-based, household projections projected a net increase of 3.8 million households (19 per cent.) in England over the 25-year period from 1996 to 2021. The projected percentage increases by Government Office Region ranged from 8 per cent. for the North East up to 26 per cent. for the South East.

Areas of Outstanding Natural Beauty

24. Mr. Clifton-Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what proposals he has to increase the funding for Areas of Outstanding Natural Beauty. [116168]

Mr. Meacher: Funding for Areas of Outstanding Natural Beauty (AONBs) has already been increased. The Countryside Agency has an additional £2.5 million in the current financial year for their management and conservation, rising by a further £1 million in 2000–01, which will bring the Agency's budget for AONBs to almost £6 million.

Construction Industry

25. Mr. Quinn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will make a statement on his plans to improve quality standards in the construction industry. [116169]

Ms Beverley Hughes: I am pleased to announce that this week the first pilot of the quality mark scheme—in Birmingham—is being opened to builders who want to join. A list of approved builders will be available to consumers in the city later in the summer. The pilots in Birmingham and, later, Somerset are a key stage in testing and developing the scheme. Once we have extracted the lessons from them we will review the quality mark and then roll it out across the country.

Housing Development (North-west)

26. Mr. Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what encouragement he is giving for brownfield development in the north-west. [116170]

Ms Beverley Hughes: The North West Regional Assembly is looking at the scope for channelling future growth onto brownfield land in its review of Regional Planning Guidance. As part of this exercise, local planning authorities in the region have been asked to look at the potential of their built-up areas to accommodate additional households.

Additionally, land reclamation is an essential task for the North West Development Agency, which expects to spend £11.5 million through its Land Reclamation Programme in 2000–01.

Disabled Drivers (Seatbelts)

27. Angela Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what representations he has received regarding exemption certificates for the wearing of seatbelts for drivers with disabilities. [116171]

Mr. Hill: The Department of the Environment, Transport and the Regions does receive inquiries from members of the public and refers them to their general practitioners who are responsible for issuing Certificates of Exemption from Compulsory Seat Belt Wearing. However, a disabled person in a wheelchair who is wearing a disabled person's belt is exempt from the requirement to wear adult belts.

Regional Development Agencies

28. Mr. Healey: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will make a statement on the role of the Regional Development Agencies in England in regenerating the business base in areas with low GDP. [116172]

Ms Armstrong: The main aim of the Regional Development Agencies is to improve the competitiveness of the English Regions within a framework of sustainable development. Their Regional Strategies and Action Plans take a co-ordinated approach and contain high level objectives to increase GDP relative to other EU regions as well as, where appropriate, to other English regions. The RDAs' own spending programmes contribute to regenerating the business base; these include the single regeneration budget, physical regeneration, rural development, inward investment, skills development and competitiveness development.

Traffic Congestion

29. Mr. Coaker: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what assessment he has made of the impact of local rail strategies on traffic congestion in cities. [116173]

Mr. Hill: Local authorities should take account of the contribution rail can make to an integrated transport strategy. This is one of the criteria by which we judge the quality of local transport plans (LTPs). We took the impact of LTPs into account when preparing "Tackling Congestion and Pollution", but did not separately assess the effects of local rail strategies.

Council Housing

31. Ms Ward: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will make a statement on his Department's policy on investment in council housing. [116175]

Mr. Mullin: Our policies for housing are set out in the Housing Green Paper, "Quality and Choice—A Decent Home for All", which is being published today. Improving the quality of council housing is central to meeting our overarching housing objective of offering everyone the opportunity of a decent home and so promote social cohesion, well being and self-dependence. The Government are providing authorities with nearly £4.5 billion of extra resources for housing investment over the lifetime of this Parliament.

Standard Spending Assessments

32. Mr. Watts: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will make a statement on his Department's review of the local government standard spending assessment system. [116176]

Ms Armstrong: Central and local Government officials have been discussing a wide range of options for improving the method of revenue grant distribution. Their joint report of the issues raised in the review has now been discussed at the Central Local Partnership and published on the internet. Copies of the report are also available in the House Library.

Decisions about the merits of the various options for reform will be made when we have responses to a consultation paper that we expect to publish in the summer.

Housing Development (Transport Infrastructure)

33. Mr. St. Aubyn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what assessment he has made of the extra congestion which will be created by greenfield development in areas without developed transport links in the next 10 years. [116177]

Ms Beverley Hughes: In drawing up their regional transport strategies and local transport plans, local authorities will wish to take full account of the distribution of housing development. Planning Policy Guidance note 3, "Housing", provides that local planning authorities should seek to exploit opportunities to locate larger housing developments around major nodes along good quality public transport corridors.

Authorities should also seek to ensure that all housing developments are accessible by a range of non-car modes, and draft PPG13, "Transport", proposes that all major development proposals should be supported by a transport assessment.

Standard Spending Assessment (Stockport)

34. Mr. Day: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what recent representations he has received from Stockport metropolitan borough council concerning its standard spending assessment. [116178]

Ms Beverley Hughes: Stockport Metropolitan Borough Council wrote to the Department on 10 and 17 December with comments on the local government finance settlement 2000–01 during consultation on our proposals.

Knowledge-based Economy (Regions)

35. Dr. Gibson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what plans he has to support the development of the knowledge-based economy in the English regions. [116179]

Ms Beverley Hughes: In the Budget, the Government announced a total of £210 million of new funding to encourage innovation, enterprise and the use of IT by businesses. This includes £50 million new funding over the next two financial years for the Regional Development Agencies to support their plans for developing clusters and business incubation. This is in addition to the £4 million RDAs will receive in 2000–01 from the Competitiveness Development Fund to spend on priorities they identify for increasing competitiveness in their regions.

The Chancellor also announced an extra £100 million of public funds, £83.7 million of which will go to the English regions, towards a £1 billion umbrella fund to give better access to venture capital for small, growth companies in the regions. An additional £60 million package will promote use of electronic commerce by small firms and a 100 per cent. tax allowance will be made available for small firms buying information and communications technology equipment. A new research and development tax credit will encourage R&D by small and medium sized companies.

Bus Travel (London Commuters)

Mr. Efford: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what steps he will take to encourage more commuters to travel into London by bus. [116157]

Mr. Hill: The Government are firmly committed to improving the quality and reliability of bus services in London to make them a more attractive form of transport for commuter journeys.

Private Landlords

Mr. Hilary Benn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will make a statement on anti-social behaviour in properties owned by private landlords. [116140]

Mr. Mullin: We fully recognise the devastating effect anti-social behaviour can have on people's lives and on whole communities. It needs to be tackled across all housing tenures.

The Housing Green Paper, which my right hon. Friend the Deputy Prime Minister is publishing today, sets out our strategy for promoting a healthier private rented sector.

My right hon. Friend the Home Secretary published the report of Policy Action Team 8 on 30 March 2000, setting out recommendations on tackling anti-social behaviour as part of our National Strategy for Neighbourhood renewal. This is being taken forward by the Home Office, working closely with the Department of the Environment, Transport and the Regions.

New Houses (Surrey)

Mr. Blunt: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what is his estimate of the number of new houses that can be accommodated on brownfield sites in Surrey. [116154]

Ms Beverley Hughes: I have made no estimate. I have asked the South East planning authorities—SERPLAN—to consider the distribution of additional housing within the region, taking full account of national planning policies which make development of brownfields the first priority.

Local Government Employees (Pension Rights)

Mr. Colman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what actions the Government are planning to take to protect the pension rights of employees who are transferred out of local government as a result of the termination of an agency agreement, with particular reference to employees currently being transferred to Severn Trent plc; if the Government will ensure that employees are offered a bulk transfer of past service rights from the Local Government Pension Scheme to the new employer's pension scheme; and if it will amend the LGPS Regulations urgently to permit an agreement enabling staff to remain in the LGPS. [117601]

Ms Beverley Hughes: The Local Government Pension Scheme Regulations 1997 allow bulk transfers of pension rights to be negotiated between local authority employers and private sector employers following any transfer of an undertaking. Within these provisions, the onus to ensure fairness and the protection of employees' pension rights rests with the appropriate employers involved in any transfer.

The extent to which employees in local authorities work on the delivery of privatised water company services through agency agreements, and the availability of alternative broadly comparable pension arrangements to those employed under them, is being established with the co-operation of the Local Government Pension Committee of the Employers' Organisation. In the light of that survey, I will consider carefully the need for any amendments to the Scheme Regulations.

Regulatory Reform

Mr. Cotter: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions which Minister in his Department has responsibility for regulatory reform; and if he will make a statement. [117412]

Ms Beverley Hughes: I refer the hon. Member to the answer given today to my hon. Friend the Member for Scarborough and Whitby (Mr. Quinn) by my right hon. Friend the Minister for the Cabinet Office.

Websites

Mr. Maclennan: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will list the expenditure incurred by his Department, agencies and non-departmental public bodies on (a) the setting up and (b) the operation of web sites, indicating the cases in which the expenditure has been above that budgeted; and if he will list for each website (i) the topics that have been covered, (ii) the current average number of hits per month and (iii) the estimated expenditure on each website for each of the next three years. [116200]

Ms Beverley Hughes: The following information covers the main DETR site, agency sites and major NDPB sites.

DETR central site (www.detr.gov.uk)

(a) £5,000

(b) direct expenditure on web site operation in 1999–2000 was £90,000 (excluding staff costs); expenditure on coding and document conversion by policy divisions amounted to some £200,000; expenditure on new hardware and software was £4,000.

(i) The core web site publishes information covering the full range of the Department's responsibilities—aviation, construction, drinking water, environmental protection, housing, local government, London, local transport, mobility, planning, railways, regeneration, roads, road safety, shipping, wildlife and the countryside. Recent additions to the DETR site include a schools sub-domain, press releases, searchable databases and webcasting of press conferences. The web site also includes the Air Accident Investigation Branch and the Marine Accidents Investigation Branch, as well as two related sites, one providing air quality information and one with information aimed at local government. In addition it hosts several NDPBs—the Advisory Committee on Releases to the Environment, the Expert Panel on Air Quality Standards and the Disabled Person's Transport Advisory Committee.

(ii) Average of c2million hits and 900,000 page impressions per month

(iii) DETR is currently carrying out a major review of its new media strategy. Budgets for the website will depend on the outcome of this and of bids for resources from HM Treasury to support the Modernising Government agenda.

DETR Executive Agencies

Highways Agency

(a) £32,370

(b) 1998–99 £26,000; 1999–2000 £33,000

(i) corporate information (e.g. Annual Report), information about individual schemes, planned road improvements, contacts, forward programme for contracts, press releases, links to other transport sites

(ii) Average of 90,000 hits and 10,000 unique visitors per month

(iii) Estimated expenditure for 2000–01 £80,000; subsequent years—not yet finalised

Driver and Vehicle Licensing Agency

DVLA Main site

(a) £1,600

(b) 1999–2000 £41,000 (including staff costs)

(i) information on vehicle registration, driving licences, contacts, contracts and tenders, Annual Report, current consultation papers, answers to frequently asked questions, links to other DVO sites

(ii) Average of 217,000 hits per month

(iii) Estimated expenditure for 2000–01 £45,000; 2001–02 £50,000; 2002–03 £55,000

DVLA Sales of Marks site

(a) £15,000

(b) 1999–2000 £48,000

(i) promotion of scheme for sale of personalised vehicle registration numbers; on-line search facility for checking availability and price of particular registrations

(ii) Average of 250,000 hits per month

(iii) Estimated expenditure for 2000–01 £48,000; 2001–02 £55,000; 2002–03 £50,000

Vehicle Inspectorate

(a) £200 (excluding staff costs)

(b) c£11,000 per annum (excluding staff costs)

(i) all aspects of VI work, educational and advisory road safety information, on-line access to publications

(ii) Average of 2,500 hits per month

(iii) Estimated expenditure for 2000–01 £11,000; 2001–02 £11,000; 2002–03 £11,000

Driving Standards Agency

(a) set-up costs in summer 1999 were nil (site set up under commercial partnership contract with private sector provider)

(b) £50,000 per annum

(i) work of DSA, its objectives and structure; information on contacts, driving tests (including guidance on the conduct of tests and the theory test), test centre locations and publications; answers to frequently asked questions, press releases, Annual Report.

(ii) 173,232 hits, 80,448 page visits and 13,584 unique visitors in February 2000

(iii) Estimated expenditure for 2000–01 £30,000; 2001–02 £30,000; 2002–03 £30,000

Vehicle Certification Agency

(a) £1,900

(b) £3,500 per annum

(i) information about VCA services to the automotive industry, contacts (for offices all over the world), VCA's role in DETR and DVO, publications, job vacancies

(ii) average of 1,000 hits per month

(iii) Estimated expenditure for 2000–01 £12,000; 2001–02 £10,000; 2002–03 £10,000

Maritime and Coastguard Agency

(a) £3,000

(b) £6,000 per annum

(i) information about MCA's work and objectives, monthly list of vessels detained in UK ports for safety reasons, press releases

(ii) average of 180,000 hits per month

(iii) Estimated expenditure for 2000–01 £6,000; 2001–02 £6,000; 2002–03 £6,000

QE II Conference Centre

(a) £11,000 (new site April 2000)

(b) £6,000 per annum (estimated for new site)

(i) information for meeting planners and delegates on facilities at QEIICC: promotional material; image gallery for downloading by designers, floor plans, location maps

(ii) new site to be launched in April 2000

(iii) Estimated expenditure for 2000–01 £6,000; 2001–02 £6,000; 2002–03 £6,000

Planning Inspectorate

(a) £1,300; new revised site to be launched April 2000 at cost of £35,000

(b) £1,500 per annum for old site; £10,500 for revised site

(i) Old site held information about PI's work and objectives, the work of a Planning Inspector and the Planning Inspectorate Journal. Revised site will also include Welsh language option, appeals guidance, performance information, Business and Corporate reports, forms, publications, information about working in PI, PI itself and its staff; feedback, help and search facilities; answers to frequently asked questions.

(ii) 1,600 hits per month for old site

(iii) Estimated expenditure for 2000–01 £10,500; 2001–02 £10,500; 2002–03 £10,500

Non-departmental public bodies

Countryside Agency

(a) £18,000 in April 1999 on merger of Rural Development Commission and Countryside Commission. Additional re-development cost of £75,000 to reduce running costs by enabling in-house management and development.

(b) 1999–2000 £60,000 (using external consultants)

(i) Information on organisational structure, contacts, agency's role, events, meetings, initiatives and reports, answers to frequently asked questions

(ii) Average of 500,000 hits and 24,000 unique visitors per month

(iii) Estimated expenditure for 2000–01 £60,000; 2001–02 £65,000; 2002–03 £70,000

Audit Commission

(a) £49,065

(b) 1999–2000 £115,000

(i) Corporate information (including Annual Report), press releases, information on publications (including subscription service for technical reviews) and on Audit appointments, information for local authorities (including performance indicators), search engine, job vacancies.

(ii) Average of 243,691 page impressions and 28,669 visitor sessions per month

(iii) Estimated expenditure for 2000–01 £200,000; 2001–02 £75,0000; 2002–03 £75,000

Health and Safety Executive

HSE Open Government Website (www.house.gov.uk)

(a) £10,000

(b) c£15,000 per annum

(i) Information about the work of HSC/E, including proceedings of HSC and its topic and advisory committees, contacts, press releases, statistics, information sheets, publications, research reports, progress and opportunities, on-line inquiry service.

(ii) Average of 666,000 page impressions and 55,000 unique visits per month

(iii) Estimated expenditure for 2000–01 £20,000; 2001–02 £25,000; 2002–03 £30,000

HSE e-commerce site (www.hsebooks.uk)

(a) £10,000

(b) £22,000 per annum

(i) searchable abstracts of publications, on-line ordering, downloading of some publications, catalogue of all free and priced publications

(ii) Average of 83,000 page impressions and 2,500 unique visits per month

(iii) Estimated expenditure for 2000–01 £80,000; 2001–02 £50,000; 2002–03 £50,000

Environment Agency

(a) £20,000

(b) 1999–2000 £250,000

(i) State of Environment Reports, guidance for business, information on flood defences, waste and water conservation, flood warnings, corporate information, educational resources, information on research and development programme, on-line data on pollution, bathing water, and river quality, information in Welsh.

(ii) 340,000 page impressions and over 25,000 users in February 2000

(iii) Estimated expenditure for 2000–01 £1 million; 2001–02 £1.5 million; 2002–03 £2 million

Housing Corporation

(a) £45,000

(b) 1999–2000 £4,500

(i) Information on organisational structure, contacts and accessing social housing; all Corporation's free publications, including annual reports and circulars.

(ii) Average of 10,000 hits per month

(iii) Estimated expenditure for 2000–01 £5,000; 2001–02 £7,500; 2002–03 £5,500

English Nature

(a) £8,366

(b) 1998–99 £34,691; 1999–2000 £49,966

(i) Corporate information (e.g. Charter, facts and figures, teams, position statements, council meetings, grant schemes, partner organisations), job vacancies, feedback, register, press releases, information about walks and events, on National Nature Reserves and Biodiversity Action Plan.

(ii) 463,639 hits, 93,076 page views and 19,404 user sessions in February 2000

(iii) Estimated expenditure for 2000–01 £58,000; 2001–02 £40,000; 2002–03 £45,000.

Radon

Mr. Pickthall: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what guidance his Department gives to local authority environmental health officers about dealing with householders whose homes have high levels of radon. [117155]

Mr. Meacher: My Department is in regular contact with local authority environmental health officers (EHOs) in the areas most affected by radon. We advise that they should encourage householders with high levels of radon in their homes to carry out remedial measures to reduce the concentration of radon to which those householders are exposed.

In order to assist the EHOs and the householders, maps have been produced showing the areas most affected by radon. Three guidance booklets have been produced:

A Householder's Guide

A Guide to Reducing Levels in Your Home

A Guide for Homebuyers and Sellers.

These are provided free of charge for householders, and stocks are provided to local authorities for them to distribute. This guidance is supported by two telephone hotlines: one to the National Radiological Protection Board, who give advice on radon measurements and on the health effects of radon; and one to the Building Research Establishment, who give advice on radon remedial measures. These hotlines are provided for the benefit of EHOs as well as householders.

For over a year, my Department has been working in partnership with three local authorities that have been piloting a new approach to encourage householders to carry out remedial action. A Good Practice Guide is in preparation, and proposals on how we shall work with other local authorities in a similar way in the future are being developed. I hope to make an announcement on these shortly.

GM Crop Trials (Gloucestershire)

Mr. Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what plans he has (a) to hold a public meeting in Gloucestershire and (b) to inform the local parish council, about the GM crop trials being conducted in Laverton, Gloucestershire; and if he will make a statement about these trials. [117663]

Mr. Meacher: There will be a public meeting in Worcester on Thursday 13 April. Representatives of all parish councils, in which GM crop trials, are proposed, in Worcestershire and Gloucestershire have been invited and the meeting has been advertised locally.

The Government's Farm Scale Evaluations programme, which I announced on 17 March, is designed to allow independent researchers to see what effect the growing and management of certain herbicide tolerant GM crops might have on farmland wildlife, compared with equivalent non-GM crops. The programme this year will involve up to 80 field sites.

Up to 12 public meetings will be held in towns near the trial sites, at which officials from my Department and representatives from the independent researchers, the industry body, SCIMAC, and a representative from an environmental group, will give presentations about the Farm Scale Evaluations programme and answer questions.

Cowboy Builders

Mr. Pond: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what provision he intends to make to improve protection of householders against incompetent and dishonest builders; and if he will make a statement. [116166]

Ms Beverley Hughes: I am pleased to announce that this week the first pilot of the quality mark scheme—in Birmingham—is being opened to builders who want to join. A list of approved builders will be available to consumers in the city later in the summer. The pilots in Birmingham and, later, Somerset are a key stage in testing and developing the scheme. Once we have extracted the lessons from them we will review the quality mark and then roll it out across the country.

Water Abstraction

Mr. Paul Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what progress has been made on the delegation of water abstraction appeal decisions to the Planning Inspectorate under the provisions of the Environment Act 1995. [117868]

Mr. Mullin: I have arranged for the Secretary of State's power to take decisions on water abstraction and impounding appeals, under section 43 of the Water Resources Act 1991, to be exercised by the Planning Inspectorate. This came into effect on 1 April 2000. All decisions will be taken by Inspectors on behalf of the Secretary of State, except in rare cases of major importance or difficulty where the Secretary of State may recover the case to determine himself. The Planning Inspectorate will shortly issue guidance for use by potential appellants.

London Bodies

Mr. Geraint Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what arrangements have been made for the transfer of the London Research Centre, the London Planning Advisory Committee and the London Ecology Committee to the Greater London Authority. [117919]

Mr. Hill: As part of the establishment of the Greater London Authority under the GLA Act 1999, the London Research Centre (LRC), the London Planning Advisory Committee (LPAC) and London Ecology Committee (LEC) were abolished on 1 April 2000. At the same time, the appropriate property, rights and liabilities of the three bodies were transferred by means of transfer schemes to the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions. The intention is that these will transfer to the Greater London Authority on 8 May 2000, with the exception of a small number of functions of the LRC which will transfer to Transport for London on 3 July 2000.

I would like to take this opportunity to pay tribute to the very valuable work which the LRC, LPAC and LEC have each undertaken on a wide range of cross-London subjects, since their establishment. I am confident that this tradition will be carried on by the Greater London Authority itself in the future.

Turtle Shells

Dr. Tonge: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what representations he has received concerning the re-opening of trade in turtle shells. [116490]

Mr. Mullin: Cuba has submitted two proposals to the forthcoming Conference of Parties to the Convention on International Trade in Endangered Species (CITES). The first seeks to transfer the Cuban part of the Caribbean population of Hawksbill turtles from Appendix I to Appendix II in order to allow the export of existing shell stocks and a subsequent quota of up to 500 turtle shells per year. The second seeks agreement to allow a one-off shipment of existing stocks of shell with no subsequent annual quota.

Several organisations and scientific bodies have provided us with their views. Some believe that populations of Hawksbill turtles remain too vulnerable to allow any international trade. Others consider that carefully managed trade would contribute to species conservation. We have also received a large number of campaign postcards opposing the Cuban proposals.

The European Union looks set to oppose the first proposal but to keep an open position on the second pending further consideration at the Conference. The United Kingdom will continue to argue that international trade quotas should be contemplated only in the context of wider action to secure the future of marine turtles by countering threats from fisheries by-catch and the destruction of nesting and breeding sites.

Air Rage

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions how many planes flying into and out of the UK had to be diverted from their scheduled destination airport as a consequence of air rage in each year since 1995; and what was the estimated cost to the NATS in each case. [116880]

Mr. Mullin: While comprehensive data on "air rage" incidents are not available for the whole of that period, data collected by the Mandatory Occurrence Reporting scheme are given in the table. Mandatory Occurrence Reports are required for all incidents which affect or could affect the safety of a UK registered aircraft, but may not include diversions caused by incidents where safety was not at risk. There is no cost to NATS resulting from such diversions.

UK registered aircraft flying into and out of the UK diverted as a consequence of "air rage"

Year	Number
1995	2
1996	1
1997	4
1998	8
1999	6

Data in relation to non-UK registered aircraft are available only at disproportionate cost.

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions (1) how many incidents of air rage were reported in the last five years which involved passengers travelling (a) first-class, (b) business class and (c) by Concorde; [116687]

(2) if he will list the airlines reporting cases classified as air rage in each year since 1995, indicating for each airline the number of incidents. [116685]

Mr. Mullin: Comprehensive data on disruptive incidents occurring on UK airlines have been collected only since April 1999. When initiating the reporting scheme my Department and the CAA undertook to respect the confidentiality of airlines submitting commercially sensitive information. The analysis published in February, therefore, does not include any data that could identify a specific carrier or aircraft type. The data collected show that, in the period April to October 1999, 47 incidents involved first or business class passengers.

Affordable Housing

Mr. Kidney: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what assessment he has made of the impact of regeneration schemes on the numbers of new units of affordable housing provided since 1997. [116698]

Ms Beverley Hughes: During 1997–98 and 1998–99 an estimated 36,160 new dwellings and housing units were completed or facilitated with support from my Department's regeneration programmes. Figures for affordable housing are not recorded separately and the full impact of regeneration schemes on new housing is not available.

Early evaluation evidence suggests that, overall, the Single Regeneration Budget is cost effective, taking account of the severity of problems in partnership areas. Also an interim evaluation of English Partnerships acknowledged its significant achievements, often working closely with the Housing Corporation, in facilitating housing, predominantly on brownfield sites.

The recent revision of Planning Policy Guidance note 3 (PPG3) on housing reaffirms our policy that a community's need for a mix of housing types, including affordable housing, is a material planning consideration which local planning authorities should take into account.

Mr. Kidney: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will list by local authority area the numbers of new units of affordable housing that have been built in areas where housing stock has been transferred by local authorities to registered social landlords in England for each of the last five years. [116699]

Mr. Mullin: The information is in the table:

Housebuilding completions of social housing[1]
England

Authority	1993–94			1994–95			1995–96
	Transfers made	Dwellings RSL	Completed LAs	Transfers made	Dwellings RSL	Completed LAs	Transfers made	Dwellings RSL	Completed LAs
Allerdale BC	—	22	0	—	161	0	—	58	0
Basildon DC	—	281	0	—	116	0	—	210	0
Basingstoke and Deane BC	—	123	0	[2]—	142	0	—	130	0
Bath and NE Somerset C	—	[3]—	[3]—	—	[3]—	[3]—	—	[3]—	[3]—
Cherwell DC	—	37	18	[2]—	50	0	—	0	0
Congleton BC	—	28	0	—	0	0	—	0	0
Cotswold DC	—	61	8	—	90	23	—	91	24
E Hampshire BC	—	18	0	—	23	0	[2]—	56	0
East Lindsey DC	—	115	2	—	20	0	—	82	0
Eden C	—	24	0	—	29	7	—	10	0
Epson and Ewell BC	[2]—	18	0	—	34	0	—	51	0
Hambleton DC	[2]—	28	16	—	41	0	—	21	0
Hart DC	[2]—	1	0	—	0	0	—	34	0
Hastings BC	—	139	0	—	32	0	[2]—	72	0
Havant BC	[2]—	83	0	—	99	0	—	84	0
Hertsmere CC	[2]—	33	0	—	45	0	—	66	0
Kennet DC	—	70	8	—	146	0	[2]—	51	12
Kerrier DC	—	4	0	—	4	0	—	0	0
Leominster C	[2]—	38	0	—	23	0	—	85	0
Litchfield DC	—	23	22	—	72	29	—	33	0
Liverpool CC	—	704	0	—	550	0	—	513	0
LB Bexley	—	138	0	—	173	0	—	74	0
LB Brent	—	149	0	—	132	0	—	51	0
LB Enfield	—	218	0	—	242	0	—	138	0
LB Greenwich	—	185	0	—	125	0	—	145	0
LB Hackney	—	342	0	—	203	80	—	529	0
LB Hammersmith and Fulham	—	73	0	—	22	0	—	19	0
LB Lambeth	—	220	0	—	279	0	—	380	0
LB Merton	—	278	0	—	108	0	—	358	0
LB Tower Hamlets	—	[3]—	[3]—	—	[3]—	[3]—	—	[3]—	[3]—
Maldon DC	—	18	0	[2]—	0	0	—	0	0
Malvern Hills DC	—	12	6	[2]—	0	14	—	0	0
Manchester CC	—	683	0	—	935	0	[2]—	1,202	0
Mid Bedfordshire	—	123	0	[2]—	61	0	—	111	0
N Dorset DC	—	68	0	[2]—	4	0	—	41	0
N Wiltshire DC	—	81	0	—	49	17	[2]—	25	12
Oldham BC	—	125	0	—	55	0	—	62	0
Penwith DC	—	18	1	[2]—	13	0	—	10	0
Preston BC	—	68	0	—	89	0	—	26	0
Rother DC	—	89	0	—	17	0	—	99	0
RB Windsor and Maidenhead	—	37	25	—	0	0	[2]—	0	0
Rushmoor BC	—	88	0	—	93	0	[2]—	38	0
South Hams DC	—	107	8	—	48	10	—	130	0
S Ribble	[2]—	0	0	—	0	0	—	46	0
S Shropshire DC	[2]—	27	9	—	48	6	—	42	0
S Somerset DC	—	127	0	—	56	0	—	71	0
S Staffs C	—	35	0	—	45	6	—	89	0
S Oxfordshire DC	—	198	0	—	64	0	—	86	0
Spelthorne BC	—	96	0	—	74	0	[2]—	59	0
Stoke-on-Trent CC	—	140	1	—	94	0	—	148	0
Stratford DC	—	16	3	—	45	6	—	55	0
Tameside	—	214	0	—	55	0	—	124	0
Telford and Wrekin C	—	[3]—	[3]—	—	[3]—	[3]—	—	[3]—	[3]—
Tewkesbury BC	—	5	0	—	41	0	—	0	0
Thanet DC	—	115	9	[2]—	98	0	—	70	0
Vale of Whitehorse DC	—	22	0	[2]—	0	0	—	0	9
Walsall MBC	—	201	34	—	210	0	[2]—	170	0
W Devon BC	—	0	0	—	8	0	—	36	4
W Dorset DC	[2]—	0	0	—	37	0	—	0	0
W Somerset DC	—	42	0	—	11	0	—	30	0
W Wiltshire DC	—	70	0	—	135	0	—	109	0
Wirral	—	143	0	—	187	0	—	134	0
Worthing	—	0	0	—	0	0	—	13	0
Wychavon DC	—	0	0	[2]—	24	0	—	16	0
Wyre BC	—	106	0	—	86	0	[2]—	38	0

[1] For those districts in which local authority dwelling stock has been transferred to registered social landlords.
[2] Indicates transfer was carried out in this year. Some authorities have made transfers in more than one year.
[3] Denotes incomplete data for this period or the district became part of a unitary authority.

Housebuilding completions of social housing[1]
England

Authority	1996–97 Transfers made	1996–97 Dwellings RSL	1996–97 Completed LAs	1997–98 Transfers made	1997–98 Dwellings RSL	1997–98 Completed LAs	1998–99 Transfers made	1998–99 Dwellings RSL	1998–99 Completed LAs
Allerdale BC	—	36	0	—	74	0	[2]—	113	0
Basildon DC	—	282	0	[2]—	172	0	—	333	0
Basingstoke and Deane BC	—	84	0	—	213	0	—	51	0
Bath and NE Somerset C	—	153	0	—	12	0	[2]—	0	0
Cherwell DC	—	36	0	—	7	0	—	26	0
Congleton BC	—	4	0	[2]—	0	0	—	0	0
Cotswold DC	[2]—	32	3	—	54	17	—	91	17
E Hampshire BC	—	49	0	—	[1]—	[1]—	—	[1]—	[1]—
East Lindsey DC	—	67	0	—	26	0	[2]—	19	0
Eden C	—	10	0	[2]—	8	0	—	0	0
Epson and Ewell BC	—	41	0	—	28	0	—	23	0
Hambleton DC	—	163	16	—	20	0	—	28	0
Hart DC	—	56	0	—	38	0	—	41	0
Hastings BC	—	71	0	—	31	0	—	0	0
Havant BC	—	132	0	—	89	0	—	20	0
Hertsmere CC	—	23	0	—	93	1	—	53	0
Kennet DC	—	83	0	—	125	0	—	26	0
Kerrier DC	—	63	0	[2]—	0	0	—	73	0
Leominster C	—	49	0	—	28	0	—	[1]—	[1]—
Litchfield DC	[2]—	0	0	—	14	0	—	9	0
Liverpool CC	—	61	0	[2]—	259	0	[2]—	390	0
LB Bexley	—	63	0	[2]—	48	0	—	19	0
LB Brent	—	0	0	[2]—	1	0	—	[1]—	[1]—
LB Enfield	—	258	0	—	51	0	[2]—	139	0
LB Greenwich	—	69	0	—	226	0	[2]—	133	0
LB Hackney	—	406	22	[2]—	[1]—	[1]—	[2]—	[1]—	[1]—
LB Hammersmith and Fulham	—	14	0	—	74	0	[2]—	22	0
LB Lambeth	—	144	0	[2]—	98	0	[2]—	117	0
LB Merton	—	133	0	[2]—	39	0	—	129	0
LB Tower Hamlets	—	[1]—	[1]—	[2]—	[1]—	[1]—	[2]—	[1]—	[1]—
Maldon DC	—	47	0	—	0	0	—	48	0
Malvern Hills DC	—	83	0	—	0	0	—	[1]—	[1]—
Manchester CC	—	413	0	—	689	0	[2]—	341	0
Mid Bedfordshire	—	37	0	—	217	0	—	133	0
N Dorset DC	—	56	0	—	17	0	—	50	0
N Wiltshire DC	—	23	0	—	97	0	—	8	0
Oldham BC	—	15	0	[2]—	114	0	—	29	0
Penwith DC	—	69	0	—	112	0	—	52	0
Preston BC	—	49	0	—	3	0	[2]—	109	0
Rother DC	—	48	0	—	32	0	[2]—	45	0
RB Windsor and Maidenhead	—	41	0	—	21	0	—	[1]—	[1]—
Rushmoor BC	—	35	0	—	99	0	—	18	0
South Hams DC	—	4	37	—	77	16	[1]—	9	0
S Ribble	—	138	0	—	32	0	—	102	0
S Shropshire DC	—	47	0	—	58	0	—	29	0
S Somerset DC	—	20	0	—	26	0	[2]—	90	0
S Staffs C	[2]—	60	0	—	44	0	—	41	0
S Oxfordshire DC	—	108	0	[2]—	105	0	—	56	0
Spelthorne BC	—	71	0	—	17	0	—	62	0
Stoke-on-Trent CC	—	244	0	[2]—	[1]—	[1]—	—	[1]—	[1]—
Stratford DC	[2]—	64	0	—	16	0	—	33	0
Tameside	—	52	0	—	47	0	[2]—	62	0
Telford and Wrekin C	—	[1]—	[1]—	—	[1]—	[1]—	[2]—	59	0
Tewkesbury BC	—	7	0	—	18	0	[2]—	0	0
Thanet DC	—	0	0	—	8	0	—	36	0
Vale of Whitehorse DC	—	66	0	—	41	0	—	49	0
Walsall MBC	—	154	0	—	109	0	—	103	0
W Devon BC	—	17	0	—	22	0	[2]—	0	0
W Dorset DC	—	31	0	—	0	0	—	0	0
W Somerset DC	—	2	0	[2]—	10	0	—	9	0
W Wiltshire DC	[2]—	61	0	—	69	0	—	63	0
Wirral	—	151	0	—	109	0	[2]—	199	0
Worthing	—	85	0	—	0	0	[2]—	107	0
Wychavon DC	—	36	0	—	13	0	—	74	0
Wyre BC	—	15	0	—	24	0	—	23	0

[1] For those districts in which local authority dwelling stock has been transferred to registered social landlords.
[2] Indicates transfer was carried out in this year. Some authorities have made transfers in more than one year.
[1] Denotes incomplete data for this period or the district became part of a unitary authority.

Lorry Weights

Mr. Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions when EU legislation relating to the use of lorries weighing up to 44 tonnes came into force; and what studies have been undertaken by his Department into the effect of such legislation on the transport of freight by rail. [116860]

Mr. Hill: My right hon. and noble Friend the Minister for Transport recently announced the Government's decision to set a target date of 1 January 2001 for raising the maximum general lorry weight limit to 44 tonnes for lorries with six axles, a maximum drive axle weight of 10.5 tonnes and Euro II or better engines. This is not connected with EU legislation. The decision follows the publication of an interim report by the Commission for Integrated Transport (CfIT) on permitting the general use of 44 tonne lorries. CfIT commissioned independent work from Professor Alan McKinnon of Heriot-Watt University to assess the environmental effects including the possible effects on rail freight. This work showed a clear net environmental gain from allowing 44 tonne lorries.

The Integrated Transport White Paper set out our aim to establish an integrated, sustainable freight distribution system to support economic growth and to bring social and environmental benefits. To that end we are keen to support rail freight where it is practicable and good value for money. We are equally keen on improvements to efficiency in other modes, including road transport, where these meet the same ends.

The Government accept CfIT's view that allowing 44 tonne lorries for general use could have a negative effect upon rail freight traffic, both existing and predicted. The shadow SRA are considering proposals for rail freight and their strategy will include proposals to support rail freight.

The CfIT report is available on the Internet at www.cfit.gov.uk

Airport Slots

Mr. Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions, pursuant to the answer of 22 March 2000, Official Report, column 544W, concerning airport slots, on what date decisions on slot allocation became the sole responsibility of an independent co-ordinator; what is the name of the co-ordinator; where his office is located; what European legislation governs his independence other than EEC Regulation 95/93; and if his decisions on slots apply to internal and international aircraft movements. [116834]

Mr. Mullin: The UK Airports Slot Allocation Regulations 1993 came into force on 12 May 1993. Among other things, they provided for Airport Co-ordination Ltd. (ACL), which had been performing the co-ordination role at several airports including Heathrow on a non-statutory basis before that date, to be approved and appointed as co-ordinator in accordance with EC Regulation 95–93. The appointment was subsequently reaffirmed following consultation with air carriers and other interested parties, as required by Article 4(1) of EC 95/93. ACL's Managing Director is Peter Morrisroe OBE; its principal office is in Bath Road, near Heathrow. There is no relevant legislation other than EC 95/93 that relates to the independence of the co-ordinator. His decisions apply to both internal and international traffic.

Housing (South-east)

Laura Moffatt: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what assessment he has made of the impact on demand for housing as a result of the expected increase in the number of single parent families in the South-East; and what steps he is taking to help ensure this demand is met. [116752]

Mr. Mullin: The latest household projections indicate that around 2 per cent. of the net increase in the number of households likely to form in the South-East between 1996 and 2021 will be lone parent households. PPG3 encourages local authorities and housebuilders to ensure that the additional dwellings to be provided in the region offer greater choice and affordability for all households.

Laura Moffatt: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what steps he is taking to ensure that sufficient affordable housing is available to meet the demand in the South East. [116753]

Mr. Mullin: Draft Regional Planning Guidance 9 (Proposed Changes) sets out a new approach to meeting housing needs in the South East. It emphasises the need for local authorities to undertake rigorous assessments of housing need to ensure that sufficient affordable homes are provided. Housing capital allocations to local authorities in the South East for 2000–01 total £187 million, over £50 million up on 1999–2000 and these increased resources will allow authorities to support the provision of more new affordable housing where this is a local priority. This is in addition to the resources for new affordable housing provided directly to registered social landlords by the Housing Corporation (£70 million in 2000–01).

Urban-rural Compact

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what assessment he has made of the report, entitled "An Urban-rural Compact", published by the Local Government Association. [116982]

Ms Beverley Hughes: The Government welcome the Local Government Association's case studies report on the Urban-rural Compacts initiative. This gives a useful example of how local authorities are working together, and with other partners, to respond to the links between town and country. In discussions with the Local Government Association on the preparation of our Urban and Rural White Papers we have encouraged the Association to develop their initiative and I look forward to seeing the results of the evaluation of the pilots.

Millennium Dome

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if the land on which the Millennium Dome was built was decontaminated to a sufficient extent to allow houses with gardens to be built on the site. [116983]

Ms Beverley Hughes: The site of the Millennium Dome has been decontaminated for its current purpose. It is intended that the Dome remains and is not redeveloped for housing. However, while the standard of remediation would not necessarily be sufficient to allow houses with gardens to be built on the site, the exact nature of the remediation that would be necessary could be determined only once the exact details of any development were known. This has been the philosophy throughout the remediation of the whole of the Greenwich Peninsula.

Telecommunications Masts

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what representations his Department has received in the last year in respect of planning applications and permissions granted for the erection of telecommunications masts; and what is his policy on the erection of such masts. [116970]

Ms Beverley Hughes: My Department has received centrally in the last year some 350 letters about amenity and health aspects of planning applications and permissions granted for telecommunications masts.

The Government's general policy on telecommunications is to facilitate the growth of new and existing telecommunications systems while keeping environmental impact to a minimum. The planning system is the mechanism for achieving that balance. Government planning policy for telecommunications is set out in Planning Policy Guidance note 8: Telecommunications and the Department's Circular 4/99 "Planning for Telecommunications". The draft joint DETR/DH circular on "Land Use Planning and Electromagnetic Fields" will be finalised as soon as practicable after the Independent Expert Group on Mobile Phones has published its report in May.

Local Authorities (Freedom of Information)

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what assessments he has made of the implications for freedom of information of the establishment of cabinets in local authorities. [117001]

Ms Beverley Hughes: The arrangements that we are proposing under Part II of the Local Government Bill would ensure more transparent and inclusive decision-making. These new arrangements involve:

- an inclusive process of formulating a council's framework and budget, which will be responsibility of the full council in public;
- publicly known individuals—the executive—being personally responsible for implementing this framework and budget;
- accurate recording of decisions and their reasons, and timely publication of these and of the background and factual papers available to the decision-maker(s); and
- powerful overview and scrutiny committees, meeting in public:
  - to discuss and make recommendations on the development of policies; and
  - to hold each executive member to account for what he or she has done and is planning to do.

Call Centres

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what steps he is taking to ensure proper working conditions in call centres. [117002]

Mr. Meacher: The responsibility for ensuring proper working conditions in call centres rests with local authorities who enforce the Health and Safety at Work, etc. Act 1974 and other relevant statutory provisions made under it in these premises.

Advantage West Midlands

Mr. Kidney: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what additional resources will be made available to Advantage West Midlands in 2000–01 as a result of his latest Budget. [116706]

Ms Beverley Hughes: In his Budget, the Chancellor announced a new £50 million fund to provide support for business clusters and incubation in the English regions. The £50 million will go to the Regional Development Agencies to invest over the next two financial years; £15 million will be available in 2000–01 and £35 million in 2001–02. Advantage West Midlands will receive an allocation from the new fund of £1.5 million for financial year 2000–01.

Legal Alcohol Limit

Mr. Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what are the alcohol limits for road vehicle drivers in each member state of the European Union; and what discussions he has had with the European Commission on the harmonisation of such limits across the EU. [116861]

Mr. Hill: The alcohol limit for drivers in each member state is shown in the table.

Member state	Milligrammes of alcohol in 100 ml of blood
Austria	[1]50
Belgium	50
Denmark	50
Finland	50
France	50
Germany	50
Greece	50
Ireland	80
Italy	80
Luxembourg	80
Netherlands	[2]50
Portugal	50
Spain	[3]50
Sweden	20
United Kingdom	80

[1] Austria: 10 mg/100 ml for Heavy Goods Vehicle (HGV) and Passenger Carrying Vehicle (PCV) drivers and learner drivers

[2] Netherlands: 20 mg/100 ml for learner drivers

[3] Spain: 30 mg/100 ml for HGV and PCV drivers and learner drivers

On 17 March the Commission issued a Communication to member states setting out priorities for road safety. This referred to the intention to bring forward a Recommendation on harmonisation of the drink-drive limit. The Council of Ministers had a brief preliminary discussion of the Communication on Tuesday 28 March and is due to discuss it again in June.

Aircraft Seats

Mr. Blizzard: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what regulations govern the number of passenger seats that can be accommodated in a civil aircraft. [117228]

Mr. Mullin: The maximum seating capacity of any large passenger aircraft is determined by the aircraft certification standards. Annexe 8 to the Chicago Convention requires that an aircraft may be issued with a Certificate of Airworthiness only if it complies with a comprehensive and detailed airworthiness code established by the State of Registry. Within Europe, the Joint Aviation Authorities agree harmonised aviation safety standards, including airworthiness codes, for their 32 member states. The JAA airworthiness code for new types of large passenger aircraft is contained in Joint Airworthiness Requirement 25, which has also been adopted as the EC standard by Council Regulation 3922/92. JAR 25 requires that in an emergency an aircraft in maximum seating configuration must be capable of being evacuated within 90 seconds.

The Civil Aviation Authority (CAA) has also set minimum requirements relating to the spacing of passenger seats for aircraft on the UK register. This is because, in the event of an emergency, it is one of a number of factors which can have an effect upon the evacuation of an aircraft. The minimum requirements are contained in Airworthiness Notice 64.

MOT Test

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what plans he has to extend the list of items inspected in the annual motor vehicle MOT test. [117136]

Mr. Hill: We have no plans at present to introduce any additional items for inspection into the annual roadworthiness test although the whole issue of MOT testing is kept under review.

Motor Vehicles

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions how many privately owned motor vehicles there were in the United Kingdom on 1 March. [117083]

Mr. Hill: At the end of June 1999, the latest date for which we have figures, there were 23.34 million motor vehicles registered to private individuals in Great Britain. Of these, 20.92 million were cars. Equivalent information for Northern Ireland is not readily available.

Light Pollution

Mrs. Curtis-Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions (1) if he will bring forward legislation to classify excessive light as a pollutant; [117085]

(2) if he will give local authorities powers to curb excessive lighting. [117087]

Ms Beverley Hughes: There are already some planning controls over external lighting. Where development proposals require a planning application, the local planning authority can control the lighting installations by imposing conditions to prevent or minimise light pollution. However, the courts have ruled that light itself is not development as understood in planning law, so the creation or use of light in itself does not require planning permission. In 1997, we issued "Lighting in the Countryside: Towards Good Practice" which is also applicable in towns. In our view, such guidance represents the best way forward and we are not proposing to introduce further legislation in this area.

Mrs. Curtis-Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will restrict the sale of domestic floodlight bulbs to a 150 watt maximum. [117088]

Ms Beverley Hughes: We have no plans to restrict the sale of such goods.

Mrs. Curtis-Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions in what circumstances poorly aimed and over-bright lighting is classified as a statutory nuisance. [117086]

Mr. Hill: Although light is not a specified statutory nuisance it may be considered as a nuisance in cases where intrusive lighting is so severe as to be prejudicial to health. It is for a local authority environmental health officer to decide whether there is a "statutory nuisance" occurring in a particular situation.

Thameslink 2000

Mr. Dismore: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will make a statement on the conclusions of the report by Town and Country Strategies on the Thameslink 2000 project; and if he will place a copy of the report in the Library. [117217]

Mr. Hill: Town and Country Strategies have made representations to the Secretary of State on Railtrack's Thameslink 2000 project, in the form of a report which expresses concerns about some aspects of the proposals. They have asked for this report to be treated as their statement of case for the purposes of the public inquiry which will start on 27 June 2000. The Department has forwarded this report to the Inspector who will conduct the inquiry. It would not be appropriate for me to comment on the report at this stage. I have placed a copy of it in the Library.

M3 Accident

Mr. Hunter: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what reports he has received from the Police and the Health and Safety Executive following their investigation into the accident near Junction 7 on the M3 on 7 March involving a lorry carrying butane gas cylinders; and what implications they have for the amendment of safety regulations. [117223]

Mr. Hill: Investigations are still in progress.

Lorries (VED)

Mr. Jenkin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions (1) if he will list the information he received concerning the effect on the environment of road haulage movements which gave rise to the increase in vehicle excise duty for 40-tonne trucks in the 1999 Budget; [116865]

(2) what assessment he has made of the impact on (a) the environment and (b) the number of road haulage movements of the decrease in vehicle excise duty rates announced in the Budget; [116837]

(3) if he will list the information he received between March 1999 and March 2000 concerning the effect on the environment of road haulage movements which gave rise to the decrease in vehicle excise duty by £1,800 for 40-tonne trucks in the Budget. [116866]

Mr. Hill [holding answer 30 March 2000]: Vehicle Excise Duty (VED) is a matter for the Chancellor of the Exchequer. In his 1999 Budget, the Chancellor made clear that a high VED rate had been set for the new 40-tonne, 5-axle vehicle first allowed in the UK from 1 January 1999 in order to discourage its use on UK roads. This was in view of the significant extra road damage caused by lorries running these new 11.5 tonne axle weights.

The Changes the Chancellor made to VED rates for goods vehicles in his recent Budget and the reasons for them are explained in paragraphs 6.69 to 6.72 of the Economic and Fiscal Strategy Report, published on 21 March 2000. The VED rate of £5,750 set for the new, road-damaging 40-tonne lorry on 5-axles in Budget 99 has successfully discouraged its use by domestic hauliers. However, now that domestic hauliers who need the highest weight limits have the option to use the less damaging 6-axle 44-tonne lorry within the UK, the only UK hauliers who still need to use the 40-tonne lorry are international operators using continental roads with 40-tonne lorry weight limits.

To boost the competitiveness of these international hauliers, the Government are cutting the VED rate for the 40-tonne lorry on 5-axles from £5,750 to £3,950. The rate for the less road-damaging 38-tonne lorry on 5-axles will be reduced by £500 to encourage its continued use, and there will also be a reduction of £500 for the lorry typically used to collect freight from UK ports to boost the competitiveness of hauliers in this sector.

The Government will continue to monitor trends in vehicle purchasing and plating decisions and in volumes of road haulage movements, while a sub-group of the Road Haulage Forum will continue to review the costs which different lorry types impose on the environment and the roads. This work will inform the Chancellor's future decisions on VED rates for goods vehicles.

Ballot Boxes (London)

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions (1) what assessment he has made of the robustness and security of the cardboard ballot boxes proposed for use with electronic vote counting in the forthcoming London elections; what assessment he has made of the risk of persons tampering with such ballot boxes; and if he will make a statement; [117239]

(2) what checks there will be on the number of ballot boxes used in connection with electronic vote counting in the forthcoming London elections. [117240]

Mr. Hill: These are matters for the Greater London Returning Officer.

Genetically Modified Crops

Mr. Paice: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will describe the research being undertaken during farm-scale trials of genetically modified crops with particular respect to (a) potential cross-pollination with (i) other non-genetically modified crops and (ii) wild flora, (b) the viability of such cross-pollination, (c) the impact on insect life in areas adjacent to the trial, and (d) the duration of the study. [117301]

Mr. Meacher: Studies are being undertaken during farm-scale evaluations of the management associated with genetically modified crops to assess (a) potential cross-pollination between genetically modified crops with particular respect to (i) cross-pollination with other non-genetically modified crops and (ii) wild flora. In addition, studies are being undertaken during farm-scale trials to assess (b) the viability of such cross-pollination and (c) the impact on insect life in areas adjacent to the trial. Protocols are currently being finalised for these investigations with the contractors. These will be made public shortly and I will place a copy in the Library. (d) The study could last up to three years.

PPG17

Mr. Pearson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions when he plans to publish revisions to PPG17. [117346]

Ms Beverley Hughes: I refer to the answer given by my hon. Friend the Minister for Housing and Planning to my hon. Friend the Member for Denton and Reddish (Mr. Bennett) on 21 March 2000, Official Report, column 469W.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Travel Documents (Loss)

Mr. Lidington: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what estimate he has made of the number of travel documents lost by the Immigration and Nationality Directorate in the last three years. [117653]

Mrs. Roche: The available information relates to the number of claims for compensation as a result of maladministration in the Immigration and Nationality Directorate, the majority of which are as a result of passports lost within the Directorate. The number of claims dealt with is as follows:

1997: 45

1998: 62

1999: 78.

In addition to the figures given for 1999, there are a number of claims submitted in 1999 still to be considered.

Freedom of Information Bill

Mr. Caplin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he will publish the draft code of practice to be made under clause 44 of the Freedom of Information Bill. [117968]

Mr. Straw: I have today placed a copy of a working draft of the code of practice in the Library and it will also be placed on the Home Office website.

Clause 44 of the Freedom of Information Bill requires the Secretary of State to issue, and from time to time revise, a code of practice setting out practices which he considers public authorities should follow in the discharge of their duties in relation to Part I of the Bill. It specifies particular matters which must be included in the code such as the assistance that should be given to applicants and procedures for dealing with complaints.

The matters to be included in the code are administrative steps that are an important part of good practice. They form an important part of the overall scheme for dealing with requests for information.

Child Abuse

Mr. Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what research his Department has conducted into the possible link between animal abuse and child abuse; and if he will make a statement. [116933]

Mr. Charles Clarke: The Home Office is not currently conducting any research on the links between animal abuse and child abuse. However, we have recently become aware of some research in the United States of America on this subject and are considering that evidence with care.

Animal Experiments

Mr. Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department, pursuant to his answer of 7 March 2000, Official Report, columns 566–68W, on animal experiments, how many of the nine project licences awarded in 1998 to allow procedures to be carried out on dogs were awarded in order to fulfil legislative requirements; and, for each project licence awarded for this reason, what was the legislative requirement in question. [116935]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: My reply to the hon. Member on 7 March 2000, Official Report, columns 566–68W, reported that the procedures recorded in Table 11 of the Statistics of Scientific Procedures Great Britain 1998 were carried out under 39 separate project licences.

Home Office records are not held in such a way to enable the specific legislative requirement that applied to each licence to be easily identified. My earlier reply provides examples of specific legislative requirements relevant to Table 11.

Mr. Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department on how many occasions in (a) 1998 and (b) 1999 licences were awarded to allow procedures to be carried out on dogs to satisfy non-United Kingdom and non-European Union legislative requirements which required (i) more dogs to be used and (ii) dogs to be used in procedures involving more pain, suffering, distress or lasting harm, than the corresponding UK/EU legislative requirements, identifying in each case the (1) non-EU and (2) UK or EU legislative requirements. [116934]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: Comparing and contrasting the technical specifications of all of the possible test requirements will require a good deal of effort and it may not be possible to provide precise answers and would be very expensive.

To be of some assistance, I could provide information on the number of licences issued in 1998 and 1999 that might generate data for regulatory requirements using dogs and explain how these are used to satisfy a number of regulators. It will, however, take time to gather the information and I will write to the hon. Member within the next two weeks.

Mr. Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if wild-caught monkeys destined for use in experiments are tested for (a) Ebola, (b) SIV and (c) Hepatitis; and if he will make a statement. [117019]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: The Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food regulates the screening and quarantining of non-human primates entering the United Kingdom. All simians imported into the United Kingdom are required to undergo six months' quarantine against rabies in premises authorised by that Department.

There are no specific Home Office requirements over and above those set by the Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food.

Mr. Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) how many times Huntingdon Life Sciences has been inspected by his Department's inspectors in the last three years, broken down between (a) announced and (b) unannounced visits; and if he will make a statement; [117020]

(2) how many wild-caught baboons Huntingdon Life Sciences have used to date; and if he will make a statement; [117021]

(3) if he will list the establishments within the United Kingdom licensed to use wild-caught baboons since May 1 1997; and if he will make a statement. [117022]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: Section 24 of the Animals (Scientific Procedures) Act 1986 prevents disclosure of detailed information about individual establishments licensed under the Act.

We are taking further legal advice on this in respect of these matters and are reviewing section 24 in the light of Freedom of Information legislation.

I will write to the hon. Member.

Mr. Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many animals and of what species are held at the Huntingdon Life Sciences sites at (a) Huntingdon and (b) Occold; and if he will make a statement. [117023]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: Home Office records identify the number of project licences currently in force at each licensed establishment and also show the species of animal and the maximum number of animals that can be used under each licence. Our records do not show how many animals and of what species are being held at an establishment at any one time.

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many laboratory rodents have been killed (a) this year and (b) in each of the last three years because they were surplus to requirements; and if he will make a statement. [117090]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: The Home Office does not collect this information centrally. The Animal Procedures Committee has a working group on overbreeding which is considering how this issue can be taken forward.

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many licences have been granted for LD50 tests since 21 October 1999. [117076]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: No new licences authorising the LD50 test (Organisation for Economic Co-Operation and Development Guideline 401) have been issued since 21 October 1999. One licence issued after 5 September 1998 was varied on 21 October 1999 to remove authority for the test. Subsequently, a review of all existing licences identified a further 13 currently containing authority for the test. Of these, 11 have now been varied to remove that authority. A final decision has not yet been made on the two remaining licences pending consideration of representations from the licensees under section 12 of the Animals (Scientific Procedures) Act 1986. We will no longer grant new licences for LD50.

Asylum Seekers

Mr. Gale: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list, for each month since January 1998, (a) the number of processed asylum applicants removed from the United Kingdom and (b) the number of processed asylum applicants whose claims have been rejected and who have not been traced. [117253]

Mrs. Roche: Provisional information, relating to removals and voluntary departures for January 1998 to February 2000 of persons who had applied for asylum at some stage, is given in the table.

Asylum seekers whose applications have been considered and refused are removed only once all their rights of appeal in the United Kingdom have been exhausted. It should be noted that the figures may include some persons who withdrew their asylum application or appeal before a decision or determination had been reached. Cases dealt with on a safe third-country basis are also included.

The latest figure for the number of known asylum absconders is 20,000. This is a snapshot, taken from the Immigration and Nationality Directorate port and enforcement databases at the end of November 1998, of those persons (excluding dependants) who had applied for asylum at some point and who had breached the conditions of their temporary admission, temporary release or restriction order, or were otherwise found to be out of contact with the Immigration and Nationality Directorate. It should be noted that a person may become an absconder at any stage of the asylum process and that some persons recorded as absconders may have left the United Kingdom without the knowledge of the Immigration and Nationality Directorate. Data recording problems mean that this figure cannot currently be updated.

Removals and voluntary departures of asylum applicants, excluding dependants, by month, January 1998 to February 2000

Month	Removals and voluntary departures [1,2]
January 1998	600
February 1998	525
March 1998	555
April 1998	465
May 1998	490
June 1998	485
July 1998	560
August 1998	610
September 1998	535
October 1998	670
November 1998	695
December 1998	720
January 1999	650
February 1999	585
March 1999	615
April 1999	600
May 1999	625
June 1999	610
July 1999	660
August 1999	625
September 1999	685
October 1999	710
November 1999	635
December 1999	645
January 2000	605
February 2000	680

[1] For port asylum applicants, the data include persons departing voluntarily up to and including the point of notification of the decision on the asylum application and those persons who have had their asylum application refused and leave the country before they have exhausted their rights of appeal. For in-country applicants, the data exclude persons departing voluntarily before the initiation of enforcement action.

[2] Figures are provisional, revised and rounded to the nearest five.

Mr. Lidington: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many asylum seekers had registered with each local authority in England and Wales at the most recent date for which figures are available. [117659]

Mrs. Roche: The information requested is not held centrally and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Mr. Lidington: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what plans he has to make regulations to specify that no further asylum seekers may be placed in particular local authority areas; which local authority areas he intends to specify; and if he will make a statement. [117656]

Mrs. Roche: At present, there are no plans to exercise the relevant powers to make regulations that would permit no further asylum seekers to be placed in particular local authority areas.

Mr. Lidington: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how much accommodation each regional consortium has secured on behalf of the National Asylum Seekers Support Agency. [117654]

Mrs. Roche: We have been conducting extensive negotiations with the regional consortia and expect in the coming months to sign contracts with them.

Mr. Lidington: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what plans he has to set maximum limits to the number of asylum seekers which any individual local authority should be expected to support. [117657]

Mrs. Roche: I have no present plans to do so.

Mr. Lidington: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if it is his policy to deport from the United Kingdom asylum seekers who are convicted of aggressive begging; and if he will make a statement. [117655]

Mrs. Roche: I have made arrangements for details of foreign nationals arrested by the police for begging to be passed immediately to a central contact point in the Immigration and Nationality Directorate. The Immigration Service will establish the person's immigration status, and if they make an asylum application or have an application outstanding about which they have not yet been interviewed, will conduct an asylum interview. The application will be fast-tracked for decision, as will any appeal.

It is my policy to ensure that all asylum seekers, including those convicted of begging, whose applications are unfounded are removed from the United Kingdom as quickly as possible.

The hon. Member will be aware that important changes to speed up appeals and the removal of unsuccessful applicants are contained in the Immigration and Asylum Act 1999 and will come into force later this year.

Correspondence

Mr. Lidington: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what target he has set for his Department to reply to letters from hon. Members about immigration, nationality and asylum cases; in how many cases his Department has met that target in the last year; and if he will make a statement. [117652]

Mrs. Roche: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave him on 25 October 1999, Official Report, column 687W and to the reply given to him by my hon. Friend, the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State on 26 July 1999, Official Report, columns 63–64W.

The Immigration and Nationality Directorate (IND) has a target of 15 working days for replying to letters from hon. Members. This includes correspondence addressed to Ministers and to the Secretary to the IND Board. I regret that, due to current updating of the Information Technology used to record and track the correspondence addressed to the Secretary to the IND Board, I am unable to give a figure for the number of cases that met the target during last year. As soon as it becomes available I will ensure that it is passed to the hon. Member. For the period 1 April 1999 to 31 March 2000, replies to letters addressed to Ministers met the target in 9.7 per cent. of cases. Every effort is being made to improve on this figure.

Mr. Lidington: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the earliest date of a letter from an hon. Member which has yet to be dealt with by the Immigration and Nationality Directorate's ministerial case-handling team. [117651]

Mrs. Roche: The Immigration and Nationality Directorate's Ministerial Correspondence Unit is currently dealing with letters from hon. Members received in December, the earliest being 17 December. We are aware, however, that there are some older cases within the system elsewhere in the Integrated Casework Directorate and our aim is to clear this backlog within the next few months.

Portland Young Offenders Institution

Mr. Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what investigation he has carried out into allegations of abuse at Portland Young Offenders Institution; and if he will make a statement. [117661]

Mr. Boateng: The allegations of abuse raised by the Howard League for Penal Reform give no details as to time, date or place of alleged incidents of abuse and do not identify victims, witnesses or alleged assailants. The Director General of the Prison Service has made it clear that he regards the allegations as serious, and he has twice asked the Howard League to provide this information, without which no investigation is possible. No further details have been received.

Her Majesty's Chief Inspector of Prisons carried out a full inspection of Portland between 24 October and 3 November 1999. He was aware of the allegations before starting his inspection. He has raised a number of serious criticisms which are being addressed, but he did not report any evidence of the abuse of prisoners.

Visas

Mr. Godsiff: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many (1) nationals of (a) Bangladesh, (b) Belarus, (c) Benin, (d) Bhutan, (e) Bulgaria, (f) Burundi and (g) Cambodia applied for entry clearance to come to the United Kingdom for temporary purposes, including visitor and student applications, in (i) 1998 and (ii) 1999; how many visas were issued for temporary purposes; how many recipients of these visas returned to their country of nationality before their visa expired; and how many applied (a) to remain permanently in the United Kingdom and (b) for political asylum; [116996]

(2) nationals of (a) the Dominican Republic, (b) Ecuador, (c) Egypt, (d) Eritrea, (e) Fiji, (f) Gabon and (g) Gambia applied for entry clearance to come to the United Kingdom for temporary purposes, including visitor and student applications, in (i) 1998 and (ii) 1999; how many visas were issued for temporary purposes; how many recipients of these visas returned to their country of nationality before their visa expired; and how many applied (a) to remain permanently in the United Kingdom and (b) for political asylum; [116994]

(3) nationals of (a) Morocco, (b) Mozambique, (c) Nepal, (d) Pakistan, (e) Peru, (f) the Phillippines and (g) Romania applied for entry clearance to come to the United Kingdom for temporary purposes, including visitor and student applications, in (i) 1998 and (ii) 1999; how many visas were issued for temporary purposes; how many recipients of these visas returned to their country of nationality before their visa expired; and how many applied (a) to remain permanently in the United Kingdom and (b) for political asylum; [116991]

(4) nationals of (a) Cameroon, (b) the Central African Republic, (c) Chad, (d) China, (e) Colombia, (f) the Congo and (g) Djibouti applied for entry clearance to come to the United Kingdom for temporary purposes, including visitor and student applications, in (i) 1998 and (ii) 1999; how many visas were issued for temporary purposes; how many recipients of these visas returned to their country of nationality before their visa expired; and how many applied (a) to remain permanently in the United Kingdom and (b) for political asylum; [116995]

(5) nationals of (a) Afghanistan, (b) Albania, (c) Algeria, (d) Angola, (e) Armenia, (f) Azerbaijan and (g) Bahrain applied for entry clearance to come to the United Kingdom for temporary purposes, including visitor and student applications, in (i) 1998 and (ii) 1999; how many visas were issued for temporary purposes; how many recipients of these visas returned to their country of nationality before their visa expired; and how many applied (a) to remain permanently in the United Kingdom and (b) for political asylum; [116997]

(6) nationals of (a) Russia, (b) Rwanda, (c) Saudi Arabia, (d) Senegal, (e) Sierra Leone, (f) Somalia, and (g) Sri Lanka applied for entry clearance to come to the United Kingdom for temporary purposes, including visitor and student applications, in (i) 1998 and (ii) 1999; how many visas were issued for temporary purposes; how many recipients of these visas returned to their country of nationality before their visa expired; and how many applied (a) to remain permanently in the United Kingdom and (b) for political asylum; [116989]

(7) nationals of (a) Yugoslavia, (b) Ukraine, (c) Vietnam and (d) Yemen, applied for entry clearance to come to the United Kingdom for temporary purposes, including visitor and student applications, in (i) 1998 and (ii) 1999; how many visas were issued for temporary purposes; how many recipients of these visas returned to their country of nationality before their visa expired; and how many applied (a) to remain permanently in the United Kingdom and (b) for political asylum; [116980]

(8) nationals of (a) Liberia, (b) Libya, (c) Macedonia, (d) Madagascar, (e) the Maldives, (f) Moldova and (g) Mongolia applied for entry clearance to come to the United Kingdom for temporary purposes, including visitor and student applications, in (i) 1998 and (ii) 1999; how many visas were issued for temporary purposes; how many recipients of these visas returned to their country of nationality before their visa expired; and how many applied (a) to remain permanently in the United Kingdom and (b) for political asylum; [116990]

(9) nationals of (a) Georgia, (b) Ghana, (c) Guyana, (d) Haiti, (e) India, (f) Indonesia and (g) Iran applied for entry clearance to come to the United Kingdom for temporary purposes, including visitor and student applications, in (i) 1998 and (ii) 1999; how many visas were issued for temporary purposes; how many recipients of these visas returned to their country of nationality before their visa expired; and how many applied (a) to remain permanently in the United Kingdom and (b) for political asylum; [116993]

(10) Zambian nationals applied for entry clearance to come to the United Kingdom for temporary purposes, including visitor and student applications in (i) 1998 and (ii) 1999; how many visas were issued for temporary purposes; how many recipients of these visas returned to their country of nationality before their visa expired; and how many applied (a) to remain permanently in the United Kingdom and (b) for political asylum; [116981]

(11) nationals of (a) the Sudan, (b) Syria, (c) Taiwan, (d) Tanzania, (e) Thailand, (f) Tunisia and (g) Turkey applied for entry clearance to come to the United Kingdom for temporary purposes, including visitor and student applications, in (i) 1998 and (ii) 1999; how many visas were issued for temporary purposes; how many recipients of these visas returned to their country of nationality before their visa expired; and how many applied (a) to remain permanently in the United Kingdom and (b) for political asylum; [116979]

(12) nationals of (a) Iraq, (b) Ivory Coast, (c) Jordan, (d) Kenya, (e) Kuwait, (f) Laos and (g) Lebanon applied for entry clearance to come to the United Kingdom for temporary purposes, including visitor and student applications, in (i) 1998 and (ii) 1999; how many visas were issued for temporary purposes; how many recipients of these visas returned to their country of nationality before their visa expired; and how many applied (a) to remain permanently in the United Kingdom and (b) for political asylum. [116992]

Mrs. Roche: The available information is given in the tables.

Entry clearance data are available by country of application only, which is not necessarily the country of the applicant's nationality. There were no entry clearance issuing posts in Afghanistan, Benin, Bhutan, Burundi, Central African Republic, Chad, Congo, Djibouti, Eritrea, Gabon, Haiti, Iraq, Laos, Maldives, Moldova, Rwanda, Somalia and Sierra Leone in 1998 and 1999. Residents of these countries have to apply elsewhere. The entry clearance issuing post in Sudan was re-opened in 1999.

No data are available on the numbers of persons who return to their country of nationality before their leave to enter or remain in the United Kingdom expires.

Information is not available on the number of holders of visas for temporary purposes who apply for asylum or for settlement. The information given in Table 2 on grants of settlement includes persons who entered the United Kingdom with an entry clearance leading to settlement; and the data on asylum applications and those who entered by clandestine means include persons who held no entry clearance.

Table 1: Applications for entry clearance for temporary purposes, and numbers issued 1998–99 [1]

Country of application	Applications received 1998	Applications received 1999	Entry clearances issued 1998	Entry clearances issued 1999
Albania	200	1,680	240	1,320
Algeria	3,500	3,370	3,500	3,370
Angola	1,600	1,740	1,570	1,440
Armenia	1,020	960	850	940
Azerbaijan	3,190	2,700	3,170	2,550
Bahrain	13,150	11,000	13,090	11,720
Bangladesh	12,820	14,980	9,820	11,140
Belarus	7,100	7,100	6,620	6,950
Bulgaria	17,130	21,000	15,790	19,390
Cameroon	2,050	2,020	1,540	1,600
China	38,900	47,230	[2]—	39,460
Colombia	20,550	16,930	19,470	15,640
Congo Democratic Republic[4]	650	[2]—	470	[2]—
Dominican Republic	1,110	1,370	1,010	1,310
Ecuador	3,000	1,980	2,800	1,710
Egypt	29,440	30,410	28,820	29,970
Ethiopia	3,740	3,730	3,100	2,890
Fiji	720	[2]—	700	[2]—
Gambia	2,980	3,630	2,340	2,680
Georgia	1,900	[2]—	1,880	[2]—
Ghana	22,160	27,460	16,130	20,980
Guyana	1,470	1,450	1,240	1,220
India	142,800	170,050	129,560	152,040
Indonesia	8,680	18,370	8,390	17,540
Iran	23,740	[2]—	21,970	[2]—
Ivory Coast	2,300	2,110	1,970	2,210
Jordan	8,900	8,450	8,920	8,240
Kenya	16,600	17,380	14,750	13,740
Kuwait	42,740	36,060	42,500	32,230
Lebanon	7,430	7,380	7,070	7,070
Libya	820	1,390	770	1,310
Macedonia	420	720	420	720
Madagascar	290	350	280	320
Mongolia	810	900	710	740
Morocco	7,260	6,870	6,380	6,160
Mozambique	790	700	750	570
Nepal	3,780	4,070	2,920	3,060
Pakistan	65,790	70,260	49,010	47,970
Peru	3,840	3,580	3,680	3,570
Philippines	17,010	19,060	14,540	17,750
Romania	23,030	21,860	20,680	19,840
Russia	94,180	69,460	89,630	66,500
Rwanda	100	110	100	110
Saudi Arabia	57,630	56,680	55,300	53,440
Senegal	1,200	1,380	1,030	1,130
Sri Lanka	14,000	17,770	12,710	15,220
Sudan	[3]—	1,470	[3]—	1,160
Syria	5,820	[2]—	5,320	[2]—
Taiwan	41,060	42,990	41,060	42,990
Tanzania	8,870	9,460	7,180	6,860
Thailand	20,830	28,090	18,460	25,650
Tunisia	7,250	7,070	5,880	5,990
Turkey	66,850	62,510	61,280	43,510
Ukraine	23,560	22,520	20,850	18,890
Vietnam	2,080	1,690	1,840	1,380
Yemen	3,720	3,780	3,300	3,360
Yugoslavia	14,690	2,660	14,130	2,540
Zambia	4,340	4,620	4,120	4,390

[1] 1999 data are provisional

[2] Not available

[3] Not applicable (no entry clearance facilities in that country)

[4] Formerly Zaire

Table 2: Grants of settlement and applications for asylum 1998–99 [5]

Nationality	Grants of settlement [1,2] 1998	Grants of settlement [1,2] 1999	Applications [4] for asylum 1998	Applications [4] for asylum 1999
Afghanistan	190	420	2,395	3,975
Albania	50	110	560	1,310
Algeria	700	990	1,260	1,385
Angola	70	450	150	545
Armenia	[3]—	30	60	95
Azerbaijan	[3]—	10	20	50
Bahrain	10	40	5	10
Bangladesh	3,580	3,240	460	530
Belarus	20	30	110	600
Benin	[3]—	10	5	5
Bhutan	[3]—	[3]—	45	60
Bulgaria	180	270	165	80
Burundi	30	60	215	780
Cambodia	[3]—	10	*	5
Cameroon	90	130	95	245
Central African Republic	0	0	*	*
Chad	0	[3]—	10	70
China	1,410	1,400	1,925	2,625
Colombia	330	530	425	1,000
Congo	10	40	150	450
Congo Democratic Republic[6]	110	2,010	660	1,240
Djibouti	[3]—	30	15	5
Dominican Republic	40	30	[2]—	[2]—
Ecuador	40	80	280	610
Egypt	360	380	45	55
Eritrea	30	170	345	565
Ethiopia	180	2,120	345	455
Fiji	30	20	*	0
Gabon	[3]—	[3]—	*	*
Gambia	140	140	45	30
Georgia	10	30	15	70
Ghana	1,420	3,280	225	195
Guyana	170	120	5	5
Haiti	10	[3]—	0	0
India	5,130	6,000	1,030	1,365
Indonesia	110	200	265	575
Iran	850	1,430	745	1,320
Iraq	1,490	1,970	1,295	1,800
Ivory Coast	80	290	95	190
Jordan	130	120	30	20
Kenya	450	580	885	485
Kuwait	60	50	20	25
Laos	[3]—	[3]—	0	0
Lebanon	590	740	155	240
Liberia	80	70	70	65
Libya	160	150	115	115
Macedonia	10	40	50	90
Madagascar	10	[3]—	*	*
Maldives	[3]—	[3]—	5	5
Moldova	[3]—	10	25	180
Mongolia	10	10	50	75
Morocco	420	420	25	20
Mozambique	10	20	5	0
Nepal	90	80	105	230
Pakistan	7,220	11,700	1,975	2,615
Peru	100	130	5	20
Philippines	890	1,140	35	10
Romania	240	280	1,015	1,985
Russia[7]	850	850	185	685
Rwanda	60	70	280	820
Saudi Arabia	50	50	5	10
Senegal	10	20	5	5
Sierra Leone	510	920	565	1,125
Somalia	2,740	3,030	4,685	7,495
Sri Lanka	1,960	5,100	3,505	5,130
Sudan	450	510	250	280
Syria	110	130	65	95
Taiwan	100	120	5	5
Tanzania	200	210	80	80
Thailand	500	800	20	15
Tunisia	110	150	20	20
Turkey	2,270	4,850	2,015	2,850
Ukraine	140	190	370	775
Vietnam	100	120	35	105

Table 2: Grants of settlement and applications for asylum 1998–99 [1]

Nationality	Grants of settlement [1,2] 1998	1999	Applications [4] for asylum 1998	1999
Yemen	190	230	35	90
Former Yugoslavia	850	4,050	7,980	14,180
Zambia	200	230	25	20

[1] Excluding persons given indefinite leave to enter
[2] All settlement data are rounded to three significant figures or to the nearest 10 if less than 1,000
[3] Russia includes holders of Soviet Union passports
[4] Figures are rounded to the nearest 5 with * = 1 or 2, and exclude dependants
[5] 1999 data are provisional
[6] Negligible (i.e. five or fewer)
[7] Not available
[8] Formerly Zaire

Police (Lancashire)

Mr. Jack: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will publish the latest data available to his Department in relation to Lancashire police force on the numbers of police officers who are (a) on the establishment of the force, (b) on sick leave, (c) undertaking light duties and (d) representing a full complement of officers for the force. [116975]

Mr. Straw: Under the Police and Magistrates' Courts Act 1994, which was passed by the previous Government, it is for individual chief constables to determine the number of police officers in their force within the resources that are available. The Lancashire Constabulary does not have a target establishment. I understand from the Chief Constable that there were the full-time equivalent of 3,224 police officers available for ordinary duty in the Lancashire Constabulary on 31 March 2000.

She has also told me that as at 30 March 2000, 178 police officers were recorded by the Constabulary as absent from duty through sickness and 34 officers had formal restrictions placed upon the range of duties they are physically or psychologically able to perform. This latter figure does not include temporary arrangements made locally within the force as and when required.

Departmental Properties

Mr. Don Foster: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what (a) number and (b) percentage of properties in his charge are empty; and what steps are being taken by his Department to reduce the number of such properties. [116915]

Mr. Straw [holding answer 3 April 2000]: There are currently empty properties at nine sites on the non-prison Home Office estate. Central records are not kept of the numbers of individual properties on large sites, but this comprises 3.4 per cent. of my Department's non-prisons Property Holdings (i.e. freehold buildings and sites, leaseholds, and occupations of other Departments' properties). Further detail on these and the action being taken to reduce the number were given in the reply I gave to the hon. Member for Lewes (Mr. Baker) on 19 January 2000, Official Report, columns 468–72W.

My previous reply accurately reflects the current status of prison land, but the figures for Prison Service's residential properties are more volatile. The position as at 30 March is that the Service owns some 983 residential properties of which 160 (16.3 per cent.) are vacant. Of these, 78 are retained on security/operational grounds, for occupation by future chaplains or for future development. The remaining 82 are being (49) or will be (33) offered for sale.

Tagging

Mr. Steinberg: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many prisoners have been released on the tagging system since it was introduced; how many have reoffended while being tagged; and if he will list the crimes that they have committed. [117699]

Mr. Boateng: As of 29 March 2000, 18,938 offenders have been placed on the Home Detention Curfew scheme. The Prison Service has been notified of 190 offenders who have been charged with an offence committed while subject to the scheme. A breakdown of the types of offences committed is shown in the table. This breakdown has been prepared from information supplied by police forces and drawn from the police national computer. Further analysis of re-offending by those subject to the Home Detention Curfew scheme, including procedures for notification of further charges to the Prison Service by the police, is currently under way as part of a long-term evaluation of the scheme.

Offence type	Number
Burglary, theft and theft from shops (including taking without consent/taking and driving away)	67
Assault	31
Driving and Traffic Offences	19
Drug Offences	16
Breach of the peace (including Drunk and Disorderly)	14
Handling Stolen Goods/Deception	10
Criminal Damage	12
Threatening Behaviour	8
Possession of an offensive weapon	3
Breach of court injunction or Restraining Order	3
Rape	2
Harassment	1
Going Equipped	1
False Imprisonment	1
Arson	1
Indecent Exposure	1
Total	190

SOCIAL SECURITY

Under-occupied Properties

Mr. Coaker: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what plans he has to address the problem of under-occupied properties in the social rented sector. [117974]

Angela Eagle: We have introduced a three-year pilot scheme in the London Boroughs of Croydon, Newham and Haringey. Its aim is to test whether financial incentives can encourage Housing Benefit recipients living in under-occupied social housing to move to smaller and cheaper accommodation.

Under the scheme tenants who move will be entitled to a lump sum payment of about half of the Housing Benefit savings that would be expected over three years from the lower rent. This gives them a financial interest in their rents, and an incentive to move somewhere cheaper. The scheme is entirely voluntary.

Benefit Overpayments

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security, pursuant to his answer of 31 January 2000, Official Report, column 471W, on benefit overpayments, if he will estimate, in relation to the overpayments which took place on 17 and 18 January, (a) the total value of the benefit overpayments considered too small to recover, (b) the total value of the benefits recovered so far and (c) the total number of customers who have repaid the overpayment in full. [116134]

Angela Eagle [holding answer 27 March 2000]: Administration of benefits and recovery of overpayments is a matter for the Chief Executive of the Benefits Agency, Peter Mathison. He will write to the hon. Member.

Letter from Peter Mathison to Mr. Paul Burstow, dated 3 April 2000:

The Secretary of State has asked me to respond to your recent question asking what estimate he has made, in relation to the ACT overpayments (which occurred on 17 and 18 January), of (a) the total value of the benefit overpayments considered too small to be recovered, (b) the total value of the benefit recovered so far and (c) the total number of customers who have repaid the overpayment in full.

Repayment was not requested where the overpaid amount was less than £5. Overpayments falling into this category totalled £8,500.

The benefit recovered to date is over £6.8m and approximately 68,000 customers have repaid their overpayments in full. In addition, it has been agreed with some customers that they can repay in instalments.

I hope this is helpful.

Minimum Income Guarantee

Mr. Ennis: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many pensioners will benefit from the minimum income guarantee in (a) Barnsley and (b) Doncaster. [116080]

Mr. Darling: There are around 8,000 pensioners in Barnsley and 9,000 in Doncaster, receiving their minimum income guarantee (MIG) which is paid through Income Support.

I have written to right hon. and hon. Members today advising them of our plans for a take-up campaign, to encourage pensioners to claim their entitlement to the MIG.

Starting in the spring, the campaign will see intense activity on a number of fronts. This will include television advertising, writing to around two million pensioners who our records suggest are likely to have an underlying entitlement, and the introduction of a tele-claims centre with special trained operators who can advise on entitlement and help complete the paperwork to claim the MIG.

Today we are also publishing a paper which shows what has happened to pensioner incomes over the past 40 years. It shows that average pensioner incomes as a whole are rising faster than average earnings and that some have done very well. But it also shows that a significant minority of pensioners have missed out. We are helping all pensioners, but the paper shows why we should focus particular help on those who need help most.

The paper has been placed in the Library and copies are available from the Vote Office.

Mrs. Curtis-Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many people over 65 years of age are receiving the minimum income guarantee in (a) the Crosby parliamentary constituency and (b) each constituency in the City of Liverpool. [116673]

Mr. Bayley: The administration of the minimum income guarantee is a matter for Peter Mathison the Chief Executive of the Benefits Agency. He will write to my hon. Friend.

Letter from Peter Mathison to Mrs. Claire Curtis-Thomas, dated 3 April 2000:

The Secretary of State has asked me to reply to your recent Parliamentary Question about how many people over 65 years of age are receiving the minimum income guarantee in (a) the Crosby parliamentary constituency and (b) each constituency in the City of Liverpool.

The table below lists the number of people aged 65 and over receiving minimum income guarantee by constituency:

Thousand

Constituency	Claimants aged 65 and over
Crosby	1.9
Liverpool, Garston	3.0
Liverpool, Riverside	4.4
Liverpool, Walton	3.2
Liverpool, Wavertree	3.3
Liverpool, West Derby	3.7

These figures are from the Income Support Quarterly Statistical Enquiry of November 1999. Please note the sample size is 5% and therefore, subject to sampling error. They have been rounded to the nearest hundred.

I hope this reply is helpful.

Mr. Webb: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if hon. Members will receive details of his take-up campaign for the minimum income guarantee in addition to that contained in press releases. [117603]

Mr. Bayley: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State wrote to right hon. and hon. Members on 29 March, advising them of our plans for a take-up campaign, to encourage pensioners to claim their entitlement to the Minimum Income Guarantee (MIG).

Starting in the Spring, the campaign will see intense activity on a number of fronts. This will include television advertising, writing to around two million pensioners who our records suggest are likely to have an underlying entitlement, and the introduction of a tele-claims centre with special trained operators who can advise on entitlement and help complete the paperwork to claim the MIG.

BEST CO

Child Support

Mr. David Stewart: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) what is the estimated number of parents with care who have Child Support Agency assessments who are in receipt of working families tax credit, housing benefit and council tax benefit; [117402]

(2) what is the estimated number of parents with care with Child Support Agency assessments who are in receipt of both working families tax credit and housing benefit. [117403]

Angela Eagle: The administration of the Child Support Agency is a matter for the Chief Executive, Mrs. Faith Boardman. She will write to my hon. Friend.

Letter from Faith Boardman to Mr. David Stewart, dated 3 April 2000:

I am replying to your Parliamentary Questions to the Secretary of State for Social Security about the Child Support Agency.

Some of the information requested is not available, but such information as is available is given below.

As at November 1999 the latest statistics available are that there were 922,400 live cases where a full child maintenance assessment had been made. Of these 96,600 (10.5%) were in receipt of working family tax credit.

Unfortunately, similar information relating to Housing Benefit and Council Tax Benefit cannot be obtained.

The Department's Analytical Services Division produces a CSA Quarterly Summary of Statistics that is available in the House of Commons Library and you may find the information it contains of further interest.

I am sorry to be only able to give you a partial answer, but I hope the information provided is helpful.

Disability Living Allowance

Mr. Wood: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many recipients of disability living allowance have had their benefit increased on review since April 1999. [116714]

Mr. Bayley: From April to December 1999 (the latest month for which figures are available) 46,899 Disability Living Allowance recipients had their benefit increased on review.

Income Statistics

Mr. Oaten: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will list for (a) England and (b) each English region, the number of children in households with income below half of the national average in (i) 1979, (ii) 1990 and (iii) each year from 1992 to 1998. [117237]

Mr. Bayley: We have pledged to halve the number of children living in poverty in 10 years and eradicate child poverty in 20 years and we have already made significant progress. The measures we have announced in successive Budgets will lift 1.2 million children out of poverty by the end of this Parliament.

Estimates of the number of children living in households below half average income for England and for English regions are presented in the following tables. Regional figures are available only from 1994–95.

Number of children living in households below half UK average income for England

Million

	Before housing costs (BHC)	After housing costs (AHC)
1979	1.0	1.1
1990–91	2.5	3.0
1992–93	2.8	3.6
1993–94	2.7	3.5

Number of children living in households below half GB average income for England

Million

	Before housing costs (BHC)	After housing costs (AHC)
1994–5	2.5	3.5
1995–96	2.3	3.5
1996–97	2.8	3.9
1997–98	2.8	3.8

Number of children living in households below half average income for English regions

Million

	1994–95	1995–96	1996–97	1997–98
BHC
North East	0.20	0.15	0.20	0.20
North West and Merseyside	0.45	0.40	0.50	0.45
Yorkshire and the Humber	0.35	0.30	0.35	0.35
East Midlands	0.20	0.20	0.20	0.25
West Midlands	0.25	0.30	0.40	0.40
Eastern	0.25	0.20	0.25	0.25
London	0.40	0.25	0.45	0.45
South East	0.20	0.25	0.30	0.30
South West	0.20	0.20	0.25	0.25
AHC
North East	0.20	0.20	0.25	0.25
North West and Merseyside	0.55	0.55	0.60	0.60
Yorkshire and the Humber	0.40	0.35	0.40	0.35
East Midlands	0.30	0.30	0.30	0.25
West Midlands	0.35	0.40	0.45	0.45
Eastern	0.40	0.30	0.35	0.35
London	0.60	0.65	0.70	0.75
South East	0.40	0.45	0.50	0.40
South West	0.30	0.30	0.35	0.30

Notes:

1. The source is Households Below Average Income (HBAI). Estimates for 1979 to 1993–94 are derived from the Family Expenditure Survey and these estimates, including the value of half average income, relate to the United Kingdom. Results for 1990–91, 1992–93 and 1993–94 are for two years combined. Estimates for 1994–95 to 1997–98 are taken from the Family Resources Survey (FRS) and the estimates, including the value of half average income, relate to Great Britain. FRS-based estimates use a slightly different definition of income; results are therefore not precisely comparable with those for years before 1994–95, but the results presented here are broadly comparable.

2. All estimates are subject to sampling error and response biases, and small changes apparent in these tables may be influenced by these. Results for individual years may be sensitive to the precise way in which household incomes are adjusted for household size and composition; the picture of changes over time is generally not sensitive to this.

3. Estimates are presented on household income both Before Housing Costs (BHC) and After Housing Costs (AHC) in line with HBAI conventions.

4. Results in the tables 1 and 2 are rounded to the nearest 100,000. Results in the table are rounded to the nearest 50,000.

Y AVAILABLE

Mobility Scooters

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many requests for funding for mobility scooters were made in England and Wales during 1999. [117084]

Mr. Bayley: Information about the number of requests for scooters, as distinct from other Motability vehicles, is not held separately. However, during 1999 Motability supplied its UK customers with 3,641 powered wheelchairs and pavement scooters through its Hire Purchase Scheme, which is funded through the use of the customer's Higher Rate Mobility Component of Disability Living Allowance or War Pensioners' Mobility Supplement.

Motability run a UK wide powered wheelchair and scooter scheme and figures recorded are combined to include both powered wheelchairs and scooters, on a UK basis. Separate figures for England and Wales are therefore not available.

Pensioner Incomes

Mr. Oaten: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will list for (a) England and (b) each English region the number of pensioners in households with income below half of the national average in (i) 1979, (ii) 1990 and (iii) each year from 1992 to 1998. [117238]

Mr. Rooker: Estimates of the number of pensioners living in households below half average income for England and for English regions are presented in the following tables. Regional figures are available only from 1994–95.

Number of pensioners living in households below half UK average income for England

Million

	Before housing costs (BHC)	After housing costs (AHC)
1979	1.2	1.2
1990–91	2.7	2.9
1992–93	2.0	2.4
1993–94	1.8	2.3

Number of pensioners living in households below half GB average income for England

Million

	Before housing costs (BHC)	After housing costs (AHC)
1994–95	1.7	2.2
1995–96	1.8	2.2
1996–97	1.7	2.3
1997–98	1.9	2.4

Number of pensioners living in households below half average income for English regions, BHC

Million

	1994–95	1995–96	1996–97	1997–98
North East	0.10	0.10	0.10	0.10
North West and Merseyside	0.25	0.25	0.25	0.25
Yorkshire and the Humber	0.20	0.20	0.20	0.20
East Midlands	0.15	0.15	0.15	0.20
West Midlands	0.20	0.20	0.20	0.20
Eastern	0.20	0.20	0.20	0.20
London	0.20	0.20	0.20	0.20
South East	0.25	0.25	0.25	0.25
South West	0.15	0.20	0.20	0.25

Number of pensioners living in households below half average income for English regions, AHC

Million

	1994–95	1995–96	1996–97	1997–98
North East	0.15	0.15	0.15	0.15
North West and Merseyside	0.30	0.30	0.30	0.30
Yorkshire and the Humber	0.25	0.25	0.25	0.25
East Midlands	0.15	0.20	0.20	0.20
West Midlands	0.25	0.25	0.25	0.25
Eastern	0.25	0.25	0.25	0.25
London	0.30	0.30	0.30	0.30
South East	0.35	0.35	0.30	0.30
South West	0.20	0.25	0.25	0.30

Notes:

1. The source is Households Below Average Income (HBAI). Estimates for 1979 to 1993–94 are derived from the Family Expenditure Survey and these estimates, including the value of half average income, relate to the United Kingdom. Results for 1990–91, 1992–93 and 1993–94 are for two years combined. Estimates for 1994–95 to 1997–98 are taken from the Family Resources Survey and the estimates, including the value of half average income, relate to Great Britain. FRS-based estimates use a slightly different definition of income; results are therefore not precisely comparable with those for years before 1994–95, but the results presented here are broadly comparable.
2. All estimates are subject to sampling error and response biases, and small changes apparent in these tables may be influenced by these. Results for individual years are sensitive to the precise way in which household incomes are adjusted for household size and composition; the picture of changes over time is generally not sensitive to this.
3. Estimates are presented on household income both Before Housing Costs (BHC) and After Housing Costs (AHC) in line with HBAI conventions.
4. Results in tables 1 and 2 are rounded to the nearest 100,000. Results in table 2 and 3 are rounded to the nearest 50,000.

Past changes in pensioner incomes reflect the fact that many pensioners have simply lost out on the opportunity to invest in a second pension. Our strategy for tomorrow's pensioners will provide the opportunity for all people of working age to build a second pension. We are also determined to provide security for all of today's pensioners. The minimum income guarantee provides that security for pensioners with low incomes and our national take-up programme will encourage those entitled to claim.

Asylum Seekers

Dr. Harris: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what estimate he has made of the cost of welfare benefits for asylum seekers who do not have permission to work in each of the last three years. [117052]

Mr. Bayley: I refer the hon. Member to the oral answer I gave the hon. Member for Ribble Valley (Mr. Evans) on 3 April 2000, Official Report, columns 612–13.

War Pensions

Mr. Dismore: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what plans he has to extend the disregard of War Disablement and War Widows' Pensions for income related benefits; and if he will make a statement. [117209]

Mr. Bayley: Mandatory disregards for War Disablement and War Widow's Pensions already exist in income related benefits. The disregards strike the right balance between acknowledging the special reasons for these pensions and prudent use of public funds. We have no plans to extend the disregard of War Disablement and War Widows' Pension.

Mr. Dismore: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will list the local authorities which do not operate a total disregard of War Disablement and War Widows' Pensions, in relation to (a) housing and (b) council tax benefit. [117226]

Mr. Bayley: The information requested is not available and can be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Mr. Dismore: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is (a) the cost of the current mandatory disregards, (b) the additional cost of a total disregard and (c) the overall cost if there were a total disregard, of the disregard of War Disablement and War Widows' Pensions in respect of income-related benefits. [117219]

Mr. Bayley: The cost to central Government of the current mandatory disregards of War Disablement and War Widow's Pensions is estimated to be £20 million a year. The extra cost to central Government if applying a total disregard would be around £140 million per year, giving the overall cost of £160 million a year.

Income Support

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how the £145 million for uprating lower and upper capital limits for income support is calculated; and if it includes any revision of the tariff income. [117518]

Mr. Bayley: We estimate that the cost for uprating lower and upper capital limits for benefits would be £140 million. This can be broken down as follows:

£ million

	Income Support	Housing Benefit	Council Tax Benefit	Total
Expenditure on people newly entitled to benefit	35	[1]—	[1]—	35
Expenditure on people who see benefit income increased (gainers)	25	50	30	105
Total	60	50	30	140

[1] Negligible costs

Notes:

1. Income Support gainers are all those with capital between £3,000 and £8,000. Housing Benefit and Council Tax Benefit gainers are all those with capital between £3,000 and £16,000.
2. Tariff income is calculated in the same way as before, but starting from the £6,000 capital limit.
3. Costs are given for benefits in 2001–02, and are rounded to the nearest £5 million.
4. The £140 million cost relates to Great Britain only.

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what estimate he has made of the number of beneficiaries of the uprating of the lower and upper capital limits for income support; and on what assumptions. [117519]

Mr. Bayley: We expect around 500,000 pensioners to gain from increasing the lower and upper capital limits for Income Support.

This estimate is based on figures obtained from the Policy Simulation Model (PSM) for Income Related benefits, based on 1997–98 Family Resources Survey data. This is uprated to reflect 2000–01 prices and benefit levels.

Regulatory Reform

Mr. Cotter: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security which Minister in his Department has responsibility for regulatory reform; and if he will make a statement. [117414]

Mr. Rooker: I refer the hon. Member to the written answer given today to my hon. Friend the Member for Scarborough and Whitby (Mr. Quinn) by my hon. Friend the Minister for the Cabinet Office.

Automated Credit Transfer

Mr. Willetts: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what recent discussions he has had with the banking industry concerning the automated credit transfer of benefits. [116854]

Mr. Rooker: We have decided to move to automated credit transfer (ACT) from 2003 as a modern, more secure and efficient method of paying benefits.

We have already begun discussions with the banking industry on issues surrounding benefit recipients, charges and other matters. Most of the discussions have been at official level—these will continue.

Mortgage Payments

Mr. Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what plans he has to vary the rate of support for mortgage payments for income support claimants. [117602]

Mr. Bayley: The standard interest rate for Income Support claimants has risen from 6.66 per cent. to 6.92 per cent. and the regulations come into force on 16 April 2000.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Cap Afrique

Mr. Prosser: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if his staff at the port of Dover initiated discussions about the weather conditions with the Master of the Cap Afrique on the evening of 2 March; and what the wind force was at Port Control when the Cap Afrique sailed on 3 March. [116643]

Mr. Morley: The Department's inspection staff did not initiate discussions with the master of the Cap Afrique on 2 March and I refer my hon. Friend to the reply given to the hon. Member for Lewes (Mr. Baker) on 22 March 2000, Official Report, column 589W. This was a failure in internal procedures and action has been taken to rectify this.

Dover Port Control logged the wind speed on 3 March at 04.04 as 40–50 knots (force 8–10) and at 06.54 as 35–44 knots (force 8–9). The Cap Afrique sailed at 05.30 hours.

Dolphins

Ms Atherton: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food (1) what assessment he has made of recent reports of large numbers of dolphins caught in pelagic fishing nets off the coast of Devon and Cornwall; [116662]

(2) what estimate he has made of the number of dolphins caught in pelagic fishing nets off the coast of Devon and Cornwall in the last 12 months; [116663]

(3) what plans he has to investigate the reported deaths of dolphins off the coast of Devon and Cornwall due to the use of pelagic fishing nets; [116664]

(4) what recent research his Ministry has (a) commissioned and (b) evaluated into the effect of pelagic nets on dolphins; and what plans he has to monitor the use of such nets by trawlers in this area. [116665]

Mr. Morley: I was concerned to learn of the recent spate of dolphins washed up on south western coasts. It is important to establish which fishery is responsible for the problem and what is going wrong in that fishery. Once that is known my Department will then work with the industry and, if appropriate, with the European Commission to find practical remedial solutions. I have already met Brixham Seawatch to hear their views on the situation. They have estimated that 28 animals have been washed ashore in Cornwall and 14 in Devon since 1 January. I am also seeking information from others.

The Sea Mammal Research Unit did some preliminary monitoring work in the pelagic trawl fishery in the last year. No cetacean bycatch was recorded. We have agreed to fund a new three-year programme with SMRU beginning in July 2000 which will include additional monitoring of the pelagic fisheries when they re-start in the Autumn.

Treaty of Corfu

Mr. Mitchell: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food (1) what legislation of the European Commission (a) has been tabled, (b) has been agreed and (c) is due to come into force before 2003 in respect of the fishing permit system referred to in Articles 89 and 116 of the Treaty of Corfu, Cm 2606 of 1974; [116729]

(2) what (a) discussions have been held and (b) provisional agreements have been entered into by Ministers concerning the implementation of Articles 89 and 116 of the Treaty of Corfu in any sea area since its ratification. [116730]

Mr. Morley: Council Regulation 779/97 established arrangements for the management of fishing effort in the Baltic Sea from 1 January 1998, based on the issue of special fishing permits by members states under the provisions of Council Regulation 1627/94 which lays down rules concerning special fishing permits. Similar arrangements for the management of fishing effort in Western waters have applied since 1 January 1996, in accordance with Council Regulations 685/95 and 2027/95. Extension of such arrangements to other areas of Community waters would require a specific proposal from the Commission and its adoption by the Council on the basis of a qualified majority. None has been made.

Organic Conversion

Mr. Edwards: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many farmers have (a) applied for and (b) been awarded financial support for organic conversion in each year since such support began. [117120]

Mr. Morley: The details are as follows:

	Applications	Approvals
1994–95	72	37
1995–96	64	64
1996–97	117	57
1997–98	216	133
1998–99	222	118
1999–2000	1,274	1,021

Mr. Edwards: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what is the level of resources allocated to organic conversion in (a) the current and (b) the next three financial years. [117119]

Mr. Morley: Support for organic conversion aid payments to farmers in England will be £11.35 million for 1999–2000 and £12 million, £18 million and £20 million respectively for the next three years.

Websites

Mr. Maclennan: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list the expenditure incurred by his Department, agencies and non-departmental public bodies on (a) the setting up and (b) the operation of websites, indicating the cases in which the expenditure has been above that budgeted; and if he will list for each website (i) the topics which have been covered, (ii) the current average number of hits per month and (iii) the estimated expenditure on each website for each of the next three years. [115392]

Mr. Morley: The information requested could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

GM Foods

Joan Ruddock: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what reports he has received regarding commercial cultivation of Novartis genetically modified Bt maize in Germany; and if he will make a statement. [113618]

Ms Quin [holding answer 9 March 2000]: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply given by the Minister for the Environment on 9 March 2000, Official Report, column 779W.

Further to this reply, Ministers at MAFF received a press release issued by Novartis in Germany regarding the decision of the German Federal Ministries of Health, Agriculture and Environment to suspend approval of Novartis' genetically modified Bt maize. Novartis believes this decision is not supported by the scientific data. The Government will follow developments on this issue closely, but this does not affect the position stated by my colleague the Minister for the Environment, as there are no plans to cultivate this crop commercially in the UK for at least the next few years.

Cross-compliance

Mr. Keetch: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what plans the Government have to use the provision under the EU Rural Development Regulations to introduce cross-compliance, where direct payments in support of agricultural production are conditional on the carrying out of measures to protect wildlife, in cases where cross-compliance may have a detrimental effect on competitiveness. [117594]

Mr. Morley: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given to him on 30 March 2000, Official Report, column 252W.

Organic Farming

Mr. Ruane: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what proportion of United Kingdom demand for organic food was met by domestic production in each of the past 10 years. [117543]

Mr. Morley [holding answer 3 March 2000]: Estimates of the volume of imported organic food since 1997 are between 60 and 70 per cent. per annum. We do not have statistics for the years preceding 1997.

EU Rural Development Regulation

Mr. Keetch: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what plans he has to make use of the provision under Article 13(b) of the EU Rural Development Regulation to introduce schemes of management for areas where environmental restrictions apply; and if he will make a statement. [116314]

Mr. Morley: The Government's proposed use of measures available under the EU Rural Development Regulation (EC) No. 1257/1999 is set out in the rural development plans for England, Wales, Scotland and Northern Ireland which have been submitted to the European Commission for approval. Those plans do not include use of Article 13(b) compensation payments for observing European Community environmental restrictions because the Government's policy is to encourage a positive approach to environmental management through agri-environment measures under Article 22. In England, these include the Countryside Stewardship and Environmentally Sensitive Areas Schemes.

WALES

Regulatory Reform

Mr. Cotter: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales which Minister in his Department has responsibility for regulatory reform; and if he will make a statement. [117416]

Mr. Paul Murphy: I refer the hon. Member to the answer given today to my hon. Friend the Member for Scarborough and Whitby (Mr. Quinn) by the Minister for the Cabinet Office.

The executive functions of the Secretary of State for Wales transferred to the National Assembly for Wales on 1 July 1999. Section 65 of the Government of Wales Act 1998 requires the Assembly to make provision within its subordinate legislation procedures for regulatory appraisals before a draft of the relevant statutory instrument is laid before the Assembly.

However, I also retain an interest in how UK Government regulatory reform affects Wales.

TREASURY

City Centre Migration

Mr. Brady: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what estimates his Department has made of net migration of inhabitants from city centres in each of the last five years. [116146]

Miss Melanie Johnson: The information requested falls within the responsibility of the Director of the Office for National Statistics. I have asked him to reply.

Letter from Tim Holt to Mr. Graham Brady, dated 4 April 2000:

As Director of the Office for National Statistics (ONS), I have been asked to reply to your recent question on estimated net migration from city centres.

The information that you require is not available. At present it is not possible to produce annual migration estimates for small geographical areas such as city centres. Migration estimates are only available for former Family Health Service Authority areas. These are broadly consistent with shire counties, metropolitan districts and groups of London boroughs. This is because estimates of internal migration within the United Kingdom are based on the movement of NHS doctor's patients between the former Family Health Service Authorities.

ONS have recently investigated the feasibility of using the postcoded information held on patient registers to better estimate migration at local level. It is possible that in the future we will be able to provide migration estimates for different geographies such as city centres.

Moves for former Family Health Service Authority areas and between the individual Government Office Regions (GORs) and the rest of the United Kingdom are published in Key Population and Vital Statistics, which is available in the House of Commons Library.

Valuation Office Agency

Mr. Russell Brown: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what targets will be set for the Valuation Office Agency for the year 2000–01. [117918]

Dawn Primarolo: I have set the following key targets for the Valuation Office Agency (VOA) in 2000–01:

Operational

to clear 80 per cent. of 1995 List rating appeals outstanding as at 31 March 2000 by 31 December 2000 to publish by 31 October 2000 the first rolling two year forward programmes for clearance of 2000 list rating appeals to clear by 31 March 2001 council tax appeals equal to the number received in the 12 months to 30 September 2000, within a maximum of 52,000 appeals in England and 3,700 in Wales

Customer service and quality to secure Charter Mark awards for 25 per cent. of the VOA's Groups by 31 March 2001 to achieve specified standards for:

(a) valuation accuracy and

(b) timeliness

in 90 per cent. of cases

Finance and cost efficiency to break even after charging for the full cost of chargeable services including notional interest of 6 per cent. on the average working capital—measurement will be within a tolerance of the greater of 2 per cent. of relevant turnover or £1 million to achieve an increase in the VOA's efficiency index to 1.13 (1998–99 = 1.00).

Further details are contained in the Valuation Office's Forward Plan, copies of which will be placed in the Library of the House on publication.

Individual Savings Accounts

Mr. Maclean: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is the total number and volume of investments held in (a) Maxi ISA accounts and (b) Mini ISA accounts. [117236]

Miss Melanie Johnson: The information requested can be found in Inland Revenue press release REV7.

Aviation Fuel Tax

Mr. Nicholls: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if a decision on the aviation fuel tax proposed by the European Commission will be made under qualified majority voting or unanimity procedure. [117299]

Mr. Timms: The Commission proposal for a Council Directive restructuring the Community framework for the taxation of energy products, which was made in March 1997, is subject to unanimity.

Mr. Nicholls: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is his assessment of the cost implications for the United Kingdom aviation industry of the aviation fuel tax proposed by the European Commission. [117300]

Mr. Timms: I have made no such assessment.

Mr. Nicholls: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is the Government's policy in respect of the European Commission's proposed aviation fuel tax; and if he will make a statement. [117298]

Mr. Timms: The Government have no plans to take advantage of the Commission's proposal to allow member states to opt to tax aviation fuel used on domestic flights, and on flights within the EU by bilateral agreement. The Government support the removal of the international ban on the taxation of aviation fuel and will continue to pursue this in the forum of the International Civil Aviation Organisation.

Small Businesses

Mr. Sayeed: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what further plans he has to introduce measures to assist small businesses. [117311]

Mr. Timms: We are seeking to make Britain the best competitive environment for business in the world. Budget 2000 sets out a substantial package of tax and spending measures that build on existing measures to help small businesses move up the ladder of opportunity. These measures are set out in more detail in Chapter 3 "Meeting the Productivity Challenge" of the EFSR.

Haulage Industry

Mr. Sayeed: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what measures he plans to introduce to assist the haulage industry. [117315]

Mr. Timms: In his recent Budget Statement, the Chancellor of the Exchequer announced a package of measures that will further boost the competitiveness of the UK haulage industry: the introduction of 44 tonne lorries for general use on UK roads from a target date of 1 January 2001; £45 million of cuts to Vehicle Excise Duty, targeted particularly at those parts of the haulage industry facing competitive pressure; and tougher enforcement to tackle illegally-operating hauliers and protect the competitiveness of legitimate operators. These measures are set out in detail in paragraphs 6.68–6.74 of the Economic and Fiscal Strategy Report, published on 21 March 2000.

Third-world Debt

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what progress the Government have made to date with regard to relieving Third-World debt; and what further initiatives the UK plans to take to help tackle the remaining significant debt problem. [117685]

Miss Melanie Johnson: The Government are providing 100 per cent. relief on the debts of those countries (Bolivia, Mauritania and Uganda) that have already reached decision point under the Heavily Indebted Poor Countries (HIPC) initiative. Mozambique is also receiving 100 per cent. relief on the debts it owes to ECGD, in advance of its reaching decision point under the HIPC initiative. This is to aid the country in its reconstruction efforts after the disastrous effects of the floods.

The UK is pressing for swift and successful implementation of the existing debt relief package, which will reduce the debts of the poorest countries by $100 billion.

Underweight Babies

Mr. Field: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Stockton, South (Ms Taylor) of 22 February 2000, Official Report, column 975W, if the figures for the number of low-birthweight babies in England and Wales born between 1990 and 1998 are derived from a consistent method of measurement. [117068]

Miss Melanie Johnson: The information requested falls within the responsibility of the Director of the Office for National Statistics. I have asked him to reply.

Letter from Tim Holt to Mr. Frank Field, dated 4 April 2000:

As Director of the Office for National Statistics (ONS), I have been asked to reply to your recent question asking if the figures for the number of low birthweight babies between 1990 to 1998 are from a consistent method of measurement.

The figures provided in the Answer to the honourable Member of Stockton South in 22nd February Official Report, column 975W were all based on a definition of low birthweight as a birth where the baby was stated to have weighed less than 2,500 grams. The figures were provided for health authorities between 1990 and 1998. These were subject to a number of boundary changes. For consistency the figures provided for all of these years related to boundaries as at 1st April 1999.

Regulatory Reform

Mr. Cotter: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer which Minister in his Department has responsibility for regulatory reform; and if he will make a statement. [117422]

Dawn Primarolo: I refer the hon. Member to the answer given today to my hon. Friend the Member for Scarborough and Whitby (Mr. Quinn) by my right hon. Friend the Minister for the Cabinet Office.

Tax Rates

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many people in employment face a marginal income tax rate of 10 per cent; how many of those are (a) in part-time employment and (b) women; and if he will make a statement. [117411]

Dawn Primarolo: In 2000–01, there are estimated to be around 1.6 million employees who have a marginal income tax rate of 10 per cent. Of those, 1.4 million people are in part-time employment. 1.1 million women in employment have a 10 per cent. marginal rate of income tax (around 70 per cent. of the women will also be included in the part-time figure).

These estimates are based on the Survey of Personal Incomes and Family Expenditure Survey and consistent with the March 2000 Budget.

Public Sector Finances

Mr. Willetts: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will list the figures for the (a) total assets, (b) total liabilities, and (c) net worth of the public sector, referred to in paragraph 2.70 of the Red Book, HC 346, for each year from 1990–91 to 2004–05. [116851]

Dawn Primarolo: Outturn figures for total assets, total liabilities and net worth for the public sector at end-December of each year are available from the Office for National Statistics. Outturns and forecasts of net worth as a per cent. of GDP were published in Tables C1 and C22 of the March 2000 Financial Statement and Budget Report.

Tobacco Smuggling

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what (a) remuneration, (b) fee and (c) expenses were paid out of public funds to Mr. Martin Taylor for his report on the Government's strategy to combat tobacco smuggling. [117649]

Dawn Primarolo: Martin Taylor received no remuneration or fees for his work. No out-of-pocket expenses were paid directly to Martin Taylor. The cost of train tickets for travel to and from meetings outside London were met by Customs and Excise.

Mrs. Lait: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if Martin Taylor received remuneration, a fee or out-of-pocket expenses paid out of public funds for his report on the Government's strategy to combat tobacco smuggling; and who owns the copyright of his report. [117504]

Dawn Primarolo: Martin Taylor received no remuneration or fees for his work. No out-of-pocket expenses were paid directly to Martin Taylor. The cost of train tickets for travel to and from meetings outside London were met by Customs and Excise.

As Martin Taylor provided personal advice to the Chancellor there is no question of copyright.

Mrs. Lait: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what the report by Martin Taylor on the Government's strategy to combat tobacco smuggling concluded about (a) the significance of the difference in the levels of tobacco taxation between the United Kingdom and other nations and (b) the likelihood, without a closer alignment of national tobacco tax levels, of other measures to combat smuggling having a substantial effect. [117505]

Dawn Primarolo: Martin Taylor's advice to the Chancellor was personal and confidential. It would therefore not be appropriate to disclose his advice.

The Government paper "Tackling Tobacco Smuggling" dated March 2000, sets out details of recommendations made by Martin Taylor on how to tackle tobacco smuggling. A copy of the paper has been placed in the Library. In this paper it was noted that a very substantial proportion of cigarettes smuggled into the UK come from places outside the EU where duty is negligible. Bringing cigarette duty rates closer to those of other EU member states would be unlikely to deter this smuggling.

Alcohol Smuggling

Mr. Sayeed: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what plans he has to combat the rise in smuggling of alcohol. [117348]

Dawn Primarolo: Following the March Budget, I announced a further £209 million for Customs to clamp down on excise smuggling. This will enable them to employ nearly 1,000 extra Customs officers, working at ports and inland, including additional special investigators and intelligence staff.

Within this figure an amount of £23 million will be allocated for Customs to fund a national network of x-ray scanners designed to detect smuggling in freight.

Imported Motor Vehicles

Mr. John Smith: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will instruct HM Customs and Excise to provide the same information on the relevant background of imported motor vehicles to independent importers as it does to major car manufacturers and suppliers. [117568]

Dawn Primarolo: I can confirm that Customs do already provide the same information on importation procedures to both independent importers and major car manufacturers and suppliers alike. Full details are contained in their public notices and integrated Tariff. UK and EC law however precludes Customs from disclosing to third parties any confidential information which they hold in relation to a trader's business.

Written Answers to Questions

Wednesday 5 April 2000

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Burma

Mr. Hilary Benn: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will take steps to ban investment in Burma by United Kingdom-owned companies; and if he will make a statement. [117508]

Mr. Battle: We do not encourage trade with our investment in Burma and tell business enquirers so; we have also suspended all financial support for trade mission to Burma and for trade promotional activities there as was made plain in June 1997.

Sri Lanka

Mr. Gardiner: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what contribution Britain is making to support initiatives for peace in Sri Lanka. [117642]

Mr. Hain: We take every opportunity at bilateral meetings to stress the need for a political settlement to end the conflict in Sri Lanka. We have made it clear that we stand ready to help if both sides ask us to play a role. We welcome the Norwegian Government's efforts to bring the Sri Lankan Government and the Liberation Tigers of Tamil Eelam together for peace talks.

Lisbon Summit

Mr. Spring: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what was the (a) total cost and (b) cost per passenger of the jets used to fly Ministers and officials to the Lisbon Summit; and if he will break down the cost by Government department. [117042]

Mr. Robin Cook [holding answer 3 April 2000]: I refer the hon. Member to the answer given to the hon. Member for South Cambridgeshire (Mr. Lansley) by my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister on 30 March 2000, Official Report, column 248W.

Mr. Spring: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs who took the decision that three separate jets would be used to fly Ministers and officials to the Lisbon Summit. [117040]

Mr. Robin Cook [holding answer 3 April 2000]: This was a collective decision, in the light of operational requirements. All travel was undertaken fully in accordance with the rules set out in the Ministerial Code and Travel by Ministers, copies of which are available in the Library.

Mr. Spring: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many (a) officials and (b) political advisers accompanied Ministers to the Lisbon Summit. [117041]

Mr. Robin Cook [holding answer 3 April 2000]: I refer the hon. Member to the answer given by my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister to the hon. Member for South Cambridgeshire (Mr. Lansley) on 4 April 2000, Official Report, column 390W.

Geneva Summit

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what plans he has to involve non-Governmental organisations in consultation as part of the preparation of the Government's position for the Social Summit in Geneva in June. [117326]

Mr. Hain: The Foreign and Commonwealth Office has provided £25,000 to help the United Nations Environment and Development UK Committee (UNED-UK) co-ordinate UK civil society's input to the Special Session. We have financed an internet website, the creation of a key stakeholders' group, and a conference for non-governmental organisations. The Department for International Development has provided £270,000 for the International Council for Social Welfare to help it enhance the role of civil society groups worldwide (and especially those from developing countries) at the Special Session.

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs which department is the lead department for preparing for the Social Summit in Geneva in June; and which other departments are involved in the preparation. [117325]

Mr. Hain: The Foreign and Commonwealth Office is the lead Department for preparations for the General Assembly Special Session on follow-up to the World Summit for Social Development. All other Whitehall Departments with responsibility for social development issues, both nationally and internationally, are fully involved in the preparatory process.

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs who will represent Her Majesty's Government at the United Nations Social Summit in Geneva in June. [117324]

Mr. Hain: The full composition of the UK delegation is still being considered. The Minister for Employment, Welfare to Work and Equal Opportunities, has plans to attend for some of the discussions.

Middle East

Mr. Wyatt: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the progress of recent negotiations between Israel and Syria. [117598]

Mr. Hain: The meeting between President Clinton and President Asad in Geneva on 26 March was a demonstration of the efforts being undertaken to achieve the resumption of negotiations between Israel and Syria and progress towards agreement. The Government support these efforts and believe that a settlement remains possible. Time is, however, short. The Government will spare no effort, in co-operation with the United States and our European partners, to help the parties reach agreement.

St. Helena

Dr. Marek: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what effect the creation of the St. Helena Business Forum has had on unemployment levels. [117797]

Mr. Battle: The St. Helena Business Forum was formed in 1997 at the instigation of the Foreign and Commonwealth Office. In 1998 it became the St. Helena Focus Group and is now run by the private sector. It is a voluntary organisation that was established to promote St. Helena to the private sector in the UK. One of its members has been appointed as a part-time Commercial Representative to the St. Helena Government. The Commercial Representative and Focus Group have greatly improved the service to potential inward investors and have taken a proactive role in inward investment promotion activities. In 1997 unemployment was 20 per cent., at the end of 1999 it was 15 per cent.

Dr. Marek: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what plans has he to develop employment opportunities on St. Helena in non-governmental areas. [117799]

Mr. Battle: The St. Helena Government in its Strategic Review 2000–2010 and Country Policy Plan 2000–01, 2002–03 clearly sets out its commitment to promote employment opportunities. These include increasing contracting out of government services; the promotion of tourism and inward investment; and increased export promotion. Many of these activities are undertaken in conjunction with the St. Helena Development Agency (SHDA) which has been instrumental in creating or sustaining well over 120 jobs in 1998 in the private sector. The Department for International Development has funded a £1.386 million project to provide working capital for the SHDA. The SHDA provides grants and loans particularly for small and medium-scale enterprises as well as training and advice.

Dr. Marek: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many St. Helenians are serving in the Armed Forces; and what percentage of the population that represents. [117801]

Mr. Battle: Thirty six St. Helenians have joined the UK Armed Forces since November 1997 which represents roughly 0.72 per cent. of the population. Several have returned to St. Helena since recruitment because they have either not completed basic training or for other, personal, reasons. Currently 29 are in the services.

Dr. Marek: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what plans has he to assist St. Helena in developing the fishing industry. [117798]

Mr. Battle: Since 1996, the St. Helena Government (SHG) has been engaged in the establishment of a joint venture with Argos Ltd. On 29 February 2000 Argos Atlantic Cold Store was officially opened at Ruperts Bay in St. Helena. This increases fish freezing and cold storage capacity to 800 tonnes. Quotas placed on the local fishermen during times of high catches will now be eliminated. I understand Argos intend to take immediate steps to increase the volume of fish caught by importing bait and improving fishing expertise.

Dr. Marek: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what plans he has to assist St. Helena in diversifying its economy. [117800]

Mr. Battle: The St. Helena Government set out their vision for the future and long-term development strategy in their Strategic Review 2000–10 and Country Policy Plan 2000–01 to 2002–03. This is clearly based on the need to continue to develop the island's private sector and attract inward investment. The St. Helena and British Governments agreed during this January's discussions on a new three-year aid agreement that progress towards a more sustainable economy will remain difficult until access to the island is radically improved. The outcome of the Department for International Development's proposed comparative costs study of future air access versus sea access will be relevant to future tourism development.

SOLICITOR-GENERAL

NHS Computer Fraud

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Solicitor-General how many persons were prosecuted for involvement in fraud over the procurement of computer equipment in the NHS in each of the last six years. [116858]

The Solicitor-General: The Crown Prosecution Service holds no central records in respect of the number of persons prosecuted for involvement in fraud over the procurement of computer equipment in the NHS in each of the last six years. The information requested could be obtained only by examining each relevant file in every CPS office, at disproportionate cost. The Serious Fraud Office has not prosecuted any persons for involvement in fraud over the procurement of computer equipment in the NHS in each of the last six years.

R. v. Doran

Mr. Singh: To ask the Solicitor-General when the report of the inquiry into the circumstances surrounding the collapse of the case, R. v. Doran & Others, is due to be handed to the Attorney-General; and if the report will be published. [117318]

The Solicitor-General: I have been informed by His Honour Gerald Butler QC that his report is close to completion, but I am not in a position to provide a specific date by which the finished report will be provided to the Attorney-General. The question of publication is a matter for the Attorney-General and the Chairman of HM Customs and Excise. As the previous Attorney-General, my right hon. and learned Friend the Member for Aberavon (Sir J. Morris) stated in his parliamentary answer of 22 July 1999, Official Report, column 607W, a summary of the report and its recommendations will be made available to the House.

Mr. Singh: To ask the Solicitor-General what factors led to the delay in the reporting of the inquiry into the circumstances surrounding the case, R. v. Doran & Others. [117319]

The Solicitor-General: I have been informed by His Honour Gerald Butler QC that the inquiry took longer than anticipated for three reasons: (1) there were delays in providing the inquiry with all the relevant documentation; (2) the documentation was substantially more voluminous than anticipated when the inquiry was established; (3) there were far more witnesses to be interviewed than was thought to be the case at the outset. The inquiry has received evidence from, and interviewed, 37 witnesses.

CULTURE, MEDIA AND SPORT

World Class Performance Programme

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport when his Department will provide the projected funding figures for the World Class Performance Programme for 2000–01 in (a) England, (b) Scotland and (c) Northern Ireland. [115329]

Kate Hoey: The World Class Performance Programme (WCPP) is administered by UK Sport for UK governing bodies and includes athletes from all parts of the United Kingdom. Sport England is responsible for the administration of the WCPP for English governing bodies and for the World Class Potential and World Class Start Programmes for English athletes. In addition, Scotland, Wales and Northern Ireland administer their own elite programmes for their national athletes below the level of World Class Performance.

The Sport England projected budget for 2000–01 will be submitted to its Council for approval on 3 April and is not yet available. The projected funding figures for 2000–01 for the elite programmes for Scotland and Northern Ireland are as follows:

	£
Sport Scotland—Talented Athlete Programme	2,000,000
Sport Scotland—Scotland Junior Groups Programme	750,000
Sports Council for Northern Ireland—Development of Talented Individuals Programme	530,000

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport if he will list the individual awards for the World Class Performance Programme specifying the sports to date. [115328]

Kate Hoey: The World Class Performance Programme (WCPP) is administered by UK Sport for UK governing bodies and by Sport England for English governing bodies. The awards made by UK Sport and accepted by governing bodies since the Council became a lottery distributor on 1 July 1999 are given in the table. Sport England is currently upgrading its grant management system and information prior to 1 July 1999 and on the Sport England WCPP. I will write to the hon. Member with this information shortly and place a copy in the Library of the House.

Sport	£ Award [1,2]
Athletics	3,045,839
Athletics (Disabled)	2,315,009
British Paralympic Association Games	61,002
Bobsleigh	316,687
Cycling	444,267
Diving[3]	395,522
Equestrian	728,200
Goalball (Disability Sport)	110,220
Gymnastics	1,773,806
Ice Skating	94,252
Judo	425,636
Modern Pentathlon	100,000
Orienteering	449,743
Powerlifting (Disabled)	112,566
Rowing	2,754,621
Sailing	1,744,320
Shooting (Paraplegic)	65,000
Swimming[3]	2,522,836
Swimming (Disabled)[3]	1,356,912
Table Tennis (Disabled)	11,820
Trampoline	188,203
Triathlon	34,290
Water Skiing	31,300
Wheelchair Rugby	149,476

[1] The list comprises only those awards that have been accepted by the Governing Body and are hard commitments.
[2] The total awards committed may not necessarily equate to exact outturn expenditure. Athlete subsistence costs are a best estimate and may not be taken up in full. Performance costs are normally taken up in full but where an underspend does arise lottery funding may be recouped or withheld.
[3] Diving, Swimming and Disability Swimming include awards that have been backdated to cover extensions to earlier awards.

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport for what reason there has been a reduction in funding of the World Class Performance Programme from 1998–99 to 1999–2000. [115330]

Kate Hoey: There has been no reduction in funding of the World Class Performance Programme. The information included in my reply to my hon. Friend the Member for Loughborough (Mr. Reed) of 22 February 2000, Official Report, columns 849–51W, provided details of the funding to elite sport by each of the Sports Councils and related to expenditure for the first 10 months of 1999–2000, not to the total value of awards.

The expenditure figures for the financial year 1999–2000 remain incomplete since payments for March have still to be made. The expected outturn for 1999–2000 will be broadly in line with that for 1998–99. I will write to the hon. Member as soon as the full year figures are available.

Lottery Funding

Miss Geraldine Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport how much National Lottery funding projects in Morecambe and Lunesdale constituency have received since the National Lottery began. [117313]

Kate Hoey: The total value of National Lottery awards to projects in the constituency of Morecambe and Lunesdale since the lottery began is £5,374,323. The data are taken from the National Lottery Awards database which uses information supplied by the distributing bodies.

Historic Engineering Projects

Mr. Keetch: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport if he will make a statement on National Lottery funding for historic engineering projects. [117595]

Mr. Alan Howarth: The Heritage Lottery Fund can support a wide variety of projects involving the acquisition, repair, conservation and restoration of buildings, sites and collections relating to industrial and technological history, which will include historic engineering projects. To date the Heritage Lottery Fund has committed over £104 million to projects in the industrial, maritime and transport sector, and expects to continue to allocate 9 per cent. of its income annually to this area within the period of the current Strategic Plan.

Charleroi Stadium

Mr. Peter Ainsworth: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what discussions he has had with (a) the Football Association, (b) UEFA, (c) the Official England Supporters Club and (d) the Belgian Police Federation regarding the suitability of the Charleroi Stadium for holding major international football matches; and if he will make a statement. [117243]

Mr. Chris Smith [holding answer 3 April 2000]: My right hon. Friend the Home Secretary has raised concerns about the suitability of Charleroi as a venue for the England v. Germany match with the Belgian Government, who have provided assurances that the stadium complies with UEFA and Belgian safety standards. The Home Office is overseeing preparations for Euro 2000 and there is extensive liaison with the host countries and with UK agencies involved in the tournament.

Mr. Peter Ainsworth: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what recent discussions he has had concerning safety issues at Charleroi Stadium. [117275]

Kate Hoey [holding answer 3 April 2000]: I recently discussed this matter with the Chief Executive of the Football Licensing Authority.

PRIME MINISTER

Engagements

Sir Peter Tapsell: To ask the Prime Minister if he will list his official engagements for Wednesday, 5 April. [117370]

The Prime Minister: This morning I had meetings with ministerial colleagues and others. In addition to my duties in the House I will have further such meetings later today.

INTERNATIONAL DEVELOPMENT

Burmese Refugees

Mrs. Fyfe: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what provision her Department has made for assistance to members of Burmese ethnic minorities held in Thai refugee camps. [117288]

Clare Short: My Department provides assistance to Burmese refugees in Thailand through a grouping of NGOs called the Burma Border Consortium. This Consortium supports around 106,000 Burmese refugees from the Karen and Karenni ethnic minorities in Thailand. Over the last two years, DFID has provided the Burma Border Consortium with £537,500 for its work.

Debt Cancellation

Mr. John M. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what is her policy in relation to cancellation of third world debt on discrimination in favour of aid recipients which have exercised good stewardship of aid received. [117405]

Clare Short: The purpose of giving debt relief is to benefit the poor. I welcome the international agreement that this should be the main criterion for debt relief. Under the enhanced Heavily Indebted Poor Countries (HIPC) initiative, countries will produce poverty reduction strategies which set out policies and programmes to tackle poverty. The strategy will then provide a framework for all poverty reduction resources available to the country—Government revenue, debt relief savings and international development assistance.

I welcome the IMF and the World bank commitments to use the Poverty Reduction Strategy Papers (PRSPs) as a basis for their programmes of support. In countries committed to poverty reduction, our bilateral country strategies will take their lead from the PRSP, and I encourage other bilateral donors to do likewise.

LORD CHANCELLOR'S DEPARTMENT

Works of Art

Mr. Brake: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department how much has been spent on (a) the upkeep and (b) the purchase of works of art in the Lord Chancellor's Department for each financial year since 1992. [117480]

Mr. Lock: Current financial systems cannot provide a figure for expenditure on works of art without recourse to disproportionate time and expense. All major paintings in court buildings are either part of the Government Art Collection or are on loan from private museums or collections. I refer the hon. Member to the answer given to him by my hon. Friend the Minister for the Arts, 4 April 2000, Official Report, columns 392–93W.

WALES

Press Officers

Mr. Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many press officers are employed by the Office of the Secretary of State for Wales. [116323]

Mr. Paul Murphy: The Office of the Secretary of State for Wales employs one press officer with an assistant. I am also advised on media matters by my Director of Information and Communications.

Special Advisers

Mr. Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many special advisers are employed by the Office of the Secretary of State for Wales. [116332]

Mr. Paul Murphy: The Wales Office employs two special advisers.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Minimum Income Guarantee

Angela Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many pensioners in (a) the Basildon parliamentary constituency, (b) Basildon and (c) Thurrock are in receipt of the minimum income guarantee. [117054]

Mr. Bayley: The administration of benefits is a matter for Peter Mathison the Chief Executive of the Benefits Agency to answer. He will write to my hon. Friend.

Letter from Peter Mathison to Angela Smith, dated 4 April 2000:

The Secretary of State for Social Security has asked me to respond to your recent Parliamentary Question asking how many pensioners in (a) the Basildon parliamentary constituency, (b) Basildon and (c) Thurrock are in receipt of the minimum income guarantee.

The minimum income guarantee relates to Income Support pensioners aged 60 and over. The figures provided in reply to parts b and c of your question relate to Local Authority areas. The figures provided are shown in the table attached.

I hope this is helpful.

Income Support pensioners, by parliamentary constituency and local authority area

Thousand

Area	Pensioners on Income Support
Basildon parliamentary constituency	2.7
Basildon local authority area	4.4
Thurrock local authority area	2.8

Notes:
1. Sample size 5 per cent., therefore subject to sampling error.
2. Pensioners are defined as benefit units where either the claimant and/or their partner are aged 60 years or over, (including those in residential care and nursing homes).
3. Figures have been rounded to the nearest hundred and quoted in thousands.
4. Data taken in November 1999.

Source:
Income Support Quarterly Statistical Enquiry, November 1999.

Mortgage Arrears

Mr. Hunter: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will introduce legislation to ensure that a separated or divorced husband or wife is not liable for mortgage arrears on his or her former marital home which accrue after he or she has left that property. [117121]

Angela Eagle: This Department has no plans to introduce such legislation. This is a matter for those concerned to resolve.

Family Credit

Angela Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many people in the parliamentary constituency of Basildon were in receipt of (a) Family Credit and (b) Child Care Allowance in each of the last five years. [117056]

Angela Eagle: The information is not available in the format requested. Such information as is available is in the tables.

Numbers of Family Credit recipients in Basildon parliamentary constituency—August 1995–99

Thousand

	Number of Family Credit recipients
August
1995	0.6
1996	0.9
1997	0.8
1998	0.9
1999	1.1

Notes:
1. Caseload figures are taken at a point in time for which the month is August.
2. Sample size is 5 per cent. As the numbers are based on a relatively small number of sample cases the estimates are subject to a high degree of sampling error, i.e. for an estimate of 1 thousand the true value will lie somewhere in the range 700 to 1,300.
3. Family Credit was replaced by Working Families Tax Credit in October 1999.
4. Cases are allocated to each parliamentary constituency by matching the postcode against the 1999 version 2 of the postcode directory, and as such represent constituency boundaries as at May 1997.
5. Numbers are rounded to the nearest hundred and expressed in thousands.
6. Due to the relatively small numbers, it is not possible to provide a reliable estimate of the number of cases with allowed help with child care costs by parliamentary constituency.

Source:
Family Credit 5 per cent. sample of awards

Family Credit recipients benefiting from the Child Care Disregard, East Government Office Region—August 1995–99

Thousand

	Number of recipients
August
1995	1.3
1996	1.8
1997	2.0
1998	2.4
1999	3.1

Notes:
1. Caseload figures are taken at a point in time for which the month is August.
2. Numbers are based on a 5 per cent. sample and are therefore subject to a degree of sampling error.
3. Family Credit was replaced by Working Families Tax Credit in October 1999.
4. Numbers are rounded to the nearest hundred and expressed in thousands.

Angela Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many people in (a) Basildon and (b) Thurrock were in receipt of (i) Family Credit and (ii) child care allowance in each of the last five years. [117055]

Angela Eagle: The information is not available in the format requested. Such information as is available is in the tables.

Numbers of Family Credit recipients in Basildon and Thurrock local authorities, August 1995–99

Thousand

	Basildon LA	Thurrock LA
August 1995	1.3	0.9
August 1996	1.5	1.1
August 1997	1.4	1.1
August 1998	1.7	0.9
August 1999	1.8	0.8

Notes:
1. Caseload figures are taken at a point in time for which the month is August.
2. Sample size is 5 per cent. As the numbers are based on a relatively small number of sample cases the estimates are subject to a high degree of sampling error ie for an estimate of 2,000 the true value will lie somewhere in the range 1,628 to 2,382.
3. Family Credit was replaced by Working Families Tax Credit in October 1999.
4. Local Authorities are assigned by matching the postcode against the 1999 version 1 of the postcode directory.
5. Numbers are rounded to the nearest hundred and expressed in thousands.
6. Due to the relatively small numbers, it is not possible to provide a reliable estimate of the number of cases with allowed help with child care costs by local authority or parliamentary constituency.

Source:
Family Credit 5 per cent. sample of awards.

Family Credit recipients benefiting from the child care disregard, East Government Office Region August 1995–99

Thousand

	Number of recipients
August 1995	1.3
August 1996	1.8
August 1997	2.0
August 1998	2.4
August 1999	3.1

Notes:
1. Caseload figures are taken at a point in time for which the month is August.
2. Numbers are based on a 5 per cent. sample and are therefore subject to a degree of sampling error.
3. Family Credit was replaced by Working Families Tax Credit in October 1999.

Stakeholder Pensions

Mr. Webb: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he intends, under the draft stakeholder pension regulations, the no penalty requirement (exemptions from employer access, Part IV) to relate to the contributions made on behalf of the member by the employer; and if he will make a statement. [117599]

Mr. Rooker: The draft regulation seeks to ensure that a personal pension which is to provide exemption from the employer access requirement does not impose additional penalties on members because they transfer out of the scheme or stop paying into it. It will relate to the total amount in the fund at the time of transfer or cessation.

Computers

Mr. Ian Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what effect 3COM's announcement that they are to quit the high-end networking market will have on his Department's existing and planned computer systems. [R] [117622]

Angela Eagle [holding answer 4 April 2000]: This Department has purchased 3COM products through a procurement channel and uses major Service Providers for their day by day support. The Department has been advised that existing products will have at least two years' ongoing support and 3COM are looking to other third parties to supply for a further three years. The Department will work with existing and future direct service providers to manage this and to plan for alternative supply through initiatives already under way.

Pension Sharing

Laura Moffatt: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security when he will introduce pension sharing. [118217]

Mr. Rooker: We have decided that pension sharing will be available in respect of divorce and nullity proceedings that begin on or after 1 December 2000. The necessary regulations will be laid before Parliament shortly.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Fujitsu Plant

Miss Kirkbride: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how much Government aid was given to the north-east to deal with the effects of job cuts at the Fujitsu plant; and how much this was per worker facing redundancy. [116285]

Mr. Caborn: £415,000 was made available through the rapid response fund to help those facing redundancy from Fujitsu quickly to take up new jobs or training, where no alternative provision is already available.

The allocation of £415,000 was not on a per head basis but resulted from a bid by the Fujitsu Response Group to provide job search and training beyond that available through the Employment Service and Durham Training and Enterprise Council.

The number of employees made redundant was 576.

MOX Fuel Data Report

Mr. Chaytor: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he has received a copy of the Kansai Electric Interim report on the MOX fuel data published on 1 March; and if he has ordered a translation of the report. [116442]

Mrs. Liddell: Kansai Electric's interim report on its investigation into the falsification of quality assurance data for MOX manufactured by BNFL was made publicly available in Japan on 1 March 2000. The report is in Japanese. A formal English translation has not been produced by Kansai. For their own internal use, BNFL arranged for an unofficial English translation of the report. A copy of that English language text has been passed to officials in my Department.

ECGD (Turkey)

Dr. Cable: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry, pursuant to his answer of 28 February 2000, Official Report, column 49W, what types of goods are covered, broken down by category of equipment, by the ECGD guarantees issued in respect of contracts with Turkey in 1999–2000. [117073]

Mr. Caborn: The ECGD cover for defence business with Turkey in 1999–2000 relates to the supply of air defence missiles.

Atomic Energy Authority

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry on what basis he set the target for an increase in favourable media coverage of the activities of the United Kingdom Atomic Energy Authority contained in the authority's corporate aims and objectives programme. [117071]

Mrs. Liddell: The UKAEA target for favourable media coverage is based on industry established monitoring methodologies. The target set for this year improves on what they achieved last year. It is at a level which is challenging and attainable. This measure is part of the framework to monitor UKAEA performance on safety, environment, value for money and public acceptability.

Combined Heat and Power

Ms Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what percentage of the combined heat and power capacity where planning consent has been given over the last 15 months is under construction. [117766]

Mrs. Liddell: Since the publication of the White Paper, "Conclusions of the Review of Energy Sources for Power Generation", in October 1998, 14 combined heat and power schemes have been approved. Implementation of those approvals is a commercial matter for the developers concerned and not a matter for my Department, although my Department has no information to suggest that any of the approved projects will not go ahead.

Renewables

Ms Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what representations he has received on net metering from (a) business, (b) environmental groups and (c) others; and how he intends to enable domestic producers of renewable and clean energy to gain access to the grid. [117709]

Mrs. Liddell: The Government have received a number of representations on net metering from industry, particularly solar energy companies, environmental organisations and private individuals. Many of the issues in those representations have been debated in the House—most notably in the Standing Committee debate on Clause 30 of the Utilities Bill, held on 14 March 2000.

The Government are keen to ensure that all renewable generation, including that produced by domestic customers, is treated in an equitable fashion and receives full and fair value for energy exported to the distribution system. To this end, the DTI last year mounted an internal review of a wide range of issues associated with embedded generation and a consultation paper which set out the outcome of this review was issued in December.

Many informative and helpful responses to the consultation document were received from the renewable industry, distributors and other interested parties. A joint industry-OFGEM-Government working group has now been established to take the process forward, and this will report before the end of the year. The working group represents a major opportunity to resolve a number of long-standing issues relating to the treatment of renewable and other embedded generation and to ensure access to the distribution networks on an equitable and fair basis.

Sri Lanka

Mr. Gardiner: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will list all those goods requiring export licences which have been licensed for export to Sri Lanka since 1 December 1999. [117646]

Dr. Howells: The entry in the relevant legislation under which the export of goods is controlled is known as their rating. The Export Control Organisation's computer databases have been interrogated. Between 1 December 1999 and 24 March 2000, 11 Standard Individual Export Licences (SIELs) and one Open Individual Export Licence (OIEL) were issued covering the export to consignees or end-users in Sri Lanka of goods subject to export control by being listed in Part III of Schedule 1 to the Export of Goods (Control) Order 1994, commonly known as the Military List. Individual licences may cover a range of goods with various ratings (and OIELs may also cover a range of countries). Where this is so, the licence is included in the table in the total for all of the relevant ratings.

Individual Licences issued between 1 December 1999 and 24 March 2000 covering the export to Sri Lanka of goods on the Military List

Rating	Number of SIELs issued covering goods with this rating	Number of OIELs issued covering goods with this rating
ML2	2	0
ML3	1	0
ML4	1	0
ML5	0	1
ML6	2	0
ML10	1	0
ML11	2	0
ML15	1	1
ML22	1	0
PL5017	2	0
PL5031	1	0

This information does not cover any Media OIELs that may have been issued during this period. Media OIELs authorise the export to all destinations of protective clothing, mainly for the protection of aid agency workers and journalists, when working in areas of conflict.

Information on export licensing decisions in 1999, including details of the military equipment licensed, will be set out in the 1999 Annual Report on Strategic Export Controls, which will be published later this year. Similar details of the military equipment licensed in later years will be set out in the relevant Annual Reports.

This information should be considered in light of the answer I gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Kingswood (Mr. Berry) on 27 July 1999, Official Report, columns 307–08W.

In addition, Sri Lanka is a permitted destination on certain Open General Export Licences covering the export of goods on the Military List; copies of all Open General Export Licences are routinely placed in the Library of the House.

Works of Art

Mr. Brake: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how much has been spent on (a) the upkeep and (b) the purchase of works of art in his Department for each financial year since 1992. [117472]

Dr. Howells: I refer the hon. Member to the answer given by my hon. Friend the Minister for the Arts on 4 April 2000, Official Report, columns 392–93W.

Utility Meters

Mr. Hilary Benn: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what steps he is taking to ensure that low-income consumers using pre-payment meters are charged the same amount for their gas and electricity as those who pay by direct debit. [117509]

Mrs. Liddell [holding answer 3 April 2000]: Provision of a gas or electricity supply through a prepayment meter (PPM) is inherently more expensive than via a standard meter because the meter itself is more complex and because of the additional payment infrastructure that is necessary. We have, however, encouraged the regulator and the energy supply industry to bring PPM tariffs closer to the cost of standard credit, so as to reduce the burden on those PPM users who may be on a low income. As part of the new price controls on the Public Electricity suppliers, the Office of Gas and Electricity Management (Ofgem) has proposed a new licence condition limiting the maximum additional annual surcharge for a PPM to £15 above the standard credit tariff. For gas, Centrica, which has about 90 per cent. of gas PPMs, has already reduced its PPM prices so that they are the same as those paid by standard credit customers who have not paid promptly enough to receive a discount for quick payment.

I should point out, however, that the use of PPMs should not be taken as a proxy for fuel poverty: a wide range of people use these meters because they like the control it gives them over payment. Many PPMs are in second homes or holiday lettings. About half of those reckoned to be fuel poor are pensioners; and yet less than 10 per cent. of pensioners use a PPM.

BNFL

Mr. Gibb: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what commitments he has been given by the management of BNFL regarding the reorganisation of management structure and methods at the company. [117616]

Mrs. Liddell: I have asked the Chairman of BNFL to carry out a "root and branch" review of the company. I expect to receive his proposals shortly.

Mr. Gibb: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if the deadlines for implementing the recommendations and requirements of the Nuclear Installations Inspectorate reports published in February regarding BNFL, will be met; and if he will list the (a) expected and (b) achieved completion date for each such requirement. [117618]

Mrs. Liddell: The Health and Safety Executive (HSE) published three reports on 18 February. The report of the "team inspection of the control and supervision of operations at BNFL's Sellafield site" requires BNFL to produce a programme within two months to address HSE's recommendations. Their report "into the falsification of pellet diameter data in the MOX demonstration facility (MDF) at the BNFL Sellafield site and the effect of this on the safety of MOX fuel in use" says that the MDF will remain closed until BNFL have met all 15 of HSE's recommendations. The third report, which deals with the storage of liquid high level waste at Sellafield, requires BNFL to produce within six months a strategy to reduce stocks of such waste to a buffer volume by around 2015. Copies of all three reports were placed in the Library of the House on 18 February.

I expect BNFL to respond positively, constructively and on time to all the recommendations in the HSE reports. However, it is for the company, in discussion with HSE, to produce detailed implementation plans.

Artists' Resale Rights

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if the proposed EU Directive on Artists' Resale Rights has recently been discussed by EU Ministers; and if he will make a statement. [117401]

Dr. Howells: The proposal for a Directive harmonising droit de suite went to four Internal Market Councils last year but, on each occasion, a decision was delayed to provide more time to explore ways of overcoming UK concerns. Negotiations have continued this year in the Committee of Permanent Representatives where a workable compromise was finally agreed unanimously on 15 March. This reflects an acceptable balance between the competitiveness of the art trade, the rights of artists and the need to complete the Single Market.

The British Art Market Federation has paid tribute to the Government's achievement in securing a compromise which will greatly limit the damage to Britain's international competitiveness in the global art market. The Directive will now go forward to Council as an "A" point—i.e. for agreement without discussion—and, thereafter, for approval by the European Parliament.

European Structural Funds

Mr. Neil Turner: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry when he expects to receive the European Commission's approval of the UK's proposed Objective 2 Structural Fund areas. [118218]

Mr. Caborn: I am pleased to say that the European Commission approved the UK's Objective 2 Structural Funds map on 30 March 2000. This is confirmation of their agreement in principle on 22 December 1999.

This is good news for UK, and ensures that many of the most needy areas in the UK will benefit from £3 billion of European regional funding between 2000 and 2006.

Regional partners can now finalise their draft programme plans, which will need to be submitted to the Commission for consideration by the end of April in order for funding to be backdated to 1 January 2000.

Mr. Andrew George: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what assessment he has made of cross-departmental co-operation on EU Objective 1 programmes. [116412]

Mr. Caborn: There has been a great deal of effective inter-departmental co-operation on the Objective 1 Programme, at both ministerial and official level.

Business Regulations

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will publish an annual estimate of the costs of Government regulations to businesses which employ fewer than 100 people. [116403]

Ms Hewitt: The Government have no plans to publish such information.

All Regulatory Impact Assessments (RIAs) contain information on the costs associated with new regulations; copies of all RIAs are placed in the Libraries of both Houses.

BMW/Rover

Mr. Burden: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will place in the Library details of his contacts with BMW and Rover between 1 June 1999 and 16 March 2000. [118219]

Mr. Byers: I have placed copies of these in the Libraries of the House.

ENVIRONMENT, TRANSPORT AND THE REGIONS

Neighbourhood Regeneration

30. Ms Buck: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will make a statement on his Department's plans for neighbourhood regeneration. [116174]

Ms Armstrong: The Government's policy responses to neighbourhood regeneration will be brought together through the Urban White Paper later in the year, and through the National Strategy for Neighbourhood Renewal, a consultation draft of which will be published shortly. We will ensure that programmes such as the New Deal for Communities, Single Regeneration Budget and Sure Start all play their part in delivering the coherent and co-ordinated response needed to deliver sustainable change.

Empty Properties

Mr. Kidney: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will list the number of empty properties in (a) London and (b) England owned by (i) private landlords, (ii) local authorities, (iii) housing associations, (iv) Government Departments and (v) other landlords for each of the last five years. [116697]

Mr. Mullin: Estimates of the numbers of vacant dwellings in (a) London and (b) England on 1 April are given in the table. Information is collected on the total private sector and it is not possible to distinguish between private landlord and owner occupied empty properties.

	Private sector [1]	Local authority [1]	Registered social landlords [2]	Other public sector [3]	of which: Government Departments
(a) London
1995	109,500	19,000	7,400	1,900	1,600
1996	101,800	20,800	7,000	1,900	1,600
1997	94,800	18,500	6,600	1,700	1,400
1998	88,300	15,700	6,500	2,200	1,900
1999	89,300	14,700	8,100	2,100	1,800
(b) England
1995	689,900	71,800	20,900	20,000	17,000
1996	667,400	79,600	23,600	20,000	17,000
1997	640,000	81,200	26,800	19,000	16,000
1998	623,200	81,700	29,300	19,000	16,000
1999	636,800	83,900	32,600	19,000	16,000

[1] Estimates from the annual HIP Operational Information return from local authorities.
[2] Housing Corporation RSR form from Registered Social Landlords.
[3] Government Departments and estimates from the annual HIP Operational Information return from local authorities.
Note:
A level of vacancy is a usual feature of housing management, reflecting turnover and movement within the stock.

Bus Shelters

Mr. Edward Davey: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions (1) what policy guidelines his Department has issued to authorities responsible for bus shelters regarding consultation prior to erecting new shelters; and what plans he has to re-issue such guidelines to require consultation with local residents; [117274]

(2) what targets he has for building new bus shelters and upgrading existing bus shelters for each of the next three years. [117273]

Mr. Hill: Decisions on expenditure on bus shelters are a matter for each local authority taking account of the availability of resources and the assessment of needs in their area. In developing bus strategies as part of their local transport plans, authorities will need to consider what improvements to bus infrastructure are needed, and what targets are appropriate in this regard. Local partnerships with the private sector can make an important contribution to achieving these improvements.

Bus operators and local authorities have permitted development rights under the Town and Country Planning Act 1990 to provide passenger shelters. The current guidance in DOE Circulars 15–92 and 9–95 makes it clear that there should be arrangements for advance notifications and publicity for individual proposals, wherever appropriate. We have no plans to re-issue this guidance.

London Transport has separate powers to erect and maintain shelters in London; these powers will be transferred to Transport for London under the Greater London Authority in July.

Rail Freight

Mr. Dobbin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what estimate he has made of rail freight's share of the freight market following the introduction of 44 tonne lorries. [117082]

Mr. Hill: In its interim report "Permitting 44 tonne lorries for general use in the UK", the Commission for Integrated Transport considered carefully the impact of 44 tonne lorries on the rail freight market. They concluded that work to estimate the precise effect on rail freight's market share would be unlikely to produce reliable results in the light of the Rail Regulator's forthcoming review of track access charges and other factors.

The Commission has invited the shadow Strategic Rail Authority (sSRA) to develop detailed recommendations on measures to promote the growth of rail freight. We expect to be able to take the sSRA's proposals into account in developing our Transport 10-year Plan, due to be published in July.

Fuel Poverty

Mr. Don Foster: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions how many households in homes heated by community heating schemes are in fuel poverty; and if such households will be eligible to benefit from the Affordable Warmth Programme. [116676]

Mr. Meacher [holding answer 30 March 2000]: The present estimates of the number of fuel poor households in England are based on data from the English House Condition Survey. Unfortunately it is not possible to identify the number of households heated by community heating schemes who are also suffering from fuel poverty.

I can confirm that households heated through community heating schemes will be able to benefit from the Affordable Warmth Programme announced by my right hon. Friend the Chancellor of the Exchequer. Capital allowances will be made available to lessors on de-mountable heat exchangers, radiators and heating controls installed inside dwellings under the Programme. Lessors will be able to write off 25 per cent. of the cost of this equipment each year on the reducing balance basis against their taxable income, provided their expenditure is incurred by 31 December 2007.

Mr. Don Foster: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions how frequently he intends to monitor the number of households in England which are in fuel poverty. [116677]

Mr. Meacher [holding answer 30 March 2000]: The present estimates of the number of fuel poor households in England are based on data from the English House Condition Survey which is carried out quinquennially. The Ministerial Group on Fuel Poverty is looking at how progress in tackling fuel poverty should be monitored in the future, and will consider whether estimates can be made available more frequently. This will form part of the overall strategy which the group aims to publish later this year.

Second Homes

Mr. Rendel: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions, pursuant to his answer of 23 March 2000, Official Report, column 624W, on second homes, what change there was in the number of second homes owned between January 1995 and January 2000 in the South East, excluding London. [116776]

Mr. Mullin [holding answer 30 March 2000]: It is not possible to give a robust estimate of the change in the number of second homes in the South East between 1995 and 2000. The following table shows the latest available regional estimates, based on averages over the three years ending March 1999.

Location of second homes in England

Thousand

Government Office Region	All second homes[1]	Owned second homes
North West and North East[2]	31	27
Yorkshire and Humberside	19	16
East and West Midlands[3]	33	28
East and South East[2]	70	64
London	28	21
South West	44	40
England	225	197

[1] Second homes in England owned or rented by households whose main residence is also in England. Excludes homes which are the main residence of another household, or which the owners are intending to sell.

[2] Cannot be separated as the regional definitions changed during the survey period. Neither is it possible to give separate estimates for the 'Rest of South East' region used for regional planning purposes.

[3] East and West Midlands combined due to small sample sizes.

Note:

Like all estimates from sample surveys, these figures are subject to a certain amount of sampling variation and are not absolutely precise.

Source:

Survey of English Housing, three-year average to March 1999.

Works of Art

Mr. Brake: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions how much has been spent on (a) the upkeep and (b) the purchase of works of art in his Department for each financial year since 1992. [117483]

Ms Beverley Hughes: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given by my hon. Friend the Minister for the Arts on 4 April 2000, Official Report, columns 392–93W.

Asset Sales

Mr. Sanders: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will list his targets for asset sales for each local authority in the next financial year, listed alphabetically by Government Office region. [117296]

Ms Beverley Hughes: The Government have not set targets for asset sales for individual local authorities.

The Government wish to see local authorities make the best possible use of their land, buildings and other capital assets, including the identification and disposal of those surplus to requirements. My Department has recently issued guidance on good practice in strategic asset management as part of the move to a 'single pot' for capital allocations.

Radioactive Discharges

Mr. Chaytor: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what plans he has to ensure that the Government fulfil their commitments under the Ospar agreement in respect of radioactive discharges; and if he will make a statement. [117154]

Mr. Meacher [holding answer 4 April 2000]: The Government are fully committed to the agreement reached at the Ospar Ministerial Meeting in 1998, on the reduction of radioactive discharges. The UK's intentions for implementing this agreement were submitted to the Ospar Secretariat in October 1999 and a copy is in the Library. The UK is developing a national strategy for radioactive discharges, to cover the period 2001 to 2020. It is planned to issue a draft of this document for consultation before the summer and to publish the final strategy by the end of the year.

Disabled People (Transport Facilities)

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what recent discussions he has had on improving transport facilities for disabled people; and if he will make a statement. [117824]

Mr. Hill: There are frequent and regular discussions with representatives of disabled people, including our statutory advisers the Disabled Persons Transport Advisory Committee (DPTAC), with the transport manufacturing and operating industries and with local authorities.

We have already brought forward regulations under the Disability Discrimination Act 1995 setting detailed technical access standards for all new trains. This year we will be bringing forward similar regulations applying to buses and coaches and we will be consulting on proposed regulations for taxis. These regulations cover facilities for wheelchair users and for people with a wide range of other disabilities.

Through the Local Transport Plans we are also ensuring that local authorities give due weight to the needs of disabled people across the whole spectrum of their responsibilities, including pedestrian facilities, transport infrastructure and voluntary and community transport services.

British Transport Police

Mr. Key: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will bring forward legislation to extend the jurisdiction of the British Transport Police to give them the same constabulary powers as Home Office police; and if he will make a statement. [117668]

Mr. Hill: The Government announced on 31 July 1998, Official Report, column 637W, their intention to seek to establish, when a suitable legislative opportunity arises, an independent national police authority for the British Transport Police (BTP). Following consultation with the police service, my Department is considering with the Home Office an extension to the BTP's jurisdiction in specific circumstances. If accepted this extension would be included within the legislation.

DEFENCE

AWE

Mr. Rendel: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what consultation took place with regulatory authorities in relation to the appropriateness of BNFL as a partner in the consortium set up to bid for the contract to manage AWE. [113667]

Mr. Spellar [holding answer 9 March 2000]: MOD has regular meetings with officials of the Nuclear Installations Inspectorate and of the Environment Agency on safety and environment at AWE, including the conduct and progress of the competition to appoint a new management and operating contractor. Both bodies were consulted on the suitability of all consortia member companies before RFQs (Requests for Quotation) were issued for the competition and both have been kept fully informed of developments. On 13 April 1999, the NII and EA made presentations to BNFL and all other parent companies of the competing consortia informing them of the standards that would be required of the successful contractors. Both regulators were given copies of each consortium's management prospectus and bid material relevant to environmental, safety and health matters. The NII has also given presentations and has taken part in syndicate discussions and assessment meetings with bidders. Finally, as detailed to my hon. Friend the Member for Reading, West (Mr. Salter) on 29 March 2000, Official Report, columns 159–60W, the most recent review found nothing which would cause them to oppose AWE ML's take over of the sites on 1 April.

Mr. Rendel: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list the criteria against which the applications for the new contract to run AWE Aldermaston were assessed. [113668]

Mr. Spellar [holding answer 9 March 2000]: In assessing bids to manage and operate the Atomic Weapons Establishment from 1 April 2000 information was required from all participating consortia to demonstrate that their parent companies met full compliance on safety performance. This was essential to qualify for further consideration of the bids. Once over this hurdle assessment was made against the following criteria:

Safety (the risk of harm and potential harm to people, property and the environment to be as low as reasonably practicable).

National Capability (the ability of AWE to underwrite safety and reliability of nuclear warheads without recourse to nuclear testing and to maintain minimum capability to design and produce a successor to Trident if this were to be deemed necessary).

Security (the protection of assets, information and people).

Management (including the provision of Directors, adequate management measurement criteria and public relations).

Infrastructure (the maintenance of the capital asset base to support outputs and waste management and decommissioning).

Material (the production and through life support of weapons).

Commercial (including the costs of the contract).

Mr. Rendel: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list the areas of responsibility assigned to each of the three members of the AWE management consortium under the terms of the contract to manage the AWE Aldermaston site. [116344]

Mr. Spellar [holding answer 27 March 2000]: It is intended that at the start of the contract responsibilities will be allocated to parent company nominees as follows:

Serco—Chief Executive, Business Services, and Communications

Lockheed Martin—Deputy Chief Executive, Research, and Production

BNFL—Assurance, Infrastructure, and Human Resources and Strategic Development.

Ministerial Meetings

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what meetings Ministers in his Department have held with members and officials of the United States Government to discuss proposed US plan to deploy a national missile defence system since 1 January; when each meeting took place; which Ministers were involved; and which members and officials of the United States Government and from which departments attended each meeting. [117077]

Mr. Spellar: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave on 4 April 2000, Official Report, column 400W, to my hon. Friend for Milton Keynes, South-West, (Dr. Starkey).

Nuclear Arsenal

Dr. Lynne Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if the 70 per cent. reduction in the explosive power of the UK's nuclear arsenal is matched by an equal reduction in the combined potential destructive power of each separately targetable warhead. [117094]

Mr. Hoon: The Strategic Defence Review (SDR) announced that we need a stockpile of less than 200 operationally available warheads. Against levels at the end of the Cold War, this represents a reduction in the potential explosive power of the deterrent of more than 70 per cent. The SDR also made clear that the one Trident submarine on patrol would carry a reduced load of 48 warheads. The SDR did not refer to the potential explosive power of individual Trident warheads; such information remains classified.

Nuclear Weapons

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list the dates and locations of the United Kingdom/United States Stocktake meetings to review the co-operation on nuclear weapons under the 1958 US/UK Mutual Defence Agreement which have taken place since 1 January, 1996; how many members of his Department and which United States Government departments took part in each of these stocktake meetings. [117079]

Mr. Spellar: Two UK/US Stocktake meetings have taken place since January 1996. The first was on 18 June 1997, in London, at which a total of nine officials from my Department were present. In addition, five AWE Aldermaston staff attended. The second meeting was held on 10 June 1998, in Albuquerque, New Mexico, at which seven MOD officials and four AWE Aldermaston staff were present. At both meetings, US representation was from the Departments of Defense and Energy.

Zinc Cadmium Sulphide Trials

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence on what date Professor Peter Lachmann and his panel were appointed to conduct a review of the zinc cadmium sulphide trials; how many times he and his team visited the Porton Down chemical and biological defence establishment and the Defence Evaluation and Research Agency during the course of their inquiry; and on what dates he and his team made each of their visits. [117059]

Dr. Moonie: Professor Lachmann was appointed on 23 August 1999 to lead the independent study of the zinc cadmium sulphide trials. Other members of the team, namely Dame Barbara Clayton, Professor Paul Elliot and Dr. Clive Philips, were selected by Professor Lachmann following his own appointment.

Professor Lachmann and two of his team visited CBD Porton Down on 29 September 1999.

Israeli Arrow Missile System

Mr. DuncanSmith: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what assessment his Department has made of the Israeli Arrow missile system. [117561]

Mr. Spellar [holding answer 3 April 2000]: A Pre-feasibility Programme (PFP) that was undertaken in 1994–1996 examined possible options, cost and timescales for ballistic missile defence of the UK and its deployed forces. This was carried out on behalf of the Ministry of Defence by a consortium led by what was then BAe. In considering potential system architectures, the PFP examined publicly available material on all government funded BMD capable weapons systems. The Arrow weapon system was assessed within this limited context.

Service Personnel

Mr. Gardiner: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what British military personnel (a) currently employed by his Department and (b) on the Reserve List have been on secondment to Sri Lanka (i) military training establishments and (ii) units since 1 January 1997. [117644]

Mr. Spellar: An Army officer has been loaned to the Sri Lankan Army Command and Staff College to advise on syllabus development and training since January 1998. No other British military personnel have been seconded to Sri Lanka since 1 January 1997.

Lord Levy

Mr. Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what security clearance has been awarded to Lord Levy in respect of his meetings with the Chief of Defence staff. [117775]

Mr. Hoon: All personnel who have access to sensitive material are subject to security clearance procedures. It would not be appropriate to give details of the particular level of clearance held by individuals.

Computers

Mr. Ian Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what effect the announcement by 3COM that they are to quit the high-end networking market will have on his Department's existing and planned computer systems. [R] [117623]

Dr. Moonie [holding answer 4 April 2000]: None.

TREASURY

Self-employment (Bogus Claims)

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what action (a) he is taking and (b) he plans to take to prevent bogus claims of self-employment, with particular reference to the construction industry; and what estimate he has made of the loss of revenue as a result of such claims. [116509]

Dawn Primarolo: Whether an individual is employed or self-employed depends upon the terms of the contract under which they are engaged. This is true for all industries including the construction industry.

The Inland Revenue is, however, aware that workers in the construction industry in particular have been incorrectly categorised in the past. Following consultation with the industry, the Revenue increased its compliance activity in this area to ensure that there was a consistency of treatment across the industry. The Revenue continues to police the status of workers in all areas including those in construction to ensure that the rules are properly understood.

The Inland Revenue has no information that can accurately provide an estimate of revenue, which may have been lost in cases where the contract has not been categorised correctly.

Earnings Thresholds

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what policy consideration led him to raise the threshold for earnings liable to 40 per cent. income tax by an amount less than the average growth of earnings; and if he will make a statement. [116879]

Dawn Primarolo: In 2000–01, the basic rate limit, above which the higher rate of income tax of 40 per cent. is payable on earnings, rises to £28,400 in accordance with the provisions of Section 1 of the Income and Corporation Taxes Act 1988. The legislation provides that, unless Parliament determines otherwise, the basic rate limit for a year should be increased in line with the rise in the Retail Prices Index in the year ended in September in the previous year of assessment, rounded up to the nearest £100.

Budget Changes

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is his estimate of the effect of Budget changes including the (a) abolition of the married person's tax allowance, (b) decrease in the standard rate of income tax, (c) establishment of the 10 per cent. rate of income tax and (d) indexation of tax allowances on a married woman earning £14,000 a year, who is the sole income earner for a family of a husband and two children, and who has no more than the basic tax allowances. [116831]

Dawn Primarolo: This Government have introduced a range of measures to make work pay and to improve work incentives, including the 10p starting rate of income tax, basic rate cut, National Minimum Wage, National Insurance Contributions reform and the Working Families Tax Credit.

The income tax and National Insurance Contributions liability for a married woman earning £14,000 a year, who is the sole income earner for a family of a husband and two children under 11 would be £2,728 less in 2001–02 compared with the 1998–1999 regime with all of the allowances and limits increased in line with inflation. That is over £52 per week better off.

For 1998–99 it has been assumed that the woman claims the married couple's allowance and family credit.

The family would also gain from Child Benefit which increased by £179.40 per year more than inflation.

Tobacco Smuggling

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will place in the Library a copy with excisions of matters of operational sensitivity to Her Majesty's Customs and Excise, of Martin Taylor's report on the Government's strategy to combat tobacco smuggling and any accompanying correspondence. [117680]

Mrs. Lait: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will place in the Library a copy, with appropriate excisions of matters of operational sensitivity to Her Majesty's Customs and Excise, of the Taylor report on the Government's strategy to combat tobacco smuggling and the accompanying correspondence. [117544]

Dawn Primarolo: No. Martin Taylor's advice to the Chancellor was personal and confidential. It would therefore not be appropriate to disclose his advice. However his recommendations on how to tackle tobacco smuggling were summarised in the Government paper "Tackling tobacco smuggling". A copy of this paper has been placed in the Library.

Mrs. Lait: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if Martin Taylor's report on the Government's strategy to combat tobacco smuggling has been made available to the senior officers of HM Customs and Excise at policy and operational levels who are responsible for the control of tobacco smuggling. [117501]

Dawn Primarolo: Senior Customs and Excise officials are aware of the advice Martin Taylor gave to the Chancellor on how to combat tobacco smuggling.

Petroleum Products Smuggling

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is his estimate of the loss to public revenues in each of the last three years and the current year to end of March consequent on the smuggling of (a) petrol, and (b) other fuel oils from the Irish Republic into Northern Ireland. [117677]

Dawn Primarolo: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave the hon. Member for Lewes (Mr. Baker) on 20 March 2000, Official Report, column 442W.

Vehicle Conversion (Disabled Access)

Angela Smith: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will grant tax relief on the costs of conversion of minibuses and coaches to allow for wheelchair and disabled access. [117639]

Dawn Primarolo: The capital costs of providing wheelchair and disabled access to minibuses and coaches will normally qualify for capital allowances at 25 per cent. a year on the reducing balancing basis. Small and medium-sized businesses will qualify for first year capital allowances at 40 per cent. on these costs. This is increased to 100 per cent. if the costs are incurred between 12 May 1998 and 11 May 2002 by such businesses on the conversion of minibuses and coaches for use primarily in Northern Ireland.

Married Persons Tax Allowance

Mr. Loughton: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what assessment he has made of the impact on people who will be of pensionable age in the next five years of the ending of the married persons tax allowance. [115896]

Dawn Primarolo [holding answer 3 April 2000]: The Government will be spending an additional £6.5 billion on pensioners over the course of this Parliament.

Pensioners who are taxpayers can benefit from the 10p starting rate of income tax on pensions and savings income and from the cut in the basic rate to 22p in the pound from April. Those aged 65 or more saw the age-related income tax personal allowances for 1999–2000 rise by up to £200 more than required by statutory indexation. In 2000–01, the allowances will rise to £5,790 for someone aged 65 to 74 and to £6,050 for someone aged 75 or more.

The majority of pensioners have no income tax to pay. All households with someone aged 60 or more will benefit from the increase in the winter fuel allowance to £150, an increase of £50 on the fivefold increase to £100 announced in the Chancellor's 1999 Budget. The poorest pensioners will gain from the minimum income guarantee which will stand at £121.95 per week for a pensioner couple under 75. Pensioners aged 75 or more will also benefit from free Television Licences from this autumn.

Exemption Certificates

Mr. Robertson: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will assess the benefits of introducing tax incentives for new companies which operate below the threshold of turnover above which they would receive exemption certificates; and if he will make a statement. [117338]

Dawn Primarolo [holding answer 3 April 2000]: There are no plans to introduce tax incentives for companies (or other businesses) that carry out construction operations but whose construction turnover is insufficient to enable them to pass the turnover test for the new Construction Industry Scheme.

However, a Joint Working Group comprising officials from the Inland Revenue, the Department of the Environment, Transport and the Regions, and representatives from the Construction Industry, is being set up to review the scheme. This group will be considering the introduction of in-year repayments for companies that do not pass the turnover test, which will improve the cash flow position of those companies that receive payments under the scheme after deductions on account of tax and NIC.

Alcohol and Tobacco Smuggling

Mr. Ruane: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what assessment he has made of the effect of the smuggling of alcohol and tobacco on the retail sector, with particular reference to newsagents. [117551]

Dawn Primarolo [holding answer 3 April 2000]: The Government recognise that smuggling damages legitimate businesses. They are responding with a strategy worth up to £209 million, which aims to put tobacco smuggling into decline within three years. This is described in detail in "Tackling Tobacco Smuggling". Constraining the growth of smuggling will help retailers by preventing them losing market share to criminals.

Mr. Ruane: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer (1) if he will estimate the amounts of alcohol and tobacco smuggled into the UK for each of the past 10 years; and what estimate he has made for the next three years; [117552]

(2) what was the estimated tax lost to the Treasury in smuggled (a) cigarettes, (b) rolling tobacco and (c) alcohol in each of the past 10 years; and if he will make a statement. [117547]

Dawn Primarolo [holding answers 3 April 2000]: I refer my hon. Friend to the "Tackling Tobacco Smuggling" paper published on 22 March 2000 by HM Customs and Excise and HM Treasury; to my answer given on 26 November 1999, Official Report, columns 254–55W; and to the technical report on cross-Channel smuggling placed in the Library of the House on 19 September 1998.

Mr. Ruane: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what the current penalties are for smuggling tobacco and alcohol; and what plans he has to revise them. [117550]

Dawn Primarolo: Customs have a range of penalties available including:

Seizure of the goods and any vehicle carrying them;

Payment of a compounded penalty;

Prosecution in Court, including disqualification from driving, revocation of a liquor licence or haulier's licence, removal of lottery terminal, compensation or confiscation orders.

The penalty regime is kept under constant review.

Mr. Ruane: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many successful prosecutions there were for smuggling (a) tobacco products and (b) alcohol in each of the past 10 years. [117548]

Dawn Primarolo [holding answer 3 April 2000]: I regret that records are not kept in this format.

Bootlegging Hotline

Mr. Ruane: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what steps he has taken to advertise the Bootlegging Hotline; and what the budget was for advertising it. [117554]

Dawn Primarolo [holding answer 3 April 2000]: In order to improve efficiency, HM Customs and Excise amalgamated all its hotlines into one number—Customs Confidential on 0800 59 5000. On 21 July 1999, I launched a public information campaign to highlight the hotline in relation to tobacco, alcohol and drugs smuggling.

The publicity campaign included:

an advan that travelled throughout England, Scotland and Wales, to ports, airports and summer tourist events leaflet distributed to all cross-channel operators as well as being inserted in ticket wallets limited amount of national press advertising

a radio news tape distributed to all national and local radio stations wallet cards for distribution at Customs events and to cross channel haulage vehicle window stickers for cars and lorries flyers distributed via the DVLA with license renewals—the flyer will also be produced in Welsh.

We will be expanding the public information campaign considerably to focus primarily on tobacco smuggling. The Customs Confidential hotline number will continue to feature widely as part of the campaign.

The overall budget for the campaign was £145,000.

Mr. Ruane: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many calls the Bootlegging Hotline has received in each month since its introduction; and how many successful prosecutions have resulted from the Bootlegging Hotline. [117553]

Dawn Primarolo [holding answer 3 April 2000]: The "Bootlegging"' hotline was consolidated into the Customs Confidential hotline on 21 July 1999. This hotline is for reporting of all information and suspicious activity which may be of interest to the Department.

Since June 1999 the total number of calls by month relating to "Bootlegging" are:

Month	Number
June	788
July	846
August	944
September	851
October	742
November	912
December	966
January	680
February	774
March	924
Total	8,427

It is not possible to state how many prosecutions are directly related to calls received on the hotline but it is estimated that 70 per cent. of the calls provide valuable intelligence which is having a major input into the middle and lower end of the tobacco smuggling problem.

Annual Departmental Reports

Mrs. Lawrence: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer when the 2000 Departmental reports will be published. [118094]

Mr. Andrew Smith: The publication dates for the 2000 Departmental Reports will be:

Date	Departmental report
Thursday, 6 April	Health
	DfID
Friday, 7 April	DfEE
	Treasury and Chancellor's smaller departments
Monday, 10 April	MAFF
	MoD
	FCO
	DCMS
	Home Office
	Inland Revenue
	C and E
	Cabinet Office
Tuesday, 11 April	Main Estimates
	Public Expenditure Statistical Analyses
	DTI
	DSS
	DETR
	LCD
	Law Officers Departments
	Wales Office
	Scotland Office
	Northern Ireland Office

Personal Service Companies

Mr. Ottaway: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is the basis for the revision of the figure for the expected revenue in 2000–01 from his changes to the tax and national insurance treatment of personal service companies between table 1.11 of the 1999 Budget report and table A2.1 of the 2000 Budget report. [117302]

Dawn Primarolo: The estimate of extra revenue generated in 2000–01 from the pre-announced measure to tackle avoidance of tax and National Insurance Contributions (NICs) through the use of personal service companies is based on new, more up-to-date information which has been collected by the Inland Revenue since Budget 1999.

Mr. Ottaway: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what factors underlay his estimate of the fall in revenues resulting from his changes to the tax and national insurance treatment of personal services between 2001–02 and 2002–03, as shown in table A2.1 of the 2000 Budget report. [117303]

Dawn Primarolo: People using personal service companies are currently able to avoid National Insurance Contributions altogether and pay tax on their income much later than an employee would pay tax through PAYE. The new legislation will ensure that affected personal service companies will pay the correct amount of tax and NICs, at the right time, rather than delaying what they do pay until well after the end of the tax year. The large first year yield in 2000–01 arises because the payments of PAYE and NICs are scored as they accrue whereas the reduction in corporation tax occurs when it would have been paid, nine months after the end of the accounting period. Subsequently, the 2002–03 expected yield is lower than in 2001–02 because the full effect of the corporation tax reduction takes three years to build up.

Revenue Statistics

Mr. Maclean: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer (1) how many (a) UK citizens and (b) UK-registered companies paid capital gains tax on (i) stock market investments and (ii) other investments in each of the last three years; [117232]

(2) what was the annual revenue gained by the Treasury from (a) income tax and (b) capital gains tax on (i) stock market investments and (ii) other investments in each of the last three years; [117233]

(3) what annual revenue the Treasury received from investments in stocks and shares held by (a) UK citizens and (b) UK-registered companies in each of the last three years. [117234]

Dawn Primarolo: Such information as is available for 1996–97 to 1998–99 on income tax, capital gains tax, corporation tax on capital gains and taxpayer numbers is given in the following tables. Tax is charged on the basis of UK tax residency or trading, and there is no information available to identify those who are UK citizens or UK registered companies.

Income tax from UK dividends and other investment income

Amount of tax: £ billion

	Income tax liability from UK dividend income	Income tax from other investment income	Total income tax liability from investment income
1996–97	3.6	5.2	7.8
1997–98	3.9	5.1	9.0
1998–99	3.3	6.6	9.9

The figures are based on the Survey of Personal Incomes and exclude income of trusts.

The estimates are consistent with the March 2000 Budget.

Capital gains tax (CGT) liabilities and taxpayer numbers

It is not possible to directly attribute CGT liabilities to type of asset as certain reliefs eg Annual Exempt Amount are deducted from the aggregate gains of the taxpayer. However total CGT liabilities and taxpayer numbers (individuals and trusts) are as follows:

	CGT accruals (£ billion)	CGT taxpayer numbers (Thousand)
1996–97	1.45	119
1997–98	2.00	172
1998–99	2.40	185

The latest available information on the distribution of net gains (before reliefs at taxpayer level) by type of asset shows, for 1996–97, that 81 per cent. of gains were in respect of financial assets and 19 per cent. in respect of non-financial assets. Further details are available in Table 14.4 of Inland Revenue Statistics 1999.

Corporation tax on capital gains

Companies are charged to corporation tax on their total income including trading profits, net capital gains and other income. It is not possible to attribute part of the charge to investments in stocks and shares, but estimates of receipts from all capital gains are as follows:

	Receipts from corporation tax on gains (£ billion)	Related corporation taxpayer numbers with gains (Thousand)
1996–97	1.03	10
1997–98	1.06	11
1998–99	1.35	13

Works of Art

Mr. Brake: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how much has been spent on (a) the upkeep and (b) the purchase of works of art in his Department for each financial year since 1992. [117482]

Miss Melanie Johnson: I refer the hon. Member to the answer given to him by my hon. Friend the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State, Department of Culture, Media and Sport on 4 April 2000, Official Report, columns 393–94W.

Excise Duties

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what inflation index and period of measurement was used to calculate the increases in excise duties in the Budget. [117638]

Mr. Timms: As set out in Appendix A1 of the Financial Statement and Budget Report, the index base for calculating changes in fuel, tobacco and alcohol duties in this Budget, as in previous Budgets, was the projected increase in the Retail Prices Index over 12 months to the September following the Budget.

Business Taxes

Mr. Sayeed: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will list the changes in business taxes since May 1997. [117343]

Mr. Timms: This information is in the Financial Statement and Budget Reports, which can be found in the House of Commons Library.

Illegal Drugs

Mr. Singh: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer (1) how many operations were carried out by officers of Her Majesty's Customs and Excise concerning heroin imported from Pakistan in controlled deliveries; and how much heroin was imported in respect of each operation, in each year between 1 January 1990 and 1 January 2000; [117321]

(2) how many operations involving controlled imports of illegal drugs by officers of Her Majesty's Customs and Excise there were in (a) each year between 1 January 1990 and 1 January 2000 broken down by quantities and types of illegal drugs and (b) between 1 January 1997 and 1 January 1998, involving heroin imported from Pakistan and if he will specify the quantities. [117345]

Dawn Primarolo: It is not Customs policy to release information of this type which could compromise a key operational technique.

Road Fuel Duty

Mr. Welsh: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what was the percentage increase in road fuel duty announced in the Budget, in relation to the rate of inflation; and if he will make a statement. [117576]

Mr. Timms: Nil. The main fuel duties were indexed in line with inflation. The methodology is set out in Appendix A1 in the Financial Statement and Budget Report.

Family Statistics

Mr. Gerald Howarth: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many households with children there were in (a) 1970, (b) 1980 and (c) 1999 where (i) both parents were married and the children were born to those parents and (ii) stepchildren formed part of the households. [117536]

Miss Melanie Johnson: The information requested falls within the responsibility of the Director of the Office for National Statistics. I have asked him to reply.

Letter from John Pullinger to Mr. Gerald Howarth, dated 5 April 2000:

The Director of the Office for National Statistics (ONS) has been asked to reply to your recent question on how many households were (a) both parents are married and the children were born to those parents and (b) stepchildren formed part of the household. I am replying in the Director's absence.

The estimated number of married couples with only natural dependent children was around 5 million in Great Britain in 1991. There were about 500 thousand families, which included at least one dependent stepchild living in them in Great Britain in 1991. (There are no other official estimates of the numbers of these married couples and stepfamilies).

Mr. Gerald Howarth: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will estimate the number of households with children where the parents are not married and are cohabiting. [117529]

Miss Melanie Johnson: The information requested falls within the responsibility of the Director of the Office for National Statistics. I have asked him to reply.

Letter from John Pullinger to Mr. Gerald Howarth, dated 5 April 2000:

The Director of the Office for National Statistics (ONS) has been asked to reply to your recent question on an estimate of the number of households with children where parents are not married and are cohabiting. I am replying in the Director's absence.

The estimated number of households containing cohabiting couples with dependent children was 750 thousand in Great Britain in 1999.

Source:

1999 Spring Quarter Labour Force Survey

Mr. Gerald Howarth: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many single mothers with dependent children in (a) 1970, (b) 1980 and (c) 1999 were (i) widows and (ii) divorcees. [117537]

Miss Melanie Johnson: The information requested falls within the responsibility of the Director of the Office for National Statistics. I have asked him to reply.

Letter from John Pullinger to Mr. Gerald Howarth, dated 5 April 2000:

The Director of the Office for National Statistics (ONS) has been asked to reply to your recent question on how many single mothers with dependant children were (i) widows and (ii) divorcees in (a) 1970, (b) 1980 and (c) 1999. I am replying in the Director's absence.

The estimated numbers of lone mothers in Great Britain were (in thousands):

	1971	1981	1999
Divorced lone mothers	120	320	460
Widowed lone mothers	120	120	60

Mr. Gerald Howarth: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many (a) single parent and (b) single mother households there were in (i) 1970, (ii) 1980 and (iii) 1999. [117546]

Miss Melanie Johnson: The information requested falls within the responsibility of the Director of the Office for National Statistics. I have asked him to reply.

Letter from John Pullinger to Mr. Gerald Howarth, dated 5 April 2000:

The Director of the Office for National Statistics (ONS) has been asked to reply to your recent question on how many (a) single parents and (b) single mother households there were in 1970, 1980 and 1999. I am replying in the Director's absence.

The estimated numbers of lone parents in Great Britain were (in thousands):

	1971	1981	1999
Lone parents	570	900	1,700
Lone mothers	500	800	1,500

Mr. Gerald Howarth: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will estimate for (a) 1970, (b) 1980 and (c) 1999 how many dependent children lived in households where the parents were not married and were cohabiting. [117535]

Miss Melanie Johnson: The information requested falls within the responsibility of the Director of the Office for National Statistics. I have asked him to reply.

Letter from John Pullinger to Mr. Gerald Howarth, dated 5 April 2000:

The Director of the Office for National Statistics (ONS) has been asked to reply to your recent question on the estimate for how many dependant children lived in households where the parents were not married and were cohabiting in (a) 1970, (b) 1980 and (c) 1999. I am replying in the Director's absence.

The estimated numbers of dependent children living in cohabiting couple families in Great Britain were (in thousands):

1989: 780

1996: 1,100

1999: 1,200.

Computers

Mr. Ian Bruce: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what effect 3COM's announcement that they are to quit the high-end networking market will have on his Department and the Inland Revenue's existing and planned computer systems. [R] [117621]

Mr. Timms [holding answer 4 April 2000]: The Office of Government Commerce and the Debt Management Office have purchased 3COM components through standard procurement channels. In the event of their failure alternatives from other suppliers are readily available. Neither the rest of the Treasury nor the Inland Revenue use high-end networking equipment from 3COM, and so their departure from this market will have no effect upon existing computer systems, or those that are being planned.

Landfill Tax

Mr. Loughton: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how much of the revenue from rises in the rate of landfill tax announced since May 1997 will go to (i) the Exchequer and (ii) local environmental causes. [117762]

Mr. Timms [holding answer 4 April 2000]: The standard rate of tax, which applies to active waste, rose from £7 to £10 per tonne on 1 April 1999 and by a further £1 per tonne to £11 per tonne from 1 April 2000. Figures are not yet available for 1999–2000, but for the calendar year 1999 there was an increase in revenue for the Exchequer of £67 million. In the same period there was an increase of £20 million in tax credits claimed in respect of contributions made by operators to environmental projects.

Mr. Loughton: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what plans he has to hypothecate the revenue from landfill tax to environmental protection measures. [117712]

Mr. Timms [holding answer 4 April 2000]: I have no such plans. Revenues from the landfill tax contribute to Government spending on their priorities.

Tax Rates

Mr. Willetts: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer further to Table 4.2 of the Red Book, HC346 p. 79, how many families experienced marginal deduction rates of (a) 55 per cent., (b) 50 per cent., (c) 45 per cent. and (d) 40 per cent. or more (i) before the 1998 Budget and (ii) after the 2000 Budget. [116853]

Dawn Primarolo: [holding answer 4 April 2000]: The available information is contained in the table. It illustrates the combined effect of tax and benefit reforms in the last three Budgets. These will reduce the number of households facing marginal deduction rates of over 70 per cent. by two thirds, significantly relieving the poverty trap.

The post Budget 2000 figures take into account all announced measures to be implemented by 2001–02, including the introduction of the Children's Tax Credit.

Marginal deduction rate [1]	Before Budget 1998 [1]	After Budget 2000 [1]
100 per cent. or more	5,000	0
90 per cent. or more	130,000	30,000
80 per cent. or more	300,000	210,000
70 per cent. or more	740,000	250,000
60 per cent. or more	760,000	950,000
55 per cent. or more	760,000	1,100,000
50 per cent. or more	760,000	1,100,000
45 per cent. or more	780,000	1,130,000
40 per cent. or more	800,000	1,150,000

[1] Figures are for working households in receipt of income-related benefits or the WFTC where at least one person works 16 hours or more. The before and after figures are based on 1997–98 and 1999–2000 estimated caseload and take-up rates.

The increased generosity of the working families tax credit (WFTC) compared with family credit will see an extension of in-work support for families with children. Even those whose marginal rate increases as a result of this change will be better off in cash terms and see an increased return to work compared to being on benefit. On average WFTC will give low earning families an extra £24 compared with family credit.

Employment Records

Mr. Caton: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer when the Inland Revenue National Contributions Office began charging a fee for the provision of their own employment details to members of the public. [117776]

Dawn Primarolo: The Inland Revenue National Insurance Contributions office does not normally make a charge to individuals for the provision of information recorded on its National Insurance account. However, an employment history will normally be supplied in the following circumstances:

Where a claim is being made against an employer or former employer for illness injury or disease sustained as a result of the employment.

Medical Negligence claims.

Serious road traffic accidents.

A fee will be charged, and this service commenced 10 years ago.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Milk

Mr. Ainger: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what tests are carried out on (a) raw and (b) UHT milk imported into the UK from (i) EU and (ii) non-EU countries. [116561]

Ms Quin: All milk for human consumption produced in the UK and other EU member states is subject to EC legislative production standards. Milk is therefore traded freely in accordance with single market provisions and is not required to be tested on entry into the UK. Raw cow's drinking milk cannot be imported from other member states or third countries and sold for human consumption in the UK.

No testing is required on milk imported from third countries. However, EC rules require that milk imported for human consumption may come only from EU approved establishments in approved third countries and is accompanied by public health certification signed by an official inspector stating that it meets EU health standards. EC Regulations require Environmental Health Officers to carry out hygiene and quality tests on milk at the point of sale or manufacture.

Dog Exports

Mr. Baker: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what plans he has to introduce a comprehensive record system for dog exports; and if he will make a statement. [117018]

Ms Quin [holding answer 4 April 2000]: We have no plans to introduce a comprehensive record system for dog exports. This Department currently holds some information which is derived from applications for export health certificates. This information does not, however, cover all exports of dogs since some countries allow dogs to be imported into their territories without an export health certificate.

Genetically Modified Foods

Mr. Chaytor: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what steps he is taking to promote scientific debate on the safety of genetically modified foods. [116398]

Ms Stuart: As responsibility for food safety and standards matters has now passed to the Food Standards Agency (FSA) which reports to Parliament through Health Ministers, I have been asked to reply.

The recent Organisation for Economic Co-operation and Development conference in Edinburgh hosted by the United Kingdom brought together scientific experts from around the world to debate the safety assessment of genetically modified foods. We will be considering very carefully with our G8 partners the recommendation of the Chairman, Sir John Krebs, for an intergovernmental panel to be set up to continue this process.

In the meantime, the FSA will promote and develop the ongoing programme of scientific research to consider the safety of genetically modified foods and encourage contractors to publish their findings in scientific journals. Final research reports will also be made publicly available by the agency. In addition, the FSA plans to hold regular workshops for research contractors and other scientists to allow the exchange of new ideas and data in this area. The results of these will also be published and further comments invited.

Finally, the Advisory Committee on Novel Foods and Processes now makes available, on its website, http//www.foodstandards.gov.uk, details of data submitted in support of applications it receives for approval of novel (including genetically modified) foods so that comments can be made on these before decisions are reached.

Aventis T25 Maize

Joan Ruddock: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what applications have been made to him for clearance of Aventis T25 maize for use as animal feed; and if he will place in the Library the details of all clearances granted. [117276]

Ms Stuart: As responsibility for food safety and standards matters has now passed to the Food Standards Agency (FSA) which reports to Parliament through Health Ministers, I have been asked to reply.

I am advised by the Food Standards Agency that AgrEvo (now Aventis) submitted an application, to the Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food, for voluntary approval of food and feed safety clearance of glufosinate ammonium tolerant maize in 1995. In addition, an application to market AgrEvo's T25 maize for cultivation and importation for processing into food and animal feed was received, via the Department of the Environment, under Council Directive 90/220/EEC from the French competent authority in 1996. Details of the food safety clearance are contained in the annual report for 1996 of the Advisory Committee on Novel Foods and Processes. The marketing consent under Directive 90/220/EEC was issued by France in 1998 following publication of the Commission's Decision in the "Official Journal of the European Communities" (L131, 5.5.98). This consent, which authorises the marketing of T25 maize for use in food and animal feed, was agreed by the Member States taking into account the advice of the EC Scientific Committee for Plants. The committee's remit included the consideration of any adverse effects on human health or the environment arising from the placing on the market of this maize. Copies of both documents are available in the Library.

HEALTH

Birth Weights

Mr. Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, pursuant to his answer of 11 January 2000, Official Report, column 139W, for each of the weight categories for the year 1997, what percentage of those (a) babies conceived by IVF and (b) other babies were single births. [105430]

Yvette Cooper: The information requested has been placed in the Library.

I regret that three incorrect figures were given in my previous answer. These were in the figures provided for 1997, in respect of babies born in Scotland and Northern Ireland and babies born by in vitro fertilisation in the United Kingdom. Revised tables with the correct figures have also been placed in the Library.

NHS Finance

Mr. Prior: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement on the balance of income and expenditure of health authorities and NHS trusts in England for the financial year ending 31 March 2000. [116380]

Mr. Denham [holding answer 27 March 2000]: The audited annual accounts for the financial year ending 31 March 2000 for all health authorities and National Health Service trusts will be available in the autumn.

NHS Staff

Laura Moffatt: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how information on changes within the NHS is communicated to NHS staff, with particular reference to those working in the blood donor collection service. [116938]

Mr. Denham: The Department uses a wide range of media to communicate with National Health Service staff, including electronic communications via the internet and NHSnet; paper communications such as newsletters, magazines and circulars; and face to face briefings such as conferences, seminars and roadshows. The National Blood Authority uses a similar range of internal media to keep its staff informed about developments both within the blood service and in the wider NHS. This includes intranet technology, written material and face to face briefings.

Job Evaluation

Laura Moffatt: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if there is standard nationwide process for awarding discretionary points for job evaluation for pay purposes in the NHS. [116949]

Mr. Denham: National agreements reached in the Nursing and Midwifery Negotiating Council and the Professions Allied to Medicine (PTA) Council set criteria for payment of discretionary points and the process by which they should be implemented at local level. These were issued to National Health Service employers under cover of Advance letters (NM)2/98 and PAM(PTA)2/98 on 11 September 1998, copies of which are available in the Library.

Paediatric Nurses

Mr. Sanders: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many paediatric nurses there are per 1,000 of population in each health authority in England. [116721]

Mr. Denham: The information requested is shown in the table.

NHS Hospital and Community Health Services (HCHS): nursing, midwifery and health visiting staff within the paediatric area of work, per 1,000 population in each health authority in England, as at 30 September 1998

Number (headcount)

Health authority	Paediatric staff by health authority	Census population	Paediatric staff per 1,000 population
England total	20,030	49,494,580	0.40
Hillingdon	60	251,160	0.25
Kensington, Chelsea and Westminster	380	390,770	0.96
Enfield and Haringey	70	486,440	0.14
Redbridge and Waltham Forest	70	453,320	0.15
Bedfordshire	170	556,630	0.31
Berkshire	230	800,180	0.29
Buckinghamshire	200	681,870	0.29
Cambridge and Huntingdon	150	467,980	0.32
Bexley and Greenwich	210	432,930	0.49
Bromley	30	297,120	0.10
Croydon	40	338,220	0.10
East Kent	290	601,060	0.48
West Kent	260	973,500	0.27
Lambeth, Southwark and Lewisham	760	745,240	1.02
Merton, Sutton and Wandsworth	310	626,990	0.50
East Surrey	130	419,940	0.31
West Surrey	130	640,600	0.20
East Sussex, Brighton and Hove	290	747,180	0.38
West Sussex	110	751,840	0.15
Barking and Havering	160	383,890	0.42
Barnet	40	331,550	0.12
Brent and Harrow	100	464,450	0.21
Camden and Islington	1,180	367,570	3.20
Ealing, Hammersmith and Hounslow	100	671,170	0.15
East London and The City	240	612,420	0.38
North Essex	240	897,080	0.27
South Essex	100	708,540	0.15
South Lancashire	30	312,660	0.11
Liverpool	980	461,480	2.11
Manchester	240	429,810	0.57
Morecambe Bay	110	310,300	0.34
St. Helens and Knowsley	70	333,000	0.22
Salford and Trafford	840	446,220	1.87
Sefton	40	287,740	0.15
Stockport	250	292,810	0.85
West Pennine	290	472,040	0.61
East Norfolk	100	628,090	0.16
Northamptonshire	220	615,800	0.37

NHS Hospital and Community Health Services (HCHS): nursing, midwifery and health visiting staff within the paediatric area of work, per 1,000 population in each health authority in England, as at 30 September 1998

Number (headcount)

Health authority	Paediatric staff by health authority	Census population	Paediatric staff per 1,000 population
North West Anglia	160	413,970	0.38
Oxfordshire	220	616,710	0.36
Suffolk	110	671,100	0.17
Barnsley	70	228,100	0.29
North Derbyshire	110	370,190	0.30
Southern Derbyshire	170	567,460	0.30
Doncaster	90	290,470	0.32
Leicestershire	360	928,720	0.39
Lincolnshire	140	623,130	0.22
North Nottinghamshire	80	388,890	0.21
Nottingham	560	642,700	0.87
Rotherham	80	254,420	0.31
Sheffield	370	531,140	0.70
Bury and Rochdale	90	391,010	0.22
North Cheshire	80	311,910	0.25
South Cheshire	170	672,370	0.26
East Lancashire	220	511,230	0.43
North West Lancashire	190	466,270	0.41
North and Mid Hampshire	190	556,940	0.34
Portsmouth and South East Hampshire	200	544,680	0.37
Southampton and South West Hampshire	310	542,340	0.57
Isle of Wight	60	126,990	0.46
Somerset	100	489,280	0.20
South and West Devon	180	589,120	0.30
Wiltshire	160	605,510	0.27
Avon	410	999,300	0.41
Birmingham	1,150	1,013,430	1.14
Wigan and Bolton	70	577,980	0.13
Wirral	150	327,140	0.45
Bradford	240	483,280	0.50
County Durham	160	607,770	0.26
East Riding	120	574,530	0.20
Gateshead and South Tyneside	90	353,470	0.26
Leeds	430	727,390	0.60
Newcastle and North Tyneside	530	470,070	1.13
North Cumbria	40	319,260	0.12
South Humber	140	308,580	0.45
Northumberland	40	309,640	0.14
Sunderland	140	292,310	0.47
Tees	230	556,340	0.41
Wakefield	140	318,800	0.43
North Yorkshire	190	742,400	0.25
Calderdale and Kirklees	210	583,770	0.36
Cornwall and Isles of Scilly	90	490,370	0.18
Dorset	210	691,220	0.30
North and East Devon	60	479,260	0.12
Gloucestershire	130	557,260	0.23
Coventry	90	304,330	0.29
Dudley	80	311,470	0.24
Herefordshire	40	167,920	0.22
Sandwell	80	290,520	0.28
Shropshire	130	430,210	0.30
North Staffordshire	250	469,210	0.54
South Staffordshire	90	592,070	0.15
Walsall	100	261,170	0.36
Warwickshire	60	506,710	0.11
Wolverhampton	130	241,620	0.53
Worcestershire	140	538,200	0.27
East and North Hertfordshire	90	499,600	0.18
West Hertfordshire	130	534,020	0.24

Notes:

1. Figures are rounded to the nearest 10 where appropriate.
2. Due to rounding totals may not equal the sum of component parts.
3. Figures do not include Special Health Authority and Other Statutory Health Authority staff.

Sources:

Department of Health Non-Medical Workforce Census.

Population figures from Estimates based on 1991 Census.

Health Authority Finances

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list the (a) sums and (b) percentage increase in funding required, to achieve financial balance in each NHS health authority area by 2000–01; and what percentage of the additional NHS funding recently announced is required to achieve financial balance in each case. [117267]

Mr. Denham: The information requested is not available as health authorities and primary care groups have not finalised their commissioning and financial plans for 2000–01.

Buckinghamshire Health Authority

Mr. Lidington: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what plans he has to fund Buckinghamshire health authority at its capitation level. [116954]

Mr. Denham [holding answer 30 March 2000]: Buckinghamshire health authority's share of the £660 million announced on 28 March 2000 is £8.1 million. Together with the allocation already announced, this brings their allocation for 2000–01 to £407.6 million, a total cash increase of 9.41 per cent. This is more than the average cash increase of 8.88 per cent.

Dentists

Mr. Paul Marsden: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement on the demand for more NHS dentists in Shrewsbury and Atcham. [117291]

Mr. Hutton: National Health Service dentistry is accessible for much of the population of Shropshire, although we are aware of long-standing problems in some areas. Together with Shropshire health authority we have taken steps to deal with the problems through a dental access centre based in Shrewsbury and Donnington, where services are offered to non-registered patients.

In addition, we awarded eleven "Investing in Dentistry" grants in Shropshire which generated promises of 24,750 extra patient registrations with dentists. We will publish further plans for modernising and improving access to NHS dentistry soon.

Waiting Lists (Berkshire)

Mr. Rendel: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many people had been waiting over 13 weeks for an outpatient appointment at Berkshire hospitals at the end of 1999; and what target had been set for outpatient waiting lists at Berkshire hospitals for 1999. [116756]

Mr. Denham [holding answer 30 March 2000]: The table shows the total number of people waiting over 13 weeks for an outpatient appointment by each National Health Service trust in Berkshire at December 1999. Trust targets are agreed locally with the relevant health authorities.

Organisation	Total number waiting 13 weeks or over (Q2)
East Berkshire NHS Trust for People with Learning Disabilities	0
East Berkshire Community Health NHS Trust	165
Heatherwood and Wexham Park Hospitals NHS Trust	702
Royal Berkshire and Battle Hospitals NHS Trust	2,748
West Berkshire Priority Care Services NHS Trust	374
Total	3,989

Nursing Homes (Durham)

Mr. Steinberg: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many privately-run and owned nursing homes are registered with Durham Health Authority; and how many were so registered in each of the last five years. [117213]

Mr. Hutton: The information available is in the table.

Number of general nursing homes, mental nursing homes and private hospitals and clinics within County Durham Health Authority

Type of accommodation	[1]1994–95	1995–96	1996–97	[2]1998	[3]1999
General nursing homes	[4]—	[4]—	[4]—	94	92
Mental nursing homes	[4]—	[4]—	[4]—	28	26
Private hospitals and clinics	[4]—	[4]—	[4]—	1	0
Total	103	113	113	123	118

[1] Information for 1994–95, 1995–96 and 1996–97 relate to the period 1 October to 31 March.
[2] Information for 1998 and 1999 relates to 31 March.
[3] Information for 1999 is provisional.
[4] Not available.

Munchhausen Syndrome by Proxy

Mr. Stinchcombe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many cases of alleged Munchhausen Syndrome by Proxy there have been in parents of children with autistic spectrum disorder in each of the last three years; and if he will make a statement. [117140]

Mr. Hutton: Information is not collected centrally about the number of cases of alleged Munchhausen Syndrome by Proxy there have been, in parents of children with autistic spectrum disorder.

However, the Department recognises that suspected cases of Munchhausen Syndrome by Proxy (MSBP) are among the most difficult and demanding areas of activity to undertake for paediatricians and other professional groups devoted to child care and protection.

Whatever the circumstances of individual cases, it remains true that the professionals involved are best placed to decide on the most appropriate means of determining whether MSBP is at issue and, if so, how to act in the best interests of the child and the carer throughout any intervention.

Nursing and Residential Care

Mr. Edward Davey: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many nursing care and residential care beds have been provided by local authorities in each of the past seven years; and if he will make a statement. [117270]

Mr. Hutton: The table provides details of the number of local authority supported residents for the years requested.

Local authority supported residents, by type of accommodation 1993 to 1999

England as at 31 March

Year	Total of all supported residents [1]	Local authority staffed homes	Independent residential homes	Independent nursing homes	Other and unstaffed homes [1]
1993	98,359	77,596	19,270	[2] [3]	1,493
1994	148,731	70,444	48,714	25,154	4,419
1995	185,865	67,327	70,153	43,238	5,147
1996	215,546	61,943	91,221	57,246	5,136
1997	242,139	58,747	119,530	66,058	5,804
1998	255,502	54,611	121,923	72,904	6,064
1999	260,727	50,061	131,159	73,467	6,040

[1] Figures for unstaffed homes (group homes) were not collected before 1994. The figures for 1993 are for "other" accommodation only.
[2] Prior to 1 April 1993, local authorities did not fund nursing care placements.
[3] Not available

Live Animal Experiments

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, pursuant to his answer of 8 March 2000, Official Report, column 760W, concerning animal testing and medicines, for what reasons the Government will not introduce a statutory requirement that labels on medicines include a statement providing information enabling those who oppose the use of animals in medical and veterinary research to make an informed judgment as to whether they should use these products on themselves and their pets. [116735]

Yvette Cooper [holding answer 3 April 2000]: All medicines for human and veterinary use must be tested in animals to provide information about their safety before they can be granted a licence. The labelling of medicinal products is governed by European law and there is no requirement for the inclusion in the labelling of information that a product was tested on animals.

Capital Modernisation Fund

Mr. Harvey: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how much of the £2 billion announced for the NHS is from the Capital Modernisation Fund. [116679]

Mr. Denham: None of the £2 billion announced for the National Health Service for 2000–01 is from the Capital Modernisation Fund.

Regulatory Reform

Mr. Cotter: To ask the Secretary of State for Health which Minister in his Department has responsibility for regulatory reform; and if he will make a statement. [117415]

Ms Stuart [holding answer 4 April 2000]: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given to my hon. Friend the Member for Scarborough and Whitby (Mr. Quinn) by my right hon. Friend the Minister for the Cabinet Office on 4 April 2000, Official Report, column 385W.

Single-sex Hospital Wards (West Sussex)

Mr. Loughton: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what estimate he has made of the cost of converting all hospital wards in West Sussex to single sex wards; what funds he will make available for such purposes; and whether the funds will be in addition to general health authority funding levels already announced. [117716]

Mr. Denham [holding answer 4 April 2000]: We have reiterated our commitment to meeting our target to eliminate mixed sex accommodation, and arrangements for increased performance management and more regular monitoring of progress in this area have been set in place.

We have set three specific objectives for the National Health Service in order to achieve the elimination of mixed sex accommodation:

Ensure that appropriate organisational arrangements are in place to secure good standards of privacy and dignity for hospital patients;

Achieve fully the standard for segregated washing and toilet facilities across the NHS;

Provide safe facilities for patients in hospital who are mentally ill which safeguard their privacy and dignity.

We aim to achieve these objectives fully in 95 per cent. of all health authorities by 2002.

The results of a monitoring exercise published in August 1999, which are in the Library, showed that 93 per cent. of health authorities would achieve the objectives by 2002. Results of the most recent monitoring exercise will be published in spring 2000.

In West Sussex there are a number of capital schemes under way through both private finance initiative and public sector finance which will mean that the health authority aims to meet our objective by 2002.

From April 2000 we aim to invest a total of £2.6 billion in NHS buildings and equipment—part of which will be used to address on-going work to eliminate mixed sex accommodation.

Beta-interferon

Ms Southworth: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will issue a circular on the prescribing of beta-interferon following last year's consultation. [118095]

Mr. Denham: In light of the representations received during the consultation on the draft Health Service Circular on beta-interferon, the Department has concluded that a further circular should not be issued until the National Institute for Clinical Excellence has reported on this matter.

NHS (Information Technology)

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what changes in working practices have been introduced by health authorities following Her Majesty's Government's consultation exercise on the application and use of information technology in the NHS. [116855]

Ms Stuart: Our consultation exercise on the application and use of Information technology in the National Health Service resulted in the national information strategy "Information for Health" (published September 1998). This strategy introduced programmes of work to achieve:

Lifelong electronic health records for every person in the country.

Round the clock on-line access to patient records and information about best clinical practice for all NHS clinicians.

Seamless care for patients through general practitioners, hospitals and community services sharing information across the information highway.

Fast and convenient public access to information and care through on-line information services and telemedicine.

The effective use of NHS resources by providing health planners and managers with the information that they need.

This work is being carried forward by the NHS Information Authority established in April 1999. The timescale for completion of the work described in "Information for Health" is by 2005.

Current changes in working practice at grass roots level, driven by changing approaches to information management and technology, are growing day by day. Some recent examples given by NHS professionals are:

Health visitors being able to access and use information from GP systems and as a result improving approaches to monitoring and taking action in cases of eg child protection, high dependence families, mental health and post natal depression

GPs using a computer programme (PRODIGY) to share information about specific conditions and the best ways of treatment with patients and concluding the consultation by printing off a patient information leaflet.

A health authority provides advice about a more beneficial drug. The hospital incorporates the advice into its clinical information system so that when the old drug is prescribed, information about the more beneficial treatment is displayed. The system enables the clinician to change to the new prescription very easily. Patients leave hospital on the new drug and as a result GPs also change their practice, resulting in better care and a significant cost saving. The rate of this change has been shown to be significantly accelerated by the use of the computer system.

Introduction of best practice guidelines into systems supporting clinical decision making result in changes to practice with resource and patient benefits eg less pre-operative chest x-rays, more appropriate use of contrast media and endoscopes.

Pointing out trends in the utilization of clinical resources by named healthcare professionals brought about a reduction in the variation in practice. (eg ordering laboratory tests—those ordering least tests ordered slightly more but those ordering most tests reduced significantly.)

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement on the role of the Information Management Group in terms of advance guidance and direction in the application of information technology in the NHS. [116856]

Ms Stuart: The Information Management Group (IMG) was part of the National Health Service Executive responsible for the development and maintenance of our Information Management and Technology Strategy for the NHS. Its role was to maintain and develop the strategy in consultation with the NHS, professional groups and industry, and to manage national strategic projects.

It was disbanded in April 1999 in line with the recommendations of "Information for Health" and was superseded by two bodies.

One is the NHS Information Authority, which was formally established as a special health authority in April 1999. The role of the NHS Information Authority is to manage an agreed and focused work programme to develop those products and standards which can best be developed at national level, in order to support local implementation.

The other is the Information Policy Unit, a small group within the NHS Executive with overall responsibility for delivery of the strategy. The role of the unit is to review and develop the strategy in consultation with a wide range of stakeholders, and to contribute to the NHS Executive's wider policy development and management functions. Part of the IPU role is to support the National Information Partnership and the Information Policy Board, and to commission and monitor national work programmes and projects on information and IT in healthcare (in particular from the NHS Information Authority). The Policy Unit also provides advice and guidance to the NHS on strategic issues, for example guidance on local implementation strategies published as Health Service Circular 1999/200.

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what measures have been introduced in the last three years by Her Majesty's Government to reduce (a) the level of bureaucratic duplication, (b) burdens on professional staff and (c) administrative difficulties in the application and use of information technology at a local level. [116857]

Ms Stuart: Our consultation on information management and technology in the National Health Service resulted in the publication of the national Information Strategy "Information for Health", which describes a number of national measures that are intended to reduce the administrative burden on NHS staff.

"Information for Health" is a national strategy for local implementation. Each health community is responsible for developing its own Local Implementation Strategy (LIS). The purpose of the LIS is to describe how each local community will develop its own information systems to improve the effectiveness and efficiency of care, including reducing unnecessary bureaucracy and administrative duplication.

The national initiatives that are intended to support LISs and local health organisations are wide ranging and include:

A reduction in the number of central communications and changing the style of communications to electronic format. Since February 2000 the Department has been issuing weekly chief executive bulletins by e-mail to NHS organisations and local authorities. The number of circulars is being greatly reduced and used only for urgent and high priority messages. The full circulars are published on the Department's website and the e-mailed bulletin provides an immediate notification and summary of what has been published with a link to the full document.

"Project Connect" will provide 24 hour, 7 day a week, desktop access for general practitioners and primary care teams to an improved service covering e-mail, online information and knowledge, appointment booking, referrals, discharge summaries, radiology and laboratory test results. The costs of connecting primary care to NHSnet are being met centrally. After considerable work on this project over the last two years, a significant watershed is now being reached with critical mass of infrastructure and connection of GPs being achieved in many places.

"NHS Direct" was launched two years ago. Researchers have found evidence to suggest that the introduction of "NHS Direct" has been associated with halting an upward trend in demand for out of hours services. The "NHS Direct" on-line website service launched last year provides the public with a direct gateway to the best of health information on the internet.

A national procurement review has been undertaken to identify what can be done to ensure that local health organisations do not have to undergo unnecessarily burdensome bureaucratic processes when purchasing information systems. The aim is to ensure that work undertaken by local organisations will ensure the best possible solution for local healthcare delivery, keeping administrative overheads to a minimum. To achieve this communities are expected to implement nationally agreed standards, and make use of national call-off contracts and supporting documentation.

The NHS Information Authority is in the process of developing, agreeing and implementing a range of national information and information technology standards that will then be implemented as part of LISs. The standards will facilitate a reduction in the number of times patient information is collected; improve the quality of communication between healthcare professionals and the quality/consistency of information available across the health service. Electronic access to this information throughout the NHS will multiply the benefits already experienced by more advanced sites locally and have a significant impact upon the administrative burden.

"Information for Health" is underpinned by an education, training and development strategy "Working Together with Health Information". This strategy, published in December 1999, builds upon previous work to develop NHS-wide standards for information proficiency, and will make use of virtual technologies to provide local NHS staff with the access to learning resource that they need. The initiative will ensure that the lessons learned in one health organisation are available to other organisations and thereby allow more informed decision-making about the kinds of intervention required. At the same time the approach will help prevent duplication of effort where effective solutions have been identified.

NHS Complaints Procedure

Mr. Chaytor: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many (a) complaints proceeded to a hearing before the Professional Conduct Committee of the United Kingdom Central Council for Nursing, Midwifery and Health Visiting and (b) such cases led to a removal from the register in the last five years. [117156]

Mr. Denham: The number of complaints which proceeded to a hearing before the Professional Conduct Committee (PCC) of the United Kingdom Central Council for Nursing, Midwifery and Health Visiting and which led to a removal from the register, in the last five years, is as follows:

Year	Cases considered by the PCC	Number of removals ordered by the PCC
1995–96	127	73
1996–97	118	96
1997–98	109	84
1998–99	144	93
1999–2000	128	91

Mr. Chaytor: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list, for each of the last five years, the total number of complaints referred to the Preliminary Proceedings Committee of the United Kingdom Central Council for Nursing, Midwifery and Health Visiting. [117157]

Mr. Denham: The total number of complaints considered by the Preliminary Proceedings Committee of the United Kingdom Central Council for Nursing, Midwifery and Health Visiting for the last five years are as follows:

Year	Number
1995–96	871
1996–97	941
1997–98	997
1998–99	973
1999–2000	1,219

NHS Appointments

Mr. Hammond: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when he plans to implement recommendations from the report by the Commissioner for Public Appointments on Appointments to NHS Trusts and Health Authorities. [116406]

Mr. Denham: We have already announced consideration of fundamental changes to the National Health Service appointments process which would delegate to the chairs of health authorities the responsibility for around 2,000 appointments to NHS trusts and primary care trusts. Further consideration to the 28 recommendations from the Report by the Commissioner for Public Appointments will be given in due course.

Adverse Clinical Incidents Report

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when the Government response to the Sixth report of the Health Committee of Session 1998–99 on "Procedures Related to Adverse Clinical Incidents and Outcomes in Medical Care (HC 549)" will be published; and what factors underlie the delay in its issue. [117627]

Ms Stuart: We expect to publish our response to the Select Committee's report tomorrow. The report contains 35 recommendations, which address a broad range of issues, and we felt that it was important to address each of these with due seriousness in order to ensure that the response is properly considered and as positive as possible. The impact of the Shipman trial also needed to be taken into account and for these reasons the response has taken longer to prepare than would normally be the case.

Health Authorities and Trusts (Liabilities)

Mr. Prior: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what were the estimated liabilities of health authorities and NHS trusts in England on 31 March; and of those, how much is due for payment prior to 30 June. [116383]

Mr. Denham: The 1998–99 annual accounts combined balance sheets of health authority and National Health Service trusts show net current liabilities of £767 million, which represents 2.13 per cent. of overall NHS funding (£36 billion).

Information on the timing of payment of individual NHS bodies liabilities is not collected centrally.

NORTHERN IRELAND

RUC Officers (Complaints)

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many RUC officers in each rank have had complaints made against them in each of the last five years and in the current year; for each rank, and year, how many complaints have been (a) dismissed and (b) upheld; and what action has been taken against complainants for (i) frivolous complaints and (ii) wasting police time. [115571]

Mr. Ingram: The following table shows the number of RUC officers by rank against which complaints have been made in the last five years and the number of substantiated and completed complaints. Figures for the current year are not yet available. No action has been taken against anyone making frivolous complaints or wasting police time doing so.

Rank	Number of individual officers against whom complaints have been made [1]	Substantiated [2]	Other completed complaints [3]	Pending	Total
1995
Chief Superintendent	2	0	4	0	4
Superintendent	7	0	18	0	18
Chief Inspector	4	0	5	0	5
Inspector	57	3	174	0	177
Sergeant	286	11	871	2	884
Constable	1,215	50	3,558	7	3,615
FT Reserve Constable	475	16	1,185	0	1,201
PT Reserve Constable	33	0	59	0	59
Total	2,079	80	5,874	9	5,963
1996
Chief Superintendent	0	0	0	0	0
Superintendent	4	0	10	0	1
Chief Inspector	7	1	8	0	9
Inspector	62	4	145	0	149
Sergeant	282	11	853	1	865
Constable	1,223	44	3,459	11	3,514
FT Reserve Constable	413	11	1,099	2	1,112
PT Reserve Constable	32	0	70	0	70
Total	2,023	71	5,644	14	5,729
1997
Chief Superintendent	2	0	4	0	4
Superintendent	7	0	20	0	20
Chief Inspector	6	0	7	0	7
Inspector	62	0	112	2	114
Sergeant	265	6	739	8	753
Constable	1,218	36	3,111	31	3,178
FT Reserve Constable	428	13	1,013	15	1,041
PT Reserve Constable	16	0	19	0	19
Total	2,004	55	5,025	56	5,136
1998
Chief Superintendent	0	0	0	0	0
Superintendent	4	0	6	0	6
Chief Inspector	7	0	6	2	8
Inspector	55	2	105	13	120
Sergeant	268	9	597	85	691
Constable	1,137	22	2,340	330	2,692
FT Reserve Constable	404	6	770	111	887
PT Reserve Constable	16	0	40	2	42
Total	1,891	39	3,864	543	4,446

Rank	Number of individual officers against whom complaints have been made [1]	Substantiated [2]	Other completed complaints [3]	Pending	Total
1999
Chief Superintendent	0	0	0	0	0
Superintendent	5	0	7	2	9
Chief Inspector	1	0	1	0	1
Inspector	35	0	39	21	60
Sergeant	155	0	170	128	298
Constable	762	3	774	635	1,412
FT Reserve Constable	278	1	256	251	508
PT Reserve Constable	8	0	6	5	11
Total	1,244	4	1,253	1,042	2,299

[1] Where more than one officer is involved in a complaint, the complaint has been recorded against each individual officer.
[2] Substantiated figures refer to the year the complaint was registered.
[3] Only covers cases where an investigation has been carried out and officers identified. Excludes complaints that have been informally resolved or initially withdrawn.

Fair Employment Tribunal

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what progress has been made in reducing the backlog of cases waiting to be heard by the Fair Employment Tribunal. [117353]

Mr. Ingram [holding answer 3 April 2000]: The number of Fair Employment cases waiting to be heard has remained broadly the same for a number of years. In order to improve the situation, the number of FET panel members was increased from 30 to 90 in 1999, three more tribunal rooms were made available at the end of 1999 and the number of cases listed for hearing was increased by 25 per cent. Work is in hand to appoint three additional part-time FE Tribunal Chairmen. It is hoped that the number of cases outstanding will soon begin to be reduced as a result of these changes.

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what steps he has taken to ensure adequacy of funding and resources for the Fair Employment Tribunal. [117352]

Mr. Ingram [holding answer 3 April 2000]: The resource needs of the Fair Employment Tribunal are considered as part of the public expenditure survey process each year and the allocations made are in line with the Tribunals' needs.

Civil Service (Roman Catholics)

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what steps have been taken to increase the representation of Roman Catholics in the Senior Civil Service. [117355]

Mr. Ingram [holding answer 3 April 2000]: The Northern Ireland Civil Service has had a robust and proactive policy on equality of opportunity since 1984 and has consistently sought to tackle under-representation at all levels of the organisation through programmes of affirmative action. This has delivered significant improvement in the levels of representation of Roman Catholics throughout the workforce and both the extent of change and the measures taken have been reported in the public domain through the regular reports of the Service's Equal Opportunities Unit, copies of which are in the Library of the House.

Under-representation of Roman Catholics among the most senior levels of the Service remains evident and is openly acknowledged. Past trends indicate that a significant contribution to changing the compositional profile among the Senior Civil Service (SCS) can be made by drawing upon the more representative pools of staff at the grade levels below the SCS.

Affirmative action measures to tackle under-representation of Roman Catholics, have been developed in close consultation with the former Fair Employment Commission, and continue to be developed in concert with the Equality Commission for Northern Ireland. Measures more specifically targeted at tackling under-representation among the SCS include setting goals and timetables in consultation with the former Fair Employment Commission which will be reviewed this year with the new Equality Commission, the dropping of seniority and grade level requirements as eligibility criterion in internal promotion competitions and more extensive use of open recruitment for SCS posts.

Employment Equality

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what plans he has to establish an Equality Unit within the Northern Ireland Office. [117356]

Mr. Mandelson [holding answer 3 April 2000]: The Office of the First and Deputy First Minister has an Equality Unit which continues to advise the Government on equality issues.

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what plans he has to utilise contract compliance and public procurement as a mechanism for promoting greater employment equality. [117354]

Mr. Ingram [holding answer 3 April 2000]: Public contracts already require that contractors comply with Northern Ireland and anti-discrimination law on religious and political opinion, sex, race and disability. There are additional provisions under the Fair Employment and Treatment (Northern Ireland) Order 1998 whereby individual employers can be excluded from Government contracts if they have not adhered to specified requirements of fair employment legislation. There are no further plans at this time to extend these requirements.

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what progress has been made in reducing community differentials in unemployment; what targets he has set for reducing community differentials; and what initiatives are planned to remedy community differentials. [117351]

Mr. George Howarth [holding answer 3 April 2000]: The Government are committed to reducing unemployment in Northern Ireland and regard continuing differentials between Catholics and Protestants in unemployment as unacceptable. The most recent Labour Force Survey data for 1998 indicate that the ratio of the Catholic unemployment rate to the Protestant rate is 1.9 (2.3 for males and 1.4 for females). The Government are addressing unemployment and continuing differentials through:

the New Deal;

recent legislation changes to facilitate employers in recruiting the unemployed and to permit religion specific training; and the new Targeting Social Need policy.

The Equality Commission will shortly consult on its plans to establish benchmarks and monitoring systems to measure future reductions in community differentials among the unemployed.

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what plans he has to monitor the effectiveness of the New Deal programme in Northern Ireland in terms of religious affiliation. [117358]

Mr. Ingram [holding answer 3 April 2000]: Participation in New Deal is monitored in terms of community background/religious affiliation by the Department of Higher and Further Education, Training and Employment. Statistics on the numbers of Catholic and Protestant participants on the New Deals for Unemployed People, and their progress through the programme, have been published regularly by the Department. These statistics are also regularly reviewed by the Training and Employment Agency Board's Equality Sub-Group.

Specific Equality and New Targeting Social Needs criteria, including consideration of the impact of New Deal on Protestants and Catholics, have also been built into the various projects covering the evaluation of New Deal which is currently under way. This will ensure that reliable conclusions can be drawn about the impact of the programme on both the Protestant and Catholic communities.

EDUCATION AND EMPLOYMENT

Schools Funding

Mrs. May: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what the breakdown is of the £837 million extra spending on schools in England announced in the Budget. [117512]

Mr. Blunkett [holding answer 3 April 2000]: Of the £837 million for education in England in 2000–01, the allocation of £812 million has now been announced. This breaks down as follows:

£286 million for special grants to schools.

£20 million for catch-up classes in primary schools.

£53 million for Education Maintenance Allowances and a campaign to encourage young people to stay on in education.

£33 million to extend Excellence in Cities to more areas and £25 million for primary schools in Excellence in Cities areas.

£70 million to fund training salaries for postgraduates entering teacher training.

£250 million in grants through the New Deal for Schools and £60 million in capital support for City Academies and to transform failing schools through the Fresh Start programme.

£15 million for capital projects benefiting 16–19 year olds.

The allocation of the remaining £25 million will be announced in the coming weeks.

Student Support

Mr. Boswell: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what plans he has to redress the remaining differences in student support for 2000–01 between the component parts of the UK following the Government's response to the Quigley report. [117626]

Mr. Wicks: The differences in student support between Scotland and the remainder of the United Kingdom arise from the decisions of the devolved Scottish Parliament. In England and Wales, the student support arrangements are working well and there is no case for fundamental change.

HOME DEPARTMENT

European Community Treaty

Mr. Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department, pursuant to his answer of 26 November 1999, Official Report, columns 238–39W, on Title IV of the Treaty of the European Community, what (a) further measures have been brought forward and (b) decisions have been taken by the United Kingdom concerning opting into measures brought forward under Title IV since 26 November 1999. [117484]

Mrs. Roche: The following measures have been brought forward under Title IV of the Treaty establishing the European Community since 26 November 1999:

Initiative of the Republic of Finland with a view to the adoption of a Council Regulation determining obligations as between the Member States for the readmission of Third-Country Nationals;

Commission proposal for a Council Directive on the Right to Family Reunification;

Presidency Proposal for a Council Recommendation on Voluntary Return;

Initiative of the Republic of Finland for a Council Regulation relating to the updating of the Common Consular Instructions;

Proposal by the Commission for a Council Regulation on the list of countries whose nationals must be in possession of visas when crossing the external borders and those whose nationals are exempt from that requirement;

Proposal for a Council Decision creating a European Refugee Fund.

The Presidency has suspended consideration of the first of these measures. The United Kingdom has not yet opted into any of the other measures.

Asylum Seekers

Dr. Iddon: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he will make a decision on the recommendations made to him by the Home Office

Consultative Group on the setting up of an independent documentation centre for information on countries of origin of asylum seekers. [117069]

Mrs. Roche: Since the Consultative Group reported in December 1998, our priority has been to support the recovery of asylum decision output through the expansion and improvement of advice to caseworkers on country situations. This has included taking account of the Consultative Group's recommendations about the format and content of the published assessments. Once we are satisfied with the progress that has been made on these immediate priorities, we shall turn to considering other possible initiatives for developing country of origin assessments, including the idea of a documentation centre which was examined by the Consultative Group.

Mr. Sanders: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what estimate he has made of (1) the number of jobs the dispersal process for asylum seekers will create in local authorities; [117065]

(2) the total administrative cost to local government of the dispersal of asylum seekers; [117064]

(3) the ratio of staff support to asylum seekers in local government; and if he will make a statement. [117066]

Mrs. Roche: None, either as regards the existing voluntary dispersal scheme or as regards the new centrally administered one.

Since 1 April 1999, the Home Office has been responsible for reimbursing local authorities for the costs of supporting asylum seekers. Local authorities may claim the costs incurred in supporting asylum seekers up to a limit of £140 a week for a single adult and of £240 a week for a family. However, how they allocate these resources, the number of staff they employ and the ratio of staff support to asylum seekers is a matter for the local authorities.

Under the new national asylum support scheme, the Home Office will pay for accommodation and essential living needs.

Police Jurisdiction

Mr. Key: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department which department has responsibility for bringing forward legislation to extend the jurisdiction of (a) the Ministry of Defence Police and (b) British Transport Police to give them constabulary powers; and if he will make a statement. [117670]

Mr. Charles Clarke: The Home Office, in consultation with the Ministry of Defence and the Department for the Environment, Transport and the Regions (DETR), keeps under review all matters concerning the role, powers and jurisdiction of the Ministry of Defence Police (MDP) and the British Transport Police (BTP).

The Regulation of Investigatory Powers Bill currently before Parliament proposes an amendment to the Police Act 1997 to enable the Chief Constable of the MDP and the Chief Constable of the BTP to authorise interference with property and wireless telegraphy within their force's existing jurisdiction under Part III of that Act. Part II of the Bill will also allow them, along with other chief constables, to authorise intrusive surveillance.

My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Scotland, the then Minister of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions, announced in his reply to my hon. Friend the Member for Chatham and Aylesford (Mr. Shaw) on 31 July 1998, Official Report, columns 637–638, the Government's intention to establish, when a suitable legislative opportunity arises, an independent national police authority for the British Transport Police. Following consultation with the police service, the Home Office is also considering with the DETR an extension to the BTP's jurisdiction in specific circumstances. If accepted, this extension would be included in the legislation.

CABINET OFFICE

Correspondence

7. Mr. Ian Bruce: To ask the Minister for the Cabinet Office when her Department will publish statistics on the time it takes Ministers in each Government Department to answer hon. Members' letters; and if she will make a statement. [116390]

Marjorie Mowlam: The Government are committed to reducing the time taken to reply to correspondence from hon. Members.

Clearly this is an important matter for Members on all sides of the House, and for their constituents, and we must continue to aim for higher standards.

I intend to publish information on the time taken by individual Departments and agencies to reply to hon. Members very shortly, and before the Easter recess, which will be earlier than previous years.

Regulations

8. Mr. Nicholas Winterton: To ask the Minister for the Cabinet Office what steps she has taken to reduce the number of regulations issued by Government Departments. [116391]

Mr. Stringer: Any regulatory proposal likely to have an impact on business, charities or the voluntary sector is subject to assessment. These assessments, which are placed in the Libraries of the House, are designed to test the need for every proposed regulation. In addition the Ministerial Panel, which the Prime Minister asked my right hon. Friend to establish last December, has now begun its programme of departmental reviews. In the first of these reviews, DTI and DETR agreed to a package of specific regulatory reforms.

Special Advisers

9. Mr. Blunt: To ask the Minister for the Cabinet Office what estimate she has made of the total salary bill for special advisers in the financial year 2000–01. [116392]

Marjorie Mowlam: It is estimated that the total salary bill for Special Advisers in the year 2000–01 will be £4.3 million.

Public Appointments

10. Mr. Loughton: To ask the Minister for the Cabinet Office when she last met the Commissioner for Public Appointments to discuss the political balance of councillors being appointed to local health authorities and NHS trusts. [116393]

12. Mr. Grieve: To ask the Minister for the Cabinet Office what meetings she has had with the Commissioner for Public Appointments to discuss her report entitled, "Public Appointments to NHS Trusts and Health Authorities". [116395]

19. Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: To ask the Minister for the Cabinet Office when she last met the Commissioner for Public Appointments to discuss appointments to public bodies. [116407]

Mr. Stringer: I met the Commissioner for Public Appointments on 15 March 2000. My right hon. Friend and I meet the Commissioner from time to time.

14. Dr. Tony Wright: To ask the Minister for the Cabinet Office what proposals she has to amend the system of public appointments. [116397]

Mr. Stringer: The Government have no immediate plans to alter the system of public appointments.

Mr. Baker: To ask the Minister for the Cabinet Office what her policy is in respect of the appointment of local councillors to non-departmental public bodies. [116401]

Mr. Stringer: The Government believe that appointments should be made on merit and we agree with the Commissioner for Public Appointments that political activity should not be a bar on taking up a public appointment.

Disability Awareness

11. Mr. Boswell: To ask the Minister for the Cabinet Office what steps she is taking to encourage disability awareness within the civil service. [116394]

Marjorie Mowlam: This is something we take extremely seriously: all managers in the Civil Service will be trained in diversity awareness (including disability issues) within two years; all managers will have diversity objectives in their personal plans; and we have recently produced a video for use in Departments to raise awareness.

Social Exclusion

13. Mr. Edwards: To ask the Minister for the Cabinet Office if she will make a statement about the role of the social exclusion unit. [116396]

Marjorie Mowlam: The Social Exclusion Unit was established in December 1997. Since then it has produced five reports and action plans on subjects as diverse as rough sleeping and teenage pregnancy.

The role of the unit is to help Government action to reduce social exclusion by producing joined-up solutions to joined-up problems.

Digital Television

15. Mr. Healey: To ask the Minister for the Cabinet Office if she will make a statement on the role of digital television in helping Government meet its targets for the electronic delivery of public services. [116400]

Mr. Ian McCartney: There is scope for digital television (DTV) to play an important role in delivering Government services electronically. The Central Information Technology Unit (CITU) published initial guidelines on DTV last December.

Magistrates (Duchy of Lancaster)

16. Mr. Pike: To ask the Minister for the Cabinet Office what changes she proposes to make in the system for appointing magistrates in the Duchy of Lancaster area. [116402]

Marjorie Mowlam: I refer to the answer I gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Pendle (Mr. Prentice) on 28 January 2000, Official Report, column 163W.

US International Trade Commission

17. Mr. Fabricant: To ask the Minister for the Cabinet Office when her officials last met analysts from the United States International Trade Commission to discuss the current US Senate Finance Committee inquiry into possible UK membership of NAFTA; and if she will make a statement. [116404]

Mr. Stringer: I refer the hon. Member to the answer he received from the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs on 3 April 2000, Official Report, column 285W.

Modernising Government Programme

18. Fiona Mactaggart: To ask the Minister for the Cabinet Office what her objectives are for the Civil Service in the modernising government programme. [116405]

Mr. Stringer: The Government objective is to create a modern, diverse Civil Service, which has the skills and competences to meet the challenges it will face in the 21st century. Sir Richard Wilson published his report to the Prime Minister on Civil Service Reform in December last year.

21. Mr. White: To ask the Minister for the Cabinet Office what assessment she has made of progress towards the Government targets for Internet access set out in the Modernising Government White Paper. [116409]

Mr. Ian McCartney: There was no specific internet access target in the Modernising Government White Paper. However, on 7 March, the Prime Minister announced that the UK would aim for universal access to the Internet by 2005. The e-Minister and e-Envoy will be reporting on progress towards this target in their first annual report in July.

22. Mr. Ben Chapman: To ask the Minister for the Cabinet Office what discussions she has had with (a) trade union representatives and (b) others on the modernising government programme. [116410]

23. Mr. Neil Turner: To ask the Minister for the Cabinet Office what discussions she has had with trade union representatives and (b) others on the modernising government programme. [116411]

Mr. Ian McCartney: The Head of the Home Civil Service, the Permanent Secretary of the Cabinet Office, and I met the unions on 30 March for the official signing of the National Partnership Agreement. The Agreement sets out how the Cabinet Office and the unions will work together on matters that require corporate leadership. It outlines a shared commitment to strive for improvement and efficiency in the Civil Service.

I have regular meetings with the unions at which developments in modernising government are discussed, among other topics.

I have many other meetings and modernisation usually features positively.

Civil Service (Ethnic Minorities)

20. Mr. Cohen: To ask the Minister for the Cabinet Office what measures she is taking to tackle the under-representation of ethnic minorities in the civil service. [116408]

Marjorie Mowlam: The Government are committed to redressing under-representation and we are actively working to recruit and retain ethnic minorities at all levels in the civil service. Some key measures include the recent appointment of the Senior Adviser to help drive forward our efforts to tackle the under-representation of ethnic minorities particularly at senior levels of the civil service, and the recently launched new video of successful ethnic minority civil servants showing how fulfilling a career in the civil service can be to potential recruits.

Government Services (Delivery)

24. Mrs. Gilroy: To ask the Minister for the Cabinet Office what her Department is doing to promote the delivery of Government services through information and other new communication technologies. [116413]

Mr. Ian McCartney: I refer to the answer I gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Gedling (Mr. Coaker) on 3 April 2000, Official Report, column 360W.

Special Advisers

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Minister for the Cabinet Office on what dates special advisers from her Department have travelled abroad on official business since 8 June 1999; which countries were visited on each occasion; and what were the names of the special advisers who travelled on each occasion. [117062]

Marjorie Mowlam: Between 8 June 1999 and 11 October 1999, my predecessor was accompanied by one of his Special Advisers on a visit to France which took place on 8 June.

Between 11 October and 31 March 2000 I was accompanied by one of my Special Advisers on visits to Belgium, between 17 and 18 October 1999; Portugal, between 20 and 21 December 1999; and the USA on 13 March 2000.

In addition, over the same period, the United Kingdom Anti-Drugs Co-ordinator visited Austria and Turkey between 30 October and 7 November 1999; Belgium between 27 and 29 February 2000 and Austria between 13 and 14 March 2000. The Deputy UK anti-drugs co-ordinator visited Portugal twice on 16 July 1999 and between 20 and 21 January 2000.

Press Releases

Mr. Brady: To ask the Minister for the Cabinet Office, pursuant to her answer of 28 March 2000, Official Report, column 76W, concerning distribution of news releases by courier, whether her answer covered distribution of news releases by the Central Office of Information. [117224]

Mr. Stringer: Yes, but only the news releases distributed by the COI on behalf of my Department. For information on news releases distributed by the COI by courier for other Departments, I refer the hon. Member to the answers given to him on 10 March 2000 by my right hon. and hon. Friends the Secretary of State for Wales, Official Report, column 825W, the President of the Council, Official Report, column 826W, the Secretary of State for Defence, Official Report, column 827W, Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions, Official Report, columns 832–33W, the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department, Official Report, column 836W, the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport, Official Report, column 838W, the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry, Official Report, column 840W, the Secretary of State for Social Security, Official Report, column 846W, the Secretary of State for the Home Department, Official Report, column 862W, the Secretary of State for Health, Official Report, column 866W, the Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs, Official Report, column 873W; on 13 March 2000 by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland, Official Report, column 3W; and on 15 March 2000 by my right hon. Friends the Chancellor of the Exchequer, Official Report, columns 189–90W, and the Secretary of State for International Development, Official Report, column 200W; on 17 March 2000 from my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Education and Employment, Official Report, column 350W, and on 20 March 2000 from my right hon. Friends the Minister for Agriculture, Fisheries and Food, Official Report, column 385W, and the Secretary of State for Scotland, Official Report, column 403W.

Better Government for Older People

Ms Perham: To ask the Minister for the Cabinet Office, pursuant to the answer of 28 March 2000, Official Report, column 76W, if he will list the issues discussed at the meeting of the Inter-ministerial Group for Older People and the Advisory Group of the Better Government for Older People Programme on 27 March, indicating what further meetings are planned. [117702]

Mr. Stringer [pursuant to his reply, 28 March 2000, c. 76W]: My right hon. Friend the Minister of State for Social Security, who chairs the Inter-Ministerial Group on Older People planned to meet representatives of the Programme's Older People's Advisory Group on 27 March 2000. This meeting did not take place. A meeting has been arranged for 11 April 2000.

Better Regulation Task Force

Barbara Follett: To ask the Minister for the Cabinet Office if she will make a statement on the progress of the Better Regulation Task Force in reducing the regulatory burden on businesses. [116399]

Mr. Stringer: The Better Regulation Task Force advises the Government on action to improve the effectiveness and credibility of regulation, particularly regulation which affects businesses.

Earlier this month the Task Force published a review of payroll regulations, and in the next three months they will produce further reviews on topics including the hotel and restaurant industry, methods of helping small firms cope with regulations, and alternatives to state regulation.

Written Answers to Questions

Thursday 6 April 2000

SOCIAL SECURITY

Departmental Employees

Mr. Willetts: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what checks are applied to confirm the identities of new employees in his Department and its agencies. [117705]

Mr. Rooker: This Department undertakes rigorous recruitment checks on all staff prior to employment. The checks undertaken confirm not only identity, but character, nationality, right to work and employment suitability. Work is currently ongoing to identify, as part of the recruitment checking process, any possible conflicts of interest with new recruits.

To confirm identify, the checks follow the Cabinet Office guidance. The documentation required to do this vary according to nationality.

British Nationals require a full 10 year passport, or combination of two other identification documents.

EC nationals require either a full EC passport or an identity card issued by the EC country.

Commonwealth citizens require either a full passport issued by the country concerned or a document issued by the Home Office establishing the individual's immigration status in the UK.

Steps are taken to examine the documentation to verify its authenticity.

Assurance mechanisms for pre-appointment checks are built into our recruitment process. These include management checks to ensure they are being carried out and our internal audit team regularly carry out their own checks.

Stakeholder Pensions

Mr. Webb: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if, he intends under the draft stakeholder pension regulations, the separate arrangement to charge for individual detached advice to be regarded as a pension contract; and if he will make a statement. [117600]

Mr. Rooker: No. It is important that everyone considering a stakeholder pension understands and is confident that the only charge to be taken out of their pension fund will be within the 1 per cent. annual management charge. Schemes may offer financial advice within the 1 per cent. charge if they wish. The draft stakeholder pension regulations are designed to ensure that any contract for the provision of financial advice (and any other services apart from the management of the scheme and its funds) above the 1 per cent. limit must be optional and separate from the pension contract.

Pension Contributions

Mr. Gerald Howarth: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many single mothers with dependent children are making pension contributions through (a) National Insurance, (b) SERPS and (c) private pension schemes; how many are making no such contributions; and if he will estimate his Department's unfunded liability, assuming present levels of pension payments, in (i) 2020, (ii) 2040 and (iii) 2060. [117539]

Mr. Rooker: There are 2.2 million single mothers with dependent children making pension contributions through National Insurance. Of these 1.3 million (60 per cent. of those paying National Insurance) have private pension cover, while 0.9 million (the remaining 40 per cent. of those paying National Insurance) are contributing to SERPS. Around three million single mothers were making no pension contributions.

Notes:

1. The figures have been rounded to the nearest hundred thousand.

2: The percentages have been rounded to the nearest whole percent.

3. The analysis is restricted to working age employees.

4. The figures are based on the FRS which is a self-reporting survey. This may lead to an element of inaccuracy as people are not always clear about their pension arrangements.

Source:

Family Resources Survey 1997–98.

The estimated expenditure on National Insurance benefits for pensioners under current legislation is £51.7 billion in 2020–21, £64.8 billion in 2040–41 and £65.8 billion in 2060–61, in 1999–2000 price terms.

Notes:

1. The figures on pension payments refer to payments to all pensioners, not to single mothers only.

2. These figures refer to the expected expenditure on National Insurance benefits for pensioners in the specified years.

3. The estimates allow for the Welfare Reform and Pensions Act 1999 and exclude HRP in SERPS, but do not allow for any effects of S2P or Stakeholder Pensions.

4. Income related benefit expenditure on pensioners is not included in the estimates.

Source:

The Report by the Government Actuary on the Child Support, Pensions and Social Security Bill, 1999.

Pensioners (Savings)

Mr. Willetts: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many pensioners have savings (i) below £3,000, (ii) between £3,000 and £6,000, (iii) below £6,000, (iv) between £6,000 and £12,000 and (v) between £12,000 and £47,100. [117703]

Mr. Rooker: The information is in the table.

Number of all pensioner units who have savings

Thousand

Categories	Number
Below £3,000	3,500
Between £3,000 and £6,000	670
Below £6,000	4,170
Between £6,000 and £12,000	700
Between £12,000 and £47,100	1,200

Notes:

1. All amounts are rounded to the nearest 10,000, although estimates are not necessarily accurate to that degree.

2. The Below £3,000 and Below £6,000 categories include pensioners who have no savings.
3. Questions on assets are a sensitive part of the FRS questionnaire and have relatively low levels of response, and hence higher levels of imputation, compared to other parts of the survey. Responses are imputed in around 1 in 10 cases. Evidence also suggests some under reporting of capital by respondents.
4. Pensioner Units are defined as either a single pensioner or a couple where the head of the couple is over the State Pension Age. A couple can be either a married or a co-habiting partnership.
Source:
The Family Resources Survey (FRS) 1997–98.

Works of Art

Mr. Brake: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how much has been spent on (a) the upkeep and (b) the purchase of works of art in his Department for each financial year since 1992. [117470]

Mr. Rooker: I refer the hon. Member to the written answer my hon. Friend the Minister for the Arts gave him on 4 April 2000, Official Report, columns 392–93W.

Income Support

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if the three months' extension of the time limit for claiming Income Support will be allowed in the case where a pensioner's failure to claim earlier can be ascribed to the delay in launching the Government's take-up campaign. [117591]

Mr. Bayley: We have no plans to change the current backdating rules.

Industrial Injuries Disablement Benefit

Mr. Goggins: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will make a statement on the accuracy of the annual industrial injuries disablement benefit assessment data for the 1998–99 financial year. [118548]

Mr. Bayley: A new model for forecasting caseload and expenditure on Industrial Injuries Benefits has been developed. A comparison of encashment data with new expenditure forecasts for 1998–99 has identified an undercounting of around 6 per cent. in the number of assessments.

Future assessment forecasts have assumed that this 6 per cent. undercounting is constant over the forecast period.

Minimum Income Guarantee

Mr. McWalter: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what steps he is taking in the short term to tackle the problems faced by pensioners whose incomes are marginally above the Minimum Income Guarantee. [116628]

Mr. Bayley: We have taken action over a wide front to help all of today's pensioners. Initiatives include Winter Fuel Payments, free eye tests to the over 60s and free TV licences for the over 75s from autumn next year. Also from April 2001, capital limits in the Minimum Income Guarantee for those over 60 will be increased from £6,000 to £12,000. My right hon. Friend the Chancellor of the Exchequer has also announced a review to look at ways to providing further help to pensioners on low incomes and modest pensions and savings who have worked hard to provide for themselves.

Mr. Webb: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will list the categories of pensioner who will receive letters as part of his Minimum Income Guarantee take-up campaign. [117873]

Mr. Bayley: As part of the Minimum Income Guarantee (MIG) take-up campaign we will be writing to around two million pensioners whom our records suggest are most likely to have underlying entitlement. This targeted group will be pensioners who our pension records suggest have incomes below the MIG level. However, we do not know how many of these pensioners will have capital or other income that could affect their entitlement to benefit.

Automated Credit Transfer

Mr. Webb: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will estimate the proportion of (a) new recipients and (b) existing recipients of each main social security benefit who receive payment by automated credit transfer. [117874]

Mr. Rooker: The information is not available in the format requested. Such information as is available is in the table.

Percentage

Benefit type	New customers in receipt of ACT	Existing customers in receipt of ACT
Child Benefit	54	38
Disability Living Allowance	33	36
Industrial Injuries and Death Benefit[1]	n/a	17
Income Support	10	13
Invalid Care Allowance[2]	n/a	9
Incapacity Benefit	41	27
Retirement Pension and Widows Pension	50	44
War Pensions	56	53

n/a = not available
[1] Introduced April 1996
[2] Introduced June 1997
Notes:
1. Method of payment analysis for JSA is not available.
2. The figures are the latest available reflecting the position as at 30 November 1999.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

BAe Broughton

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if the loans offered by his Department for the BAe project at Broughton in Flintshire was based on an assumption that the National Assembly for Wales will make a parallel grant; and if he will make a statement. [117681]

Mr. Alan Johnson: The launch investment announced on 13 March secured substantial UK involvement in the development of the Airbus A3XX aircraft. No assumption was made by my Department about BAe Systems's application for Regional Selective Assistance to the National Assembly for Wales. Any decision on that application is entirely a matter for the National Assembly.

Diamond Synchrotron

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how often he met the Minister for Science between 1 October 1999 and 19 January 2000 to discuss the synchrotron. [117926]

Mr. Byers: Between 1 October 1999 and 19 January 2000 I met my noble Friend the Minister for Science on many occasions to discuss a wide range of topics. Since the New Synchrotron represents the largest single investment in science in the UK for more than a decade it was often included in the topics under discussion.

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry, pursuant to his answer of 3 April 2000, Official Report, column 277W, on the diamond synchrotron, who represented the French Government in the private discussions in October 1999 and who represented the UK. [117979]

Mr. Byers: On 14 October 1999 my noble Friend the Minister for Science had private discussions with the French Minister for Research and Education.

Sellafield

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will list the Government Ministers who have visited Sellafield since 1 May 1997. [118013]

Mr. Byers: My right hon. Friend the Minister for the Environment visited Sellafield on 3 September 1997 and my hon. Friend the Member for Leeds, West (Mr. Battle), the then Minister for Energy, visited Sellafield on 15 February 1999.

Export Guarantees (Romania)

Mr. Jim Murphy: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will make a statement about the provision of export guarantees for Romania. [118482]

Mr. Byers: I have instructed the Export Credits Guarantee Department (ECGD) to make cover available to Mivan Ltd. and Kier International who have won a contract to construct low cost housing and provide water services to villages in Romania. The export credit guarantees will amount to $120 million. In addition, a further $47 million is being provided in support of the project by commercial banks not covered by ECGD. This project will bring benefits to many ordinary Romanians and provide an important export order for Northern Ireland where Mivan is based.

ECGD has now exhausted cover capacity under its exposure ceiling for Romania. They will review cover policy in the light of the progress Romania makes in negotiating and implementing its IMF backed economic programme and its external debt servicing capability.

Prototype Fast Reactor Fuels

Mr. Neil Turner: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry when he expects to make a decision regarding the options for managing the Prototype Fast Reactor fuels at Dounreay; and if he will make a statement. [118483]

Mrs. Liddell: The UK Government are committed to dealing with the remaining liabilities at Dounreay safely, securely and in a way that represents value for money to the taxpayer. In order to achieve the long-term restoration of the site, a solution needs to be found to deal with the remaining fuels, including PFR fuels.

Following a comprehensive review of options for managing Dounreay PFR fuels, the United Kingdom Atomic Energy Authority (UKAEA) has identified three options:

the reprocessing or treatment of all PFR fuels at Dounreay as was originally planned;

the transportation to Sellafield for reprocessing of the irradiated PFR fuels in the THORP plant and treatment of unirradiated PFR fuels at Dounreay or elsewhere;

the treatment of all PFR fuels at Dounreay to make them suitable for interim storage at Dounreay for an indefinite period or until a national waste repository is available.

I am pleased to announce today the start of a public consultation addressing the options for managing these fuels. There is no mandatory requirement to conduct such a consultation exercise, however in the spirit of openness, and given the high level of local interest and the impact it may have on activities at the site, all those with an interest are being consulted. As part of this consultation I will also be seeking the views of the relevant Government advisory bodies. A copy of the consultation package will be placed in the Libraries of both Houses. The consultation will close on 2 June and I would hope to announce a decision a few weeks later. The results of this consultation will be made available to the public, as will the information supporting the decision. The decision will be taken on safety, environmental and economic grounds.

Regulatory Reform

Mr. Cotter: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry which Minister in his Department has responsibility for regulatory reform; and if he will make a statement. [117427]

Mr. Byers: I refer the hon. Member to the answer given to my hon. Friend the Member for Scarborough and Whitby (Mr. Quinn) by my right hon. Friend the Minister for the Cabinet Office on 4 April 2000, Official Report, column 385W.

Enterprise Promotion (West Midlands)

Mr. McCabe: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what measures he proposes to promote enterprise within disadvantaged areas in the West Midlands region affected by BMW's decisions on Longbridge. [116609]

Mr. Byers: I announced the creation of the Rover Task Force on the day after BMW's news that it is to sell the Longbridge plant.

The Task Force is making good progress and is to produce a report within the next four weeks which looks at the impact of BMW's decision and also makes recommendations about initiatives that may be taken to support workers and to assist the regeneration of the Longbridge area.

In making its recommendations, I have asked the Task Force to look at:

Ways in which parts of Longbridge that will not be used by the new owners can be redeveloped to safeguard employment

Training, re-skilling and support for people who may lose their jobs

Ways to support and improve the competitiveness of the supplier chain

Whether local transport services need to be improved to enable people find new work.

Some of the early actions taken include setting up a Job Shop on site at Longbridge to provide advice to workers and fast-track access to benefit, establishing a telephone hotline for suppliers and employees and the creation of a website that will provide information and signposting for companies and individuals to a range of business creation and support organisations in the region.

Notwithstanding any recommendations that the Task Force may make in its report to promote enterprise, businesses in many areas of the West Midlands are eligible to apply for Regional Selective Assistance or the Enterprise Grant Scheme. These schemes offer financial support to businesses to boost new business formation, promote growth and help diversification.

EDUCATION AND EMPLOYMENT

Women in Decision-making Roles

Dr. Tonge: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what progress has been made towards the achievement of Commonwealth Heads of Government target relating to the proportion of women in decision-making roles in political, public and private sectors by 2005. [114778]

Ms Jowell [holding answer 16 March 2000]: At their 1996 meeting, Commonwealth Ministers of Women's Affairs recommended that member countries achieve a target of no less than 30 per cent. of women in the political, public and private sectors by 2005 and those countries already close to achieving this target should aim for gender parity.

It is up to individual countries to use ways most appropriate to their national circumstances to achieve these targets and there are no figures available regarding the public and private sector.

The Commonwealth Secretariat undertook a number of initiatives to assist governments in their efforts to increase women's participation in political decision-making, including:

advocacy at various level Commonwealth forums and a publication of a collection of the life histories of 33 successful Commonwealth women politicians; completion of a series of regional conferences to encourage more women to become involved in local government;

organising a series of regional symposiums on Gender, Politics and Conflict/Peace for parliamentarians.

At the level of local government, which women have often used as a political entry point and training ground, the figures have been more substantial with four countries exceeding the Commonwealth's 30 per cent. target in 1999, as shown in the following table.

Women's representation in political decision-making in the Commonwealth: Ranking of top 10 counties in 1999–2000

	Percentage
National Executive/Cabinet (1999)
1. The Gambia	30.8
2. South Africa	29.6
3. Grenada	26.7
4. Sierra Leone	26.4
5. Seychelles	25.0
6. Canada	24.0
7. United Kingdom	22.0
8. Mozambique	19.6
9. Botswana	19.0
10. Uganda	18.6
National Parliament (2000)
1. South Africa	30.3
2. New Zealand	29.3
3. Mozambique	28.0
4. Australia	25.0
5. Seychelles	23.5
6. Canada	22.2
7. Trinidad and Tobago	20.9
8. Bahamas	19.6
9. Belize	18.4
10. Uganda	18.3
Local Government (1999)
1. Seychelles	54.0
2. Uganda	40.8
3. India	33.5
4. Canada	30.0
5. New Zealand	29.0
6. St. Lucia	29.0
7. United Kingdom	27.0
8. Australia	24.0
9. Trinidad and Tobago	20.4
10. St. Vincent and the Grenadines	20.0

Sources:
Commonwealth Secretariat (1999). Report of the Commonwealth Secretary-General on the Implementation of the 1995 Plan of Action on Gender and Development. London: Commonwealth Secretariat, Gender and Youth Affairs Division. Commonwealth Parliamentary Association (2000). "Women in Commonwealth Parliaments" paper presented at the Commonwealth Workshop on Gender and Democracy, Windhoek Namibia 9–11 February 2000. London: Commonwealth Secretariat, Political Affairs Division.

Hampshire LEAs (Funding Bids)

Mr. Oaten: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if he will list by spending initiative for each local education authority in Hampshire (a) the number and value of funding bids submitted to his Department and (b) the number and value of grants made by his Department from (i) the Standards Fund, (ii) Class Size Reduction funds and (iii) other sources of direct funding for schools since May 1997. [115966]

Ms Estelle Morris [holding answer 23 March 2000]: Tables are today being placed in the Library showing the figures requested for each financial year since May 1997 for Hampshire county council, Portsmouth city council and Southampton county council. For the Standards Fund only, the number and value of the grants are shown in the tables. The number and value of bids under the Standards

Fund cannot be disaggregated for each year without incurring disproportionate cost. Allocations are made via a combination of applications from local authorities and formulae based on School Census data. For Class Size Reduction revenue grant, funding levels were agreed with authorities based on their implementation plans.

Standards Fund

Mr. St. Aubyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what assessment he has made of the impact of increases in the Standards Fund on the equitable distribution of funding for schools in addition to the funding of schools via the standard spending assessment for education. [117133]

Ms Estelle Morris: None. The Standards Fund enables the targeting of funds on specific programmes, areas or schools, to support the Government's drive to raise standards. Local education authorities are required to devolve around 75 per cent. of the Standards Fund to schools. In addition, all maintained schools will receive a share of the additional funding through the £50 million School Standards Grant and the £290 million School Budget Support Grant. Both of these special grants are fully funded by the Government and are only for schools.

New Deal

Mr. Dobbin: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how many people have been employed to date by local councils through the New Deal initiatives for (a) young people, (b) people aged over 50 years, (c) disabled people and (d) lone parents. [117081]

Ms Jowell: We do not hold figures which show separately how many people from the New Deal have been employed by local councils.

However, independent research by the Local Government National Training Organisation has shown that local councils are fully involved in all aspects of New Deal. This research suggests that over 3,500 young people have taken part on New Deal Options including over 900 on the Employer Option. In addition there is evidence to show that local council are employing people under the New Deals for the Disabled, for Lone Parents and for 50+. We continue to work closely with Local Authority Associations and the New Deal Task Force to encourage local council take up of New Deal. The Local Authority Associations themselves are actively promoting the take up of New Deal among their members.

School Places (South-east)

Mr. Norman: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what estimate his Department has made of the increased demand for school places in the south-east that will come about as a result of the building of an additional 215,000 dwellings in the south-east by 2005. [117792]

Ms Estelle Morris: It is for local education authorities to plan and keep under review the supply of school places in the light of proposed housing development, so as to ensure that there is sufficient provision to meet demand. The recent announcement of Regional Planning Guidance for the south-east will assist local education authorities in the region to do this. Where an LEA can demonstrate overall growth in the need for school places it may apply to my Department for capital funding.

Asylum Seekers

Mr. Coleman: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what estimate his Department has made of the costs to London boroughs of providing education for the children of asylum seekers in 1999–2000. [117930]

Jacqui Smith: It is not possible to estimate the total costs of this provision in London boroughs in 1999–2000, as the information is not recorded centrally. However, London boroughs receive funding for the cost of providing education for the children of asylum seekers in the same way as for all other children on the school roll. Children of asylum seekers can also benefit from assistance with the acquisition of language skills through the Ethnic Minority and Traveller Achievement Grant.

School Meals

Mr. Kidney: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if he will make provision for free school meals for children whose parents receive Working Families Tax Credit. [117852]

Jacqui Smith: We have no current plans to extend eligibility for free school meals (which would require primary legislation), but we are working closely with the Child Poverty Action Group on ways of increasing take-up by entitled pupils.

Helen Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what percentage of school pupils took school meals in (a) 1979, (b) 1987, (c) 1997 and (d) 1999. [117825]

Ms Estelle Morris: The information is not available in the form requested. The latest available information is shown in the table.

Prior to 1989, data on school meals were not collected by the Department.

School meal arrangements in maintained Nursery, Primary and Secondary schools and all special schools—England

Percentage

Position as at January of each year	Pupils who bought a school meal	Pupils who received a free school meal	All pupils who took a school meal
1999[1]	[3]—	14.1	[4]—
1997[1]	26.8	15.7	42.5
1989[2]	31.9	11.2	43.1

[1] Day pupils only
[2] Includes boarders
[3] Data not available
[4] Not applicable

Mill Hill County High School

Mr. Dismore: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if he will make a statement on admissions policy at Mill Hill County High School, Mill Hill. [117855]

Ms Estelle Morris: Following a judicial review against an Adjudicator determination that partial selection at Mill Hill County High School should be reduced, the court made an order on 27 March for a second Adjudicator to make a fresh determination. Mill Hill's admission arrangements for 2000–01 are dependent upon the new determination which will be notified to all parties and published in a local newspaper in the usual way.

Grammar Schools, Trafford

Mr. Brady: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if he will make a statement regarding the future of grammar schools in the borough of Trafford. [117860]

Ms Estelle Morris: The Government have always been clear that we do not wish to see the 11-plus extended. However, we believe it is for parents to decide whether or not they want a vote, whether or not to keep the 11-plus. The decision is and remains one for parents in Trafford as anywhere else.

Training

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment, pursuant to his answer of 30 March 2000, Official Report, column 205W, what definition he uses for training; what amounts will be spent on training in each financial year from 1996–97 to 2001–02; from which budget these are paid; and if he will make a statement. [117829]

Mr. Blunkett: Expenditure on training includes expenditure on work-based training for young people, the careers service, adult information and guidance, Career Development Loans and other related programmes. These are all funded from within the DfEE's Departmental Expenditure Limit. This table shows spending on training in England in cash terms for the years requested.

	£ million
1996–97	972
1997–98	975
1998–99	963
1999–2000	1,178
2000–01	1,281
2001–02	1,377

The figures do not include education and training through the New Deal for Young People helping those who enter the Full Time Education and Training option, which we estimate is more than £50 million a year. There is also additional resource being spent on education through the Lottery New Opportunities Fund, although this does not count as Government spending.

Learning and Skills Council (Wales)

Mr. Edwards: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what plans he has to establish a Learning and Skills Council for Wales with similar powers to the Learning and Skills Council for England; and if he will make a statement. [115590]

Mr. Hanson: I have been asked to reply.

The Learning and Skills Bill proposes the establishment of the Council for Education and Training for Wales (CETW). This new body will have broadly the same functions in respect of Wales as the Learning and Skills Council for England, but with some variation to suit local circumstances in Wales. The provisions in the Bill for the CETW are based on the Education and Training Action Plan for Wales, published in March 1999 following public consultation, which was endorsed by the National Assembly for Wales in its plenary debate on 1 February 2000.

CULTURE, MEDIA AND SPORT

National Athletics Stadium

Mr. Faber: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport, pursuant to his oral answer of 27 March 2000, Official Report, columns 10–11, on a new national athletics stadium, for what reasons he informed Radio 5 Live on 2 March that he took the decision to earmark at least £60 million specifically for athletics and the future of athletics. [117711]

Kate Hoey [holding answer 4 April 2000]: No money has been committed. We have established the principle with Sport England that, subject to the details being worked out and a viable application coming forward, the £20 million coming back from the Football Association and up to £40 million which will not now be required for the conversion of Wembley may be available to fund world-class athletics facilities.

In addition, athletics receives funding from the World Class Performance Programme, which totalled £9.2 million up to September 1999, and Exchequer funding totalling over £460,000 for the last calendar year.

Lottery Funding

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport if he will establish a lottery-supported fund available to organisations promoting sporting events of international status in the United Kingdom which could share the risks associated with such projects with this fund. [117633]

Kate Hoey: This Government recognised the importance of staging major international sporting events in this country in our manifesto for the 1997 general election. UK Sport launched its Major Events Strategy in February 1999, with Lottery funding in place, supporting events through UK Sport's World Class Events Programme. This is now providing a coherent framework of support and experience for organisations bidding for and staging events throughout the UK. One of the recent fruits of this coherent approach has been UK Athletics' successful bids for the 2003 World Indoor Championships and the 2005 World Athletics Championships.

SCOTLAND

Local Government Finance

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what was the amount of non-domestic rates

(a) collected from and (b) distributed to each local authority in Scotland for (i) 1996–97, (ii) 1997–98 and (iii) 1998–99. [117629]

Dr. Reid: The amounts of non-domestic rates collected from and distributed to Scottish local authorities for years 1996–97 to 1998–99 are shown in the table.

Non-domestic rates collected by and distributed to authorities: 1996–98 to 1998–99

	Contributable	Distributable
1996–97 NDRI
Aberdeen City	86,909,230	56,050,000
Aberdeenshire	44,835,817	57,834,000
Angus	17,881,385	28,589,000
Argyll and Bute	24,905,858	23,409,000
Clackmannanshire	10,409,625	12,497,000
Dumfries and Galloway	27,831,687	37,812,000
Dundee City	39,584,602	38,695,000
East Ayrshire	16,508,548	31,608,000
East Dunbartonshire	14,695,819	28,308,000
East Lothian	24,079,491	22,206,000
East Renfrewshire	9,699,357	22,314,000
Edinburgh, City of	169,526,631	113,487,000
Eilean Siar	4,482,845	7,498,000
Falkirk	45,196,145	36,464,000
Fife	99,952,162	90,079,000
Glasgow City	219,409,650	159,507,000
Highland	51,131,606	53,085,000
Inverclyde	14,111,817	22,866,000
Midlothian	11,729,201	20,469,000
Moray	18,100,377	22,347,000
North Ayrshire	34,462,286	35,584,000
North Lanarkshire	63,138,676	83,596,000
Orkney	5,962,906	5,068,000
Perth and Kinross	31,684,643	33,770,000
Renfrewshire	43,513,331	45,318,000
Scottish Borders	16,299,596	27,042,000
Shetland	15,915,411	5,853,000
South Ayrshire	25,664,737	29,257,000
South Lanarkshire	63,847,135	78,671,000
Stirling	23,350,956	20,983,000
West Dunbartonshire	20,572,119	24,857,000
West Lothian	36,658,220	37,912,000
Scotland	1,332,051,869	1,313,035,000
1997–98 NDRI
Aberdeen City	92,077,265	56,571,000
Aberdeenshire	45,794,645	58,484,000
Angus	17,667,960	28,856,000
Argyll and Bute	23,925,238	23,574,000
Clackmannanshire	10,604,813	12,604,000
Dumfries and Galloway	31,037,389	38,184,000
Dundee City	39,377,604	38,987,000
East Ayrshire	20,664,896	31,784,000
East Dunbartonshire	14,936,428	28,691,000
East Lothian	24,224,075	22,624,000
East Renfrewshire	8,102,884	22,758,000
Edinburgh, City of	179,348,233	115,545,000
Eilean Siar	4,636,830	7,497,000
Falkirk	41,533,242	36,867,000
Fife	93,983,725	90,774,000
Glasgow City	203,939,379	159,662,000
Highland	50,237,633	53,777,000
Inverclyde	15,684,943	22,897,000
Midlothian	11,998,115	20,623,000
Moray	19,300,029	22,500,000
North Ayrshire	35,580,437	36,020,000
North Lanarkshire	56,933,088	84,355,000
Orkney	5,639,008	5,130,000
Perth and Kinross	32,776,628	34,290,000
Renfrewshire	44,499,634	46,042,00
Scottish Borders	17,340,330	27,418,000
Shetland	14,235,802	5,961,000
South Ayrshire	26,253,041	29,579,000
South Lanarkshire	57,732,714	79,367,000
Stirling	23,435,752	21,242,000
West Dunbartonshire	22,853,790	24,859,000
West Lothian	40,843,193	38,607,000
Scotland	1,327,178,743	1,326,129,000
1998–99 NDRI
Aberdeen City	101,318,328	59,112,000
Aberdeenshire	49,466,288	61,879,000
Angus	19,568,920	30,141,000
Argyll and Bute	28,299,338	24,716,000
Clackmannanshire	10,495,047	13,280,000
Dumfries and Galloway	31,789,211	40,159,000
Dundee City	42,071,071	40,880,000
East Ayrshire	21,876,160	33,289,000
East Dunbartonshire	14,797,539	30,133,000
East Lothian	24,911,565	23,981,000
East Renfrewshire	10,126,348	23,965,000
Edinburgh, City of	186,151,389	122,123,000
Eilean Siar	4,632,944	7,858,000
Falkirk	44,466,106	38,918,000
Fife	101,297,014	95,038,000
Glasgow City	231,326,059	167,718,000
Highland	53,075,991	56,783,000
Inverclyde[1]	16,455,511	23,698,000
Midlothian	12,944,938	21,777,000
Moray	19,672,200	23,538,000
North Ayrshire	36,854,012	37,961,000
North Lanarkshire[1]	68,164,545	88,682,000
Orkney	6,209,691	5,387,000
Perth and Kinross	32,924,976	36,070,000
Renfrewshire[1]	46,023,557	48,580,000
Scottish Borders	18,548,281	28,868,000
Shetland	12,351,868	6,263,000
South Ayrshire	28,296,107	31,189,000
South Lanarkshire	69,496,242	83,651,000
Stirling	26,955,963	22,515,000
West Dunbartonshire[1]	22,396,416	26,054,000
West Lothian	44,096,478	41,022,000
Scotland[1]	1,437,110,103	1,395,228,000

[1] 1998–99 audited contributable amount not yet available—based on most recent estimate received from council.

Collection and distribution of non-domestic rates in Scotland became a devolved matter from 1 July 1999.

ENVIRONMENT, TRANSPORT AND THE REGIONS

Sellafield MOX Plant

Mr. Jack: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will make a statement on the consultation exercises so far undertaken to evaluate the environmental impact of the proposed MOX Plant (SMP) at BNFL Sellafield. [114796]

Mr. Meacher: In November 1996 BNFL sought approval from the Environment Agency to bring the Sellafield MOX plant into operation. The Environment Agency consulted on issues associated with the justification of the MOX plant, including its environmental impact, between February and April 1997.

Respondents to this consultation raised a number of environmental issues and, in addition, some expressed concern about the lack of information provided by BNFL on the economic case. Consequently, the Agency engaged a firm of financial consultants, PA Consulting Group, to carry out an independent assessment of BNFL's economic case for the plant.

The Environment Agency then carried out a second round of consultation between January and March 1998, based on a public domain version of the PA report—which excluded certain material on the grounds of commercial confidentiality.

The Agency issued their draft decisions on the operation of the MOX plant on 2 November 1998. By this stage, Ministers had received a number of requests for them to use their powers of 'call-in' to intervene in the Agency's decisions.

In looking at the advice from the Environment Agency and the representations they had received, Ministers decided that the amount of information excluded on the grounds of commercial confidentiality from the public domain version of the PA report was more than strictly necessary, and that there had been developments in the potential market for MOX fuel which led them to consider that there should be further public scrutiny of BNFL's business case. Ministers therefore consulted again between May and June 1999 on the basis of a significantly greater disclosure of information on the economic case and were considering the responses to this consultation when data falsification at the Sellafield MOX Demonstration Facility first came to light.

The implications of the data falsification will of course be fully considered before Ministers make their final decisions.

Mr. Jack: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions when his Department and the Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food expect to publish the results of their last round of consultations on the operation by BNFL of its MOX plant (SMP) at Sellafield. [114816]

Mr. Meacher [holding answer 20 March 2000]: Ministers will announce their decisions only when they have fully considered all responses to the consultation exercise and the implications of all recent evidence, including the data falsification incident at the Sellafield MOX Demonstration Facility.

Ministers will announce their decisions as soon as they are made. At the same time my Department will publish a decision document, setting out the reasons for their decisions in full.

Mr. Jack: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what factors are currently preventing BNFL from operating commercially the Sellafield MOX plant (SMP). [114817]

Mr. Meacher [holding answer 20 March 2000]: The Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions and the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food are still considering whether to intervene in the Environment Agency's draft decisions on the Sellafield MOX plant. They will make a decision only when they have examined all the evidence before them, including the responses to the consultation exercise held by Ministers last year and the implications of the recent data falsification incident at the Sellafield MOX Demonstration Facility.

Only if Ministers decide not to intervene will BNFL be free to proceed to the next stage of commissioning of the plant and its subsequent operation, subject also to licence approval by the Health and Safety Executive's Nuclear Installations Inspectorate.

Mr. Jack: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what conclusions were reached in the PA Consultancy Group report on the BNFL proposal to operate the MOX plant (SMP) at Sellafield. [114818]

Mr. Meacher [holding answer 20 March 2000]: The report by PA Consulting Group on the economic case for the Sellafield MOX plant formed part of the consultation package on which comments were invited, copies of which were placed in the House of Commons Library on 11 June 1999.

London Underground

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions, pursuant to his answer of 16 March 2000, Official Report, columns 322–23W, relating to the public-private partnership contracts for the London Underground, what arrangements were made for potential contractors or consortia of contractors not specifically asked to consider submitting a bid for the work to ascertain the details of the work to be bid for; how potential contractors in other European Union countries were able to ascertain the work to be bid for; if the arrangements complied with European Union requirements; and if he will make a statement. [116686]

Mr. Hill: The invitation to pre-qualify for the London Underground service contracts was published in the usual way, in the Official Journal of the Economic Communities (OJEC References 1999/S 118–87811EN and 1999/S 25408995). The invitation was open to all potential contractors and full details were supplied to those who responded to the OJEC notice and executed a confidentiality and tender process agreement.

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what was the total sum expended by London Underground Ltd. on the recent re-conditioning of Piccadilly line trains; what the further sum of £500 million for Piccadilly line trains referred to in his answer of 2 March 2000, Official Report, columns 331–32W relates to; what the estimated life of the proposed and current Piccadilly line stock is; and if he will make a statement. [117268]

Mr. Hill: London Underground are currently spending £136 million on re-conditioning the Piccadilly line rolling stock. They estimate that this will extend the effective working life of the rolling stock to 2014.

The £500 million referred to in the question was taken from a briefing document published by London Underground when the Public Private Partnership competition was launched in June 1999. They were LU's estimate of how much they then believed it would cost to implement the performance regime under development of the first 15 years of the PPP. The new rolling stock is anticipated to have a life expectancy of 40–50 years.

Of course, under the terms of the Public Private Partnership (PPP) for LU, infrastructure companies will be required to implement a combination of specific projects and performance enhancements specified in output terms. The PPP will not specify particular amounts of money to be spent, nor particular works to be carried out. It will be for bidders to decide what they have to do to meet the performance specification for each infrastructure company.

Road Safety

Mr. Kidney: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what plans he has to introduce performance indicators for road safety in local authority transport plans; and how he intends to evaluate their effectiveness. [116704]

Mr. Hill: The guidance on full local transport plans (LTPs), published on 27 March, advises local authorities that their LTPs must include a set of indicators and targets for measuring performance against objectives. The guidance describes the indicators for road safety. These will be used for monitoring progress towards the local casualty reduction target. Authorities are required to submit their LTPs for 2001–02 to 2005–06 by 31 July. In subsequent years, authorities will be required to submit annual progress reports. The first progress reports will be submitted in July 2001. Authorities will report on the indicators contained in the plan and progress towards achieving the targets set.

Road Casualties

Mr. Kidney: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will list in rank order the figures for killed and seriously injured road casualties per 100,000 head of population by county and unitary authorities in England for the last five years. [116703]

Mr. Hill: The rates requested are shown for 1998, the most recent year for which figures are available, based on area boundaries at the beginning of that year. However, there have been a number of changes in administrative areas during the preceding four years. This would make it difficult to produce a comparison over time and such analysis would involve disproportionate time to provide.

Road accident casualties by county and unitary authority (UA): 1998

Rate per 100,000 population

County/unitary authority	Killed or seriously injured
Redcar and Cleveland UA	36
City of Leicester UA	37
Greater Manchester	39
Berkshire	40
Stoke on Trent UA	40
South Gloucestershire UA	40
Tyne and Wear	41
Southampton UA	43
Luton UA	43
Middlesbrough UA	43
City of Bristol UA	44
Poole UA	45
Durham (excludes Darlington)	48
Bath and North East Somerset UA	48
Gloucestershire	48
City of York UA	50
Swindon UA	51
Staffordshire (excludes Stoke on Trent)	51
North Somerset UA	51
Stockton on Tees UA	52
Milton Keynes UA	54
Merseyside	54
South Yorkshire	56
Devon	56
Oxfordshire	57
Suffolk	58
Bournemouth UA	58
Portsmouth UA	58
Darlington UA	58
Buckinghamshire (excludes Milton Keynes)	59
Hartlepool UA	59
Leicestershire (excludes Rutland and City of Leicester)	60
City of Derby UA	61
Brighton and Hove UA	61
West Yorkshire	64
Kingston upon Hull UA	69
Cornwall	71
Somerset	73
Northumberland	74
Isle of Wight UA	76
Hampshire (excludes Portsmouth and Southampton)	76
West Sussex	78
Kent	78
West Midlands	78
Essex	83
Wiltshire (excludes Swindon)	85
Derbyshire (excludes City of Derby)	86
Bedfordshire (excludes Luton)	86
Surrey	88
Lancashire	88
Dorset (excludes Poole and Bournemouth)	89
North East Lincolnshire UA	92
Norfolk	93
Greater London	96
Hereford and Worcester	97
East Riding of Yorkshire UA	97
Cambridgeshire	97
Shropshire	102
Cheshire	105
Nottinghamshire	108
Cumbria	109
North Lincolnshire UA	110
Hertfordshire	111
Northamptonshire	116
Rutland UA	120
East Sussex (excludes UA)	122
Warwickshire	125
Lincolnshire	126
North Yorkshire (excludes City of York)	165

Houses in Multiple Occupation

Mr. Gardiner: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what proposals he has to introduce a licensing scheme for houses in multiple occupation; and if he will make a statement. [117586]

Mr. Mullin: We issued a consultation paper last year setting out detailed proposals. Key conclusions and a summary of responses will be published in due course.

Water Meters

Jane Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will list the avenues open to members of the public, whose accommodation has no rateable value and who therefore cannot have a water meter installed, when they cannot reach agreement with a water company on the level of their bill. [117314]

Mr. Mullin: Any customer may have a water meter fitted for their home free from 1 April, unless this is impracticable or excessively costly, in which case the company should offer another alternative basis of charging. The answer that I gave to my hon. Friend's question on 3 April 2000, Official Report, column 322W, sets out the avenues open to customers who do not want to have a meter fitted but are not happy with the company's proposals for setting their water charges.

Listed Buildings (London)

Sir Sydney Chapman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what responsibilities are to be given to the (a) mayor and (b) Greater London Assembly with regard to matters relating to (i) Grade I, (ii) Grade I* and (iii) Grade II listed buildings, respectively. [117719]

Mr. Hill: As part of the Spatial Development Strategy (SDS), the Mayor may frame policies for the conservation and protection of London's built environment, working closely with English Heritage (EH) and the boroughs. The Assembly will be consulted by the Mayor before formal public consultation on the draft strategy.

Primary responsibility for dealing with listed building consent applications remains with the boroughs, in consultation with EH. Neither the Mayor, nor the Assembly will have a role in deciding applications.

Sir Sydney Chapman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions for what reasons he plans to amend the regulations in Greater London to permit consent for works to Grade II listed buildings to be handled by individual London boroughs. [117720]

Mr. Hill: At present, most applications for listed building consent for all grades of listed building within Greater London must be made to the relevant London borough who must in turn notify English Heritage. Also, certain cases are referred by English Heritage to the Secretary of State. However, since the Greater London Council was abolished, English Heritage has been working with the London boroughs to build up their expertise in relation to such applications. We are satisfied that the London boroughs are now in a position to take on full responsibility for determining the majority of listed building consent applications on a similar basis to the arrangements outside London. We therefore issued proposals for consultation last year for changes that would lead to a significant reduction in the number of listed building cases that would need to be notified to English Heritage and the Secretary of State and thus enable decisions on applications to be made more quickly. Copies of the consultation paper 'London Heritage Notifications' were placed in the Libraries of both Houses at the time. English Heritage would, however, continue to be consulted on applications for works to Grade I and II* buildings and works to certain categories of Grade II buildings. We plan to announce shortly how we intend to proceed.

Fuel Poverty

Mrs. Gilroy: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will make a statement on the allocation of resources to tackle fuel poverty in the five years from April 1997. [116611]

Mr. Meacher: This Government are committed to tackling fuel poverty, particularly among those households most at risk to ill health due to cold homes; the old, children, the disabled and the chronically sick. The two main causes of fuel poverty are low income and poor energy efficiency in the home.

The Government's main measures to help households more easily meet their heating costs are as follows.

Winter Fuel Payments were introduced in the winter of 1997. They provide help to eligible older households towards their winter fuel costs. The total expenditure allocated is as follows.

Winter Fuel Payments

Financial year	£ million
1997–98	200
1998–99	200
1999–2000	760
2000–01[1]	1,400
2001–02[1]	1,200

[1] Estimated

Cold Weather Payments provide help towards additional heating costs to eligible people when there is a spell of cold weather in their local area. Since 1997 to date the amount spent on Cold Weather Payments is estimated to be around £1.7 million. As the amount spent is purely dependent on the weather it is not possible to provide an estimate of future expenditure.

Reduction in the level of VAT on domestic fuel to 5 per cent. from September 1997. The estimated cost of this measure is £450 million a year, so that by 2002 the total cost is likely to be about £2,025 million. The benefit to a typical customer is a reduction in their energy bills of £16.50 a year.

In addition the measures taken to liberalise energy markets have contributed to reduced energy prices for households, and are expected to continue to do so. Electricity prices paid by domestic consumers fell, in real terms, by 14 per cent. between the 2nd quarter of 1997 and the last quarter of 1999, while gas prices fell, in real terms, by 12 per cent. over the same period. Lower energy prices have significantly helped low income households with the cost of keeping warm. However it is not possible to quantify the resources used in this work.

The energy efficiency of homes is improved through both specific programmes such as the Home Energy Efficiency Scheme, and also as part of wider housing programmes. The details of each programme are as shown.

Specific energy efficiency programmes

The Home Energy Efficiency Scheme (HEES) provides energy efficiency improvements to the homes of eligible households. The scheme was devolved to the Scottish Executive on 1 July 1999 and to the Welsh Executive from 1 April 2000. The scheme in England is due to be radically overhauled from 1 June, with New HEES providing packages of heating and insulation improvements to households and focusing on the private sector where nearly 70 per cent. of the fuel poor in England are found. The total gross budget for HEES, after allowing for moneys to the devolved administrations, is as shown.

Home Energy Efficiency Scheme

Financial year	£ million
1997–98	76.1
1998–99	76.2
1999–2000	[1]75.3
2000–01[4]	[2]122.8
2001–02[4]	[3]153.8

[1] This includes about £1.5 million spent under the scheme in Scotland from 1 April to 30 June 1999. It excludes the further £4.4 million transferred to the Scottish Executive in respect of the period 1 July 1999 to 31 March 2000.

[2] In addition, £9.6 million and £6.3 million have been transferred to the Scottish and Welsh Executives.

[3] In addition, £13.3 million and £8.9 million have been transferred to the Scottish and Welsh Executives.

[4] Allocated

Government funded programmes operated by the Energy Saving Trust also improve the energy efficiency of both fuel poor households and others. The expenditure on such programmes is as shown.

DETR funded programmes operated by the Energy Saving Trust

Financial year	£ million
1997–98	12.0
1998–99	10.6
1999–2000	12.5
2000–01[1]	15.1
2001–02	[2]—

[1] Allocated

[2] Under consideration

Main housing programmes

The Government have also substantially increased the resources available to local authorities over the lifetime of this Parliament, reversing the reductions planned by previous government. The extra resources in the first three years, 1997–98 to 1999–2000, were allocated through the Capital Receipts Initiative (CRI). Information collected to monitor the impact of the CRI found that around a quarter to a third of the work on local authorities' own stock financed from this initiative lead either directly or indirectly to improvements in energy efficiency. If this were replicated across all local authority housing capital expenditure on its own stock this would equate to around £400–500 million per annum. The total housing capital allocations to local authorities through the Housing Investment Programme (HIP) and Capital Receipts Initiative, are as shown.

Housing capital allocations to local authorities

Financial year	£ million
1997–98	[1]1,050
1998–99	[2]1,338
1999–2000	[3]1,408
2000–01	2,090
2001–02[5]	[4]2,300

[1] This includes £174 million through the Capital Receipts Initiative.

[2] This includes £569 million through the Capital Receipts Initiative.

[3] This includes £570 million through the Capital Receipts Initiative.

[4] This is planned credit approvals total announced in the CSR in July 1998. Resources for 2001–02 will be allocated in December 2000.

[5] Allocated

HIP allocations are the aggregate of housing annual capital guidelines and allocations for Private Sector Renewal and Disabled Facilities Grants.

The energy efficiency of low income households is also likely to be improved through some of the regeneration schemes funded by DETR. These cover a wide range of activities depending on local need, and it is not possible to quantify the precise expenditure on energy efficiency improvements.

To support the installation of energy efficiency measures, the Government also reduced the level of VAT from 1 July 1998 on work carried out on low income households through eligible schemes such as HEES. The revenue cost of the reduction was £8.5 million a year. This year's Budget extended the reduced rate at a total cost of £35 million a year. By 2002, the total cost is estimated at £85 million.

The Government are also introducing provisions to enable lessors to claim capital allowances on their investment in boilers, radiators and controls installed in residential properties under the Affordable Warmth Programme. The Programme will operate from 2000 to 2007, with the aim of helping up to one million low income households benefit from improved energy efficiency. Estimate that Government assistance from this measure up to April 2002 will be approximately £10 million.

In addition to Government energy efficiency programmes, the Director General for Electricity, and now Director General of the Office of Gas and Electricity Markets, has, since 1994, set Energy Efficiency Standards of Performance requiring the public energy suppliers to encourage and assist customers with energy efficiency measures. Around two thirds of this help has gone to pensioner and low income families. From this year the total size of the programme has been doubled to £50 million a year with the obligation placed on both the public gas and electricity suppliers.

DEFENCE

Defence Vetting Agency

Mr. Andy King: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what key targets have been set for the Defence Vetting Agency for 2000–01. [118375]

Mr. Spellar: The Defence Vetting Agency carries out some 200,000 personnel security vetting checks and investigations each year. Since it was launched in 1997, the Agency has embarked on an ambitious modernisation programme aimed at creating a highly responsive, efficient and integrated organisation, exploiting the capabilities of modern information technology to the benefit of its customers. FY2000–2001 will be a period of particular upheaval as the Agency begins to collocate its four separate vetting units to York. Collocation involves much more than the move on to a single site. New accommodation, processes, IT systems, and a substantially new workforce will be introduced, as the existing vetting units close. Consequently, while the quality of its outputs should be unaffected, it is expected that there will be a notable reduction in the Agencies timeliness and efficiency performance during this period compared to last year. The Chief Executive has been set the following Key Targets:

Quality

Key Target 1: At least a 90 per cent. success rating in dealing with Cases Denied and Withdrawn in Service, and zero Serious Errors.

Timeliness

Key Target 2: To complete 78 per cent. of Security Checks within 42 days.

Key Target 3: To complete 76 per cent. of Counter Terrorist Checks within 42 days.

Key Target 4: To complete 90 per cent. of all Developed Vetting clearances within 26 weeks.

Key Target 5: To achieve average times for Counter Terrorist Checks and Security Checks of 35 and 31 days respectively, and to complete Developed Vetting clearances on average within 15 weeks.

Efficiency

Key Target 6: To achieve a Unit Cost of Output of £32.37.

I will arrange for copies of the Corporate Plan to be placed in the Library of both Houses.

Naval Manning Agency

Mr. Andy King: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what key targets have been set for the Naval Manning Agency for 2000–01. [118376]

Mr. Spellar: The Key Targets that have been set for the Chief Executive of the Naval Manning Agency (NMA) for the financial year 2000–01 are as set out. The targets build upon progress made by the Agency since it formed on 1 July 1996.

1. Deployment:

a. The percentage of filled Officer billets to be: 94 per cent. or greater.

b. The percentage of filled rating billets to be: 91 per cent. or greater.

c. The percentage of filled other rank billets to be: 88 per cent. or greater.

2. Manpower Planning:

The variation of Strength to Requirement to be: between zero and minus 2 per cent.

3. Career Management:

a. The percentage of Officers receiving the required Notice of Change to be: 60 per cent. greater.

b. The percentage of ratings receiving the required Notice of Change to be: 98 per cent. or greater.

c. The number of occurrences where Minimum Time Ashore criteria are met to be: 99 per cent. greater.

4. NMA Corporate Efficiency:

a. To achieve strict control of NMA manpower overheads to within plus or minus 2 per cent. of the baseline established for manpower overheads as at 1 April 2000.

b. To carry out two Benchmarking Exercises.

c. To achieve a Customer Confidence Score of 62.

5. Financial

a. Production of Annual Accrual Accounts to be completed by September 01.

b. To operate the NMA within its 2000–01 Net Cash Allocation for Operating Activities (at 1999–2000 prices) of £164.8 million.

Naval Recruiting and Training Agency

Mrs. Gilroy: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what key targets have been set for the Naval Recruiting and Training Agency for 2000–01. [118377]

Mr. Spellar: The following Key Targets have been set for the Naval Recruiting and Training Agency (NRTA) for 1999–2000:

To deliver personnel to the trained strength (or to other training organisations) with 4 per cent. variance from the tasked requirement.

To obtain 96 per cent. "Satisfactory" assessments from the employers of NRTA trainees.

To maintain success rates of 95 per cent. in Career Training and 97 per cent. in examined Pre-joining training.

To reduce the variance between RNR Trained Strength and Total Requirement to 35 per cent.

To retain tasked capacity while operating NRTA within its 2000–01 resource allocation.

To achieve net benefits of £11.9 million in FY 2000–01 from the partnering arrangement with Flagship Training Ltd.

AWE Aldermaston

Mr. Alan Simpson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what were the principal concerns expressed by AWE staff in relation to the potential takeover of sensitive work responsibilities by an American company. [116242]

Mr. Spellar: AWE ML is not an American company but does include Lockheed Martin among the three equal partners making up the consortium. The consortium operating AWE up to 1 April was also made up of three partners, one of which is owned by an American parent company.

When my noble Friend the Minister for Defence Procurement visited Aldermaston recently members of staff asked her a number of questions only one of which expressed concern over Lockheed Martin's involvement with the establishment. That question related to Lockheed Martin's ability to meet UK safety standards.

In a message delivered on 4 April 2000 to their members who worked at AWE the AEEU, GMB, IPMS, MSF, TGWU and UCATT trade unions described the decision to proceed with the new contract as "controversial but correct".

Heavy-lift Aircraft

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how long would it take for (i) an Antonov 124 and (ii) a Boeing C-17 to carry an equal amount of supplies, based on the maximum that the lesser carrying aircraft can carry, to (a) East Timor and (b) Mozambique. [116501]

Dr. Moonie: The estimated flight times to East Timor and Mozambique for the two types of aircraft would be similar, since both cruise at roughly the same airspeed. En-route, both aircraft would require refuelling stops of about two hours and one crew change. However, the C-17 is capable of being refuelled in the air and, therefore, apart from having to land for a crew change, it could avoid the intermediate refuelling stops.

The flying time to East Timor is about 26 hours. Two stops would be required by the An-124 and four stops by the C-17. The total journey time would be 30 hours for the An-124 and 34 hours for the C-17 (or 28 hours with air to air refuelling for the C-17).

The flying time to Mozambique is about 15 hours. The An-124 would require one stop and two for the C-17. The total journey time would be 17 hours for the An-124 and 19 hours for the C-17 (or 17 hours for the C-17 with air to air refuelling).

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what (a) volume and (b) weight of cargo a single (i) Antonov 124 and (ii) Boeing C-17 could have taken to (a) East Timor and (b) Mozambique. [116500]

Dr. Moonie: The An-124 and the C-17 would have the same cargo capabilities to East Timor as they would to Mozambique; these would be:

(i) An-124 could carry (a) a volume of 1,160 cu m or (b) a weight of 120 tonnes.

(ii) C-17 could carry (a) a volume of 580 cu m or (b) a weight of 76.8 tonnes.

Porton Down

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list the types of experiments carried out on human volunteers at the chemical and biological defence establishment at Porton Down in the last four years. [117091]

Dr. Moonie: This is a matter for the Chief Executive of the Defence Evaluation and Research Agency. I have asked the Chief Executive to write to the hon. Member.

Letter from John Chisholm to Mr. Matthew Taylor, dated 6 April 2000:

I am replying to your parliamentary question about studies undertaken by the Chemical and Biological Defence (CBD) sector of the Defence Evaluation and Research Agency (DERA).

During the last four years, the types of studies carried out on human volunteers at Porton Down have fallen into two broad categories. Firstly, there are studies concerned with the evaluation of the physical and psychological burden imposed on service personnel by wearing various items of personal protective equipment, such as the NBC suit and the current in-service respirator, under various environmental conditions.

Secondly, there are studies that evaluate the effects of various licensed drugs on military performance. These may be given to service personnel either as protection or treatments in the event of exposure to chemical or biological agents on the battlefield. The effects that are investigated in such studies would be trivial or go unnoticed in a civilian population but may be important in a military context because they could possibly degrade overall performance. An example of this type of study is the evaluation of the effects of antibiotics on the performance of those involved in tasks such as map reading.

I hope the above is helpful.

CVR(T) Tank

Mr. St. Aubyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when the CVR(T) tank is due to be withdrawn from service. [117130]

Dr. Moonie: The Combat Vehicle Reconnaissance (Tracked) (CVR(T)) is planned to be withdrawn between 2006 and 2014 as it is replaced by the next generation of vehicles.

Mr. St. Aubyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence for what reasons exemptions from procurement rules have been granted to the David Brown Group for the supply of transmissions for the CVR(T) tank. [117135]

Dr. Moonie: The David Brown Group has been granted no exemptions from procurement rules for the supply of transmission mechanisms for the Combat Vehicle Reconnaissance (Tracked) (CVR(T)).

Mr. St. Aubyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if the conversion kits needed to convert the CVR(T) tank from petrol to diesel (a) will be issued free to the contractor and (b) will be purchased from his Department. [117132]

Dr. Moonie: The conversion kits are being procured by the Department and will be provided as Government Furnished Equipment to the contractor.

Mr. St. Aubyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will place copies of the invitations to tender regarding the conversion of the CVR(T) tank from petrol to diesel in the Library. [117129]

Dr. Moonie: The Invitation To Tender document contains classified information. I am withholding its release in accordance with Exemption 1 of the Code of Practice on Access to Government Information, which relates to Defence, Security and International Relations.

Mr. St. Aubyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what plans his Department has for additional improvements to the CVR(T) tank. [117131]

Dr. Moonie: The Combat Vehicle Reconnaissance (Tracked) (CVR(T)) fleet has been subject to many improvements, a number of which are ongoing, including a major programme to convert the vehicles from petrol to diesel. This will reduce whole life costs. Additionally, studies are in place to assess the viability of introducing Battle Group Thermal Imagers and the BOWMAN communications system to the vehicle.

Mr. St. Aubyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many kits to convert the CVR(T) tank from petrol to diesel have been (a) ordered and (b) delivered to date. [117137]

Dr. Moonie: A contract was placed with Alvis Vehicles Ltd. for the production and delivery of 1,107 Modification Kits. As at the end of February 2000, 532 Modification Kits had been delivered.

Zinc Cadmium Sulphide Trials

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many former staff of the Porton Down chemical and biological defence establishment were in contact with Professor Peter Lachmann and his panel during the course of their inquiry into the zinc cadmium sulphide trials; and if he will place all the communications between them and Professor Lachmann and his team in the Library. [117058]

Dr. Moonie: I understand that Professor Lachmann's team had a number of telephone conversations with one former member of staff at Porton Down. No record of these conversations was made and any advice supplied was used in the final report, a copy of which has already been placed in the Library of the House.

Serbia

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what recent reports he has received about the presence of radioactive dust as a result of NATO bombing in Serbia. [117109]

Mr. Spellar [holding answer 3 April 2000]: None. The most recent independent and objective report on the environmental consequences of the Kosovo conflict that I am aware of is the UN Environment Programme report: "The Kosovo Conflict: Consequences for the Environment". The report concluded, inter alia, that an environmental catastrophe had not taken place in Kosovo. A copy of the report has been placed in the Library of the House.

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what recent discussions he has had with the United States about the use of depleted uranium-tipped shells in Serbia. [117112]

Mr. Spellar [holding answer 3 April 2000]: I have had no recent discussions with the United States Government about the use of depleted uranium-based munitions in Serbia.

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will obtain a copy of the study by the Institute of Health Protection in Nis, concerning the measurement of the levels of radioactivity in soil samples. [117110]

Mr. Spellar [holding answer 3 April 2000]: We are willing to consider carefully any peer-reviewed studies based on appropriately validated data.

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what recent reports he has received about concentrations of radioactive heavy metal in (a) Pljackovica, (b) Bratoselce, (c) Cerenovac and (d) Rehjan. [117111]

Mr. Spellar [holding answer 3 April 2000]: I have received no recent reports about concentrations of radioactive heavy metal in the areas quoted.

A400M Project

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what assessment he has made of the Royal Air Force's role in the A400M Project; and if he will make a statement. [117846]

Dr. Moonie: The Royal Air Force has been involved at every stage in the Department's work to fulfil our Future Transport Aircraft requirement, for which one of the candidates is the Airbus A400M.

Low Flying (Saddleworth)

Mr. Woolas: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what authorisation there is for low flying in the Saddleworth area; and if any part of the Oldham East and Saddleworth constituency is designated as a Royal Air Force training area. [117922]

Dr. Moonie: In principle the whole of the UK is available for military low flying training. A number of areas, including controlled airspace and towns with a population of over 10,000, are unavailable. Military low flying training is not permitted over the western half of the hon. Member's constituency as it is located within controlled airspace. The eastern half of the constituency, including the Saddleworth area, is, however, available.

Works of Art

Mr. Brake: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how much has been spent on (a) the upkeep and (b) the purchase of works of art in his Department for each financial year since 1992. [117475]

Dr. Moonie: I refer the hon. Member to the answer given to him on 4 April 2000, Official Report, columns 391–93W, by my hon. Friend the Minister for the Arts.

Kosovo

Mr. Donald Anderson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what has been the contribution funded from his Department to the United Nations force in Kosovo; and what have been the levels of contribution made by other countries. [117158]

Mr. Hoon: UNMIK is a Foreign and Commonwealth Office responsibility. The Ministry of Defence has incurred costs of £1,500 in financial year 1999–2000 which are expected to be repaid by the Foreign and Commonwealth Office. Information on the costs incurred by other nations is not available.

LORD CHANCELLOR'S DEPARTMENT

Community Legal Service (Hendon)

Mr. Dismore: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department if he will make a statement about the availability of the community legal service in Hendon. [117856]

Mr. Lock: Hendon, as part of the London Borough of Barnet, is covered by the Barnet Community Legal Service (CLS) Partnership, which will plan how best to fund and co-ordinate legal services to meet priority local needs more effectively. In the constituency of Hendon, there are nine solicitors' firms which have one or more contracts with the Legal Services Commission to supply services under the CLS Fund and hold the CLS Quality Mark. Details of the nine solicitors' firms and other legal service providers in Hendon can be found in the CLS Directory of legal services, which is accessible on the "Just Ask" website at www.justask.org.uk, or by phoning 0845 6081122. The CLS Directory is also available in hard copy in a number of public locations, including all public libraries and county and magistrates courts.

Road Traffic Accident Protocol

Mr. Don Foster: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department which organisations took part in the consultation on the development of the Motor Accident Solicitors Society Road Traffic Accident protocol; how much time was allowed for public consultation; and when the protocol will enter into force. [117371]

Mr. Lock: Working groups of interested parties are responsible for developing pre-action protocols, with the Lord Chancellor's Department acting as a facilitator. The proposed Road Traffic Accident protocol is still in the development stage and has not yet been subject to full public consultation.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Organic Farming

Mr. Ruane: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what was the total value of UK organic farm produce in each of the past 10 years. [117542]

Mr. Morley [holding answer 3 March 2000]: The estimated retail sales value of UK organic produce in the 1997 Mintel Market Intelligence Report on Organic and Ethical Foods is given in the table:

Year	£ million	£ million (at 1992 prices)
1992	93	93
1993	105	103
1994	121	118
1995	140	131
1996	200	179
1997[1]	260	228

[1] Estimate

The Soil Association's Organic Food and Farming Report 1999 estimates the retail value of UK sales in 1997–98 and 1998–99 as £260 million and £390 million respectively.

Mr. Ruane: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food (1) how many organic farms there were in the UK in each of the past 10 years; [117540]

(2) how many farms have been converted to organic farming in each of the past 10 years. [117541]

Mr. Morley [holding answer 3 April 2000]: The numbers of registered organic farmers and growers are given in the table:

Year	Number of farmers/growers
December 1994	715
December 1995	828
December 1996	865
December 1997	1,026
December 1998	1,462
November 1999	2,322

We do not have statistics for the years preceding December 1994.

BSE

Mr. Breed: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what is the underspend in the Treasury's budget for the last financial year for BSE-related expenditures. [113864]

Ms Quin: In the 1998–99 financial year, MAFF underspent its provision for BSE-related expenditure by £2 million and the Intervention Board by £17 million. The unspent amounts which were ring-fenced for spending on BSE measures only, were returned to Treasury.

Primate Exports

Mr. Wyatt: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food for what reasons primates were exported to Gabon and Croatia in (a) 1999 and (b) 2000 to date. [116709]

Ms Quin: Exporters are not required to notify this Department of their reasons for exporting consignments of primates.

Mr. Wyatt: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many primates were exported through Dover on the Cap Afrique on 20 and 21 March. [116708]

Ms Quin: Inquiries indicate that five primates were exported through Dover on the Cap Afrique on the night of 20–21 March.

Mr. Wyatt: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many primates, of which species, were carried on the Cap Afrique in (a) 1997, (b) 1998, (c) 1999 and (d) 2000 to date; how many were captive bred; and what was their (i) origin and (ii) destination. [116287]

Ms Quin: The import licences issued by the Department do not identify the names of vessels or craft used to import consignments of primates. The number of licences actually used to import primates, as distinct from being issued (import licences are valid for six months after issue), in each year since 1997 together with the number of premises of destination involved is as set out:

Year	Number of licences used	Number of premises of destination involved
1997	80	19
1998	86	20
1999	67	18
2000	6	4

Consolidated information on the origin and total number of primates by species imported into the UK in each year since 1997 could be provided only at disproportionate cost. The destination of all such consignments are quarantine premises authorised by the Department, which may be located in zoos, wildlife centres or research premises.

Mr. Wyatt: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food, pursuant to his answer of 8 March 2000, Official Report, column 716W, on primate exports, if he will list the reasons, as listed on their permits, for the import and export of the types of primates listed. [116710]

Ms Quin: Exporters are not required to notify this Department of their reasons for exporting consignments of primates.

Those applying for licences to import primates into the UK are asked to indicate the purpose for which animals are being imported. The categories are: research, exhibition, as pets, for breeding, or other.

European Centre for Organic Fruit and Nursery Stock

Mr. Luff: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement on the likely location of the European Centre for organic fruit and nursery stock. [117688]

Ms Quin: As announced jointly by HM Treasury and the Ministry on 30 March 2000, this new Centre will be at Horticulture Research International, East Malling.

Regional Service Centres

Mr. Luff: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food for what reason the "Action Plan for Farming" published on 30 March contains no commitment to the maintenance of his Department's regional service centres; and if he will make a statement. [117698]

Mr. Morley: The action plan for farming makes clear the Government's commitment to minimise administrative and cost burdens, to simplify bureaucracy, and to improve the use of information and communication technologies in farming communities.

The recent review of Common Agricultural policy (CAP) scheme administration was commissioned to help us identify the best way to improve the service currently provided to farmers and traders by MAFF's Regional Service Centres (RSCs) and the Intervention Board Executive Agency taking full advantage of the benefits of modern technology.

No decisions have yet been taken on the future of the RSCs following this review. I would refer the hon. Member to the reply given to the hon. Member for Ludlow (Mr. Gill) on 27 March 2000, Official Report, column 37W, which sets out the latest position.

Agri-environment Schemes

Mr. Luff: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what steps he is taking to reduce the costs of implementation of agri-environment schemes including Countryside Stewardship. [117686]

Mr. Morley: We have already achieved some reduction in the costs of implementing agri-environment schemes as a proportion of payments to farmers. Between 1996–97 and 1999–2000, the costs for scheme monitoring and the provision of technical advice rose from £12.3 million to just over £14 million, while payments to farmers almost doubled.

In addition, in order to cope with the anticipated doubling of applications for Countryside Stewardship this year, we have introduced a number of steps to help streamline the application process.

In the medium terms we plan to carry out a major review of agri-environment schemes to consider reshaping and simplifying them in time to feed in to the mid-term evaluation of the England Rural Development Plan in 2003.

EU Rural Development Regulations

Mr. Keetch: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what plans he has to use the provision under article 13(b) of EU Rural Development Regulations to introduce schemes of management for areas where environmental restrictions apply. [117593]

Mr. Morley: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given to him on 4 April 2000, Official Report, columns 457–58W.

Works of Art

Mr. Brake: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how much has been spent on (a) the upkeep and (b) the purchase of works of art in his Department for each financial year since 1992. [117478]

Mr. Morley: This Department borrows works of art from the Government Art Collection, which is funded and maintained by the Department for Culture, Media and Sport. I refer the hon. Member to the reply given by my hon. Friend the Minister for the Arts on 4 April 2000, Official Report, columns 392–93W. The Department has not bought any works of art since 1992.

Special Area Project

Mr. Keetch: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what plans he has to extend the provisions of the Special Area Project for the Forest of Bowland to other areas within England that contain sites of international importance for wildlife. [117611]

Mr. Morley: We intend to carry out an economic evaluation of the project at the end of its two-year pilot phase in March 2001. We will wish to consider the results of that evaluation before deciding whether to extend the project's provisions to other areas within England.

Flood Defence

Mr. Dismore: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement on progress on the flood defence programme for Edgware and Burnt Oak. [117216]

Mr. Morley: I understand that the Environment Agency are aiming to consult on an Environment Statement for the Silk Stream flood alleviation scheme in the next few weeks, with a view to making a planning application for the works in August.

Gelatine

Mr. Yeo: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food (1) which countries exported gelatine to the United Kingdom in each of the last five years; and what quantity of gelatine each of those countries exported; [117007]

(2) from which countries gelatine (a) used and (b) sold in food outlets operated by his Ministry (i) as part of a food product and (ii) as a separate ingredient is imported. [117024]

Mr. Nick Brown [holding answer 30 March 2000]: UK imports of gelatine in 1995–99 (tonnes) were as follows:

Country	1995[1]	1996[1]	1997[1]	1998	1999[2]
France	—	—	—	2,605	3,886
Belgium-Luxembourg	—	—	—	2,216	1,737
Sweden	—	—	—	1,617	1,570
Brazil	—	—	—	1,454	1,602
Germany	—	—	—	1,227	1,538
USA	—	—	—	1,207	1,529
China	—	—	—	1,001	681
Netherlands	—	—	—	875	705
Italy	—	—	—	679	424
India	—	—	—	491	604
South Korea	—	—	—	361	396
Colombia	—	—	—	344	307
Spain	—	—	—	514	113
Irish Republic	—	—	—	218	68
Switzerland	—	—	—	102	169
Taiwan	—	—	—	91	86
Argentina	—	—	—	66	103
Others	—	—	—	176	253
Grand total	14,753	16,405	14,997	15,242	15,773

[1] Import data is not available at country level prior to 1998
[2] Provisional
Source:
HM Customs and Excise

As for foodstuffs, gelatine is used as an ingredient in a very wide range of foodstuffs and it would not be possible to identify separately from which countries such foodstuffs are imported.

Mr. Yeo: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food (1) when he last met representatives of the Gelatine Manufacturers of Europe to discuss the safety of gelatine (a) as part of a food product and (b) a separate ingredient imported into the United Kingdom; [117005]

(2) when he last met representatives of the Gelatine Manufacturers of Europe; and what was discussed. [117004]

Mr. Nick Brown [holding answers 30 March 2000]: I have held no discussions with the Gelatine Manufacturers of Europe. My officials are however in regular contact with UK gelatine manufacturers.

Mr. Yeo: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food recent discussions (a) he and (b) his Department has had with (i) the European Commission, (ii) the European Agency for the Evaluation of Medicinal Products (iii) the French Government, (iv) the Spongiform Encephalopathy Advisory Committee and (v) the World Health Organisation concerning the safety of gelatine (1) as part of a food product and (2) as a separate ingredient imported in to the United Kingdom. [117006]

Mr. Nick Brown [holding answer 30 March 2000]: My Department has held discussions with officials of the European Commission and the French Government on various aspects of the safety of gelatine. Discussions with the European Agency for the Evaluation of Medicinal Products is the responsibility of my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Health. The role of the Spongiform Encephalopathy Advisory Committee (SEAC) is to give independent, scientific advice to Ministers on all aspects of Transmissible Spongiform Encephalopathies. SEAC last advised on the safety of gelatine in 1997.

Mr. Yeo: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how much gelatine was produced in the United Kingdom in the last five years. [117008]

Mr. Nick Brown [holding answer 30 March 2000]: The only readily available information is that published by the Gelatine Manufacturers of Europe (GME). The GME estimates that in 1998 the United Kingdom produced 10,000 tonnes of gelatine for all purposes for edible, pharmaceutical, photographic and technical uses. The sources are listed by the GME as pigskin, hide, bone and other raw materials. A breakdown by country of figures for earlier years is not available.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

EU Directives

Sir Richard Body: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many European Union Directives have been incorporated into the law of the United Kingdom. [117582]

Mr. Vaz: A comprehensive list of all European legislation in force as at 1 December 1999 is contained in the Official Journal Directory of Community legislation in force (34th Ed.). This is updated every six months and is available in the Library of the House. More in depth information on all legislation referred to is available from the Celex database which has been open to the public since 1981.

Gibraltar

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what the present position is as regards delays faced by motor vehicles at the Gibraltar/Spain border; and if he will make a statement. [117410]

Mr. Vaz: Most traffic crosses from Gibraltar to Spain during the main daytime and evening hours. In recent weeks, delays at these times have generally ranged from 20 minutes to one hour. At times, during the rush hour, delays have gone above one hour, and, on occasion, there have been peaks of up to two hours.

Sri Lanka

Mr. Gardiner: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what recent discussions he has had with his counterparts in the Norwegian Government about Sri Lanka. [117641]

Mr. Vaz: The Minister of State, my hon. Friend the Member for Neath (Mr. Hain) discussed the Norwegian initiative in Sri Lanka with State Secretary Wegger Stromen on 7 March. The government of which Mr. Stromen was a member has now fallen. The Secretary of State plans to make early contact with the new Norwegian Foreign Minister, Thorbjorn Jagland, when he will have an opportunity to discuss Norway's role in Sri Lanka.

Helsinki Council

Mr. Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if, pursuant to his answer of 20 January 2000, Official Report, column 536W, on the Helsinki Council, the terms of reference, guidance and accountability of the standing committees have been determined. [117486]

Mr. Vaz: No decisions have been taken on the establishment of these bodies in their permanent form. The Council decided on 15 February to establish equivalent bodies on an interim basis. Under these decisions, the Interim Political and Security Committee, a separate formation of the Political Committee, shall, in close contacts with the Secretary General/High Representative prepare recommendations for the Council on the future functioning of the common European security and defence policy and deal with common foreign and security policy affairs on a day-to-day basis. An Interim Military Body, consisting of representatives of member states' Chiefs of Defence, shall give military advice as required to the Political Committee, including in its formation as the interim Political and Security Committee, and to the Secretary General/High Representative. It is assisted by military experts seconded from member states to the Council Secretariat. The military experts will provide military expertise to the Interim Military Body and the Secretary General/High Representative to support the common foreign and security policy. They will form the nucleus of the future military staff.

US Missile Defence System

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what assessment has been made of the implications for non-proliferation of United States' plans to establish a National Missile Defence Shield Programme, involving forward bases in the United Kingdom [117675]

Mr. Vaz: The United States has not yet decided to deploy any such system. Its implications for non-proliferation would depend on the circumstances in which it were deployed.

The United States Administration has said that the implications for the overall strategic environment and for arms control will be one of the key criteria against which any deployment decision is taken.

Kosovo

Mr. Donald Anderson: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what has been the contribution funded from his Department for the reconstruction of Kosovo since June 1999; and what have been the levels of the contribution of (a) other EU member states, (b) Canada and (c) the USA. [117159]

Mr. Vaz: The UK is donating £119 million in humanitarian and reconstruction assistance in 1999 and 2000. A further £15 million is also available for assistance to international relief organisations and to de-mining projects. Over the same period the other EU member states (excluding the UK) are donating 1.1 billion euros in bilateral humanitarian and reconstruction assistance. The Community itself allocated 507.7 million euros in 1999 and is donating 295 million euros in humanitarian and reconstruction assistance for 2000. The Canadian Government have committed C$34.5 million in humanitarian and budgetary assistance and C$69.5 million in peace-building initiatives from April 1999 to March 2001. The US has allocated £168 million in reconstruction aid and $95.6 million in humanitarian aid over 1999–2000.

Mr. Donald Anderson: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many police officers have been provided by the United Kingdom to serve in Kosovo; and how many have been provided by other countries. [117160]

Mr. Hain: The United Kingdom has deployed 60 police officers to the United Nations International Police (UNIP) in Kosovo. At the request of the UN, we are increasing that contribution to 150 officers, including 20 specialists to help combat organised crime in Kosovo. In addition, the UK has contributed 40 officers to the OSCE-run school training the future Kosovo police service.

According to figures provided by the UN on 29 March, 2,760 civilian police officers have been deployed to UNIP by 43 other countries.

Democratic Republic of Congo

Mr. Austin: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what reports he has received concerning the use of arms in the conflict in the Democratic Republic of Congo supplied to the Governments of (a) Uganda and (b) Zimbabwe from UK sources; and if he will make a statement. [117958]

Mr. Hain: We have received no reports of British equipment previously supplied to the Ugandan Government being used by their forces in the Democratic Republic of Congo (DRC). We understand that two Hawk jets supplied from the UK to the Zimbabwe airforce are deployed in the DRC from time to time, though we have no details.

Iran

Mr. Dismore: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement about the forthcoming trial of the 13 detained Jews in Iran, with particular reference to the fairness of the trial procedure and whether independent observers will be permitted to attend. [117857]

Mr. Hain: I refer to my answers to my hon. Friend's questions of 3 April 2000, Official Report, column 282W. It would not be right to speculate on the conduct of this trial before it has begun. The Iranian Government have stressed repeatedly that the trial of those detained on espionage charges, including members of the Jewish community, will be fair and open. These are commitments to which the international community will hold the Iranian government.

Websites

Mr. Maclennan: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs which companies have placed advertisements on websites funded by his Department, its agencies and non-departmental public bodies; how much revenue has been generated for each financial year since 1997 from such advertisements; and what use has been made of that revenue by his Department. [116597]

Mr. Hain: No companies have placed advertisements on websites funded by the Foreign and Commonwealth Office, its agencies and non-departmental public bodies.

Two companies have sponsored the Planet Britain website (www.planet-britain.org). Eagle Star contributed £35,000 to the costs of the 1998 website and accompanying CD-ROM while Glaxo Wellcome contributed £6,000 to both the 1998 and 2000 versions of the Planet Britain website. The logos of the two companies appear on the website.

CABINET OFFICE

Workplace Parking

Mr. Gray: To ask the Minister for the Cabinet Office how many workplace car parking spaces are available at the buildings used and controlled by her Department. [116764]

Mr. Stringer: As at 31 March, the Cabinet Office's estate (which comprised 28 buildings; 17 in central London and 11 elsewhere) had a total of 762 car parking spaces. The parking spaces are used for a range of purposes: deliveries, operational, visitors and staff use. For example, the figure includes 226 spaces available to students attending courses at the Civil Service College. Further details are given in the table, a copy of which will be placed in the Library.

We are preparing a travel plan for the Cabinet Office in line with the commitment set out in the Transport White Paper, and we are reviewing their scope for reducing our car parking requirements in that context.

Taskforces

Mr. Duncan Smith: To ask the Minister for the Cabinet Office if she will list, for each of the taskforces which have reported, the number of recommendations which (a) they made and (b) have been implemented by the relevant departments. [117966]

Mr. Stringer: Detailed information in the form requested is not held centrally and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost. A full list of taskforces established since May 1997 was placed in the Library as stated on 9 December 1999, Official Report, column 634W. The list provides a breakdown of membership between the private, public and voluntary sectors as well as details of reports prepared by individual taskforces. Those taskforces which are classified as Non-Departmental Public Bodies are excluded from the list as information on them is published in the annual Public Bodies publication.

Employers Forum on Disability

Mr. Boswell: To ask the Minister for the Cabinet Office which Government Departments (a) have and (b) have not joined the Employers Forum on Disability. [117628]

Mr. Stringer: My Department does not keep central records regarding membership of the Employers Forum on Disability or other employer organisations. The decision whether to join the Forum is a matter for individual Departments and agencies.

However, the Employers Forum on Disability tell us that as at 1 April 2000, 14 Government Departments and agencies had joined the Forum. They are:

Cabinet Office
Court Service
Crown Prosecution Service
Defence Evaluation and Research Agency (DERA)
Department for Education and Employment
Department for Trade and Industry
Patent Office
Foreign and Commonwealth Office
Her Majesty's Customs and Excise
Inland Revenue
Insolvency Service
Lord Chancellor's Department
Ministry of Defence
Office for National Statistics

NORTHERN IRELAND

Students

Mr. Öpik: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what the take-up rates were for student loans for each further and higher education college in Northern Ireland in each of the last three years; and if he will make a statement. [114656]

Mr. Ingram: The table shows the relevant information from 1997–98, 1998–99 and 1999–2000.

College	Enrolments on full-time courses at NI FE colleges[1]	Loan up-take[2]	Percentage up-take
1997–98
BIHFE	1,342	766	57
North West Institute	687	209	30
Fermanagh College	108	37	3
NIHCC	216	76	35
North East Institute	172	52	30
East Antrim Institute	41	18	44
Lisburn College	71	17	24
North Down and Ards Institute	369	117	32
East Down Institute	2	0	0

College	Enrolments on full-time courses at NI FE colleges[1]	Loan up-take[2]	Percentage up-take
Newry and Kilkeel college	143	25	18
Upper Bann Institute	132	35	27
Total	3,283	1,352
1998–99
BIHFE	1,301	809	62
North West Institute	684	271	40
Fermanagh College	112	49	44
NIHCC	204	86	42
North East Institute	178	58	33
East Antrim Institute	38	17	45
Lisburn College	68	26	38
North Down and Ards Institute	375	161	43
East Down Institute	1	0	0
Newry and Kilkeel College	134	46	34
Upper Bann Institute	133	54	41
Total	3,228	1,577
1999–2000
BIHFE	1,391	1,156	83
North West Institute	716	477	67
Fermanagh College	128	93	73
NIHCC	204	122	60
North East Institute	184	89	48
East Antrim Institute	40	29	73
Lisburn College	82	41	50
North Down and Ards Institute	407	279	69
East Down Institute	12	6	50
Newry and Kilkeel College	182	107	59
Upper Bann Institute	157	101	64
Total[3]	3,503	2,500

[1] Figures based on snapshots of enrolments at 1 November each academic year include EU students who are not eligible for loans
[2] Figures provided by the Student Loans Company
[3] Figures for 1999–2000 are provisional

Paramilitary Violence

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many (a) deaths and (b) injuries have been attributable to paramilitary groups since the start of the ceasefire in July 1997; and what was the number in the three years before the ceasefire. [116070]

Mr. Ingram: The table shows the number of deaths attributable to paramilitary groups and casualties from paramilitary style attacks since 1 January 1995 to 29 February 2000.

Security situation statistics

	Loyalist	Republican
Deaths
1995	2	7
1996	5	9
1997[1]	9	4
1997[2]	7	1
1998	17	37
1999	3	4
2000[3]	4	—
Casualties as a result of paramilitary style shootings
1995	3	—
1996	21	3
1997[1]	33	16
1997[2]	13	10
1998	34	38
1999	47	26
2000[3]	7	—

Security situation statistics

	Loyalist	Republican
Casualties as a result of paramilitary style assaults
1995	76	141
1996	130	172
1997[1]	45	53
1997[2]	33	25
1998	89	55
1999	91	42
2000[3]	13	5

[1] To 19 July
[2] With effect from 20 July
[3] To 29 February

Royal Victoria Hospital, Belfast

Mr. Walker: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what was the cost of supplying and fitting the new railings around the Royal Victoria Hospital, Belfast, including the cost of the demolition and removal of the existing wall. [116712]

Mr. George Howarth: The cost of supplying and fitting the new railings is £415,275. A further £79,337 will be spent restoring the existing listed boundary wall. The project is jointly funded by the Millennium Commission and the Royal Group of Hospitals HSS Trust.

IDB Industrial Site, Lisburn

Mr. Donaldson: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many visits by potential investors there have been to the new IDB industrial site at Knockmore in Lisburn. [117096]

Mr. Ingram: During the period April 1996 to March 1999, IDB arranged 11 visits by potential inward investors to Knockmore Hill Industrial Estate.

Violence Victims

Mr. Hunter: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland (1) what measures he is taking to ensure that funds from the European Union assigned to organisations which claim to support victims of violence are used for that purpose; [117126]

(2) what is the total value of EU funds provided to Northern Ireland since December 1993; and how much of this has gone to organisations claiming to support victims of violence. [117125]

Mr. Ingram: All organisations, including those offering support to victims of violence, which received funding from the European Union are subject to the financial controls stipulated in the European Commission's regulations and enforced by each member state. These include verification visits by the promoters through which the funds are channelled; independent audit checks by consultants acting on behalf of the promoters; and checks/visits carried out by Departmental Internal Auditors, the Northern Ireland Audit Office and the European Court of Auditors.

The total value of European Union funds allocated to Northern Ireland since December 1993 is approximately £1.5 billion comprising NI Single Programme £980 million, Community Initiatives £92 million and the European Special Programme for Peace and Reconciliation £385 million.

A total of £3.8 million has been allocated to organisations specifically offering support for victims of violence.

Targeting Social Need

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what measures he has taken to integrate the statutory equality duty into the new Targeting Social Need initiative. [117362]

Mr. Ingram [holding answer 3 April 2000]: The statutory obligation on equality of opportunity under section 75 of the Northern Ireland Act 1998 and New Targeting Social Need (New TSN) are separate but complementary elements of the Government's equality agenda. The statutory obligation requires Public Authorities, including NI Departments and the NIO, to have due regard to the need to promote equality of opportunity in terms of nine social categories. New TSN is a policy running through spending programmes in NI Government Departments and the NIO which requires efforts and available resources to be targeted towards people, groups and areas objectively defined as being in greatest social need.

The Government have made it clear that there is no incompatibility between the principles of equality of opportunity and targeting on the basis of objective social need; addressing disadvantage may often contribute to reducing socio-economic inequalities within the Section 75 categories. The OFMDFM will include the New TSN policy within its Equality Impact Assessment in due course.

Employment Equality

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will accept the recommendation of the Northern Ireland Commission on Fair Employment to conduct the next analysis of unemployment differentials before the 2011 Census. [117359]

Mr. George Howarth [holding answer 3 April 2000]: Government continually monitor community differentials in unemployment through annual Labour Force Surveys. The analysis will be greatly assisted by the results of the 2001 Census, which will provide more accurate data. In the White Paper "Partnership for Equality" (Cm 3890 March 1998) the Government gave a commitment to a further review of employment equality in Northern Ireland, including unemployment differentials, to be launched by 2005. They also predicted that the proposals in the White Paper, together with social and economic change, would lead to a substantial reduction in unemployment differentials which should be evidenced in the 2011 Census.

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland when he plans to circulate final guidelines on fair employment practices. [117360]

Mr. Ingram [holding answer 3 April 2000]: Under the Fair Employment and Treatment (Northern Ireland) Order 1998 the Equality Commission, with the approval of the Office of the First Minister and Deputy First Minister, may issue Codes of Practice on fair employment issues. A Code of Practice has been in circulation for several years. My hon. Friend may be referring to the Equality Commission's equality scheme guidelines, "Guide to the Statutory duties: A guide to the implementation of the statutory duties on public authorities arising from Section 75 of the Northern Ireland Act 1998". Those guidelines were launched by the Equality Commission on 31 March 2000. Distribution of the guidelines is a matter for the Commission.

School Budgets

Mr. Donaldson: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what arrangements are being made to ensure that the additional funding for schools announced by the Chancellor of the Exchequer will go directly into school budgets in Northern Ireland. [117858]

Mr. George Howarth: I can confirm that £14.7 million will be distributed for the benefit of every primary, post-primary and special school in Northern Ireland, and that decision on the use of this additional funding will be for schools to make. The funds will be paid through the normal funding mechanisms.

Websites

Mr. Maclennan: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will list the expenditure incurred by his Department, Agencies and Non-Departmental Public Bodies on (a) the setting up and (b) the operation of websites, indicating the cases in which the expenditure has been above that budgeted; and if he will list for each website (i) the topics that have been covered, (ii) the current average number of hits per month and (iii) the estimated expenditure on each website for each of the next three years. [116201]

Mr. Ingram [holding answer 4 April 2000]: The Northern Ireland Public Service Web Site was developed with the intention of providing the public with a mechanism for quickly accessing information relating to Northern Ireland Office, Departments, Agencies, Non-Departmental Public Bodies and Commissions.

(a) Expenditure incurred setting up the Northern Ireland Public Service Web Site.

The initial set up costs for the NICS Web Server amounted to £8,500 capital expenditure in 1997. Staff costs associated with the set up are not available.

(b) Expenditure incurred in the operation of the Northern Ireland Public Service Web Site.

The expenditure incurred in 1999–2000 will be £287,080 broken down as follows:

Maintenance £8,500.

Connection to the Internet Service Provider (ISP) £36,080.

Ongoing development £195,000.

Replacement Web Servers £47,500

(i) The topics covered by the Northern Ireland Public Service Web Site are listed in Appendix A.

(ii) The current average number of hits per month for all Northern Ireland Public Service Sites is 2.58 million.

(iii) The estimated central expenditure on the Northern Ireland Public Service Web Site for the next three years is as follows:

£

Year	Development of Web applications and standards	Infrastructure support	Total
2000–01	216,473	61,460	277,933
2001–02	299,336	73,228	372,564
2002–03	299,336	73,228	372,564

Note:
Individual Departmental/NDPB expenditure is not available

Topics on the Northern Ireland Civil Service Web Site

(Department of) Agriculture and Rural Development Agricultural Research Institute of Northern Ireland
Arts Council of Northern Ireland
(Local Government) Audit Office
Business Development Service (BDS)
Belfast City Vision
Central Adjudication Services (CAS)
Central Community Relations Unit
Chief Executives' Forum
Child Support Agency (CSA)
Citizen's Charter for Northern Ireland
Clinical Resource Efficiency Team (CREST)
Commission for Racial Equality for Northern Ireland
Compensation Agency
Construction Service
(Department of) Culture, Arts and Leisure
Driver and Vehicle Licensing Northern Ireland (DVLNI)
Driver and Vehicle Testing Agency (DVTA)
(Northern Ireland) Economic Bull Points
(Department of) Education
(Department of) Enterprise Trade and Investment
(Department of) the Environment
Environment and Heritage Service
Equality Commission
Equal Opportunities Commission for Northern Ireland
Economics Division—Department of Finance and Personnel
Energy Managers Group
Euro
European Division—Department of Finance and Personnel
European Programmes
European Union—Special Support Programme for Peace and Reconciliation
Fair Employment Commission for Northern Ireland
(Department of) Finance and Personnel
Forensic Science Unit of Northern Ireland
General Consumer Council for Northern Ireland Government DIRECT—for Business Northern Ireland Government Purchasing Agency
Greenmount College of Agriculture and Horticulture
Health and Safety Executive for Northern Ireland
(Department of) Health, Social Services and Public Safety
Health and Personal Social Services (HPSS)
(Department of) Higher and Further Education, Training and Employment
Independent Commission on Policing for Northern Ireland
Industrial Development Board for Northern Ireland (IDB)
Industrial and Research Technology Unit (IRTU)
Innovation Relay Centre for Northern Ireland
Land Registers of Northern Ireland
Local Enterprise Development Unit (LEDU)
Local Government Staff Commission for Northern Ireland
National Year of Reading
Northern Ireland Assembly
Northern Ireland Audit Office
Northern Ireland Council for the Curriculum, Examinations and Assessment (CCEA)
Northern Ireland Council for Integrated Education (NICIE)
Northern Ireland Court Service
Northern Ireland Drugs Information
Northern Ireland Expenditure Plans and Priorities
Northern Ireland Forum for Political Dialogue
Northern Ireland Housing Executive
Northern Ireland Millennium Company
Northern Ireland Museum Council
Northern Ireland Office (NIO)
NICO—Northern Ireland Public Sector Enterprises
Northern Ireland Prison Service
Northern Ireland Statistics and Research Agency (NISRA)
Northern Ireland Tourist Board
Northern Ireland Urban Initiative
North/South Co-operation
North/South Ministerial Council
Office for the Regulation of Electricity and Gas (OFREG)

Office of the First Minister and Deputy First Minister
(Northern Ireland) Ombudsman
Ordnance Survey of Northern Ireland (OSNI)
Parades Commission
Patten Commission (Independent Commission on Policing for Northern Ireland)
Peace Maze
Planning Service
Police Authority for Northern Ireland (PANI)
Probation Board for Northern Ireland (PBNI)
Public Appointments
The Secretary of State for Northern Ireland Public Appointments Report
Public Record Office of Northern Ireland (PRONI)
Public Sector Enterprises (NICO)
Rates Collection Agency (RCA)
Registry of Companies Credit Unions and Industrial and Provident Societies (Department for) Regional Development
Roads Service
Royal Ulster Constabulary (RUC)
Rural Transport Fund for Northern Ireland
(DED) Statistics and Research Branch
Shaping our Future
(Department for) Social Development
Social Security Agency (SSA)
Sports Council for Northern Ireland
Special Support Programme for Peace and Reconciliation
Strategy 2010
Trading Standards
Training and Employment Agency (TEA)
Training Services
Ulster Museum
Urban Traffic Control Centre
Valuation and Lands Agency (VLA)
Water Service.

WALES

Press Officers

Mr. Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many press officers were employed by his Office in (a) 1992, (b) 1993, (c) 1994, (d) 1995, (e) 1996, (f) 1997, (g) 1998 and (h) 1999. [116324]

Mr. Paul Murphy: I regret that figures are not available for the years before 1994 for the Welsh Office Press Office. From 1994 until the start of the National Assembly in July 1999 the Press Office had between eight and nine press officers.

PRIME MINISTER

Universal Primary Education

Dr. Tonge: To ask the Prime Minister what plans he has to discuss the achievement of universal primary education at this year's G8 Summit. [116543]

The Prime Minister [holding answer 29 March 2000]: The World Education Forum in Dakar later this month will assess progress achieved in the decade since the World Conference on Education for All in Jomtien. This is an important opportunity for the international community to reaffirm its commitment to providing education for the world's children, and to put in place a Framework for Action. At the G8 Summit in Okinawa in July Heads of Government will consider the outcome of the Dakar Forum and look at what more can be done to ensure that the target of universal primary education by 2015 is achieved.

Dr. Tonge: To ask the Prime Minister what recent discussions he has held with his EU and UN counterparts concerning the achievement of universal primary education. [116544]

The Prime Minister: [holding answer 29 March 2000]: The Government are committed to the target of achieving universal primary education by 2015. My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for International Development and Department for International Development officials are in frequent contact with their EU and UN counterparts about the achievement of universal primary education. The UN Development Programme (UNDP), the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organisation (UNESCO), the UN Population Fund (UNFPA) and the UN Children's Fund (UNICEF)—together with the World bank—are the convenors of the World Education Forum to be held in Dakar later this month.

Lord Levy

Mr. Baker: To ask the Prime Minister on what date Lord Levy signed the Official Secrets Act. [117774]

The Prime Minister: Lord Levy has not been asked to sign a copy of the Official Secrets Act, but he is, of course, bound by the Act's provisions.

Mr. Baker: To ask the Prime Minister, pursuant to his answer of 22 February 2000, Official Report, column 852W, what further visits since 22 February 2000, have been undertaken by Lord Levy on his behalf. [117784]

The Prime Minister: Lord Levy visited Tunisia and Morocco in the week beginning 5 March.

Foreign Visits

Mr. Baker: To ask the Prime Minister if he will list those persons who have undertaken foreign visits on his behalf since May 1997, giving in each case details of the countries visited and the purpose of each visit. [117773]

The Prime Minister: As has been the practice for previous Administrations, if it is helpful to the UK Government individuals may be asked to carry messages or undertake particular tasks on behalf of the Prime Minister or the Foreign Secretary. We do not maintain a record of such occasions.

HEALTH

NHS Hospitals

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what reports he has asked for from NHS hospitals in England and Wales on the recent pressures they have faced; and what were the main issues of concern reported by those hospitals. [113849]

Ms Stuart: The National Health Service Executive in England has held a series of seminars for local winter planning groups (which include NHS trusts) in each region to consider the main issues emerging from the winter period.

The main concerns reported by NHS trusts were peaks in emergency admissions from patients suffering from influenza and respiratory illness, staff shortages and the cancellation of operations because of pressure on critical care beds.

Junior Doctors (Hours)

Mr. Hesford: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement on the Government's submission to the negotiations on the Working Time Directive on reducing working hours for junior doctors. [116883]

Mr. Denham: We are firmly committed to reducing junior doctors' working hours. We have already agreed a new contract with junior doctors' negotiators which will, if accepted in their referendum, place an 56 hour limit on average weekly hours by February 2004.

An agreement was reached between the Council of Ministers and the European Parliament on 3 April as part of the Conciliation to extend the European Working Time Directive to the excluded sectors. If approved by the European Parliament, this will provide a sound footing for reducing junior doctors' working hours. Over the next decade, we will have to make sure we can meet the needs of patients and deliver improvements in patient care while at the same time reducing doctors' hours. That is why we and our European partners have argued for a realistic transitional period in order to implement fully the terms of the Directive as they apply to doctors in training. We are pleased that the Conciliation has achieved recognition of the need for flexibility during the transitional period.

Health Authority Finances

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list the real-terms growth in funding for each NHS health authority area from 1999–2000 to 2000–01. [117266]

Mr. Denham: The information requested is shown in the tables.

Table 1 shows real terms increases for health authorities for 1999–2000.

Table 2 shows real terms increases for health authorities for 2000–01. This includes the £660 million announced by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State on 27 March. This brings overall increases for health authorities to 6.2 per cent. in real terms (8.9 per cent. cash).

Table 1

Health authority	1999–2000 real terms increase (£000)	1999–2000 real terms increase (%)
Avon	22,308	4.09
Barking and Havering	9,635	4.00
Barnet	7,800	3.98
Barnsley	7,581	5.22
Bedfordshire	14,110	4.85
Berkshire	19,125	4.77
Bexley and Greenwich	7,892	2.88
Birmingham	24,980	3.90
Bradford	13,867	4.76
Brent and Harrow	9,444	3.21
Bromley	6,713	3.89
Buckinghamshire	15,589	4.54
Bury and Rochdale	10,418	4.48
Calderdale and Kirklees	13,724	3.96
Cambridge and Huntingdon	8,976	4.10
Camden and Islington	13,279	4.43
Cornwall and Isles of Scilly	9,648	3.22
County Durham	17,187	4.48
Coventry	8,726	4.66
Croydon	7,817	4.12
Doncaster	8,214	4.43
Dorset	12,334	2.91
Dudley	6,964	4.06
Ealing, Hammersmith and Hounslow	18,134	4.06
East and North Hertfordshire	10,859	3.99
East Kent	14,036	3.77
East Lancashire	13,037	3.97
East London and the City	24,911	5.48
East Norfolk	13,619	3.81
East Riding	14,527	4.31
East Surrey	6,749	2.92
East Sussex, Brighton and Hove	17,858	3.76
Enfield and Haringey	12,487	4.12
Gateshead and South Tyneside	10,379	4.34
Gloucestershire	9,190	2.90
Herefordshire	3,576	3.86
Hillingdon	5,599	3.86
Isle of Wight	2,945	3.38
Kensington, Chelsea and Westminster	15,960	6.06
Kingston and Richmond	5,797	2.93
Lambeth, Southwark and Lewisham	24,054	4.50
Leeds	18,447	4.20
Leicestershire	21,907	4.53
Lincolnshire	14,182	3.82
Liverpool	13,968	4.26
Manchester	11,285	3.42
Merton, Sutton and Wandsworth	14,953	3.76
Morecambe Bay	5,633	2.89
Newcastle and North Tyneside	13,468	4.31
North and East Devon	8,330	2.92
North and Mid Hampshire	10,417	3.80
North Cheshire	5,581	2.92
North Cumbria	7,781	4.18
North Derbyshire	8,317	3.88
North Essex	18,780	3.97
North Nottinghamshire	9,099	4.11
North Staffordshire	13,337	4.70
North West Anglia	9,963	4.25
North West Lancashire	11,816	3.91
North Yorkshire	15,976	3.91
Northamptonshire	11,664	3.80
Northumberland	7,736	4.20
Nottingham	17,427	4.78
Oxfordshire	14,558	4.77
Portsmouth and South East Hampshire	12,537	4.05
Redbridge and Waltham Forest	8,136	2.89
Rotherham	6,934	4.66

Table 1

Health authority	1999–2000 real terms increase (£000)	1999–2000 real terms increase (%)
Salford and Trafford	11,967	4.12
Sandwell	9,072	4.73
Sefton	7,453	4.13
Sheffield	14,677	4.27
Shropshire	9,105	3.92
Solihull	4,844	4.22
Somerset	10,379	3.81
South and West Devon	11,076	3.05
South Cheshire	14,566	3.82
South Derbyshire	13,675	4.29
South Essex	18,006	4.62
South Humber	5,475	2.90
South Lancashire	5,133	2.91
South Staffordshire	11,560	3.81
Southampton and South West Hampshire	12,248	3.98
St. Helen's and Knowsley	9,482	4.27
Stockport	6,749	4.08
Suffolk	11,002	2.92
Sunderland	8,211	4.37
Tees	15,264	4.41
Wakefield	8,339	4.20
Walsall	7,244	4.75
Warwickshire	8,114	2.92
West Hertfordshire	11,301	3.79
West Kent	20,181	3.81
West Pennine	11,673	4.19
West Surrey	10,231	2.91
West Sussex	17,473	3.99
Wigan and Bolton	15,891	4.56
Wiltshire	12,280	3.78
Wirral	8,705	4.09
Wolverhampton	6,806	4.54
Worcestershire	10,773	3.78
England	1,171,238	4.00

Table 2

Health authority	2000–01 real terms increase (£000)	2000–01 real terms increase (%)
Avon	37,526	6.37
Barking and Havering	15,094	5.81
Barnet	12,650	6.02
Barnsley	11,129	7.12
Bedfordshire	22,425	7.14
Berkshire	30,366	6.86
Bexley and Greenwich	16,309	5.55
Birmingham	40,853	5.92
Bradford	20,964	6.65
Brent and Harrow	18,237	5.78
Bromley	11,200	6.05
Buckinghamshire	25,118	6.74
Bury and Rochdale	16,962	6.70
Calderdale and Kirklees	22,577	6.09
Cambridgeshire	26,842	6.63
Camden and Islington	20,304	6.19
Cornwall and Isles of Scilly	18,979	5.96
County Durham	27,041	6.52
Coventry	13,604	6.71
Croydon	12,935	6.32
Doncaster	12,762	6.42
Dorset	25,462	5.66
Dudley	11,779	6.41
Ealing, Hammersmith and Hounslow	29,650	6.15

Table 2

Health authority	2000–01 real terms increase (£000)	2000–01 real terms increase (%)
East and North Hertfordshire	18,637	6.38
East Kent	22,381	5.61
East Lancashire	23,082	6.56
East London and the City	37,438	7.54
East Riding	23,184	6.40
East Surrey	13,901	5.62
East Sussex, Brighton and Hove	28,768	5.65
Enfield and Haringey	19,597	5.96
Gateshead and South Tyneside	16,899	6.64
Gloucestershire	19,158	5.70
Herefordshire	6,103	6.12
Hillingdon	9,626	6.18
Isle of Wight	5,140	5.53
Kensington, Chelsea and Westminster	23,536	8.12
Kingston and Richmond	12,304	5.61
Lambeth, Southwark and Lewisham	36,630	6.25
Leeds	29,568	6.23
Leicestershire	36,005	6.91
Lincolnshire	24,815	6.29
Liverpool	20,883	5.98
Manchester	20,974	6.00
Merton, Sutton and Wandsworth	24,058	5.72
Morecambe Bay	11,882	5.75
Newcastle and North Tyneside	21,156	6.31
Norfolk	28,300	6.10
North and East Devon	17,416	5.74
North and Mid Hampshire	17,684	6.00
North Cheshire	11,645	5.80
North Cumbria	12,692	6.35
North Derbyshire	14,250	6.22
North Essex	31,322	6.13
North Nottinghamshire	15,751	6.61
North Staffordshire	20,568	6.71
North West Lancashire	20,150	6.23
North Yorkshire	26,912	6.17
Northamptonshire	19,308	5.87
Northumberland	12,738	6.46
Nottingham	27,179	6.95
Oxfordshire	21,935	6.58
Portsmouth and South East Hampshire	20,571	6.14
Redbridge and Waltham Forest	16,721	5.59
Rotherham	10,731	6.74
Salford and Trafford	18,683	5.97
Sandwell	13,536	6.59
Sefton	11,531	5.91
Sheffield	22,270	6.06
Shropshire	15,815	6.36
Solihull	7,352	5.97
Somerset	17,857	6.09
South and West Devon	22,566	5.83
South Cheshire	23,848	5.83
South Derbyshire	22,122	6.42
South Essex	27,706	6.53
South Humber	11,290	5.65
South Lancashire	11,187	5.89
South Staffordshire	19,713	6.08
Southampton and South West Hampshire	20,252	6.13
St. Helen's and Knowsley	15,588	6.60
Stockport	10,617	5.96
Suffolk	23,417	5.85
Sunderland	13,359	6.66
Tees	25,175	6.80
Wakefield	13,584	6.37
Walsall	11,081	6.75
Warwickshire	16,668	5.63
West Hertfordshire	19,024	5.96
West Kent	33,292	5.84

Table 2

Health authority	2000–01 real terms increase (£000)	2000–01 real terms increase (%)
West Pennine	19,355	6.48
West Surrey	20,941	5.65
West Sussex	29,293	6.21
Wigan and Bolton	25,414	6.78
Wiltshire	20,033	5.71
Wirral	13,524	5.91
Wolverhampton	10,972	6.83
Worcestershire	17,930	5.90
England	1,957,357	6.23

Bought-in Services

Mrs. Spelman: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how much was paid to the private healthcare industry for procedures carried out on behalf of NHS patients, broken down by health authority for each of the last three years. [117701]

Ms Stuart: The amount of National Health Service funds spent on the provision of services for NHS patients treated outside the NHS (in the independent healthcare sector comprising of for profit hospitals, not for profit hospitals, voluntary hospitals/hospices and independent clinics), for the last three years are as follows:

1998–99: £1.25 billion (4.8 per cent. of total NHS expenditure)

1997–98: £1.08 billion (4.6 per cent. of total NHS expenditure)

1996–97: £0.87 billion (3.8 per cent. of total NHS expenditure)

A breakdown showing the expenditure by individual health authority, including the proportion spent on services outside the NHS has been placed in the Library.

Mr. John M. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement on the extent of the use of private sector health facilities by the NHS in the last year. [117404]

Ms Stuart: During 1998–99, £1.25 billion (4.8 per cent. of total National Health Service spending on the provision of health services) was spent on services commissioned outside the NHS (from the private healthcare industry and charitable and voluntary organisations). Over half was spent on residential care, mainly for learning disability and mental illness patients.

Animal Feedingstuffs

Mr. Paice: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when he expects products that have been approved by the EU Standing Committee for Animal Feedingstuffs in December to be published in the Official Journal; and when he expects products so approved to appear on the consolidated list of approved products circulated to member states. [117962]

Ms Stuart: Provisions for new feed additives agreed at the 6–7 December meeting of the Standing Committee on Animal Feedingstuffs have been published in the Official Journal of the European Union on 29 March as Commission Regulation (EC) 654/2000. This Regulation has now come into force in all European Union member states.

On 28 February the European Commission produced a comprehensive list of additives authorised for use in animal feed. The list has no legal basis in itself and is expected to be next revised in early 2001.

Mr. Paice: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what products from British companies were considered by the December meeting of the EU Standing Committee for Animal Feedingstuffs under the Microbe and Enzyme Directive 93/113. [117961]

Ms Stuart: New authorisations for feed additives, such as those agreed at the December meeting of the European Union Standing Committee for Animal Feedingstuffs, are granted under Council Directive 70/524/EEC for generic, rather than product-specific approval. I am advised by the Food Standards Agency that one new authorisation agreed in December was on a dossier provided by a British company. The corresponding provision contained in Commission Regulation 654/2000 is for the use of a micro-organism product for use in feed for calves containing certain strains of Lactobacillus casei and Enterococcus faecium.

Mobile Phones

Joan Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what assessment he has made of the findings of the Consumers Association regarding radiation risks of hands-free mobile phones and shields; and if he will make a statement. [118010]

Yvette Cooper: The findings of the Consumers Association will be assessed by the independent expert group on mobile phones. The group, chaired by Sir William Stewart FRS FRSE, is considering the possible health effects from the use of mobile telephones, base stations and transmitters and is conducting a comprehensive assessment of existing research.

The group is currently completing its review of the evidence and is preparing its report prior to publication in May.

Fruit and Vegetables

Joan Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, pursuant to the answer of 13 March 2000, Official Report, columns 61–62W, on fruit and vegetables, if he will list the methods used by his Department, in consultation with the Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food, to inform the public of the advice on peeling and washing fruit and vegetables in relation to pesticide residues; what was the expenditure on such advice in the last financial year; and if the Food Standards Agency will continue to give such advice. [118016]

Ms Stuart: Advice to wash and prepare fruit and vegetables before eating has been included in press releases and the Ministry of Agriculture/Department of Health Food Safety Information Bulletin when results from surveys of pesticide residues in food are published. It is also used by Government Departments in responding to inquiries about pesticide residues in food. Reporting the results of surveys is routine work and no separate information on related expenditure is available. The Food Standards Agency is committed to informing and advising consumers about food safety issues relating to pesticides. It will continue to promote advice to wash fruit and vegetables.

Long-term Care

Mr. Wray: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if the Government will implement the Royal Commission report recommendations on Long Term Care for the Elderly. [118229]

Mr. Hutton: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply I gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Coventry, South (Mr. Cunningham) on 20 March 2000, Official Report, columns 430–31W.

Workplace Parking

Mr. Gray: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, pursuant to the answer of 30 March 2000, Official Report, column 217W, on workplace parking, how many workplace car parking spaces are available at hospitals, clinics and other establishments controlled by (a) him and (b) health authorities and trusts. [117955]

Ms Stuart: It is not known how many workplace parking spaces are available at National Health Service healthcare premises.

As healthcare providers, the NHS is well aware of the need to reduce transport congestion and hence pollution, and are taking steps to address their transport requirements. Transport strategies will include reducing car parking spaces by encouraging the use of alternative modes of transport whenever possible or practicable.

INTERNATIONAL DEVELOPMENT

Kosovo

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what advice she has given to aid workers deployed in Kosovo with the support of her Department in respect of hazards posed by the residual radioactivity remaining from the use of depleted uranium shells by allied forces in Kosovo. [117070]

Clare Short: I refer my hon. Friend to the answer given by the Minister for the Armed Forces on 27 January 2000, Official Report, column 225W, where he stated that the health risks from depleted uranium (DU) are assessed as generally low. However, civilian mine clearance organisations have regular contact with many types of unexploded ordnance. KFOR provided the United Nations Mines Action and Co-Ordination Centre (UNMACC) with an information pack about DU which UNMACC distributed to each mine clearance organisation.

The Government have not felt it necessary to provide further advice to general aid workers on this issue. My Department's view is that mines and unexploded ordnance pose a greater risk to assistance workers; all personnel are given mines awareness training before deployment to Kosovo.

Mr. Donald Anderson: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development how the contribution funded from her Department for the reconstruction of Kosovo is planned to change; and what implications this has for the overall level of funding. [117162]

Clare Short: Commitments from our emergency and humanitarian programme ended on 31 March. However, we shall continue to support the international organisations working in Kosovo and to provide funds for demining. Our bilateral programme in Kosovo will focus on the provision of technical assistance to support capacity and institution building for long-term development, in liaison with UNMIK and departments of the Joint Interim Administration. We plan to provide such support in the areas of economic restructuring, public administration, social policy, media and elections, health and development of civil society. We shall commit £15 million to these activities over the next three years. We also provide approximately 18 per cent. of the cost of the EU programme, amounting to approximately £39 million of the EU's 360 million euro programme in 2000.

Mr. Donald Anderson: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what has been the contribution funded from her Department for the reconstruction of Kosovo since June 1999; and if she will list the levels of the contribution of (a) other EU member states, (b) Canada and (c) the USA. [117161]

Clare Short: We have committed £119 million in humanitarian and reconstruction assistance in 1999 and 2000. A further £15 million is available this year for support to the international relief agencies and for demining. Over the same period, other member states have provided a total of 1.1 euros in bilateral assistance. Canada has reported total commitments of 104 million Canadian dollars in reconstruction and humanitarian assistance for the period April 1999 to March 2001. The United States has committed a total of $264.1 million for 1999 and 2000. The equivalent figure for European Community assistance is 802.7 million euros, of which the UK share (currently 18 per cent.) is approximately £84.58 million.

Regulatory Reform

Mr. Cotter: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development which Minister in her Department has responsibility for regulatory reform; and if she will make a statement. [117426]

Clare Short: The Under-Secretary has responsibility for regulatory reform within my Department.

PRESIDENT OF THE COUNCIL

Secondary Legislation

Mr. Duncan Smith: To ask the President of the Council how many statutory instruments and other items of secondary legislation were passed in each of the years 1980, 1985, 1990 and 1999. [117953]

Mrs. Beckett: The information requested is as follows:

Session	Number of instruments subject to parliamentary procedure laid before Parliament (including special procedure orders)	Number of affirmative instruments approved by the House of Commons
1980–81	[1]940	149
1985–86	[1]1,024	155
1990–91	1,279	181
1998–99	1,445	178

[1] Indicate the number of instruments considered by the Joint Committee and the Select Committee on Statutory Instruments rather than those laid.

TREASURY

Research and Development

17. Mr. Pike: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what representations he has received on his measures to help companies with research and development. [116619]

Mr. Timms: Our new research and development tax credit, introduced on 1 April, has been warmly welcomed by the CBI and others since its announcement a year ago. We received representations emphasising the importance of incentives for research and development in small and medium-sized firms, and so that is where the credit is being targeted. We have also decided, responding to representations, that the credit should be available as well to companies not yet trading. It will benefit 4,500 companies and support almost £1 billion for research and development per year.

Child Tax Credit

18. Mr. Heald: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many families that qualified for the married couples allowance in 1999–2000 will not qualify for the child tax credit in 2001–02. [116620]

24. Mr. Nicholas Winterton: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many married couples that qualified for the married couples allowance in 1999–2000 will not qualify for the child tax credit in 2001–02. [116626]

Dawn Primarolo: As a result of measures we have taken in this and previous Budgets, pensioner households will from next April be on average £400 a year better off, and families with children will be on average £850 a year better off; and the number of couples liable for higher rate tax as a result of the withdrawal of married couples allowance will be zero.

VAT (Historic Buildings)

19. Mr. Tyler: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what representations he has received calling for a reduction in the VAT rate for repairs and conservation work to churches and other historic buildings. [116621]

Dawn Primarolo: Since February, the Prime Minister and the Chancellor of the Exchequer have received about 5,000 letters, mainly from parishioners in Cornwall, asking for a reduced rate for repairs to churches. A number of letters have also been received asking for a reduced rate for historic buildings.

Unemployment

20. Mr. Goggins: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what action he is taking to improve employment incentives for the long-term unemployed. [116622]

Mr. Andrew Smith: My right hon. Friend the Chancellor of the Exchequer announced in his recent Budget a variety of measures to help encourage the long-term unemployed back into work. These include:

Expanding and strengthening the New Deal 25 plus to bring into line the rights and responsibilities for those over 25 that have so effectively helped those under 25 in the New Deal for Young People;

Employment Zones and Action Teams to begin work with long-term unemployed people in the most deprived areas of the country to help them to address the barriers which are preventing them from finding work;

The Working Families Tax Credit which will deliver a minimum income guarantee of £214 for a family with someone in full-time work from April 2001; and

The new Job Grant, alongside Housing Benefit and Income Support Mortgage Interest run ons, which are easing the transition into work from benefits.

Alongside these the Government have also announced that from October the adult rate of the National Minimum Wage will be increased to £3.70 per hour, continuing to ensure greater decency and fairness in the workplace and making work pay.

G8 (Debt Cancellation)

21. Ms Drown: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what discussions he is having about further multilateral debt cancellation with G8 colleagues in advance of the G8 Finance Ministers' meeting. [116623]

Miss Melanie Johnson: Discussions about the multilateral Heavily Indebted Poor Country Initiative take place among G7 members on an on-going basis. The Chancellor of the Exchequer will discuss progress and implementation of the enhanced HIPC initiative at the G7 meeting of Finance Ministers and Central Bank Governors on 15 April, and in the run-up to the Okinawa Summit.

Tax Allowances

22. Mr. Ruffley: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement on the impact on the average family of his withdrawal of tax allowances to date. [116624]

Dawn Primarolo: Taking all measures together, personal tax and benefit changes in this and previous Budgets will mean that by April 2001:

On average families with children will be £850 a year better off;

A single-earner family on average earnings and with two children will be £370 a year better off;

A single-earner family on half average earnings and with two children will be £2,600 a year better off; and

The tax burden on a single-earner family on average earnings and with two children will be the lowest since 1972.

25. Mr. Lidington: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many taxpayers will be liable for higher rate tax as a result of the withdrawal of tax allowances in his Budgets to date. [116627]

Dawn Primarolo: None.

Tax Burden

23. Mr. Gale: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will estimate the change in the total (a) indirect and (b) direct tax burden on families of his Budget measures to date. [116625]

34. Mr. St. Aubyn: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will estimate the change in the total (a) indirect and (b) direct tax burden on families of his Budget measures to date. [116639]

Dawn Primarolo: As a result of personal tax and benefit measures introduced by this Government, the tax burden on a typical single earner couple on average earnings with two children will fall from 21.5 in 1996–97 to 18.8 by 2001, the lowest level since 1972.

Estimating the impact of indirect taxes is imprecise as spending patterns vary widely between households with the same composition and income, with the consumption of the majority of goods and services far from universal. For example, only around one third of adults are smokers, just over half the adult population are in households paying vehicle excise duty and around 10 per cent. of households pay air passenger duty. This can be contrasted with direct taxes and benefits where at specified earnings and for particular household types there is a known benefit entitlement or tax liability.

National Changeover Plan

26. Sir Nicholas Lyell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what recent representations he has received in connection with the National Changeover Plan; and if he will make a statement. [116629]

Miss Melanie Johnson: The Government work with a wide range of organisations from the private, public and voluntary sectors on changeover planning. A list of the private and voluntary sector organisations involved in Working Groups is given on page 57 of the second Outline National Changeover Plan, published on 9 March.

Fuel Duty

27. Mrs. Ann Winterton: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what estimate he has made of fuel duty revenues in 2000–01. [116630]

Mr. Timms: The projection for fuel duty revenues in 2000–01 is published in Table C9, Page 203 of the Financial Statement and Budget Report 2000.

Regional Development Agencies

29. Mr. Fraser: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is the cost in the current financial year to the Exchequer of Regional Development Agencies. [116632]

Mr. Andrew Smith: The Regional Development Agencies have taken on responsibility for a number of Government programmes, including the Single Regeneration Budget and programmes formerly run by English Partnerships and the Rural Development Commission. Including all their programme expenditure, the eight RDAs in England have been allocated an overall budget of £958,373,000 for 2000–01. This includes planned recyclable receipts of £145,094,000.

Manufacturing (Knitted Goods)

30. Mr. Tredinnick: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement on the timetable for the publication of the Office for National Statistics 1999 figures for manufacturers' sales of hosiery and other knitted goods to the public. [116633]

Miss Melanie Johnson: The information requested falls within the responsibility of the Director of the Office for National Statistics. I have asked him to reply.

Letter from Tim Holt to Mr. David Tredinnick, dated 6 April 2000:

As Director of the Office for National Statistics (ONS), I have been asked to reply to your recent question on the publication of 1999 manufacturers' sales figures of Hosiery and other knitted goods.

Detailed product data from the 1999 quarterly PRODucts of the European COMmunity (PRODCOM) survey of manufacturers' sales of knitted and crocheted articles will be published in a Business Monitor at the end of May 2000.

Provisional results of the 1999 Annual Business Inquiry (ABI) are expected to be published in December 2000. This News Release will contain values for turnover, purchases and gross value added for the textile and textile products industry. More detailed industry results, including those for the manufacture of knitted and crocheted articles, will be published in the summer of 2001.

Employment (South-East)

31. Mr. Prosser: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement on the impact of his Department's policies on the levels of employment and unemployment in the South-East in the last two years. [116636]

Miss Melanie Johnson: In the South-East, as in the rest of the UK, we have created a sound and credible platform of economic stability that will help us attain our objective of high and stable levels of growth and employment. In the last two years, employment in the South-East has risen by 125,000, and ILO unemployment has fallen by 14,000, both broadly in line with UK trends.

Climate Change Levy

32. Mr. Stunell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what representations he has received from the horticulture sector on the impact of the climate change levy. [116637]

Mr. Timms: My right hon. Friend the Chancellor of the Exchequer received a number of representations from the horticultural sector on the climate change levy. In the light of these and other representations, a package of measures aimed at improving energy efficiency in the horticultural sector, while protecting its competitiveness, was announced in the Budget. These measures include:

A special package of energy efficiency measures for horticulture, to be allocated from the £50 million energy efficiency fund.

Extending the list of investments qualifying for enhanced capital allowances to include thermal screens used in glasshouses

A temporary 50 per cent. discount on the levy for a period of up to five years while energy efficiency measures take effect.

Ms Southworth: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what representations he has received on the amendment to the climate change levy which he announced in the Budget. [116631]

Mr. Timms: The Chancellor of the Exchequer announced a number of further refinements to the design of the climate change levy in the recent Budget. These will increase the levy's environmental effectiveness while protecting the competitiveness of UK firms.

Many of the representations received since the Budget have welcomed these refinements.

Public Services

33. Mr. Love: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what plans he has to increase investment in public services (a) in the UK and (b) in London in the year 2000–01. [116638]

Mr. Andrew Smith: All areas of the UK, including London, will benefit from the Budget announcement of an additional £2 billion for health, £1 billion for education, £285 million for the fight against crime and £280 million for transport. All but £100 million of this investment is for 2000–01.

Secretaries of State are announcing the detail of these allocations. The Deputy Prime Minister has already announced £65 million of investment in London Underground to enhance escalator work and frequency and reliability of Northern, Central, District and Jubilee lines and £30 million for the Docklands Light Railway extension to City Airport.

Working Families Tax Credit (North-west Region)

Mr. Ian Stewart: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many inquiries have been received by the Working Families Tax Credit response line from the north west region. [116618]

Dawn Primarolo: The response line handled 780,000 inquiries up to 30 November 1999. A breakdown by TV region is available for 670,000 of them; of these, 89,000 came from the Granada TV region.

Migration (London)

Mr. Norman: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what estimates his Department has made of the level of migration from the London area to the South East region in each of the last 10 years. [117787]

Miss Melanie Johnson: The information requested falls within the responsibility of the Director of the Office for National Statistics. I have asked him to reply.

Letter from John Pullinger to Mr. Archie Norman, dated 6 April 2000:

The Director of the Office for National Statistics (ONS) has been asked to reply to your recent question about the estimated migration from London to the South East region for each of the last ten years. I am replying in the Director's absence.

The attached table presents the information that you require. The latest year for which estimates are available is 1998. Data are presented for moves from London to the South East Planning Region. The estimates of internal migration within the United Kingdom are based on the movement of NHS doctor's patients between the former Family Health Service Authorities. They should not be regarded as a perfect measure of migration as there is variation in the delay between a person moving and registering with a new doctor.

Migration from London to the South East Planning Region

Thousand

Year	Number of migrants
1989	109.8
1990	93.7
1991	108.3
1992	111.0
1993	114.3
1994	119.4
1995	118.5
1996	125.8
1997	132.0
1998	129.7

Source:
NHSCR

Population Growth (South-east)

Mr. Norman: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what forecast his Department has made of the population growth in the South East Planning Region in the next five years. [117788]

Miss Melanie Johnson: The information requested falls within the responsibility of the Director of the Office for National Statistics. I have asked him to reply.

Letter from John Pullinger to Mr. Archie Norman, dated 6 April 2000:

The Director of the Office for National Statistics (ONS) has been asked to reply to your recent question on the projected population growth in the South East Planning Region. I am replying in the Director's absence.

These projections show population levels would result if assumptions about future migration, fertility and mortality were exactly realised. The assumptions underlying the calculation of the projections are based on recent demographic trends and do not reflect the impact of future local policies.

The latest subnational population projections are published in Subnational population projections: 1996 based, Series PP3, no.10, which is available in the House of Commons Library.

The table below present the information that you require.

Population projections 1999–2006

Thousand

Projection year	Projected population
1999	11,242.0
2000	11,302.6
2001	11,362.4
2002	11,420.9
2003	11,477.6
2004	11,532.6
2005	11,586.0
2006	11,637.9

Private Finance Initiative

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will estimate the (a) total liabilities outstanding under PFI contracts and (b) net public debt over the period 2000–01 to 2004–05 if PFI liabilities were accounted for as debt; and if he will make a statement. [117368]

Mr. Andrew Smith [holding answer 4 April 2000]: I refer the hon. Member to table C15 of the Financial Statement and Budget Report, laid before this House on 21 March 2000.

Table C15 shows a forecast of the estimated payments for services flowing from new private investment in signed and imminent PFI contacts over the 28 years from 1998–99 to 2025/26; and contains details of payments to PFI contractors from 2000–01 to 2004–05. These payments score as current expenditure and thus are already factored into future spending projections and of spending and borrowing (as set out in table C4).

Hydrocarbon Fuel Levies

Sir Sydney Chapman: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what was the total revenue to the Exchequer of all duties levied on hydrocarbon fuels in the 1996–97 financial year; and what was the figure for 1999–2000. [117671]

Mr. Timms: The revenue from excise duty on hydrocarbon oils for 1996–97 is published in Table K2 of HM Customs and Excise Annual Report. The table does not include VAT receipts. The figure for 1999–2000 is not available yet.

Petrol Taxes

Sir Sydney Chapman: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what was the total tax levied on a litre of standard unleaded petrol on 1 May 1997; and what it is currently. [117672]

Mr. Timms: The total tax (excise duty plus VAT) levied on a litre of standard unleaded petrol on 1 May 1997 was about 46p and that levied at the end of March 2000 was about 61p. Most of the duty increase is accounted for by the operation of the fuel duty escalator, which is no longer being applied.

Charitable Shares Donations

Mr. Tom Clarke: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement on his plans to change the tax treatment of shares donated to charity. [116604]

Miss Melanie Johnson: In his Budget speech the Chancellor of the Exchequer announced a radical package of measures aimed at Getting Britain Giving. The package included a new tax relief on gifts to a charity of certain qualifying investments.

Qualifying investments include:

shares or securities which are listed or dealt in on a recognised stock exchange;

units in an authorised unit trust;

shares in an open ended investment company; and an interest in an offshore fund.

The donor will be able to claim a corporation tax or income tax deduction for the full market value of the gift, plus incidental expenses of transfer, less any consideration or benefit received. The new relief will be in addition to the existing relief for gifts of shares and other assets to a charity when calculating capital gains.

The new relief comes into effect for gifts made on or after 1 April 2000 for companies and 6 April 2000 for individuals.

Tax Benefit Reference Manual

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer when he will place the next edition of the Tax Benefit Reference Manual in the Library. [117827]

Dawn Primarolo: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave to the hon. Member for Havant (Mr. Willetts) on 29 March 2000, Official Report, column 150W.

Contributions Agency

Mr. Willetts: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what checks are applied to confirm the identities of new employees in the Contributions Agency. [117721]

Dawn Primarolo: A series of checks were undertaken within the Contributions Agency.

Mobile Phone Licences

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if the estimates of Government receipts in his Budget statement include revenue raised from the sale of mobile phone licences; and if he will make a statement. [117369]

Dr. Cable: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement on the Government's plans for utilising the receipts of the auction of mobile telephone licences. [118102]

Dawn Primarolo [holding answer 4 April 2000]: An estimate of the effect of proceeds from the auction of mobile phone licences is included in the Budget public finances forecast, and taken account of in the Budget tax and spending plans. The auction proceeds will have only a limited impact on the main fiscal aggregates such as the current surplus and public sector net borrowing because, in line with National Accounts conventions, the revenues raised are accrued evenly across the full length of the licence period.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Asylum Seekers

Mr. Burgon: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department in what circumstances immigration officers will be requesting passenger information from carriers under paragraph 27B of Schedule 2 to the Immigration Act 1971, as inserted by section 18 of the Immigration and Asylum Act 1999; and if he will make a statement. [118485]

Mrs. Roche: The types of information which may be requested are set out in the Schedule to the Immigration (Passenger Information) Order 2000. The information specified in Part 1 of the Schedule to the Order is contained in the machine-readable zone of passports and visas. Provision of this information is essential if we are to be able to grant or refuse entry to passengers in advance of their arrival in the United Kingdom. We have set out what we propose by way of such flexibilities in the draft Immigration (Leave to Enter and Remain) Order laid before Parliament on 30 March 2000. We would expect to come to a mutual agreement with carriers as to the routes for which we might start to require Part I information and as to when the requirement would start. Beyond this, we would seek Part I information only on specific occasions for intelligence purposes. We would endeavour to keep such requests to a minimum. The information specified in Part II of the Schedule will be requested only where the carrier is in possession of it. However, we think it might take some time for carriers to put systems in place to allow them to provide us with any significant volume of information, so we will implement the new power gradually over the coming months. We will continue in this spirit of co-operation, but ultimately we reserve the right to insist upon the provision of passenger information under the new powers wherever we have good reason in the context of the immigration control.

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department in each of the last two years for which figures are available, what was the total amount of funding for asylum seekers' support (a) in total, (b) per head of population, (c) per income tax payer, (d) per household and (e) as a percentage of total Government expenditure; what are the estimated figures for 2000–01; and if he will make a statement. [117982]

Mrs. Roche: In 1998–99, support for asylum seekers was the responsibility of the Department of Health and the Department of Social Security. The Department of Health states that the total payments for supporting asylum seekers were £190 million in 1998–99. The Department of Social Security estimate that, subject to audit, the total benefits paid to asylum seekers will be £285 million.

Since 1 April 1999, the Home Office has been responsible for a single budget for reimbursing local authorities for the costs of supporting adult asylum seekers and families. Reimbursement of local authority costs relating to unaccompanied children remained the responsibility of the Department of Health. Total payments to local authorities and reimbursement for the Department of Social Security costs for 1999–2000 are estimated to be £597 million subject to audit.

The information available is that the estimated population is 58.8 million, the estimated number of tax payers is 27.9 million and the estimated number of households is 24.2 million. The total managed public expenditure in 1998–99 is £331 billion, and in 1999–2000 it is £345.2 billion. On that basis, the breakdown of costs for 1998–99 and 1999–2000 requested is given in the table.

Asylum support costs	1998–99	1999–2000
Total	£475 million	£597 million
Per head of population	£8.08	£10.14
Per income taxpayer	£17.02	£21.38
Per household	£19.63	£24.64
As a percentage of total managed public expenditure	0.14	0.17

The Comprehensive Spending Review in 1998 set a provisional Home Office allocation for 2000–01 of £300 million for the cost of asylum support for adults and families and £3 million for the Department of Health. The total managed public expenditure in 2000–01 is £370.9 billion.

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list the means by which those seeking asylum in the United Kingdom, who are currently outside the United Kingdom, can lawfully enter the United Kingdom to claim asylum without causing any others to commit any offence in assisting with their arrival in the United Kingdom; and if he will make a statement. [117995]

Mrs. Roche: A person who claims asylum on arrival in the United Kingdom and is subsequently granted leave to enter will, by definition, have entered the United Kingdom lawfully. A person who obtains leave to enter without disclosing an intention to claim asylum may, depending on the circumstances, be guilty of an offence of seeking leave to enter by deception. In either case, the actions of the asylum seeker do not of themselves cause any other person to commit an offence, but depending on the circumstances an offence may arise if the asylum seeker's entry was facilitated by another person.

Mr. Lidington: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many appeals were lodged by him against the granting of judicial review of asylum decisions in each of the last five years for which figures are available; how many appeals were upheld; what was the total cost to public funds in each year of such appeals; on how many occasions Queen's Counsel were employed by (a) him and (b) the respondent; and if he will make a statement. [115970]

Mrs. Roche [holding answer 23 March 2000]: The information requested is available only for the past three years and is shown in the table:

	1997	1998	1999
Number of cases	2	0	3
Appeal upheld	1	—	[1] —
Appeal dismissed	1	—	1
Queen's Counsel employed by both parties	Yes	—	Yes
Costs	£66,884	—	£63,104

[1] One appeal was withdrawn
[2] One appeal not yet heard

Dr. Harris: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what estimates he has made of the cost of (a) vouchers, (b) accommodation for asylum seekers and (c) other administrative costs relating to them in each of the last three years. [117051]

Mrs. Roche: None.

The information available is that in 1997–98 and 1998–99 grant payments for the support of asylum seekers were the responsibility of the Department of Health. In 1997–98, the grant payment by the Department of Health was £139,202 million. Costs such as administrative costs are amalgamated into the actual payments made to Local Authorities.

The Department of Health is currently reconciling, in the light of the audit certificate now being provided, the amount claimed by authorities and the payments made to authorities in 1998–99. It is, therefore, not possible at the moment to give the information for 1998–99.

Since 1 April 1999, the Home Office has been responsible for reimbursing local authorities for the costs of supporting asylum seekers. Costs for the period 1 April-5 December 1999 are on the basis of a Special Grant. Local authorities may claim the costs incurred, within cost limits, in supporting asylum seekers. Local Authorities claimed a total of £183,177,970 for the period 1 April-5 December 1999. These claims will be subject to audit by District Auditors and may be subject to variation in the light of the findings of auditors. Full information for the period 6 December 1999–31 March 2000 is not yet available.

How these resources are allocated is a matter for each individual Local Authority.

Dr. Harris: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what estimates he has made of the cost of police arrests and deportations of asylum seekers and illegal immigrants in each of the last three years. [117049]

Mrs. Roche: The costs of police arrests of asylum seekers and the costs of deportations of asylum seekers and illegal immigrants are not available.

Mr. Gardiner: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many asylum applications were received in 1999; and what proportion of those applicants came from Sri Lanka. [117643]

Mrs. Roche: The total number of asylum applications to the United Kingdom in 1999 was 71,160. 5,130 (7 per cent.) were from nationals of Sri Lanka.

Mr. Sanders: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what mechanism is used for reimbursing local authorities for costs incurred in respect of the dispersal of asylum seekers. [117297]

Mrs. Roche: Since 1 April 1999, the Home Office has been responsible for reimbursing local authorities for the costs of supporting asylum seekers. Payment is by way of grant. Under the interim regulations, local authorities may claim the costs incurred in supporting asylum seekers. These claims will be paid within cost limits and are subject to audit by District Auditors. For those asylum seekers who will remain the responsibility of local authorities, these arrangements will continue.

For those asylum seekers now being dealt with under the new arrangements phased in from 3 April 2000, local authorities that sign contracts with the National Asylum Support Service will submit an invoice for payment.

Bingo Charges

Mr. Burgon: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what plans he has to simplify the current system of bingo charges. [118484]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: I have laid an Order (The Gaming Clubs (Hours and Charges) Regulations 2000), in the House to simplify the current system of bingo charging.

The current system of charges is set out in section 3 of the Gaming Clubs (Hours and Charges) Regulations 1984. It prescribes the amount bingo operators may charge by way of admission and participation fees for games during any period of play of up to two hours (currently £10 exclusive of Value Added Tax). It also sets out how the charges should be displayed. The arrangements for the charging notices are, however, complex and in practice most players will not know in advance of deciding to play what charge is being made for an individual game.

The Home Office, therefore, proposes to make regulations that will establish a statutorily based notification system that will specify the form in which participation and any other charges must be notified so that they are transparent and easily understood. Notices will be displayed at the main point where payment for the charges is to be made.

The regulations will also allow a charge to be made for admission to a bingo club not exceeding £10 per day which will be displayed at, or near, the principal entrance to the premises and a charge to be made for participation in a game of bingo not exceeding £5 for each chance in playing the game. These are upper limits; in practice operators will set far lower charges than this.

The measure will extend to Scotland.

A copy of the Regulatory Impact Assessment has been placed in the Library.

Detective Keith Pedder

Mr. Mackinlay: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department, pursuant to his answer of 3 April 2000, Official Report, column 380W, on Keith Pedder (117016), for what reason he was unable to list the powers under which documents were seized. [117964]

Mr. Charles Clarke: The Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis tells me that the circumstances surrounding the arrest and detention of Keith Pedder are currently under investigation. For this reason he does not consider it would be appropriate for him to comment on any aspect of the case.

Offshore Banking

Miss Widdecombe: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what assessment he has made of the implications for (a) the Channel Islands and (b) the Isle of Man of the report of the Primarolo Group to the ECOFIN Council on 29 November 1999; what plans he has to implement the report's recommendations; and if he will make a statement. [117987]

Mr. Straw: The Report of the Code of Conduct Group on Business Taxation lists 66 tax measures in European Union member states and their dependent or associated territories which are considered to have harmful features. Fifteen of these are in the Channel Islands and the Isle of Man. The United Kingdom is committed to encouraging its dependencies to tackle unfair tax competition. The Code of Conduct on which the Group's work has been based is a voluntary non-legally binding agreement. We would expect to discuss the Report with the Channel Islands and the Isle of Man.

Crime Fighting Fund

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department, (1) pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Southwark, North and Bermondsey, of 15 March 2000, Official Report, columns 177–79W, following the Budget announcement on the Crime Fighting Fund, what estimate he has made of the (a) planned recruitment to, (b) expected wastage from and (c) change in police numbers in police forces, including transfers, including information provided in the bids for the Crime Fighting Fund and the allocation of Crime Fighting Fund money, (i) in total and (ii) in each of the next three years; what estimate he has made of the expected change in police numbers in each force and in total between March 1997 and the end of each of the first three years of the Crime Fighting Fund; and if he will make a statement; [117985]

(2) how much additional money has been allocated to the Crime Fighting Fund for (a) police recruitment and (b) each other area, in each of the three years following the Budget; what is the new total allocation to the Crime Fighting Fund for (i) police recruitment and (ii) each other area in total for each year and in total for those three years; and if he will make a statement. [117981]

Mr. Straw: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave my hon. Friend the Member for Coventry, South (Mr. Cunningham) on 27 March 2000, Official Report, columns 1–3W.

Assuming a minimum of 2,000 additional recruits in 2000–01 under the accelerated Crime Fighting Fund, and 3,000 the following year, the overall projections for total police numbers, given in my reply to the hon. Member on 15 March 2000, Official Report, columns 177–79W, would rise to 125,500 by March 2001 and 127,000 by March 2002.

My officials are consulting police service and police authority representatives on the revised allocation of new recruits under the Crime Fighting Fund to be made to forces following my announcement on 27 March that the programme would be brought forward to deliver all 5,000 recruits within two years. I will make a further announcement shortly.

Miss Widdecombe: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Coventry, South (Mr. Cunningham) of 27 March 2000, Official Report, columns 1–3W, if the £21 million announced for the video recording of interviews will permit the video recording of all police interviews; if video recording facilities will be available in all interview rooms which currently have audio recording facilities; how the video recordings will be stored, and for how long; and if he will make a statement. [117997]

Mr. Straw: The £21 million allocation for the purchase of equipment by police forces for the video recording of interviews with suspects will be drawn on subject to the evaluation of an initial pilot scheme following the enactment of the necessary parliamentary legislation. Detailed questions of coverage and storage will be dealt with in the light of experience of the pilots.

Miss Widdecombe: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Coventry South (Mr. Cunningham), of 27 March 2000, Official Report, column 1–3W, (1) how many additional recruits will be provided in 2000–01 as a result of the £11 million for doubling the number to be recruited during the coming financial year; what base he used to determine that recruitment would be doubled as a result of the additional £11 million; and if he will make a statement; [117992]

(2) what proportion of the £91 million will be used to assist police forces in England and Wales with recruitment and retention; what funding will be provided to each force, and for what purposes; and if he will make a statement; [117984]

(3) how many police recruits are to be recruited (a) in total and (b) using funding from the Crime Fighting Fund in each police force area in England and Wales in (i) 2000–01, (ii) 2001–02 and (iii) 2002–03, respectively; [117991]

(4) what proportion of the £91 million for modernising policing will be used to finance the national police recruiting campaign; when the campaign will begin; and if he will make a statement. [117990]

Mr. Straw: As a result of the budget announcement, we now anticipate recruiting at least 2,000 officers under the Crime Fighting Fund in 2000–01, with the remainder of the 5,000 in the following year. These numbers will be in addition to the projected recruitment notified to us by Chief Constables in their bids for a share of the Crime Fighting Fund.

Following my announcement on 27 March, my officials are consulting police service and police authority representatives on how the 5,000 additional recruits will be delivered over two years rather than three. I will make a further announcement shortly about this and other funding to assist forces who are having difficulties with recruitment and retention, including the development of a national recruitment campaign.

Miss Widdecombe: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Coventry, South (Mr. Cunningham) of 27 March 2000, Official Report, columns 1–3W, if he will make a statement on the timetable for the establishment of the Government Technical Assistance Centre. [117998]

Mr. Straw: I announced in my earlier reply to my hon. Friend the Member for Coventry, South (Mr. Cunningham) that we will be using £25 million of capital modernisation funding to establish a Government Technical Assistance Centre (GTAC) to provide law enforcement agencies with the capability to derive intelligence and evidence from new information and communications technologies. This funding will be made available over this financial year and next and will pay for the design and development of a system for processing a wide range of computer-to-computer communications and stored data formats. GTAC will begin to operate in 2001–02 and reach full operating capability during 2002–03.

Miss Widdecombe: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department, pursuant to his answer to hon. Friend the Member for Coventry, South (Mr. Cunningham) of 27 March 2000, Official Report, columns 1–3W, how the £40 million for modernising the prison estate is to be spent; and if he will make a statement. [117999]

Mr. Straw: The additional £40 million for prisons which I announced in my reply to my hon. Friend the Member for Coventry, South (Mr. Cunningham) on 27 March 2000, Official Report, columns 1–3W, will enable a start to be made on a programme to increase prison capacity to meet the projected increase in the prison population. The programme will include further building within existing prisons, and making better use of existing capacity by re-roleing prisons where the change in composition of the prison population makes this necessary. I will write to the right hon. Member with the details as soon as they are finalised.

Miss Widdecombe: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department, pursuant to Note 5 attached to Home Office Press Release 070/2000, what discussions he has had with the bodies mentioned in the Note about the way in which the £91 million for modernising policing is to be allocated; and if he will make a statement. [117988]

Mr. Straw: My reply to my hon. Friend the Member for Coventry, South (Mr. Cunningham) on 27 March 2000, Official Report, columns 1–3W, indicated the areas where the additional £91 million funds may be allocated. I will be consulting the Association of Chief Police Officers, the Association of Police Authorities, the Local Government Association and the police staff associations before announcing final decisions.

Miss Widdecombe: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Coventry, South (Mr. Cunningham) of 27 March 2000, columns 1–3W, what plans he has to allocate the full amount of £34 million announced by the Prime Minister in September 1999 for the expansion of the DNA database. [117996]

Mr. Straw: The funding of £34 million is being allocated to police forces across England and Wales to enable them to double the number of submissions to the National DNA Database over the next two years. By April 2002, the database should hold approximately 1.5 million DNA offender profiles.

This funding represents a first step towards the Government's aim that the database should hold the DNA profiles of the whole of the active criminal population, estimated to be in the region of three million.

Public Safety Radio Communications Project

Miss Widdecombe: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what proportion of funding for the Public Safety Radio Communications Project will be provided by a deduction from the police grant provision over each year of the project; what assessment he has made of the impact on police forces' budgets and on frontline service provision; what representations he has received on the matter; and if he will make a statement. [117989]

Mr. Charles Clarke: The cost of the core service for the Public Safety Radio Communications Project (PSRCP) represents approximately 80 per cent. of the total service charges for police forces in England and Wales. This is to be funded centrally by means of deduction from total police grant provision. The forecast core service charges for the period 2000–01 are estimated at £4.4 million. This estimate is currently under review in the light of current plans for the roll-out to forces. Other estimates were provided in the reply I gave to the hon. Member for Aylesbury (Mr. Lidington) on 13 March 2000, Official Report, columns 87–92W.

The impact on police forces' budgets and on frontline service provision will depend on the outcome of Spending Review 2000.

My right hon. Friend the Home Secretary and I have frequent discussions with police authority representatives and chief constables about police resources, including funding for PSRCP. In addition, my officials and I have had discussions with the Association of Chief Police Officers and the Association of Police Authorities about the funding of PSRCP.

Animal Experiments

Mr. Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many animal (scientific procedures) inspectors appointed under section 18 of the Animals (Scientific Procedures) Act 1986 are in post; how many of them are former licence-holders under the Act; how many establishments under sections 6 and 7 they cover; and how many regulated procedures were carried out for the last year for which figures are available. [117802]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: Animals (Scientific Procedures) Inspectors are full-time civil servants. No inspector holds a licence. None has involvement in animal research. None has conflicts of interest linking him to places or persons regulated under the Act or his programmes of work. Twenty-one Inspectors are currently in post, 17 of whom have been previously licensed under the 1986 Act.

Annexe B of the Statistics of Scientific Procedures on Living Animals Great Britain 1998 confirms that of the 286 certificates of designation active on 31 December 1998, 284 were registered as user establishments, 170 as breeding establishments and 75 as supplying establishments. There is a disparity in these figures because a single establishment may hold its certificate of designation in more than one category. The Animals (Scientific Procedures) Inspectorate monitors all of these establishments.

Table 1 of the Statistics of Scientific Procedures on Living Animals Great Britain 1998 shows that 2,659,662 scientific procedures were carried out on animals during that year.

Figures for 1999 are currently being compiled and will be published in July.

Immigration Control

Dr. Harris: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what estimates he has made of the cost of (a) staff, (b) premises and (c) detection equipment for the Immigration Service for immigration control in each of the last three years. [117047]

Mrs. Roche: The information on staff and premises costs for the operation of the on-entry immigration control is given in the table.

£ million

Financial Year	Staff	Premises
1997–98	76.11	7.58
1998–99	77.28	8.43
1999–2000	[1]80.25	[1]8.71

[1] Forecast

Over the last three years, the Immigration Service has spent over £300,000 on forgery detection equipment, over £110,000 on body detection dogs and associated equipment and, in the last year, £6,000 on CO_2 detectors.

Dr. Harris: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what estimates he has made of the cost of immigration detention centres and prison places for immigration detainees in each of the last three years. [117050]

Mrs. Roche: The cost of operating the dedicated immigration detention centres is estimated to be in the region of £11.4 million in the current financial year. Previous years' figures are not available as the costs had not been recorded separately. The Prison Service Statistics (England and Wales) show the number of detainees held in prisons under the 1971 Immigration Act as at 30 June of each year. Figures for the last three years are: 30 June 1997—476; 30 June 1998—477; and 30 June 1999—490. The average total cost per prison place in each of these years was: 1997–98: £23,940; 1998–99: £25,096; 1999–2000: £25,567.

Deportation

Mr. Townend: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many deportation orders were made in 1999; and how many have been carried out. [117218]

Mrs. Roche: Provisional data indicate that 610 deportation orders were signed and 510 were enforced during 1999. It should be noted that a deportation order enforced in one year may have been signed in an earlier year. Deportation orders may not be immediately enforceable for legal reasons or because of other barriers to removal such as inadequate documentation. There are also cases where a deportation order has been signed but it is later decided that deportation is no longer appropriate.

Sex Offenders

Miss Widdecombe: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many prisoners subject to the provisions of the Sex Offenders Act 1997 have been released on the Home Detention Curfew Scheme to date; what offences they committed; what was the sentence (a) received and (b) served in each case; and if he will make a statement. [117718]

Mr. Straw [holding answer 5 April 2000]: As of 3 April, one prisoner subject to the provisions of the Sex Offenders Act 1997 has been released on the Home Detention Curfew scheme. The original offence of which the prisoner was convicted was unlawful sexual intercourse with a female aged 15. The prisoner received a sentence of six months and served a sentence of 35 days.

Sex offenders subject to the 1997 Act may be released on Home Detention Curfew only in exceptional circumstances and in all such cases only with the consent of the Director General. In this case, the requirement was not followed by the prison establishment concerned and the eligibility date was calculated wrongly; the prisoner was released after 35 days instead of the 46 days that should have been served.

I have asked the Director General for a report. He has advised me that, wholly contrary to the procedure put in place by Ministers, his approval was not sought in this case. Furthermore, the period of the sentence to be served was reduced by 11 days as a result of an administrative error. The administrative procedures have now been strengthened and the Director General has written to all establishments reminding them of the particular considerations that apply to sex offenders subject to the provisions of the 1997 Act and the requirement at all times to seek his consent.

While this failure to follow the correct procedures is highly regrettable, I am satisfied that in this case there was no risk to the public, nor has the offender concerned been arrested, charged or convicted of any further offence.

Korean Airlines Crash

Mr. Bob Russell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will compensate the Essex Police Authority for the costs incurred following the recent crash of a Korean Airlines plane at Stansted Airport. [117939]

Mr. Charles Clarke: No special payment will be made to Essex Police Authority for any costs incurred following the recent crash of a Korean Airlines plane at Stansted Airport. Essex Police Authority has sought assistance to meet the estimated cost of £343,000 for this exercise. Police forces are, however, funded and are expected to make provision for unexpected events of this size.

I have, however, provided a special grant of £2 million to the force towards the cost of policing the more recent hijack at Stansted.

Europol

Sir Richard Body: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department in what circumstances officers in Europol will be authorised to carry arms when engaged in operations in the United Kingdom. [117577]

Mr. Charles Clarke: Europol officers have no such operational powers and do not carry arms in the course of their duties.

Sir Richard Body: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what operations have been carried out jointly by Europol and police in the United Kingdom. [117584]

Mr. Charles Clarke: There have been no such operations carried out in the United Kingdom.

Sir Richard Body: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) where the training college for Europol will be established; [117579]

(2) if he will make a statement about the purpose of the training college for Europol. [117578]

Mr. Charles Clarke: There are no plans to establish a training college for Europol. The Tampere European Council in October 1999 agreed that a European Police College should be established for the training of senior law enforcement officials, starting as a network of existing national training institutes. Proposed objectives for the network include strengthening knowledge of existing European Union instruments in the area of law enforcement, improving co-operation and co-ordination between European Union law enforcement training institutes with regard to European and cross-border co-operation and providing training for law enforcement agencies of Accession states. The United Kingdom has offered to host the secretariat for the network. Its location is yet to be decided.

Sir Richard Body: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if Europol officers operating in the United Kingdom will wear a uniform. [117583]

Mr. Charles Clarke: Europol staff have no such operational powers and do not wear uniforms in the course of their duties.

Sir Richard Body: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department under what circumstances a United Kingdom police force can refuse to carry out an operation proposed to be carried out under provisions of the Treaty of Amsterdam. [117575]

Mr. Charles Clarke: The United Kingdom's application to participate in the police co-operation provisions of the Schengen Implementing Convention, which has been incorporated by the Treaty of Amsterdam into the Treaty on European Union, is still under negotiation. Measures under Article 30 of the Treaty on European Union on joint teams involving Europol are still under discussion.

Police forces in the United Kingdom attach importance to assisting, and being assisted by, counterpart authorities abroad in criminal investigations and proceedings. The decision on whether to seek or provide such assistance is for individual chief officers of police. In general, assistance will be provided, in accordance with domestic law and procedures, but it may be withheld in exceptional circumstances, for example, on grounds of national security. The police co-operation provisions in the Schengen Implementing Convention and the Treaty on European Union will not affect this current practice.

Vivisection

Dr. Ladyman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what assessment he has made of the operation of the confidentiality agreement between his Department and the British Union for the Abolition of Vivisection in relation to offences committed under the Protection of Animals Act 1911. [117710]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: The main provisions of the confidentiality agreement stipulated that the material it covered should not be disclosed to anyone other than Home Office Ministers and officials without the prior written approval of the British Union for the Abolition of Vivisection (BUAV). I am advised that these provisions would have been unenforceable in law should any attempt have been made to use the agreement to suppress evidence of criminal offences or prevent its disclosure to the police authorities or Crown Prosecution Service.

The confidentiality agreement was entered into in July 1999 in order to obtain information to enable a full Home Office investigation of the allegations made by the BUAV against HarlandUK. I do not consider that it set a helpful precedent. The most careful consideration would be necessary before an agreement of this nature could be entered into again should similar circumstances arise in the future.

Although in evidence in the consultation on Freedom of Information, they made representations that the Home Office should have a presumption against enforcing such an agreement, the BUAV requested such an agreement in connection with this case.

Drug Laws

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what assessment he has made of the report of the Police Foundation Inquiry into the Misuse of Drugs Act 1971; and if he will make a statement. [117606]

Mr. Charles Clarke: The Government welcome the report by the Police Foundation. The report contains 81 recommendations which the Government will be considering over the coming months. However, the Government are not currently persuaded that the classification or overall legal framework for LSD, ecstasy or cannabis should be changed.

Somali Refugees

Ms Oona King: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) how many Somali nationals previously granted exceptional leave to remain and who have submitted upgrade applications for full refugee status have received a decision on their case in each month since the House of Lords judgment on the Adan case; [117794]

(2) how many asylum applications received from Somali nationals in each of the years 1998 and 1999 were upgrade applications from an applicant previously granted exceptional leave to remain. [117795]

Mrs. Roche: Information on the number of decisions made or the number of applications lodged by Somali nationals requesting an upgrading to full refugee status is not held centrally. Such information would be obtained only by examining individual case papers at disproportionate cost.

Written Answers to Questions

Friday 7 April 2000

DEFENCE

Lightweight Mobile Artillery

Mr. Key: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what progress has been made on the Lightweight Mobile Artillery Weapon System; and if he will make a statement. [117495]

Dr. Moonie [holding answer 3 April 2000]: This is a matter for the Chief Executive of the Defence Procurement Agency. I have asked the Chief Executive to write to hon. Member.

Letter from Robert Walmsley to Mr. Robert Key, dated 7 April 2000:

I am replying to your question to the Secretary of State for Defence which asked about the Lightweight Mobile Artillery Weapon System. This matter falls within my area of responsibility as Chief Executive of the Defence Procurement Agency.

The Lightweight Mobile Artillery Weapon System (LIMAWS) programme will form a lightweight artillery capability for our rapid reaction forces, and is planned to consist of lightweight towed 155mm howitzer, lightweight rocket launcher, and a lightweight weapon locating radar. Both the weapon locating radar and the rocket launcher programmes are at the early concept phase of the smart procurement cycle. However, as part of our initial consideration of the rocket launcher programme, we invited tenders in January for a study to examine the technical risks to the development of a lightweight launch platform. The results of this study will inform the more detailed assessment phase in due course. We are currently examining options for the weapon locating radar, and intend to commence a formal assessment phase shortly. The gun programme is more advanced, and the United Kingdom continues to work closely with the United States on its lightweight 155mm howitzer development programme, the contract for which is with BAE Systems RO Defence. The information generated from this will assist in deciding the way forward on this element of the programme.

Cyprus Memorial

Mr. Bob Russell: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will establish a memorial to the British servicemen killed during the Cyprus emergency in the 1950s; and if he will make a statement. [117937]

Dr. Moonie: It has been a long-standing policy of successive Governments that the cost of memorials is not usually met from public funds, but from private donations or public subscription. For this reason, my Department has no plans to erect a memorial to those British Service personnel who were killed during the Cyprus Emergency of the 1950s. However, should it be the case that the necessary funds were to be raised from public subscription or private donation, my Department would be happy to provide representation at any dedication ceremony which might take place.

EDUCATION AND EMPLOYMENT

Capitation Allowance

Mr. Sawford: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what the average capitation allowance is for (a) secondary school pupils and (b) pupils at city technology colleges. [117647]

Ms Estelle Morris: The average cost of a place in a maintained secondary school in England based on 1999–2000 Local Schools Budget figures was £2,917. This figure includes delegated funding and associated LEA costs. The estimated average amount per pupil delegated to schools, through the Individual Schools Budget and devolved Standards Fund, was £2,403.

The city of technology college (CTC) average recurrent grant unit cost for the 1999–2000 academic year is £3,502. This figure includes funding for some services which LEAs provide to maintained schools but CTCs have to provide for themselves.

As CTC funding does not have the same coverage as the LEA Local Schools Budget and is on an academic year basis these unit cost figures are not directly comparable.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Holding Centres

Mrs. McKenna: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland when he will publish Sir Louis Blom-Cooper's Seventh Annual report as Independent Commissioner for the Holding Centres. [118647]

Mr. Mandelson: I have today arranged for copies of Sir Louis Blom-Cooper's Annual Report for 1999 to be placed in the Library.

Sir Louis has welcomed the closure of Castlereagh holding centre on 31 December 1999; and the Government and the Chief Constable remain committed to the closure of the Strand Road and Gough Barracks holding centres as soon as practicable.

I welcome Sir Louis' Report and will respond as soon as I have had the opportunity to consider its content carefully.

ENVIRONMENT, TRANSPORT AND THE REGIONS

Bilateral Air Service Agreements

Miss McIntosh: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what representations he has made to the US Government about (a) the fly American policy, (b) cabotage and (c) ownership of US carriers, in the context of bilateral air service agreements. [117617]

Mr. Mullin: The Government have consistently pressed for cabotage rights and the amendment of US policies on ownership and control of US carriers and 'Fly America' in bilateral talks with the US Government.

Special Advisers

Mr. Loughton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions (1) what was the total cost of special advisers employed in his Department in each of the years (a) 1997, (b) 1998 and (c) 1999; and what is his forecast for the current year; [114400]

(2) how many special advisers have been employed in his Department in each of the years (a) 1997, (b) 1998 and (c) 1999; and what is his forecast for the current year. [114399]

Mr. Hill [holding answer 13 March 2000]: In the financial year 1996–97, the cost of special advisers in the former Departments of Environment and Transport was £161,563.

The costs for the Department of the Environment, Transport and the Regions have been:

	£
1997–98	131,668
1998–99	143,957
1999–2000	163,231

There were three full-time and two part-time special advisers in the former Departments of Environment and Transport and there are three full-time and two part-time special advisers in the Department of the Environment, Transport and the Regions. One of these full-time advisers is specifically allocated to the Secretary of State in his role as Deputy Prime Minister. There are no plans to increase the number of special advisers.

Light Pollution

Mrs. Curtis-Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will make it his policy to replace the lighting on major roads with less light pollutant systems. [117089]

Mr. Hill: The Secretary of State has set the Highways Agency the objective of > minimising the impact of the trunk road network on the natural and built environment.

With respect to light pollution, all new lighting is of the less polluting type. The HA is replacing existing lighting with less polluting systems when renewal is due or in association with other improvement works. Replacement in advance of this could not be justified in terms of cost or disruption to motorists.

Housing Improvement Projects

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what housing improvement projects are being financed by his Department in the Greater London area; and if he will list the boroughs where these projects are. [117407]

Mr. Mullin: The Government are financing a wide range of housing improvement projects through programmes in London boroughs.

London's Housing Investment Programme allocation for 2000–01 consists of a £613 million package of capital resources. All London boroughs have received an allocation which they may use for repairs to their own stock or for increasing supply. The Department does not hold details of individual projects.

In 2000–01 we are providing almost £48 million for schemes under the Estate Action programme in Brent, Ealing, Greenwich, Hackney, Hammersmith and Fulham, Haringey, Islington, Lambeth, Lewisham, Tower Hamlets, Waltham Forest and Westminster. Housing Action Trust schemes in Brent, Tower Hamlets and Waltham Forest are also being financed by the Government this year in the sum of £40 million. These are listed in the tables.

Estate Action schemes 1999–2005

Borough	Estate Action schemes	Year scheme ends
Brent	St. Raphaels	2000–01
Ealing	Golf Links	2000–01
Greenwich	Glyndon	2000–01
Hackney	Holly St.	2001–02
	New Kingshold	2001–02
	Nightingale	2002–03
Hammersmith	White City	2000–01
Haringey	Broadwater Farm III	2001–02
	Northumberland Park	2000–01
Islington	Harvist	2000–01
Lambeth	Angell Town	2003–04
	Myatts Field North	2000–01
	Penwith Manor II	2001–02
	Stockwell Park II	2004–05
	Thorlands	2001–02
Lewisham	Evelyn	2001–02
	Milton Court	2001–02
	Pepys	2000–01
Tower Hamlets	Barkentine Estate III	2000–01
	Wellington	2001–02
Waltham Forest	Priory Court	2000–01
Westminster	Lisson Green	2002–03
	Mozart	2000–01

Housing Action Trusts

Borough	Housing Action Trust scheme	Year scheme ends
Brent	Stonebridge HAT	2005–06
Tower Hamlets	Tower Hamlets HAT	2004–05
Waltham Forest	Waltham Forest HAT	2002–03

A number of Single Regeneration Budget schemes in London also have housing improvement projects. Details of these are not readily available by borough.

Urban White Paper

Mr. Loughton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions when he plans to release his Urban White Paper. [117767]

Ms Beverley Hughes: When it is ready.

Trunk Road Network

Mr. Sanders: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will list (1) the 10 largest conurbations in England not linked to the trunk road network; [117596]

(2) the criteria used for determining which roads are (a) trunked and (b) de-trunked; and if he will make a statement. [117597]

Mr. Hill: The trunk road network constituting a national system of routes for through traffic was defined under the Trunk Roads Acts of 1936 and 1946. The network has altered over the years as new roads, including motorways, have superseded parts of the network which have in consequence been de-trunked. The Secretary of State is required to keep the trunk road network under review. In developing our integrated transport policies set out in the White Paper "A New Deal For Transport" (Cm 3950) we concluded that there were a number of existing trunk roads which mainly served local and regional traffic, that would be more appropriately managed by the local highway authorities to ensure integrated local transport and land use planning. We identified a core network of nationally important trunk roads in England taking the following factors into account:

linking main centres of population and economic activity;

accessing major ports, airports and rail intermodal terminals;

joining peripheral regions to the centre;

providing key cross-border links to Scotland and Wales;

classification as part of the UK Trans-European Road Network.

It is considered that this core network serves to provide for the needs of through traffic to all significant urban areas in England. It is proposed to de-trunk the non-core routes.

The 10 largest urban areas by population that are presently more than three miles distant from a trunk road are listed in the table.

Urban area	Population (1991 census)
1. Bournemouth	358,321
2. Southend	266,749
3. Aldershot	231,194
4. Mansfield	154,966
5. Thanet	116,745
6. Basildon	102,913
7. Torbay	102,576
8. Hartlepool	87,310
9. Weston-Super-Mare	71,451
10. Harrogate	66,178

Single Vehicle Approval Limits

Mr. John Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if the single vehicle approval limits have been lifted; and what the schedule is for their total abolition. [117558]

Mr. Hill: The limits for the "Very Low Volume" part of the scheme have not been lifted other than for equivalent single approvals granted by other member states of the European Economic Area. I am currently reviewing the schedule for their complete removal.

Invasive Species

Ms Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will meet Plantlife to discuss its proposals to prevent the spread of invasive species; and if he will make a statement. [117587]

Mr. Mullin: My Department welcomes the work carried out by Plantlife identifying the problems caused by non-native invasive plant species. Next year, my Department plans to carry out a review of the effectiveness of current policies concerning non-native species which threaten native biodiversity. A meeting between myself and representatives from Plantlife could be arranged at the start of this review process.

Combined Heat and Power

Ms Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions (1) what progress he has made towards meeting the target for combined heat and power by the end of 2000; [117765]

(2) what is the current capacity for a combined heat and power plant in the United Kingdom; and whether the 5 GWe target for combined heat and power by the end of this year is likely to be met. [117764]

Mr. Meacher: Good progress is being made in the growth of Combined Heat and Power (CHP) in the UK.

There are currently over 4GW of CHP installed in the UK on nearly 1400 sites, providing around 6 per cent. of electricity generated in the UK. The interim 5GW target for CHP is likely to be achieved next year. Meanwhile, the Government have announced their new target of at least 10GW by 2010 and are actively working toward this.

A draft CHP strategy, including a range of measures to achieve the new target will be issued shortly. These measures will include exemption of good quality CHP from the Climate Change Levy and a new CHP Club.

Pedestrian Protection Directive

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what progress his Department has made with the publication of the European Directive on Pedestrian Protection; and what assessment he has made of the effect of its provisions on reducing road casualties. [117777]

Mr. Hill: We are currently awaiting the opportunity to examine the details of a European Commission proposal for a pedestrian protection Directive. We had expected the Commission to put forward their draft proposal in mid-March, and we were disappointed when this proved not to be possible. We are now urging the Commission to bring forward their proposal at the earliest opportunity.

New Houses (South-east)

Mr. Norman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions how many houses his Department expects to be built in the South-East and East Anglia regions in (a) 2000, (b) 2001 and (c) 2002. [117786]

Mr. Raynsford: Planned levels of housing provision for these years is already set out in development plans. Proposed changes to the draft Regional Planning Guidance for the South-East and East Anglia were published on 27 March and are now subject to consultation. Final RPG is likely to be in place in autumn 2000, following which local authorities will consider the need to review their development plans. Whether, and when, they need to make changes to their plans will depend on the rate of provision in existing plans, the period the plan covers and the revised rate of provision for their area for the future. For the South-East, the latter will be determined by the distribution of the total, on which I am consulting local authorities through SERPLAN.

Mr. Norman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what discussions he had with South-east county council leaders before deciding that housing targets for the South-east would be set on a five yearly basis. [117793]

Mr. Raynsford: The intention to introduce a "plan, monitor and manage" approach to planning for housing at the regional level was announced in "Planning for the Communities of the Future" (Cmnd 3885) in February 1998. It has since been the subject of wide discussion and was reflected in the consultation draft of Planning Policy Guidance note 11 (Regional Planning) published in February 1999. Under this approach, the annual average rate of housing provision set out in the draft changes to the Regional Planning Guidance for the South-east is on-going but subject to monitoring and review at least every five years, and sooner if necessary. I am currently consulting local authorities, through SERPLAN, on the proposed changes to the draft RPG.

Mr. Norman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what forecast his Department has made of the effect on car traffic in the south-east in terms of mileage of journeys undertaken of the building of 215,000 additional dwellings by 2005. [117790]

Mr. Raynsford: It is not possible to provide a reliable forecast. The housing needs in the south-east region outside of London derive in very large part from the needs of the people who are already in the region and those migrating into it from London. Any forecast of the additional car journeys generated by an additional 215,000 dwellings to cater for these needs would have to take account of the additional journeys generated by separate rather than shared households. Our policy is for development to be located as far as possible within existing urban areas, with more mixed use development and using sites which have ready and convenient access on foot, by cycle and public transport, thereby reducing the dependency on car travel. The net effect could be a reduction in additional car journeys compared with what would otherwise be the case.

Mr. Norman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what forecast his Department has made of the effect on total water consumption in the south-east of the building of an additional 215,000 dwellings in the south-east by 2005. [117791]

Mr. Raynsford: The housing needs in the south-east region outside of London derive in very large part from the needs of the people who are already in the region and those migrating into it from London. Any forecast of water consumption associated with an additional 215,000 dwellings would need to take account of the additional consumption generated by households living separately rather than sharing accommodation while allowing for improved water conservation measures in new development. In view of the uncertainties involved my Department has made no forecast. However, draft Regional Planning Guidance for the south-east (RPG9) emphasises that local planning authorities need to take water resources into account when identifying land for development or redevelopment, working closely with the Environment Agency and the water industry.

Mr. Norman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what his Department estimates to be the available brownfield land for development in the south-east; and what proportion of this he expects to be available for housing development. [117785]

Mr. Raynsford: Provisional estimates from the National Land Use Database were published in the DETR/Government Statistical Service Press Notice of 20 May 1999 and reflect returns made for 1998. They show the total amount of previously developed land reported by local authorities and how much of this was allocated in plans, had planning permission for housing or was judged suitable for housing by local authorities. The estimates do not show how much of the land was available for development. They are a snapshot and take no account of the future supply of previously developed land or changes to planning policy introduced by the new Planning Policy Guidance note 3 on Housing. The relevant estimates for the SERPLAN (including London) region are 15,730 hectares of previously developed land of which 9,320 hectares (59 per cent.) were judged suitable for housing.

Planning

Mr. Norman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions, pursuant to his oral statement of 7 March 2000, Official Report, column 865, on planning, what number and density of dwellings was used in the calculations underlying his conclusion that his new housing targets would use no more land than the SERPLAN proposals. [117796]

Mr. Raynsford: Evidence submitted by SERPLAN at the public examination into the draft Regional Planning Guidance for the South-East indicated that for sites in progress or not started the average density of housing development was 26 dwellings per hectare (dph). Planning Policy Guidance note 3 (Housing) makes clear that local authorities should avoid planning for developments of less than 30 dph and encourage developments between 30 and 50 dph. It is also our policy to maximise the contribution that conversions can make to the dwelling stock. If local authorities in the South-East follow the guidance in PPG3, it will be possible for them to achieve the average annual rate of provision of 43,000 dwellings per annum without taking more land than implied by the SERPLAN total of 36,000 dwellings per annum.

GM Crops

Joan Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what arrangements are in place for inspection of farm-scale trials and other trials of genetically-modified crops to ensure that licence conditions are observed. [118302]

Mr. Meacher: We carry out each year a thorough programme of inspections of trials to ensure that crops are being grown in accordance with the consents granted by the Secretary of State. Inspectors are fully trained and qualified in a relevant discipline. If the inspections show that a consent is not being followed, appropriate enforcement action is taken. This can include a formal instruction to remedy, revocation of consent, a prohibition notice or in some cases prosecution. Inspectors pay particular attention to new or inexperienced consent holders and those who have had previous non-compliance problems.

Joan Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions how often each site in which GM crops are grown will be inspected. [118301]

Mr. Meacher: We have recently reviewed the inspection and enforcement regime and under new arrangements we will be able to provide a larger team of inspectors than has been available in the past. This will ensure we can improve further our capacity to ensure compliance with release consents and underpin confidence in the regulatory process.

Our inspectors will visit every GMO release site during the growing season and supply inspection reports for each in a format ready for the Department's website. In addition, inspectors will conduct up to 20 audits of consent holders to ensure that they have effective lines of supervision of staff running the GM field trials and that GM material is disposed of safely in line with the consent.

Joan Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions how he will ensure that the specified separation distances for GM crops are observed (a) during the current planting season and (b) in future years. [118303]

Mr. Meacher: Inspectors are asked to examine separation distances when visiting trial sites and take any necessary remedial action if this aspect of the release consent has not been properly followed. Our comprehensive inspection programme for this year and future years will ensure that requirements for separation distances are rigorously enforced.

HEALTH

Specialist Treatments

Mr. Lilley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what timetable has been agreed for the establishment of service agreements for financing referrals for specialist neurology treatments; [116464]

(2) what funding mechanisms are available to cover referrals of patients for specialist treatments not as yet included in service agreements. [116463]

Mr. Denham: Specialist treatments offered by National Health Service trusts to populations within their host regions are in most cases already incorporated in service agreements. Regional directors have been asked to ensure that service agreements are reached during 2000–01 for any pan regional specialist treatments, including some specialist neurology treatments, that are not yet covered by a service agreement.

Any specialist treatment not yet included in a service agreement will be covered by the out of area treatments mechanism.

NHS Staff

Laura Moffatt: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what form the recent survey for assessing the views of people working in the NHS took. [116948]

Mr. Denham: All National Health Service employers are required under the NHS human resources framework, "Working Together", to have conducted an annual staff attitude survey by April 2000.

The NHS Executive has issued guidance for NHS employers on good practice in designing, administering and acting upon the results of employee opinion surveys. It describes core areas which all NHS employers should cover in their surveys, but it does not prescribe a particular survey which all NHS employers must use.

There are no current plans to develop a core employee opinion survey for use by all NHS employers.

Prostate Cancer

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what extra resources have been allocated to support the meeting of the new target of referring patients suspected of suffering from prostate cancer to a specialist within two weeks. [116984]

Yvette Cooper: By the end of 2000, patients in England with a suspected cancer will be able to see a specialist within two weeks of their general practitioner deciding they need to be seen urgently and requesting an appointment. To support implementation of this standard we have made £10 million available for each of the financial years 1999–2000 and 2000–01. We are also making an additional £30 million available for each of the next two financial years to further support the two week standard and the modernisation of cancer services.

Mr. Hammond: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will increase Government funding for research into prostate cancer to the level of Government funding for research into breast cancer. [99893]

Yvette Cooper: Government funding for research is provided through a number of routes.

The Medical Research Council (MRC) is the main agency through which the Government support research on the causes and treatment of disease. The MRC receives most of its income via grant-in-aid from the office of my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry. The Department of Health funds research to support policy development in health and social care, and to support effective practice in the NHS. The Department also provides NHS support funding for research commissioned by the MRC and charities that takes place in the NHS.

The latest figures available for annual Government expenditure (Department of Health/NHS, MRC and other Government Departments—principally devolved Health Departments) on breast cancer and prostate cancer are £9.33 million and £1.55 million respectively. These figures underestimate the total Government research and development expenditure in these areas, as detailed estimates of NHS support funding are not collected routinely.

Since 1997, the Government have committed an extra £800,000 to new research projects on prostate cancer, through the Medical Research Council and through the Department of Health. The Department has actively sought to support such work in prostate cancer, and has not rejected any high quality proposals for work in this area.

The Department recently announced £1 million additional new funding for this financial year for urgent research studies into prostate cancer as a mark of its concern over this disease.

Following the seminar last year at No. 10, a "Cancer Research Funders' Forum" has been established to help improve the co-ordination of cancer research in the United Kingdom. It is being run by the MRC and includes DH representatives and the major cancer research charities. At the Department's request, the Forum considered the issue of prostate cancer at its first meeting on 10 January. They agreed to set up an expert group on prostate cancer, which will identify gaps in current research and suggest ways of filling them. The expert group met for the first time on 25 February, and expects to report within months.

We have appointed a National Cancer Director, Professor Mike Richards, who will spearhead our concerted drive on cancer. He will work in partnership with doctors, nurses, general practitioners, other health professionals and the voluntary sector to improve prevention and modernise cancer services to help ensure equitable access to high quality cancer care. This will include a close interest in the development and progression of research.

Meningitis Vaccination

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what considerations were taken into account by his Department in deciding the scope and quantity of the information prepared and distributed by local health trusts to parents prior to the administration to children of vaccinations to combat meningitis. [116978]

Yvette Cooper: Before public information materials on the new meningococcal Group C conjugate vaccine and the immunisation programme were produced, the Heath Education Authority (HEA) conducted research into what the public and health professionals felt the materials should contain. Focus groups, representing a cross section of the community, were convened and asked what information they wanted and who should get the information. They stated that the leaflet should give information on what meningitis is, what the new vaccine protects against, safety and efficacy, contraindications, the programme and its implementation and the need to continue to be aware and alert to the signs and symptoms of meningitis. The leaflet for parents covers these issues and received strong support from the focus groups; plans for its widespread distribution were also endorsed.

About 11 million copies of the parents' leaflet have been printed and it has been mailed to general practitioner surgeries, pharmacies and schools for every parent to receive and also made widely available through high street pharmacies and post offices. The leaflet is available in Welsh and 11 other languages and has been awarded the Plain English Crystal Mark. In addition, a factsheet on the immunisation programme and the vaccine, which can be freely copied and made available, was sent to 30,000 health professionals and both the HEA's and Department of Health's websites include detailed information.

Smoking

Ms Church: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how much was spent in each of the last five years by the NHS on smoking cessation treatments. [117032]

Yvette Cooper: The information requested is not held centrally. Our White Paper "Smoking Kills" announced on 10 December 1998 the first ever national NHS smoking cessation programme, with advice and support for adults wanting to quit including one week's supply of nicotine replacement therapy free of charge for smokers entitled to free prescriptions. £10 million was allocated to health action zones for 1999–2000 to set up smoking cessation services and £16 million has been allocated for these services to be extended across England in 2000–01.

Waiting Lists (Essex)

Mr. Jenkin: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what was the inpatient hospital waiting list target for Essex Rivers Healthcare Trust for the year ending 31 March. [116841]

Mr. Denham [holding answer 30 March 2000]: Trust targets are agreed locally with the relevant health authorities.

GP Budgets (Durham)

Mr. Steinberg: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what estimate he has made of the amount of under-spend in the budgets of general practitioners in Durham in each of the last five years. [117212]

Mr. Denham: County Durham Health Authority has reported underspends as set out in the table.

£000

	1996–97	1997–98	1998–99	1999–2000
General Medical Services Cash Limited	535.7	1,206.2	1,274.7	1,451.5
General Medical Services Non Cash Limited
Prescribing	0.5	79.6	946.6	500.0
Others	(259.0)	57.9	(344.4)	(620.0)
Total	(258.5)	1,375	602.2	[1]—
General Practitioner
Fundholding:
Hospital and Community	(363.0)	(371.0)	(894.0)	3.0
Health Services:
Prescribing	561.0	896.0	2,658.0	[1]—
Management Allowance	319.0	254.0	(75.0)	[1]—
Total	517.0	779.0	1,689.0	3.0

[1] Indicates there are no figures available

Notes:

1. 1999–2000 is a forecast outturn position.
2. Figures in brackets show overspend.
3. Prescribing figures for 1999–2000 are now cash limited.
4. County Durham Health Authority was established in 1996–97. Previously the area was covered by three separate authorities for which data are not available.

Source:

County Durham Health Authority

Abortion

Fiona Mactaggart: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) if he will publish the audit of NHS and independent sector abortion services carried out by the Royal College of Obstetricians and Gynaecologists; and if he will make a statement on the measures he proposes to take on the results of the audit; [117682]

(2) when the next audit of abortion services will be carried out. [117683]

Yvette Cooper: The Royal College of Obstetricians and Gynaecologists will publish the final audit report later this year. This audit provides valuable data that will assist those carrying out audits locally and will also inform discussions on the sexual health strategy about future audit of services.

Works of Art

Mr. Brake: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how much has been spent on (a) the upkeep and (b) the purchase of works of art in his Department for each financial year since 1992. [117473]

Mr. Denham: The hon. Member is referred to the answer provided by the Department of Culture, Media and Sport on behalf of this and other Departments.

In addition to works of art on loan from the Government Art Collection, the Department spent £1,000 on purchasing framed prints as part of two refurbishment projects in 1995. No other funds have been spent on the purchase or upkeep of works of art since 1992.

Student Nurses

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many student nurses were employed in the Merton, Sutton and Wandsworth Health Authority area on 1 March. [117408]

Mr. Denham: Student nurses undertaking training programmes are recruited by the local university, which holds an education contract with a consortium of National Health Service employers. This consortium includes health authorities and trusts. The joint faculty of health of Kingston University and St. George's Medical School holds an education contract with the South-West London and Epsom Education Consortium. Included within the membership of the consortium is the Merton, Sutton and Wandsworth Health Authority.

Student nurses are not employed by either NHS trusts or health authorities. They receive a bursary and are students like any other student attending a programme of study at a university. The number of nursing students undertaking a three year programme of study at the faculty currently numbers 1,073.

Salmonella

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many cases of salmonella were reported during 1999 in the United Kingdom. [117409]

Yvette Cooper: Information on the numbers of cases of Salmonellosis within England and Wales is collected by the Public Health Laboratory Service (PHLS). Information on data for Northern Ireland and Scotland should normally be sought from their respective administrations.

However, in a recent paper to the Advisory Committee on the Microbiological Safety of Food from the Communicable Disease Surveillance Centre of the PHLS, the figures for the United Kingdom as a whole were given.

In 1999 in the United Kingdom, there were 19,798 (provisional data) cases of Salmonellosis.

Health Budgets (Buckinghamshire)

Mr. Lidington: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what were the estimated (a) deficits and (b) surpluses of Buckinghamshire Health Authority and NHS Trusts in Buckinghamshire at 31 March. [116557]

Mr. Denham [holding answer 4 April 2000]: The table shows the financial position of Buckinghamshire Health Authority and National Health Service trusts in Buckinghamshire at September 1999. This is the latest available published data.

£000

Organisation	1999–2000 Forecast
Buckinghamshire Health Authority	1,171
Aylesbury Vale Community Healthcare NHS Trust	0
Milton Keynes Community NHS Trust	−50
Milton Keynes General NHS Trust	−123
South Buckinghamshire NHS Trust	0
Stoke Mandeville Hospital NHS Trust	−309
Two Shires Ambulance NHS Trust	15
Total	704

Note:
An extra allocation to the NHS of £134 million was announced by Secretary of State for Health on 21 December 1999; £90 million of this has been allocated to health authorities in 1999–2000—to help meet the additional costs of generic drugs. Buckinghamshire Health Authority's share of this additional money was £974,000. The remaining £44 million will be allocated, as required, to meet the cost of clinical negligence claims.

The Q2 (September) 1999–2000 Forecasts were prepared before the additional allocations were announced. As a consequence the forecasts do not take account of the additional allocations.

Neonatal Hearing Screening

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when he plans to make an announcement on the implementation of universal neonatal hearing screening following the recommendations by the National Screening Committee. [117609]

Yvette Cooper [holding answer 6 April 2000]: I expect to receive the United Kingdom National Screening Committee's proposals on implementing a universal neonatal hearing screening programme shortly. These will include details of the organisational and human resource implications of the proposed changes. I will make an announcement in due course.

NHS Spending (South East)

Mr. Caplin: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what estimate he has made of the change to levels of NHS spending in the South-East as a result of his Budget announcements. [116634]

Mr. Denham [holding answer 6 April 2000]: In his Budget speech, my right hon. Friend the Chancellor of the Exchequer announced an additional £2 billion for the National Health Service in the United Kingdom, including the confirmation of moneys from tobacco.

As part of the immediate allocation of £600 million for the NHS England, the South-East Region of the NHS Executive will receive an additional £107 million.

The new resources will put local hospital and general practitioner services on to a sound financial footing. They will help to put in place new high quality intermediate care services to provide a bridge between hospital and home for older people, helping the NHS better prepare for winter. The extra funding will also help to action recommendations by the National Institute for Clinical Excellence to tackle the postcode lottery of care. The extra resources will help to further reduce waiting times.

Waiting Times

Mr. Gordon Marsden: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what the average waiting time from GP referral is for (a) hearing aids, (b) bath rails and (c) artificial limbs (i) in Blackpool Community Health Services NHS Trust, (ii) in North-West Lancashire Health Authority and (iii) nationally. [117831]

Mr. Denham [holding answer 6 April 2000]: Data are not available nationally on the specific areas requested. However, Blackpool, Wyre and Fylde Community Health Services National Health Service Trust and North-West Lancashire Health Authority (NWLHA) have provided the following information:

(a) the average waiting time in NWLHA for hearing aids is 11.5 weeks;

(b) the average waiting time for bath rails is 19.5 weeks;

(c) the average waiting time for artificial limbs is four weeks.

Nits

Mr. Oaten: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what recent (a) guidelines to local education authorities and (b) advice to parents his Department has issued about the control of nits. [117965]

Yvette Cooper [holding answer 6 April 2000]: A new leaflet on the prevention and treatment of nits (head lice) has been launched, copies of which are widely available to parents through primary health care teams. Guidance is also available to local education authorities by accessing the "Wired for Health" website. The teachers' magazine "Spectrum", which circulates within education authorities and schools, recently featured guidance on head lice control and the new leaflet.

Surrey and Sussex NHS Trust

Mr. Peter Ainsworth: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what discussion he had with (a) representatives of Surrey and Sussex NHS trust, (b) East Surrey health authority and (c) other parties prior to the announcement that the Chief Executive of Surrey and Sussex NHS trust was leaving; and if he will make a statement. [118256]

Ms Stuart: The resignation of the chief executive is a matter for the Surrey and Sussex Healthcare National Health Service Trust Board.

The regional office of the National Health Service Executive will provide support to the trust until a new appointment has been made.

NHS Staff (East Surrey)

Mr. Peter Ainsworth: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement on current levels of (a) nursing and (b) cleaning staff at East Surrey hospital. [118255]

Ms Stuart: The latest available levels of nursing, midwifery and health visiting staff at Surrey and Sussex National Health Service Trust is given in the table.

NHS Hospital and Community Health Services (HCHS): Nursing, midwifery and health visiting staff within Surrey and Sussex Healthcare NHS Trust, as at 30 September 1998

	Whole time equivalent	Numbers (headcount)
All Nursing, Midwifery and Health visiting staff	1,240	1,670

Notes:
1. Figures are rounded to the nearest 10
2. Figures exclude learners and agency staff

Source:
Department of Health Non-Medical Workforce Census

The East Surrey health authority is responsible for ensuring that the quality of care for those being treated at East Surrey hospital is satisfactory. The Surrey and Sussex Healthcare National Health Service Trust is looking at ways of improving the recruitment and retention of nursing staff in line with national recruitment and retention strategy.

The number of whole time equivalent ancillary staff (which covers cleaning staff) is 269. The number of vacancies at March 2000 was 30.

New guidelines to ensure cleanliness on hospital wards—"Standards for Environmental Cleanliness in Hospitals"—will be issued to all National Health Service trusts shortly which complement the new framework for managing hospital acquired infection. The progress of NHS hospitals at meeting the new framework will be independently assessed locally by auditors, and nationally by the Commission for Health Improvement and the Audit Commission.

Parliamentary Questions

Mr. Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when he will give a substantive answer to the question from the right hon. Member for Birkenhead on the birth weight of babies, tabled on 12 January (Ref. 105430). [118230]

Yvette Cooper: I replied to my right hon. Friend on 5 April.

Dispensing

Mrs. Shephard: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when he intends to meet representatives of the Dispensing Doctors' Association and the Pharmaceutical Society to discuss dispensing arrangements; and if he will make a statement. [117861]

Ms Stuart: The bodies which represent pharmacies and dispensing doctors on National Health Service matters are the General Practitioners Committee of the British Medical Association and the Pharmaceutical Services Negotiating Committee. My noble Friend Lord Hunt of King's Health met representatives of both bodies on 21 December 1999 to discuss dispensing arrangements in rural areas.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Arms Exports (Uganda and Zimbabwe)

Mr. Austin: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will list those arms and items of military equipment which were approved for export to Uganda and Zimbabwe in each of the years 1998–99 and 1999–2000. [117983]

Dr. Howells [holding answer 6 April 2000]: Details of export licensing decisions between 1 January and 31 December 1998 were set out in the Government's Annual Report on Strategic Export Controls published by the Foreign and Commonwealth Office in November 1999; copies are in the Library of the House.

The entry in the relevant legislation under which the export of goods is controlled is known as their rating. The Export Control Organisation's computer databases have been interrogated. Between 1 January 1999 and 28 March 2000, three Standard Individual Export Licences (SIELs) and no Open Individual Export Licences (OIELs) were issued covering the export to consignees or end-users in Uganda of goods subject to export control by being listed in Part III of Schedule 1 to the Export of Goods (Control) Order 1994, commonly known as the Military List. Individual licences may cover a range of goods with various ratings. Where this is so, the licence is included in the table in the total for all of the relevant ratings.

SIELs issued between 1 January 1999 and 28 March 2000 covering the export to Uganda of goods on the Military List

Rating	Number of SIELs issued covering goods with this rating
ML2	1
ML3	1
ML6	1
PL5031	1

Between 1 January 1999 and 28 March 2000, 22 SIELs and six OIELs were issued covering the export to consignees or end-users in Zimbabwe of goods on the Military List.

Individual Licences issued between 1 January 1999 and 28 March 2000 covering the export to Zimbabwe of goods on the Military List

Rating	Number of SIELs issued covering goods with this rating	Number of OIELs issued covering goods with this rating
ML1	5	1
ML2	6	1
ML3	1	0
ML5	0	1
ML6	2	1
ML10	7	0
ML11	0	2
PL5002	0	1
PL5018	1	2

The seven SIELs covering goods with the rating ML10 were issued on 24 February 2000 for the export of Hawk spares, as noted in the answer given by my hon. Friend the Minister of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs (Mr. Hain) to my hon. Friend the Member for Bethnal Green and Bow (Ms King) on 21 February 2000, Official Report, column 718W. These decisions were taken in line with the policy set out in the answer given by my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister to the hon. Member for Richmond Park (Dr. Tonge) on 9 February 2000, Official Report, columns 184–85W.

This information does not cover any Media OIELs that may have been issued during this period. Media OIELs authorise the export to all destinations of protective clothing, mainly for the protection of aid agency workers and journalists, when working in areas of conflict.This information should be considered in light of the answer I gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Kingswood (Mr. Berry) on 27 July 1999, Official Report, columns 307–08.

In addition, Uganda and Zimbabwe are permitted destinations on certain Open General Export Licences covering the export of goods on the Military List; copies of all Open General Export Licences are routinely placed in the Library of the House.

BAe Systems

Mr. Gibb: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry (1) what rate of return the Government expects to receive on the proposed loan to BAe Systems to develop the A3XX super jumbo jet, including the (a) applicable royalty rate and (b) interest rate; [118263]

(2) if he will provide the repayment schedule of the proposed loan to BAe Systems. [118261]

Mr. Alan Johnson: The detailed terms of the launch investment provided to BAe Systems for the A3XX are commercially confidential.

Mr. Gibb: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what information was supplied to the United States Government under the 1992 Civil Aircraft Agreement in respect of the £530 million proposed loan to BAe Systems. [118262]

Mr. Alan Johnson: We have provided to the European Commission all the information required by the 1992 Agreement. It is for the Commission to transmit this to the United States Government.

Mr. Gibb: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will list the Government's launch aid criteria for the proposed loan to BAe Systems. [118258]

Mr. Alan Johnson: Any applicant for launch investment must demonstrate that the project is technically and commercially viable; that Government investment is essential for the project to proceed in the UK on the scale and in the timescale specified in the application; and that the Government will recoup the investment with a fair share of reward for the risks they have borne. The applicant also has to prove that the investment will bring a significant strategic benefit to the UK that would not otherwise be available.

A3XX Project

Mr. Gibb: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what steps he took to establish whether private finance would be available for development of the A3XX project; and what reasons were given for its not being forthcoming. [118259]

Mr. Alan Johnson: As part of the assessment of the BAe Systems application for launch investment, my Department received independent advice from PricewaterhouseCoopers (PWC). In their report, PWC looked at the case for Government investment in the A3XX, including the other alternatives open to BAe Systems. Although the details of the report are commercially confidential, the conclusion was that, in the absence of launch investment from the UK Government, BAe Systems would not undertake the A3XX work in the UK. This would have had a major impact on the UK civil aerospace industry, and would have put in jeopardy the tens of thousands of UK jobs which currently depend on Airbus work.

Rachel Sylvester

Mr. Gibb: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if (a) he, (b) other Ministers in his Department and (c) officials in his Department briefed Rachel Sylvester of the Daily Telegraph on the contents of the Competition Commission report on car pricing. [117613]

Dr. Howells: No. Neither I, my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State or my ministerial colleagues nor my officials did so.

Mr. Gibb: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if (a) he, (b) Ministers in his Department and (c) officials in his Department met Rachel Sylvester on (i) Monday 27 March and (ii) during the week beginning 20 March. [117614]

Dr. Howells: I met Rachel Sylvester on 27 March. The contents of the Competition Commission's report on new cars was not discussed. No other Ministers or officials met Ms Sylvester on the dates mentioned.

Car Pricing

Mr. Gibb: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he has ordered an internal inquiry into the leak of the contents of the Competition Commission report on car pricing to the Daily Telegraph. [117615]

Dr. Howells: No. The article was speculation and I propose to treat it as such.

Land Rover

Mr. John M. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what discussions he has held with potential buyers of Land Rover on the pension rights of former employees. [117692]

Mr. Byers: This issue has been raised with both BMW and Ford who are the potential purchasers.

Personal Computers

Mr. Wyatt: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry (1) if he will call upon the Office of Fair Trading to publish the research underlying the Office of Fair Trading's definition of the home personal computer market; [117320]

(2) if he will refer exclusive supply arrangements in the market for home personal computers to the Competition Commission; [117323]

(3) what is his definition of the market for home personal computers in relation to the review of this market undertaken by the Office of Fair Trading in 1999. [117327]

Dr. Howells: Under UK competition law in the first instance it is the responsibility of the Director General of Fair Trading (DGFT) to investigate allegations of anti-competitive behaviour and possible abuses of a dominant position. The Director General of Fair Trading has recently investigated the market for home personal computers and concluded that no individual retailer or manufacturer has market power in the home PC market, market entry to retailing is relatively easy and there is no evidence that supra-normal profits are being made.

It is a matter for the Office of Fair Trading (OFT) to set out the research behind the reasons for its decision. They are looking at ways of increasing transparency in merger decisions. I welcome that. I am today placing a copy of the OFT's press notice of 28 October 1999 announcing its conclusions in the Library of the House.

Meetings (Washington)

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how many meetings he held with members and officials of the United States Government during his visit to Washington on 10 to 12 September 1998; and if he will list the date of each meeting, the location of each meeting and the names of the US officials and members who took part in each meeting. [117060]

Mr. Byers: I did not visit Washington on the dates mentioned.

Packaging Waste

Mrs. Brinton: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what assessment he has made of the effect on competition in the packaging waste compliance market of the volume discount structure applied to statutory registration fees for packaging waste compliance schemes. [117947]

Ms Hewitt: The registration fee structure for packaging waste compliance schemes is currently under review, and the effect on competition is among the issues being looked at. The Department of the Environment, Transport and the Regions plans to conduct a consultation exercise on the fee structure shortly.

Diamond Synchrotron

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry, pursuant to his answer of 3 April 2000, Official Report, column 277W, if, at the time when he took his initial decision to site the new synchrotron at Daresbury, he had been informed of the French Government's view, expressed in October 1999, that it should be sited in Oxfordshire. [117978]

Mr. Byers: Yes.

Computers

Mr. Ian Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what effect the announcement by 3COM that they are to quit the high-end networking market will have on Government Departments' existing and planned computer systems. [R] [117624]

Ms Hewitt [holding answer 4 April 2000]: The Department of Trade and Industry's IT networking facilities are provided by Unitas (a consortium of ICL and CMG) under a Public Private Partnership. My officials have reviewed the 3Com announcement with Unitas and have confirmed that 3Com equipment is not currently used in the Department's network infrastructure and therefore no impact on the Department's IT systems is anticipated.

Correspondence

Mr. Green: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry when his Department will answer the letters of 7 September 1999, 13 October 1999, 24 November 1999, 22 December 1999 and 1 February 2000, from the hon. Member for Ashford, concerning regulations under the Employment Agencies Act 1973; and if he will make a statement. [118394]

Mr. Alan Johnson: My Department has no record of any such correspondence being received at the time. The hon. Gentleman provided copies on 6 April and I will now ensure this correspondence is dealt with promptly.

EU Structural Funds

Mr. Redwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry when he will announce the Structural Fund Objective 2 areas. [118088]

Mr. Byers: I refer the right hon. Member to the answer given by my right hon. Friend the Minister for Trade to my hon. Friend the Member for Wigan (Mr. Turner) on 5 April 2000, Official Report, columns 480–81W.

Unigate

Mr. Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what assessment he has made of the likely impact on farmers' incomes of the proposed takeover of Unigate's milk production facility by Dairy Crest; and if he will make a statement. [118213]

Dr. Howells: On 6 April, I announced that I had decided not to refer Dairy Crest's proposed acquisition of the liquid milk and cheese business of Unigate to the Competition Commission for investigation.

My decision was in accordance with the independent advice of the Director General of Fair Trading who advised me that the merger did not raise competition concerns which would warrant reference to the Competition Commission under the provisions of the Fair Trading Act 1973.

The DGFT consulted widely before offering me his advice. I considered it very carefully, and was persuaded that the merger will not have an adverse effect on competition. While the merger will lead to increased concentration in the market for the procurement of raw milk, the parties will continue to face significant competition from alternative purchasers. Farmers and raw milk marketing groups will still have a good choice of customer.

CULTURE, MEDIA AND SPORT

Museums and Galleries

Mr. Dismore: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport which museums and galleries in London provide free admission to pensioners. [117839]

Mr. Alan Howarth: As of 1 April 2000, all the national Museums and Galleries in London sponsored by my Department, with the exception of the Cabinet War Rooms and HMS Belfast, provide free admission to the over 60s. As for other Museums and Galleries in London, practice varies from institution to institution.

Stonehenge

Mr. Key: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what representations (a) he, (b) his Ministers or (c) his officials have received from Councillor Ricky Rogers concerning the ACT Parker plan to remove the A303 (T) from the Stonehenge World Heritage Site; and if he will make a statement. [118233]

Mr. Alan Howarth: No such representations have been received by my Department at either ministerial or official level.

LORD CHANCELLOR'S DEPARTMENT

Conditional Fees

Mr. Dismore: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department if he will make a statement on progress in implementing the extension of conditional fees. [118212]

Mr. Lock: On 1 April, sections 27, 29 and 30 of the Access to Justice Act 1999 were commenced by the Access to Justice Act (Commencement No. 3; Transitional Provision and Savings) Order 2000 (2000/774). On the same day, the Conditional Fee Agreements Order 2000 (2000/823), the Conditional Fee Agreements Regulations 2000 (2000/692) and the Access to Justice (Membership Organisations) Regulations 2000 (2000/693) came into effect together with the Access to Justice Act (Transitional Provision) Order 2000 (2000/900) relating to existing agreements. Rules of Court providing guidance on the recovery of success fees, disclosure of the success fee, information to be provided to clients, and other issues will be published after Easter and come into force shortly after that.

The reformed scheme for conditional fees will make access to justice more affordable to more people who wish to assert their legal rights, will encourage the early settlement of disputes and will protect consumers of legal services. In particular it will make sure that damages awarded to people winning cases are not significantly reduced by having to pay their solicitors' success fees, or the cost of litigation insurance. It will make the use of conditional fee agreements and insurance suitable for defendants or those who are not claiming money, or only modest sums, by making the costs involved recoverable from the losing party. It will also enable membership organisations, such as trade unions which provide legal services to members and their families, to recover a sum for legal costs to reflect the provision of legal help for members and their families. Making success fees and insurance premiums recoverable for everybody is a major improvement in access to justice.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Helplines

Mr. Willetts: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what the telephone numbers are for each of the helplines run by his Department; how many people work on each helpline; and how much each helpline has cost to run on a monthly basis. [117714]

Angela Eagle [holding answer 2 April 2000]: The information is not available in the format requested. Such information as is available is in the table.

Helpline	Telephone number(s)	Number of people working on the helpline	Cost to run on a monthly basis (£)
Benefit Enquiry Line[1]	0800 882200 Textphone 0800 243355	149	163,000
CSA National Enquiry Line[2]	0845 7133 133	85	95,726
Child Benefit Enquiry Line[3]	08701 555540	over 300	288,207
Minimum Income Guarantee[4]	0800 0281111	69	49,818
War Pensions Helpline[5]	01253 858858	23	27,818
Winter Fuel Helpline[6]	08459 151515	up to 70	570,000 per year

[1] Staffing figures include part-time staff and equates to 132.8 full-time staff.

[2] Staffing includes casual and part-time and equates to 79.4 full-time staff. Average monthly cost as at February 2000.

[3] Staffing figure includes part-time staff.

[4] This Helpline opened on 29 March 2000. The running costs are based only on average staffing costs for 69 staff.

[5] Running costs do not include accommodation, as this is not available. The staffing and running costs also cover internal DSS callers.

[6] This Helpline is seasonal with a maximum of 70 at peak times of the year when casual staff are employed. The costs, therefore, vary considerably according to the time of year. They also include the Helpdesk which is for internal DSS callers.

Notes:

1. Overseas Telephone Liaison is just a switchboard; they do not give advice.

2. Pensions Direct (0191 203 0203) is a Teleservice not a Helpline. They take change of circumstances over the phone. They do not offer general advice.

3. Working Family Tax Credit and Disabled Person's Tax Credit Helplines are now the responsibility of the Inland Revenue.

4. Disability Living Allowance (main number 08457 123456/textphone 08457 224433) is a Teleservice not a Helpline.

BEST COPY AV

Fraud

Mr. Willetts: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security in each of the last five years how many national insurance numbers and accounts there were where a fraud was detected. [117704]

Mr. Rooker: The information is not available in the format requested. Such information as is available is as follows.

Since it was established in 1997, the Identity Fraud Unit has confirmed and recorded 1,314 false National Insurance numbers and accounts.

Mr. Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will estimate the number of cases of (a) confirmed fraud, (b) high suspicion fraud and (c) low suspicion fraud for each benefit his Department administers in each of the last five years. [118206]

Mr. Rooker: The information is not available in the format requested. Such information as is available is contained in the following reports, copies of which are available in the Library.

Title	Date of publication
Benefit Review
(Income Support and Unemployment Benefit) Report on Methodology and Findings	July 1995
Retirement Pension—Final Report	March 1996
Invalid Care Allowance—Report on Main Study	July 1996
Disability Living Allowance—Report on Main Study	February 1997
Income Support—(Second Exercise) Report on Methodology and Findings	July 1997
The Review of Child Benefit and Child Benefit (Lone Parent) 1996/97—Report on Methodology and Findings	July 1998
Fraud and Error in Claims to Jobseeker's Allowance (Contributory)[1]	October 1998
The Results of Six Months of Area Benefit Review Fraud and Error in Claims for Income Support and Jobseeker's Allowance (Income—Based)[1]	November 1998
The Results of the Area Benefit Review from April 1998 to March 1999 and Measurements for the Public Service Agreement Fraud and Error in Claims for Income Support and Jobseeker's Allowance[1]	January 2000

[1] These reports were published by the Government Statistical Service, the remainder were Departmental publications.

Mr. Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will set out for each counter-fraud programme funded by his Department and its agencies in the last five years (a) the annual cost and savings and (b) the cost and savings since the programme began. [118207]

Mr. Rooker: Measures to stop and prevent fraud and error are all aimed at reducing the rate of overpayment. Their overall effect can be measured by reviewing representative samples of cases in payment, as we do to track progress towards meeting our Public Service Agreement fraud target. It is not possible, however, to give a precise figure for the separate contribution made by each individual initiative because, for example, several initiatives may be directed towards addressing a single goal.

Disability Living Allowance

Ms Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will list for each region the number of (a) outstanding claims for Disability Living Allowance and (b) staff employed at each medical centre; and how many applicants he estimates will not have their claim resolved before the expiry date of their existing entitlement. [117592]

Mr. Bayley: The information is in the tables

Outstanding claims for Disability Living Allowance for each Disability Benefit Centre and the Central Disability Benefits Unit at Blackpool

Location	New claims outstanding	Renewal claims outstanding
Edinburgh	3,178	43
Newcastle	4,020	67
Leeds	6,156	57
Manchester	3,387	34

Outstanding claims for Disability Living Allowance for each Disability Benefit Centre and the Central Disability Benefits Unit at Blackpool

Location	New claims outstanding	Renewal claims outstanding
Bootle	4,637	45
Midlands	13,749	179
Bristol	5,103	148
Wales	3,513	59
Wembley	10,128	83
Sutton	10,060	228
Glasgow	3,793	76
Disability Benefits Unit	46	45,319
Total	67,770	46,338

Notes:

1. Figures are given for both new claims and renewal claims outstanding at 31 March 2000

2. At 31 March 2000 there were 2,903 applicants whose renewal claim had not been resolved by the date that their existing entitlement expired

Breakdown of the number of staff employed in each centre

Location	Number of staff
Newcastle	67
Leeds	95
Edinburgh	58
Glasgow	67
Bootle	80
Manchester	71
Warbreck	16
Birmingham	63
Bristol	76
Wales	95
Wembley	107
Sutton	84
Nottingham	74

Note:

SEMA are contracted by the DSS to provide medical services

ILABLE

Benefit Interviews

Mr. Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) what powers he uses to compel claimants of (a) Income Support and (b) Jobseeker's Allowance, whose claim is selected for inspection by the area benefit review to give an interview to a Benefits Agency review officer; [118276]

(2) what proportion of those claimants of (a) Income Support, (b) Jobseeker's Allowance and (c) Housing Benefit whose claim was selected for inspection by the area benefit review refused to give an interview to the Benefits Agency review officer in each of the last three years. [118210]

Angela Eagle: There is no specific power to compel a person to give an interview to an Area Benefit Review Officer. However, under Claims and Payments Regulations 7 and 8 a person who claims Income Support is required to supply the Department with information in connection with their claim and to attend interviews if so requested. There are equivalent provisions in Regulations 23 and 24 of the Jobseeker's Allowance Regulations. The Department has no record of any benefit claimant having refused to be interviewed under the Area Benefit Review programme.

Housing Benefit

Mr. Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many local authorities have been inspected for the Area Benefit Review of housing benefit. [118211]

Angela Eagle: The Area Benefit Review is a continuous monthly rolling programme of measurement in which 195 local authorities are participating. As at 29 February, sample cases had been selected from a total of 175 local authorities since the start of the project. Sample cases will be selected from the remaining local authorities as the rolling programme continues.

Remote Access Terminals

Mr. Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many local authorities have installed remote access terminals in the last five years. [118209]

Angela Eagle: The Remote Access Terminal implementation programme started in August 1998. There are currently 392 local authorities with at least one Remote Access Terminal (RAT) installed, and 427 terminals in use.

In this financial year we plan to install a RAT into 14 of the 17 local authorities currently without one.

Credit Industry Fraud Avoidance System

Mr. Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what plans he has for his Department to become a member of the Credit Industry Fraud Avoidance System; and if he will make a statement. [118205]

Mr. Rooker: This Department is an associate member of the Credit Industry Fraud Avoidance System (CIFAS). Staff involved in the investigation of organised fraud receive information from CIFAS and attend regional quarterly meetings.

Family Statistics

Mr. Gerald Howarth: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many divorced or separated women (a) have and (b) have not received from their ex-husbands or husbands their full CSA-assessed entitlement in the most recent year for which figures are available. [117528]

Angela Eagle: The administration of the Child Support Agency is a matter for the Chief Executive, Mrs. Faith Boardman. She will write to the hon. Member.

Letter from Faith Boardman to Mr. Gerald Howarth, dated 6 April 2000:

I am replying to your Parliamentary Question to the Secretary of State for Social Security about the Child Support Agency.

The latest published Child Support statistics show that in the quarter to November 1999 there are a total of 346,500 cases where maintenance is arranged and collected through the Agency. Of these 162,900 parents with care receive their full maintenance, 79,800 receive partial maintenance and 103,800 receive no maintenance.

155,100 have a full maintenance assessment made by the Agency with the liability paid through a private agreement between the Parent With Care and the Non-Resident Parent. In these cases full compliance is assumed.

Therefore, 318,000 of parents with care receive their full maintenance award through either the Agency's collection service or a private agreement. A further 79,800 receive partial maintenance.

A total of 445,000 live cases are assessed at nil liability. A percentage of Non-Resident Parents assessed at nil liability who claim Income Support and Job Seekers Allowance (income-based) may be required to make a contribution to maintenance.

The Department's Analytical Services Division produces a CSA Quarterly Summary of Statistics that is available in the House of Commons Library and you may find the information it contains of further interest.

I hope this is helpful.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

British Embassies

Mr. Maude: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many political party events have been held in British Embassies since 1 May 1997. [115340]

Mr. Robin Cook: It is established policy that Government property should not generally be used for party activities. We have no record of any such event being held at a British Embassy in the period since 1 May 1997.

British Embassies do, of course, assist and advise MPs, Members of the devolved assemblies and MEPs, as appropriate.

Europe Roadshow

Mr. Nicholls: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what recent representations he has received about the "Your Britain, Your Europe", roadshow; and if he will make a statement. [117335]

Mr. Vaz: There have been several parliamentary questions about the purpose, funding and itinerary of the "Your Britain, Your Europe" roadshow. Some members of the public and the Democracy Movement have written to me asking the same questions.

Mr. Nicholls: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what assessment he has made of the contribution of the "Your Britain, Your Europe", roadshow to his Department's performance target of increasing public support for EU activities. [117334]

Mr. Vaz: It is impossible to measure precisely the contribution that last year's "Your Britain, Your Europe" roadshow made to our performance target to increase public support for our EU activities. But I am confident that the event helped to inform the public better about the Government's EU policy and to stimulate debate about the benefits of our membership of the EU.

Mr. Nicholls: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what costs were incurred by the Your Britain, Your Europe, roadshow on (a) travel and (b) publicity and promotional material. [117322]

Mr. Vaz: Travel costs were approximately £15,295. The bill for design of the roadshow logo and printing of publicity materials came to £6,162.

Former EU Commissioners

Mr. Nicholls: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many of the commissioners from the former European Commission are in receipt of EU allowances. [117312]

Mr. Vaz: Details of pay and allowances for both serving and former Commissioners are set out in Regulation number 422/67/EEC. A copy of this is available in the Library of the House and on the internet at http://europa.eu.int/eur-lex/en/lif/dat/1967/en_367/R0422.html

Arms Exports (Azerbaijan)

Mr. Savidge: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if the UK will continue to uphold the OSCE embargo on the export of weapons and military equipment to Azerbaijan. [118646]

Mr. Vaz: The UK remains committed to the OSCE arms embargo against both Azerbaijan and Armenia, which the UK interprets as covering all goods and technology controlled under entries in Part III of schedule 1 to the Export of Goods (Control) Order 1994 (commonly known as the military list).

We have recently approved the export of 60 protective vests for demining operations to Azerbaijan. These will be used by the United Nations Development Programme during humanitarian land mine clearance operations. While the grant of this licence constitutes an exception to the UK's interpretation of the scope of the embargo, it is in no way inconsistent with the purpose of the embargo and our continuing commitment to uphold it. It also reflects the determination of the Government to eliminate the scourge of land mines.

HOME DEPARTMENT

MBDB

Mr. Lidington: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on his policy in respect of the synthetic drug MBDB. [118072]

Mr. Boateng: N-Methyl-a-ethyl-3, 4-methylendioxy phenethylamine (MBDB) is controlled under the Misuse of Drugs Act 1971 as a Class A drug. It is covered by the definition for ring-substituted Phenethylamines in Schedule 2, Part 1 paragraph 1 (c) of the Act.

Euro (Counterfeiting)

Mr. Lidington: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) if he will make a statement on the agreement reached at the EU Justice and Home Affairs Council meeting on 27 March to introduce an EU-wide minimum prison sentence for counterfeiting the euro; what plans he has to implement that decision; what estimate he has made of the cost to public funds; and if he will make a statement; [118075]

(2) if he will place in the Library a copy of the framework decision on the protection of the euro against counterfeiting discussed at the EU Justice and Home Affairs Council meeting on 27 March; [118068]

(3) what were the accompanying measures aimed at supporting the objectives of the framework decision in respect of the criminal sanctions against counterfeiting of the euro, announced by Commissioner Vitorino at the EU Justice and Home Affairs Council meeting on 27 March; [118069]

(4) what plans Her Majesty's Government have to make it a criminal offence in (a) England and Wales, (b) Scotland and (c) Northern Ireland to counterfeit the euro; and if he will make a statement. [118078]

Mr. Boateng: I am placing in the Library a copy of the draft framework decision as deposited for Scrutiny.

Article 6(2) of the draft framework decision provides that offences of fraudulent making, shall be > punishable by terms of imprisonment, the maximum being not less than eight years.

The maximum term of imprisonment already provided for these offences under existing United Kingdom legislation is 10 years. Article 6 of the framework decision will not, therefore, require new legislation or result in any additional costs. In all parts of the United Kingdom it is already a criminal offence to counterfeit any currency which is customarily used as money, including the euro.

The Commission has indicated that it plans to bring forward a number of accompanying measures aimed at supporting the objectives of the framework decision in the area of judicial co-operation, exchange of information and training. The Commission hopes to make a formal proposal to this effect during the Portuguese Presidency.

Mr. Lidington: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what amount has been spent under the National Changeover Plan in connection with measures to combat the counterfeiting of the euro; and if he will make a statement. [118076]

Mr. Boateng: Measures to combat the counterfeiting of the euro do not come within the scope of the National Changeover Plan.

Criminal Investigations

Mr. Lidington: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what the Government's policy is on the adoption of a legally binding instrument for setting up joint investigative teams to conduct criminal investigations in one or more member states of the EU. [118070]

Mr. Boateng: As the deployment of joint investigation teams is currently permitted under United Kingdom law, we do not require the adoption of a legally binding instrument to allow the setting up of joint investigative teams. However, some of our European Union partners have problems with this type of co-operation in the absence of such an instrument. The Government therefore support the initiative as a welcome extension of our co-operative ability. The adoption of a joint instrument will not affect the existing arrangements concerning joint investigation teams that are currently used on a regular basis by United Kingdom law enforcement authorities such as the police service and Her Majesty's Customs and Excise. The Government do not consider that the initiative should in any way detract from the need to agree the existing draft European Union Mutual Assistance Convention which itself contains a provision on joint investigation teams.

Asylum Seekers

Mr. Lidington: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) if he will make it his policy to ask each local authority in England and Wales to provide him with a regular report on the number of asylum seekers registered with that local authority; and if he will make a statement; [118238]

(2) what is his estimate of the cost to his Department of asking each local authority in England and Wales how many asylum seekers are registered with that authority. [118237]

Mrs. Roche: The Home Office launched an exercise last year to ascertain from local authorities exactly how many asylum seekers they were supporting, together with the status of those asylum seekers, and where they are being accommodated. Further checks are required on much of the information so far submitted. We estimate that it will cost around £44,000 to complete the exercise in full. The information requested will be available once it is completed.

Miss Widdecombe: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he intends to implement in full the new support arrangements for asylum seekers under the Immigration and Asylum Act 1999; what discussions he has had with local authorities and regional consortiums regarding the current partial implementation; what representations he has received from them; and if he will make a statement. [118293]

Mrs. Roche: It is our intention to implement further stages of the new support arrangements as soon as possible, hopefully bringing all the remaining new asylum applicants onto it over the course of the next six months.

I and my officials have received many representations from local authorities concerning the dispersal of asylum seekers, in response to proposals which we published last year as part of our consultation process.

The National Asylum Support Service has also been in extensive consultation with the Local Government Association and regional local authority consortiums about the operation of both the interim dispersal scheme and the main dispersal scheme.

Organised Crime

Mr. Lidington: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will place in the Library a copy of the action plan on organised crime which was discussed at the EU Justice and Home Affairs Council meeting on 27 March. [118071]

Mr. Boateng: Two papers on organised crime were adopted at the Justice and Home Affairs Council of the European Union on 27 March. Those were "The Prevention and Control of Organised Crime: A European Union Strategy for the Beginning of the New Millennium (CRIMORG 36, reference 6611/00)" and "The Draft European Action Plan on common action for the Russian Federation on combating organised crime (CRIMORG 39, reference 6698/00)". Copies of these documents have been placed in the Library.

Correspondence

Mr. Lidington: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on asylum case L304287 about which the hon. Member for Aylesbury has written to his Department. [118073]

Mrs. Roche: This application has been decided and the applicant has been notified accordingly. The Integrated Casework Directorate wrote to the hon. Member on 6 April about the case.

Alternative Voting

Miss Widdecombe: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list the companies that have been contracted to provide advice and services to local authorities in connection with the pilot projects for alternative voting to be conducted at the May 2000 local elections under section 10 of the Representation of the People Act 2000, indicating, for each local authority, the nature of the advice and services to be provided by each company and the cost to public funds. [118239]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: Local authorities which made applications under section 10 of the Representation of the People Act 2000 to run pilot schemes were asked to estimate the likely additional costs (or savings) which these schemes would involve. They were not asked whether any additional costs would arise from payments to contracting companies, but I am aware that of the three local authorities which are piloting electronic voting, Bury and Salford will be using technology supplied by Trilogy Information Systems Ltd. and Stratford on Avon will be using the Nedap Powervote System.

Antisocial Behaviour Orders

Miss Widdecombe: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) how many persons subject to an antisocial behaviour order have committed a criminal offence that (a) did and (b) did not constitute a breach of the order; what offences were committed; and if he will make a statement; [118081]

(2) how many antisocial behaviour orders have been breached; what measures have been taken in respect of each breach; and if he will make a statement. [118080]

Mr. Straw: Information is not available which identifies those who have committed a criminal offence, other than a breach of an antisocial behaviour order, as the subject of such an order.

Provisional 1999 court data identifying defendants proceeded against for the offence of "breach of an anti-behaviour order" since the order was introduced in April 1999 will be available this summer, with provisional data for the first quarter of 2000 available in the autumn. The data will not identify the circumstances of the breach. The breach of an antisocial behaviour order is an arrestable criminal offence carrying a maximum penalty of five years imprisonment.

Regional Crime Reduction Directors

Miss Widdecombe: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many regional crime reduction directors have been appointed in total; when each director was appointed; what the pay scale is for regional crime reduction directors; and what is the total additional (a) cost to date and (b) projected cost to public funds of the appointment of regional crime reduction directors. [118082]

Mr. Straw: The recruitment of regional crime reduction directors is still in train but the appointment of nine directors in England, and a tenth post in Wales is expected to be made over the next three months. The salary range for the posts is £40,000-£60,000 and starting salary will depend upon relevant skills and experience. The main cost to date has been the placing of advertisements in the national press and consultancy costs for organising the processing and sifting of the applications: these amount to £46,000. The directors will be located in the existing Government Offices for the Regions or in offices for the National Assembly for Wales. In addition to the salary costs, the accommodation, Information Technology, secretarial support and other overhead costs would be about £300,000 in a full year.

Crime and Disorder Reduction Partnerships

Miss Widdecombe: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will place in the Library the progress reports submitted by crime and disorder reduction partnerships referred to on page 10 of the Government's Crime Reduction Strategy. [118083]

Mr. Straw: The 376 crime and disorder reduction partnerships in England and Wales have been asked to provide progress reports on their first year in operation and their proposals for the year ahead. We will be assessing those reports and preparing a summary, which we will place in the Library.

Home Detention Curfew Scheme

Miss Widdecombe: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what the success rate is of the Home Detention Curfew scheme; how the success rate is determined; if it is determined with reference to re-offending after completion of the scheme; and if he will make a statement. [118084]

Mr. Straw: The success rate for Home Detention Curfew (HDC) has been consistently over 90 per cent. since the scheme began. It is calculated by dividing the number of prisoners who successfully complete their HDC period by the total number placed on HDC.

Information about curfewees re-offending after completion of the scheme is not held centrally. The HDC period concludes at the point at which the prisoner would otherwise have been released from prison. Offending after this period is, therefore, not a factor in defining the success rate. One purpose of the HDC is to secure a better transition between custody and the community for those offenders for whom HDC is deemed appropriate.

The definition of successful completion is a curfewee who completes the curfew period of his licence and who does not breach the conditions of the curfew; can be monitored electronically for the duration of the curfew period; does not present a risk of serious harm to the public; and is not notified to the Prison Service as having been charged with an offence or having breached any requirement of probation supervision.

Miss Widdecombe: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list for the period between the commencement of the Home Detention Curfew scheme on 28 January 1999 and 31 March 2000, inclusive, (a) the total number of prisoners who were released on the scheme, (b) the number of prisoners convicted of each specific offence who were released, on the scheme, including a breakdown of the specific offences committed by prisoners normally classified under the categories (i) other homicide and attempted homicide, (ii) other violence against the person, (iii) drug offences, (iv) assaults, (v) other theft and (vi) other motoring offences, (c) the average sentence (i) received and (ii) served for each specific offence prior to release, (d) the average period spent on the scheme in respect of the prisoners convicted of each specific offence, (e) the number of prisoners released who (i) breached the conditions of the curfew, (ii) disappeared and were recaptured, (iii) disappeared and remain unlawfully at large and (iv) had their licences revoked, (f) the reasons why prisoners released on the scheme had their licences revoked, (g) the specific offences committed by prisoners released on the scheme while on the scheme and (h) the specific offences committed by prisoners released on the scheme who committed an offence similar in character to that for which they were originally convicted; and if he will make a statement. [117986]

Mr. Straw [holding answer 6 April 2000]: As of 31 March 2000, a total of 18,736 prisoners had been released on Home Detention Curfew since the scheme commenced on 28 January 1999.

The original offences committed by prisoners released under the scheme during that period, the number of prisoners convicted of each specific offence, the average sentence received and served for those offences, and the average period spent on the scheme in respect of the prisoners convicted of each specific offence, are shown in table 1. The data are taken from the Prison Service's Inmate Information System based on the data recorded by each prison. The table provides as detailed a breakdown of offences as is possible from central records.

As of 31 March 2000, 661 prisoners place on the Home Detention Curfew scheme had breached the conditions of the curfew.

On 31 March, there were 42 curfewees who remained unlawfully at large. This represents less than five per cent. of the total number of revocations. In the vast majority of cases, when a curfewee's licence is revoked, he or she can expect to be quickly apprehended and returned to custody. While the priority to be given to pursuing individual cases will be an operational matter for local police forces, Home Office Circular 1/1999 made clear that Home Detention Curfew recalls should be regarded as "urgent action" cases. In addition, the National Identification Service at New Scotland yard issues "The Police Gazette" weekly to all police forces, including details of curfewees who are unlawfully at large. When curfewees are apprehended following a period unlawfully at large, they are required to serve the period of time outstanding at the point their licence was revoked.

As of 31 March 2000, 897 curfewees had their licences revoked, using the powers available to the Secretary of State under Sections 38A(1) and 39 of the Criminal Justice Act 1991. The reasons why licences were revoked were:

for breach of the curfew;

because the curfewee's whereabouts could no longer be electronically monitored;

because it was necessary to protect the public from serious harm; and because the curfewee had committed an offence or breached any requirement of probation supervision.

Curfewees who are charged with new offences may also be recalled on any of the preceding grounds depending on the circumstances of the case.

As of 31 March 2000, the Prison Service had received notifications of 190 curfewees who had been charged with an offence committed while subject to the Home Detention Curfew scheme. A breakdown of the offences with which the curfewees were charged is shown in table 2. This breakdown has been prepared from information supplied by police forces and drawn from the Police National Computer. Further analysis of re-offending by those subject to Home Detention Curfew, including the procedures for notification of further charges to the Prison Service by the police, is currently underway as part of a long term evaluation of the scheme.

Of the 190 curfewees charged with a further offence, a manual check of Prison Service records shows that in 74 cases, the curfewees have been charged with offences similar in nature to their original offence. A breakdown of these offences is in table 3.

Table 1: HDC discharges by offence type—28 January 1999 to 31 March 2000

Offence type	Number of prisoners	Average sentence (month)	Average served (month)	Average on scheme (month)
Total	18,736	14.3	5.6	1.5
Manslaughter	49	33.5	15.0	1.9
Other homicide and attempted homicide	158	23.0	9.9	1.8
Attempted murder	5	25.8	11.0	1.9
Making threats to kill	32	19.9	8.4	1.8
Conspire, aid, incite murder	1	42.0	19.1	1.9
Death by reckless driving	120	23.6	10.2	1.9
Wounding	2,373	15.8	6.3	1.6
Wounding (inflicting GBH)	1,455	19.7	8.1	1.8
Assault occasioning ABH	867	9.3	3.3	1.3
Assault with intent to cause GBH	51	14.6	5.9	1.5
Assaults	472	7.3	2.5	1.1
Assault with intent to resist arrest	8	5.9	2.0	1.0
Other assault	359	8.2	2.9	1.2
Obstruct/resist constable	8	5.9	2.0	1.0
Assault on police officer	97	4.5	1.4	0.9
Cruelty to children	22	14.4	5.9	1.3
Other violence against the person	245	15.6	6.3	1.6
Cause explosion, place explosive	2	33.0	15.0	1.5
Possess firearms with intent	138	19.0	7.9	1.7
Possess offensive weapon	87	11.1	4.2	1.4
Other violence against the person	18	9.3	3.4	1.4

Table 1: HDC discharges by offence type—28 January 1999 to 31 March 2000

Offence type	Number of prisoners	Average sentence (month)	Average served (month)	Average on scheme (month)
Buggery	1	6.0	1.6	1.4
Indecent assault	17	11.6	4.4	1.4
Unlawful sexual intercourse	1	6.0	1.2	1.9
Abduction	1	36.0	17.3	1.2
Bigamy	10	7.5	2.5	1.2
Burglary	1,779	19.3	7.3	1.8
Robbery	757	26.0	11.3	1.9
Taking and driving away	221	10.0	3.8	1.3
Other theft	1,724	11.1	4.1	1.4
Handling stolen goods	584	13.5	5.2	1.6
Fraud	1,544	13.0	5.0	1.6
Forgery	80	11.3	4.2	1.4
Drugs offences	3,063	20.2	8.4	1.7
Production	108	15.3	6.1	1.6
Supply	1,021	21.8	9.2	1.7
Possession with intent	1,288	20.1	8.4	1.7
Possession	414	15.7	6.3	1.6
Unlawful import/export	196	24.9	10.9	1.8
Other drugs offences	36	13.8	5.2	1.7
Arson	120	22.9	9.8	1.8
Criminal damage	85	12.4	4.8	1.4
In charge of driving under the influence of drink or drugs	643	4.4	1.3	0.9
Reckless driving	314	8.9	3.1	1.4
Other motoring offences	1,307	4.6	1.4	0.9
Drunkenness	68	4.8	1.4	0.9
Blackmail	56	20.1	8.3	1.7
Kidnapping	28	19.0	7.8	1.8
Affray	489	9.5	3.4	1.4
Violent disorder	212	14.0	5.4	1.7
Perjury/libel/pervert the course of justice	282	9.9	3.6	1.4
Threat/disorderly behaviour	84	8.6	3.1	1.2
Breach of Court Order	198	9.2	2.9	1.8
Other offences	1,034	12.4	4.7	1.6
Offence not recorded	715	11.6	4.4	1.4

Table 2: Offences with which curfewees charged

Offence type	Number
Burglary, robbery, theft and theft from shops (including taking without consent/taking and driving away)	67
Assault (including wounding)	31
Driving and Traffic Offences	20
Drug Offences	15
Breach of the peace (including Drunk and Disorderly and Affray)	14
Handling Stolen Goods/Deception	10
Criminal Damage	11
Threatening Behaviour (including threats to kill)	9
Possession of an offensive weapon	3
Breach of court injunction or Restraining Order	3
Rape	2
Harassment	1
Going Equipped	1
False Imprisonment	1
Arson	1
Indecent Exposure	1
Total	190

Note:

The table excludes those where, following initial notification, the Prison Service was informed that the charges had been withdrawn. Where a curfewee was charged with more than one offence, they appear in the table next to the most serious offence. See note to table 3.

Table 3: Offences with which curfewees charged similar to their original offence

Offence type	Number
Burglary	20
Theft	16
Driving/motoring offences	12
Assault	9
Drug offences	5
Deception	3
Wounding	3
Robbery	2
Breach of probation order	1
Threats to kill	1
False imprisonment	1
Affray	1
Total	74

Note:

This table includes charges which, in cases where there was more than one charge, were not necessarily the most serious charge. See Note to table 2.

Consultants

Mr. Heald: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what consultancy contracts the Smith Group has entered into with his Department since May 1997. [116775]

Mr. Charles Clarke [pursuant to the reply, 30 March 2000, c. 215–16W]: The Smith Group is reporting to the Home Office on a consultancy study to examine the technical and costs implications of interception at Internet Service Providers. The Smith Group is also reporting to the Home Office on some technical aspects of the proposed Government Technical Assistance Centre which will be responsible for complex processing (including decryption) of intercept produce. However, these consultancy studies are not funded by the Home Office. The costs are being met by the intercepting agencies using a joint budget for the strategic development of the interception capability.

Metropolitan Police Service

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what was the revenue cost of (a) Rotherhithe, (b) Tower Bridge, (c) Southwark, (d) Walworth, (e) Camberwell, (f) Peckham and (g) East Dulwich police stations in each year for the years 1990–91 to 1999–2000. [113822]

Mr. Charles Clarke [pursuant to his reply, 13 March 2000, c. 94W]: The Receiver for the Metropolitan Police District tells me that the figures requested for the financial year 1994–95 are not held centrally. The revised revenue costs for each of the police stations within Southwark Divisions from 1994–95 to date are given in the table.

	1994–95	1995–96	1996–97	1997–98	1998–99	1999–2000[1]
Camberwell	80,902	151,767	101,582	168,512	88,911	38,536
Walworth	239,546	244,126	281,200	265,272	260,652	167,572
Peckham	225,157	353,337	310,582	350,333	301,601	142,366
Rotherhithe	178,522	426,663	81,135	66,910	107,672	41,359
Southwark	392,504	334,247	354,665	327,201	299,317	115,746
Tower Bridge	153,142	247,566	105,650	103,901	77,480	37,412
East Dulwich	144,414	144,420	165,915	217,071	188,978	91,912

[1] Expenditure only up to November 1999

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Gelatine

Mr. Yeo: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food (1) what steps he has taken to ensure that gelatine (a) as part of a food product and (b) as a separate ingredient imported into the United Kingdom is (i) produced by manufacturers certified according to ISO 9000 international standard, and (ii) has not been contaminated with brain, spinal cord and ocular tissues of cattle (A) born, (B) reared and (C) finished in countries where incidents of BSE have been reported; [117009]

(2) what guidance he gives to consumers seeking to obtain gelatine, (a) as part of a food product and (b) as a separate ingredient, that is free of BSE infectivity; [117026]

(3) what steps he is taking to ensure that gelatine (a) as part of a food product and (b) as a separate ingredient imported into the United Kingdom (i) has not been produced using hides from cattle that have shown signs of neurological diseases and (ii) is produced using bones and hides from countries (1) with no incidence of BSE and (2) which meet the OIE standards; [117010]

(4) what steps he is taking to ensure that gelatine (a) as part of a food product and (b) as a separate ingredient, imported into the United Kingdom is (i) free of BSE and (ii) accurately labelled with the country of origin and production. [117003]

Mr. Nick Brown [holding answer 30 March 2000]: There is a legal ban on the use of bovine raw materials of UK-origin to make gelatine for use in food. My Department carries out regular inspections of gelatine manufacturers in the UK to ensure compliance with the requirements.

There is no EU requirement for gelatine manufacturers to be certified according to the ISO 9000 standard, which is an audit standard to provide quality assurance guarantees.

In line with OIE guidelines, the Specified Risk Material Order 1997 requires imported gelatine and related products intended for human or animal consumption and which may come from countries with a significant risk of BSE, to be accompanied by official veterinary certification confirming that they do not contain and were not derived from Specified Risk Material. These import controls will remain in place until EU SRM controls are agreed.

In addition, imported bovine hides and skins which have not been pickled limed or tanned must be derived from animals which have passed ante- and post-mortem examinations and showed no signs of serious diseases communicable to man or animals. All such imports must be accompanied by veterinary health certification in accordance with EU requirements.

Food labelling rules, which are agreed at EU level, require prepacked foods to carry an ingredients list. These generally require gelatine to be listed as an ingredient.

INDEX TO THE

PARLIAMENTARY DEBATES

OFFICIAL REPORT

SIXTH SERIES VOLUME 347

SESSION 1999–2000

27th March—7th April 2000

Printed indexes to Hansard

The volume index is one of three printed indexes to Commons Hansard produced from the House of Commons Library's Parliamentary On-Line Indexing Service (POLIS). It contains references to material in the bound volumes of Hansard. The other indexes produced are:

- The fortnightly index to Hansard. This covers the same date range as the volume index but references are to the column numbering in the daily parts and weekly edition of Hansard.
- The sessional index to Hansard. This contains references to material in the bound volumes for a whole session.

Indexes on the Parliamentary website

Fortnightly, volume and sessional indexes covering material from the beginning of the 1999/2000 session will also appear on the Parliamentary website at http://www.parliament.uk with links to the full text of Hansard.

SCOPE

The indexes include entries covering:

- The content of all material recorded in Hansard, including debates, procedural motions and questions.
- The names of all Members contributing to the Parliamentary business recorded in Hansard.
- The names of some types of Parliamentary business whenever they occur in Hansard. These are 'Ministerial statements', 'Business statements', 'Opposition days' and 'Estimates days'.

ARRANGEMENT

- All headings are in one word-by-word alphabetical sequence, with Members' contribution entries distinguished from other entries by italics.
- Where a Member contributes to Parliamentary business and is the subject of Parliamentary business there are separate contribution and subject entries, the subject entry coming first.
- Entries beginning 'Mac' and 'Mc' are sorted in one sequence as 'Mac'.
- 'St', when abbreviated for Saint, is filed as 'Saint'.
- Numbers are filed as if spelt out, e.g. '10 Downing Street' as if 'Ten Downing Street'.

HEADINGS

Choice of headings

- Specificity—Entries summarise the overall content of a debate or question as specifically as the various POLIS thesauruses allow. For example, Education, Higher education, Universities or the name of a particular university is used depending on the breadth of the item.
- Name headings—Specific entries are included for the names of people, places, institutions, organisations, committees, programmes, initiatives, publications and legislation when these constitute the overall subject of an item.
- Organisations and subjects—Organisation entries are preferred for material about the general performance, administration and staffing of an organisation (for example, United Kingdom Passports Agency, Standards). Subject entries are preferred for what organisations do as part of their duties (for example, Passports, Fees and charges).

Geographical coverage

- Subject headings—Subject headings are assumed to refer to the whole of England, Great Britain or the United Kingdom unless otherwise stated.
- Scotland, Northern Ireland and Wales—Material relating to the whole of Scotland, Northern Ireland and Wales is indexed under these headings.
- Places within the UK—Material about specific towns, areas and institutions is entered under the name of the specific town, area or institution.
- Foreign countries—Most material relating to foreign countries is collected under the name of that country. Some additional material may be found under the names of—groups of countries, areas within countries, geographical features, place names associated with particular issues, politicians and heads of state, international bodies, and institutions and companies operating in those countries.
- EC/EU material—General material about the European Communities and European institutions as bodies is entered under 'European Communities' and 'EC institutions'. Organisational material about specific communities and institutions is entered under the name of the body, for example 'European Coal and Steel Community' or 'European Parliament'. Material about what the Communities and institutions are doing or propose to do is entered under various subject headings beginning 'EC' such as 'EC environmental policy'.

Parliamentary material and business

- Material about Parliament—This is indexed under 'Parliament', the names of the two Houses, the 'Palace of Westminster' and parts of the Parliamentary estate (such as 'Portcullis House').
- Committees—Material about committees is indexed under 'Committees', types of committee (such as 'Select committees') and the names of individual committees (such as 'Home Affairs Select Committee').
- Parliamentary proceedings/procedures—Material discussing these is indexed under the specific type of proceeding (such as 'Parliamentary questions' or 'Oral questions'), procedure (such as 'Calling of Members') or issue (such as 'Unparliamentary expressions').
- Legislation—Entries for Parliamentary proceedings on bills and statutory instruments are entered under their titles. Where the lead word of the bill or statutory instrument does not provide a full or clear indication of the subject there are additional subject entries when the bill or instrument is debated. For example, debates on the 'Child Support Pensions and Social Security Bill' have entries under 'Pensions' and 'Social security benefits' as well as under the title of the Bill.
- Members' names—These are given in the form by which the Member prefers to be known.
- Speaker and Chair—Contributions by the Speaker and deputies are brought together under the heading 'Speaker and deputies'. Contributions from the chair during Committees of the Whole House are brought together under 'Chairman of Committee of the Whole House'. Significant rulings and statements (as opposed to routine comments) are indicated by the sub-heading 'Rulings and statements' in both cases.

Guidance on headings

- Cross references—'See' references indicate all the material has been entered under another heading. 'See also' references indicate that additional information may be found under another heading.
- Concept thesaurus—A copy of the subject thesaurus to POLIS, listing the concept entries used in the index, is available on the Parliamentary website. A hard copy is available from the Head of the POLIS Unit, House of Commons Library, 1 Derby Gate, London, SW1A 2DG (020 7219 6456).

REFERENCES

- References in the indexes are to columns rather than pages.
- References to debates, but not questions, are accompanied by the date of the item.
- There are separate sequences in Hansard for the material taken on the floor of the House, Westminster Hall sittings and written questions:
  - References consisting of a number by itself indicate material taken on the floor of the House.
  - References ending in 'wh' indicate Westminster Hall sittings.
  - References ending in 'w' indicate written questions.
- References under all headings except the names of Members contributing to Parliamentary business and the titles of legislation are listed in one numerical sequence irrespective of whether the material is taken on the floor of the House, is discussed at a Westminster Hall sitting or is a written question.
- References under the names of Members contributing to Parliamentary business and the titles of legislation are listed in numerical sequence under the following headings:
  - Debates etc. (which includes interventions and points of order as well as significant contributions to debates);
  - Sittings in Westminster Hall (covering all debates held as part of the Westminster Hall sittings); and
  - Questions (which includes written, oral and private notice questions).

ABBREVIATIONS

The following abbreviations are used in connection with the progress of bills:

- 1R=First reading
- 2R=Second reading
- Com=Committee stage
- Rep=Report stage
- 3R=Third reading
- res=resolution
- amendt(s)=amendment(s)
- *=matter taken formally without debate or division.

Parliamentary background

- The Parliamentary website at http://www.parliament.uk contains a range of information about Parliament and the full text of some Parliamentary papers and proceedings including Hansard.
- Information on current Parliamentary business is provided in the House of Commons Information Office Weekly Information Bulletin, available on the website and from The Stationery Office (020 7873 8499).
- Further information on Parliamentary proceedings and procedures is available from the House of Commons Information Office (020 7219 4272).

Abbott, Ms Diane
Debates etc.
Child Support Pensions and Social Security Bill, Rep and 3R (03.04.00) 676, 690–3
Sittings in Westminster Hall
Immigration, Administrative delays (29.03.00) 109–14wh

Abolition of Feudal Tenure Bill (SP)
Questions
115w

Abortion
615w

Absent voting
376–7w

Access funds
Northern Ireland 94–5w

Access to work programme
74w, 294w

Accident and emergency departments
120w, 218–20

Accidents
Roads 545–6w
Stansted Airport 600w

Acute beds
Mental patients 59–60w

Additives
Animal feed 579–80w
Petrol 132w, 324–5w

Administration of justice
Customs and Excise 468–9w

Adoption
55–6w, 119w

Adult education
Northern Ireland 97–8w

Advantage West Midlands
430w

Advertising
Cabinet Office 198w
Dept for Education and Employment 40w

Aerials
Planning permission 429w

Affordable warmth programme
483–4w

Africa
AIDS 179w, 324–5
Primary education 178–9w

Agriculture
see also Farmers
249w, 339
Environment protection 252w, 457–8w, 560w
Petitions (29.03.00) 465–6
Waste disposal 81w, 326–7w

Agriculture Select Committee
(03.04.00) 782

AIDS
Africa 179w, 324–5
Children 179w
Zimbabwe 325–6

Ainger, Mr Nick
Questions
Milk, Imports 251w, 500–1w
Prescription drugs, Prices 202–3

Ainsworth, Mr Peter
Debates etc.
Documents, Points of order (05.04.00) 975
Questions
Arts Council of England, Manpower 153w
East Surrey Hospital, Nurses 618–9w

Ainsworth, Mr Peter*—*continued
Film 14–5
London Film Commission 359w
National Endowment for Science Technology and the Arts 261w
National Lottery 11–2
New Millennium Experience, Contracts 358w
News 24 359w
Oxted and Limpsfield Hospital 61w
Regional arts boards, Manpower 153w
Sportsgrounds, Belgium 471w
Surrey and Sussex NHS Trust, Resignations 618w

Air force
Military bases 29w

Air pollution
Fees and charges 224–5w

Air Quality (England) Regulations 2000
Debates etc.
(29.03.00) 464

Air routes
Heathrow Airport 427–8w
USA 604w

Air traffic
London airports 969

Aircraft
Essex 232w
Noise 232w
Seating 431w
Violence 421–2w

Aircraft carriers
Procurement 209w

Airports
St Helena 182–3w

Alcoholic drinks
Smuggling 462–3w, 492–3w

Aldershot
Military bases 207w

Alexander, Mr Douglas
Questions
Developing countries, Uruguay Round 185w

All party groups
42–3w

Allan, Mr Richard
Debates etc.
Learning and Skills Bill (HL), 2R (30.03.00) 516, 527, 539–46, 566
Sittings in Westminster Hall
Colombia, Peace negotiations (28.03.00) 4wh
Questions
New deal for young people 40–1w, 206w
POLIS 42w

Allowances
EC staff 631w

Alternative energy
239–40w, 477–8w
Dept of Health 219w
Landfill tax 260–1w
Waste disposal 227–8w

Alternative medicine
EC law 125–6w

Amber Valley
Schools 291–3w

Ambulance services
Durham County 353w
Standards 351w

Amess, Mr David
Debates etc.
Warm Homes and Energy Conservation Bill, Money res (04.04.00) 945
Zoo Licensing (Amendment) Bill, 1R (29.03.00) 344–6
Questions
Iran, Capital punishment 267–8w
Primary care groups, Public appointments 128w
Standard spending assessments, Southend 795
State retirement pensions, Uprating 624

Ammunition
323w
Procurement 160w

Analgesics
Death 114–5w, 123–4w

Ancillary staff
East Surrey Hospital 618–9w
NHS 136w, (05.04.00) 259–68wh

Anderson, Mr Donald
Questions
Kosovo, Construction 563–4w
Kosovo, Overseas aid 582w
Kosovo, Police 564w
UNMIK 556w

Anderson, Janet, Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State, Dept for Culture Media and Sport
Debates etc.
Wireless Telegraphy (Television Licence Fees) (Amendment) Regulations (28.03.00) 296–301, 303, 306, 308
Questions
Film 13–5, 64w
Members, Correspondence 67w
Millennium Exhibition, Attendance 64w
Millennium Exhibition, Parliamentary questions 358w
Millennium Exhibition, Tickets 357–8w
New Millennium Experience, Contracts 358w
Regulation, Dept for Culture Media and Sport 392w
Television, Disability aids 1–2
Tourism 65–6w
Tourism, Coastal areas 4–5, 67w

Animal experiments
369–70w
Disclosure of information 213–4w, 601–2w
Dogs 435–6w
Huntingdon Life Sciences 436–7w
Inspections 598w
Licensing 437w
Primates 436w
Rodents 369w, 437w
Wickham Research Laboratories 369w

Animal feed
Additives 579–80w
Genetically modified organisms 325w, 502w

Animal Procedures Committee
213–4w

Animal products
Beef 560–2w, 641–2w
Vaccination (28.03.00) 37–46wh
Waste disposal 36–7w

Animal welfare
Quarantine 37w

Anniversaries
European Communities, 157w
Korean War 25w

Antenatal care
Screening 218w

Antidepressants
Costs 394w

Antisocial behaviour orders
634–5w

Appeals Service
Standards 273w

Appointments Commission
Public appointments 407w

Apprentices
Rover Group 74w

Arachnoiditis
Research 191w

Areas of outstanding natural beauty
411w

Argentina
Beef 173–4w

Armagh
Flags 280–1w

Armed conflict
Democratic Republic of Congo 564w
Sri Lanka 465w

Armed forces
Cadets 25–6w, 162w
Catering 305w
Conduct 295w
Financial services 35w
Higher education 161w
Housing 29w
Israel 397w
Manpower 304w
St Helena 467w
Scotland 29w
Sri Lanka 488–9w

Armed Forces Discipline Bill (HL) 1999/2000
Debates etc.
Rep and 3R (06.04.00) 1164–209

Arms trade
Azerbaijan 631w
Pakistan 188–9w
Sub-Saharan Africa 183–4w
Uganda 620–1w
Zimbabwe 194–5w, 620–1w

Armstrong, Rt Hon Hilary, Minister of State for Local Government and Housing, Dept of the Environment Transport and the Regions*
Questions
Council tax, Second homes 808–9
Local government, Reform 791–3
Millennium Exhibition, Valuation 320w
Regional development agencies 412w
Standard spending assessments 412–3w
Urban aid 412w, 482w
Urban Task Force 804–5

Army
Reserve forces 396–7w
Scotland 28–9w
Training 28–9w

Arrears
Mortgages 473w

Arson
Crime prevention 137–8w

Art works
Cabinet Office 385–6w
Dept for Culture Media and Sport 392–3w
Dept of Health 615w
Dept of Social Security 531w
Dept of the Environment Transport and the Regions 484–5w

Art works—continued*
Dept of Trade and Industry 479w
EC action 480w
Lord Chancellor's Dept 472w
Ministry of Agriculture Fisheries and Food 560w
Ministry of Defence 556w
Treasury 496w

Artillery
Procurement 603w

Arts Council of England
Manpower 153w

Assembly Cabinet
see NAW Assembly Cabinet

Assisted areas
Scotland 110w, 249w

Astra Holdings
Company investigations 188w

Asylum
see Refugees

Atherton, Ms Candy
Debates etc.
Sign language (05.04.00) 1126
Questions
Drift nets, Dolphins 455w

Athletics
Sportsgrounds 540w

Atkins, Charlotte
Questions
Textiles 236w
Theatre, Young people 64–5w

Atkinson, Mr David
Questions
Chechnya, Overseas aid 331

Atkinson, Mr Peter
Questions
Schools, Northumberland 973–4

Atomic Weapons Establishment
159–60w, 486–7w, 552w

Austin, Mr John
Debates etc.
Child Support Pensions and Social Security Bill, Rep and 3R (03.04.00) 693–4, 703
Questions
Arms trade, Uganda 620–1w
Democratic Republic of Congo, Armed conflict 564w
Health services, Technicians 55w
NHS, Pay 342w

Australia
State retirement pensions 35w

Automated credit transfer
Social security benefits 454w, 532w

Average earnings
Scotland 47–8w

Aviation
Excise duties 459–60w
Freight 233w
Government assistance 241w, 488–9
Ministers 248w, 391w, 465w
Prime Minister 279w

Avon Health Authority
Finance 61w
Waiting lists 60w

Azerbaijan
Arms trade 631w
Overseas investment 106w

Babies
619w

Babies—continued*
Hearing 617w

Baker, Norman
Sittings in Westminster Hall
Vaccination, Animal products (28.03.00) 37–42wh, 45wh
Questions
Advertising, Cabinet Office 198w
Alternative energy, Waste disposal 227–8w
Animal experiments, Dogs 435–6w
Animal experiments, Inspections 598w
Animal experiments, Primates 436w
Children, Abuse 435w
China, Human rights 285w
Dogs, Exports 501w
Horses 35w
Huntingdon Life Sciences, Animal experiments 436–7w
Intelligence services, Surveillance 389w
Interception warrants 280w
Landfill tax, Alternative energy 260–1w
Levy, Lord 25w, 76w, 245w, 261–2w, 489w, 574w
Members, Surveillance 279w
Millennium Exhibition, Parliamentary questions 358w
Millennium Exhibition, Tickets 357–8w
Non-departmental public bodies, Public appointments 523w
Primates, Infectious diseases 357w
Prozac 62w
Quarantine, Animal welfare 37w
Royal prerogative 143w
Sexual offences, Males 4w
Social services, Finance 228w, 259w
Social services, Local government finance 217w
Visits abroad, Prime Minister 574w

Ballard, Jackie
Debates etc.
Criminal Justice and Court Services Bill, 2R (28.03.00) 225, 241, 273–9
Questions
MMR vaccine 349w

Ballistic missile defence
400w
Israel 398w, 488w
USA 209w, 408–9w, 487w, 563w

Bananas
EC external trade 46w

Bangladesh
Public order 267w

Bank services
152–3w
Competition 256w
Scotland 152–3w
Social security benefits 152w, 331–2w

Bankruptcy
Farmers 250w
Pensions 111w
Scotland 111w

Banks
Closures (29.03.00) 70–91wh
Rural areas 47w, 68w

Banks, Mr Tony
Debates etc.
Wild Mammals (Hunting with Dogs) Bill, 2R adjourned (07.04.00) 1313, 1321, 1329

Banner Committee
see Animal Procedures Committee

Barclays Bank
47w
Suffolk (29.03.00) 70–91wh

Barmac
406–7w

Barnes, Mr Harry
Sittings in Westminster Hall
Barclays Bank, Suffolk (29.03.00) 76wh, 83–4wh
Questions
Beta-interferon 202
Business questions 1158
Social security benefits, Post offices 613–4

Barron, Mr Kevin
Debates etc.
Industrial injuries, Compensation (30.03.00) 600–4
Questions
Meningitis, Yorkshire and Humberside 212

Basic education
Overseas aid 185–6w

Basildon
Family credit 473–5w
Pensioners 473w

Bass
Fishing catches 82w

Baton rounds
Northern Ireland 89–90w

Battle, Mr John, Minister of State, Foreign and Commonwealth Office
Sittings in Westminster Hall
Colombia, Peace negotiations (28.03.00) 9wh, 16–22wh
USA, Overseas trade (29.03.00) 106–8wh
Questions
Brazil, Deputy Prime Minister 409w
British dependent territories, Homosexuality 170w
Burma, Overseas investment 465w
Chechnya, Terrorism 267w
China, Human rights 285w
China, State visits 52–3w
Diplomatic relations 54w
East Timor, Refugees 54w
Indonesia, Human rights 170–1w
Indonesia, Kidnapping 29w
Nyima, Gedhun Choekyi 54w
Parking, Foreign and Commonwealth Office 268w
St Helena, Armed forces 467w
St Helena, Economic situation 468w
St Helena, Employment 467w
St Helena, Fisheries 467w
USA, Scotland 103w, 169–70w

Bayley, Mr Hugh, Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State, Dept of Social Security
Sittings in Westminster Hall
Disability living allowance (05.04.00) 246–51wh
Questions
Children, Poverty 333–4w, 449–50w
Disability living allowance 163–4w, 449w
Disability living allowance, Administrative delays 627–8w
Disability living allowance, Appeals 337–8w
Disability living allowance, Mentally ill 164w
Disabled, Employment 334w
Incapacity benefit 162–3w
Incapacity benefit, Administrative delays 34w
Income support, Capital rules 453–4w
Income support, Mortgages 341w, 454w
Industrial injuries disablement benefit 34w
Industrial injuries disablement benefit, Statistics 531w

Bayley, Mr Hugh—continued
Invalid vehicles 451w
Parking, Dept of Social Security 272w
Pensioners, Income support 166w, 448w, 473w, 531–2w
Poverty, Leeds 115–7w
Social security benefits, Capital rules 617–9
Social security benefits, Children 117w
Social security benefits, Refugees 115w, 452w, 612–3
Social security benefits, Scotland 115w
Social security benefits, Take-up 626–8
War pensions 453–4w
War pensions, Radiation exposure 164–5w

Beard, Mr Nigel
Debates etc.
Budget March 2000 (27.03.00) 97–100, 119
Questions
Theatre 65w

Beckett, Rt Hon Margaret, President of the Council and Leader of the House of Commons
Questions
Appointments Commission, Public appointments 407w
Business questions 496–511, 1152–63
Business statements 495–511, 1151–63
Orders and regulations 582–3w
Privy Council Office Judicial Committee, Scotland 361–2w

Beef
Animal products 560–2w, 641–2w
Argentina 173–4w
Imports 249w, 560–2w

Begg, Miss Anne
Debates etc.
Wireless Telegraphy (Television Licence Fees) (Amendment) Regulations (28.03.00) 304–6
Questions
Television, Disability aids 2

Begging and vagrancy
Refugees 439w

Beith, Rt Hon A J
Sittings in Westminster Hall
River Tyne, Shipbuilding (04.04.00) 158wh
Questions
Lindisfarne Gospels 246w

Belgium
Sportsgrounds 471w

Bell, Mr Martin
Debates etc.
Armed Forces Discipline Bill (HL), Rep and 3R (06.04.00) 1184–5, 1205

Bell, Mr Stuart, Second Church Estates Commissioner
Questions
Church of England, Finance 17–8, 20
Churches, VAT 16–7
Clergy, Manpower 52w
Redundant churches, Property transfer 52w

Benefits Agency
see Social Security Benefits Agency

Benn, Mr Hilary
Debates etc.
Learning and Skills Bill (HL), 2R (30.03.00) 561
Questions
Adult education, Northern Ireland 97–8w
Burma, Overseas investment 465w
Business questions 1152–3

Benn, Mr Hilary—continued
Neighbourhood nuisance, Rented housing 414w
Poverty, Leeds 115–7w
Utilities, Prices 107–8w, 479w

Benn, Rt Hon Tony
Debates etc.
Child Support Pensions and Social Security Bill, Rep and 3R (03.04.00) 680–1, 699
Freedom of Information Bill, Rep and 3R (05.04.00) 999–1001, 1008, 1022
Questions
Pensioners, Income 610
Rover Group 640–2

Bercow, Mr John
Debates etc.
Armed Forces Discipline Bill (HL), Rep and 3R (06.04.00) 1164
Budget March 2000 (27.03.00) 43
Child Support Pensions and Social Security Bill, Rep (29.03.00) 364, 366, 371, 373, 378–9, 384, 432–3, 440
Child Support Pensions and Social Security Bill, Rep and 3R (03.04.00) 646, 651, 671
Criminal Justice and Court Services Bill, 2R (28.03.00) 227–30, 233, 240, 249
Freedom of Information Bill, Rep (04.04.00) 861, 864–5, 869, 894–5, 904
Freedom of Information Bill, Rep and 3R (05.04.00) 985, 1040, 1042
Grammar schools, Points of order (03.04.00) 643
Housing (04.04.00) 822
Ministers, Points of order (28.03.00) 221–2, (05.04.00) 978–80
Telecommunications, Petitions (29.03.00) 466
Wild Mammals (Hunting with Dogs) Bill, 2R adjourned (07.04.00) 1268–9, 1272–4, 1276, 1282, 1286, 1310
Questions
Business questions 510, 1161–2
Employment, Discrimination 73w
European Communities, Anniversaries 157w
Mental health services, Racial discrimination 209
National Lottery 6
Small businesses, Regulation 481w
Social Exclusion Unit 963–4
Social security benefits, Abuse 335w
Textiles 484
Urban Task Force 804–5

Beresford, Sir Paul
Questions
Home improvement agencies, Contracts 228w
Regional airports, South East region 228–9w

Berkshire
Hospitals 508w

Berry, Mr Roger
Questions
Access to work programme 74w
Education, Disabled 204w
Mergers 186–7w

Beta-interferon
201–2, 510–1w

Better government programme
Elderly 76w, 527w, 964–5

Bingo
Fees and charges 593–4w

Birds
Special protection areas 112w

Blackman, Mrs Liz
Questions
Electricity generation, Safety 106w
Heart diseases, Health services 119w

Blair, Rt Hon Tony, Prime Minister, First Lord of the Treasury and Minister for the Civil Service*
Debates etc.
Lisbon Summit (EC), Ministerial statements (27.03.00) 21–36
Questions
Air traffic, London airports 969
Aviation, Ministers 248w, 391w
Aviation, Prime Minister 279w
BMW 339
British Nuclear Fuels 390w
Cancer, Health services 339
Cash dispensing, Fees and charges 335
Clinton, Bill 280w
Council of Ministers, Disclosure of information 389–90w
Disability aids 336
Ethiopia, Famine 972–3
Fiscal policy 970–1
Genetic engineering, Patents 247–8w
Grammar schools, Trafford 973
Intelligence services, Surveillance 389w
Interception warrants 280w
Internet, Prime Minister 38–9w
Kashmir 968
Levy, Lord 245–6w, 574w
Liddle, Roger 39w
Lindisfarne Gospels 246w
Lisbon Summit (EC) 248w, 390w
Local Government Act 1988, Homosexuality 337–9
Maintenance, Tax allowances 969–70
Members, Surveillance 279w
Ministerial policy advisors 280w
NATO, Nuclear weapons 247w
Nelson, Rosemary 171–2w
NHS, Finance 104w
Non-departmental public bodies, Prime Minister 244–5w
North American Free Trade Agreement 279w
Nuclear disarmament 247w
Nurses, Recruitment 332, 965–6
Official engagements, Prime Minister 171w, 471w
Organic farming 339–40
Paternity leave 389w
Pensioners, Income 968–9, 971–2
Pensioners, Income support 337
Pensioners, Married personal allowance 965
Pensioners, Scotland 973
Pigs 39w
Post offices, Cash dispensing 340
Post offices, Rural areas 340–2
Prescott, John, Correspondence 390w
Primary education, Conferences 573–4w
Primary education, Equal opportunities 574w, 974
Radiation, Research 38w
Refugees 970, 972
Roll-on roll-off ships, Procurement 339
Rover Group, Longbridge 332–5, 966–8
Schools, Northumberland 973–4
Sellafield, Quality control 335–6
Telecommunications 38w
United Nations, Conferences 38w
Visits abroad, Prime Minister 574w
Wind power, Planning permission 336–7

Blizzard, Mr Bob
Debates etc.
Learning and Skills Bill (HL), 2R (30.03.00) 514, 519

Blizzard, Mr Bob—continued*
Sittings in Westminster Hall
Barclays Bank, Suffolk (29.03.00) 70–3wh, 79–80wh
Questions
Aircraft, Seating 431w
British Nuclear Fuels, Public private partnerships 193w
Business, Regulation 240w
Gas fired power stations 406w
Nurses, Recruitment 965–6
Schools, Standards 388w
State retirement pensions, Uprating 334–5w

Blue Arrow
Company investigations 187–8w

Blunkett, Rt Hon David, Secretary of State for Education and Employment*
Debates etc.
Learning and Skills Bill (HL), 2R (30.03.00) 513–23, 531
Questions
Education, Finance 205w, 519–20w
Students, Fees and charges 153–4w
Training, Expenditure 539w

Blunt, Mr Crispin
Debates etc.
Armed Forces Discipline Bill (HL), Rep and 3R (06.04.00) 1164–6, 1170, 1172–3, 1176–8, 1183, 1186–7, 1190, 1205–6
Wild Mammals (Hunting with Dogs) Bill, 2R adjourned (07.04.00) 1267–8, 1271, 1283, 1287, 1312, 1319, 1323
Questions
Child Support Agency, Reform 337w
Housing, Surrey 414w
Migration, Greater London 257–8w
Ministerial policy advisors 522w

BMW
196w, 339
Retail trade 196w

Board of Inland Revenue
see Inland Revenue

Boateng, Rt Hon Paul, Minister of State, Home Office*
Debates etc.
Criminal Justice and Court Services Bill, 2R (28.03.00) 228, 232, 237, 242, 268, 274, 285–90
Sittings in Westminster Hall
Voluntary work (05.04.00) 256–8wh
Questions
Domestic violence 377–8w
Drugs, Abuse 631–2w
Drugs, Screening 12w
Euro, Forgery 632w
Home detention curfews 9–12w, 85–6w, 139–40w, 144–5w, 446w
Organised crime, EC action 634w
Police, EC countries 633w
Portland Young Offender Institution, Abuse 440w
Prison Service, Females 380–1w
Prison Service, Standards 213–4w
Prisoners, Handbooks 141w
Prisoners, Rehabilitation 13w
Prisoners on remand 142w
Prisoners' release 365–6w
Prisons, Drugs 86w, 370w
Prisons, Overcrowding 6–9w
Probation and aftercare, Information technology 5w
Probation and aftercare, Public appointments 12–3w
Segregation of prisoners 370w

Body, Sir Richard
Debates etc.
Livestock, Exports (07.04.00) 1340
Wild Mammals (Hunting with Dogs) Bill, 2R adjourned (07.04.00) 1308, 1311, 1326
Questions
EC law 562w
European Police Office 600w
European Police Office, Firearms 600w
European Police Office, Training 600–1w
European Police Office, Uniforms 601w
Genetically modified organisms, Crops 18w
Police, EC countries 601w

Bone diseases
Children 356w

Boswell, Mr Tim
Debates etc.
Learning and Skills Bill (HL), 2R (30.03.00) 514, 542–3, 547, 558–9, 568, 570, 572–3, 587–91
Questions
Civil servants, Equal opportunities 523w
Disability aids 386w
Disability living allowance 163–4w
Employers' Forum on Disability, Government departments 566w
Higher education, Finance 157w
Higher education, Overseas students 387w
Incapacity benefit 162–3w
Individual learning accounts 295w
Internet, Disabled 72–3w
Pre-school education, Hearing impaired 387w
Rover Group, Apprentices 74w
Social security benefits, Post offices 615
Socrates programme 289–90w
Students, Fees and charges 520w
Teachers, Hearing impaired 387w
Vocational guidance, Standards 293w
World Education Forum 181–2w

Bottomley, Mr Peter
Debates etc.
Warm Homes and Energy Conservation Bill, Money res (04.04.00) 946
Wireless Telegraphy (Television Licence Fees) (Amendment) Regulations (28.03.00) 299, 303, 305–9, 311

Bottomley, Rt Hon Virginia
Debates etc.
Matrimonial proceedings (04.04.00) 947–52
Questions
Hospitals, Waiting lists 135w
NHS, Voluntary work 136w, 220w
Public appointments, NHS 523w
Public libraries, Voluntary work 358–9w
Social services, Voluntary work 347w

Bovine spongiform encephalopathy
558w
EC countries 174w
Waste disposal 250w

Bovine Spongiform Encephalopathy and Creutzfeld Jakob Disease Inquiry
174w

Bradley, Mr Peter
Debates etc.
Child Support Pensions and Social Security Bill, Rep (29.03.00) 449, 454
Questions
Blue Arrow, Company investigations 187–8w
Business questions 506
Civil Service College 360–1w
Internet, Rural areas 238w

Bradley, Mr Peter—continued
Roads, Rural areas 17w

Bradshaw, Mr Ben
Debates etc.
Lisbon Summit (EC) (27.03.00) 35–6
Questions
Operating costs, Ministry of Agriculture Fisheries and Food 250–1w

Brady, Mr Graham
Debates etc.
Armed Forces Discipline Bill (HL), Rep and 3R (06.04.00) 1164
Learning and Skills Bill (HL), 2R (30.03.00) 567, 576–9
Public appointments, Points of order (30.03.00) 512
Sittings in Westminster Hall
Radiation, Research (29.03.00) 47–51wh, 54wh, 66wh
Questions
Business questions 508, 1155–6
Councillors 18–9w
Employment, Football 42w, 586w
Foreign investment in UK, North West region 240w
Grammar schools, Trafford 539w, 973
Married personal allowance, Pensioners 1141–2
Members, Correspondence 140w
Migration, Urban areas 458w
New deal for lone parents 336w
NHS, Public appointments 220w
Parliamentary questions, Treasury 330w
Press releases, Cabinet Office 76w, 526w
Radiation, Research 38w

Brake, Mr Tom
Debates etc.
Warm Homes and Energy Conservation Bill, Money res (04.04.00) 940
Questions
Art works, Cabinet Office 385–6w
Art works, Dept for Culture Media and Sport 392–3w
Art works, Dept of Health 615w
Art works, Dept of Social Security 531w
Art works, Dept of the Environment Transport and the Regions 484–5w
Art works, Dept of Trade and Industry 479w
Art works, Lord Chancellor's Dept 472w
Art works, Ministry of Agriculture Fisheries and Food 560w
Art works, Ministry of Defence 556w
Art works, Treasury 496w
Housing, South East region 321w
Incinerators 306–9w
London Regional Transport, Consultants 310w
London Underground, Escalators 310–1w
London Underground, Standards 309–10w
Migration 233–5w, 254–5w
National Institute for Clinical Excellence 122w
Population 321w
Water treatment, Drinking water 320–1w

Brand, Dr Peter
Sittings in Westminster Hall
NHS Direct (06.04.00) 269wh, 272–3wh, 275–6wh, 281wh, 286wh, 292–6wh, 299wh, 301wh, 303–5wh
Questions
Health action zones 205

Brazier, Mr Julian
Debates etc.
Lisbon Summit (EC) (27.03.00) 34
Questions
Child care tax credit 330w

Brazier, Mr Julian—continued
Pensioners, Income 609–10
Social services 206

Brazil
Deputy Prime Minister 409w

Breed, Mr Colin
Questions
Ambulance services, Standards 351w
Animal products, Waste disposal 36–7w
Bovine spongiform encephalopathy 558w
Fishing vessels, Safety measures 800
Ministerial Group on Rural Affairs 958–9
Teachers, Computers 40w

Brinton, Mrs Helen
Questions
Convention on International Trade in Endangered Species, Ivory 806
Recycling, Packaging 623w

British dependent territories
Homosexuality 170w

British Leyland
see Rover Group

British Nuclear Fuels
390w, 404w, 479w
Directors 105–6w
Public private partnerships 193w

British Transport Police
486w, 521–2w

Brooke, Rt Hon Peter
Debates etc.
Learning and Skills Bill (HL), 2R (30.03.00) 580–4
Questions
Business questions 502–3, 1156
Employment 235w
Social security benefits, Abuse 335–6w

Broomfield Hospital
Hospital beds 62–3w

Brown, Rt Hon Gordon, Chancellor of the Exchequer
Questions
Pensioners, Income 1135–8
Tax allowances, Manufacturing industries 1147–9
Working families tax credit 1133–5

Brown, Rt Hon Nicholas, Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food
Questions
Agriculture 249w
Beef, Animal products 560–2w, 641–2w
Food Standards Agency 83–4w
Local authorities, Correspondence 35w

Brown, Mr Russell
Debates etc.
Budget March 2000 (27.03.00) 113
Questions
Pensioners, Scotland 973
Scottish Power, Debts 113–4w
Valuation Office, Standards 459w

Browne, Mr Desmond
Debates etc.
Child Support Pensions and Social Security Bill, Rep (29.03.00) 408, 432, 445–6
Wireless Telegraphy (Television Licence Fees) (Amendment) Regulations (28.03.00) 293, 303, 311–4
Sittings in Westminster Hall
Colombia, Peace negotiations (28.03.00) 1–6wh
Questions
Business questions 503–4
Developing countries, Debts 327–8

Browne, Mr Desmond—continued
Maintenance, Children 623
Moldova, Russia 267w

Browning, Mrs Angela
Debates etc.
Documents, Points of order (30.03.00) 598
Oral question time intervention (30.03.00) 478
Rover Group, Points of order (27.03.00) 37, (29.03.00) 343
Sittings in Westminster Hall
Radiation, Research (29.03.00) 51wh, 64–6wh, 68wh
Questions
Rover Group 629–32
Rover Group, Longbridge 479–80, 491–2

Bruce, Mr Ian
Questions
Computers, Dept of Social Security 475–6w
Computers, Dept of Trade and Industry 623–4w
Computers, Ministry of Defence 489w
Computers, Treasury 499w
Electronic commerce 483
Members, Correspondence 522w
Mongolia, Overseas aid 180w
Telecommunications, Regulation 239w

Bruce, Mr Malcolm
Debates etc.
Budget March 2000 (27.03.00) 46
Questions
Disaster relief 178w
Military bases, Aldershot 207w
Non-domestic rates, Scotland 540–2w

BSE Inquiry
see Bovine Spongiform Encephalopathy and Creutzfeld Jakob Disease Inquiry

Buck, Ms Karen
Debates etc.
Housing (04.04.00) 823
Questions
Early years development plans 41w
Housing benefit, Child care tax credit 271w
Pupil exclusions 206w
Urban aid 412w, 482w
Working families tax credit 146w

Buckinghamshire
Cleft palate 218w
NHS trusts 617w

Buckinghamshire Health Authority
Finance 507w, 617w

Budget March 2000
(27.03.00) 41–184

Burden, Mr Richard
Questions
Rover Group 632–3
Rover Group, Longbridge 109–10w, 476, 481w

Burgon, Mr Colin
Debates etc.
Budget March 2000 (27.03.00) 84–5
Questions
Bingo, Fees and charges 593–4w
Gaming clubs, Opening hours 383w
Immigration controls, Disclosure of information 590–1w

Burma
Human rights (05.04.00) 201–21wh
Overseas investment 465w
Refugees 471–2w

Burnett, Mr John
Questions
Nursing homes, Fees and charges 124–5w
Taxation, Companies 149w

Burns, Mr Simon
Debates etc.
Child Support Pensions and Social Security Bill, Rep (29.03.00) 351–3, 358, 362–3, 402–5, 407, 409, 415–7
Questions
Broomfield Hospital, Hospital beds 62–3w
Class sizes, Essex 75w
Housing, Chelmsford 111w, 807–8
Maintenance, Children 621–2
Mid Essex Hospital Services NHS Trust, Private sector 217w
Mozambique, Disaster relief 328–9
Winter fuel payments, Chelmsford 118w

Burnt Oak
Flood control 560w

Burstow, Mr Paul
Debates etc.
Child Support Pensions and Social Security Bill, Rep (29.03.00) 425–8, 430, 457–61
Child Support Pensions and Social Security Bill, Rep and 3R (03.04.00) 670–3, 679, 706, 711, 739–40, 744–5, 769
Pain, Health services (29.03.00) 467–70
Questions
Babies, Hearing 617w
Better government programme, Elderly 964–5
Chronic fatigue syndrome 395w
Class sizes 296–7w
Elderly, Institutional care 63w
Fares, Concessions 805
Hospital beds 351w
Income support, Capital rules 453–4w
Income support, Mortgages 341w
Social security benefits, Overpayments 447w
Sub-Saharan Africa, Arms trade 183–4w
Television, Disability aids 1–2

Bus lanes
M4 313–4w

Bus services
481–3w
Greater London 414w

Buses
Disabled 491w

Business
Information technology 413–4w
Regulation 203–4w, 240w
Tax exemption certificates 491–2w
Taxation 496w

Business statements
495–511, 1151–63

Butterfill, Mr John
Debates etc.
Child Support Pensions and Social Security Bill, Rep and 3R (03.04.00) 748–9, 755–60, 763–4, 766

By-election writs
Romsey (06.04.00) 1133

Byers, Rt Hon Stephen, Secretary of State for Trade and Industry*
Questions
Aviation, Government assistance 241w, 488–9
BMW 196w
BMW, Retail trade 196w
Buildings, Dept of Trade and Industry 108w
EC grants and loans 624w
Export credit guarantees, Romania 533w
Future large aircraft, Government assistance 487–8
Government assistance, EC law 242w
Land Rover 240w
Land Rover, Pension rights 622w
Longbridge Task Force 534–5w
Manufacturing industries, West Midlands 490–1
Milk, Competition 236–7w
National Weights and Measures Laboratory, Standards 191–3w
NAW Assembly Cabinet, Dept of Trade and Industry 108–9w
Performance and Innovation Unit, Post offices 238w
Post Office 236w
Radiation, Research 45–6w, 194w, 277w, 533w, 623w
Regional development agencies, Small businesses 43–4w
Regional selective assistance 189–90w
Regulation, Dept of Trade and Industry 534w
Rover Group 629–42
Rover Group, Longbridge 109–10w, 190w, 197w, 475–80, 481w, 491–2
Rover Group, Retail trade 190–1w, 196–7w
Science, International cooperation 45–6w
Sellafield 533w
Small businesses, Company accounts 405–6w
USA 623w

C17 aircraft
Kosovo 300w

Cabinet of the National Assembly for Wales
see NAW Assembly Cabinet

Cabinet Office
Advertising 198w
Art works 385–6w
Economic and monetary union 70w
Ministerial policy advisors 525–6w
Parking 565w
Press releases 76w, 526w
Regulation 385w

Cable, Mr Vincent
Debates etc.
Graffiti (27.03.00) 191–3
Sittings in Westminster Hall
Barclays Bank, Suffolk (29.03.00) 84–6wh
River Tyne, Shipbuilding (04.04.00) 167–8wh
Questions
Cellular phones, Licensing 590w
Civil servants, Ministry of Agriculture Fisheries and Food 80w
Employee share ownership schemes 1139–40
Export credit guarantees, Turkey 476–7w
Hospitals, Hygiene 122w
Mental patients, Acute beds 59–60w
Mentally disturbed offenders, Inquiries 56–7w
Microsoft, Telewest Communications 194w
Rover Group 633–4
Rover Group, Longbridge 477
School libraries, Computers 154w
Schools, Internet 205–6w
Secure psychiatric units, Greater London 126w
Telecommunications 38w

Caborn, Rt Hon Richard, Minister for Trade, Dept of Trade and Industry*
Questions
Bananas, EC external trade 46w
EC grants and loans 480–1w
EC grants and loans, Departmental coordination 481w
Export credit guarantees, Turkey 476–7w
Foreign investment in UK, North West region 240w
Fujitsu, Government assistance 476w
Global enterprise initiative 46w
Hydro Agri (UK), Redundancy 44w
Overseas investment, Azerbaijan 106w
Overseas trade, India 484–5
Phoenix Fund 188w
Radiation, Research 481
Rover Group 489–90
Rover Group, Longbridge 489
Science, Departmental coordination 480–1
Small businesses, Government assistance 241–2w
Textiles 236w
Trade promotion, Sri Lanka 406w

Cadets
Armed forces 25–6w, 162w

Campbell, Mr Alan
Sittings in Westminster Hall
River Tyne, Shipbuilding (04.04.00) 157–61wh

Campbell, Mrs Anne
Questions
Appeals Service, Standards 273w
Education, Standard spending assessments 293–4w
Health, Females 130w
Income tax, Tax yields 150w
Standards, Dept of Social Security 274–6w

Campbell, Rt Hon Menzies
Debates etc.
Armed Forces Discipline Bill (HL), Rep and 3R (06.04.00) 1167–8, 1171–2, 1175–6, 1182–3, 1192–3, 1202–3

Campbell, Mr Ronnie
Debates etc.
Child Support Pensions and Social Security Bill, Rep and 3R (03.04.00) 699

Campbell-Savours, Mr Dale
Debates etc.
Freedom of Information Bill, Rep and 3R (05.04.00) 1057
Lisbon Summit (EC) (27.03.00) 32
Questions
Business questions 1154
Economic and monetary union 486–7
Kosovo, Overseas aid 176w
National Audit Office 19
NHS, Information technology 511–3w
Prosecutions, Fraud 468w
Sport action zones 65w
Teachers, Pensions 204–5w

Camperdown Garden Village
Planning permission 98w

Canada
Habitual offenders 376w

Cancer
Health services 123w, 339
Low incomes 344w
Surgery 350–1w

Capital Modernisation Fund
258w
NHS 509w

Capital punishment
Iran 267–8w

Capital rules
Income support 453–4w
Social security benefits 617–9

Capitation allowances
Secondary education 604w

Caplin, Mr Ivor
Questions
Freedom of Information Bill 1999/2000 435w
NHS, Finance 617–8w

Cars
Prices 404w, 622w

Cash, Mr William
Questions
Developing countries, Debts 175w

Cash dispensing
Fees and charges 335
Post offices 340

Catering
Armed forces 305w

Caton, Mr Martin
Questions
Inland Revenue, Personal records 500w

Cellular phones
Health hazards 580w
Licensing 590w

Census (Amendment) Bill (HL) 1999/2000
Debates etc.
2R order read (07.04.00) 1335

Centre for Management and Policy Studies
360–1w

Chancellor of the Exchequer see Treasury

Channel Islands
Taxation 594w

Chapelcross power station
Tritium 303w

Chapman, Mr Ben
Questions
Modernising government programme 525w

Chapman, Sir Sydney
Questions
Chechnya, Overseas aid 331
Excise duties, Fuels 589w
Excise duties, Petrol 589w
Horn of Africa, Famine 182w
Listed buildings, Greater London 547–8w
Planning permission 317w
Sports, Greater London 9

Charities
Shares 589–90w
Tax allowances 589–90w

Chatham Dockyard
Correspondence 397w

Chaytor, Mr David
Debates etc.
Learning and Skills Bill (HL), 2R (30.03.00) 514, 527–8, 530–1, 552
Questions
Business questions 507–8
EC institutions, Operating costs 101–2w
EC institutions, UK delegations 102–3w
Genetically modified organisms, Food 501w
Ionizing radiation, EC law 19w
Mixed oxide fuel, Health hazards 349w
NHS, Complaints 513–4w
Nuclear power stations, Industrial health and safety 108w
Radioactive materials, Food 63w

Chaytor, Mr David*—*continued
Radioactive materials, Japan 476w
Radioactive wastes, Waste disposal 18w, 485w
Sellafield, Quality control 105w

Chechnya
Overseas aid 330–1
Terrorism 267w

Chelmsford
Housing 111w, 807–8
Winter fuel payments 118w

Chemical and biological warfare
206–7w
Iraq 264–5w
Research 488w, 553–5w

Chemists' shops
Rural areas 619w

Cheshire
Education 316w

Chidgey, Mr David
Debates etc.
Lisbon Summit (EC) (27.03.00) 36
Questions
Business questions 504–5

Child benefit
30w

Child care tax credit
328–30w, 583w
Housing benefit 271w
Norwich 49w
Scotland 145–6w
Southwark 146w

Child support
Maintenance 33w

Child Support Agency
Compensation 337w
Computers 621–2
Reform 337w

Child Support Pensions and Social Security Bill 1999/2000
Debates etc.
Rep adjourned (29.03.00) 347–464
Rep and 3R (03.04.00) 644–781

Children
497–8w
Abuse 60w, 435w
AIDS 179w
Bone diseases 356w
Cycling 19w
Day care 41w
Maintenance 336–7w, 449w, 621–4, 630w
Museums and galleries 15–6
Poverty 333–4w, 449–50w
Social security benefits 117w

Children in care
Crimes of violence 62w
Prescription drugs 59w

Children's rights
60w

China
Human rights 285w
State visits 52–3w

Chope, Mr Christopher
Questions
Business questions 1154
Pensioners, Income 1137
Phoenix Fund 188w
Rover Group 642

Chronic fatigue syndrome
395w

Chronically sick
Health services (29.03.00) 92–100wh

Church, Ms Judith
Questions
Smoking, Health education 614w
Smoking related diseases, Medical treatments 351w

Church of England
Finance 17–8, 20

Churches
VAT 16–7, 583–4w

Circuses
Licensing (29.03.00) 344–6

City of London (Ward Elections) Bill 1998/99
Debates etc.
Order for further consideration read (29.03.00) 323, (05.04.00) 957

City of Newcastle upon Tyne Bill (HL) 1998/99
Debates etc.
3R order read (28.03.00) 201, (04.04.00) 791

Civil servants
Age 80w
Equal opportunities 523w
Ethnic groups 525w
Ministry of Agriculture Fisheries and Food 80w
Resignations 361w

Civil service
Modernising government programme 524w
Secondment 198–201w

Civil Service College
360–1w

Clapham, Mr Michael
Questions
Business questions 1159
Health action zones 203–4

Clappison, Mr James
Questions
Advertising, Dept for Education and Employment 40w
Children, Day care 41w
Education action zones 73w
Teachers, Dismissal 72w
Teachers, Recruitment 206w

Clark, Rt Hon Dr David
Debates etc.
Freedom of Information Bill, Rep (04.04.00) 842, 925, 931
Freedom of Information Bill, Rep and 3R (05.04.00) 1012–3, 1019, 1102
Sittings in Westminster Hall
River Tyne, Shipbuilding (04.04.00) 161–4wh

Clark, Mr Paul
Questions
Planning Inspectorate 227w
Water abstraction 420w

Clarke, Mr Charles, Minister of State, Home Office
Debates etc.
Graffiti (27.03.00) 195–200
Questions
Children, Abuse 435w
Consultants, Home Office 640–1w
Corporate manslaughter 140w
Crimestoppers 142–3w
Crooks, Roger 379–80w
Domestic violence 141w
Drugs, Abuse 602w
Drugs, Kent 380w
Essex Police, Compensation 600w
European Police Office 600w

Clarke, Mr Charles*—*continued
European Police Office, Firearms 600w
European Police Office, Training 600–1w
European Police Office, Uniforms 601w
Fines, Personal income 373w
Fines, Speed limits 370–3w
Firearms, Licensing 381–3w
Genetics, Databases 381w
Green, Keith 379w
Habitual offenders, Canada 376w
Metropolitan Police, Inquiries 380w
Metropolitan Police, Private finance initiative 381w
Ministry of Defence Police 521–2w
Nickell, Rachel 379w
Parliament, Demonstrations 141w, 360w
Pedder, Keith 380w, 594w
Police, EC countries 601w
Police, Hampshire 378w
Police, Sick leave 214w
Police stations, Greater London 642w
Public safety radio communications project 597–8w
Sex offender orders 88w
Sexual offences, Males 4w
Smuggling, Criminal investigation 379w
Trials 365w

Clarke, Rt Hon Kenneth
Questions
Performance and Innovation Unit, Post offices 238w

Clarke, Rt Hon Tom
Debates etc.
Budget March 2000 (27.03.00) 70–2
Questions
Film 14
Tax allowances, Charities 589–90w

Class sizes
296–7w
Essex 75w

Cleaning services
NHS 354w

Cleft palate
Buckinghamshire 218w

Clergy
Manpower 52w

Clifton-Brown, Mr Geoffrey
Debates etc.
Armed Forces Discipline Bill (HL), Rep and 3R (06.04.00) 1168, 1172
Questions
Areas of outstanding natural beauty 411w
Council tax, Second homes 809
Film 13–4
National Audit Office 19
Nurses, Recruitment 332

Climate change levy
112w, 260w, 587w
Horticulture 586–7w
Northern Ireland 113w
Tax collection 112–3w

Clinton, Bill
280w

Clothing
236w

Clwyd, Ann
Questions
Chechnya, Overseas aid 331
East Timor, Refugees 54w
Ethiopia, Famine 972–3
Indonesia, Kidnapping 29w
Social security benefits, Take-up 626–8

Coaker Mr Vernon
Debates etc.
Wild Mammals (Hunting with Dogs) Bill, 2R adjourned (07.04.00) 1274, 1294, 1302
Questions
Africa, AIDS 179w
Electronic government 360w
Housing benefit, Housing occupancy 446–7w
Metropolitan Police, Private finance initiative 381w
Textiles 483–4
Transport, Local plans 412w

Coastal areas
Tourism 4–5, 67w

"Code of Audit Practice for Local Authorities and the National Health Service in England and Wales" (29.03.00) 464

Cohabitation
Pensions 343w

Cohen, Mr Harry
Debates etc.
Freedom of Information Bill, Rep and 3R (05.04.00) 981–7, 991
Questions
Arms trade, Pakistan 188–9w
Astra Holdings, Company investigations 188w
Cancer, Health services 123w
Chechnya, Overseas aid 330–1
Civil servants, Ethnic groups 525w
Corporate manslaughter 140w
London Regional Transport, Management 793
London Underground, Public private partnerships 544w
Mayor of London, Elections 433–4w
Military aircraft, Mozambique 299w, 552–3w
Military aircraft, Procurement 299–300w
Military aircraft, Transport 300w
Mines, Research 160w
NATO, Nuclear weapons 247w
NHS, Finance 507w, 575–9w
Nuclear disarmament 247w
Overseas investment, Azerbaijan 106w
Piccadilly line, Rolling stock 544–5w
Refugees, Housing 366w
Tax avoidance, Self-employed 489w

Coleman, Mr Iain
Debates etc.
Learning and Skills Bill (HL), 2R (30.03.00) 553–7
Questions
Education, Refugees 538w
NHS trusts, Finance 341w

Collins, Mr Tim
Debates etc.
Budget March 2000 (27.03.00) 109–12
Learning and Skills Bill (HL), 2R (30.03.00) 526, 557–62
Lisbon Summit (EC) (27.03.00) 33
Questions
Business questions 504

Colman, Mr Tony
Debates etc.
Budget March 2000 (27.03.00) 107–9
Questions
Local authorities, Pension rights 414–5w
Public Trust Office 79w

Colombia
Peace negotiations (28.03.00) 1–22wh

Combined heat and power
477w, 608w

Common fisheries policy
79–81w

Commonwealth Ministerial Action Group
Zimbabwe 265w

Community Legal Service
Hendon 556w

Community relations
Students 93w

Companies
Taxation 149w

Company accounts
Small businesses 405–6w

Company cars
317w

Company investigations
Astra Holdings 188w
Blue Arrow 187–8w

Competition
Bank services 256w
Computers 622–3w
Ice cream 191w, 403w
Milk 236–7w

Comptroller and Auditor General
see National Audit Office

Computers
Child Support Agency 621–2
Competition 622–3w
Dept of Social Security 475–6w
Dept of Trade and Industry 623–4w
Inland Revenue 499w
Ministry of Defence 489w
School libraries 154w
Teachers 40w
Treasury 499w

Conditional fee agreements
625–6w

Conditions of employment
Dept for Education and Employment 154–7w
NHS 120–1w

Conduct
Armed forces 305w

Congo (Kinshasa)
see Democratic Republic of Congo

Conservation
Energy (04.04.00) 936–46

Consultants
Home Office 215–6w, 640–1w
Hospitals 127w
London Regional Transport 310w
Ministry of Agriculture Fisheries and Food 249w
Neurology 120w

Consumer protection
Trade associations 240w

Contract compliance
EC law 195–6w
Electronic commerce 196w

Contracting Out (Functions Relating to Social Security) Order 2000
Debates etc.
(27.03.00) 187

Contracts
Home improvement agencies 228w
Hospices 345–6w
New Millennium Experience 358w
Slaughterhouses 172–3w
Welding Institute 44–5w

Contracts for services
Social security benefits (27.03.00) 187

Contributions Agency
see Social Security Contributions Agency

Convention on International Trade in Endangered Species
Ivory 806

Cook, Frank
Debates etc.
Child Support Pensions and Social Security Bill, Rep and 3R (03.04.00) 694–6

Cook, Rt Hon Robin, Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs*
Questions
Embassies, Corporate hospitality 630w
Lisbon Summit (EC) 465–6w
Regulation, Foreign and Commonwealth Office 409w

Cooper, Ms Yvette, Minister for Public Health, Dept of Health*
Sittings in Westminster Hall
Vaccination, Animal products (28.03.00) 42–6wh
Questions
Abortion 615w
Analgesics, Death 123–4w
Antenatal care, Screening 218w
Babies 619w
Babies, Hearing 617w
Cancer, Health services 123w
Cancer, Low incomes 344w
Cancer, Surgery 350–1w
Cellular phones, Health hazards 580w
Drugs, Labelling 509w
Food, Radioactive materials 63w
Genetics, Insurance 349–50w
Head lice 618w
Heart diseases, Health services 119w
Hospices, Contracts 345–6w
Hospices, Finance 346w
Hospitals, Infectious diseases 345w, 354w
In vitro fertilisation 502w
Meningitis, Vaccination 218–9w, 395w, 613–4w
Meningitis, Yorkshire and Humberside 211–2
Methicillin resistant staphylococcus aureus 345w
Miscarriage 124w
Mixed oxide fuel, Health hazards 349w
MMR vaccine 349w
NHS, Rationing 120w
NHS, Research 216–7w
Prostate cancer, Research 612–3w
Prostate cancer, Waiting lists 612w
Salmonella 616–7w
Smoking, Health education 614w
Smoking related diseases, Medical treatments 351w
Tuberculosis, Vaccination 353w
Vaccination 219w
Vaccination, Correspondence 357w
World Health Organisation, Tobacco 342–3w

Corbett, Mr Robin
Debates etc.
Criminal Justice and Court Services Bill, 2R (28.03.00) 232–3, 243, 247–54, 281
Questions
Ammunition 323w
Firearms, Licensing 381–3w
NHS, Finance 104w
Rover Group 638
Rover Group, Longbridge 332–3

Corbyn, Mr Jeremy
Debates etc.
Child Support Pensions and Social Security Bill, Rep (29.03.00) 460
Child Support Pensions and Social Security Bill, Rep and 3R (03.04.00) 678, 683–7
Housing (04.04.00) 822
Sittings in Westminster Hall
Immigration, Administrative delays (29.03.00) 111wh, 115wh
Western Sahara, Referendums (04.04.00) 184–8wh, 190wh
Questions
Council housing, Greater London 803
Minimum wage 237w
Nelson, Rosemary 171–2w

Corporate hospitality
Embassies 630w

Corporate manslaughter
140w

Corporation tax
EC countries 1146–7

Cotter, Mr Brian
Debates etc.
Learning and Skills Bill (HL), 2R (30.03.00) 541, 559
Questions
Avon Health Authority, Finance 61w
Avon Health Authority, Waiting lists 60w
Bovine spongiform encephalopathy, Waste disposal 250w
Incapacity benefit, Administrative delays 34w
Learning disability, Weston-super-Mare 60–1w
Public expenditure, Dept of Health 63–4w
Regulation, Dept for Culture Media and Sport 392w
Regulation, Dept for Education and Employment 387w
Regulation, Dept for International Development 582w
Regulation, Dept of Health 509w
Regulation, Dept of Social Security 453–4w
Regulation, Dept of the Environment Transport and the Regions 415w
Regulation, Dept of Trade and Industry 534w
Regulation, Foreign and Commonwealth Office 409w
Regulation, Lord Chancellor's Dept 401w
Regulation, Ministry of Defence 397w
Regulation, Northern Ireland Office 407w
Regulation, Office of the Secretary of State for Wales 458w
Regulation, Scotland Office 402w
Regulation, Treasury 461w

Council housing
412–3w
Greater London 803–4
Northern Ireland 50–1w

Council of Ministers
99–101w
Disclosure of information 389–90w

Council tax
Second homes 808–9

Councillors
18–9w

Countryside stewardship scheme
559–60w

Courts
(28.03.00) 225–91

Cousins, Mr Jim
Debates etc.
Child Support Pensions and Social Security Bill, Rep (29.03.00) 433–4
Child Support Pensions and Social Security Bill, Rep and 3R (03.04.00) 717–8
Sittings in Westminster Hall
River Tyne, Shipbuilding (04.04.00) 166–7wh
Questions
Business questions 500, 1155

Cox, Mr Tom
Questions
Beef, Argentina 173–4w
Bovine spongiform encephalopathy, EC countries 174w
Company cars 317w
Diplomatic relations 54w
Domestic violence 141w
Gibraltar, Spain 562w
Hong Kong, Ministry of Defence 27w
Hospitals, Waiting lists 575w
Housing improvement, Greater London 605–6w
Illegal immigrants 84w
Industrial injuries disablement benefit 34w
Invalid vehicles 451w
Land, Ministry of Defence 27w
Lone parents 150w
Low pay, Greater London 151–2w
Ministers, Official cars 201w
Motor vehicles 431w
Motor vehicles, Testing 431w
Nurses, Training 615–6w
Prisoners, Handbooks 141w
Prisons, Drugs 370w
Radioactive wastes, Waste disposal 17–8w
Salmonella 616–7w
Segregation of prisoners 370w
Sri Lanka, Overseas aid 177w
Transport, Disabled 485–6w
Unified Appeal Tribunal, Public appointments 401w

Craigie Hall
398–400w

Cranston, Mr Ross, Solicitor-General*
Questions
Customs and Excise, Administration of justice 468–9w
Prosecutions, Fraud 468w

Credit unions
330w

Crime
Finance 1–3w

Crime and disorder partnerships
635w

Crime prevention
Arson 137–8w

Crimes of violence
Children in care 62w

Crimestoppers
142–3w

Criminal investigation
Smuggling 379w
United Kingdom Atomic Energy Authority Constabulary 403–4w

Criminal Justice and Court Services Bill 1999/2000
Debates etc.
2R and Money res* (28.03.00) 225–91
Questions
365–6w

Crooks, Roger
283–4w, 304w, 379–80w

Crops
Genetically modified organisms 18w, 37–8w, 131w, 314–5w, 327w, 419–20w, 434w, 611w

Cross border cooperation
Northern Ireland government 97w

Crown Committee
see Prescribing Supply and Administration of Medicines Review Team

Cryer, Mrs Ann
Sittings in Westminster Hall
Developing countries, Females (30.03.00) 135wh
Questions
Local authorities, Manpower 158–9w
Museums and galleries, Children 15–6
NHS, Rationing 120w

Cryer, Mr John
Debates etc.
Child Support Pensions and Social Security Bill, Rep and 3R (03.04.00) 684
Questions
Business questions 1162–3
Income tax, Construction 24–5w
Unemployment benefits, Construction 338w

Cuba
EC aid 183w

Cultural heritage
National Lottery 470–1w

Cumbria
NHS Direct 123w
Working families tax credit 48w

Cummings, Mr John
Questions
Business questions 1159–60
Members, Correspondence 26w
World Health Organisation, Tobacco 342–3w

Cunningham, Rt Hon Dr Jack
Questions
Barclays Bank 47w
British Nuclear Fuels, Directors 105–6w
Rural areas, Banks 68w
Working families tax credit, Cumbria 48w

Cunningham, Mr Jim
Debates etc.
Budget March 2000 (27.03.00) 52, 57, 88–90
Questions
Crime, Finance 1–3w
New deal schemes, Ethnic groups 287–9w
Overseas trade, India 484–5
Pensioners, Income 335w
Sports, Schools 66w

Cunningham, Ms Roseanna
Questions
Privy Council Office Judicial Committee, Scotland 361–2w

Curry, Rt Hon David
Debates etc.
Lisbon Summit (EC) (27.03.00) 31

Curtis-Thomas, Ms Claire
Questions
Death rate, Liverpool 255w
Lighting, Pollution control 432w, 605w
Pensioners, Income support 448w
Small Business Service 239w
Social security benefits, Widowed people 272w, 339w

Curtis-Thomas, Ms Claire—continued
Widowed people 271–2w

Customs and Excise
Administration of justice 468–9w
Pakistan 496–7w

Customs officers
Manpower 259w

Cycling
316w
Children 19w

Cyprus
Monuments 603w

Dairy Crest
Unigate 624w

Dairy products
Exports 174w

Dalyell, Mr Tam
Debates etc.
Freedom of Information Bill, Rep (04.04.00) 832, 839–40, 844, 920
Freedom of Information Bill, Rep and 3R (05.04.00) 984, 989, 1016, 1051
Kosovo, Points of order (03.04.00) 643
Lisbon Summit (EC) (27.03.00) 33
Sittings in Westminster Hall
Colombia, Peace negotiations (28.03.00) 13–4wh, 20wh
Questions
Business questions 1153–4
Drugs, Labelling 509w
Iraq 281–2w
Iraq, Chemical and biological warfare 264–5w
Iraq, Ethnic groups 264w
Iraq, Missing persons 264w
Iraq, Mustard gas 281–2w
Iraq, Oil 265w
Iraq, Public expenditure 1149
Iraq, Temporary immigrants 410w
Kosovo, Radioactivity 555w
Kosovo, Uranium 555w
Madagascar, Disaster relief 180w
Military exercises, South Korea 161–2w
Sellafield 533w
Transplant surgery, Research 127–8w

Darling, Rt Hon Alistair, Secretary of State for Social Security*
Debates etc.
Budget March 2000 (27.03.00) 41–50, 52, 57
Questions
Housing benefit, Abuse 332w
Pensioners, Income 609–11
Pensioners, Income support 447–8w
Social security benefits, Post offices 613–5
Standards, Dept of Social Security 274–6w
State retirement pensions, Uprating 620–1

Databases
Genetics 381w, 597w

Davey, Mr Edward
Debates etc.
Graffiti (27.03.00) 193–5
Sittings in Westminster Hall
Voluntary work (05.04.00) 252–7wh
Questions
Bus services 481–3w
Excise duties, Gaming machines 1150
Housing, Greater London 17w
Institutional care, Local government services 509w
Negligence, Compensation 394–5w
Park and ride schemes 17w
Social Security Benefits Agency, Administrative delays 338w

Davey, Mrs Valerie
Debates etc.
Learning and Skills Bill (HL), 2R (30.03.00) 584–5

Davidson, Mr Ian
Questions
Social security benefits, Abuse 620

Davies, Rt Hon Denzil
Debates etc.
Lisbon Summit (EC) (27.03.00) 30

Davies, Mr Geraint
Questions
Construction, Sustainable development 323w
Electronic commerce 482–3
Greater London Authority, Property transfer 420–1w
Housing, Single people 798–9

Davies, Mr Quentin
Debates etc.
Armed Forces Discipline Bill (HL), Rep and 3R (06.04.00) 1188–9
Child Support Pensions and Social Security Bill, Rep and 3R (03.04.00) 648–50, 652, 748, 773
Freedom of Information Bill, Rep (04.04.00) 834–6, 929
Freedom of Information Bill, Rep and 3R (05.04.00) 1080–1, 1102–3, 1114–5, 1117–8, 1122–3
Sittings in Westminster Hall
Rutland College, Tresham College (28.03.00) 26–8wh
Questions
Military aircraft, Iraq 27w

Davis, Rt Hon David
Debates etc.
Budget March 2000 (27.03.00) 45, 72–4, 76
Freedom of Information Bill, Rep (04.04.00) 862, 874–5, 899–900
Freedom of Information Bill, Rep and 3R (05.04.00) 998, 1006–10, 1016, 1028, 1100
Questions
Hospitals, Private finance initiative 216–7

Dawson, Mr Hilton
Debates etc.
Criminal Justice and Court Services Bill, 2R (28.03.00) 235, 245–6, 250, 257–62, 280–1

Day, Mr Stephen
Debates etc.
Criminal Justice and Court Services Bill, 2R (28.03.00) 265, 276
Royal Ulster Constabulary (06.04.00) 1228
Questions
Business questions 1157
Standard spending assessments, Stockport 413w

Day care
Children 41w

Death
Analgesics 114–5w, 123–4w
Methicillin resistant staphylococcus aureus 345w
Surgery 63w

Death rate
Liverpool 255w

Debts
Developing countries 175w, 181w, 326–8, 460w
NHS 130w, 343–4w, 515w
Scottish Power 113–4w

Debts written off
Developing countries 472w, 584w

Defence
Diversification 303w

Defence Evaluation and Research Agency
397–8w

Defence Geographic and Imagery Intelligence Agency
395–6w

Defence Vetting Agency
Standards 550–1w

Democratic Republic of Congo
Armed conflict 564w

Demonstrations
Parliament 141w, 360w

Denham, Mr John, Minister of State, Dept of Health*
Debates etc.
Nurses, Pay (28.03.00) 319–22
Sittings in Westminster Hall
Chronically sick, Health services (29.03.00) 96–100wh
NHS, Ancillary staff (05.04.00) 263–8wh
Questions
Art works, Dept of Health 615w
Avon Health Authority, Waiting lists 60w
Beta-interferon 201–2, 510–1w
Bone diseases, Children 356w
Broomfield Hospital, Hospital beds 62–3w
Buckinghamshire Health Authority, Finance 507w, 617w
Disability aids, Waiting lists 618w
Essex Rivers Healthcare NHS Trust, Waiting lists 351–2w, 614w
General practitioners, Durham County 614–5w
Health authorities, Yorkshire and Humberside 59w
Health services, Technicians 55w
Hospital beds 351w
Hospital wards, West Sussex 509–10w
Hospitals, Consultants 127w
Hospitals, Hygiene 122w
Hospitals, Waiting lists 62w, 119w, 135w, 508w
Inflammatory bowel disease 214–5
Intensive care 352w
Intensive care, Hospital beds 341–2w
Junior doctors, Working hours 575w
Medical profession, Disciplinary proceedings 347–8w
National Blood Authority, Personnel management 503w
National Institute for Clinical Excellence 122w
Neurology, Consultants 120w
Neurology, Medical treatments 611–2w
NHS, Ancillary staff 136w
NHS, Capital Modernisation Fund 509w
NHS, Complaints 513–4w
NHS, Conditions of employment 120–1w
NHS, Debts 130w, 343–4w, 515w
NHS, Finance 61w, 121–2w, 209–11, 502–3w, 507w, 575–9w, 617–8w
NHS, Job satisfaction 612w
NHS, Pay 342w, 504w
NHS, Pensions 343w
NHS, Voluntary work 136w
NHS trusts, Finance 341w
NHS trusts, Public appointments 514w
Nurses 127–8w
Nurses, Greater London 58w
Nurses, Training 123w, 355w, 615–6w
Oxted and Limpsfield Hospital 61w
Paediatrics, Nurses 504–7w
Prescription drugs, Prices 202–3
Prescription drugs, Waste disposal 393w

Denham, Mr John—continued*
Primary care groups, Public appointments 128w
Primary care trusts 122–3w
Public appointments, Dept of Health 136w
Severalls Hospital 136–7w
Transplant surgery, Research 127–8w

Dental services
217–8, 349w
Lincolnshire 124w
Shropshire 507–8w

Departmental coordination
EC grants and loans 481w
Science 480–1

Departmental expenditure limits
Dept of the Environment Transport and the Regions 223–4w

Departmental responsibilities
Families 77–8w

Deployment
Roll-on roll-off ships 208–9w
Warships 28w

Deportation
367w, 599w
Refugees 437–8w, 593w

Dept for Culture Media and Sport
Art works 392–3w
Empty property 359–60w
Internet 391–2w
Regulation 392w

Dept for Education and Employment
Advertising 40w
Conditions of employment 154–7w
Empty property 297w
Parking 295w
Public appointments 151w
Regulation 387w

Dept for International Development
Empty property 287w
Internet 286w
Parking 254w
Regulation 582w

Dept of Health
Alternative energy 219w
Art works 615w
Empty property 353–4w
Parking 217w
Public appointments 136w
Public expenditure 63–4w
Regulation 509w

Dept of Social Security
Art works 531w
Computers 475–6w
Empty property 340–1w
Information technology 115w
Internet 272–3w
Parking 272w
Proof of identity 529w
Regulation 453–4w
Standards 274–6w

Dept of the Environment Transport and the Regions
Art works 484–5w
Departmental expenditure limits 223–4w
Internet 415–9w
Ministerial policy advisors 605w
Public appointments 319w
Public inquiries 311–3w
Regulation 415w

Dept of Trade and Industry
Art works 479w
Buildings 108w
Computers 623–4w
Empty property 278w
Internet 278w

Dept of Trade and Industry—continued*
NAW Assembly Cabinet 108–9w
Parking 278w
Public appointments 277w
Regulation 534w

Deputy Prime Minister
Brazil 409w

Deregulation
528w
Government departments 522w

Derelict land
North West region 411w

Detainees
599w

Detention and training orders
138–9w

Developing countries
see also Heavily indebted poor countries initiative
Debts 175w, 181w, 326–8, 460w
Debts written off 472w, 584w
Drugs 184w
Education (04.04.00) 192–200wh
Females (30.03.00) 117–56wh
Uruguay Round 185w
Voluntary work 177–8w

Dial-a-ride
324w

Diesel fuel
Tanks 554w

Dietary supplements
35–6w

Digital broadcasting
Electronic government 524w

Diplomatic relations
54w

Diplomatic service
Political impartiality 103w
Zimbabwe 266w

Dir90/220/EEC
502w

Dir96/29/EURATOM
19w

Dir98/30/EC
242–3w

Directors
British Nuclear Fuels 105–6w

Disability aids
336, 386w
Employment Service 41–2w
Lancashire 618w
Television 1–2
Waiting lists 618w

Disability living allowance
163–4w, (05.04.00) 243–51wh, 449w
Administrative delays 627–8w
Appeals 337–8w
Mentally ill 164w

Disabled
Buses 491w
Driving 21–2w
Education 204w
Employment 334w
Housing improvement 324w
Internet 72–3w
Northern Ireland (04.04.00) 935
Safety belts 411–2w
Social security benefits 454w
Tax allowances 491w
Transport 485–6w

Disabled person's tax credit
South Yorkshire 50w

Disaster relief
178w
Madagascar 180w
Mozambique 176–7w, 328–30

Disciplinary proceedings
Medical profession 347–8w

Discrimination
Employment 73w

Diseases
Expenditure 346–7w

Dismissal
Teachers 72w

Dismore, Mr Andrew
Debates etc.
Child Support Pensions and Social Security Bill, Rep (29.03.00) 350, 352, 403
Wild Mammals (Hunting with Dogs) Bill, 2R adjourned (07.04.00) 1299
Questions
Community Legal Service, Hendon 556w
Conditional fee agreements 625–6w
Flood control, Edgware 560w
Iran, Jews 282w, 564w
Metropolitan Police, Police areas 211–2w
Metropolitan Police, Standards 212–3w
Mill Hill School 538–9w
Museums and galleries, Fees and charges 625w
Social Exclusion Unit 963
Thameslink, Planning 432w
War pensions 453–4w

Distribution
Natural gas 242–3w

Dobbin, Mr Jim
Questions
Ministerial Group on Rural Affairs 957
New deal schemes, Local authorities 537w
Railways, Freight 483w

Dobson, Rt Hon Frank
Debates etc.
Housing (04.04.00) 818

Docks and Harbours (Rateable Values) (England) Order 2000
Debates etc.
(28.03.00) 291

Doctors
Greater London 58w

Doctors' list of patients
Elderly 121w

Dogs
Animal experiments 435–6w
Exports 501w

Dolphins
Drift nets 455w

Domestic violence
141w, 377–8w

Donaldson, Mr Jeffrey M
Debates etc.
Royal Ulster Constabulary (06.04.00) 1231, 1240–2
Questions
Foreign investment in UK, Lisburn 569w
Nelson, Rosemary 244w
Schools, Northern Ireland 570w

Doran, Mr Frank
Questions
Natural gas, Distribution 242–3w

Dounreay
Inspections 403w
Nuclear fuel reprocessing 533–4w

Drew, Mr David
Debates etc.
Child Support Pensions and Social Security Bill, Rep (29.03.00) 440–2
Questions
NHS, Conditions of employment 121w

Drift nets
Dolphins 455w

Drinking water
Water treatment 320–1w

Driver and Vehicle Licensing Agency
Proof of identity 321–2w

Driving
Disabled 21–2w

Driving under influence
EC action 430–1w

Drown, Ms Julia
Sittings in Westminster Hall
NHS, Ancillary staff (05.04.00) 259–63wh
Questions
Debts written off, Developing countries 584w
Rover Group, Longbridge 477

Drug prevention schemes
68w

Drug seizures
259–60w

Drugs
Abuse 602w, 631–2w
Developing countries 184w
Expenditure 129w
Kent 380w
Labelling 509w
Prisons 86w, 370w
Screening 12w
Young people 961–3

Duchy of Lancaster
Magistrates 524w

Duncan, Mr Alan
Sittings in Westminster Hall
Rutland College, Tresham College (28.03.00) 23–6wh, 28wh
Questions
Contract compliance, EC law 195–6w
Rover Group 489–90

Duncan Smith, Mr Iain
Debates etc.
Armed Forces Discipline Bill (HL), Rep and 3R (06.04.00) 1168
Private Members' bills, Points of order (07.04.00) 1264
Questions
Aircraft carriers, Procurement 209w
Armed forces, Manpower 304w
Hospital ships 207w
Household Division, Correspondence 51w
Israel, Armed forces 397w
Israel, Ballistic missile defence 398w, 488w
Israel, Ministry of Defence 397w
Korean War, Anniversaries 25w
Navy, Hydrography 207–8w
Orders and regulations 582–3w
Property, Ministry of Defence 27w
SA80 rifle 298–9w
Tankers, Procurement 79w
Task forces 565–6w
Type 45 destroyers 208w
Warships, Deployment 28w

Dunwoody, Mrs Gwyneth
Debates etc.
Child Support Pensions and Social Security Bill, Rep (29.03.00) 452
Questions
Pedestrians, Safety 608w

Durham County
Ambulance services 353w
General practitioners 614–5w
Nursing homes 508w

Dyslexia
294–5w

Eagle, Angela, Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State, Dept of Social Security
Debates etc.
Child Support Pensions and Social Security Bill, Rep (29.03.00) 358–63, 370, 373–6, 379, 392–4, 403, 407–13, 420–1, 428–9, 455–6, 459–60
Child Support Pensions and Social Security Bill, Rep and 3R (03.04.00) 666–7, 742–4, 769–71, 778
Social security benefits, Widowed people (06.04.00) 1257–62
Questions
Appeals Service, Standards 273w
Child benefit 30w
Child support, Maintenance 33w
Child Support Agency, Compensation 337w
Child Support Agency, Computers 621–2
Child Support Agency, Reform 337w
Computers, Dept of Social Security 475–6w
Employment schemes 34–5w
Family credit 340w
Family credit, Basildon 473–5w
Housing benefit, Abuse 118w, 629w
Housing benefit, Child care tax credit 271w
Housing benefit, Expenditure 332w
Housing benefit, Housing occupancy 446–7w
Information technology, Dept of Social Security 115w
Internet, Dept of Social Security 272–3w
Maintenance, Children 336–7w, 449w, 621–4, 630w
Maternity payments, South Yorkshire 165–6w
Mortgages, Arrears 473w
New deal for lone parents 336w, 626
Rents, Rebates 32–3w, 325w
Social Fund 339w
Social security benefits, Abuse 117–8w, 335–6w, 629w
Social security benefits, Lone parents 270w
Social security benefits, Overpayments 447w
Social security benefits, Postal services 269w
Social security benefits, Telephone services 626–7w
Social security benefits, Widowed people 272w, 339w
Social Security Benefits Agency, Administrative delays 338w
Social Security Benefits Agency, Employment Service 339–40w
Social Security Benefits Agency, Home visits 166–7w
Unemployment benefits, Construction 338w
Widowed people 271–2w
Winter fuel payments, Chelmsford 118w
Winter fuel payments, Inverclyde 334w

Eagle, Angela—continued
Winter fuel payments, Morecambe 33w

Eagle, Maria
Debates etc.
Child Support Pensions and Social Security Bill, Rep (29.03.00) 364

Early day motions
Correspondence 135w

Early retirement
Farmers 82–3w

Early years development plans
41w

Earnings limits
489–90w

East Anglia
Housing 608–9w
Planning permission 22–3w

East Surrey Hospital
Ancillary staff 618–9w
Nurses 618–9w

East Timor
Military aircraft 552–3w
Refugees 54w

Eastern Europe
Economic situation 323–4

EC action
Art works 480w
Driving under influence 430–1w
Hemp (03.04.00) 782
Organised crime 634w
Treaties 285w

EC aid
180–1w
Cuba 183w
Zimbabwe 254w

EC common foreign and security policy
563w

EC countries
Bovine spongiform encephalopathy 174w
Corporation tax 1146–7
Police 601w, 633w
Trade competitiveness 238–9w

EC defence policy
563w

EC Draft 12992/99
(03.04.00) 782

EC external trade
Bananas 46w

EC Foreign Affairs Council
167–9w

EC grants and loans
480–1w, 624w, 1145–6
Departmental coordination 481w
Wales 1141
West Midlands 638

EC institutions
Operating costs 101–2w
UK delegations 102–3w
Vocational training 53w, 167w

EC Internal Market Council
106–7w

EC justice and home affairs
520w

EC law
562w
Alternative medicine 125–6w
Contract compliance 195–6w
Government assistance 242w
Ionizing radiation 19w
Redundancy 492–4

EC law—continued
Regulatory impact assessments 268–9w

EC staff
Allowances 631w

EC Transport Council
230–2w

Economic and monetary union
486–7, 585w
Cabinet Office 70w

Economic situation
Eastern Europe 323–4
St Helena 468w

Edgware
Flood control 560w

Edinburgh
Military bases 398–400w

Education
Cheshire 316w
Developing countries (04.04.00) 192–200wh
Disabled 204w
Finance 205w, 298w, 519–20w
Refugees 538w
Standard spending assessments 293–4w

Education action zones
73w

Edwards, Mr Huw
Questions
Methicillin resistant staphylococcus aureus 345w
National Council for Education and Training in Wales 539–40w
NHS, Ancillary staff 136w
Nutrition 353w, 357w
Organic farming, Government assistance 456w
Social Exclusion Unit 523–4w

Efford, Mr Clive
Questions
Bus services, Greater London 414w
Millennium Exhibition, Attendance 64w
Utilities, Pre-payment 402w

Elderly
Better government programme 76w, 527w, 964–5
Doctors' list of patients 121w
Health 130w
Health services 355–6w
Institutional care 63w, 581w
Residential homes (03.04.00) 783–90

Elections
Local government 634w
Mayor of London 433–4w
Zimbabwe 265w

Electoral Commission
Costs 3–4w

Electoral register
89w

Electricity
North Yorkshire 108w

Electricity generation
Safety 106w

Electricity Supply Industry (Rateable Values) (England) Order 2000
Debates etc.
(28.03.00) 291

Electronic commerce
482–3
Contract compliance 196w

Electronic government
203w, 360w, 524–5w, 959–61

Electronic government—continued
Digital broadcasting 524w
Post offices 237w

Electronic voting
Greater London Authority 112w

Ellman, Mrs Louise
Sittings in Westminster Hall
Radiation, Research (29.03.00) 57wh, 60–1wh
Questions
Non-departmental public bodies 314w
Non-departmental public bodies, Accountability 959
Regional assemblies 17w

Embassies
Corporate hospitality 630w

Employee share ownership schemes
1138–40

Employers' Forum on Disability
Government departments 566w

Employment
235w
Disabled 334w
Discrimination 73w
Football 42w, 386w
St Helena 467w
South East region 586w

Employment agencies
Correspondence 624w
Regulation 236w

Employment schemes
34–5w

Employment Service
Disability aids 41–2w
Social Security Benefits Agency 339–40w

Employment tribunals
Northern Ireland 517w

Empty property
482w
Dept for Culture Media and Sport 359–60w
Dept for Education and Employment 297w
Dept for International Development 287w
Dept of Health 353–4w
Dept of Social Security 340–1w
Dept of Trade and Industry 278w
Home Office 445–6w
Housing 324w
Lord Chancellor's Dept 364w
Scotland Office 285w
Treasury 330w

Energy
Conservation (04.04.00) 936–46

Energy from Waste Plants (Rateable Values) (England) Order 2000
Debates etc.
(28.03.00) 291

Ennis, Mr Jeff
Questions
Disabled person's tax credit, South Yorkshire 50w
Employee share ownership schemes 1138–9
Maternity payments, South Yorkshire 165–6w
Pensioners, Income support 447–8w

Entry clearances
440–5w

Environment protection
Agriculture 252w, 457–8w, 560w
Landfill tax 499w
Natural gas 107w
Overseas aid 175w

Environmental Audit Select Committee
(30.03.00) 598

Equal opportunities
Civil servants 523w
Northern Ireland 518–9w, 569–70w
Northern Ireland Office 518w
Primary education 574w, 974
Public appointments 76–7w

Equality Commission for Northern Ireland
see Northern Ireland Equality Commission

Equality (Disability Etc) (Northern Ireland) Order 2000
Debates etc.
(04.04.00) 935

Escalators
London Underground 310–1w

Essex
Aircraft 232w
Class sizes 75w
Police 214w

Essex Police
Compensation 600w

Essex Rivers Healthcare NHS Trust
Private sector 217w
Waiting lists 351–2w, 614w

Ethiopia
Famine 972–3
Forests 286–7w

Ethnic groups
Civil servants 525w
Iraq 264w
New deal schemes 287–9w

EU Justice and Home Affairs Council
373–6w

Euro
Forgery 632w

European Aviation Safety Authority
232–3w

European Communities
see also EC and EU headings
Anniversaries 157w

European Monitoring Centre on Racism and Xenophobia
214–5w

European Police Office
600w
Firearms 600w
Training 600–1w
Uniforms 601w

European Scrutiny Committee
(30.03.00) 599

Euxton
Railways 802–3

Evans, Mr Nigel
Questions
Business questions 499, 1159
Derelict land, North West region 411w
Drugs, Young people 962–3
Eastern Europe, Economic situation 323–4
Exservicemen 160–1w
Information officers, Office of the Secretary of State for Wales 472w, 573w
Internet, Trade marks 236w
Ministerial policy advisors, Office of the Secretary of State for Wales 473w
Operating costs, Office of the Secretary of State for Wales 158w
Social security benefits, Refugees 612
Swimming, Schools 2–3
Task forces, Wales 158w

Ewing, Mrs Margaret
Questions
Bankruptcy, Pensions 111w
Climate change levy 112w, 260w
Climate change levy, Tax collection 112–3w
Manufactured goods, Imports 193–4w
Pension funds 31–2w

Exchange rates
329w

Excise duties
496w
Aviation 459–60w
Fuels 497w, 585w, 589w
Gaming machines 1149–50
Lorries 433w
Petrol 114w, 589w, 1143–5

Exhibitions
UK membership of EC 630–1w

Export credit guarantees
Romania 533w
Turkey 476–7w

Export of Farm Animals Bill 1999/2000
Debates etc.
2R order read (07.04.00) 1334

Exports
Dairy products 174w
Dogs 501w
Livestock (07.04.00) 1336–42
Sri Lanka 478–9w
Sudan 286w

Exservicemen
160–1w

Faber, Mr David
Questions
Athletics, Sportsgrounds 540w
National Lottery 10–1
Wembley Stadium 104–5w

Fabricant, Mr Michael
Debates etc.
Ministers, Points of order (28.03.00) 221
Oral question time intervention (30.03.00) 489
Sittings in Westminster Hall
USA, Overseas trade (29.03.00) 101–6wh, 108wh
Questions
Business questions 509–10
Child Support Agency, Computers 621–2
North American Free Trade Agreement 278–9w, 285w, 361w, 524w
Rover Group, Longbridge 475–6
Southern Africa, Overseas aid 183w

Fair Employment Tribunal for Northern Ireland
Finance 517w

Families
Departmental responsibilities 77–8w

Family credit
340w
Basildon 473–5w
Southwark 49w

Family Law Act 1996
Debates etc.
(04.04.00) 947–56

Famine
Ethiopia 972–3
Horn of Africa 182w

Fares
Concessions 805–6

Farmers
see also Agriculture

Farmers—continued
Bankruptcy 250w
Early retirement 82–3w
Zimbabwe 265w

Farms
Hedges and ditches 132w, 172w, 325w, 327–8w
Valuation 83w

Fearn, Mr Ronnie
Questions
Alternative medicine, EC law 125–6w
Dietary supplements 35–6w
Farms, Hedges and ditches 132w, 172w
Medicines Control Agency 126–7w
World class performance programme 469–70w

Females
Developing countries (30.03.00) 117–56wh
Health 130w
Politics and government 535–6w
Prison Service 380–1w

Field, Rt Hon Frank
Debates etc.
Budget March 2000 (27.03.00) 50
Child Support Pensions and Social Security Bill, Rep (29.03.00) 351–3, 363, 368–9, 384–5, 433, 435–7, 440, 447, 454
Child Support Pensions and Social Security Bill, Rep and 3R (03.04.00) 681–3, 695, 697, 749, 762
Royal Ulster Constabulary (06.04.00) 1219–20, 1239–40
Questions
Babies 619w
Credit unions 330w
Family credit 340w
Housing benefit, Abuse 629w
Housing benefit, Expenditure 332w
In vitro fertilisation 502w
Income support, Mortgages 454w
Low birthweight babies 461w
NHS, Pensions 343w
Radiation, Research 194w
Social security benefits, Abuse 336w, 627–9w
Social security benefits, Capital rules 618
Social security benefits, Postal services 269w
Social Security Benefits Agency, Security 31w
State earnings related pension scheme, Misrepresentation 30w, 340w

Film
13–5, 64w

Finance Bill 1999/2000
Debates etc.
Procedure motions*, Money res* and 1R (27.03.00) 185–7
Questions
151w

Financial Assistance for Industry (Increase of Limit) Order 2000
Debates etc.
(27.03.00) 187

Financial services
Armed forces 28w

Fines
Personal income 364w, 373w
Speed limits 370–3w

Fire Prevention Bill 1999/2000
Debates etc.
2R order read (07.04.00) 1334

Firearms
European Police Office 600w
Licensing 381–3w

Fiscal policy
970–1

Fisher, Mr Mark
Debates etc.
Freedom of Information Bill, Rep (04.04.00) 833–4, 850, 863–6, 868–70, 877, 927–8
Freedom of Information Bill, Rep and 3R (05.04.00) 1003–6, 1027, 1056–9, 1081–2, 1103–4

Fisheries
Fleetwood 173w
Irish Sea 173w
St Helena 467w

Fishery agreements
455–6w
Morocco 254w

Fishing catches
Bass 82w

Fishing vessels
Licensing 253w
Safety measures 800–1
Spain 253w

"Fit for the Future Consultation Paper"
356w

Fitzpatrick, Jim
Questions
Child support, Maintenance 33w
Greater London Authority, Grants 225w
Greenbelt 325w

Flags
Armagh 280–1w

Fleetwood
Fisheries 173w

Flight, Mr Howard
Debates etc.
Child Support Pensions and Social Security Bill, Rep and 3R (03.04.00) 651–2, 729–30, 749
Questions
Excise duties, Petrol 1144–5
Pensions, Reform 333w

Flint, Caroline
Debates etc.
Child Support Pensions and Social Security Bill, Rep (29.03.00) 406
Learning and Skills Bill (HL), 2R (30.03.00) 537, 549
Questions
Conditions of employment, Dept for Education and Employment 154–7w
New deal for lone parents 626
Recreation spaces 66w

Flood control
Burnt Oak 560w
Edgware 560w

Flynn, Paul
Debates etc.
Residential Care Homes and Nursing Homes (Medical Records) Bill, 1R (27.03.00) 38–40
Questions
Alternative energy, Dept of Health 219w
Analgesics, Death 114–5w, 123–4w
Ballistic missile defence, USA 209w
Business questions 496–7
Church of England, Finance 20
Drugs, Expenditure 129w
Farmers, Bankruptcy 250w
Farms, Hedges and ditches 325w
Farms, Valuation 83w
Genetically modified organisms, Crops 314–5w

Flynn, Paul—continued
Hospitals, Infectious diseases 345w
Internet, Prime Minister 38–9w
Japan, Radioactive materials 171w
Pensioners, Income support 333w, 531w
Prisons, Drugs 86w
Sheep, Radioactive fallout 174w

Foden Thompson Carmichael MWD
79–80w

Follett, Barbara
Questions
Child Support Agency, Compensation 337w
Deregulation 528w
Government departments, Procurement 330–1w

Food
Genetically modified organisms 501w
Labelling 36w
Radioactive materials 63w

Food Standards Agency
83–4w, 137w

Football
Employment 42w, 386w

Foreign and Commonwealth Office
Internet 564–5w
Parking 268w
Regulation 409w

Foreign investment in UK
Lisburn 569w
North West region 240w

Foreign relations
Sri Lanka 562w
USA 169w
Zimbabwe 265w

Foreign workers
Members' staff 43w, 235w

Forest of Bowland
Nature conservation 251–2w, 560w

Forests
Ethiopia 286–7w
Indonesia 184–5w

Forgery
Euro 632w

Forth, Mr Eric
Debates etc.
Business questions intervention (30.03.00) 498
Freedom of Information Bill, Rep and 3R (05.04.00) 1011
Ministerial statement intervention (04.04.00) 812
Warm Homes and Energy Conservation Bill, Money res (04.04.00) 936–9, 941, 943
Wild Mammals (Hunting with Dogs) Bill, 2R adjourned (07.04.00) 1285
Questions
Business questions 502, 1154–5
Excise duties, Petrol 1144

Fossil fuels
305–6w

Foster, Mr Don
Debates etc.
Housing (04.04.00) 819
Questions
Affordable warmth programme 483–4w
Empty property, Dept for Culture Media and Sport 359–60w
Empty property, Dept for Education and Employment 297w
Empty property, Dept for International Development 287w

Foster, Mr Don—continued
Empty property, Dept of Health 353–4w
Empty property, Dept of Social Security 340–1w
Empty property, Dept of Trade and Industry 278w
Empty property, Home Office 445–6w
Empty property, Lord Chancellor's Dept 364w
Empty property, Scotland Office 285w
Empty property, Treasury 330w
Fuel poverty 484w
Fuel poverty, Northern Ireland 244w
Hedges and ditches 111w
Housing, Empty property 324w
Housing, Shops 323–4w
London Regional Transport, Management 793–4
Solicitors, Rules of procedure 557w

Foster, Mr Michael Jabez, (Hastings and Rye)
Debates etc.
Child Support Pensions and Social Security Bill, Rep and 3R (03.04.00) 695
Questions
Small businesses, Pay 485–6
Social security benefits, Capital rules 618–9

Foster, Mr Michael John, (Worcester)
Debates etc.
Learning and Skills Bill (HL), 2R (30.03.00) 567–72
Wild Mammals (Hunting with Dogs) Bill, 2R adjourned (07.04.00) 1299–304
Questions
Rover Group, Longbridge 489
Students, Fees and charges 153–4w

Foulkes, Mr George, Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for International Development
Sittings in Westminster Hall
Developing countries, Education (04.04.00) 195–200wh
Developing countries, Females (30.03.00) 118wh, 123wh, 147–56wh
Questions
Chechnya, Overseas aid 330–1
Eastern Europe, Economic situation 323–4
Indonesia, Forests 184w

Fowler, Rt Hon Sir Norman
Questions
Rover Group 635–6

Fox, Dr Liam
Debates etc.
Ministers, Points of order (28.03.00) 221
Questions
Nurses, Training 207–8

Fraser, Mr Christopher
Questions
Housing, Single people 798
Regional development agencies, Operating costs 585–6w

Fraud
NHS 468w
Prosecutions 468w

Free school meals
296w, 388w
Welfare tax credits 387–8w
Working families tax credit 259w, 538w

Freedom of Information Bill 1999/2000
Debates etc.
Rep adjourned (04.04.00) 830–935
Rep and 3R (05.04.00) 981–1123
Questions
5w, 435w

Freight
Aviation 233w
Railways 427w, 483w
Roads 427w, 433w
Taxation 460w

Fruit
Organic food 559w

Fuel poverty
484w, 548–50w
Northern Ireland 244w

Fuels
Excise duties 497w, 585w, 589w

Fujitsu
Government assistance 476w

"Fully Equipped"
336, 386w

Further education
Northern Ireland 91w
Sports 91w

Future large aircraft
277–8w, 555w
Government assistance 487–8, 532–3w, 621–2w

Fyfe, Maria
Sittings in Westminster Hall
Developing countries, Females (30.03.00) 121wh, 124wh
Questions
Burma, Refugees 471–2w
Independent Tribunal Service, Public appointments 197–8w
Mozambique, Disaster relief 329

Gale, Mr Roger
Debates etc.
Social security benefits, Widowed people (06.04.00) 1254–7, 1260
Questions
Refugees, Deportation 437–8w
Tax burden 585w

Galileo project
233w

Galloway, Mr George
Sittings in Westminster Hall
Western Sahara, Referendums (04.04.00) 184–5wh
Questions
Iraq, International assistance 263–4w

Gaming clubs
Opening hours 383w

Gaming machines
Excise duties 1149–50

Gapes, Mr Mike
Debates etc.
Armed Forces Discipline Bill (HL), Rep and 3R (06.04.00) 1202
Questions
Developing countries, Voluntary work 177–8w
NHS, Finance 209–10

Gardens
Kensington Palace 359w

Gardiner, Mr Barry
Debates etc.
Budget March 2000 (27.03.00) 118
Wild Mammals (Hunting with Dogs) Bill, 2R adjourned (07.04.00) 1304, 1313, 1317, 1325–6
Questions
Armed forces, Sri Lanka 488–9w
Business questions 502
Exports, Sri Lanka 478–9w
Multiple occupation, Licensing 546w

Gardiner, Mr Barry—continued
Refugees 593w
Sri Lanka, Armed conflict 465w
Sri Lanka, Foreign relations 562w
Trade promotion, Sri Lanka 406w

Garnier, Mr Edward
Debates etc.
Criminal Justice and Court Services Bill, 2R (28.03.00) 226
Questions
Hospitals, Private finance initiative 216

Gas fired power stations
406w

Gas Industry (Rateable Values) (England) Order 2000
Debates etc.
(28.03.00) 291

Gas Supply
see Natural gas

General practitioners
Durham County 614–5w

Genetic engineering
Patents 247–8w

Genetically modified organisms
Animal feed 325w, 502w
Crops 18w, 37–8w, 131w, 314–5w, 327w, 419–20w, 434w, 611w
Food 501w
Gloucestershire 419–20w
Herefordshire 18w
Maize 325w, 457w, 502w
Plants 361w

Genetics
Databases 381w, 597w
Insurance 256–7w, 349–50w

George, Mr Andrew
Debates etc.
Child Support Pensions and Social Security Bill, Rep (29.03.00) 356–8, 361, 369, 401–3, 411–3, 418–20, 422
Questions
Bass, Fishing catches 82w
Cycling, Children 19w
EC grants and loans 1145
EC grants and loans, Departmental coordination 481w
Minorities, Languages 54–5w
Overseas aid, Environment protection 175w
Regional cultural consortiums 392w
Westminster Station, Lifts 311w

Gerrard, Mr Neil
Questions
Africa, AIDS 325
Electoral Commission, Costs 3–4w
Race relations, Standards 4w
Radio, Illegal broadcasting 238w

Gibb, Mr Nick
Questions
British Nuclear Fuels 479w
Cars, Prices 622w
Driver and Vehicle Licensing Agency, Proof of identity 321–2w
Fines, Personal income 373w
Fines, Speed limits 370–3w
Future large aircraft 277–8w
Future large aircraft, Government assistance 621–2w
Sellafield, Quality control 479–80w

Gibraltar
Spain 562w

Gibson, Dr Ian
Questions
Business, Information technology 413–4w

Gibson, Dr Ian—continued
Genetically modified organisms, Plants 361w
Genetics, Insurance 349–50w
Insurance, Genetics 256–7w
Mental health services, Racial discrimination 208–9
National Endowment for Science Technology and the Arts 13
Redundancy, EC law 492–4
Science, International cooperation 45–6w
Working families tax credit, Norwich 49w

Gill, Mr Christopher
Questions
Agriculture, Waste disposal 81w, 326–7w
Diseases, Expenditure 346–7w
Fishery agreements, Morocco 254w
Fishing vessels, Spain 253w
Offices, Intervention Board 37w
Pigs 39w
United Nations, Conferences 38w

Gillan, Mrs Cheryl
Sittings in Westminster Hall
Burma, Human rights (05.04.00) 213–6wh, 218wh, 220–1wh
Colombia, Peace negotiations (28.03.00) 8wh, 11wh, 14–8wh
Developing countries, Females (30.03.00) 119wh, 121wh, 127wh, 130wh, 141–7wh, 153wh
Questions
China, State visits 52–3w
Married personal allowance 1141–2
Mercenaries 268w
Mozambique, Disaster relief 330
Zimbabwe, Commonwealth Ministerial Action Group 265w
Zimbabwe, Diplomatic service 266w
Zimbabwe, Elections 265w
Zimbabwe, Farmers 265w
Zimbabwe, Foreign relations 265w
Zimbabwe, Human rights 266w
Zimbabwe, Land 265w
Zimbabwe, Military aid 282w
Zimbabwe, Overseas aid 254w
Zimbabwe, Overseas residence 265–6w
Zimbabwe, Visas 266w
Zimbabwe, Work permits 266w

Gilroy, Mrs Linda
Debates etc.
Pathology, Petitions (06.04.00) 1253
Questions
Electronic government 525w
Fuel poverty 548–50w
Health action zones 204–5
Naval Recruiting and Training Agency, Standards 552w
Pensioners, Income 971–2
Pensioners, Income support 337

Glass
Recycling 23w

Global Cultural Diversity Congress
87w, 378w

Global enterprise initiative
46w

Gloucestershire
Genetically modified organisms 419–20w

Godman, Dr Norman A
Debates etc.
Armed Forces Discipline Bill (HL), Rep and 3R (06.04.00) 1191–2
Child Support Pensions and Social Security Bill, Rep and 3R (03.04.00) 689–90
Royal Ulster Constabulary (06.04.00) 1235–7

Godman, Dr Norman A—continued*
Questions
Fishing vessels, Safety measures 800–1
Kosovo, Overseas aid 175–6w
Winter fuel payments, Inverclyde 334w
Working families tax credit, Scotland 145–6w

Godsiff, Mr Roger
Questions
Entry clearances 440–5w
Small businesses, Company accounts 405–6w

Goggins, Mr Paul
Sittings in Westminster Hall
Colombia, Peace negotiations (28.03.00) 10–3wh
Questions
Industrial injuries disablement benefit, Statistics 531w
Long term unemployed 584w
Social security benefits, Taxation 334w

Government departments
Annual reports 494w
Deregulation 522w
Employers' Forum on Disability 566w
Procurement 330–1w

Government Powers (Limitations) Bill 1999/2000
Debates etc.
2R order read (07.04.00) 1263

Government Technical Assistance Centre
596w

Graffiti
(27.03.00) 191–200

Grammar schools
Trafford 539w, 973

Gray, Mr James
Debates etc.
Armed Forces Discipline Bill (HL), Rep and 3R (06.04.00) 1174, 1176
Wild Mammals (Hunting with Dogs) Bill, 2R adjourned (07.04.00) 1268, 1272, 1289, 1292, 1299–300, 1302, 1306, 1309, 1312, 1314–5, 1317, 1326, 1329–33
Questions
Business questions 1159
Cancer, Health services 339
Fishing vessels, Safety measures 801
Hospitals, Parking 581w
Parking, Cabinet Office 565w
Parking, Dept for Education and Employment 295w
Parking, Dept for International Development 254w
Parking, Dept of Health 217w
Parking, Dept of Social Security 272w
Parking, Dept of Trade and Industry 278w
Parking, Foreign and Commonwealth Office 268w
Parking, Home Office 215w
Parking, Lord Chancellor's Dept 223w
Parking, Ministry of Agriculture Fisheries and Food 327w
Parking, Ministry of Defence 303w
Parking, Northern Ireland Office 244w
Parking, Office of the Secretary of State for Wales 209w
Parking, Scotland Office 249w
Parking, Treasury 260w
Sixth form education, Finance 71–2w
Teachers, Pay 71w

Greater London
Bus services 414w
Council housing 803–4
Doctors 58w
Housing 17w

Greater London—continued*
Housing improvement 605–6w
Listed buildings 547–8w
Low pay 151–2w
Migration 257–8w
Museums and galleries 625w
NHS trusts 341w
Nurses 58w
Police stations 642w
Schools 538w
Secure psychiatric units 126w
Sports 8–9

Greater London Authority
Electronic voting 112w
Grants 225w
Property transfer 420–1w

Green, Mr Damian
Questions
Employment agencies, Correspondence 624w
Housing, Single people 799–800

Green, Keith
379w

Greenbelt
325w

Greenham and Crookham Commons Bill 1999/2000
Debates etc.
2R order read (28.03.00) 201, (04.04.00) 791

Greenway, Mr John
Debates etc.
Freedom of Information Bill, Rep and 3R (05.04.00) 996–9, 1002, 1008, 1023, 1043–4, 1083–4, 1097–9, 1101
Wireless Telegraphy (Television Licence Fees) (Amendment) Regulations (28.03.00) 292–7, 300, 309, 313
Questions
Tourism, Coastal areas 5

Grieve, Mr Dominic
Debates etc.
Freedom of Information Bill, Rep (04.04.00) 878–9
Freedom of Information Bill, Rep and 3R (05.04.00) 1104–5
Questions
Public appointments, NHS 523w

Griffiths, Jane
Questions
Housing, South East region 795–6
Water, Meters 547w
Water charges, Appeals 322w

Griffiths, Mr Win
Questions
Africa, Primary education 178–9w

Grogan, Mr John
Debates etc.
Budget March 2000 (27.03.00) 79–81
Wireless Telegraphy (Television Licence Fees) (Amendment) Regulations (28.03.00) 314

Guided weapons
USA 397w

Gulf Veterans' Illnesses Unit
303–4w

Habitual offenders
Canada 376w

Hague, Rt Hon William
Debates etc.
Lisbon Summit (EC) (27.03.00) 23–5
Questions
Fiscal policy 970–1

Hague, Rt Hon William—continued*
Local Government Act 1988, Homosexuality 337–9
Rover Group, Longbridge 333–5, 966–8

Hain, Mr Peter, Minister of State, Foreign and Commonwealth Office*
Questions
Bangladesh, Public order 267w
Crooks, Roger 283–4w
Democratic Republic of Congo, Armed conflict 564w
Diplomatic service, Political impartiality 103w
Internet, Foreign and Commonwealth Office 564–5w
Iran, Capital punishment 267–8w
Iran, Jews 282w, 564w
Iraq 281–2w
Iraq, Chemical and biological warfare 264–5w
Iraq, Ethnic groups 264w
Iraq, International assistance 263–4w
Iraq, Missing persons 264w
Iraq, Mustard gas 281–2w
Iraq, Oil 265w
Israel, Syrian Arab Republic 466w
Japan, Radioactive materials 171w
Kosovo, Police 564w
Levy, Lord 261–3w
Mercenaries 268w
Serbia, Sanctions 99w
Sierra Leone 284w
Sri Lanka, Armed conflict 465w
Tibet, Human rights 53–4w
United Nations, Rapid deployment forces 171w
World Summit for Social Development 466w
Zimbabwe, Commonwealth Ministerial Action Group 265w
Zimbabwe, Diplomatic service 266w
Zimbabwe, Elections 265w
Zimbabwe, Farmers 265w
Zimbabwe, Foreign relations 265w
Zimbabwe, Human rights 266w
Zimbabwe, Land 171w, 265w
Zimbabwe, Military aid 282w
Zimbabwe, Overseas residence 265–6w

Hall, Mr Patrick
Debates etc.
Freedom of Information Bill, Rep and 3R (05.04.00) 1020–1

Hamilton, Rt Hon Sir Archie
Debates etc.
Wild Mammals (Hunting with Dogs) Bill, 2R adjourned (07.04.00) 1301

Hammond, Mr Philip
Debates etc.
House of Commons sessional orders, Points of order (28.03.00) 222
Sittings in Westminster Hall
NHS Direct (06.04.00) 269–70wh, 272–4wh, 277–92wh, 295wh, 300–4wh, 306–7wh, 309wh
Questions
Children, Abuse 60w
Children's rights 60w
NHS, Finance 210–1
NHS trusts, Public appointments 514w
Prostate cancer, Research 612–3w

Hampshire
Police 378w
Pre-school education 290–1w, 388–9w
Repossession orders 78w
Schools 536–7w

Hancock, Mr Mike
Questions
Ammunition, Procurement 160w
Animal experiments 369–70w
Animal experiments, Licensing 437w
Animal experiments, Rodents 369w, 437w
Armed forces, Higher education 161w
Customs officers, Manpower 259w
Drug seizures 259–60w
Future large aircraft 555w
Guided weapons, USA 397w
Intensive care, Hospital beds 341–2w
Laser-guided bombs 26–7w
Nyima, Gedhun Choekyi 54w
Wickham Research Laboratories, Animal experiments 369w

Handbooks
Prisoners 141w

Hanson, Mr David, Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State, Office of the Secretary of State for Wales*
Questions
National Council for Education and Training in Wales 539–40w

Harbour grant scheme
81–2w

Hare Coursing Bill 1999/2000
Debates etc.
2R order read (07.04.00) 1334

Harman, Rt Hon Harriet
Questions
London Underground, Public private partnerships 225–6w
Working families tax credit, Southwark 49w, 146w

Harris, Dr Evan
Questions
Detainees 599w
Heart diseases, Health services 214
Immigration controls, Operating costs 598–9w
Legal aid, Refugees 401w
Overseas aid, Basic education 185–6w
Refugees, Deportation 593w
Refugees, Finance 592–3w
Refugees, Social security benefits 452w

Harvey, Mr Nick
Questions
Hospitals, Infectious diseases 354w
Meningitis, Vaccination 395w
NHS, Capital Modernisation Fund 509w
NHS, Cleaning services 354w
Prescription drugs, Fees and charges 354w

Hawkins, Mr Nick
Debates etc.
Criminal Justice and Court Services Bill, 2R (28.03.00) 228, 231–2, 255, 257, 273, 278–85, 290
Freedom of Information Bill, Rep (04.04.00) 859–60, 862, 864, 875–7, 890, 892–7, 903, 911–2, 931–2
Freedom of Information Bill, Rep and 3R (05.04.00) 986–8, 992, 1012, 1018–20, 1035–6, 1039–40, 1044–5, 1084, 1104, 1115, 1119–20
Official Report, Points of order (05.04.00) 978
Questions
Freedom of Information Bill 1999/2000 5w
Swimming, Schools 3

Hayes, Mr John
Debates etc.
Budget March 2000 (27.03.00) 76–8, 99–101, 104, 107, 112

Hazardous materials
Lorries 432–3w

Head lice
618w

Heal, Mrs Sylvia
Questions
Nurses, Training 123w
State retirement pensions 616

Heald, Mr Oliver
Debates etc.
Freedom of Information Bill, Rep and 3R (05.04.00) 1059
Questions
Business questions 500–1
Child care tax credit 583w
Consultants, Home Office 215–6w, 640–1w

Healey, Mr John
Debates etc.
Nurses, Pay (28.03.00) 315–9
Questions
Electronic government, Digital broadcasting 524w
Meningitis, Yorkshire and Humberside 211–2
New deal for lone parents 336w
Regional development agencies 412w
Small businesses, Government assistance 241–2w

Health
Elderly 130w
Females 130w

Health action zones
203–5

Health authorities
Northern region 59w
Yorkshire and Humberside 59w

Health Care Standards for Elderly Persons Bill 1999/2000
Debates etc.
1R (04.04.00) 827–9

Health education
Smoking 614w

Health hazards
Cellular phones 580w
Mixed oxide fuel 349w
Pesticides 580–1w

Health services
Cancer 123w, 339
Chronically sick (29.03.00) 92–100wh
Elderly 355–6w
Heart diseases 119w, 212–4
Pain (29.03.00) 467–74
Private sector 579w
South East region 617–8w
Technicians 55w

Hearing
Babies 617w

Hearing impaired
Pre-school education 387w
Teachers 387w

Heart diseases
Health services 119w, 212–4
North West region 119w

Heath, Mr David
Debates etc.
Child Support Pensions and Social Security Bill, Rep and 3R (03.04.00) 663, 772–3
Freedom of Information Bill, Rep (04.04.00) 871–3, 881, 885–7, 929–31, 933

Heath, Mr David*—*continued
Freedom of Information Bill, Rep and 3R (05.04.00) 1001–3, 1025, 1035, 1062–5, 1068, 1117
Learning and Skills Bill (HL), 2R (30.03.00) 520–1
Questions
Genetic engineering, Patents 247–8w
Intensive care, Hospital beds 119–20w
Milk, Competition 236–7w
National Audit Office 18–9
Social security benefits, Capital rules 617–8

Heathcoat-Amory, Rt Hon David
Questions
Art works, EC action 480w
Excise duties 496w
Smuggling, Tobacco 490w
"Tackling Tobacco Smuggling" 462w

Heathrow Airport
Air routes 427–8w

Heavily indebted poor countries initiative
147–8w

Hedges and ditches
111w
Farms 132w, 172w, 325w, 327–8w

Hemp
EC action (03.04.00) 782

Henderson, Mr Doug
Sittings in Westminster Hall
River Tyne, Shipbuilding (04.04.00) 164–6wh

Henderson, Mr Ivan
Debates etc.
Budget March 2000 (27.03.00) 112–3
Questions
Maritime and Coastguard Agency, Standards 225w
Tourism, Coastal areas 4

Hendon
Community Legal Service 556w

Herefordshire
Genetically modified organisms 18w

Heritage Lottery Fund
Locomotives 68w

Hesford, Mr Stephen
Questions
Junior doctors, Working hours 575w
Royal Ulster Constabulary, Human rights 280w

Hewitt, Ms Patricia, Minister of State, Dept of Trade and Industry*
Questions
Arachnoiditis, Research 191w
Business, Regulation 240w
Computers, Dept of Trade and Industry 623–4w
Electronic commerce 482–3
Higher education, Finance 157w
Internet, Dept of Trade and Industry 278w
Internet, Rural areas 238w
Internet, Trade marks 236w
Radio, Illegal broadcasting 238w
Recycling, Packaging 623w
Small Business Service 239w
Small businesses, North East region 242w
Small businesses, Pay 485–6
Small businesses, Regulation 235w, 481w
Telecommunications, Regulation 239w

Higher education
Admissions 288w
Applications 91–2w
Armed forces 161w

Higher education—continued*
Finance 157w
Northern Ireland 91–2w
Overseas students 387w

Highways Agency
Standards 227w

Hill, Mr Keith, Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State, Dept of the Environment Transport and the Regions*
Questions
Agriculture, Waste disposal 326–7w
Air pollution, Fees and charges 224–5w
British Transport Police 486w
Bus services 481–3w
Bus services, Greater London 414w
Company cars 317w
Cycling 316w
Cycling, Children 19w
Dial-a-ride 324w
Driver and Vehicle Licensing Agency, Proof of identity 321–2w
Driving, Disabled 21–2w
Driving under influence, EC action 430–1w
EC Transport Council 230–2w
Electronic voting, Greater London Authority 112w
Fishing vessels, Safety measures 800–1
Greater London Authority, Grants 225w
Greater London Authority, Property transfer 420–1w
Highways Agency, Standards 227w
Lighting, Pollution control 432w, 605w
Listed buildings, Greater London 547–8w
London Regional Transport, Consultants 310w
London Underground, Escalators 310–1w
London Underground, Public private partnerships 225–6w, 544w
London Underground, Standards 309–10w
Lorries, Excise duties 433w
Lorries, Hazardous materials 432–3w
M4, Bus lanes 313–4w
Manchester Metrolink 232w
Maritime and Coastguard Agency, Standards 225w
Mayor of London, Elections 433–4w
Ministerial policy advisors, Dept of the Environment Transport and the Regions 605w
Motor vehicle type approval 607w
Motor vehicles 431w
Motor vehicles, Taxation 111–2w
Motor vehicles, Testing 19–20w, 431w
Park and ride schemes 17w
Pedestrians, Safety 608w
Piccadilly line, Rolling stock 544–5w
Railways, Euxton 802–3
Railways, Freight 427w, 483w
Rapid transit systems 410w
Road traffic 322–3w
Roads 607w
Roads, Accidents 545–6w
Roads, Rural areas 17w
Roads, Safety 545w
Safety belts, Disabled 411–2w
Thameslink, Planning 432w
Transport, Disabled 485–6w
Transport, Infrastructure 24w
Transport, Local plans 13–6w, 412w
Vehicle number plates 131w
Wembley Stadium, Transport 23–4w
Westminster Station, Jubilee line 314w
Westminster Station, Lifts 311w

Hinchliffe, Mr David
Questions
Negligence 514–5w
NHS, Finance 210

HM Land Registry
see Land Registry

HM Prison Service
see Prison Service

Hodge, Ms Margaret, Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State, Dept for Education and Employment*
Debates etc.
Sign language (05.04.00) 1128–32
Questions
Access to work programme 74w, 294w
Children, Day care 41w
Disability aids 386w
Early years development plans 41w
Education, Disabled 204w
Employment, Discrimination 73w
Employment, Football 42w, 386w
Internet, Disabled 72–3w
Pre-school education, Hampshire 290–1w, 388–9w
Regulation, Dept for Education and Employment 387w

Hoey, Miss Kate, Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State, Dept for Culture Media and Sport*
Debates etc.
Points of order intervention (05.04.00) 975
Questions
Athletics, Sportsgrounds 540w
Heritage Lottery Fund, Locomotives 68w
National Lottery, Morecambe 470w
National Lottery, Sports 540w
Sport action zones 65w
Sports, Finance 66–7w
Sports, Greater London 8–9
Sports, Museums and galleries 67w
Sports, Schools 66w
Sportsgrounds, Belgium 471w
Swimming, Schools 2–4
Wembley Stadium 104–5w
World class performance programme 469–70w

Hogg, Rt Hon Douglas
Debates etc.
Wild Mammals (Hunting with Dogs) Bill, 2R adjourned (07.04.00) 1269–85

Home detention curfews
9–12w, 85–6w, 139–40w, 144–5w, 446w, 636–40w
Sexual offences 599–600w

Home improvement agencies
Contracts 228w

Home Office
Consultants 215–6w, 640–1w
Empty property 445–6w
Non-departmental public bodies 87–8w
Parking 215w
Public appointments 215w

Home Robertson, Mr John
Debates etc.
Budget March 2000 (27.03.00) 103–5

Home visits
Social Security Benefits Agency 166–7w

Homosexuality
British dependent territories 170w
Local Government Act 1988 337–9

Hong Kong
Ministry of Defence 27w

Hood, Mr Jimmy
Questions
EC Foreign Affairs Council 167–9w
EC Internal Market Council 106–7w
EC Transport Council 230–2w

Hood, Mr Jimmy—continued*
EU Justice and Home Affairs Council 373–6w

Hoon, Rt Hon Geoffrey, Secretary of State for Defence*
Questions
Chapelcross power station, Tritium 303w
Levy, Lord 25w, 489w
Military aircraft, Iraq 27w
Nuclear weapons 487w
UNMIK 556w

Hope, Mr Phil
Debates etc.
Learning and Skills Bill (HL), 2R (30.03.00) 520
Questions
Business questions 506–7
Children, Poverty 333w
Employment agencies, Regulation 236w
Land Registry, Standards 220–1w
Prison Service, Standards 213–4w
Social Exclusion Unit 964

Hopkins, Mr Kelvin
Debates etc.
Child Support Pensions and Social Security Bill, Rep and 3R (03.04.00) 698

Hops
Subsidies 174–5w

Horn of Africa
Famine 182w

Horses
35w

Horticulture
Climate change levy 586–7w

Hospices
Contracts 345–6w
Finance 346w

Hospital beds
351w
Broomfield Hospital 62–3w
Intensive care 119–20w, 341–2w

Hospital ships
207w

Hospital wards
West Sussex 509–10w

Hospitals
Berkshire 508w
Consultants 127w
Hygiene 122w
Infectious diseases 345w, 354w
Parking 581w
Private finance initiative 215–7
Waiting lists 62w, 119w, 135w, 508w, 575w

House of Commons Liaison Committee
(30.03.00) 599, (06.04.00) 1253

House of Commons Works of Art Advisory Committee
235w

Household Division
Correspondence 51w

Housing
410–1w
Armed forces 29w
Chelmsford 111w, 807–8
East Anglia 608–9w
Empty property 324w
Greater London 17w
Minimum wage 237w
Ministerial statements (04.04.00) 811–26
Petitions (29.03.00) 465
Public transport 17w, 413w
Radon gas 419w

Housing*—*continued
Refugees 366w, 439w
Shops 323–4w
Single people 798–800
South East region 321w, 428w, 608–10w, 795–8
Standards 801–2
Surrey 414w

Housing benefit
Abuse 118w, (05.04.00) 222–42wh, 332w, 629w
Child care tax credit 271w
Expenditure 332w
Housing occupancy 446–7w
Lone parents 626

Housing improvement
Disabled 324w
Greater London 605–6w

Housing occupancy
Housing benefit 446–7w

Housing revenue accounts
21w
New towns 809–10

Howard, Rt Hon Michael
Debates etc.
Learning and Skills Bill (HL), 2R (30.03.00) 550–3
Royal Ulster Constabulary (06.04.00) 1220, 1249

Howarth, Mr Alan, Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State, Dept for Culture Media and Sport*
Questions
Art works, Dept for Culture Media and Sport 392–3w
Kensington Palace, Gardens 359w
Museums and galleries, Children 15–6
Museums and galleries, Fees and charges 625w
National Endowment for Science Technology and the Arts 13
National Lottery, Cultural heritage 470–1w
Public libraries 65w
Public libraries, Voluntary work 358–9w
Stonehenge 261w, 625w
Theatre, Young people 64–5w

Howarth, Mr George, Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State, Northern Ireland Office*
Sittings in Westminster Hall
Social security benefits, Northern Ireland (04.04.00) 180–3wh
Questions
Camperdown Garden Village, Planning permission 98w
Council housing, Northern Ireland 50–1w
Equal opportunities, Northern Ireland 519w, 570w
Fuel poverty, Northern Ireland 244w
Northern Ireland Equality Commission 281w
Nursery schools, Northern Ireland 133–5w
Royal Victoria Hospital Belfast, Repairs and maintenance 568w
Schools, Northern Ireland 570w

Howarth, Mr Gerald
Debates etc.
Learning and Skills Bill (HL), 2R (30.03.00) 517, 521–2, 533
Questions
Children 497–8w
Developing countries, Debts 327
Lone parents 498w
Maintenance, Children 630w
Military bases, Aldershot 207w

Howarth, Mr Gerald*—*continued
National insurance contributions, Lone parents 530w

Howells, Dr Kim, Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State, Dept of Trade and Industry*
Questions
Arms trade, Pakistan 188–9w
Arms trade, Uganda 620–1w
Arms trade, Zimbabwe 194–5w
Art works, Dept of Trade and Industry 479w
Art works, EC action 480w
Astra Holdings, Company investigations 188w
Blue Arrow, Company investigations 187–8w
Cars, Prices 404w, 622w
Computers, Competition 622–3w
Contract compliance, EC law 195–6w
Empty property, Dept of Trade and Industry 278w
Exports, Sri Lanka 478–9w
Ice cream, Competition 191w, 403w
Insolvency 403w
Manufactured goods, Imports 193–4w
Mergers 186–7w
Metrication, Retail trade 404–5w
Microsoft, Telewest Communications 194w
Non-departmental public bodies, Public appointments 277w
Parking, Dept of Trade and Industry 278w
Public appointments, Dept of Trade and Industry 277w
Trade associations, Consumer protection 240w
Unigate, Dairy Crest 624w

Hoyle, Mr Lindsay
Questions
Air pollution, Fees and charges 224–5w
Disabled, Employment 334w
Excise duties, Petrol 1144
Kosovo, C17 aircraft 300w
Manufacturing industries, West Midlands 490–1
National Lottery 10
Railways, Euxton 802–3
State retirement pensions, Uprating 624–5
Tourism 65–6w

Hughes, Ms Beverley, Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State, Dept of the Environment Transport and the Regions*
Sittings in Westminster Hall
Railway network (28.03.00) 33–6wh
Questions
Advantage West Midlands 430w
Aerials, Planning permission 429w
Alternative energy, Waste disposal 227–8w
Art works, Dept of the Environment Transport and the Regions 484–5w
Audit, Quality control 317–8w
Business, Information technology 413–4w
Construction, Standards 411w, 420w
Construction, Sustainable development 323w
Councillors 18–9w
Derelict land, North West region 411w
Education, Cheshire 316w
Greenbelt 325w
Housing, Chelmsford 111w
Housing, Greater London 17w
Housing, Public transport 17w, 413w
Housing, South East region 321w
Housing, Surrey 414w
Internet, Dept of the Environment Transport and the Regions 415–9w
Lighting, Pollution control 432w

Hughes, Ms Beverley*—*continued
Local authorities, Assets 485w
Local authorities, Pension rights 414–5w
Local government, Disclosure of information 429w
Millennium Exhibition, Land use 429w
Non-departmental public bodies 314w
Parish councils 410w
Population 321w
Public appointments, Dept of the Environment Transport and the Regions 319w
Public inquiries, Dept of the Environment Transport and the Regions 311–3w
Regional airports, South East region 229w
Regional assemblies 17w, 318–9w
Regional assemblies, Yorkshire and Humberside 320w
Regional development agencies 18w
Regional development agencies, Accountability 319w
Regional development agencies, Public appointments 319w
Regulation, Dept of the Environment Transport and the Regions 415w
Social rented housing 422w
Social services, Finance 228w
Sports centres, Planning permission 434w
Standard spending assessments, Southend 795
Standard spending assessments, Stockport 413w
Urban areas 428w, 606w

Hughes, Mr Kevin Michael, An Assistant Whip*
Debates etc.
Child Support Pensions and Social Security Bill, Rep (29.03.00) 374
Child Support Pensions and Social Security Bill, Rep and 3R (03.04.00) 762

Hughes, Mr Simon
Debates etc.
Criminal Justice and Court Services Bill, 2R (28.03.00) 226–7, 235, 262–9, 285, 288, 290
Freedom of Information Bill, Rep (04.04.00) 841–2, 860–3, 870, 876–8, 880, 883, 902–4
Freedom of Information Bill, Rep and 3R (05.04.00) 1002, 1042–3, 1082–3, 1085–6, 1095–6
Questions
Church of England, Finance 17
Immigration rules 592w
Knowledge network project 68–70w
Police, Hampshire 378w
Police, Manpower 595w
Police stations, Greater London 642w
Probation and aftercare, Information technology 5w
Refugees, Finance 591–2w
Sri Lanka, Overseas aid 177w
Urban Task Force 804

Human rights
Burma (05.04.00) 201–21wh
China 285w
Indonesia 170–1w
Kazakhstan 284–5w
Royal Ulster Constabulary 280w
Tibet 53–4w
Zimbabwe 266w

Human Rights Act 1998
Questions
619–20

Humble, Mrs Joan
Questions
Social Fund 339w

Hume, Mr John
Debates etc.
Royal Ulster Constabulary (06.04.00) 1219

Hunter, Mr Andrew
Sittings in Westminster Hall
Housing benefit, Abuse (05.04.00) 222–5wh, 228–9wh
Questions
Lorries, Hazardous materials 432–3w
Mortgages, Arrears 473w
Prisoners' release, Northern Ireland 95–6w
Victim support schemes, Northern Ireland 569w

Hunting
(07.04.00) 1264–333

Huntingdon Life Sciences
Animal experiments 436–7w

Hurst, Mr Alan
Questions
Drug prevention schemes 68w

Hutton, Mr John, Minister of State, Dept of Health*
Debates etc.
Elderly, Residential homes (03.04.00) 787–90
Questions
Adoption 55–6w, 119w
Children, Abuse 60w
Children in care, Crimes of violence 62w
Children's rights 60w
Dental services 349w
Dental services, Lincolnshire 124w
Dental services, Shropshire 507–8w
Elderly, Doctors' list of patients 121w
Elderly, Health services 355–6w
Elderly, Institutional care 63w, 581w
"Fit for the Future Consultation Paper" 356w
Health, Females 130w
Hospitals, Private finance initiative 215–7
Institutional care, Correspondence 59w
Institutional care, Local government services 509w
Mental health services, Racial discrimination 208–9
Mental patients, Acute beds 59–60w
Mentally disturbed offenders, Inquiries 56–7w
Munchausen's syndrome 507–8w
NHS, Voluntary work 220w
Nursing homes, Durham County 508w
Nursing homes, Fees and charges 124–5w
Prescription drugs, Children in care 59w
Residential allowance 220w
Secure psychiatric units, Greater London 126w
Social services 205–6
Social services, Voluntary work 347w

Hydro Agri (UK)
Redundancy 44w

Hydrography
Navy 207–8w

Hygiene
Hospitals 122w

Ice cream
Competition 191w, 403w

Iddon, Dr Brian
Sittings in Westminster Hall
Radiation, Research (29.03.00) 57wh
Questions
Business questions 1160
Immigration, Applications 520–1w

Illegal broadcasting
Radio 238w

Illegal immigrants
84w

Illsley, Mr Eric
Questions
Mineworkers' pension scheme 481–2

Immigration
Administrative delays 88w, (29.03.00) 109–16wh
Appeals 592w
Applications 520–1w
Correspondence 439–40w, 634w

Immigration and Nationality Directorate
Correspondence 440w
Documents 434–5w

Immigration controls
Disclosure of information 590–1w
Operating costs 598–9w

Immigration rules
592w

Imports
Beef 249w, 560–2w
Manufactured goods 193–4w
Milk 251w, 500–1w
Motor vehicles 463w

In vitro fertilisation
502w

Incapacity benefit
162–3w
Administrative delays 34w

Incinerators
306–9w

Income support
Capital rules 453–4w
Mortgages 341w, 454w
Pensioners 166w, 333w, 337, 447–8w, 473w, 531–2w

Income tax
585w
Construction 24–5w
Pensioners 151w
Tax yields 149–50w

Independent Commissioner for the Holding Centres
604w

Independent Tribunal Service
Public appointments 197–8w
Scotland 197–8w

India
Overseas trade 484–5

Individual learning accounts
295w

Individual savings accounts
459w

Indonesia
Forests 184–5w
Human rights 170–1w
Kidnapping 29w

Industrial diseases
Compensation (05.04.00) 1123

Industrial health and safety
Nuclear power stations 108w

Industrial injuries
Compensation (30.03.00) 600–8

Industrial injuries disablement benefit
34w
Statistics 531w

Industry
Government assistance (27.03.00) 187

Infectious diseases
Hospitals 345w, 354w

Infectious diseases—continued*
Primates 357w

Inflammatory bowel disease
214–5

Information officers
Office of the Secretary of State for Wales 472w, 573w

Information technology
Business 413–4w
Dept of Social Security 115w
NHS 511–3w
Probation and aftercare 5w

Infrastructure
Transport 24w

Ingram, Rt Hon Adam, Minister of State, Northern Ireland Office*
Debates etc.
Royal Ulster Constabulary (06.04.00) 1248–50
Questions
Access funds, Northern Ireland 94–5w
Adult education, Northern Ireland 97–8w
Baton rounds, Northern Ireland 89–90w
Early day motions, Correspondence 135w
Employment tribunals, Northern Ireland 517w
Equal opportunities, Northern Ireland 518–9w, 569–70w
Fair Employment Tribunal for Northern Ireland, Finance 517w
Flags, Armagh 280–1w
Foreign investment in UK, Lisburn 569w
Further education, Sports 91w
Higher education, Applications 91–2w
Higher education, Northern Ireland 91w
Internet, Northern Ireland Office 571–3w
Nelson, Rosemary 244w
Northern Ireland Civil Service, Roman Catholic Church 517–8w
Northern Ireland education and library boards, Grants 90–1w
Parking, Northern Ireland Office 244w
Police, Parliamentary questions 243w
Police Authority for Northern Ireland, Offices 51w
Postgraduate education, Northern Ireland 94w
Prisoners' release, Northern Ireland 95–6w
Probation Board for Northern Ireland 244w
Regulation, Northern Ireland Office 407w
Royal Ulster Constabulary, Compensation 97w
Royal Ulster Constabulary, Complaints 516–7w
Royal Ulster Constabulary, Human rights 280w
Royal Ulster Constabulary, Oaths and affirmations 90w
Sewage, Killyleagh 132–3w
Student numbers, Northern Ireland 91–2w, 96w
Student wastage, Northern Ireland 92w
Students, Community relations 93w
Students, Fees and charges 95w
Students, Finance 93–4w
Students, Loans 566–7w
Students, Religion 94w
Terrorism, Northern Ireland 567–8w
Victim support schemes, Northern Ireland 569w

Inland Revenue
Computers 499w
Personal records 500w

Insolvency
403w

Institutional care
Correspondence 59w
Elderly 63w, 581w
Local government services 509w

Insurance
Genetics 256–7w, 349–50w

Intelligence services
Surveillance 389w

Intensive care
352w
Hospital beds 119–20w, 341–2w

Interception warrants
280w

International cooperation
Science 45–6w

Internet
Dept for Culture Media and Sport 391–2w
Dept for International Development 286w
Dept of Social Security 272–3w
Dept of the Environment Transport and the Regions 415–9w
Dept of Trade and Industry 278w
Disabled 72–3w
Foreign and Commonwealth Office 564–5w
Ministry of Agriculture Fisheries and Food 456w
Ministry of Defence 299w
Northern Ireland Office 571–3w
Office of the Secretary of State for Wales 210w
Prime Minister 38–9w
Rural areas 238w
Schools 205–6w
Scotland Office 110–1w
Trade marks 236w

Intervention Board
Offices 37w

Invalid vehicles
451w

Inverclyde
Winter fuel payments 334w

Ionizing radiation
EC law 19w

Iran
Capital punishment 267–8w
Jews 282w, 564w

Iraq
281–2w
Chemical and biological warfare 264–5w
Ethnic groups 264w
International assistance 263–4w
Military aircraft 27w
Missing persons 264w
Mustard gas 281–2w
Oil 265w
Public expenditure 1149
Temporary immigrants 410w

Irish Sea
Fisheries 173w

Iron and steel
Wales 158w

Israel
Armed forces 397w
Ballistic missile defence 398w, 488w
Ministry of Defence 397w
Syrian Arab Republic 466w

Ivory
Convention on International Trade in Endangered Species 806

Jack, Rt Hon Michael
Questions
Heart diseases, Health services 119w, 213
Police, Manpower 445w
Sellafield, Quality control 542–4w

Jackson, Ms Glenda
Debates etc.
Freedom of Information Bill, Rep and 3R (05.04.00) 1100
Housing (04.04.00) 824
Wild Mammals (Hunting with Dogs) Bill, 2R adjourned (07.04.00) 1307–9, 1313, 1328, 1330
Sittings in Westminster Hall
Barclays Bank, Suffolk (29.03.00) 77wh, 81–3wh
Developing countries, Females (30.03.00) 125–8wh, 143wh

Jackson, Helen
Debates etc.
Freedom of Information Bill, Rep (04.04.00) 925–6
Questions
Maintenance, Children 336–7w
Manufacturing industries, UK membership of EC 238w
Social services 205–6
Theatre 65w

Jackson, Mr Robert
Sittings in Westminster Hall
Radiation, Research (29.03.00) 53–60wh, 62wh

Japan
Radioactive materials 105w, 171w, 476w

Jenkin, Mr Bernard
Questions
Aircraft, Noise 232w
Aviation, Freight 233w
Aviation, Prime Minister 279w
EC Transport Council 230–2w
Essex Rivers Healthcare NHS Trust, Private sector 217w
Essex Rivers Healthcare NHS Trust, Waiting lists 351–2w, 614w
European Aviation Safety Authority 232–3w
Galileo project 233w
Local authorities, Correspondence 35w
London Underground, Public private partnerships 794–5
Lorries, Excise duties 433w
M4, Bus lanes 313–4w
Manchester Metrolink 232w
Police, Sick leave 214w

Jenkins, Mr Brian
Questions
Buildings, Dept of Trade and Industry 108w
Primary care trusts 122w

Jews
Iran 282w, 564w

Job satisfaction
NHS 612w

Johnson, Mr Alan, Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State, Dept of Trade and Industry*
Sittings in Westminster Hall
Radiation, Research (29.03.00) 66–9wh
River Tyne, Shipbuilding (04.04.00) 171–7wh
Questions
Employment 235w
Employment agencies, Correspondence 624w
Employment agencies, Regulation 236w

Johnson, Mr Alan—continued*
Future large aircraft 277–8w
Future large aircraft, Government assistance 532–3w, 621–2w
Longbridge Task Force, Political impartiality 44w
Longbridge Task Force, Public appointments 196w
Minimum wage 237w
Minimum wage, Housing 237w
Part-time employment 242w
Post offices, Electronic government 237w
Redundancy, EC law 492–4
Textiles 483–4
Welding Institute, Grants 44–5w
Working hours 239w

Johnson, Miss Melanie, Economic Secretary to the Treasury*
Questions
Analgesics, Death 114–5w
Art works, Treasury 496w
Bank services 152–3w
Bank services, Competition 256w
Bank services, Social security benefits 152w
Barclays Bank 47w
Children 497–8w
Credit unions 330w
Death rate, Liverpool 255w
Debts, Developing countries 460w
Debts written off, Developing countries 584w
Economic and monetary union 585w
Employment, South East region 586w
Heavily indebted poor countries initiative 147–8w
Individual savings accounts 459w
Insurance, Genetics 256–7w
Lone parents 150w, 498w
Low birthweight babies 461w
Low pay, Greater London 151–2w
Low pay, Scotland 47–8w
Migration 233–5w, 254–5w
Migration, Greater London 257–8w
Migration, South East region 587–8w
Migration, Urban areas 458w
Population, South East region 588w
Secondment, Treasury 46–7w
Statistics Commission 258w
Tax allowances, Charities 589–90w
Tax allowances, Pension funds 152w
Textiles 586w
Unemployment 329–30w
Unemployment, Local education business partnerships 1140–1

Jones, Rt Hon Barry
Debates etc.
Criminal Justice and Court Services Bill, 2R (28.03.00) 229
Questions
Aviation, Government assistance 488
Iron and steel, Wales 158w

Jones, Helen M
Questions
Armed forces, Conduct 305w
Business questions 503
Chemical and biological warfare 206–7w
Free school meals 296w
Free school meals, Welfare tax credits 387–8w
Legal Services Ombudsman 198w
Nurses, Training 355w
Public libraries 65w
School meals 296w, 538w

Jones, Mr Jon Owen
Debates etc.
Freedom of Information Bill, Rep (04.04.00) 842–3, 900–3

Jones, Mr Jon Owen*—*continued
Freedom of Information Bill, Rep and 3R (05.04.00) 1010, 1021–5

Jones, Dr Lynne
Debates etc.
Child Support Pensions and Social Security Bill, Rep and 3R (03.04.00) 673–5, 697, 699, 701–2, 712–4, 741–2, 744, 769, 781
Freedom of Information Bill, Rep and 3R (05.04.00) 1016–8, 1083
Sittings in Westminster Hall
Radiation, Research (29.03.00) 67wh
Questions
Higher education, Admissions 288w
Hospitals, Private finance initiative 215–6
Nuclear weapons 487w
Rover Group 639–40
State retirement pensions 617

Jowell, Rt Hon Ms Tessa, Minister for the New Deal, Dept for Education and Employment
Questions
Employment Service, Disability aids 41–2w
Females, Politics and government 535–6w
New deal for 50 plus, Expenditure 210w
New deal for long term unemployed, Expenditure 210w
New deal for young people 40–1w, 206w
New deal for young people, Expenditure 211w
New deal schemes, Ethnic groups 287–9w
New deal schemes, Local authorities 537w
Socrates programme 289–90w

Jubilee line
Westminster Station 314w

Judicial Committee of the Privy Council see Privy Council Office Judicial Committee

Junior doctors
Working hours 575w

Kashmir
968

Kaufman, Rt Hon Gerald
Debates etc.
Housing (04.04.00) 820
Questions
Westminster Station, Jubilee line 314w

Kazakhstan
Human rights 284–5w
Press freedom 284w

Keeble, Ms Sally
Questions
Adoption 119w
Legal costs 221–3w

Keetch, Mr Paul
Questions
Agriculture, Environment protection 252w, 457–8w, 560w
Genetically modified organisms, Crops 18w
Heritage Lottery Fund, Locomotives 68w
Intensive care 352w
National Lottery, Cultural heritage 470–1w
Nature conservation, Forest of Bowland 251–2w, 560w

Kelly, Ms Ruth
Questions
Child care tax credit 328–9w
Departmental responsibilities, Families 77–8w
Working families tax credit 147w

Kennedy, Rt Hon Charles
Debates etc.
Lisbon Summit (EC) (27.03.00) 27
Questions
Pensioners, Income 968–9
Sellafield, Quality control 335–6

Kennedy, Jane, Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State, Lord Chancellor's Dept
Debates etc.
Matrimonial proceedings (04.04.00) 952–6
Questions
Empty property, Lord Chancellor's Dept 364w
Fines, Personal income 364w
Magistrates 363w
Magistrates' courts 364w
Public Trust Office 79w
Regulation, Lord Chancellor's Dept 401w
Repossession orders, Mortgages 78w

Kensington Palace
Gardens 359w

Kent
Drugs 380w

Kent County Council Bill (HL) 1998/99
Debates etc.
2R order read (30.03.00) 475, (06.04.00) 1133

Key, Mr Robert
Debates etc.
Armed Forces Discipline Bill (HL), Rep and 3R (06.04.00) 1164–7, 1173–4, 1177–82, 1189–96, 1198–203
Questions
Antenatal care, Screening 218w
Armed forces, Cadets 25–6w, 162w
Armed forces, Catering 305w
Armed forces, Financial services 28w
Artillery, Procurement 603w
British Transport Police 486w
Ministry of Defence Police 521–2w
Motor vehicles, Testing 19–20w
POLIS 42w
Roll-on roll-off ships, Deployment 208–9w
Stonehenge 261w, 625w
Territorial Army, Working hours 28w, 162w

Khabra, Mr Piara S
Debates etc.
Lisbon Summit (EC) (27.03.00) 31
Questions
Kashmir 968

Kidnapping
Indonesia 29w

Kidney, Mr David
Questions
Advantage West Midlands 430w
Empty property 482w
Insolvency 403w
Rents, Rebates 325w
Roads, Accidents 545–6w
Roads, Safety 545w
Social rented housing 422–5w
Working families tax credit, Free school meals 259w, 538w
Working families tax credit, Payments 329w
Working families tax credit, Stafford 49w

Kilfoyle, Mr Peter
Debates etc.
Budget March 2000 (27.03.00) 60–3

Killyleagh
Sewage 132–3w

King, Mr Andy
Questions
Defence Vetting Agency, Standards 550–1w
Naval Manning Agency, Standards 551–2w

King, Ms Oona
Debates etc.
Housing (04.04.00) 826
Sittings in Westminster Hall
Developing countries, Females (30.03.00) 127–8wh, 132–3wh, 136–9wh
Questions
Bangladesh, Public order 267w
Passports 84w
Refugees, Somalia 602w
Social rented housing, Tenancy agreements 807
State retirement pensions, Uprating 620–1

King, Rt Hon Tom
Debates etc.
Royal Ulster Constabulary (06.04.00) 1219
Wild Mammals (Hunting with Dogs) Bill, 2R adjourned (07.04.00) 1288, 1293, 1295, 1322

Kirkbride, Miss Julie
Debates etc.
Private notice question intervention (03.04.00) 636
Questions
Fujitsu, Government assistance 476w
Longbridge Task Force, Political impartiality 44w
Longbridge Task Force, Public appointments 196w
Rover Group 634–5

Kirkwood, Mr Archy
Debates etc.
Child Support Pensions and Social Security Bill, Rep (29.03.00) 450–1
Child Support Pensions and Social Security Bill, Rep and 3R (03.04.00) 703–4
Questions
House of Commons Works of Art Advisory Committee 235w

Knowledge network project
68–70w, 386w

Korean War
Anniversaries 25w

Kosovo
C17 aircraft 300w
Construction 563–4w
Overseas aid 175–6w, 582w
Police 564w
Radioactivity 555w
Uranium 555w, 581w

Labelling
Drugs 509w
Food 36w

Ladyman, Dr Stephen
Debates etc.
Budget March 2000 (27.03.00) 56, 92–5
Questions
Animal experiments, Disclosure of information 213–4w, 601–2w
Animal Procedures Committee 213–4w
Council of Ministers 99–101w
Excise duties, Gaming machines 1149–50
Serbia, Sanctions 99w

Laing, Mrs Eleanor
Debates etc.
Budget March 2000 (27.03.00) 105–7

Lait, Mrs Jacqui
Debates etc.
Child Support Pensions and Social Security Bill, Rep (29.03.00) 451
Child Support Pensions and Social Security Bill, Rep and 3R (03.04.00) 664–5, 698–700, 715–7, 720, 727–9, 733, 740–1, 747–8, 754, 771
Questions
Pensioners, Income 610–1
Smuggling, Tobacco 490–1w
Stakeholder pensions 34w
State retirement pensions, Australia 35w
State retirement pensions, Self-employed 33–4w, 271w
"Tackling Tobacco Smuggling" 462w
Tax allowances, Pension funds 152w

Lancashire
Disability aids 618w
Police 445w

Land
Ministry of Defence 27w
Zimbabwe 171w, 265w

Land Registry
Standards 220–1w

Land Rover
240w
Pension rights 622w

Land use
Millennium Exhibition 429w

Landfill tax
Alternative energy 260–1w
Environment protection 499w

Languages
Minorities 54–5w

Lansley, Mr Andrew
Debates etc.
Wild Mammals (Hunting with Dogs) Bill, 2R adjourned (07.04.00) 1265
Questions
Electronic government 960–1
Knowledge network project 386w
Lisbon Summit (EC) 248w, 390w
Ministerial policy advisors 280w
Ministers, Aviation 248w, 391w

Laser-guided bombs
26–7w

Lawrence, Mrs Jackie
Questions
Finance Bill 1999/2000 151w
Government departments, Annual reports 494w
Statistics Commission 258w

Learning and Skills Bill (HL) 1999/2000
Debates etc.
2R and Money res* (30.03.00) 513–98

Learning disability
Weston-super-Mare 60–1w

Leeds
Poverty 115–7w

Legal aid
Maintenance 363w
Refugees 401w

Legal costs
221–3w

Legal Services Ombudsman
198w

Leigh, Mr Edward
Debates etc.
Child Support Pensions and Social Security Bill, Rep (29.03.00) 388–92, 444, 447–8

Leigh, Mr Edward—continued*
Child Support Pensions and Social Security Bill, Rep and 3R (03.04.00) 645, 650–1, 653, 730, 781
Housing (04.04.00) 823–4
Wild Mammals (Hunting with Dogs) Bill, 2R adjourned (07.04.00) 1256, 1270, 1291, 1301, 1309, 1322, 1324–8, 1332
Sittings in Westminster Hall
Burma, Human rights (05.04.00) 201–6wh, 216wh, 220wh
Questions
Railways, Euxton 803
Social security benefits, Capital rules 618

Leslie, Mr Christopher
Debates etc.
Child Support Pensions and Social Security Bill, Rep and 3R (03.04.00) 672
Questions
Excise duties, Petrol 1144

Letwin, Mr Oliver
Questions
Electronic government 959–60
Employee share ownership schemes 1139

Levitt, Mr Tom
Debates etc.
Sign language (05.04.00) 1124–8
Sittings in Westminster Hall
Voluntary work (05.04.00) 257wh
Questions
NAW Assembly Cabinet, Dept of Trade and Industry 108–9w

Levy, Lord
25w, 76w, 245–6w, 261–3w, 489w, 574w

Lewis, Dr Julian
Debates etc.
Graffiti (27.03.00) 193
Wild Mammals (Hunting with Dogs) Bill, 2R adjourned (07.04.00) 1330
Questions
Audit, Quality control 317–8w
Business questions 510–1
Economic and monetary union 486
Intensive care, Hospital beds 342w
New deal for lone parents 626

Liaison Committee
see House of Commons Liaison Committee

"Libraries for All"
358–9w

Liddell, Rt Hon Mrs Helen, Minister for Energy and Competitiveness in Europe, Dept of Trade and Industry*
Debates etc.
Industrial injuries, Compensation (30.03.00) 604–8
Questions
Alternative energy 239–40w, 477–8w
Barmac 406–7w
British Nuclear Fuels 404w, 479w
British Nuclear Fuels, Directors 105–6w
British Nuclear Fuels, Public private partnerships 193w
Combined heat and power 477w
Dounreay, Inspections 403w
Dounreay, Nuclear fuel reprocessing 533–4w
EC Internal Market Council 106–7w
Economic and monetary union 486–7
Electricity, North Yorkshire 108w
Electricity generation, Safety 106w
Gas fired power stations 406w
Manufacturing industries, UK membership of EC 238w
Mineworkers' pension scheme 481–2

Liddell, Rt Hon Mrs Helen—continued*
Natural gas, Distribution 242–3w
Natural gas, Environment protection 107w
Nuclear power stations, Industrial health and safety 108w
Petrol, Additives 132w, 324–5w
Radioactive materials, Japan 105w, 476w
Sellafield, Quality control 105w, 404w, 479–80w
Trade competitiveness, EC countries 238–9w
United Kingdom Atomic Energy Authority, Standards 477w
United Kingdom Atomic Energy Authority Constabulary, Criminal investigation 403–4w
Utilities, Pre-payment 402w
Utilities, Prices 107–8w, 479w

Liddle, Roger
39w

Lidington, Mr David
Debates etc.
Documents, Points of order (30.03.00) 512
Freedom of Information Bill, Rep (04.04.00) 830–1, 844, 852–3
Weights and Measures (Amendment) Bill, 1R (05.04.00) 976–8
Wild Mammals (Hunting with Dogs) Bill, 2R adjourned (07.04.00) 1304–11
Questions
Buckinghamshire Health Authority, Finance 507w, 617w
Cleft palate, Buckinghamshire 218w
Drugs, Abuse 631–2w
Euro, Forgery 632w
European Monitoring Centre on Racism and Xenophobia 214–5w
Global Cultural Diversity Congress 87w, 378w
Immigration, Appeals 592w
Immigration, Correspondence 439–40w, 634w
Immigration and Nationality Directorate, Correspondence 440w
Immigration and Nationality Directorate, Documents 434–5w
Income tax 585w
National insurance contributions, Rebates 50w, 148–9w, 256w
National Insurance Contributions Office 50w
Non-departmental public bodies, Home Office 87–8w
Oakington Detention Centre 377–8w
Organised crime, EC action 634w
Police, EC countries 633w
Refugees, Begging and vagrancy 439w
Refugees, Housing 439w
Refugees, Local government services 438–9w, 633w
Refugees, Voucher schemes 86–7w
Sex offender orders 88w
Temporary immigrants 87w
Trials 365w
Tuberculosis, Vaccination 353w

Lifts
Westminster Station 311w

Lighting
Pollution control 432w, 605w

Lilley, Rt Hon Peter
Debates etc.
Ministers, Points of order (05.04.00) 978
Questions
Housing, Single people 799
Neurology, Medical treatments 611–2w
Social security benefits, Refugees 613

Lincolnshire
Dental services 124w

Lindisfarne Gospels
246w

Lisbon Summit (EC)
248w, 390–1w, 465–6w
Ministerial statements (27.03.00) 21–36

Lisburn
Foreign investment in UK 569w

Listed buildings
Greater London 547–8w

Liverpool
Death rate 255w
Pensioners 448w

Livestock
Exports (07.04.00) 1336–42

Livingstone, Mr Ken
Debates etc.
Wild Mammals (Hunting with Dogs) Bill, 2R adjourned (07.04.00) 1264–9, 1277, 1291, 1294–7, 1310, 1317–20, 1330

Livsey, Mr Richard
Questions
Bovine Spongiform Encephalopathy and Creutzfeld Jakob Disease Inquiry 174w

Lloyd, Rt Hon Sir Peter
Debates etc.
Criminal Justice and Court Services Bill, 2R (28.03.00) 269–71

Lloyd, Mr Tony
Sittings in Westminster Hall
Colombia, Peace negotiations (28.03.00) 19wh

Llwyd, Mr Elfyn
Debates etc.
Housing (04.04.00) 822–3
Questions
Disability living allowance, Appeals 337–8w
Prescription drugs, Fees and charges 393–4w
Sri Lanka, Overseas aid 177w
Unemployment, Local education business partnerships 1141

Local authorities
Assets 485w
Correspondence 35w
Manpower 158–9w
New deal schemes 537w
Pension rights 414–5w

Local broadcasting
7–8

Local education authorities
297w

Local education business partnerships
Unemployment 1140–1

Local government
Disclosure of information 429w
Elections 634w
Reform 791–3

Local Government (Access to Information) Bill 1999/2000
Debates etc.
1R (28.03.00) 223–4

Local Government Act 1988
Questions
Homosexuality 337–9

Local government finance
(27.03.00) 188, (29.03.00) 464, (04.04.00) 935
Social services 217w

Local government services
Institutional care 509w
Refugees 438–9w, 521w, 593w, 633–4w

Local plans
Transport 13–6w, 412w

Lock, Mr David, Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Dept
Debates etc.
Freedom of Information Bill, Rep (04.04.00) 856–61, 867–70, 893, 901–2, 905–11
Freedom of Information Bill, Rep and 3R (05.04.00) 1035, 1040–2, 1051–3, 1084–6
Questions
Art works, Lord Chancellor's Dept 472w
Community Legal Service, Hendon 556w
Conditional fee agreements 625–6w
Independent Tribunal Service, Public appointments 197–8w
Land Registry, Standards 220–1w
Legal aid, Maintenance 363w
Legal aid, Refugees 401w
Legal costs 221–3w
Legal Services Ombudsman 198w
Monckton, Walter, Public records 401w
Parking, Lord Chancellor's Dept 223w
Prescription drugs, Compensation 362–3w
Solicitors, Rules of procedure 557w
Unified Appeal Tribunal, Public appointments 401w

Locomotives
Heritage Lottery Fund 68w

London
see Greater London

London airports
Air traffic 969

London Buses
Standards 309–10w

London Film Commission
359w

London Local Authorities Bill (HL) 1996/97
Debates etc.
Order for consideration read (30.03.00) 475, (06.04.00) 1133

London Regional Transport
Consultants 310w
Management 793–4

London Underground
Escalators 310–1w
Public private partnerships 225–6w, 544w, 793–5
Standards 309–10w

Lone parents
150w, 498w
Housing benefit 626
National insurance contributions 530w
Social security benefits 270w

Long term unemployed
584w

Longbridge
Rover Group 109–10w, 190w, 197w, 332–5, 475–80, 481w, 489–92, 966–8

Longbridge Task Force
534–5w
Political impartiality 44w
Public appointments 196w

Lord Chancellor's Dept
Art works 472w
Empty property 364w
Parking 223w
Regulation 401w

L'Organisme Conjoint de Cooperation en Matiere D'Armament
see OCCAR

Lorries
Excise duties 433w
Hazardous materials 432–3w

Loughton, Mr Tim
Sittings in Westminster Hall
Barclays Bank, Suffolk (29.03.00) 86–8wh
Questions
Brazil, Deputy Prime Minister 409w
Hospital wards, West Sussex 509–10w
Landfill tax, Environment protection 499w
Married personal allowance 491w
Ministerial policy advisors, Dept of the Environment Transport and the Regions 605w
Ministerial policy advisors, Pay 523w
Public inquiries, Dept of the Environment Transport and the Regions 311–3w
Urban areas 606w

Love, Mr Andrew
Questions
Accident and emergency departments 120w
Business questions 1162
London Underground, Public private partnerships 794
Pharmacy 394w
Prescription drugs, Children in care 59w
Public expenditure 587w
Small businesses, Regulation 235w
Sports, Greater London 8–9

Low birthweight babies
461w

Low flying
Saddleworth 556w

Low incomes
Cancer 344w

Low pay
Greater London 151–2w
Scotland 47–8w

Luff, Mr Peter
Questions
Countryside stewardship scheme 559–60w
Institutional care, Correspondence 59w
Manufacturing industries, West Midlands 490
Married personal allowance, Pensioners 965
Offices, Ministry of Agriculture Fisheries and Food 559w
Organic food, Fruit 559w
Rover Group 638
Taxation, Small businesses 152w

Lyell, Rt Hon Sir Nicholas
Debates etc.
Armed Forces Discipline Bill (HL), Rep and 3R (06.04.00) 1187–8, 1190, 1196–9, 1203–5
Criminal Justice and Court Services Bill, 2R (28.03.00) 254–7, 286–7
Wild Mammals (Hunting with Dogs) Bill, 2R adjourned (07.04.00) 1307–8, 1313, 1324
Questions
Economic and monetary union 585w

M4
Bus lanes 313–4w

McCabe, Mr Stephen
Questions
Accident and emergency departments 218–20
Chechnya, Terrorism 267w

McCabe, Mr Stephen*—*continued
Disability aids 336
Longbridge Task Force 534–5w
Mozambique, Disaster relief 176–7w, 329–30
Rover Group 638–9

McCartney, Rt Hon Ian, Minister of State, Cabinet Office
Questions
Better government programme, Elderly 76w
Civil Service College 360–1w
Drug prevention schemes 68w
Electronic government 203w, 360w, 524–5w
Electronic government, Digital broadcasting 524w
Ministers, Official cars 201w
Modernising government programme 525w

McCartney, Mr Robert
Debates etc.
Royal Ulster Constabulary (06.04.00) 1218–9, 1244–6
Questions
Northern Ireland government, Cross border cooperation 97w

McDonagh, Ms Siobhain
Questions
Arson, Crime prevention 137–8w

McDonnell, Mr John
Debates etc.
Child Support Pensions and Social Security Bill, Rep and 3R (03.04.00) 675–8, 706
Wild Mammals (Hunting with Dogs) Bill, 2R adjourned (07.04.00) 1310

McGrady, Mr Eddie
Debates etc.
Royal Ulster Constabulary (06.04.00) 1229–31

McIntosh, Miss Anne
Debates etc.
Child Support Pensions and Social Security Bill, Rep (29.03.00) 384, 430, 432, 446–7
Wild Mammals (Hunting with Dogs) Bill, 2R adjourned (07.04.00) 1266–7, 1269, 1316–20
Questions
Air routes, USA 604w
Churches, VAT 16
Electricity, North Yorkshire 108w
Genetically modified organisms, Crops 37–8w, 327w
Housing, Public transport 17w
Levy, Lord 262–3w
Local broadcasting 8
Members, Taxis 104w
Meningitis, Yorkshire and Humberside 212
Military bases, Edinburgh 398–400w
Mozambique, Disaster relief 176w
Primary care trusts 122–3w
Social Security Benefits Agency, Employment Service 339–40w
Unemployment, Local education business partnerships 1140–1

McIsaac, Shona
Questions
Business questions 501–2
Hydro Agri (UK), Redundancy 44w
Post Office 236w

MacKay, Rt Hon Andrew
Debates etc.
Royal Ulster Constabulary (06.04.00) 1224–9, 1249

McKenna, Mrs Rosemary
Questions
Independent Commissioner for the Holding Centres 604w
Probation Board for Northern Ireland 244w
Tax allowances, Manufacturing industries 1148

Mackinlay, Mr Andrew
Debates etc.
Freedom of Information Bill, Rep (04.04.00) 840–1, 843, 849, 880, 883–4, 926–7
Questions
Crooks, Roger 283–4w, 304w, 379–80w
Drugs, Kent 380w
Green, Keith 379w
Metropolitan Police, Inquiries 380w
Nickell, Rachel 379w
Pedder, Keith 380w, 594w
Public appointments 284w
Sierra Leone 284w
Smuggling, Criminal investigation 379w

Maclean, Rt Hon David
Debates etc.
Warm Homes and Energy Conservation Bill, Money res (04.04.00) 939–45
Wild Mammals (Hunting with Dogs) Bill, 2R adjourned (07.04.00) 1275, 1278, 1326, 1332
Questions
Individual savings accounts 459w
Stocks and shares, Taxation 495–6w

Maclennan, Rt Hon Robert
Debates etc.
Freedom of Information Bill, Rep (04.04.00) 832–3, 847, 851–2, 922
Freedom of Information Bill, Rep and 3R (05.04.00) 1011–2, 1078–9, 1086–7, 1096–7, 1120–1
Questions
Assisted areas, Scotland 110w, 249w
Business questions 1157
Internet, Dept for Culture Media and Sport 391–2w
Internet, Dept for International Development 286w
Internet, Dept of Social Security 272–3w
Internet, Dept of the Environment Transport and the Regions 415–9w
Internet, Dept of Trade and Industry 278w
Internet, Foreign and Commonwealth Office 564–5w
Internet, Ministry of Agriculture Fisheries and Food 456w
Internet, Ministry of Defence 299w
Internet, Northern Ireland Office 571–3w
Internet, Office of the Secretary of State for Wales 210w
Internet, Scotland Office 110–1w
Task forces 204w

McLoughlin, Mr Patrick
Debates etc.
Agriculture, Petitions (29.03.00) 465–6
Business questions intervention (06.04.00) 1162
Learning and Skills Bill (HL), 2R (30.03.00) 518
Lisbon Summit (EC) (27.03.00) 31
Questions
Business questions 505–6

McNamara, Mr Kevin
Questions
Baton rounds, Northern Ireland 89–90w
Early day motions, Correspondence 135w
Employment tribunals, Northern Ireland 517w

McNamara, Mr Kevin*—*continued
Equal opportunities, Northern Ireland 518–9w, 569–70w
Equal opportunities, Northern Ireland Office 518w
Fair Employment Tribunal for Northern Ireland, Finance 517w
Housing revenue accounts 21w
Northern Ireland Civil Service, Roman Catholic Church 517–8w
Northern Ireland Equality Commission 281w
Police, Parliamentary questions 243w
Rents, Rebates 20–1w, 32–3w
Royal Ulster Constabulary, Compensation 97w
Royal Ulster Constabulary, Oaths and affirmations 90w
Terrorism, Northern Ireland 567–8w

MacShane, Mr Denis
Questions
Business questions 1161
Employee share ownership schemes 1139

Mactaggart, Fiona
Debates etc.
Freedom of Information Bill, Rep (04.04.00) 848, 932
Freedom of Information Bill, Rep and 3R (05.04.00) 1028
Learning and Skills Bill (HL), 2R (30.03.00) 522
Sittings in Westminster Hall
Developing countries, Females (30.03.00) 139–41wh, 143wh
Questions
Abortion 615w
Heart diseases, Health services 212–3
Modernising government programme, Civil service 524w
Part-time employment 242w
Pensioners, Income 335w
World Education Forum 331–2

McWalter, Mr Tony
Debates etc.
Elderly, Residential homes (03.04.00) 783–7
Freedom of Information Bill, Rep (04.04.00) 877–8, 886
Royal Ulster Constabulary (06.04.00) 1214
Questions
Local government, Reform 791–2
Pensioners, Income support 531–2w

Madagascar
Disaster relief 180w

Madel, Sir David
Questions
Rover Group, Longbridge 477

Maginnis, Mr Ken
Debates etc.
Royal Ulster Constabulary (06.04.00) 1228, 1246–8

Magistrates
363w
Duchy of Lancaster 524w

Magistrates' courts
364w

Mahon, Mrs Alice
Debates etc.
Child Support Pensions and Social Security Bill, Rep and 3R (03.04.00) 688–9
Lisbon Summit (EC) (27.03.00) 33

Maintenance
Child support 33w
Children 336–7w, 449w, 621–4, 630w

Maintenance—continued*
Legal aid 363w
Tax allowances 969–70

Maize
Genetically modified organisms 325w, 457w, 502w

Males
Sexual offences 4w

Mallaber, Judy
Questions
Schools, Amber Valley 291–3w

Manchester Metrolink
232w

Mandelson, Rt Hon Peter, Secretary of State for Northern Ireland*
Debates etc.
Royal Ulster Constabulary (06.04.00) 1216–24, 1226–7
Questions
Equal opportunities, Northern Ireland Office 518w
Household Division, Correspondence 51w
Independent Commissioner for the Holding Centres 604w
Northern Ireland government, Cross border cooperation 97w
Prisoners' release, Northern Ireland 51–2w

Manufactured goods
Imports 193–4w

Manufacturing industries
Tax allowances 1147–9
UK membership of EC 238w
West Midlands 490–1
Worcestershire 489

Marek, Dr John
Questions
St Helena, Armed forces 467w
St Helena, Economic situation 468w
St Helena, Employment 467w
St Helena, Fisheries 467w

Marine Wildlife Protection Bill 1999/2000
Debates etc.
2R order read (07.04.00) 1334

Maritime and Coastguard Agency
Standards 225w

Married personal allowance
491w, 1141–3
Pensioners 965, 1141–2

Marsden, Mr Gordon
Debates etc.
Freedom of Information Bill, Rep (04.04.00) 934–5
Learning and Skills Bill (HL), 2R (30.03.00) 525, 572–6
Questions
Cash dispensing, Fees and charges 335
Children, Poverty 333–4w
Churches, VAT 17
Disability aids, Waiting lists 618w
Disability living allowance, Mentally ill 164w
Eastern Europe, Economic situation 324

Marsden, Mr Paul
Debates etc.
Health Care Standards for Elderly Persons Bill, 1R (04.04.00) 827–9
Questions
Cancer, Low incomes 344w
Dental services, Shropshire 507–8w
Elderly, Health services 355–6w
Global enterprise initiative 46w
Paternity leave 389w
Sudan, Exports 286w

Martlew, Mr Eric
Debates etc.
Child Support Pensions and Social Security Bill, Rep (29.03.00) 439, 454
Questions
Local broadcasting 7
NHS Direct, Cumbria 123w

Maternity payments
South Yorkshire 165–6w

Matrimonial proceedings
(04.04.00) 947–56

Maude, Rt Hon Francis
Questions
Embassies, Corporate hospitality 630w
Levy, Lord 245–6w, 261–2w
NATO, Disclosure of information 103w
USA, Foreign relations 169w

Mawhinney, Rt Hon Sir Brian
Questions
Members, Correspondence 129–30w

May, Mrs Theresa
Debates etc.
Learning and Skills Bill (HL), 2R (30.03.00) 516–7, 523–33, 571
Questions
Education, Finance 298w, 519–20w
Local education authorities 297w
Standards and Effectiveness Unit 296w
Teachers, Performance appraisal 297w

Mayor of London
Elections 433–4w

Meacher, Rt Hon Michael, Minister for the Environment, Dept of the Environment Transport and the Regions*
Questions
Affordable warmth programme 483–4w
Ammunition 323w
Areas of outstanding natural beauty 411w
Combined heat and power 608w
Convention on International Trade in Endangered Species, Ivory 806
Fossil fuels 305–6w
Fuel poverty 484w, 548–50w
Genetically modified organisms, Crops 18w, 37–8w, 131w, 314–5w, 419–20w, 434w, 611w
Ionizing radiation, EC law 19w
Nuclear Installations Inspectorate 313w
Radioactive wastes, Waste disposal 17–8w, 485w
Radon gas, Housing 419w
Sellafield, Quality control 542–4w
Telephone services, Working conditions 430w

Meale, Mr Alan
Questions
Parliament, Demonstrations 141w, 360w

Medical profession
Disciplinary proceedings 347–8w

Medical records
Nursing homes (27.03.00) 38–40

Medical treatments
Neurology 611–2w
Smoking related diseases 351w

Medicines Control Agency
126–7w

Medway Council Bill (HL) 1998/99
Debates etc.
2R order read (30.03.00) 475, (06.04.00) 1133

Members
Correspondence 26w, 67w, 129–30w, 140w, 522w

Members—continued*
Surveillance 279w
Taxis 104w

Members' staff
Foreign workers 43w, 235w

Men
see Males

Meningitis
Vaccination 218–9w, 395w, 613–4w
Yorkshire and Humberside 211–2

Mental health services
Racial discrimination 208–9

Mental patients
Acute beds 59–60w

Mentally disturbed offenders
Inquiries 56–7w

Mentally ill
Disability living allowance 164w

Mercenaries
268w

Mergers
186–7w

Merron, Ms Gillian
Questions
Dental services, Lincolnshire 124w
Training and enterprise councils, Audit 73w

Mersey Tunnels Bill 1999/2000
Debates etc.
2R order read (30.03.00) 475, (06.04.00) 1133

Merton
Nurses 615–6w

Meters
Water 547w

Methicillin resistant staphylococcus aureus
345w
Death 345w

Metrication
Retail trade 404–5w

Metropolitan Police
Inquiries 380w
Police areas 211–2w
Private finance initiative 381w
Standards 212–3w

Michie, Mr Bill
Questions
Accident and emergency departments 218–9
Primary education, Equal opportunities 974

Microsoft
Telewest Communications 194w

Mid Essex Hospital Services NHS Trust
Private sector 217w

Migration
233–5w, 254–5w
Greater London 257–8w
South East region 587–8w
Urban areas 458w

Milburn, Rt Hon Alan, Secretary of State for Health*
Questions
Health action zones 203–5
Heart diseases, Health services 212–4
Nurses, Training 207–8

Military aid
Zimbabwe 282w

Military aircraft
see also Low flying
East Timor 552–3w
Iraq 27w
Mozambique 299w, 552–3w
Procurement 299–300w
Transport 300w

Military bases
Air force 29w
Aldershot 207w
Edinburgh 398–400w
Scotland 28w

Military exercises
Nuclear weapons 305w
South Korea 161–2w

Milk
Competition 236–7w
Imports 251w, 500–1w

Mill Hill School
538–9w

Millennium Exhibition
Attendance 64w
Expenditure 64w
Land use 429w
Parliamentary questions 358w
Tickets 357–8w
Valuation 320w

Millennium Experience
see New Millennium Experience

Miller, Mr Andrew
Debates etc.
Child Support, Pensions and Social Security Bill, Rep and 3R (03.04.00) 760–1, 766–9, 771
Wild Mammals (Hunting with Dogs) Bill, 2R adjourned (07.04.00) 1279
Sittings in Westminster Hall
Burma, Human rights (05.04.00) 206–8wh, 212wh, 215–6wh

Mines
Research 160w

Mineworkers' pension scheme
481–2

Minimum wage
237w
Housing 237w

Ministerial Group on Rural Affairs
957–9

Ministerial policy advisors
280w, 522w
Cabinet Office 525–6w
Dept of the Environment Transport and the Regions 605w
Office of the Secretary of State for Wales 473w
Pay 523w

Ministerial statements
Housing (04.04.00) 811–26
Lisbon Summit (EC) (27.03.00) 21–36

Ministers
Aviation 248w, 391w, 465w
Official cars 201w
Rulings and statements (05.04.00) 979–80

Ministry of Agriculture Fisheries and Food
Art works 560w
Civil servants 80w
Consultants 249w
Internet 456w
Offices 559w
Operating costs 250–1w
Parking 327w

Ministry of Defence
Art works 556w
Computers 489w
Hong Kong 27w
Internet 299w
Israel 397w
Land 27w
Parking 303w
Property 27w
Regulation 397w
Wales 300–3w

Ministry of Defence Police
521–2w

Minorities
Languages 54–5w

Miscarriage
124w

Misrepresentation
State earnings related pension scheme 30w, 340w, 625

Missing persons
Iraq 264w

Misuse of Drugs Act 1971
Questions
602w

Mitchell, Mr Austin
Questions
Driving under influence, EC action 430–1w
EC common foreign and security policy 563w
EC justice and home affairs 520w
EC law, Regulatory impact assessments 268–9w
Fishery agreements 455–6w
Government assistance, EC law 242w
Health authorities, Yorkshire and Humberside 59w
Heathrow Airport, Air routes 427–8w
Medical profession, Disciplinary proceedings 347–8w
Railways, Freight 427w
Refugees 366–7w
Treaties, EC action 285w
UK membership of EC 407w

Mixed oxide fuel
Health hazards 349w

MMR vaccine
349w

Mobile phones
see Cellular phones

Modernising government programme
525w
Civil service 524w

Moffatt, Laura
Questions
Housing, South East region 428w
National Blood Authority, Personnel management 503w
NHS, Job satisfaction 612w
NHS, Pay 504w
Pension sharing 476w
Social rented housing, South East region 428w
State retirement pensions, Administrative delays 164w

Moldova
Russia 267w

Monckton, Walter
Public records 401w

Mongolia
Overseas aid 180w

Monuments
Cyprus 603w

Moonie, Dr Lewis, Parliamentary Under-Secretary, Ministry of Defence*
Debates etc.
Armed Forces Discipline Bill (HL), Rep and 3R (06.04.00) 1167–71, 1174–6, 1178, 1186–9, 1193, 1197–8
Questions
Aircraft carriers, Procurement 209w
Ammunition, Procurement 160w
Armed forces, Catering 305w
Armed forces, Housing 29w
Art works, Ministry of Defence 556w
Artillery, Procurement 603w
Chatham Dockyard, Correspondence 397w
Chemical and biological warfare, Research 488w, 553–5w
Computers, Ministry of Defence 489w
Defence, Diversification 303w
Defence Evaluation and Research Agency 397–8w
Foden Thompson Carmichael MWD 79–80w
Future large aircraft 555w
Guided weapons, USA 397w
Hong Kong, Ministry of Defence 27w
Hospital ships 207w
Korean War, Anniversaries 25w
Kosovo, C17 aircraft 300w
Land, Ministry of Defence 27w
Laser-guided bombs 26–7w
Low flying, Saddleworth 556w
Members, Correspondence 26w
Military aircraft, Mozambique 552–3w
Military aircraft, Procurement 299–300w
Military aircraft, Transport 300w
Military bases, Scotland 28w
Monuments, Cyprus 603w
Navy, Hydrography 207–8w
Parking, Ministry of Defence 303w
Property, Ministry of Defence 27w
Regulation, Ministry of Defence 397w
Tankers, Procurement 79w
Tanks 554w
Tanks, Diesel fuel 554w
Type 45 destroyers 208w
Wales, Ministry of Defence 300–3w

Moore, Mr Michael
Questions
Low pay, Scotland 47–8w
Transport, Local plans 13–6w

Moran, Ms Margaret
Debates etc.
Housing (04.04.00) 825–6

Morecambe
National Lottery 470w
Winter fuel payments 33w
Working families tax credit 48w

Morgan, Mr Alasdair
Questions
Armed forces, Housing 29w
Army, Training 28–9w
Military bases, Scotland 28w
Mineworkers' pension scheme 482

Morley, Mr Elliot, Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State, Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food*
Debates etc.
Livestock, Exports (07.04.00) 1339–42
Questions
Agriculture, Environment protection 252w, 457–8w, 560w
Agriculture, Waste disposal 81w
Art works, Ministry of Agriculture Fisheries and Food 560w

Morley, Mr Elliot—continued*
Bass, Fishing catches 82w
Civil servants, Ministry of Agriculture Fisheries and Food 80w
Common fisheries policy 79–81w
Consultants, Ministry of Agriculture Fisheries and Food 249w
Countryside stewardship scheme 559–60w
Drift nets, Dolphins 455w
Farmers, Early retirement 82–3w
Fisheries, Fleetwood 173w
Fishery agreements 455–6w
Fishery agreements, Morocco 254w
Fishing vessels, Licensing 253w
Fishing vessels, Spain 253w
Flood control, Edgware 560w
Harbour grant scheme 81–2w
Horses 35w
Internet, Ministry of Agriculture Fisheries and Food 456w
MV Cap Afrique 455w
Nature conservation, Forest of Bowland 251–2w, 560w
Offices, Ministry of Agriculture Fisheries and Food 559w
Organic aid scheme 252–3w
Organic farming 557w
Organic farming, Government assistance 456w
Organic food 457w
Parking, Ministry of Agriculture Fisheries and Food 327w

Morocco
Fishery agreements 254w

Morris, Rt Hon Ms Estelle, Minister for School Standards, Dept for Education and Employment*
Questions
Class sizes 296–7w
Class sizes, Essex 75w
Education, Finance 298w
Education, Standard spending assessments 293–4w
Education action zones 73w
Free school meals 296w
Grammar schools, Trafford 539w
Local education authorities 297w
Mill Hill School 538–9w
Pupil exclusions 206w
Pupils, South East region 537–8w
School meals 538w
Schools, Amber Valley 291–3w
Schools, Hampshire 536–7w
Secondary education, Capitation allowances 604w
Sixth form education, Finance 71–2w
Standards and Effectiveness Unit 296w
Standards Fund 537w
Teachers, Dismissal 72w
Teachers, Pay 71w
Teachers, Performance appraisal 297w
Teachers, Recruitment 206w

Mortgages
Arrears 473w
Income support 341w, 454w
Repossession orders 78w

Moss, Mr Malcolm
Questions
Common fisheries policy 79–81w
Fisheries, Fleetwood 173w
Fishing vessels, Licensing 253w
Harbour grant scheme 81–2w

Motor vehicle type approval
607w

Motor vehicles
431w
Imports 463w

Motor vehicles—continued*
Taxation 111–2w
Testing 19–20w, 431w

Mountford, Kali
Debates etc.
Budget March 2000 (27.03.00) 48, 55
Child Support Pensions and Social Security Bill, Rep (29.03.00) 368
Child Support Pensions and Social Security Bill, Rep and 3R (03.04.00) 691–2, 695–8
Sittings in Westminster Hall
NHS Direct (06.04.00) 269–70wh, 273wh, 299–306wh
Questions
Information technology, Dept of Social Security 115w

Mowlam, Rt Hon Marjorie, Minister for the Cabinet Office*
Questions
Civil servants, Equal opportunities 523w
Civil servants, Ethnic groups 525w
Drugs, Young people 961–3
Duchy of Lancaster, Magistrates 524w
Economic and monetary union, Cabinet Office 70w
Equal opportunities, Public appointments 76–7w
Genetically modified organisms, Plants 361w
Knowledge network project 68–70w, 386w
Levy, Lord 76w
Members, Correspondence 522w
Ministerial Group on Rural Affairs 957–9
Ministerial policy advisors 522w
Ministerial policy advisors, Cabinet Office 525–6w
Regulation, Cabinet Office 385w
Rural areas, Banks 68w
Social Exclusion Unit 523–4w, 963–4

Mozambique
Disaster relief 176–7w, 328–30
Military aircraft 299w, 552–3w

Mullin, Mr Chris, Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State, Dept of the Environment Transport and the Regions*
Debates etc.
Warm Homes and Energy Conservation Bill, Money res (04.04.00) 945–6
Sittings in Westminster Hall
Barclays Bank, Suffolk (29.03.00) 88–91wh
Questions
Air routes, USA 604w
Aircraft, Noise 232w
Aircraft, Seating 431w
Aircraft, Violence 421–2w
Aviation, Freight 233w
Birds, Special protection areas 112w
Council housing 412–3w
Council housing, Greater London 803–4
Empty property 482w
European Aviation Safety Authority 232–3w
Galileo project 233w
Heathrow Airport, Air routes 427–8w
Hedges and ditches 111w
Home improvement agencies, Contracts 228w
Housing, South East region 428w
Housing improvement, Greater London 605–6w
Housing revenue accounts 21w
Housing revenue accounts, New towns 809–10
Incinerators 306–9w
Multiple occupation, Licensing 546w

Mullin, Mr Chris—continued*
Neighbourhood nuisance, Rented housing 414w
Recycling, Glass 23w
Regional airports, South East region 228–9w
Rents, Rebates 20–1w
Second homes 410w
Second homes, South East region 484w
Social rented housing 423–5w
Social rented housing, South East region 428w
Social rented housing, Tenancy agreements 807
Turtles, Trade 421w
Water, Meters 547w
Water abstraction 420w
Water charges, Appeals 322w
Water treatment, Drinking water 320–1w
Weed control 608w

Multiple occupation
Licensing 546w

Munchausen's syndrome
507–8w

Murphy, Mr Jim
Questions
Export credit guarantees, Romania 533w

Murphy, Rt Hon Paul, Secretary of State for Wales*
Questions
Information officers, Office of the Secretary of State for Wales 472w, 573w
Internet, Office of the Secretary of State for Wales 210w
Iron and steel, Wales 158w
Local authorities, Manpower 158–9w
Ministerial policy advisors, Office of the Secretary of State for Wales 473w
National Assembly for Wales 158w
Operating costs, Office of the Secretary of State for Wales 158w
Parking, Office of the Secretary of State for Wales 209w
Regulation, Office of the Secretary of State for Wales 458w
Task forces, Wales 158w

Museums and galleries
Children 15–6
Fees and charges 625w
Greater London 625w
Sports 67w

Mustard gas
Iraq 281–2w

MV Cap Afrique
455w

National Assembly for Wales
158w

National Audit Office
18–9, (29.03.00) 464

National Blood Authority
Personnel management 503w

National Council for Education and Training in Wales
539–40w

National Endowment for Science Technology and the Arts
13, 261w

National Institute for Clinical Excellence
122w

National insurance
627w

National insurance contributions
Lone parents 530w

National insurance contributions —continued
Rebates 50w, 148–9w, 256w

National Insurance Contributions Office
50w

National Insurance Contributions Unit
see Social Security Contributions Agency

National Lottery
5–7, 9–13, 67w
Cultural heritage 470–1w
Morecambe 470w
Sports 540w

"National Strategy for the UK Textile and Clothing Industry"
236w

National Weights and Measures Laboratory
Standards 191–3w

NATO
Disclosure of information 103w
Nuclear weapons 247w

Natural gas
Distribution 242–3w
Environment protection 107w

Nature conservation
Forest of Bowland 251–2w, 560w

Naval Manning Agency
Standards 551–2w

Naval Recruiting and Training Agency
Standards 552w

Navy
Hydrography 207–8w

NAW
see National Assembly for Wales

NAW Assembly Cabinet
Dept of Trade and Industry 108–9w

Naysmith, Dr Douglas
Questions
Agriculture 249w
Dental services 218
Food Standards Agency 83–4w
Future large aircraft, Government assistance 487–8

Negligence
514–5w
Compensation 394–5w

Neighbourhood nuisance
Rented housing 414w

Nelson, Rosemary
171–2w, 244w

Neurology
Consultants 120w
Medical treatments 611–2w

New deal for 50 plus
Expenditure 210w

New deal for lone parents
336w, 626
Yorkshire and Humberside 336w

New deal for long term unemployed
Expenditure 210w

New deal for young people
40–1w, 206w
Expenditure 211w

New deal schemes
Ethnic groups 287–9w
Local authorities 537w
Northern Ireland 519w

New Millennium Experience
Contracts 358w

New Scotland Yard
see Metropolitan Police

New towns
Housing revenue accounts 809–10

News 24
359w

NHS
Ancillary staff 136w, (05.04.00) 259–68wh
Capital Modernisation Fund 509w
Cleaning services 354w
Complaints 513–4w
Conditions of employment 120–1w
Debts 130w, 343–4w, 515w
Finance 61w, 104w, 121–2w, 209–11, 502–3w, 507w, 575–9w, 617–8w
Fraud 468w
Information technology 511–3w
Job satisfaction 612w
Pay (05.04.00) 259–68wh, 342w, 504w
Pensions 343w
Public appointments 220w, 523w
Rationing 120w
Research 216–7w
Voluntary work 136w, 220w

NHS Direct
(06.04.00) 269–312wh
Cumbria 123w

NHS trusts
Buckinghamshire 617w
Finance 341w
Greater London 341w
Public appointments 514w

Nicholls, Mr Patrick
Debates etc.
Child Support Pensions and Social Security Bill, Rep (29.03.00) 436, 442–8, 451
Questions
Business questions 1158–9
EC staff, Allowances 631w
Excise duties, Aviation 459–60w
UK membership of EC, Exhibitions 630–1w

Nickell, Rachel
379w

Noise
Aircraft 232w

Non-departmental public bodies
314w
Accountability 959
Home Office 87–8w
Prime Minister 244–5w
Public appointments 277w, 523w

Non-domestic rates
Scotland 540–2w

Non-Domestic Rating (Chargeable Amounts) (Amendment) (England) Regulations 2000
Debates etc.
(28.03.00) 291

Norman, Mr Archie
Debates etc.
Housing (04.04.00) 815–6
Questions
Housing, South East region 608–10w, 796–7
Migration, South East region 587–8w
NHS, Finance 61w
Population, South East region 588w
Prescott, John, Correspondence 390w
Pupils, South East region 537–8w

North American Free Trade Agreement
278–9w, 285w, 361w, 524w

North East region
Small businesses 242w

North West region
Derelict land 411w
Foreign investment in UK 240w
Heart diseases 119w
Poverty 333–4w
Working families tax credit 587w

North Yorkshire
Electricity 108w

Northern Ireland
Access funds 94–5w
Adult education 97–8w
Baton rounds 89–90w
Climate change levy 113w
Council housing 50–1w
Disabled (04.04.00) 935
Employment tribunals 517w
Equal opportunities 518–9w, 569–70w
Fuel poverty 244w
Further education 91w
Higher education 91–2w
New deal schemes 519w
Nursery schools 133–5w
Postgraduate education 94w
Prisoners' release 51–2w, 95–6w
Schools 570w
Social security benefits (04.04.00) 178–83wh
Student numbers 91–2w, 96w
Student wastage 92w
Students 93–5w, 566–7w
Terrorism 567–8w
Victim support schemes 569w

Northern Ireland Affairs Select Committee
(03.04.00) 782

Northern Ireland Civil Service
Roman Catholic Church 517–8w

Northern Ireland education and library boards
Grants 90–1w

Northern Ireland Equality Commission
281w

Northern Ireland government
Cross border cooperation 97w

Northern Ireland Grand Committee
(03.04.00) 782

Northern Ireland Human Rights Commission
281w

Northern Ireland Independent Commissioner for the Holding Centres see Independent Commissioner for the Holding Centres

Northern Ireland Office
Equal opportunities 518w
Internet 571–3w
Parking 244w
Regulation 407w

Northern Ireland Police Authority
see Police Authority for Northern Ireland

Northern region
Health authorities 59w

Northumberland
Schools 973–4

Norwich
Child care tax credit 49w
Working families tax credit 49w

Nuclear disarmament
247w

Nuclear fuel reprocessing
Dounreay 533–4w

Nuclear Installations Inspectorate
313w

Nuclear power stations
Industrial health and safety 108w

Nuclear weapons
487w
Military exercises 305w
NATO 247w
USA 488w

Nursery schools
Northern Ireland 133–5w

Nurses
127–8w
East Surrey Hospital 618–9w
Greater London 58w
Merton 615–6w
Paediatrics 504–7w
Pay (28.03.00) 315–22
Recruitment 332, 965–6
Training 123w, 207–8, 355w, 615–6w

Nursing homes
Durham County 508w
Fees and charges 124–5w
Medical records (27.03.00) 38–40

Nutrition
353w, 357w

Nyima, Gedhun Choekyi
54w

Oakington Detention Centre
377–8w

Oaten, Mr Mark
Sittings in Westminster Hall
Burma, Human rights (05.04.00) 210–3wh
Developing countries, Education (04.04.00) 192–5wh
Questions
Children, Poverty 449–50w
Dental services 217–8
Driving, Disabled 21–2w
Employment Service, Disability aids 41–2w
Head lice 618w
Hospitals, Waiting lists 62w
Kazakhstan, Human rights 284–5w
Kazakhstan, Press freedom 284w
Members' staff, Foreign workers 43w, 235w
Organic aid scheme 252–3w
Pensioners, Income 451–2w
Pre-school education, Hampshire 290–1w, 388–9w
Prescribing Supply and Administration of Medicines Review Team 218w
Repossession orders, Mortgages 78w
Road traffic 322–3w
Schools, Hampshire 536–7w

Oaths and affirmations
Royal Ulster Constabulary 90w

O'Brien, Mr Mike, Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State, Home Office
Debates etc.
Freedom of Information Bill, Rep (04.04.00) 842–52, 872, 880–5
Freedom of Information Bill, Rep and 3R (05.04.00) 988–91, 1057–61, 1066–8, 1115–6, 1118
Wild Mammals (Hunting with Dogs) Bill, 2R adjourned (07.04.00) 1320–4
Questions
Absent voting 376–7w
Animal experiments 369–70w

O'Brien, Mr Mike—continued
Animal experiments, Disclosure of information 213–4w, 601–2w
Animal experiments, Dogs 435–6w
Animal experiments, Huntingdon Life Sciences 436–7w
Animal experiments, Inspections 598w
Animal experiments, Licensing 437w
Animal experiments, Primates 436w
Animal experiments, Rodents 369w, 437w
Animal experiments, Wickham Research Laboratories 369w
Animal Procedures Committee 213–4w
Arson, Crime prevention 137–8w
Bingo, Fees and charges 593–4w
European Monitoring Centre on Racism and Xenophobia 214–5w
Freedom of Information Bill 1999/2000 5w
Gaming clubs, Opening hours 383w
Global Cultural Diversity Congress 87w, 378w
Local government, Elections 634w
Royal prerogative 143w

O'Brien, Mr Stephen
Debates etc.
Unparliamentary expressions, Points of order (27.03.00) 187
Questions
Business questions 511, 1162
Cancer, Surgery 350–1w
Radiation, Research 481

OCCAR
(29.03.00) 464

Office of the Secretary of State for Wales
Information officers 472w, 573w
Internet 210w
Ministerial policy advisors 473w
Operating costs 158w
Parking 209w
Regulation 458w

Offices
Intervention Board 37w
Ministry of Agriculture Fisheries and Food 559w
Police Authority for Northern Ireland 51w

Official cars
Ministers 201w

Official engagements
Prime Minister 171w, 471w

Official Listing of Securities (Change of Competent Authority) Regulations 2000
Debates etc.
(27.03.00) 187

Oil
Iraq 265w

O'Neill, Mr Martin
Questions
Rover Group 634
Rover Group, Longbridge 477

Opening hours
Gaming clubs 383w

Opik, Mr Lembit
Debates etc.
Royal Ulster Constabulary (06.04.00) 1232–5
Wild Mammals (Hunting with Dogs) Bill, 2R adjourned (07.04.00) 1267, 1273, 1284–300, 1303–4
Questions
Access funds, Northern Ireland 94–5w
Further education, Sports 91w
Higher education, Applications 91–2w
Higher education, Northern Ireland 91w
Northern Ireland education and library boards, Grants 90–1w

Opik, Mr Lembit—continued
Postgraduate education, Northern Ireland 94w
Student numbers, Northern Ireland 91–2w, 96w
Student wastage, Northern Ireland 92w
Students, Community relations 93w
Students, Fees and charges 95w
Students, Finance 93–4w
Students, Loans 566–7w
Students, Religion 94w

Opposition days
Royal Ulster Constabulary (06.04.00) 1210–53

Organ, Mrs Diana
Questions
State retirement pensions 332w

Organic aid scheme
252–3w

Organic farming
339–40, 557w
Government assistance 456w

Organic food
457w
Fruit 559w

Organisation for Joint Armament Cooperation
see OCCAR

Organisation for Joint Armament Cooperation (Immunities and Privileges) Order 2000
Debates etc.
(29.03.00) 464

Organised crime
EC action 634w

Osborne, Ms Sandra
Questions
Maintenance, Children 622–3
Pensioners, Income 1135–7

Ottaway, Mr Richard
Questions
Income tax, Pensioners 151w
Liddle, Roger 39w
PAYE 150–1w
Tax allowances 328w
Tax allowances, Manufacturing industries 1148–9
Tax avoidance, Self-employed 494–5w

Overcrowding
Prisons 6–9w

Overpayments
Social security benefits 447w

Overseas aid
Basic education 185–6w
Chechnya 330–1
Environment protection 175w
Kosovo 175–6w, 582w
Mongolia 180w
Seychelles 185w
Southern Africa 183w
Sri Lanka 177w
Zimbabwe 186w, 254w

Overseas investment
Azerbaijan 106w
Burma 465w

Overseas residence
Zimbabwe 265–6w

Overseas students
Higher education 387w

Overseas trade
India 484–5
Primates 558–9w

Overseas trade—continued
USA (29.03.00) 101–8wh

Oxaliplatin
62w

Oxted and Limpsfield Hospital
61w

Packaging
Recycling 623w

Paediatrics
Nurses 504–7w

Page, Mr Richard
Sittings in Westminster Hall
River Tyne, Shipbuilding (04.04.00) 168–71wh
Questions
Business, Regulation 203–4w

Paice, Mr James
Questions
Animal feed, Additives 579–80w
Dairy products, Exports 174w
Farms, Hedges and ditches 327–8w
Genetically modified organisms, Crops 434w
Hops, Subsidies 174–5w
Welding Institute, Grants 44–5w

Pain
Health services (29.03.00) 467–74

Paisley, Rev Ian
Debates etc.
Royal Ulster Constabulary (06.04.00) 1218, 1237–9

Pakistan
Arms trade 188–9w
Customs and Excise 496–7w

Palmer, Dr Nick
Debates etc.
Royal Ulster Constabulary (06.04.00) 1211, 1243–4
Questions
Habitual offenders, Canada 376w
Post offices, Electronic government 237w

Parish councils
410w

Park and ride schemes
17w

Parking
Cabinet Office 565w
Dept for Education and Employment 295w
Dept for International Development 254w
Dept of Health 217w
Dept of Social Security 272w
Dept of Trade and Industry 278w
Foreign and Commonwealth Office 268w
Home Office 215w
Hospitals 581w
Lord Chancellor's Dept 223w
Ministry of Agriculture Fisheries and Food 327w
Ministry of Defence 303w
Northern Ireland Office 244w
Office of the Secretary of State for Wales 209w
Scotland Office 249w
Treasury 260w

Parliament
Demonstrations 141w, 360w

Parliamentary Commissioner (Amendment) Bill (HL) 1999/2000
Debates etc.
2R order read (07.04.00) 1334

Parliamentary procedure
Rulings and statements (28.03.00) 30wh

Parliamentary questions
Millennium Exhibition 358w
Police 243w
Treasury 330w

Part-time employment
242w

Passports
84w

Patents
Genetic engineering 247–8w

Paternity leave
389w

Paterson, Mr Owen
Debates etc.
Budget March 2000 (27.03.00) 90, 93, 100
Oral question time intervention (28.03.00) 214
Sittings in Westminster Hall
USA, Overseas trade (29.03.00) 103wh
Questions
Business questions 508–9
Hospitals, Waiting lists 119w
Millennium Exhibition, Expenditure 64w
Redundant churches, Property transfer 52w

Pathology
Petitions (06.04.00) 1253

PAYE
150–1w

Peace keeping operations
Zimbabwe 29w

Peace negotiations
Colombia (28.03.00) 1–22wh

Pearson, Mr Ian
Debates etc.
Learning and Skills Bill (HL), 2R (30.03.00) 579–80
Lisbon Summit (EC) (27.03.00) 28
Questions
BMW 339
Regional development agencies, Small businesses 43–4w
Rover Group 636
Sports centres, Planning permission 434w

Pedder, Keith
380w, 594w

Pedestrians
Safety 608w

Pendry, Mr Tom
Debates etc.
Budget March 2000 (27.03.00) 57–9
Questions
National Lottery 67w

Pension funds
31–2w
Tax allowances 152w

Pension rights
Land Rover 622w
Local authorities 414–5w

Pension sharing
476w

Pensioners
Basildon 473w
Income 31w, 335w, 451–2w, 609–11, 968–9, 971–2, 1135–8
Income support 166w, 333w, 337, 447–8w, 473w, 531–2w
Income tax 151w
Liverpool 448w
Married personal allowance 965, 1141–2
Personal savings 530–1w
Scotland 973, 1135–7
Social security benefits 32w

Pensioners—continued
Torbay 166w

Pensions
(29.03.00) 347–464, (03.04.00) 644–781
Bankruptcy 111w
Cohabitation 343w
NHS 343w
Reform 333w
Teachers 204–5w

Performance and Innovation Unit
Post offices 238w

Performance appraisal
Teachers 297w

Perham, Ms Linda
Questions
Better government programme, Elderly 76w, 527w
Cars, Prices 404w
Pensioners, Income 1135–6

Personal income
Fines 364w, 373w

Personal records
Inland Revenue 500w

Personal savings
Pensioners 530–1w

Personnel management
National Blood Authority 503w

Pesticides
Health hazards 580–1w

Petitions
Agriculture (29.03.00) 465–6
Housing (29.03.00) 465
Pathology (06.04.00) 1253
Telecommunications (29.03.00) 466

Petrol
Additives 132w, 324–5w
Excise duties 114w, 589w, 1143–5
Smuggling 491w

Pharmacy
394w

Phillips Inquiry
see Bovine Spongiform Encephalopathy and Creutzfeld Jakob Disease Inquiry

Phoenix Fund
188w

Piccadilly line
Rolling stock 544–5w

Pickles, Mr Eric
Debates etc.
Child Support Pensions and Social Security Bill, Rep (29.03.00) 347–54, 359, 362–8, 372–85, 390, 392, 394, 415, 427–8, 437–40, 447–8, 450, 460
Child Support Pensions and Social Security Bill, Rep and 3R (03.04.00) 653–4, 687
Housing (04.04.00) 821
Sittings in Westminster Hall
Housing benefit, Abuse (05.04.00) 226wh, 228–34wh, 236wh, 239–41wh
Questions
Maintenance, Children 623–4
Overseas trade, India 485

Pickthall, Mr Colin
Questions
Dial-a-ride 324w
Hospices, Finance 346w
Prison Service, Females 380–1w
Prisoners' release, Northern Ireland 51–2w
Radon gas, Housing 419w
Transport, Infrastructure 24w

Pigs
39w

Pike, Mr Peter L
Debates etc.
Housing (04.04.00) 825
Wild Mammals (Hunting with Dogs) Bill, 2R adjourned (07.04.00) 1332
Questions
Dental services 349w
Duchy of Lancaster, Magistrates 524w
Maintenance, Children 623
Prisoners on remand 142w
Tax credit, Research 583w

Planning
Thameslink 432w

Planning Inspectorate
227w

Planning permission
317w
Aerials 429w
Camperdown Garden Village 98w
East Anglia 22–3w
South East region 22–3w
Sports centres 434w
Wind power 336–7

Plants
Genetically modified organisms 361w

Pneumoconiosis Etc (Workers Compensation) (Payment of Claims) (Amendment) Regulations 2000
Debates etc.
(05.04.00) 1123

Police
EC countries 601w, 633w
Essex 214w
Finance 84–5w, 597w
Hampshire 378w
Kosovo 564w
Lancashire 445w
Manpower 88–9w, 445w, 595w
Parliamentary questions 243w
Recruitment 595–6w
Sick leave 214w
Training 141w

Police areas
Metropolitan Police 211–2w

Police Authority for Northern Ireland
Offices 51w

Police interrogation
Video recordings 595w

Police stations
Greater London 642w

POLIS
42w

Political impartiality
Diplomatic service 103w
Longbridge Task Force 44w

Political refugees
see Refugees

Politics and government
Females 535–6w

Pollution control
Lighting 432w, 605w

Pond, Mr Chris
Debates etc.
Budget March 2000 (27.03.00) 42–3, 51, 54
Questions
Civil servants, Resignations 361w
Construction, Standards 420w
Developing countries, Debts 326–7
Planning permission, East Anglia 22–3w

Portillo, Mr Michael
Debates etc.
Budget March 2000 (27.03.00) 116–20, 124–5
Questions
Economic and monetary union, Cabinet Office 70w
Working families tax credit 1134–5

Portland Young Offender Institution
Abuse 440w

Post Office
236w

Post offices
Cash dispensing 340
Electronic government 237w
Performance and Innovation Unit 238w
Rural areas 340–2
Social security benefits 613–5

Postal services
Social security benefits 269w

Postgraduate education
Northern Ireland 94w

Pound, Mr Stephen
Debates etc.
Child Support Pensions and Social Security Bill, Rep and 3R (03.04.00) 696

Poverty
Children 333–4w, 449–50w
Leeds 115–7w
North West region 333–4w

Prentice, Mr Gordon
Debates etc.
Budget March 2000 (27.03.00) 48
Freedom of Information Bill, Rep and 3R (05.04.00) 1010–1
Questions
Aircraft, Violence 421–2w
Appointments Commission, Public appointments 407w
Barclays Bank 47w
Business questions 499
Drugs, Abuse 602w
Earnings limits 489–90w
Housing, Standards 801–2
Millennium Exhibition, Valuation 320w
Prescription drugs, Waste disposal 393w
Radiation, Research 277w, 533w, 623w

Pre-school education
Hampshire 290–1w, 388–9w
Hearing impaired 387w
Refugees 71w

Prescott, John
Correspondence 390w

Prescott, Rt Hon John, Deputy Prime Minister and Secretary of State for the Environment Transport and the Regions*
Debates etc.
Housing, Ministerial statements (04.04.00) 811–26
Oral question time intervention (04.04.00) 801
Questions
Departmental expenditure limits, Dept of the Environment Transport and the Regions 223–4w
Fares, Concessions 805–6
London Regional Transport, Management 793–4
London Underground, Public private partnerships 794–5

Prescribing Supply and Administration of Medicines Review Team
218w

Prescription drugs
Children in care 59w
Compensation 362–3w
Fees and charges 354w, 393–4w
Prices 202–3
Waste disposal 393w

Press freedom
Kazakhstan 284w

Press releases
Cabinet Office 76w, 526w

Primarolo, Ms Dawn, Paymaster General*
Questions
Cellular phones, Licensing 590w
Child care tax credit 328–30w, 583w
Customs and Excise, Pakistan 496–7w
Customs officers, Manpower 259w
Disabled person's tax credit, South Yorkshire 50w
Drug seizures 259–60w
Earnings limits 489–90w
Excise duties, Petrol 1143–5
Finance Bill 1999/2000 151w
Income tax 585w
Income tax, Construction 24–5w
Income tax, Pensioners 151w
Income tax, Tax yields 149–50w
Inland Revenue, Personal records 500w
Married personal allowance 491w
Motor vehicles, Imports 463w
National insurance contributions, Rebates 50w, 148–9w, 256w
National Insurance Contributions Office 50w
PAYE 150–1w
Proof of identity, Social Security Contributions Agency 590w
Public finance 461–2w
Regulation, Treasury 461w
Smuggling, Alcoholic drinks 462–3w
Smuggling, Petrol 491w
Smuggling, Telephone services 493–4w
Smuggling, Tobacco 490–3w
Stocks and shares, Taxation 495–6w
"Tackling Tobacco Smuggling" 462w
Tax allowances 328w
Tax allowances, Disabled 491w
Tax avoidance, Self-employed 489w, 494–5w
"Tax Benefit Reference Manual, 1999/00" 150w, 590w
Tax burden 490w, 584–5w
Tax exemption certificates, Business 491–2w
Tax rates and bands 461w, 499–500w
Taxation, Companies 149w
Taxation, Small businesses 152w
Valuation Office, Standards 459w
VAT, Churches 583–4w
Welfare tax credits, Publicity 49–50w
Working families tax credit 48w, 114w, 146–7w
Working families tax credit, Cumbria 48w
Working families tax credit, Free school meals 259w
Working families tax credit, Morecambe 48w
Working families tax credit, North West region 587w
Working families tax credit, Norwich 49w
Working families tax credit, Payments 329w
Working families tax credit, Scotland 145–6w
Working families tax credit, Southwark 49w, 146w
Working families tax credit, Stafford 49w

Primary care groups
Public appointments 128w

Primary care trusts
122–3w
Public appointments 128w, 514w

Primary education
Africa 178–9w
Conferences 573–4w
Equal opportunities 574w, 974

Primates
Animal experiments 436w
Infectious diseases 357w
Overseas trade 558–9w

Prime Minister
Aviation 279w
Internet 38–9w
Non-departmental public bodies 244–5w
Official engagements 171w, 471w
Task forces 244–5w
Visits abroad 574w

Prior, Mr David
Questions
NHS, Debts 515w
NHS, Finance 502–3w

Prison accommodation
596–7w

Prison Service
Females 380–1w
Standards 213–4w

Prisoners
Handbooks 141w
Rehabilitation 13w

Prisoners on remand
142w

Prisoners' release
365–6w
Northern Ireland 51–2w, 95–6w

Prisons
Drugs 86w, 370w
Overcrowding 6–9w

Private finance initiative
588–9w
Hospitals 215–7
Metropolitan Police 381w

Private Members' bills
Rulings and statements (07.04.00) 1264

Private sector
Essex Rivers Healthcare NHS Trust 217w
Health services 579w
Mid Essex Hospital Services NHS Trust 217w

Privy Council Office Judicial Committee
Scotland 361–2w

Probation and aftercare
Information technology 5w
Public appointments 12–3w

Probation Board for Northern Ireland
244w

Procurement
Aircraft carriers 209w
Ammunition 160w
Artillery 603w
Government departments 330–1w
Military aircraft 299–300w
Roll-on roll-off ships 339
Tankers 79w

Proof of identity
Dept of Social Security 529w
Driver and Vehicle Licensing Agency 321–2w
Social Security Contributions Agency 590w

Property
Ministry of Defence 27w

Prosecutions
Fraud 468w

Prosser, Mr Gwyn
Debates etc.
Livestock, Exports (07.04.00) 1336–9
Questions
Employment, South East region 586w
MV Cap Afrique 455w
Refugees 970

Prostate cancer
Research 612–3w
Waiting lists 612w

Prozac
62w

Public Administration Select Committee
(30.03.00) 599

Public appointments
284w, 523w
Appointments Commission 407w
Dept for Education and Employment 154w
Dept of Health 136w
Dept of the Environment Transport and the Regions 319w
Dept of Trade and Industry 277w
Equal opportunities 76–7w
Home Office 215w
Independent Tribunal Service 197–8w
Longbridge Task Force 196w
NHS 220w, 523w
NHS trusts 514w
Non-departmental public bodies 277w, 523w
Primary care groups 128w
Primary care trusts 128w, 514w
Probation and aftercare 12–3w
Regional development agencies 319w
Unified Appeal Tribunal 401w

Public expenditure
259w, 587w
Dept of Health 63–4w
Iraq 1149

Public finance
461–2w

Public Finance and Accountability (Scotland) Act 2000 (Transfer of NAO Staff Etc) Order 2000
Debates etc.
(29.03.00) 464

Public inquiries
Dept of the Environment Transport and the Regions 311–3w

Public libraries
65w
Voluntary work 358–9w

Public order
Bangladesh 267w

Public private partnerships
British Nuclear Fuels 193w
London Underground 225–6w, 544w, 793–5

Public Record Office
Standards 220–1w

Public records
Monckton, Walter 401w

Public safety radio communications project
597–8w

Public transport
Housing 17w, 413w

Public Trust Office
79w

Publicity
Welfare tax credits 49–50w

Pupil exclusions
206w

Pupils
South East region 537–8w

Purchase, Mr Ken
Questions
Rover Group 635

"Quality and Choice a Decent Home for All Consultation Paper" (04.04.00) 811–26

Quality control
Audit 317–8w
Sellafield 105w, 335–6, 404w, 479–80w, 542–4w

Quarantine
Animal welfare 37w

Quin, Rt Hon Ms Joyce, Minister of State, Ministry of Agriculture Fisheries and Food
Questions
Animal products, Waste disposal 36–7w
Beef, Argentina 173–4w
Beef, Imports 249w
Bovine spongiform encephalopathy 558w
Bovine spongiform encephalopathy, EC countries 174w
Bovine spongiform encephalopathy, Waste disposal 250w
Bovine Spongiform Encephalopathy and Creutzfeld Jakob Disease Inquiry 174w
Dairy products, Exports 174w
Dietary supplements 35–6w
Dogs, Exports 501w
Farmers, Bankruptcy 250w
Farms, Hedges and ditches 132w, 172w, 325w, 327–8w
Farms, Valuation 83w
Genetically modified organisms, Crops 327w
Genetically modified organisms, Maize 457w
Hops, Subsidies 174–5w
Milk, Imports 251w, 500–1w
Offices, Intervention Board 37w
Operating costs, Ministry of Agriculture Fisheries and Food 250–1w
Organic food, Fruit 559w
Primates, Infectious diseases 357w
Primates, Overseas trade 558–9w
Quarantine, Animal welfare 37w
Sheep, Radioactive fallout 174w
Slaughterhouses, Contracts 172–3w

Quinn, Mr Lawrie
Questions
Construction, Standards 411w
Non-departmental public bodies, Public appointments 277w
Public appointments, Dept for Education and Employment 154w
Public appointments, Dept of Health 136w
Public appointments, Dept of the Environment Transport and the Regions 319w
Public appointments, Dept of Trade and Industry 277w
Public appointments, Home Office 215w
Regional assemblies 318–9w
Regional assemblies, Yorkshire and Humberside 320w
Regional development agencies 18w

Quinn, Mr Lawrie*—*continued
Regional development agencies, Accountability 319w
Regional development agencies, Public appointments 319w
Regulation, Cabinet Office 385w

Race relations
Standards 4w

Racial discrimination
Mental health services 208–9

Radiation
Research 38w, 45–6w, (29.03.00) 47–69wh, 194w, 277w, 481, 533w, 623w

Radiation exposure
War pensions 164–5w

Radice, Rt Hon Giles
Debates etc.
Freedom of Information Bill, Rep (04.04.00) 925–6
Freedom of Information Bill, Rep and 3R (05.04.00) 1020, 1026, 1029, 1097

Radio
Illegal broadcasting 238w

Radioactive fallout
Sheep 174w

Radioactive materials
Food 63w
Japan 105w, 171w, 476w

Radioactive wastes
Waste disposal 17–8w, 485w

Radioactivity
Kosovo 555w

Radon gas
Housing 419w

Railway network
(28.03.00) 30–6wh

Railways
Euxton 802–3
Freight 427w, 483w

Railways (Rateable Values) (England) Order 2000
Debates etc.
(28.03.00) 291

Rammell, Mr Bill
Debates etc.
Lisbon Summit (EC) (27.03.00) 29
Sittings in Westminster Hall
Disability living allowance (05.04.00) 243–7wh, 250wh
Questions
Housing revenue accounts, New towns 809–10
Married personal allowance 1143

Randall, Mr John
Questions
Refugees 972
Slaughterhouses, Contracts 172–3w

Rapid deployment forces
United Nations 171w

Rapid transit systems
410w

Rapson, Mr Syd
Debates etc.
Wireless Telegraphy (Television Licence Fees) (Amendment) Regulations (28.03.00) 302
Questions
Tourism 65–6w

Rates and rating
(28.03.00) 291

Rationing
NHS 120w

Raynsford, Mr Nick*, *Minister of State, Dept of the Environment Transport and the Regions
Questions
Housing 410–1w
Housing, Chelmsford 807–8
Housing, Empty property 324w
Housing, Shops 323–4w
Housing, Single people 798–800
Housing, South East region 608–10w, 795–8
Housing, Standards 801–2
Housing improvement, Disabled 324w
Planning Inspectorate 227w
Planning permission 317w
Planning permission, East Anglia 22–3w

Recreation spaces
66w

Recruitment
Nurses 332, 965–6
Police 595–6w
Teachers 206w

Recycling
Glass 23w
Packaging 623w

Redundancy
EC law 492–4
Hydro Agri (UK) 44w

Redundant churches
Property transfer 52w

Redwood, Rt Hon John
Debates etc.
Oral question time intervention (30.03.00) 492
Questions
BMW 196w
BMW, Retail trade 196w
EC grants and loans 624w
Regional selective assistance 189–90w
Rover Group 639
Rover Group, Longbridge 190w, 197w, 478–9
Rover Group, Retail trade 190–1w, 196–7w

Reed, Mr Andrew
Questions
Church of England, Finance 18
Electronic government 960
Hospitals, Private finance initiative 216
Swimming, Schools 3–4

Referendums
Western Sahara (04.04.00) 184–91wh

Refugees
144w, 366–7w, 593w, 970, 972
Begging and vagrancy 439w
Burma 471–2w
Deportation 437–8w, 593w
East Timor 54w
Education 538w
Finance 143–4w, 591–3w
Housing 366w, 439w
Legal aid 401w
Local government services 438–9w, 521w, 593w, 633–4w
Pre-school education 71w
Social security benefits 115w, 452w, 612–3
Somalia 602w
Sri Lanka 593w
Voucher schemes 86–7w

Reg(EEC)422/67
631w

Regional airports
South East region 228–9w

Regional arts boards
Manpower 153w

Regional assemblies
17w, 318–9w
Yorkshire and Humberside 320w

Regional crime squads
635w

Regional cultural consortiums
392w

Regional development agencies
18w, 412w
Accountability 319w
Operating costs 585–6w
Public appointments 319w
Small businesses 43–4w

Regional selective assistance
189–90w

Regulatory impact assessments
EC law 268–9w

Rehabilitation
Prisoners 13w

Reid, Rt Hon Dr John*, *Secretary of State for Scotland
Questions
Assisted areas, Scotland 110w, 249w
Bankruptcy, Pensions 111w
Empty property, Scotland Office 285w
Internet, Scotland Office 110–1w
Non-domestic rates, Scotland 540–2w
Parking, Scotland Office 249w
River Clyde, Shipbuilding 110w

Religion
Students 94w

Rendel, Mr David
Questions
Atomic Weapons Establishment 486–7w
Council tax, Second homes 808
Hospitals, Waiting lists 508w
Second homes, South East region 484w
State earnings related pension scheme, Misrepresentation 625

Rented housing
Neighbourhood nuisance 414w

Rents
Rebates 20–1w, 32–3w, 325w

Repossession orders
Hampshire 78w
Mortgages 78w

Reserve forces
Army 396–7w

Residential allowance
220w

Residential Care Homes and Nursing Homes (Medical Records) Bill 1999/2000
Debates etc.
1R (27.03.00) 38–40

Residential homes
Elderly (03.04.00) 783–90

Resignations
Civil servants 361w
Surrey and Sussex NHS Trust 618w

Retail Packaging Recycling Bill 1999/2000
Debates etc.
2R order read (07.04.00) 1334

Retail trade
BMW 196w
Metrication 404–5w
Rover Group 190–1w, 196–7w

Riser, Jon
216w

River Clyde
Shipbuilding 110w

River Tyne
Shipbuilding (04.04.00) 157–77wh

Road traffic
322–3w
South East region 609w

Road Traffic Bill 1999/2000
Debates etc.
2R order read (07.04.00) 1335

Roads
607w
Accidents 545–6w
Freight 427w, 433w
Rural areas 17w
Safety 545w

Robathan, Mr Andrew
Sittings in Westminster Hall
Developing countries, Females (30.03.00) 119wh, 124wh
Questions
Africa, AIDS 324–5
Council housing, Greater London 803–4
Cycling 316w
Inflammatory bowel disease 214–5
Social security benefits, Abuse 619–20

Robertson, Mr Laurence
Debates etc.
Child Support Pensions and Social Security Bill, Rep (29.03.00) 362–71, 385
Child Support Pensions and Social Security Bill, Rep and 3R (03.04.00) 647, 678–80
Questions
"Fit for the Future Consultation Paper" 356w
Genetically modified organisms, Crops 419–20w
Metrication, Retail trade 404–5w
National Lottery 67w
Portland Young Offender Institution, Abuse 440w
Recycling, Glass 23w
State earnings related pension scheme, Misrepresentation 30w
Tax exemption certificates, Business 491–2w
Unigate, Dairy Crest 624w

Robinson, Mr Peter D
Debates etc.
Royal Ulster Constabulary (06.04.00) 1231

Roche, Mrs Barbara, Minister of State, Home Office
Sittings in Westminster Hall
Immigration, Administrative delays (29.03.00) 114–6wh
Questions
Deportation 367w, 599w
Detainees 599w
EC justice and home affairs 520w
Entry clearances 440–5w
Illegal immigrants 84w
Immigration, Administrative delays 88w
Immigration, Appeals 592w
Immigration, Applications 520–1w
Immigration, Correspondence 439–40w, 634w
Immigration and Nationality Directorate, Correspondence 440w
Immigration and Nationality Directorate, Documents 434–5w
Immigration controls, Disclosure of information 590–1w

Roche, Mrs Barbara*—*continued
Immigration controls, Operating costs 598–9w
Immigration rules 592w
Oakington Detention Centre 377–8w
Passports 84w
Refugees 144w, 366–7w, 593w
Refugees, Begging and vagrancy 439w
Refugees, Deportation 437–8w, 593w
Refugees, Finance 143–4w, 591–3w
Refugees, Housing 366w, 439w
Refugees, Local government services 438–9w, 521w, 593w, 633–4w
Refugees, Somalia 602w
Refugees, Voucher schemes 86–7w
Temporary immigrants 87w
Temporary immigrants, Iraq 410w

Rodents
Animal experiments 369w, 437w

Roe, Mrs Marion
Questions
All party groups 42–3w
Health action zones 204
House of Commons Works of Art Advisory Committee 235w
Members, Taxis 104w
Members' staff, Foreign workers 43w, 235w

Rogers, Mr Allan
Debates etc.
Freedom of Information Bill, Rep (04.04.00) 897, 903, 905
Industrial injuries, Compensation (30.03.00) 600–1, 604

Rogers of Riverside Task Force
see Urban Task Force

Rolling stock
Piccadilly line 544–5w

Roll-on roll-off ships
Deployment 208–9w
Procurement 339

Roman Catholic Church
Northern Ireland Civil Service 517–8w

Romania
Export credit guarantees 533w

Romsey
By-election writs (06.04.00) 1133

Rooker, Rt Hon Jeff, Minister of State, Dept of Social Security
Debates etc.
Child Support Pensions and Social Security Bill, Rep (29.03.00) 368, 377, 400–1, 411, 413–7, 434–5, 443, 447–53
Child Support Pensions and Social Security Bill, Rep and 3R (03.04.00) 652–4, 658–62, 665, 685, 694, 700–6, 715, 718–22, 726–7, 730–3, 747, 749–54, 762–6, 773–4, 778
Sittings in Westminster Hall
Housing benefit, Abuse (05.04.00) 234–42wh
Questions
Art works, Dept of Social Security 531w
Empty property, Dept of Social Security 340–1w
National insurance 627w
National insurance contributions, Lone parents 530w
Pension funds 31–2w
Pension sharing 476w
Pensioners, Income 31w, 335w, 451–2w
Pensioners, Income support 333w
Pensioners, Personal savings 530–1w
Pensioners, Social security benefits 32w
Pensions, Reform 333w

Rooker, Rt Hon Jeff*—*continued
Proof of identity, Dept of Social Security 529w
Regulation, Dept of Social Security 453–4w
Social security benefits, Abuse 335–6w, 619–20, 627–9w
Social security benefits, Automated credit transfer 454w, 532w
Social security benefits, Bank services 331–2w
Social security benefits, Taxation 334w
Social Security Benefits Agency, Security 31w
Stakeholder pensions 34w, 337w, 475w, 529w
State earnings related pension scheme, Misrepresentation 30w, 340w, 625
State retirement pensions 332w, 338–9w, 616–7
State retirement pensions, Administrative delays 164w, 611–2
State retirement pensions, Australia 35w
State retirement pensions, Self-employed 33–4w, 271w
State retirement pensions, Uprating 334–5w, 624–5

Ross, Mr Ernie
Questions
Army, Reserve forces 396–7w
Defence Geographic and Imagery Intelligence Agency 395–6w
Pensioners, Income 609

Ross, Mr William
Debates etc.
Budget March 2000 (27.03.00) 49, 90–2
Questions
Council housing, Northern Ireland 50–1w
Local broadcasting 8
Nelson, Rosemary 244w
Police Authority for Northern Ireland, Offices 51w
Royal Ulster Constabulary, Complaints 516–7w
Smuggling, Petrol 491w

Rover Group
489–90, 629–42
Apprentices 74w
Longbridge 109–10w, 190w, 197w, 332–5, 475–80, 481w, 489–92, 966–8
Retail trade 190–1w, 196–7w

Rowlands, Mr Ted
Debates etc.
Learning and Skills Bill (HL), 2R (30.03.00) 517, 534–8, 540, 551–2, 571
Questions
New deal for 50 plus, Expenditure 210w
New deal for long term unemployed, Expenditure 210w
New deal for young people, Expenditure 211w

Roy, Mr Frank
Questions
Social security benefits, Post offices 615

Royal prerogative
143w

Royal Ulster Constabulary
Compensation 97w
Complaints 516–7w
Human rights 280w
Oaths and affirmations 90w
Opposition days (06.04.00) 1210–53

Royal Victoria Hospital Belfast
Repairs and maintenance 568w

Ruane, Mr Chris
Questions
Children in care, Crimes of violence 62w
Housing 410–1w
Organic farming 557w
Organic food 457w
Smuggling, Telephone services 493–4w
Smuggling, Tobacco 492–3w

Ruddock, Joan
Questions
Cellular phones, Health hazards 580w
Genetically modified organisms, Crops 131w, 611w
Genetically modified organisms, Maize 325w, 457w, 502w
Pesticides, Health hazards 580–1w

Ruffley, Mr David
Debates etc.
Budget March 2000 (27.03.00) 49, 85–8
Questions
Tax burden 584–5w

Rules of procedure
Solicitors 557w

Rural Affairs Ministerial Group
see Ministerial Group on Rural Affairs

Rural areas
428w
Banks 47w, 68w
Chemists' shops 619w
Internet 238w
Post offices 340–2
Roads 17w

Russell, Bob
Debates etc.
Graffiti (27.03.00) 195
Transfer of questions, Points of order (27.03.00) 37
Wild Mammals (Hunting with Dogs) Bill, 2R adjourned (07.04.00) 1278, 1286, 1289, 1296, 1299, 1328
Questions
Business questions 506
Crimestoppers 142–3w
Essex Police, Compensation 600w
Monuments, Cyprus 603w
Neurology, Consultants 120w
Rapid transit systems 410w
St Helena, Airports 182–3w
Severalls Hospital 136–7w
Sports, Museums and galleries 67w
Wembley Stadium, Transport 23–4w

Russia
Moldova 267w

Rutland College
Tresham College (28.03.00) 23–9wh

Ryan, Ms Joan
Debates etc.
Learning and Skills Bill (HL), 2R (30.03.00) 546–50, 555

SA80 rifle
298–9w

Saddleworth
Low flying 556w

Safety belts
Disabled 411–2w

Safety measures
Fishing vessels 800–1

St Aubyn, Mr Nick
Debates etc.
Budget March 2000 (27.03.00) 94, 97
Learning and Skills Bill (HL), 2R (30.03.00) 534, 585–7

St Aubyn, Mr Nick—continued
Unparliamentary expressions, Points of order (27.03.00) 186–7
Questions
Aviation, Government assistance 488–9
Corporation tax, EC countries 1146–7
Education, Standard spending assessments 294w
Housing, Public transport 413w
National Lottery 9–10
Standards Fund 537w
State retirement pensions, Administrative delays 611–2
Tanks 554w
Tanks, Diesel fuel 554w
Tax burden 585w

St Helena
Airports 182–3w
Armed forces 467w
Economic situation 468w
Employment 467w
Fisheries 467w

Salmond, Mr Alex
Questions
Air force, Military bases 29w
Arms trade, Zimbabwe 194–5w
Diplomatic service, Political impartiality 103w
Farmers, Early retirement 82–3w
Peace keeping operations, Zimbabwe 29w
USA, Scotland 103w, 169–70w

Salmonella
616–7w

Salter, Mr Martin
Debates etc.
Wild Mammals (Hunting with Dogs) Bill, 2R adjourned (07.04.00) 1301–2, 1305–6, 1311–6
Sittings in Westminster Hall
Barclays Bank, Suffolk (29.03.00) 75–8wh, 87wh
Questions
Atomic Weapons Establishment 159–60w
Highways Agency, Standards 227w

Sanctions
Serbia 99w

Sanders, Mr Adrian
Questions
Absent voting 376–7w
Council of Ministers, Disclosure of information 389–90w
Deportation 367w
Housing benefit, Abuse 118w
Local authorities, Assets 485w
Paediatrics, Nurses 504–7w
Pensioners, Income support 166w
Refugees, Local government services 521w, 593w
Roads 607w
Social security benefits, Abuse 117–8w
Unemployment 329–30w

Sarwar, Mr Mohammad
Questions
River Clyde, Shipbuilding 110w
Roll-on roll-off ships, Procurement 339

Savidge, Mr Malcolm
Questions
Azerbaijan, Arms trade 631w

Sawford, Mr Phil
Questions
Secondary education, Capitation allowances 604w

Sayeed, Mr Jonathan
Debates etc.
Armed Forces Discipline Bill (HL), Rep and 3R (06.04.00) 1175, 1177, 1185–6, 1189, 1191
Questions
Bananas, EC external trade 46w
Small businesses 460w
Smuggling, Alcoholic drinks 462–3w
Taxation, Business 496w
Taxation, Freight 460w

School Crossings (Amendment) Bill 1999/2000
Debates etc.
2R order read (07.04.00) 1334

School libraries
Computers 154w

School meals
296w, 538w

Schools
Amber Valley 291–3w
Greater London 538w
Hampshire 536–7w
Internet 205–6w
Northern Ireland 570w
Northumberland 973–4
Sports 66w
Standards 388w
Swimming 2–4

Schools access initiative
74w

Science
Departmental coordination 480–1
International cooperation 45–6w

Scotland
Armed forces 29w
Army 28–9w
Assisted areas 110w, 249w
Average earnings 47–8w
Bank services 152–3w
Bankruptcy 111w
Child care tax credit 145–6w
Independent Tribunal Service 197–8w
Low pay 47–8w
Military bases 28w
Non-domestic rates 540–2w
Pensioners 973, 1135–7
Privy Council Office Judicial Committee 361–2w
Social security benefits 115w, 166–7w, 331–2w
Students 153–4w
USA 103w, 169–70w
Winter fuel payments 334w
Working families tax credit 145–6w

Scotland Office
Empty property 285w
Internet 110–1w
Parking 249w
Regulation 402w

Scotland Yard
see Metropolitan Police

Scottish Power
Debts 113–4w

Second homes
410w
Council tax 808–9
South East region 484w

Secondary education
Capitation allowances 604w

Secondment
Civil service 198–201w
Treasury 46–7w

Secure psychiatric units
Greater London 126w

Security
Social Security Benefits Agency 31w

Segregation of prisoners
370w

Select Committee on Public Administration
see Public Administration Select Committee

Self-employed
State retirement pensions 33–4w, 271w
Tax avoidance 489w, 494–5w

Sellafield
533w
Quality control 105w, 335–6, 404w, 479–80w, 542–4w

Serbia
Sanctions 99w

Severalls Hospital
136–7w

Sewage
Killyleagh 132–3w

Sex offender orders
88w

Sexual offences
Home detention curfews 599–600w
Males 4w

Seychelles
Overseas aid 185w

Shares
Charities 589–90w
Disclosure of information (27.03.00) 187

Shaw, Mr Jonathan
Questions
Business questions 504
Chatham Dockyard, Correspondence 397w
Working hours 239w

Sheep
Radioactive fallout 174w

Sheerman, Mr Barry
Questions
Domestic violence 377–8w
Fines, Personal income 364w
Magistrates 363w
Magistrates' courts 364w
Tax allowances, Manufacturing industries 1147
Trade competitiveness, EC countries 238–9w

Sheldon, Rt Hon Robert
Debates etc.
Budget March 2000 (27.03.00) 65–8
Questions
National Audit Office 18–9

Shephard, Rt Hon Gillian
Sittings in Westminster Hall
Barclays Bank, Suffolk (29.03.00) 73–5wh, 79wh, 84wh
Questions
Chemists' shops, Rural areas 619w

Shepherd, Mr Richard
Debates etc.
Freedom of Information Bill, Rep (04.04.00) 838–9, 844, 866–7, 879–80, 924, 927, 929
Freedom of Information Bill, Rep and 3R (05.04.00) 1013–6, 1049–51, 1053–6, 1061–2, 1100–3, 1106, 1114, 1116–9, 1121–2

Shepherd, Mr Richard—continued
Questions
Business questions 503

Shipbuilding
River Clyde 110w
River Tyne (04.04.00) 157–77wh

Shops
Housing 323–4w

Short, Rt Hon Clare, Secretary of State for International Development
Questions
Africa, AIDS 179w, 324–5
Africa, Primary education 178–9w
Burma, Refugees 471–2w
Cuba, EC aid 183w
Developing countries, Debts 175w, 181w, 326–8
Developing countries, Debts written off 472w
Developing countries, Drugs 184w
Developing countries, Uruguay Round 185w
Developing countries, Voluntary work 177–8w
Disaster relief 178w
EC aid 180–1w
Empty property, Dept for International Development 287w
Ethiopia, Forests 286–7w
Horn of Africa, Famine 182w
Indonesia, Forests 184–5w
Internet, Dept for International Development 286w
Kosovo, Overseas aid 175–6w, 582w
Kosovo, Uranium 581w
Madagascar, Disaster relief 180w
Mongolia, Overseas aid 180w
Mozambique, Disaster relief 176–7w, 328–30
Overseas aid, Basic education 185–6w
Overseas aid, Environment protection 175w
Parking, Dept for International Development 254w
Regulation, Dept for International Development 582w
St Helena, Airports 182–3w
Seychelles, Overseas aid 185w
Southern Africa, Overseas aid 183w
Sri Lanka, Overseas aid 177w
Sub-Saharan Africa, Arms trade 183–4w
Sudan, Exports 286w
UN international drugs control programme 184w
World Education Forum 181–2w, 331–2
Zimbabwe, AIDS 325–6
Zimbabwe, Overseas aid 186w, 254w

Shropshire
Dental services 507–8w

Sick leave
Police 214w

Sierra Leone
284w

Sign language
(05.04.00) 1124–32

Simpson, Mr Alan
Debates etc.
Child Support Pensions and Social Security Bill, Rep (29.03.00) 455–6
Child Support Pensions and Social Security Bill, Rep and 3R (03.04.00) 677, 702
Questions
Atomic Weapons Establishment 552w
Genetically modified organisms, Crops 315w

Simpson, Mr Keith
Sittings in Westminster Hall
Barclays Bank, Suffolk (29.03.00) 71wh, 78–81wh

Singh, Mr Marsha
Questions
Customs and Excise, Administration of justice 468–9w
Customs and Excise, Pakistan 496–7w

Single parents
see Lone parents

Single people
Housing 798–800

Sixth form education
Finance 71–2w

Skinner, Mr Dennis
Debates etc.
Lisbon Summit (EC) (27.03.00) 34
Private notice question intervention (03.04.00) 642
Questions
Business questions 1156–7
National Lottery 6–7
Textiles 484

Slaughterhouses
Contracts 172–3w

Small Business Service
239w

Small businesses
460w
Company accounts 405–6w
Government assistance 241–2w
North East region 242w
Pay 485–6
Regional development agencies 43–4w
Regulation 235w, 481w
Taxation 152w

Smith, Rt Hon Andrew, Chief Secretary to the Treasury
Debates etc.
Budget March 2000 (27.03.00) 120–5
Questions
Capital Modernisation Fund 258w
Corporation tax, EC countries 1146–7
EC grants and loans 1145–6
Exchange rates 329w
Government departments, Annual reports 494w
Government departments, Procurement 330–1w
Iraq, Public expenditure 1149
Long term unemployed 584w
Married personal allowance 1141–3
Married personal allowance, Pensioners 1141–2
Private finance initiative 588–9w
Public expenditure 259w, 587w
Public expenditure, Dept of Health 63–4w
Regional development agencies, Operating costs 585–6w
Scottish Power, Debts 113–4w
Social services, Finance 259w

Smith, Angela
Questions
Birds, Special protection areas 112w
Cuba, EC aid 183w
Disabled, Safety belts 411–2w
Disabled, Tax allowances 491w
Electronic government 203w
Family credit, Basildon 473–5w
Fares, Concessions 805
National Lottery 12
NHS, Research 216–7w
Pensioners, Income support 473w

Smith, Rt Hon Chris, Secretary of State for Culture Media and Sport*
Debates etc.
Television Licences (Disclosure of Information) Bill, 1R (30.03.00) 512
Questions
Arts Council of England, Manpower 153w
Empty property, Dept for Culture Media and Sport 359–60w
Internet, Dept for Culture Media and Sport 391–2w
Local broadcasting 7–8
London Film Commission 359w
Millennium Exhibition, Expenditure 64w
National Endowment for Science Technology and the Arts 261w
National Lottery 5–7, 9–13, 67w
News 24 359w
Recreation spaces 66w
Regional arts boards, Manpower 153w
Regional cultural consortiums 392w
Sportsgrounds, Belgium 471w
Theatre 65w

Smith, Miss Geraldine
Debates etc.
Budget March 2000 (27.03.00) 74–6
Questions
National Lottery, Morecambe 470w
Tourism, Coastal areas 4–5, 67w
Winter fuel payments, Morecambe 33w
Working families tax credit, Morecambe 48w

Smith, Jacqui, Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State, Dept for Education and Employment*
Questions
Dyslexia 294–5w
Education, Refugees 538w
Free school meals, Welfare tax credits 387–8w
Free school meals, Working families tax credit 538w
Pre-school education, Hearing impaired 387w
Pre-school education, Refugees 71w
School meals 296w
Schools, Standards 388w
Schools access initiative 74w
Teachers, Hearing impaired 387w

Smith, Mr John
Questions
Hospitals, Private finance initiative 217
Motor vehicle type approval 607w
Motor vehicles, Imports 463w

Smith, Mr Llew
Debates etc.
Child Support Pensions and Social Security Bill, Rep and 3R (03.04.00) 676, 678
Questions
Access to work programme 294w
Aerials, Planning permission 429w
Antidepressants, Costs 394w
British Nuclear Fuels 390w, 404w
Dounreay, Inspections 403w
Dyslexia 294–5w
Kosovo, Uranium 581w
Local government, Disclosure of information 429w
Local government, Reform 792
Meningitis, Vaccination 613–4w
Millennium Exhibition, Land use 429w
Non-departmental public bodies, Prime Minister 244–5w
Nuclear Installations Inspectorate 313w
Prescription drugs, Compensation 362–3w
Prostate cancer, Waiting lists 612w

Smith, Mr Llew—continued*
Radioactive materials, Japan 105w
Sellafield, Quality control 404w
Telephone services, Working conditions 430w
UK membership of EC 408w
United Kingdom Atomic Energy Authority, Standards 477w
United Kingdom Atomic Energy Authority Constabulary, Criminal investigation 403–4w
Urban areas 428w
USA, Ballistic missile defence 563w
War pensions, Radiation exposure 164–5w

Smith, Sir Robert
Debates etc.
Wild Mammals (Hunting with Dogs) Bill, 2R adjourned (07.04.00) 1312, 1320

Smoking
Health education 614w

Smoking related diseases
Medical treatments 351w

Smuggling
Alcoholic drinks 462–3w, 492–3w
Criminal investigation 379w
Petrol 491w
Telephone services 493–4w
Tobacco 490–3w

Smyth, Rev Martin
Debates etc.
Royal Ulster Constabulary (06.04.00) 1225, 1250
Sittings in Westminster Hall
Burma, Human rights (05.04.00) 208–10wh
Social security benefits, Northern Ireland (04.04.00) 178–80wh, 182–3wh
Questions
Business questions 501
Tax allowances, Manufacturing industries 1147–8

Soames, Mr Nicholas
Debates etc.
Royal Ulster Constabulary (06.04.00) 1226
Wild Mammals (Hunting with Dogs) Bill, 2R adjourned (07.04.00) 1265–6, 1280–2, 1284, 1287, 1290, 1303
Questions
Excise duties, Petrol 1143–4
National Lottery 12–3
NHS, Finance 210
Rover Group 640

Social Exclusion Unit
523–4w, 963–4

Social Fund
339w

Social rented housing
422–5w
South East region 428w
Tenancy agreements 807

Social security benefits
(29.03.00) 347–464, (03.04.00) 644–781
Abuse 117–8w, 335–6w, 619–20, 627–9w
Automated credit transfer 454w, 532w
Bank services 152w, 331–2w
Capital rules 617–9
Children 117w
Contracts for services (27.03.00) 187
Disabled 454w
Lone parents 270w
Northern Ireland (04.04.00) 178–83wh
Overpayments 447w
Pensioners 32w
Post offices 613–5
Postal services 269w

Social security benefits—continued*
Refugees 115w, 452w, 612–3
Scotland 115w, 166–7w, 331–2w
Take-up 626–8
Taxation 334w
Telephone services 626–7w
War widows 453w
Widowed people 272w, 339w, (06.04.00) 1254–62

Social Security Benefits Agency
Administrative delays 338w
Employment Service 339–40w
Home visits 166–7w
Security 31w

Social Security Contributions Agency
Proof of identity 590w

Social Security (Work-Focused Interviews) Regulations 2000
Debates etc.
(27.03.00) 188

Social services
205–6
Finance 228w, 259w
Local government finance 217w
Voluntary work 347w

Socrates programme
289–90w

Soley, Mr Clive
Debates etc.
Housing (04.04.00) 821

Solicitors
Fees and charges (30.03.00) 600–8
Rules of procedure 557w

Somalia
Refugees 602w

South East region
Employment 586w
Health services 617–8w
Housing 321w, 428w, 608–10w, 795–8
Migration 587–8w
Planning permission 22–3w
Population 588w
Pupils 537–8w
Regional airports 228–9w
Road traffic 609w
Second homes 484w
Social rented housing 428w
Water supply 609–10w

South Korea
Military exercises 161–2w

South Yorkshire
Disabled person's tax credit 50w
Maternity payments 165–6w

Southend
Standard spending assessments 795

Southern Africa
Overseas aid 183w

Southwark
Child care tax credit 146w
Family credit 49w
Working families tax credit 49w, 146w

Southworth, Ms Helen
Sittings in Westminster Hall
Radiation, Research (29.03.00) 50–5wh, 57wh, 59wh
Questions
Beta-interferon 510–1w
Climate change levy 587w
Radiation, Research 45–6w

Spain
Fishing vessels 253w
Gibraltar 562w

Speaker and deputies
Debates etc.
Amendments and new clauses (29.03.00) 347, 379, 400–1, 413, 455, 457, (30.03.00) 523, (03.04.00) 644, 658, 666, 670, 709, 727, 739, 751, 756, 766, 778, (04.04.00) 830, 856, 871, 890, 915, (05.04.00) 981, 992, 1035–6, 1054, 1062, 1078, 1094, (06.04.00) 1164, 1173, 1179, 1194, 1210
Conduct of proceedings (27.03.00) 9, 16, 74, 93, 100, 117–8, 120, (28.03.00) 214, 220, 250, 274, 277, 293, 300, (29.03.00) 335, 338, 340, 363, 366, 370–1, 376, 378, 431–2, 435, 440, 455–6, 460, 474, (30.03.00) 479, 485, 489, 546, 552, 571, 598, 605, (03.04.00) 629, 631, 637, 675, 692, 748, (04.04.00) 816, 818, 826, 847, 850–1, 867, 884, 925, (05.04.00) 967–8, 970–1, 974, 1011, 1017–9, 1035, 1079, (06.04.00) 1165, 1168, 1170, 1187, 1189, 1196, 1199, 1219, 1221, 1223, 1228–9, 1231, 1239, 1245, 1260, (07.04.00) 1269–70, 1276, 1282, 1285, 1300, 1319, 1327, 1332–3
Disallowed questions (04.04.00) 803
Orders and regulations motions (27.03.00) 187, (28.03.00) 291, (29.03.00) 464, (04.04.00) 935
Points of order (27.03.00) 37, 77, 94, 187, (28.03.00) 221–2, 251, (29.03.00) 343, (30.03.00) 512, 598, (03.04.00) 643, 653, 706–7, (04.04.00) 929, 932, (05.04.00) 978–80, (06.04.00) 1168, (07.04.00) 1270, 1300, 1319
Private Members' bill orders (07.04.00) 1334
Rulings and statements, Documents (30.03.00) 512, (05.04.00) 975
Rulings and statements, Ministers (05.04.00) 979–80
Rulings and statements, Private Members' bills (07.04.00) 1264
Rulings and statements, Ten minutes rule (27.03.00) 41, (06.04.00) 1210
Rulings and statements, Transfer of questions (27.03.00) 37
Rulings and statements, Unparliamentary expressions (03.04.00) 634, 696, (06.04.00) 1137, 1138
Select committee motions (30.03.00) 598, (03.04.00) 782
Sittings in Westminster Hall
Conduct of proceedings (28.03.00) 9wh, 23wh, 29wh, 36wh, (29.03.00) 47–8wh, 51wh, 55wh, 69wh, 92wh, 97wh, (30.03.00) 124–5wh, 143wh, 148wh, (04.04.00) 162wh, 164–5wh, 185wh, (05.04.00) 242wh, 253wh, 263wh, (06.04.00) 273wh, 298–9wh, 305wh
Points of order (29.03.00) 108wh, (06.04.00) 282wh
Rulings and statements, Parliamentary procedure (28.03.00) 30wh
Questions
Railways, Euxton 803

Special protection areas
Birds 112w

Speed limits
Fines 370–3w

Spellar, Mr John, Minister for the Armed Forces, Ministry of Defence*
Debates etc.
Armed Forces Discipline Bill (HL), Rep and 3R (06.04.00) 1199–200
Questions
Air force, Military bases 29w
Armed forces, Cadets 25–6w, 162w
Spellar, Mr John—continued*
Armed forces, Conduct 305w
Armed forces, Financial services 28w
Armed forces, Higher education 161w
Armed forces, Israel 397w
Armed forces, Manpower 304w
Armed forces, Sri Lanka 488–9w
Army, Reserve forces 396–7w
Army, Training 28–9w
Atomic Weapons Establishment 159–60w, 486–7w, 552w
Ballistic missile defence 400w
Ballistic missile defence, Israel 398w, 488w
Ballistic missile defence, USA 209w, 487w
Chemical and biological warfare 206–7w
Crooks, Roger 304w
Defence Geographic and Imagery Intelligence Agency 395–6w
Defence Vetting Agency, Standards 550–1w
Exservicemen 160–1w
Gulf Veterans' Illnesses Unit 303–4w
Internet, Ministry of Defence 299w
Israel, Ministry of Defence 397w
Kosovo, Radioactivity 555w
Kosovo, Uranium 555w
Military aircraft, Mozambique 299w
Military bases, Aldershot 207w
Military bases, Edinburgh 398–400w
Military exercises, Nuclear weapons 305w
Military exercises, South Korea 161–2w
Mines, Research 160w
Naval Manning Agency, Standards 551–2w
Naval Recruiting and Training Agency, Standards 552w
Nuclear weapons, USA 488w
Peace keeping operations, Zimbabwe 29w
Roll-on roll-off ships, Deployment 208–9w
SA80 rifle 298–9w
Territorial Army, Working hours 28w, 162w
Warships, Deployment 28w

Spelman, Mrs Caroline
Questions
Adoption 55–6w
Bone diseases, Children 356w
Health services, Private sector 579w
Maintenance, Tax allowances 969–70
Meningitis, Vaccination 218–9w
Prescription drugs, Prices 203
Rover Group 637–8
Vaccination 219w
Vaccination, Correspondence 357w

Sport action zones
65w

Sports
Finance 66–7w
Further education 91w
Greater London 8–9
Museums and galleries 67w
National Lottery 540w
Schools 66w

Sports centres
Planning permission 434w

Sportsgrounds
Athletics 540w
Belgium 471w

Spring, Mr Richard
Questions
EC institutions, Vocational training 53w, 167w
Lisbon Summit (EC) 465–6w

Sri Lanka
Armed conflict 465w
Sri Lanka—continued*
Armed forces 488–9w
Exports 478–9w
Foreign relations 562w
Overseas aid 177w
Refugees 593w
Trade promotion 406w

Stafford
Working families tax credit 49w

Stakeholder pensions
34w, 337w, 475w, 529w

Standard spending assessments
412–3w
Education 293–4w
Southend 795
Stockport 413w

Standards and Effectiveness Unit
296w

Standards Fund
537w

Stanley, Rt Hon Sir John
Questions
All party groups 42–3w

Stansted Airport
Accidents 600w

Starkey, Dr Phyllis
Debates etc.
Learning and Skills Bill (HL), 2R (30.03.00) 525, 529, 533
Lisbon Summit (EC) (27.03.00) 30
Sittings in Westminster Hall
Railway network (28.03.00) 30–3wh
Questions
Ballistic missile defence 400w
Elderly, Doctors' list of patients 121w
Kosovo, Overseas aid 176w
Legal aid, Maintenance 363w
Science, Departmental coordination 480–1
USA, Ballistic missile defence 408w

State earnings related pension scheme
Misrepresentation 30w, 340w, 625

State retirement pensions
332w, 338–9w, 616–7
Administrative delays 164w, 611–2
Australia 35w
Self-employed 33–4w, 271w
Uprating 334–5w, 620–1, 624–5

State visits
China 52–3w

Statistics
Industrial injuries disablement benefit 531w

Statistics Commission
258w

Steen, Mr Anthony
Questions
Pre-school education, Refugees 71w
Social security benefits, Refugees 115w

Steinberg, Mr Gerry
Debates etc.
Learning and Skills Bill (HL), 2R (30.03.00) 518
Questions
Ambulance services, Durham County 353w
Business questions 498–9, 1156
General practitioners, Durham County 614–5w
Home detention curfews 446w
Nursing homes, Durham County 508w
Small businesses, North East region 242w

Stevenson, Mr George
Debates etc.
Child Support Pensions and Social Security Bill, Rep (29.03.00) 383
Learning and Skills Bill (HL), 2R (30.03.00) 562–5
Questions
Tibet, Human rights 53–4w

Stewart, Mr David
Questions
Barmac 406–7w
Maintenance, Children 449w
Natural gas, Environment protection 107w

Stewart, Mr Ian
Debates etc.
Wild Mammals (Hunting with Dogs) Bill, 2R adjourned (07.04.00) 1270, 1279, 1294
Sittings in Westminster Hall
Radiation, Research (29.03.00) 56wh, 58wh, 64wh
Questions
Food Standards Agency 137w
Married personal allowance 1143
Working families tax credit, North West region 587w

Stinchcombe, Mr Paul
Questions
Munchausen's syndrome 507–8w

Stoate, Dr Howard
Sittings in Westminster Hall
Chronically sick, Health services (29.03.00) 92–6wh

Stockport
Standard spending assessments 413w

Stocks and shares
Taxation 495–6w

Stonehenge
261w, 625w

Straw, Rt Hon Jack, Secretary of State for the Home Dept*
Debates etc.
Criminal Justice and Court Services Bill, 2R (28.03.00) 225–37, 239, 241–2, 245–6, 283–5
Freedom of Information Bill, Rep (04.04.00) 917–30, 932–4
Freedom of Information Bill, Rep and 3R (05.04.00) 995, 998, 1020–30, 1094–7, 1105–6, 1119
Questions
Antisocial behaviour orders 634–5w
Channel Islands, Taxation 594w
Consultants, Home Office 215–6w
Crime, Finance 1–3w
Crime and disorder partnerships 635w
Departmental responsibilities, Families 77–8w
Detention and training orders 138–9w
Electoral Commission, Costs 3–4w
Electoral register 89w
Empty property, Home Office 445–6w
EU Justice and Home Affairs Council 373–6w
Freedom of Information Bill 1999/2000 435w
Genetics, Databases 597w
Government Technical Assistance Centre 596w
Home detention curfews 636–40w
Members, Correspondence 140w
Metropolitan Police, Police areas 211–2w
Metropolitan Police, Standards 212–3w
Non-departmental public bodies, Home Office 87–8w

Straw, Rt Hon Jack—continued*
Parking, Home Office 215w
Police, Finance 84–5w, 597w
Police, Manpower 88–9w, 445w, 595w
Police, Recruitment 595–6w
Police interrogation, Video recordings 595w
Prison accommodation 596–7w
Public appointments, Home Office 215w
Race relations, Standards 4w
Regional crime squads 635w
Riser, Jon 216w
Sexual offences, Home detention curfews 599–600w

Streeter, Mr Gary
Questions
Riser, Jon 216w
Zimbabwe, AIDS 325–6

Stringer, Mr Graham, Parliamentary Secretary, Cabinet Office*
Questions
Advertising, Cabinet Office 198w
Art works, Cabinet Office 385–6w
Better government programme, Elderly 527w, 964–5
Business, Regulation 203–4w
Civil servants, Resignations 361w
Civil service, Secondment 198–201w
Deregulation 528w
EC law, Regulatory impact assessments 268–9w
Electronic government 959–61
Employers' Forum on Disability, Government departments 566w
Government departments, Deregulation 522w
Ministerial policy advisors, Pay 523w
Modernising government programme, Civil service 524w
Non-departmental public bodies, Accountability 959
Non-departmental public bodies, Public appointments 523w
North American Free Trade Agreement 361w, 524w
Parking, Cabinet Office 565w
Press releases, Cabinet Office 76w, 526w
Public appointments 523w
Public appointments, NHS 523w
Task forces 204w, 565–6w

Stuart, Ms Gisela, Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State, Dept of Health*
Debates etc.
Pain, Health services (29.03.00) 470–4
Sittings in Westminster Hall
NHS Direct (06.04.00) 269–83wh, 286wh, 306–12wh
Questions
Accident and emergency departments 120w, 218–20
Alternative energy, Dept of Health 219w
Alternative medicine, EC law 125–6w
Ambulance services, Durham County 353w
Ambulance services, Standards 351w
Animal feed, Additives 579–80w
Antidepressants, Costs 394w
Avon Health Authority, Finance 61w
Chemists' shops, Rural areas 619w
Chronic fatigue syndrome 395w
Cleft palate, Buckinghamshire 218w
Dental services 217–8
Diseases, Expenditure 346–7w
Drugs, Expenditure 129w
East Surrey Hospital, Nurses 618–9w
Empty property, Dept of Health 353–4w

Stuart, Ms Gisela—continued*
Essex Rivers Healthcare NHS Trust, Private sector 217w
Food Standards Agency 137w
Genetically modified organisms, Food 501w
Genetically modified organisms, Maize 325w, 502w
Health services, Private sector 579w
Hospitals, Parking 581w
Hospitals, Waiting lists 575w
Intensive care, Hospital beds 119–20w
Learning disability, Weston-super-Mare 60–1w
Medicines Control Agency 126–7w
Members, Correspondence 129–30w
Mid Essex Hospital Services NHS Trust, Private sector 217w
Negligence 514–5w
Negligence, Compensation 394–5w
NHS, Cleaning services 354w
NHS, Information technology 511–3w
NHS, Public appointments 220w
NHS Direct, Cumbria 123w
Nurses, Training 355w
Nutrition 353w, 357w
Oxaliplatin 62w
Parking, Dept of Health 217w
Pesticides, Health hazards 580–1w
Pharmacy 394w
Prescribing Supply and Administration of Medicines Review Team 218w
Prescription drugs, Fees and charges 354w, 393–4w
Prozac 62w
Regulation, Dept of Health 509w
Social services, Local government finance 217w
Surgery, Death 63w
Surrey and Sussex NHS Trust, Resignations 618w

Student numbers
Northern Ireland 91–2w, 96w

Student wastage
Northern Ireland 92w

Students
Community relations 93w
Fees and charges 95w, 153–4w, 520w
Finance 93–4w, 97–8w
Loans 566–7w
Northern Ireland 93–5w, 566–7w
Religion 94w
Scotland 153–4w

Stunell, Mr Andrew
Sittings in Westminster Hall
Radiation, Research (29.03.00) 62–3wh
Questions
Alternative energy 239–40w
Beta-interferon 201–2
Climate change levy, Horticulture 586–7w
Fossil fuels 305–6w

Sub-Saharan Africa
Arms trade 183–4w

Sudan
Exports 286w

Suffolk
Barclays Bank (29.03.00) 70–91wh

Surgery
Cancer 350–1w
Death 63w

Surrey
Housing 414w

Surrey and Sussex NHS Trust
Resignations 618w

Surveillance
Intelligence services 389w
Members 279w

Sustainable development
Construction 323w

Sutcliffe, Mr Gerry, An Assistant Whip
Sittings in Westminster Hall
NHS Direct (06.04.00) 283wh

Swayne, Mr Desmond
Debates etc.
Child Support Pensions and Social Security Bill, Rep (29.03.00) 355–6, 360, 362, 364, 367, 370–3, 376–7, 380, 391–2, 437–8
Child Support Pensions and Social Security Bill, Rep and 3R (03.04.00) 647–8
Housing, Petitions (29.03.00) 465
Learning and Skills Bill (HL), 2R (30.03.00) 522, 565–7
Questions
Business questions 509, 1160–1
Clergy, Manpower 52w
Foden Thompson Carmichael MWD 79–80w
Hospices, Contracts 345–6w
Maintenance, Children 621–2
Married personal allowance 1141–2
Minimum wage, Housing 237w
NHS, Debts 130w
NHS, Finance 121w
School libraries, Computers 154w

Swimming
Schools 2–4

Swinney, Mr John
Debates etc.
Budget March 2000 (27.03.00) 47, 81–4
Lisbon Summit (EC) (27.03.00) 32
Questions
Climate change levy, Northern Ireland 113w

Syms, Mr Robert
Questions
Film 64w
Heart diseases, Health services 119w

Syrian Arab Republic
Israel 466w

"Tackling Tobacco Smuggling"
462w

Taiwan
Technology 45–6w

Tankers
Procurement 79w

Tanks
554w
Diesel fuel 554w

Tapsell, Sir Peter
Debates etc.
Budget March 2000 (27.03.00) 63–5, 123
Lisbon Summit (EC) (27.03.00) 29
Questions
Official engagements, Prime Minister 171w, 471w

Targeting social need initiative
569–70w

Task forces
204w, 565–6w
Prime Minister 244–5w
Wales 158w

Tax allowances
328w
Charities 589–90w
Disabled 491w

Tax allowances—continued
Maintenance 969–70
Manufacturing industries 1147–9
Pension funds 152w

Tax avoidance
Self-employed 489w, 494–5w

"Tax Benefit Reference Manual, 1999/00"
150w, 590w

Tax burden
490w, 584–5w

Tax collection
Climate change levy 112–3w

Tax credit
Research 583w

Tax exemption certificates
Business 491–2w

Tax rates and bands
461w, 499–500w

Tax yields
Income tax 149–50w

Taxation
(27.03.00) 185–7
Business 496w
Channel Islands 594w
Companies 149w
Freight 460w
Motor vehicles 111–2w
Small businesses 152w
Social security benefits 334w
Stocks and shares 495–6w

Taxis
Members 104w

Taylor, Ms Dari
Sittings in Westminster Hall
River Tyne, Shipbuilding (04.04.00) 162wh
Questions
Equal opportunities, Public appointments 76–7w

Taylor, Mr David
Debates etc.
Wild Mammals (Hunting with Dogs) Bill, 2R adjourned (07.04.00) 1272, 1275, 1277–1279, 1281, 1289, 1292–3, 1296, 1303, 1306, 1314, 1323, 1327
Questions
Arachnoiditis, Research 191w
Business questions 505
Departmental expenditure limits, Dept of the Environment Transport and the Regions 223–4w

Taylor, Mr Ian
Debates etc.
Lisbon Summit (EC) (27.03.00) 30

Taylor, Rt Hon John D
Questions
Camperdown Garden Village, Planning permission 98w
Flags, Armagh 280–1w
Nursery schools, Northern Ireland 133–5w
Sewage, Killyleagh 132–3w

Taylor, Mr John M
Questions
Developing countries, Debts written off 472w
Health services, Private sector 579w
Land Rover 240w
Land Rover, Pension rights 622w
Rover Group 636–7
Rover Group, Longbridge 476–7

Taylor, Mr Matthew
Debates etc.
Budget March 2000 (27.03.00) 113–6
Questions
Ballistic missile defence, USA 487w
Capital Modernisation Fund 258w
Cellular phones, Licensing 590w
Chemical and biological warfare, Research 488w, 553–5w
Clinton, Bill 280w
Defence Evaluation and Research Agency 397–8w
Education, Finance 205w
Gulf Veterans' Illnesses Unit 303–4w
Income tax, Tax yields 149w
Military exercises, Nuclear weapons 305w
Ministerial policy advisors, Cabinet Office 525–6w
Monckton, Walter, Public records 401w
Nuclear weapons, USA 488w
Pensioners, Income 1137–8
Private finance initiative 588–9w
Public expenditure 259w
"Tax Benefit Reference Manual, 1999/00" 590w
Tax rates and bands 461w
Training, Expenditure 539w
USA 623w
USA, Ballistic missile defence 409w

Taylor, Sir Teddy
Questions
Housing benefit, Abuse 332w

Teachers
Computers 40w
Dismissal 72w
Hearing impaired 387w
Pay 71w
Pensions 204–5w
Performance appraisal 297w
Recruitment 206w

Technicians
Health services 55w

Technology
Taiwan 45–6w

Telecommunications
38w
Petitions (29.03.00) 466
Regulation 239w

Telecommunication masts see Aerials

Telephone services
Smuggling 493–4w
Social security benefits 626–7w
Working conditions 430w

Television
Disability aids 1–2

Television Licences (Disclosure of information) Bill 1999/2000
Debates etc.
1R (30.03.00) 512

Telewest Communications
Microsoft 194w

Temporary immigrants
87w
Iraq 410w

Ten minutes rule
Rulings and statements (27.03.00) 41, (06.04.00) 1210

Tenancy agreements
Social rented housing 807

Territorial Army
Working hours 28w, 162w

Terrorism
Chechnya 267w
Northern Ireland 567–8w

Textiles
236w, 483–4, 586w

Thameslink
Planning 432w

Theatre
65w
Young people 64–5w

Thomas, Mr Gareth
Debates etc.
Criminal Justice and Court Services Bill, 2R (28.03.00) 271–3, 284
Local Government (Access to Information) Bill, 1R (28.03.00) 223–4
Questions
Detention and training orders 138–9w

Thomas, Mr Gareth R
Questions
Air traffic, London airports 969
Cancer, Health services 123w
NHS, Debts 343–4w
Nurses, Greater London 58w

Thomas, Simon
Debates etc.
Child Support Pensions and Social Security Bill, Rep (29.03.00) 407
Questions
Social security benefits, Post offices 614–5
Wind power, Planning permission 336–7

Tibet
Human rights 53–4w

Timms, Mr Stephen, Financial Secretary to the Treasury*
Debates etc.
Finance Bill, 1R (27.03.00) 186
Questions
Climate change levy 112w, 260w, 587w
Climate change levy, Horticulture 586–7w
Climate change levy, Northern Ireland 113w
Climate change levy, Tax collection 112–3w
Computers, Treasury 499w
Employee share ownership schemes 1138–40
Empty property, Treasury 330w
Excise duties 496w
Excise duties, Aviation 459–60w
Excise duties, Fuels 497w, 585w, 589w
Excise duties, Gaming machines 1149–50
Excise duties, Petrol 114w, 589w
Landfill tax, Alternative energy 260–1w
Landfill tax, Environment protection 499w
Parking, Treasury 260w
Parliamentary questions, Treasury 330w
Small businesses 460w
Tax credit, Research 583w
Taxation, Business 496w
Taxation, Freight 460w

Tobacco
Smuggling 490–3w
Subsidies 180–1w
World Health Organisation 342–3w

Todd, Mr Mark
Questions
Beef, Imports 249w
Ministerial Group on Rural Affairs 958

Tonge, Dr Jenny
Sittings in Westminster Hall
Colombia, Peace negotiations (28.03.00) 6–9wh

Tonge, Dr Jenny—continued*
Developing countries, Education (04.04.00) 192–3wh
Developing countries, Females (30.03.00) 120wh, 128–33wh
Western Sahara, Referendums (04.04.00) 184wh
Questions
British dependent territories, Homosexuality 170w
Developing countries, Drugs 184w
Ethiopia, Forests 286–7w
Females, Politics and government 535–6w
Heavily indebted poor countries initiative 147–8w
Indonesia, Forests 184–5w
Indonesia, Human rights 170–1w
Mozambique, Disaster relief 329
Primary education, Conferences 573–4w
Primary education, Equal opportunities 574w
Seychelles, Overseas aid 185w
Turtles, Trade 421w
UN international drugs control programme 184w
United Nations, Rapid deployment forces 171w
Zimbabwe, Land 171w

Torbay
Pensioners 166w

Tourism
65–6w
Coastal areas 4–5, 67w

Townend, Mr John
Debates etc.
Budget March 2000 (27.03.00) 44–5, 68–70
Questions
Deportation 599w

Trade
Turtles 421w

Trade associations
Consumer protection 240w

Trade competitiveness
EC countries 238–9w

Trade marks
Internet 236w

Trade promotion
Sri Lanka 406w

Trafford
Grammar schools 539w, 973

Training
Army 28–9w
European Police Office 600–1w
Expenditure 539w
Nurses 123w, 207–8, 355w, 615–6w
Police 141w

Training and enterprise councils
Audit 73w

Transfer of questions
Rulings and statements (27.03.00) 37

Transplant surgery
Research 127–8w

Transport
Disabled 485–6w
Infrastructure 24w
Local plans 13–6w, 412w
Military aircraft 300w
Wembley Stadium 23–4w

Treasury
Art works 496w
Computers 499w
Empty property 330w

Treasury—continued*
Parking 260w
Parliamentary questions 330w
Regulation 461w
Secondment 46–7w

Treaties
EC action 285w

Tredinnick, Mr David
Debates etc.
Wild Mammals (Hunting with Dogs) Bill, 2R adjourned (07.04.00) 1280–3, 1285, 1290, 1300
Sittings in Westminster Hall
NHS Direct (06.04.00) 296–9wh, 303–5wh, 310wh
Questions
Ministerial Group on Rural Affairs 957–8
Pensioners, Income 1138
Textiles 586w

Tresham College
Rutland College (28.03.00) 23–9wh

Trials
365w

Trickett, Mr Jon
Questions
Unemployment, Local education business partnerships 1140

Trimble, Rt Hon David
Debates etc.
Royal Ulster Constabulary (06.04.00) 1210–6, 1231, 1243

Tritium
Chapelcross power station 303w

Tuberculosis
Vaccination 353w

Turkey
Export credit guarantees 476–7w

Turner, Mr Dennis
Questions
Heart diseases, Health services 213–4
Rover Group 637
Social security benefits, Children 117w

Turner, Dr George
Questions
Business questions 508
Council tax, Second homes 808–9
Electronic government 961
Post offices, Cash dispensing 340
Stakeholder pensions 337w

Turner, Mr Neil
Questions
Dounreay, Nuclear fuel reprocessing 533–4w
EC grants and loans 480–1w
Modernising government programme 525w

Turtles
Trade 421w

Twigg, Mr Derek
Debates etc.
Budget March 2000 (27.03.00) 117

Tyler, Mr Paul
Debates etc.
Child Support Pensions and Social Security Bill, Rep (29.03.00) 431
Child Support Pensions and Social Security Bill, Rep and 3R (03.04.00) 676–7
Housing (04.04.00) 824–5
Questions
Business questions 497–8, 1153
Kensington Palace, Gardens 359w
Organic farming 339–40

Tyler, Mr Paul—continued
Second homes 410w
VAT, Churches 583–4w

Tynan, Mr Bill
Questions
Corporation tax, EC countries 1146

Type 45 destroyers
208w

Tyrie, Mr Andrew
Debates etc.
Budget March 2000 (27.03.00) 90, 95–7

Uganda
Arms trade 620–1w

UK delegations
EC institutions 102–3w

UK membership of EC
407–8w
Exhibitions 630–1w
Manufacturing industries 238w

UN international drugs control programme
184w

Unemployment
see also Long term unemployed
329–30w
Local education business partnerships 1140–1

Unemployment benefits
Construction 338w

Unified Appeal Tribunal
Public appointments 401w

Uniforms
European Police Office 601w

Unigate
Dairy Crest 624w

United Kingdom Atomic Energy Authority
Standards 477w

United Kingdom Atomic Energy Authority Constabulary
Criminal investigation 403–4w

United Kingdom Passport Agency
see also Passports

United Nations
Conferences 38w
Rapid deployment forces 171w

UNMIK
556w

Unparliamentary expressions
Rulings and statements (03.04.00) 634, 696, (06.04.00) 1137, 1138

Uprating
State retirement pensions 334–5w, 620–1, 624–5

Uranium
Kosovo 555w, 581w

Urban aid
412w, 482w

Urban areas
428w, 606w
Migration 458w

Urban Task Force
804–5

Uruguay Round
Developing countries 185w

USA
623w
Air routes 604w

USA—continued
Ballistic missile defence 209w, 408–9w, 487w, 563w
Foreign relations 169w
Guided weapons 397w
Nuclear weapons 488w
Overseas trade (29.03.00) 101–8wh
Scotland 103w, 169–70w

Utilities
Pre-payment 402w
Prices 107–8w, 479w

Vaccination
219w
Animal products (28.03.00) 37–46wh
Correspondence 357w
Meningitis 218–9w, 395w, 613–4w
Tuberculosis 353w

Valuation
Farms 83w
Millennium Exhibition 320w

Valuation Office
Standards 459w

VAT
Churches 16–7, 583–4w

Vaz, Mr Keith, Minister for Europe, Foreign and Commonwealth Office
Sittings in Westminster Hall
Burma, Human rights (05.04.00) 216–21wh
Western Sahara, Referendums (04.04.00) 188–91wh
Questions
Azerbaijan, Arms trade 631w
Council of Ministers 99–101w
EC common foreign and security policy 563w
EC Foreign Affairs Council 167–9w
EC institutions, Operating costs 101–2w
EC institutions, UK delegations 102–3w
EC institutions, Vocational training 53w, 167w
EC law 562w
EC staff, Allowances 631w
European Communities, Anniversaries 157w
Gibraltar, Spain 562w
Kazakhstan, Human rights 284–5w
Kazakhstan, Press freedom 284w
Kosovo, Construction 563–4w
Minorities, Languages 54–5w
Moldova, Russia 267w
NATO, Disclosure of information 103w
North American Free Trade Agreement 278–9w, 285w
Public appointments 284w
Sri Lanka, Foreign relations 562w
Treaties, EC action 285w
UK membership of EC 407–8w
UK membership of EC, Exhibitions 630–1w
USA, Ballistic missile defence 408–9w, 563w
USA, Foreign relations 169w
Zimbabwe, Visas 266w
Zimbabwe, Work permits 266w

Vehicle number plates
131w

Victim support schemes
Northern Ireland 569w

Video recordings
Police interrogation 595w

Viggers, Mr Peter
Debates etc.
Armed Forces Discipline Bill (HL), Rep and 3R (06.04.00) 1181, 1183–4, 1196–7

Viggers, Mr Peter—continued
Questions
Local government, Reform 792

Violence
Aircraft 421–2w

Visas
Zimbabwe 266w

Visits abroad
Prime Minister 574w

Vocational guidance
Standards 293w

Vocational training
EC institutions 53w, 167w

Voluntary work
(05.04.00) 252–8wh
Developing countries 177–8w
NHS 136w, 220w
Public libraries 358–9w
Social services 347w

Voucher schemes
Refugees 86–7w

Waiting lists
Avon Health Authority 60w
Disability aids 618w
Essex Rivers Healthcare NHS Trust 351–2w, 614w
Hospitals 62w, 119w, 135w, 508w, 575w
Prostate cancer 612w

Wales
EC grants and loans 1141
Iron and steel 158w
Ministry of Defence 300–3w
Task forces 158w

Wales Office
see Office of the Secretary of State for Wales

Walker, Mr Cecil
Questions
Royal Victoria Hospital Belfast, Repairs and maintenance 568w

Walley, Ms Joan
Debates etc.
Warm Homes and Energy Conservation Bill, Money res (04.04.00) 937
Questions
Alternative energy 477–8w
Combined heat and power 477w, 608w
Disability living allowance, Administrative delays 627–8w
Petrol, Additives 132w, 324–5w
Residential allowance 220w
Weed control 608w

Walter, Mr Robert
Questions
Post offices, Rural areas 340–2
Schools access initiative 74w
Wales, Ministry of Defence 300–3w

War pensions
453–4w
Radiation exposure 164–5w

War widows
Social security benefits 453w

Ward, Ms Claire
Questions
Council housing 412–3w

Warm Homes and Energy Conservation Bill 1999/2000
Debates etc.
Money res (04.04.00) 936–46

Warships
Deployment 28w

Waste disposal
Agriculture 81w, 326–7w
Alternative energy 227–8w
Animal products 36–7w
Bovine spongiform encephalopathy 250w
Prescription drugs 393w
Radioactive wastes 17–8w, 485w

Water
Meters 547w

Water abstraction
420w

Water charges
Appeals 322w

Water supply
South East region 609–10w

Water treatment
Drinking water 320–1w

Water Undertakers (Rateable Values) (England) Order 2000
Debates etc.
(28.03.00) 291

Waterson, Mr Nigel
Debates etc.
Budget March 2000 (27.03.00) 100–3
Questions
Local government, Reform 792–3
Surgery, Death 63w

Watts, Mr Dave
Debates etc.
Budget March 2000 (27.03.00) 52
Sittings in Westminster Hall
Radiation, Research (29.03.00) 58–9wh
Questions
Business questions 501
EC grants and loans 1145–6
National Lottery 5–6
NHS, Conditions of employment 120–1w
Standard spending assessments 412–3w
Vehicle number plates 131w

Weapons
Standards 298–9w

Webb, Mr Steve
Debates etc.
Budget March 2000 (27.03.00) 59–60, 89
Child Support Pensions and Social Security Bill, Rep (29.03.00) 353–5, 359, 385–8, 405–9, 430–5, 441, 453–5
Child Support Pensions and Social Security Bill, Rep and 3R (03.04.00) 645, 660–4, 687–8, 709–12, 722, 725–7, 780–1
Wireless Telegraphy (Television Licence Fees) (Amendment) Regulations (28.03.00) 301–4, 307
Sittings in Westminster Hall
Housing benefit, Abuse (05.04.00) 225–9wh
Questions
Child benefit 30w
Employment schemes 34–5w
Genetics, Databases 381w
Oxaliplatin 62w
Pensioners, Income 31w
Pensioners, Income support 448w, 532w
Pensioners, Social security benefits 32w
Social security benefits, Automated credit transfer 532w
Social security benefits, Lone parents 270w
Social security benefits, Post offices 614
Stakeholder pensions 475w, 529w

Weed control
608w

Weights and Measures (Amendment) Bill 1999/2000
Debates etc.
1R (05.04.00) 976–8

Welding Institute
Contracts 44–5w
Grants 44–5w

Welfare of Broiler Chickens Bill 1999/2000
Debates etc.
2R order read (07.04.00) 1334

Welfare tax credits
Free school meals 387–8w
Publicity 49–50w

Wells, Mr Bowen
Sittings in Westminster Hall
Developing countries, Females (30.03.00) 117–25wh, 132wh, 134wh, 144–5wh, 153–4wh
Questions
Africa, AIDS 325

Welsh, Mr Andrew
Questions
Chapelcross power station, Tritium 303w
Exchange rates 329w
Excise duties, Fuels 497w
Excise duties, Petrol 114w
Immigration, Administrative delays 88w
Social security benefits, Scotland 115w
Social Security Benefits Agency, Home visits 166–7w

Welsh Assembly
see National Assembly for Wales

Wembley Stadium
104–5w
Transport 23–4w

West Midlands
EC grants and loans 638
Manufacturing industries 490–1

West Midlands Task Force
see Longbridge Task Force

West Sussex
Hospital wards 509–10w

Western Sahara
Referendums (04.04.00) 184–91wh

Westminster City Council
Audit 318w

Westminster Hall sittings
(28.03.00) 30wh

Westminster Station
Jubilee line 314w
Lifts 311w

Weston-super-Mare
Learning disability 60–1w

White, Mr Brian
Debates etc.
Freedom of Information Bill, Rep (04.04.00) 878, 883, 892, 904–5, 921
Freedom of Information Bill, Rep and 3R (05.04.00) 1024, 1066
Questions
Drugs, Young people 962
Electronic government 524–5w
Nurses, Training 207

Whitehead, Dr Alan
Sittings in Westminster Hall
Western Sahara, Referendums (04.04.00) 185wh
Questions
Housing, South East region 797–8
Sports, Finance 66–7w

Whitney, Sir Ray
Debates etc.
Lisbon Summit (EC) (27.03.00) 29

Wickham Research Laboratories
Animal experiments 369w

Wicks, Mr Malcolm, Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State, Dept for Education and Employment
Debates etc.
Learning and Skills Bill (HL), 2R (30.03.00) 532, 543–4, 591–5
Questions
Higher education, Admissions 288w
Higher education, Overseas students 387w
Individual learning accounts 295w
Rover Group, Apprentices 74w
Students, Fees and charges 520w
Teachers, Pensions 204–5w
Training and enterprise councils, Audit 73w
Vocational guidance, Standards 293w

Widdecombe, Rt Hon Ann
Debates etc.
Criminal Justice and Court Services Bill, 2R (28.03.00) 227–8, 230–1, 237–49, 251, 253, 274–7, 286–8
Questions
Antisocial behaviour orders 634–5w
Channel Islands, Taxation 594w
Crime and disorder partnerships 635w
Drugs, Screening 12w
Electoral register 89w
Genetics, Databases 597w
Government Technical Assistance Centre 596w
Home detention curfews 9–12w, 85–6w, 139–40w, 144–5w, 636–40w
Local government, Elections 634w
Police, Finance 84–5w, 597w
Police, Manpower 88–9w
Police, Recruitment 595–6w
Police interrogation, Video recordings 595w
Prison accommodation 596–7w
Prisoners, Rehabilitation 13w
Prisoners' release 365–6w
Prisons, Overcrowding 6–9w
Probation and aftercare, Public appointments 12–3w
Public safety radio communications project 597–8w
Refugees 144w
Refugees, Finance 143–4w
Refugees, Local government services 633–4w
Regional crime squads 635w
Sexual offences, Home detention curfews 599–600w

Widowed people
271–2w
Social security benefits 272w, 339w, (06.04.00) 1254–62

Wigley, Rt Hon Dafydd
Debates etc.
Budget March 2000 (27.03.00) 46, 76–8
Learning and Skills Bill (HL), 2R (30.03.00) 519, 535, 538
Lisbon Summit (EC) (27.03.00) 30
Questions
Debts, Developing countries 460w
Economic and monetary union 487
Future large aircraft, Government assistance 532–3w
Ice cream, Competition 191w, 403w
National Assembly for Wales 158w
National Lottery, Sports 540w
State retirement pensions 338–9w

Wigley, Rt Hon Dafydd*—*continued
Tax burden 490w
Tourism, Coastal areas 4

Wild Mammals (Hunting with Dogs) Bill 1999/2000
Debates etc.
2R adjourned (07.04.00) 1264–333

Wilkinson, Mr John
Debates etc.
Lisbon Summit (EC) (27.03.00) 35
Questions
Aviation, Government assistance 241w
Business questions 507
EC aid 180–1w
Future large aircraft, Government assistance 488

Willetts, Mr David
Debates etc.
Budget March 2000 (27.03.00) 49–57
Child Support Pensions and Social Security Bill, Rep and 3R (03.04.00) 644–7, 654, 660, 702, 772, 774, 778–80
Oral question time intervention (03.04.00) 611
Questions
National insurance 627w
Pensioners, Personal savings 530–1w
Proof of identity, Dept of Social Security 529w
Proof of identity, Social Security Contributions Agency 590w
Public finance 461–2w
Social security benefits, Abuse 620
Social security benefits, Automated credit transfer 454w
Social security benefits, Telephone services 626–7w
State retirement pensions 616–7
"Tax Benefit Reference Manual, 1999/00" 150w
Tax rates and bands 499–500w
Welfare tax credits, Publicity 49–50w
Working families tax credit 48w, 114w

Williams, Mr Alan W
Debates etc.
Industrial injuries, Compensation (30.03.00) 600
Questions
NHS, Finance 121–2w

Williams, Mrs Betty
Questions
Working families tax credit 1133–4

Willis, Mr Phil
Questions
Consultants, Ministry of Agriculture Fisheries and Food 249w
Secondment, Treasury 46–7w

Wills, Mr Michael, Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State, Dept for Education and Employment
Sittings in Westminster Hall
Rutland College, Tresham College (28.03.00) 27–9wh
Questions
Advertising, Dept for Education and Employment 40w
Conditions of employment, Dept for Education and Employment 154–7w
Empty property, Dept for Education and Employment 297w
Parking, Dept for Education and Employment 295w
Public appointments, Dept for Education and Employment 154w
School libraries, Computers 154w
Schools, Internet 205–6w

Wills, Mr Michael*—*continued
Teachers, Computers 40w

Wilson, Mr Brian, Minister of State, Scotland Office
Questions
Regulation, Scotland Office 402w

Wind power
Planning permission 336–7

Winnick, Mr David
Debates etc.
Child Support Pensions and Social Security Bill, Rep and 3R (03.04.00) 672, 698, 705–6
Lisbon Summit (EC) (27.03.00) 29
Wireless Telegraphy (Television Licence Fees) (Amendment) Regulations (28.03.00) 295–6, 309–11
Questions
Members, Correspondence 67w
Non-departmental public bodies, Accountability 959
Rover Group, Longbridge 478
Social security benefits, Refugees 612–3

Winter fuel payments
Chelmsford 118w
Inverclyde 334w
Morecambe 33w
Scotland 334w

Winterton, Mrs Ann
Sittings in Westminster Hall
Radiation, Research (29.03.00) 67wh
Questions
Beta-interferon 202
Developing countries, Debts 181w
Drugs, Young people 961–2
Excise duties, Fuels 585w

Winterton, Mr Nicholas
Debates etc.
Royal Ulster Constabulary (06.04.00) 1222
Questions
Business questions 499–500
Child care tax credit 583w
Dental services 218
Education, Cheshire 316w
Fares, Concessions 805–6
Government departments, Deregulation 522w
Hospitals, Consultants 127w
Parish councils 410w
Zimbabwe, Overseas aid 186w

Winterton, Ms Rosie
Questions
Electronic voting, Greater London Authority 112w
Housing improvement, Disabled 324w
National Lottery 11
Pensioners, Income 1135–6
Pensioners, Income support 333w

Wireless Telegraphy (Television Licence Fees) (Amendment) Regulations 2000
Debates etc.
(28.03.00) 292–314

Wise, Audrey
Questions
Miscarriage 124w

Women
see Females

Wood, Mr Mike
Questions
Business questions 1157
Defence, Diversification 303w
Disability living allowance 449w

Woolas, Mr Phil
Questions
Low flying, Saddleworth 556w

Worcestershire
Manufacturing industries 489

Work permits
Zimbabwe 266w

Working conditions
Telephone services 430w

Working families tax credit
48w, 114w, 146–7w, 340w, 1133–5
Cumbria 48w
Free school meals 259w, 538w
Morecambe 48w
North West region 587w
Norwich 49w
Payments 329w
Scotland 145–6w
Southwark 49w, 146w
Stafford 49w

Working hours
239w
Junior doctors 575w
Territorial Army 28w, 162w

World class performance programme
469–70w

World Education Forum
181–2w, 331–2

World Health Organisation
Tobacco 342–3w

World Summit for Social Development
466w

Worthington, Mr Tony
Sittings in Westminster Hall
Developing countries, Females (30.03.00) 133–6wh
Questions
World Summit for Social Development 466w

Wray, Mr James
Questions
Bank services 152–3w
Bank services, Competition 256w
Bank services, Social security benefits 152w, 331–2w
Elderly, Institutional care 581w

Wright, Mr Anthony D
Questions
Accident and emergency departments 120w
National Weights and Measures Laboratory, Standards 191–3w

Wright, Tony
Debates etc.
Freedom of Information Bill, Rep (04.04.00) 836–8, 845–8, 868, 873–4, 884–5, 897–9, 915–7, 923, 934–5
Freedom of Information Bill, Rep and 3R (05.04.00) 992–7, 1028–31, 1065–6, 1079–80, 1099, 1120
Questions
Civil service, Secondment 198–201w
Nurses 127–8w
Public appointments 523w
Trade associations, Consumer protection 240w

Wyatt, Derek
Questions
Computers, Competition 622–3w
Israel, Syrian Arab Republic 466w
Motor vehicles, Taxation 111–2w
Primates, Overseas trade 558–9w

Yeo, Mr Tim
Questions
Beef, Animal products 560–2w, 641–2w

Yorkshire and Humberside
Health authorities 59w
Meningitis 211–2
New deal for lone parents 336w
Regional assemblies 320w

Young, Sir George
Questions
Business statements 495–6, 1151–2

Young people
Drugs 961–3

Young people—continued*
Theatre 64–5w

Zimbabwe
AIDS 325–6
Arms trade 194–5w, 620–1w
Commonwealth Ministerial Action Group 265w
Diplomatic service 266w
EC aid 254w
Elections 265w
Farmers 265w
Foreign relations 265w
Human rights 266w

Zimbabwe—continued*
Land 171w, 265w
Military aid 282w
Overseas aid 186w, 254w
Overseas residence 265–6w
Peace keeping operations 29w
Visas 266w
Work permits 266w

Zoo Licensing (Amendment) Bill 1999/2000
Debates etc.
1R (29.03.00) 344–6